Sir,—On my return to Dublin, after a temporary absence, I found your letter of the 15th August last, referring on the part of the Corporation of the city of Londonderry to former correspondence respecting a proposed increase of the constabulary stationed in that city, with a view to the discharge of police duties there.

In reply, I beg to state, for the information of the Corporation, that if application be made pursuant to the provisions of the 3rd and 4th Vic., ch. 108, sec. 121, for an increase of the county of Londonderry force stationed in the city, it is probable the Government would concede the request, in which case the Consolidated Fund would sustain one-half the additional expense. But it is to be remembered that the constabulary so augmented could not be employed in enforcing the provisions of the Londonderry Local Act.

And I may add that I trust I may not be called upon to augment the county force until the existing vacancies in the force generally have been filled, which I hope to be able to accomplish by next spring.

I have the honour to be, sir, your obedient servant,

J. Stewart Wood, Inspector-General.

James W. Gregg, Esq., Town Clerk, Londonderry.

Town Clerk's Office, Londonderry,
19th April, 1869.

Sir,—Referring to a former correspondence on the subject of a proposed increase to the constabulary stationed in this city for the discharge of police duties instead of our local force, and to your communication of the 5th October, 1867, in which you state "I trust I may not be called upon to augment the force until the existing vacancies in the force generally have been filled, which I hope to be able to accomplish next spring," I am directed by the Corporation of this city to inquire whether you are now in a position to supply the additional men necessary for the discharge of the duties in this city, in case the Government be pleased to comply with a memorial praying for such addition to the force.

I have the honour to be, sir, your obedient servant,

James W. Gregg, Town Clerk.

Colonel Wood, C.B.,
Inspector-General, Royal Irish Constabulary.

Constabulary Office, Dublin Castle,
21st April, 1869.

Sir,—In reply to your letter of the 19th inst., I beg to say that the vacancies in the constabulary force having been nearly filled up I can offer no further objection to the Corporation of the city of Londonderry taking such steps as they may be advised with a view to an increase of the constabulary in the city of Londonderry.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,

J. S. Wood,
Inspector-General, Royal Irish Constabulary.

James W. Gregg, Esq., Town Clerk, Londonderry.

23rd April, 1869.

Sir,—I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 21st instant, stating that you could offer no further objection to the Corporation of this city taking such steps as they may be advised with a view to an increase of the constabulary in the city.

Previous to making an application to the Lord Lieutenant for the additional force, in pursuance of the Act 3rd and 4th Vic., cap. 108, I am directed to inquire what extra number you would consider necessary for the duties to be discharged (the entire care, supervision, and preservation of order, &c., within the city by night and day). You are already aware, no doubt, from the former correspondence, that it is proposed to abolish the present local force, and to place the city entirely in the hands of the constabulary—a change which would be attended with great public benefit to the citizens generally, and which, we hope, may now be carried out without any unavoidable delay.

Before, however, taking the necessary prescribed proceedings in the matter, we consider it desirable and right that we should request from you the information sought.

I have the honour to be, sir, your obedient servant,

James W. Gregg, Town Clerk, Londonderry.

Royal Irish Constabulary Office, Dublin Castle,
24th April, 1869.

Sir,—In reply to your letter of the 23rd instant, I have to say that, with every disposition to afford all the information desired to the extent of my power, I do not feel at liberty to enter upon the subject without the sanction of the Government, as it would seem to be the proper course to ascertain in the first instance whether the Government will be prepared to accede to the proposal of placing the whole of the police duty of the city of Londonderry in the hands of the constabulary on the abolition of the present local force.

I have the honour to be, sir, your obedient servant,

J. S Wood, Inspector-General.

James W. Gregg, Esq., Town Clerk, Londonderry.

Copy Queries to Town Clerk, Belfast, on behalf of Londonderry Corporation, and Replies thereto.

How many head and sub-constables are at present on duty under the pay of corporation?—The quota of constables for Belfast is 450, 130 of whom are the county proportion, and free to the borough, the remaining 320 are paid one-half by Government and one-half by corporation.

How many men were employed on the former local force?—Fifteen Inspectors and 140 constables.

How much is paid by the corporation for the present force per man, for head-constables and sub-constables?—Nothing is paid for head-constables. A commuted allowance of £49 1*s.* 3*d.* per man for sub-constables. Barracks, &c., is charged to corporation with an additional 6*d.* per night per man for night duty, which is from 11 P.M. to 6 A.M.,* but only one man is charged, although there may be relays.

Are there any other charges for station, office, or other expenses, and if so, please mention them?—None. The corporation provide a lock-up and watch-house for prisoners, which the constabulary have charge of.

Do the constabulary discharge all the ordinary police duties as performed by the former force, and are such duties discharged to the satisfaction of the corporation, and as efficiently as by the former force?—Yes; they are discharged very efficiently, and to the entire satisfaction of the corporation.

Does the corporation employ any constables in addition to the constabulary for market or other duties?—No.

Do the constabulary receive directions from the corporation or the magistrates, or are they entirely under the direction and control of their officers?—Under the directions and control of the town inspector and his sub-inspectors.

How much is paid to the discharged constables of the former force, and upon what scale and at what rate such payment has been allowed taking into account length of service, &c., &c.?—The fifteen Inspectors had the option of a pension of one-third pay, or a gratuity on the following scale. The constables were paid a gratuity as follows:—12*s.* 6*d.* to each man whose service was under one year; one week's pay per annum to all men who have served 1 year and under 5 years; 2 weeks' pay per annum for 5 years and under 10 years; 3 weeks' pay per annum for 10 years and under 15 years; 4 weeks' pay per annum over 15 years. A special allowance extra to the men reported by the medical officer as having received injuries. The two head-constables allowed a pension of two-thirds pay, but full pay if employed by the council in any other capacity, and they are so employed, one at £150 and the other at £120 per annum.

The grant in money was, . . .	£3,840
Less by pensions in lieu of cash, . .	1,330
Special allowances, ...	300
The pay of our local force per annum was, say,	7,360

If I have omitted anything, or that further information is wanted, I shall be happy to supply and supplement.

James Guthrie, Town Clerk.

Copy of Resolution of Corporation of Londonderry, on 23rd of August 1869, in reference to Police Force of the City.

At a meeting of the Corporation of the City of Londonderry, held on the 23rd day of August, 1869,
It was resolved,—

That this corporation consider it desirable that the Royal Irish Constabulary should be substituted for the local police force, upon the understanding that all the duties as discharged by the present force are performed by the constabulary, and that the expenditure be limited to a sum of £1,500 per annum, being the maximum sum which the present taxation of the city would permit.

That for several years past this corporation have been endeavouring to have this arrangement carried into effect, and that it is entirely owing to the difficulties raised by the constabulary authorities that it has not been adopted.

That the Mayor, Alderman Skipton, Councillor Sir Edward Reid, the Town Clerk, and the solicitor, be now authorized to wait upon the Commissioners at present in this city for the purpose of affording them such information as may be necessary for carrying into effect the proposed changes in the police force, and making arrangements in connexion therewith.

James W. Gregg, Town Clerk.

SLIGO ELECTION INQUIRY COMMISSION, 1869.

REPORT.

TO THE QUEEN'S MOST EXCELLENT MAJESTY.

WE JOHN ALEXANDER BYRNE and WILLIAM ROBERT BRUCE, the continuing members of the Commission issued in pursuance of the Statute 15 & 16 Victoria, Chapter 57, for the purpose of making inquiry into the existence of corrupt practices at the last election of a member to serve in Parliament for the borough of Sligo, humbly submit the following report to Your Majesty:—

The Commissioners, in obedience to Your Majesty's warrant, opened the Commission in the town of Sligo on the 5th of October, 1869. From that day to the 23rd of the same month, (with the exception of an adjournment for one day), the inquiry was continued. On the 23rd of October, the Commissioners (having obtained the consent of the Secretary of State for the Home Department) adjourned till the 20th of December, 1869, to procure the attendance of certain persons who, it was believed, could give evidence material to the investigation. The inquiry, when resumed on the 20th of December, lasted a comparatively short time.

During the adjournment Mr. D. C. HERON, Q.C., resigned his appointment, and we were deprived of his co-operation in making up this report, and concluding the inquiry, during the greater portion of which he was the presiding Commissioner.

The borough of Sligo has returned a member to the Imperial Parliament since the Union; it previously returned two members to the Irish Parliament; its area for parliamentary representation consists of the town and an outlying rural district. The voters for the borough are householders, freemen, and (since "The Representation of the People (Ireland) Act, 1868,") lodgers. The two latter classes are insignificant in number, the register of voters for the last election showing only one freeman, and three lodgers. The greater number of the voters reside in the town. At the last election out of 520 voters only 75 qualified in respect of property situated in the rural district.

The evidence established the existence of corrupt practices at the last election, which took place on the 19th of November, 1869, and at the two preceding elections, which took place in the years 1860 and 1865; previously to 1860, the borough had been for several elections contested by the Right Honorable John Wynne, and Mr. John Patrick Somers, one or other of whom was always returned. At the last of these elections, which took place in 1859, we discovered no corrupt practices, and consequently did not inquire into the details of what had taken place at former elections; the evidence satisfied us that the absence of corruption at the election of 1859 was to be accounted for by the peculiar circumstances of the case, Mr. Somers (who was defeated) not having the command of money, and Mr. Wynne having come forward as a candidate reluctantly.

In 1860 the candidates were, Mr. Francis Macdonogh, Q.C. (Conservative), Lieutenant-Colonel Tennison (Liberal), and Mr. Somers (Liberal); Colonel Tennison retired after the day of nomination, Mr. Somers polled but few votes, so that Mr. Macdonogh was practically returned without opposition.

We find that Colonel Tennison retired in consequence of its being intimated to him, on the night before the election, that unless £600 or £700 were forthcoming to be distributed among about 25 of the Liberal voters, there was no use in his going to the poll. We were, however, unable to ascertain the names of the voters among whom this money was to have been distributed, owing to the length of time which had elapsed, and to the fact that the demand was rejected.

We find that there was expended on this election by Mr. Macdonogh about £1,350, of which between £800 and £900 was expended in bribery. This sum was advanced previously to the election by a supporter of Mr. Macdonogh, to be distributed among the electors. Mr. Macdonogh subsequently repaid the advance.

This money was deposited with several persons, to be distributed by them among the electors as they should think fit; owing to the death of one of these persons and the length of time which had elapsed, we were not able to discover to whom a large portion of this money was paid. We find, however, that about £470 was, after the election, distributed among the 14 voters whose names are set out in Schedule A, on account of their votes, and that these persons were guilty of bribery.

We further find, in respect of the said election, that 9 persons, whose names are set out in Schedule B, were guilty of bribery, by being concerned in giving money or other valuable consideration to voters for their votes.

During the period that Mr. Macdonogh was member of the borough, he spent very large sums in subscriptions to local charities and assisting individuals. According to his estimate this expenditure must at least have amounted to £500 a year. (See p. 120.)

At the election which took place on the 14th day of July 1865, the candidates were Mr. Macdonogh, Conservative (who polled 155 votes), and Mr. Sergeant Armstrong, Liberal (who polled 166). There were on the Registry 372 voters, of whom 3 were freemen.

We have set out in Schedule C the names of 91 persons, who we find were guilty of bribery by receiving money for their votes at this election, and we find that others were similarly bribed whose names we were unable to ascertain.

We find that 19 persons, whose names are set out in Schedule D, were guilty of bribery by being concerned in giving money to voters for their votes.

The night before the polling day, Mr. Macdonogh's election was judged by his principal supporters to be in great danger, and a sum of £490 was advanced by one of his friends to be applied in influencing the votes of the wavering electors.

We find that £423 of this sum was distributed among voters, as a consideration for their having voted for Mr. Macdonogh; most of this money was paid some time after the election, but we find that the doubtful voters were made aware, at the time of the contest, that money would be forthcoming.

We find that Mr. Macdonogh was aware of this transaction, and subsequently repaid the money advanced for him; his total expenditure at this election was £905, of which the above mentioned sum of £490 formed part, the residue was employed in defraying the legitimate expenses of the election.

We find that there was expended on this election by Sergeant Armstrong the sum of £2,240; of this sum £615 was applied in defraying the legitimate expenses of the election, £140 was distributed among mobs, and the residue, £1,480, was expended in bribery. The whole of this last mentioned sum was paid some eight or nine months after the election; about that time, several applications were made to Sergeant Armstrong, stating that his supporters were dissatisfied, and that something was expected of him; Mr. Tracy (the Sergeant's conducting agent) and Mr. J. Lynch Byrne (his agent for election expenses) were sent down to the Borough in consequence of these communications, and on their arrival had an interview with some of Sergeant Armstrong's principal supporters; lists were made out of the persons who should receive money, and the sums to be given, and £1,480 was handed over by Mr. Tracy to be distributed, which was subsequently repaid him by Sergeant Armstrong.

Sergeant Armstrong's recollection, derived from documents given to him at the time but since lost, was that the number of voters so bribed amounted to 97, of these we have ascertained the names of 65, amongst whom the sum of £1,200 was distributed; the names of the others we failed to discover.

We find that, with a very few exceptions, no express promises were made to the persons whose names are set out in Schedules A and C at the time they voted, but the evidence satisfied us that, amongst a large number of them, there existed an expectation that money would be subsequently given to them for having voted.

At the last election for the Borough, which took place on the 19th of November, 1868, the candidates were Major Knox (Conservative) who polled 241 votes, and Captain Flanagan (Liberal) who polled 229 votes; the number of voters on the register was 520, consisting of 516 householders, 1 freeman, and 3 lodgers.

This election differed from the former ones, inasmuch as the corrupt practices were not confined to bribery, but included undue influence as defined by the 5th Section of the 17th & 18th Victoria, c. 102.

We find that 16 persons, whose names are set out in Schedule E, were guilty of bribery by either voting or agreeing to vote for Major Knox, or by refraining or agreeing to refrain from voting, in consideration of money or promises of money. Several of these persons subsequently voted for Captain Flanagan.

We find that 11 persons, whose names are set out in Schedule F, were guilty of bribery by distributing or promising money to the persons mentioned in Schedule E, to induce them to commit the above-mentioned acts of bribery.

Our investigations into what took place at this election, were much obstructed by the absence from the inquiry of Captain Ethelred Knox and Thomas Brennan, the two persons who were principally concerned in bribing on Major Knox's side; the commission was adjourned, and every effort made to procure their attendance, but ineffectually.

The bribery proved at this election fell short of what took place on former occasions. We do not, however, feel ourselves justified in reporting that this was due to the increased purity of the constituency, having regard to the fact that in Sligo it was almost invariably after the election that the distribution of money among the electors took place, which (if intended) would have been stopped by the presentation of a petition, and also that a large number of the electors avowed their willingness to take money if it were to be obtained. It appears from the evidence of Robert Stokes (pages 185–188), that in consequence of the sitting of the Royal Commission, several sums promised to voters had not been distributed at the time of his examination.

Major Knox's connexion with Sligo with a view to being a candidate began early in 1867; his expenditure in connexion with the election amounted to about £4,028; the particulars of this expenditure will be found at page 137 of the evidence. Part of the money (£53) was applied by him in relieving cases of distress, but though this was done, admittedly, with a view to popularity and advancing his prospects at the election, we do not find that any of the cases amounted to actual bribery; a portion of his expenditure (about £250) was also employed in payment of a mob, consisting mainly of non-electors.

We find that Captain Ethelred Knox advanced a sum of £300 to be expended in bribing electors. Further sums, but, so far as we could discover, not amounting to £100, were distributed amongst voters by Thomas Brennan and others for the purpose of influencing their votes.

We find that, in addition to those who actually received money, there were a number of voters, about 20 or 25, who were in the habit of soliciting money from Major Knox and giving vague promises of support.

We do not find any money to have been expended in bribery by Captain Flanagan or his supporters; but a sum of about £200 was expended among mobs, who, the evidence showed, consisted principally of persons from a distance. Neither this sum, nor the sum expended by Major Knox among mobs, was inserted in the accounts of the expense agents, nor did they pass through their hands, a fact which leads us to conclude that such a distribution was known to be illegal.

On the day of polling at this election a proposal was made to the Rev. John Morris, a Roman Catholic clergyman, that if £1,000 was paid down ten votes would be forthcoming for Mr. Flanagan. This proposal was not entertained, and we did not discover the names of those on whose behalf it was made.

We have to report that it was stated to us by many gentlemen well acquainted with the town, that there is a class of voters, estimated by some to amount to 40 or 50, who invariably expect to be paid at elections.

We find that, at the last election, violence and intimidation prevailed to a very great extent. It was proved that about 20 persons, supporters of Major Knox, absented themselves from their homes, immediately before the election, from fear of violence, and that 5 of these, Mark Anthony Macdonogh, Edward Gethin, John M'Quirk, John Cairns, and Charles Clancy, were prevented from recording their votes, by this apprehension, which we do not consider to have been unfounded. On the evening of the polling day most violent riots took place, the houses of 20 of the supporters of Major Knox were injured, in some instances completely wrecked. In page 352 of the evidence will be found the particulars of the amount allowed by the Grand Jury of the County of Sligo as compensation for these malicious injuries; the total amount is £1,245 9*s.* 7*d.* In the evidence of Peter Harrison, p. 50, an instance of the personal violence used will be found.

We further find that some of the acts of the Right Rev. Dr. Gillooly, the Roman Catholic Bishop, and of certain of his clergy, at the last election, amounted to undue influence, within 17 and 18 Vic., c. 102, s. 5.

On the Sunday before the election this Right Reverend Prelate addressed his flock in the Roman Catholic parish church, and in the course of his address stated, according to the evidence of Martin Boyle (p. 294), that if any of the Roman Catholic party voted for the Tory candidate they would be considered rotten branches, and should be "lopped off." The Bishop denied the accuracy of this account, and gave (answer 15000) the following version of what took place:—"I referred to rotten branches, and I said most probably, although I cannot now remember the words I used, that it would be better that rotten branches should be cut off than that they should be left hanging to the tree, injuring the vitality of it; and that it would be better that the member which was rotten should be cut off rather than it should infect the body. I then said I feared that some of those persons had cut themselves off by their misconduct, and by persevering in a course of conduct they knew to be criminal." And in answer to another question (15004), he admitted that in a discourse before the election he had stated "that the Catholic voters who voted for Major Knox should make reparation before they could be reconciled to God." Whichever version of what occurred on this occasion be the correct one, we cannot doubt that the Bishop's words were understood by his hearers as a strong declaration of ecclesiastical censure against those Roman Catholics who should vote against the Roman Catholic candidate—a censure which, as the Bishop admitted (answers 15057–8), implied a withholding of the rites of the Church till a proper reparation should be made.

We find that on the Sunday after the election, the Bishop, before commencing his sermon, directed that those who had voted for Major Knox should go to the porch. The Bishop stated to us that he did not intend by this more than an advice, with a view to prevent a collision between parties; but he admitted that he had been understood to have meant a prohibition on the persons alluded to going to any other part of the church.

Martin Boyle, sergeant of the permanent staff of the Sligo Militia, whose duty it was to attend mass at the Roman Catholic parish church, was present there on this occasion. In consequence of what occurred, he (having voted for Major Knox) obtained from his commanding officer leave to hear mass for the future at another Roman Catholic church (the Friary). We find that on the following Sunday he was ordered to leave the place he was occupying in the Friary church by the Rev. Thomas Hibbits, and that this was in consequence of his having voted for Major Knox.

We find that on the following Christmas morning two other persons—Laurence Burke and John M'Quirk—who had abstained from voting, were not allowed into the gallery of the Roman Catholic parish church, but were required by the Rev. John Morris to hear mass in the porch, which was considered under the circumstances as a degradation. These reverend gentlemen were examined before us, and stated that their reason for so acting was the feeling of indignation amongst the members of the congregation against those Roman Catholics who had not voted for Mr. Flanagan.

Finally, we report to Your Majesty, that at the last three elections of members to serve in Parliament for the Borough of Sligo, corrupt practices have extensively prevailed.

All which we humbly submit to Your Majesty's gracious consideration.

JOHN ALEXANDER BYRNE.
WILLIAM R. BRUCE.

MINUTES OF EVIDENCE

TAKEN BEFORE

DENIS CAULFEILD HERON, Esq., Q.C., LL.D., Chief Commissioner, JOHN ALEXANDER BYRNE, Esq.,

AND

WILLIAM R. BRUCE, Esq.,

The Commissioners appointed under the Act of the 15th & 16th Victoria, Cap. 57, for the purpose of making inquiry into the Existence of Corrupt Practices at the last Election for the Borough of Sligo.

Secretary, Edward Greer, Esq.

FIRST DAY.

First Day

October 5, 1869.

October 5

The Commissioners sat at Twelve o'clock.

Patrick Flynn sworn and examined.

Patrick Flynn.

1. The Chief Commissioner.—Do you live in the town of Sligo?—I do.

2. You are an elector?—Yes.

3. How long have you been an elector of Sligo?—Ten years.

4. Whom did you vote for at the last election?—Captain Flanagan.

5. Previous to the last election was there an ejectment pending against you?—There was.

6. For how much?—Ten pounds.

7. Who was your landlord?—Lady Palmerston.

8. Was that for a year's rent?—Yes.

9. Were you then able to pay?—No, I was not.

10. Do you know a man named Thomas Brennan?—I do.

11. What is Thomas Brennan?—He is a shopkeeper with his mother.

12. In what business or profession is he?—He has been living in Sligo for some time. He is not at present.

13. For how long has he been living in Sligo?—I think for the last fifteen or twenty years. He was born here, I believe.

14. Had you any conversation with him before the last election about this ejectment?—I had.

15. When was that?—Well, I could not exactly say now what the time was, but it was before the election.

16. At that time was there any candidate in the field?—There was talk of Major Knox and Captain Flanagan.

17. Had they issued addresses?—Well, I think not at that time.

18. Did Brennan say anything to you about the ejectment?—He did.

19. What did he say?—That he would get my rent paid.

20. Who was to pay it for you?—It was he paid it.

21. I want to know what was the first conversation between you and Brennan. Did you go to him or did he go to you?—Well, I was in the habit of doing business—selling pigs to him—and on that occasion we spoke first about it.

22. Can you fix when it was that you first spoke about getting the ejectment paid?—Well, I think it was in his own house.

23. Did you call on him for the purpose?—Well, he asked me questions and I opened my mind to him, of course.

24. Was anything said about your vote?—Well, there was.

25. Tell the court now what was said about your vote in connexion with the payment of the ejectment?—That if I would vote for Major Knox he would get the rent paid for me, of course.

26. What did you say to that?—I said I would.

27. Was that before the sessions?—It was.

28. Did Brennan give you any money himself?—He did.

29. I mean about the £10—did he give you any money?—No.

30. Who paid the money to the agent of the Palmerston estate?—I know he paid it in court himself.

31. Who?—Brennan.

32. Paid it to whom?—To Mr. Pollock.

33. That is, Mr. Pollock, the attorney?—Yes.

34. Which Mr. Pollock?—Edward Pollock.

35. Did you get any receipt?—I did.

36. Have you the receipt?—I have (produces the document). I got it from Malone.

37. That is dated the 23rd of January. When, in point of fact, was the money paid—was it on that day?—No, not that day. It was some time; the sessions were going on here when it was paid.

38. The January or the June sessions—it is dated January?—The money was paid long before I got that receipt.

39. Was it the summer sessions?—I could not tell.

40. Was it six months before that that the money was paid?—I am sure it was three months.

41. Did you hear Mr. Pollock saying anything about it to any other gentleman—about letting it stand over?—Yes, he did.

42. To whom?—To Mr. Knox that was here—Mr. Utred Knox.

43. The Clerk of the Peace?—Yes.

44. What did he say?—When it was called he told him to let it stand over to the next day.

45. What sessions was that?—Well, I am not exactly sure.

46. Where was it that the receipt was given to you?—I think it was at Ballymote that I got the receipt from Mr. Tom Smith, or at Sligo; I am not sure which; but I know I went to the office for it.

47. Did you bring anything with you to the rent office?—No, I did not.

48. Any money?—No.

49. How did you know you were to get the receipt?—I knew the money was paid for it.

50. Who told you it was paid?—I saw it paid in the Court-house by Brennan.

51. To whom?—To Mr. Edward Pollock.

52. Have you ever paid back any of the money?—No, I have not.

53. Did you receive any other money from Brennan?—I did.

54. How much?—Well, I could not exactly say.

55. How much altogether?—Four or five pounds, perhaps.

56. What was the £5 for?—They gave it to me off and on—a pound now, and a pound again.

57. What was it for?—I could not exactly say what for.

58. Whenever you would ask it?—Sometimes—yes.

59. Did Brennan ever give money or pay money for you before that £10?—No, never.

60. Was the whole £5 you received before the polling for the election?—It was.

61. Did he give you any money since the election?—No.

62. What was the first sum you got from him, independent of the money paid for the ejectment?—I think it was £1. I am not exactly sure now, it is such a long time ago.

63. What did you ask it for?—Well, I told him I wanted it.

64. Wanted it for what—did you want it for yourself?—For myself.

65. Or for any other thing?—Well, for myself.

66. Did you expend any of the money you got from Brennan, except on yourself?—Well, I think not.

67. Why do you say "you think not;" had you anything to do with any of the mobs of the town?—Well, no, not in the way of distributing money.

68. That is what I mean; did you pay any money to persons on either side of the mobs?—No, not to my knowledge.

69. What do you mean by "not to your knowledge;" surely if you paid any money you could not forget it?—Well, I did not.

70. Was anyone present when any money was paid to you by Brennan?—Well, I am not sure; I think not.

71. Where was it that you got the first sum?—Well, as far as I recollect, it was up on the new line here that I got it, on a walk one evening.

72. Do you know a man named James Grey?—I do.

73. Was he present when you got any money from Brennan?—Well, I think he was.

74. Why did you say no one was present?—I am not exactly sure now.

75. Did James Grey give you any money?—I think he sent me some money.

76. By whom?—I think by his own son.

77. How much?—Half a sovereign.

78. Is that in addition to the money you got from Brennan?—Yes.

79. What was that for?—Well, it was money that was distributed in the streets, and he gave me part of it.

80. Did you get any money for the election from anybody else?—No.

81. What did you do for that half-sovereign?—I did nothing for it.

82. When was that half-sovereign sent by James Grey?—Well, I cannot exactly say now.

83. How long before the election?—It was months.

84. Did you see any money given to any other person—do you know Kilcullen?—I do.

85. Do you know his son?—I do.

86. What is his name?—Dominic Kilcullen.

87. Did he get any money?—I did not exactly see him getting money, but I was told he did.

88. Told by whom?—By Brennan.

89. How much?—A sovereign.

90. What for?—I could not say what for.

91. Do you know Mr. Harloe Phibbs?—I do.

92. Did you get an order for £5 from him?—I got an order. I don't know whether £5 was on it or not. It was a card.

93. Who gave you the card?—Mr. Phibbs.

94. What was written on it?—I never remarked what was written on it. I just took it in my hand. He did not mention any sum. I did not go myself; I sent Grey with it.

95. Where did you send Grey to?—To Mr. Thomas Wilson.

96. Did you get the £5?—Yes, £5 came back to me.

97. That is in addition to the money Brennan gave you?—Yes, but I did not get the whole of that £5.

98. Did you divide it?—No, I did not. It was Grey, I think, that divided it.

99. Is Kilcullen a voter?—He is.

100. How much did Kilcullen get altogether?—I could not say. I could not tell what he got.

101. Had you any conversation with Major Knox about that £5?—No, not about that £5.

102. Well about which £5?—I never mind to have had any conversation about £5.

103. Did you make any complaint about that being too little?—To Major Knox?

104. To anybody?—Well I might. I don't remember. I went to Major Knox myself, one morning.

105. Yes, go on?—I demanded something from him.

106. How much did you demand?—Well it was the price of a score of sheep that I thought I would get.

107. How much was that?—Something between £30 and £40.

108. At that time you had got £20?—No, not so much.

109. Ten pounds for the ejectment, and two fives?—I did not get two fives.

110. Did you not get £5 from Brennan?—Yes.

111. And then the other five?—I did not get it; I only got part of it.

112. You demanded £30?—Yes.

113. Was that as a loan, or for the election—for your vote, in fact?—I could not say; I was told that if I would vote for him, he would be a friend of mine, and would give me the price, perhaps, of a score of sheep.

114. Who said that?—Brennan.

115. And that who would give it to you?—Major Knox.

116. Whom did you demand the price of a score of sheep from?—From Major Knox himself.

117. When did you demand it from Major Knox?—Well, I think it was the first time he came round here; I could not exactly say what time. The assizes were going on.

118. The summer assizes?—Yes, just so.

119. Tell me exactly what you said to Major Knox when you demanded from him the price of a score of sheep?—Well, in fact, I wrote out what I wanted.

120. You wrote?—Yes; a bit of a note.

121. Did you write a letter?—Yes; and I went with the letter myself to him.

122. Did you give him the letter?—I did.

123. What was in the letter?—That Brennan promised to give me the price of a score of sheep if I would vote for him.

124. What answer did the Major give you?—He said he was advised by his friends to give no more money out. So I went away from him.

125. Were you canvassed by both sides?—I was.

126. Who canvassed you for Captain Flanagan?—Well, the parish priest, and a few gentlemen more of the town.

127. Did you promise to vote for Captain Flanagan?—No, not till the latter end I did not. I refused.

128. You must give me the names of the gentlemen who canvassed you on both sides?—There was Mr. Pollock, first, I think, with Mr. Phibbs and Major Knox; after that, I think, Captain Flanagan; and I am not exactly sure whether there was not Mr. Conroy one night, and Father Morris. There were several.

129. Any that you can remember?—But I refused them at the same time and no mistake. I refused to vote for Captain Flanagan.

130. How long before the election did you make up your mind to vote for Captain Flanagan?—Well, about a fortnight or a month before that, or a fortnight or three weeks.

131. Did you get any money from Mr. Brennan or anyone on Major Knox's side after you had promised to vote for Captain Flanagan?—No.

132. Was it known that you intended to vote for Captain Flanagan?—It was not.

133. Who introduced you to Major Knox?—It was Brennan.

134. Where?—In my own house first.

135. Did you go into any room together?—We were in a room in my own house.

136. Who were you?—Major Knox, and I think Mr. Pollock was there at the same time.

137. Had you any conversation that day about the sheep?—Oh, that was in his own house, in Major Knox's own lodgings.

138. Was that after the first day?—It was.

139. Now, you say you handed the letter to Major Knox?—I did.

140. In his own house?—Yes.

141. Repeat again what he said to you?—He said he was advised by his friends to give no more money out, and that he would not do it.

142. Was there any conversation about any money having been given out?—Well, no; not with him. I left the house then.

143. Did Brennan say anything before Major Knox about the ejectment?—He did.

144. What did he say?—He said so much was paid for me.

145. Whom did he tell that to?—The Major himself told it. He said: "Did Brennan pay so much for you?" "He did," said I.

146. Neither you nor the Major said "so much;" say the words used?—He said: "Did not Brennan pay some rent for you." I said he did. "Well," said he, "I am advised by my friends to give no more money out"—something of that kind.

147. Did you ever promise the Major himself personally to vote for him?—I did.

148. How often?—Well, I think it was about twice.

149. Have you told all the money you got?—Well, I think so.

150. Did you get any other money?—Not to my knowledge.

151. You must know perfectly well if you got any other money?—Well, I don't remember if I did.

152. You know you are sworn to tell the truth?—The truth I will tell.

153. Well, how much money do you say you got altogether, or was paid for you?—There was a year's rent paid first.

154. Then 10*s.*?—Yes.

155. And the costs of the ejectment—how much were they?—Well, I did not handle the money. I could not say. It was Brennan paid the money; and I got about £4 or £5 more from Brennan off and on.

156. Did you get any other money from other persons?—Well, I got money from James Gray.

157. You have mentioned that—10*s.*?—Yes; I think I got it twice.

158. That is two "ten shillings?"—Well, I think so.

159. Who else?—That's all to my knowledge.

160. Did you get any money from Captain Flanagan's side?—No—never got a penny.

161. Was any promised?—Never.

162. What made you break your promise to Major Knox after getting the money?—Well, the Church question was at stake, and my religion, and I stood to it.

163. In reference to your voting and your promises to vote, at the last election, and at previous elections, had you voted for the Liberal candidate or the Conservative?—For the Liberal.

164. Always?—Always.

165. What made you promise to vote for Major Knox—was it the money?—Well, it was the money.

166. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Was it before or after that £10 was paid that you had any interview with Major Knox?—It was after it.

167. That is, after the June sessions?—Yes.

168. It was in the June Sessions that you think it was paid?—I think so. I am not exactly sure in what sessions it was paid.

169. How many elections had you voted at—did you vote at the last?—I did.

170. Did you vote at the election before it?—I did.

171. That was for Sergeant Armstrong?—Yes.

172. Did you vote at any former election?—I did, I think for Mr. Somers.

173. You say you received £4 or £5 from Brennan afterwards?—Yes.

174. Can you tell me what Brennan said to you—the circumstances under which he gave you that £4 or £5; did he give it all in one sum?—He did not.

175. In sums of 15*s.* or 17*s.*?—Yes, and a £1.

176. What did he say to you?—He said nothing at all to me; of course he knew I would be a friend.

177. Tell us exactly what he did say. He must have said something. He did not meet you in the street and put 15*s.* into your hand and then walk away?—He did not.

178. Very well—tell us what he did say?—Well, we often used to chat on Saturday night on the road.

179. You say there was some talk; recollect some occasion?—Well, it was about the Major we used to be chatting.

180. What did he say?—That he liked the people to be getting on well in the town, and to encourage them.

181. That Brennan liked, or the Major?—No, Brennan and the Major both.

182. That he liked to encourage the people about the town?—On one side of the town—up at Pound-street.

183. Did he then put 15*s.* into your hand?—No; I asked him if he had any money, and he said he had.

184. And then he gave you the money?—Yes.

185. About what time did you get this £4 or £5?—It was before the election.

186. How long before it?—Perhaps a couple of months or so. Three months.

187. Was it nearer to the election than a couple of months?—Well, I think it was.

188. When was the last money you got from Brennan?—The last money I got from him was £1.

189. That was a couple of months before the election?—Yes; about a month or so before the election. About a month.

190. Now, what state was the town in at that time?—Well, there was a great talk about Major Knox and Captain Flanagan, and people were not on good terms with each other.

191. Was there any mob; were windows smashed? Not at that time. Oh, I believe there was. I am not exactly sure at that time; I think not.

192. Was there any fighting?—Well, there was.

193. Were you fighting at all?—No.

194. Did you not fight at all, at any time; were you in no mob during the whole time?—No, I got neither thump, nor crack, nor anything else. I might often get an insult for not voting for Major Knox.

195. But you never returned it?—No; the people used to be annoying me, saying, "That I was Knox's man." I laughed at the idea, of course.

196. Did you get none of this money from Brennan to act as mobsman?—No, I never did.

197. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—At what time before the election did you change your mind?—Well, perhaps a fortnight before the election.

FIRST DAY. October 5.

Patrick Flynn.

198. Who canvassed you?—Well, it was Father Morris first, and Counsellor O'Loghlen. I was unwell.

199. Was it about a fortnight before the election?—They canvassed me before that and I refused.

200. Father Morris?—Yes, and Captain Flanagan too, and I refused them. Then I got unwell, and I promised them that I would.

201. Who called on you when you were unwell?—Father Morris, and Mr. O'Loghlen.

202. Was it Father Morris made you change your mind?—No; I had always in my mind to vote for him.

203. Always?—Yes; though I would take all I could from the other man—no mistake about that.

204. Did you tell Father Morris?—I never told him nor any other person that I had it in my mind to vote for Captain Flanagan.

205. What did Father Morris say to you when he came to you, when you were sick?—Well, he asked me how I was. He said he was sorry to see me unwell, and he asked me would I promise to vote for Captain Flanagan, and I said I would.

206. At once?—Yes. That was coming within the fortnight or so, or the month. It was within about a fortnight, I think, of the day of polling.

207. And you say what operated on your mind was this Church question?—Just so.

208. Did Father Morris bring it before you?—Not a word; but I never voted for the Conservative party.

209. Did you tell Father Morris that the money was given to you?—Well, I am not exactly sure that I did tell Father Morris that. I know I told it before that; and I told Mr. O'Loghlen about it too. I did tell of it I remember now, at the time it was held over.

210. The Chief Commissioner.—That is, the ejectment?—The ejectment. I came in myself with Mr. Pollock, to know if the money was paid, and, if so, what was the reason my name was called again. Upon that he got it nilled by Mr. Utred Knox.

211. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Did you want to get money from Mr. O'Loghlen?—I did not; but he offered in court to get the money settled for me here, that was paid to Mr. Pollock.

212. He offered in court to get the money paid?—No; he said he would come into court and speak to the barrister, in order, if the money was paid, to get off my name.

213. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—You say that at first you had a conversation with Father Morris, and that he canvassed you for Captain Flanagan, and that you refused?—He did.

214. And that you refused the first time?—I did.

215. Tell us exactly what took place then; that was rather a remarkable conversation you know?—I will tell you, my lord. This ejectment was still in the book against me, and I could not get a receipt for it. I wanted to get the £10 settled, and that's why I refused Father Morris, and Captain Flanagan too.

216. And did you not give Father Morris any reason for saying you would not vote for him?—I did not—not a word.

217. You simply said you would not vote?—I said I would not vote for him.

218. Did you tell him you would vote for Major Knox?—Well, I might not have told them that there. I don't think I did.

219. What did Father Morris say to you the first time you refused?—He did not come near me at all after that.

220. What did he say at the time?—He walked out. He saw me getting into a passion.

221. What put you into a passion?—There were parties along with him that said they would make me vote.

222. With Father Morris?—Yes, a mob.

223. Who were there with him?—A great number of persons, back and forward. I could not say who they were.

224. Where did the interview take place?—At my own house.

225. How many people were there?—I think fifty or sixty people who were canvassing.

226. Do you know their names?—I did not leave my own door. I stood inside it, and did not go out at all; but I refused them. Both came in in a gentlemanly manner, and I refused both.

227. What were the names of the people who were with Father Morris?—Well, I think there was Mr. Conroy and Mr. O'Loghlen. I don't know whether Mr. Magill was there. I did not go outside the door.

228. What Mr. Magill is that?—There he is there.

229. Where does he live?—He lives a few doors from myself.

230. Do you recollect any others?—I don't remember them.

231. There were fifty or sixty people; were they a mob?—Well, they were following them—following Mr. Flanagan and canvassing, as they generally did throughout the town.

232. And when you got into a passion did they go away quietly?—They did. They never said one word to me.

233. When was that?—A good while before the election: the first time Captain Flanagan went canvassing.

234. Six or twelve months before the election?—I don't think it was six months, nor, I think, four months, nor three months.

235. How soon after that did Father Morris come to you again when you said you would vote for Captain Flanagan?—I did not say I would vote for Captain Flanagan.

236. You never did?—No, not till I was unwell.

237. That was the second time you saw Father Morris?—Yes.

238. How soon was that after the first time?—I suppose about a month or six weeks. As soon as I got the arrangement settled in this book here my mind was made up to vote.

239. Yes, but you told us you got the receipt in January, 1868?—I don't know what time I got it.

240. The dismiss was entered in the book before you got the receipt?—It was.

241. Was that before the election?—It was.

242. At the October Sessions?—Well, I suppose so. Yes, I think so.

[The witness withdrew.]

John Shiel.

John Shiel sworn and examined.

243. The Chief Commissioner.—Are you an elector of the borough of Sligo?—Yes.

244. How long have you been an elector?—Since October last.

245. What is the rating of your house?—Five pounds ten shillings rating.

246. What is your business?—I am a chandler.

247. Did you get any money for your vote at the last election or for your promise to vote?—No.

248. Did you get any money in connexion with the election?—I got money to abstain from voting.

249. How much altogether were you paid?—Something about ten or eleven pounds, I think.

250. Who gave you the money?—Mr. Cherry.

251. Where does he live?—In Castle-street.

252. Where was it he gave you the money?—In his own wareroom—part money and part debt due.

253. You mean he forgave you the debt?—Yes.

254. What business is Cherry in?—The drapery.

255. Did you first speak to Cherry or he to you, on the subject of your vote?—He sent for me several times before I went.

256. Whom did he send for you?—His own shopboy.

257. I suppose with a message to call upon him?—Yes.

258. And did you understand what it was about?—Well, not exactly. I thought it was about the debt.

259. You went up to him?—Yes.

260. How long before the election was it you first spoke to Cherry about your vote?—I never spoke to him about my vote; he spoke to me about it.

261. He spoke to you first; how long was that before the election?—That was Monday week. The Wednesday week before the election he spoke to me.

262. At that time had you promised Captain Flanagan, the other candidate?—I had promised to Captain Flanagan.

263. How long had you promised the Captain to vote for him?—Well, it might be a month.

264. Now, what did Mr. Cherry say to you on the first occasion he spoke to you about your vote; give me the words if you can?—He told me I was an old customer of his, and he would like to do something for me, and he had it in his power, that he had been speaking to the Major about me the night before, and he could get me a good situation, for he was a man of great interest, and if not that, he would take on himself to provide me with one, if not a better, equally as good as what I held, and I did not give him a decided answer at the time. I said I would go home and consult with those at home. He said that would ruin all, and to do no such thing, but to think over it till next morning and give him word. The next morning I did not go back, nor did I intend to go back anymore, until his shopboy came again for me to the shop where I work, and I went down, knowing the state, the way I was: he had a decree against me, and I was alarmed that if I did not comply with the request, he would perhaps put the decree into execution.

265. How much had he the degree against you for?—£5 odd.

266. Were you able to pay off that?—Well, I might get it, but I could not myself.

267. Had you money to pay that unless you got assistance?—Well, I had not.

268. Now, go on with what you were telling?—I went down then, and I said I would go, and he told me he would give me £40.

269. If you would "go"?—Leave town before the election would be over, and he would provide me with some berth or situation, and I said then I had been thinking of going to America, and he said he had a friend in America that could do something for me, and he would give me the letter which he did.

270. That letter I believe was produced before; did you produce that letter before?—Yes.

271. Have you got that letter now?—It remains with the attorney for the petitioner.

272. The Judge's Registrar?—Yes.

273. He gave you a letter; how long was that before the election?—That was on Saturday night before the election.

274. When you say "the letter." Who was the letter left with?—It was handed to myself by him.

275. Whom did you give that letter to?—I gave it to the Judge's Registrar, or one of the gentlemen engaged.

276. To one of the gentlemen that were engaged?—I gave it first to Counsellor O'Loghlen; he got it first, and it was produced in Carrick, but I do not know how it went afterwards. I did not get it back.

277. Who was the letter addressed to?—Mr. Logan. I disremember the street in New York.

278. Was it to Mr. John Logan?—Yes.

279. Was Broadway his address?—Yes, Broadway.

280. Now, did you also get any receipt from Mr. Cherry?—I did.

281. What has become of that receipt? Was it also at Carrick?—Also.

282. And you have not got it since?—No.

283. Now how much did that rent forgiven and cash altogether amount to?—Odds of £11.

284. That was the result of the transaction?—Yes.

285. Now, how long before the election was it that the receipt was given to you?—Saturday night—the night before I was to leave town.

286. When was the polling day?—On the Thursday following.

287. And you got the receipt on Saturday?—Yes.

288. Where were you to go to?—To Dublin.

289. Were you provided with any other money in Dublin?—I was.

290. How much?—Something about £32 or £33—something thereabouts.

291. How were you to get the money in Dublin—how was it to be paid?—It was a bank post bill sent to a merchant in Dublin.

292. A bank post bill?—Yes.

293. Who told you that?—Mr. Cherry wrote a letter that was along with it. He showed me the bill. I had it in my hands.

294. A bank post bill?—Yes.

295. On what bank?—I am not positive now.

296. You don't remember what bank?—No.

297. What was the name of the merchant?—Coster, Brodie, and Company.

298. What business are they in?—They are paper merchants.

299. What did he do with that bank post bill—did he tell you it was to be posted to Dublin?—He did.

300. Where were you to get the money?—At that address.

301. At Coster, Brodie, and Company's?—Yes.

302. Where was it he read to you about Coster, Brodie, and Company?—In his own wareroom.

303. Was any one else present?—Not one.

304. It was done by arrangement—when were you to leave?—The next morning.

305. That is Sunday morning?—Sunday morning.

306. Was that arrangement then as regarded you and Mr. Cherry completed on that Saturday night?—Yes.

307. And was the arrangement that you were to go away during the election and get £11 in hand, and get a sum—whatever the difference was between that and £40 in Dublin?—Yes.

308. On what day were you to call on Coster, Brodie, and Company?—I was to call on the day I would arrive in Dublin, and they were to give me the instructions. I had also another address with me where I was to stop, but I was not to go to Coster, Brodie, and Company to get the money until Friday morning.

309. That was the morning after the polling?—The morning after the polling.

310. What was the other place you were to call to?—I think the name was Mr. Hughes, in Queen-street.

311. Did you know Mr. Hughes before?—No.

312. Did he give you an envelope with that address on it?—He did.

313. Was that also given to the attorney for the petitioner?—Yes.

314. How were you to go to Dublin?—By outside car to Enniskillen and train from that.

315. By car through Manorhamilton to Enniskillen?—Yes.

316. Did you get any directions as to your journey?—I did.

317. What directions were they?—Either at Manorhamilton or Enniskillen the driver was to give me a letter of instructions, which he did, a slip of paper, telling me not to stop at the Black Lion, but to go on to Enniskillen, and the additional expense would be paid when I got to Dublin.

.318 Were you to come back, according to the arrangement, to Sligo?—Whatever I liked. I might either go to America or come back.

319. Had you any real intention to go to America?—Not the slightest.

320. At what time were you to go away on Sunday morning?—At six o'clock.

321. Did you go away?—I did.

322. Whose car did you go on?—Mrs. Buchanan's.

FIRST DAY.
October 5.
John Sidel.

323. Who provided the car for you?—Mr. Cherry told me it would be on the road before me.

324. On the road before you?—Yes.

325. Did you walk out of the town?—I walked about a quarter or half a mile.

326. And the car came up?—The car was passing by and I had a password to give to the car.

327. Tell me what the password was?—To inquire the road "to the Golden Rappers."

328. Who gave you that pass word?—Mr. Cherry.

329. On the same occasion?—Not answered.

330. Did you inquire?—I did.

331. Who was the car-driver?—I know his name—M'Gowan, I think. I disremember ——

332. M'Gowan?—Yes.

333. Was that the Sunday morning before the polling?—It was.

334. Go on—state what occurred on your journey?—There was another old woman on the car, which the driver told me was meant as a cloak in order to screen him coming out at that hour of the morning, and he told me that the other boys of the establishment would not remain in the place if he was known to go out with the voters in that way, so we went out to Manorhamilton and stopped there. He went up to the landlord of the house and spoke to him, and the car was exchanged and a fresh horse got there, and we went into Enniskillen—not with him, though ——

335. Did you get any other document to give to M'Gowan or from M'Gowan?—I got the slip of paper I told you of.

336. Who handed you the slip of paper?—It was in Mr. Cherry's.

337. Did you give that slip of paper also to the attorney for the petitioner?—Yes.

338. What occurred then?—We went to Enniskillen, remained there, and came back.

339. In Enniskillen where did you stop?—I could not exactly tell you. Of course I provided a lodging-house to myself.

340. If you provided a lodging-house to yourself you are able to tell us where you stopped?—Well, I could not tell the name. Going into a strange town I did not know exactly.

341. Were you never in Enniskillen before?—Once, about five or six years ago.

342. You do not know where you stopped in Enniskillen?—I do not.

343. Did you see anyone from Sligo while you were in Enniskillen?—I did not.

344. You did not?—I saw a journeyman tobacco spinner that I had seen in Sligo some years before.

345. Did you see anyone that was connected with the business of the election—anyone that might ask you to vote for Flanagan or Knox?—No, I did not.

346. What train were you to go on by to Dublin?—There was none on Sunday morning, not till Monday morning.

347. Were you told to take the first train on Monday morning?—Seven o'clock was to be the first train on Monday.

348. During the whole of this time had you ever intended to go to Dublin at all?—No.

349. Had you made up your mind to go to America?—I had not; neither the one nor the other.

350. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Why did you go to Enniskillen?—Why it was a pleasant trip.

351. Just for the pleasure of the journey?—For the pleasure of it, of course.

352. You came back on the Monday?—Yes.

353. The Chief Commissioner.—All the time you were getting this money from Mr. Cherry did you ever intend to vote for Major Knox?—I never was asked to vote for Major Knox.

354. Did you during the whole of the time intend to vote for Captain Flanagan?—I did.

355. Did you ever tell anyone while you were going on this way with Mr. Cherry what you were doing?—I did.

356. Whom did you tell it to?—I told Mr. John Conolly.

357. He was, I suppose, working for Captain Flanagan?—He was not; he was a supporter of his, but nothing more.

358. He voted for him?—He did.

359. And was one of his party?—Yes.

360. Did you tell him the first time you were asked by Mr. Cherry to leave town?—I did.

361. Did you tell him everything that passed between you and Cherry?—I told him that I was after being offered £40 to leave town; and he laughed at it, saying that I would not do such a thing.

362. Mr. Conolly is your employer?—Yes.

363. You told him you were offered £40 to leave town?—Yes.

364. Did he believe you?—He did believe it, because it was generally spoken of through the town that there were large lumps of money going to any that would avail themselves of the opportunity of taking it.

365. Do you understand what a plant is?—No. It was no trick, sir. I tell you what it meant—thinking that he would put this decree into execution, perhaps on the morning of the election, and that, therefore, my vote would be lost to Captain Flanagan; that was my reason.

366. Did you tell everything that was going on between you and Mr. Cherry before you got the £11?—I did not.

367. Did you tell it to Mr. Conolly?—I did not; but after I got the letters from Mr. Cherry I went to Mr. Conolly, pulled out the letters, and showed them to him.

368. Did you show the letters to Mr. Conolly before you went to Enniskillen?—I did; but he did not open them.

369. Did he ultimately open them?—He did; after I came back he opened them, and when he saw the one addressed to Coster, Brodie, and Company, perhaps he allowed that there was money; but when he opened it there was nothing but a common business memorandum and Mr. Cherry's card with his name on one side—his initials on one side, and mine on the other.

370. That letter to Coster, Brodie, and Co. was never delivered by you?—Not by me.

371. You stopped the letter to Coster, Brodie and Co., and you stopped the letter to the other parties?—Yes.

372. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—When Cherry first sent for you, as you say, you had already promised Captain Flanagan?—Yes.

373. Whom had you given that promise to?—To Captain Flanagan himself.

374. Was anybody by?—There were two or three gentlemen. I was just coming in.

375. Was Mr. Conolly by?—He was not. Mr. Conolly, to my knowledge, never went out to canvass with anyone.

376. Had Mr. Conolly any conversation with you about giving your vote before you promised Captain Flanagan?—No, not at all. He never asked me, and I don't believe he cared for whom I voted.

377. You said that in the first conversation you had with Cherry he said he would like to do something for you?—Yes.

378. Did he say he had authority for making that statement?—He told me he had been speaking to the Major about me the night before, and that he would do all in his power for me; and he said, "You know he is a man of great interest."

379. Is that the whole conversation, as well as you remember it, on that first interview?—Well, unless this much, that he was advising me—telling me that such a chance I never would get again, and the like of that; nothing more of any importance.

380. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—He said nothing to you about money the first time?—No, but it was understood that there would be money along with the employment.

381. How do you mean understood—did he say anything about money?—He said he could assist me at the time—that it was in his power at the time to assist me; and also that he had been speaking to the Major about it; and, therefore, it was understood from his words that there was to be something like money.

382. That was on the Monday week before the election?—On the Monday week before the election he sent for me first, but I think it was the Wednesday or Thursday before it that I went to him.

383. And you immediately told Mr. Conolly what had occurred between Cherry and yourself?—I did.

384. And did you tell Mr. Conolly then that you were going to pretend to go away in order to get money out of Mr. Cherry?—I did not at that time. On Saturday night when I showed him the papers he said it would not do at all for me to go away at such a critical time. "Never mind," says I, "I will go; but wherever I go I will be here to vote for Captain Flanagan."

385. What papers do you mean; do you mean the receipt?—The receipt and the other—the card.

386. You showed them all to Mr. Conolly on Saturday night?—I showed them, but did not open them.

387. He saw the receipt?—He did not. I did not show the receipt to him at all. He did not see it at all.

388. You said you showed it?—I showed him the letter for Coster, Brodie, and Company. There was another envelope also that had thirty shillings in it to bear any little expenses from—to pay my train fare from Enniskillen to Dublin; that was put up in an envelope also.

389. That was what you got from Cherry?—Yes. That must be the £1 that he has marked on the receipt cash.

390. You got that?—Yes.

391. Did you tell Mr. Conolly at that time that you had got the £1?—I did.

392. And that you had got the receipt?—No, I never mentioned to Mr. Conolly about the receipt. He thought at that time that I had the cheque in the letter of Coster, Brodie, & Co. for the money.

393. And he said it was a good dodge?—He did not; he said it would never do at such a critical time, and I said, "No matter where I go to I will be here to vote for Captain Flanagan.

394. Did he not say it was a disgraceful thing, your taking the money?—Well, he did not sanction it at all events.

395. Did he express any disapproval of it?—Well, he did not to my knowledge. He was against my going away, that's all.

396. You have told us that, but did he say anything at all to you when you told him that you had got this money from Mr. Cherry?—I did not tell him that I got it. I said I told him nothing about the receipt, but that I was to get £40 when I went to Dublin. That was the way he understood it to be.

397. Then you did not tell him at all that you had got any money?—He imagined that this money was contained in the letter.

398. So that, if I understand you, he thought from what you said that you had received a cheque for £40?—Yes, and I thought that it was—that it might have been that too, for he showed me the cheque, and read me the letter to Coster, Brodie and Co., and I was not positive at the time but that the letter he had read to me was in this envelope that I had.

399. He did not then say that the letter was a shabby and disgraceful transaction on your part?—He merely advised me, and did all he could with me to give it up.

400. Did he say you ought to take the cheque back to Mr. Cherry?—He did not. I believe he did not say that. Of course the cheque was no use to me if I did not go to Dublin. That was perfectly understood.

401. Did you not talk with anybody else but Conolly with regard to this?—No; unless our own people.

402 What do you mean by your own people?—Sisters. They, also, were against my taking it.

403. Against your taking it?—Against my going away—having anything at all to do with it.

404. How many sisters have you?—Two.

405. Did you tell them that you had got money in hand to go away?—They had the receipt while I was away.

406. Were they to be paid any of the money—you did not get all the first £20, did you?—They were to be paid £11 odd—that was, £20 was coming to me in Dublin, and the difference between the receipt and the other £20 was to go to them.

407. Did they get any of that £11?—Not to my knowledge.

408. Surely that is within your knowledge?—Not to my knowledge. I don't believe they did.

409. They never told you they had?—No.

410. Did they ever tell you they had not?—I don't think that ever they applied for the like. I am sure of it.

411. You said you heard that there was a great deal of money going on Major Knox's side?—I did.

412. Whom did you hear that from?—Why, it was the current report.

413. Current report? Somebody must have spoken?—Several said it; it was no secret at the time.

414. Would you give us the name of any person from whom you heard it?—Well, I heard Dominic Kilcullen say he was sure he could make a hundred pounds of it if he would vote for Major Knox.

415. Is Dominic Kilcullen a voter himself?—He is.

416. Has he a son a voter?—No, not to my knowledge.

417. Did you hear of any money going on Captain Flanagan's side?—Never heard it.

418. Do you know of any other person who got money besides yourself?—I do not.

419. Now, think about that; you are sure you don't know any person?—I am positive. Of course I have heard of several, but I can't swear to it.

420. Whom did you hear of as getting money?—So far as hearsay goes, I heard Kilcullen himself say he had got money.

421. Whom did he say he got money from?—From Brennan.

422. How much?—Well, I think, as well as I remember, £25.

423. Who else?—Well, I think, I am not positive.

424. You must tell us whom you heard of; you heard of several?—I could not tell you whether they were voters or not.

425. Never mind whether they were voters or not; tell us the name of any person whom you heard of, whether from himself or from any other person, as having got money?—I heard that Neilan had got money.

426. Is that Pat Neilan?—Yes.

427. When?—I don't remember.

428. Try and recollect?—It would be hard for me now.

429. I will give you plenty of time?—I don't recollect when.

430. You are sworn, you know, to tell the whole truth; I ask you again did you not hear of any other person having been bribed?—I may have heard but I could not say. Everyone, of course, was spoken about at the time, and you didn't know whether it was truth or lies, and I don't think it would be right of me to answer such a question.

431. You are bound to answer the question. It is no matter to you whether you believe the story or not; you are bound to tell us the whole truth, and we have very ample powers, indeed, to punish you for contempt of court if you do not?—I heard about parties getting money to stock their lands and pay their rents.

432. What parties?—Well, I could not exactly tell you their names.

433. Oh, you must?—Well, on my oath I could not tell.

434. Do you mean to tell me you don't recollect—is it that you have forgotten?—There is many a one that I heard spoken of at that time, and that I do not recollect now.

435. That you have forgotten?—That I have forgotten about. I cannot draw it to mind.

436. What do you mean by "cannot draw to mind?"—That I cannot draw to mind everyone's name that was spoken of at that time. There was one spoken of as getting money at that time, but I don't know whether it was true or not.

FIRST DAY. October 5. John Shiel.

437. The Chief Commissioner.—Well, who was that?—There were several. John Read and ——

438. Where does he live?—Market-street.

439. Is he a farmer?—No, a furniture dealer.

440. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Did you hear anything about how much he got?—I did not.

441. Who told you he got any?—Mere report. I could not tell you who told me.

442. You said you heard that some got money for stocking their land. Read, you know, is a furniture man; he had no land, had he?—Well, this was the report that I heard, but I could not tell you who told me; I really could not. Many a conversation I had eleven months ago and twelve months ago that I cannot draw to mind now.

443. But you recollected Read's name; try and recollect somebody else's?—As far as he went that was well spoken of.

444. Try and recollect some one else's name—we will give you plenty of time?—I cannot. For my part I don't know many farmers about the town.

445. The Chief Commissioner.—If so you could remember one or two of them the easier. You have said you heard that men got money to stock their land and pay their rent?—Yes.

446. Who are they that you heard of?—I cannot tell.

447. You say you remember hearing that Dan Kilcullen got £25?—I heard himself say so.

448. How much did you hear that James Read got?—I did not hear.

449. Did you hear James Read himself speak on the subject?—I did not.

450. When you used the words "got money," of course you mean got money for his vote?—Yes.

451. Do you know how James Read voted?—I don't know whether he voted at all or not.

452. Do you know about Kilcullen, whose side he was on?—I believe he voted for Captain Flanagan.

453. He is the man that lives at Cornageah?—I suppose so.

454. How long before the election did you hear Kilcullen say he had got £25?—It may have been a couple of months.

455. From whom did you get it?—I think it came through Thomas Brennan.

456. That is, you heard him say that?—I heard him say so.

457. Did Thomas Brennan ever canvass you?—He did not.

458. Where did Kilcullen tell you this?—In the yard where I am employed.

459. Was he asking you then to vote for Knox?—He was not.

460. Where was it that you heard about Read?—I could not tell.

461. You have used this remarkable expression "men got money to stock their land and pay their rents; was it Kilcullen that told you that?—It was not, I believe. I don't recollect.

462. What sums did you hear had been given in this way?—Well that's more than I can tell; but I say that it was the current report at the time that the money was going on Major Knox's side.

463. You say you don't know many farmers who are voters?—I don't know, I might say any, unless a few.

464. Who are the few?—Well, Dominic Kilcullen is one of them, I believe. I don't know, that is to say, any others, country voters, that have farms.

465. Do you know the Cornageah people well?—I do not.

466. I understand there are a number of voters there. Do you know Owen Grehan?—I know him by seeing him.

467. Do you mean to tell me that you cannot remember any other farmers who are voters?—I do not know any of them.

468. Do you know Michael Mullin of Cornageah?—I do not, to my knowledge.

469. Or "MacMullen," I don't know which is his proper name?—I do not.

470. Did anyone else canvass you for Major Knox, except Mr. Cherry?—Major Knox and Mr. Harloe Phibbs left a crowd at my door, but nothing more.

471. Did they speak to you?—Never spoke to me.

472. Did anyone else speak to you?—No one spoke to me.

473. Were you offered any other money by anyone?—I was.

474. By whom?—That's more than I can tell either.

475. I ask you sir, you say you were offered money by other persons?—By other persons.

476. Were you offered any other money?—For my vote?

477. Yes?—No, not for my vote, but I was offered money for the papers that were in my pocket on the day of the election.

478. That is, the papers you got from Cherry?—Yes.

479. Did you get money for giving up those papers?—He offered me money.

480. How much?—£50.

481. On what day were you offered that money?—The day of the election.

482. Who offered you the money?—A stranger to me, a strange gentleman.

483. Where did he offer it to you?—In Jail-street, here above.

484. That was before you voted?—After I voted.

485. What did you say?—He told me he had heard I had some papers in my pocket from the week before. I said what if I had, or something like that. He said he would make it worth my while to give them to him. I pointed up to a house where there were a number of persons looking out at the cavalry going up and down.

486. This was the day of the polling?—The day of the polling. I said I would see him again, but I did not see him any more. I had not the papers to give him, for Counsellor O'Loghlen had them at the time.

487. Were you promised anything for those papers by anyone else?—No.

488. Did you ever get any money?—I never got sixpence.

489. Did you say ever that you were offerred £20 by Flanagan's side?—I did. I said that to Cherry.

490. Was that true?—It was not.

491. But you did say you were offered £20 from Captain Flanagan's side?—I did.

492. Did you say then to Cherry at the same time that you were offered £20 from Flanagan's side that you would go away for a fortnight?—I did.

493. Did you want if you could to get the whole £40 from Cherry, and then if possible vote for Flanagan?—Twenty pounds. I asked him for £20.

494. In hand?—In hand.

495. And the result was that you only got £11 in hand?—Yes.

496. You have only given the names of Dominic Kilcullen and John Read, that you say you heard were bribed?—Well, there were others examined at Carrick that told it, and that might have put their names into my head.

497. I don't know whether Kilcullen was examined or not?—He was.

498. Was James Read examined?—He was not.

499. As far as you know; but you have mentioned to us that you heard that parties got money to stock their land and pay their rents?—I did.

500. I now ask you can you remember their names, or who told you this?—I cannot.

501. Well you must try to refresh your memory on the subject. What is the name of Cherry's shopboy who brought the message?—That's more than I know.

502. Do you know him to see him?—I know him to see him.

503. You can ascertain his name?—Well, I dare say I could.

504. He is in Mr. Cherry's employment still?—I don't know.

Martin Mulligan sworn and examined.

505. The Chief Commissioner.—You are an elector of the borough of Sligo?—Yes.

506. How long have you been an elector?—At the last election I voted.

507. Did you never vote before the last election?—No, I did not.

508. What is the rating of your house?—Nine pounds.

509. Do you remember the last election—after Major Knox became a candidate?—I do.

510. Do you know a man named Brennan?—I do.

511. Did you get any money from Brennan?—I did.

512. What was it for?—For my vote.

513. Where first did Brennan make you promise your vote for any money?—In my own house.

514. Who were present when you made that promise?—Dominic Kilcullen and James Grey.

515. Any one else?—There were ten or twelve others there.

516. Were they electors?—They were.

517. Did Brennan then promise you anything for your vote?—He gave me half-a-sovereign.

518. I suppose you would not give your vote for half-a-sovereign?—I would not.

519. What I want to know is, did he make any bargain with you for your vote?—He did.

520. What was that?—He said he wanted me to leave the town, and he would give me £25.

521. Did he offer you anything for your vote for Major Knox?—It was for leaving the town.

522. How long before the election was it that he made you that offer?—I disremember.

523. Had you promised any of the candidates at the last election to vote for him?—No, I hadn't made up my mind to vote for any of them at the time.

524. What did you say when Brennan offered you the £25 to leave the town?—I said if the others did I would.

525. What did he then say?—He said Dominic Kilcullen was to go with me.

526. Did he say there were any others to go besides Kilcullen?—Yes, he told me there would be about twenty others going at the same time.

527. Where did he say you were to go?—He said we were to go to Dublin.

528. Did he mention the names of any of the others who were to go with you?—I don't remember now any but Kilcullen; I think he didn't mention them.

529. Did you know who they were that were to go with you, besides Kilcullen?—I didn't.

530. You say you got ten shillings from Brennan on the first occasion he spoke to you about leaving the town?—Yes, I did.

531. Did you get any other money from Brennan afterwards?—I did.

532. How much did you get from him?—I got about £4 10*s.* altogether.

533. Was that £4 10*s.* part of the £25, or was it to be in addition to the £25 Brennan promised to give you for leaving the town?—No, he gave me ten shillings the first time, and he gave me nine shillings at another time.

534. Well, did Brennan give you £4 10*s.* altogether in that way?—He did.

535. Did you get money from any one else besides Brennan?—I didn't.

536. Do you know a man named James Grey?—I do.

537. Did you get any money from him?—I did.

538. How much money did you get from Grey?—I got, I think, £3 or £3 10*s.*

539. Who is Grey—what was he?—He was a non-elector.

540. Was he in Brennan's employment?—He was doing some business for Brennan, I believe.

541. Was that £3 part of the £4 10*s.*, or was it additional to it?—It was part of it.

542. Was it £5 or £6 you got from Brennan?—It was £4 10*s.* as best I can now remember. Between what I got from Grey and what I got from Brennan it was in all £4 10*s.*

543. Do you know a man named Dogherty?—I did.

544. Did you see him pay Grey some money?—I did.

545. How much?—I think it was £2 or £3; I saw him give it in an envelope.

546. Who is Dogherty—what is his Christian name?—Michael Dogherty.

547. How long, previous to the election, was it that you got the £4 10*s.*?—I think it was a year ago.

548. What did you do for the £4 10*s.* you got?—I did nothing at all.

549. Did you spend it on yourself, or on others?—I kept it myself.

550. Did you give any money among the mob?—I did not.

551. Were you part of the mob; did you go about the town shouting for Major Knox?—Never.

552. Were you present when any other persons were offered money to go away?—Kilcullen was the only person; I don't remember any one else.

553. Do you know Patrick Reid, that was mentioned by the last witness?—I don't know any one of that name.

554. Do you know John Reid?—I do know him.

555. Do you know anything about him?—I don't.

556. Did any one else offer you money besides Brennan and Grey?—No.

557. At any time?—Never.

558. Whom did you vote for at the last election?—I voted for Captain Flanagan.

559. When did you make up your mind to vote for Captain Flanagan?—It was always made up to do so.

560. Was there any word about your voting for Captain Flanagan when the £4 10*s.* was given to you?—There wasn't.

561. Did you then intend to vote for Captain Flanagan?—There was no word about Captain Flanagan at the time. I intended then to vote for the Liberal.

562. Though you took money from the Tories?—Yes, that was nearly forced on me.

563. Did you intend to keep your promise, when you said you would go away, to Brennan?—I didn't.

564. Did you ever, at any time, say you were offered £40 to go away?—I don't mind that I did. I mind that Brennan said he would give me £25 to go away; and he promised to buy a horse and car for me.

565. In addition to giving you £25?—Yes.

566. What did you want the horse and car for; what are you; did you ever speak to Brennan about the horse and car?—Never. He spoke to me about it.

567. Where did he speak to you about it?—He came to my own house and spoke about it.

568. Was it to go away you were to get the horse and car, or were they to be your own?—My own.

569. I need not ask you, I suppose, did you ever give back any of the money you got?—I didn't.

570. Did you see Kilcullen get any money?—I did.

571. How much did you see him get?—I saw him given half-a-sovereign.

572. Did you see any other voter get money besides Kilcullen?—I didn't.

573. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Did you ever say at Carrick before Judge Keogh that you were offered £40 to go away?—I disremember.

574. Try and recollect whether you did or not?—I might. I disremember.

575. If you did say it, was it true?—I am certain it was true if I said it. I don't remember now whether I did or not.

576. But you are certain you were offered £25?—I am certain I was offered all that at any rate.

577. You are certain you were offered £25 at least?—I am. I can't say whether it was £25 or £40.

578. Do you recollect the time of the revision before the barrister?—I do.

First Day.
October 5.
Martin Mulligan.

579. Were you not part of the mob at the time?—I hadn't a vote at all before that.

580. Weren't you one of the mob?—I wasn't one of the mob. I never was in the mob at all.

581. You were perfectly quiet?—Yes.

582. At the time you got the half-sovereign from Brennan, and the other different sums which made up the £4 or £5, was nothing said about what that money was for?—Not to my recollection.

583. How do you expect us to believe that?—Of course I suppose he said something—that it was for Major Knox.

584. I don't want to know what you suppose—I want you to tell us what he said?—I think it is near two years ago.

585. I know that, but it is rather a remarkable circumstance you took money to vote for one man while you say you intended to vote for another?—[No answer.]

586. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Did you ever get any money from Captain Flanagan, or from any one on his behalf?—I didn't.

587. Did you ever get a promise of money from him or from any one on his behalf?—Never.

588. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Who was it canvassed you for Captain Flanagan?—Captain Flanagan himself.

589. When was it he canvassed you?—It was shortly before the election.

590. And you always promised to vote for Captain Flanagan?—I did.

591. Did you tell Captain Flanagan that you got the money from the other side?—I didn't.

592. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Was it to Captain Flanagan himself you first made the promise to vote for him?—It was.

593. Had you spoken to any one about it before you spoke to himself?—No; I spoke to no one until Captain Flanagan came into my own house.

(The witness then withdrew.)

Charles Tiernan.

Charles Tiernan sworn and examined.

594. The Chief Commissioner.—You are an elector for the borough of Sligo?—Yes.

595. How long have you been an elector?—Since 1832: I had voted for that election.

596. Have you voted at every election since then?—I didn't.

597. You recollect the last election?—I do.

598. You remember after the two candidates coming forward?—Yes, I do.

599. By whom were you canvassed on behalf of Major Knox?—By himself.

600. Were there any persons with him at the time?—The then Clerk of the Peace was with him.

601. That is Utred Knox?—Yes.

602. Did you then make any promise to Major Knox?—I told him I would record my vote in his favour.

603. After having promised to vote for Major Knox had you any other conversation with him in reference to your vote?—All the conversation was I said I was labouring under pecuniary difficulties at the time. He told me he would make amends for it, and to call on Mr. Utred Knox on the next day. I went next day to the Clerk of the Peace according to arrangement, and he handed me £10.

604. How long before the election was that?—It was in 1867. It was over two years before the election.

605. Was it true when you said to Major Knox that you were pressed with difficulties?—It was.

606. In that conversation with Major Knox did you make any reference to previous elections—did you say anything about losses that you had sustained in consequence of the way you voted?—Yes, I did.

607. On which side did you vote at these elections?—The last election I voted was when the Hon. John Wynne was a candidate. I voted for him against Mr. Somers.

608. Did you vote after that election?—I didn't.

609. Didn't you vote at the elections at which Sergeant Armstrong and Mr. Macdonogh were candidates?—No. I had no vote then. The last time I voted was for the Hon. John Wynne.

610. What was it you said to Major Knox in the conversation you had with him about your vote—about the losses you sustained at previous elections?—I told him I had sustained losses by them, and I will tell you how—it was on the Conservative side I recorded my vote at the time. Shortly after that they withdrew their support from me.

611. Who withdrew their support from you?—They withdrew their support from me as a tradesman.

612. Who withdrew their support?—The Conservatives did.

613. What were the difficulties you were under that you referred to in your conversation with Major Knox. Was the difficulty about rent?—About rent and taxes.

614. How much was the debt you owed for rent and taxes?—It was about £14 at the time.

615. You said you called the next day on Utred Knox?—Yes.

616. Where did you call on him?—At his office in a house adjoining the courthouse.

617. At the Clerk of the Peace's office?—Yes, at the Clerk of the Peace's office.

618. The public office?—Yes.

619. What did you say to Utred Knox when you called on him?—I said nothing but that I was told by Major Knox to call on him according to promise. Major Knox told me to call at eleven o'clock, and I did so according to promise.

620. Did you tell Major Knox before you called to the Clerk of the Peace's office what was the amount of the debt you were pressed for?—Oh, no.

621. What did the Clerk of the Peace say to you when you called at his office?—I had no conversation with him, scarcely, but that I would vote for the Major.

622. What then occurred exactly?—He drew up a document and I signed it, that was all.

623. How much did he give you?—He gave me £10.

624. Exactly?—Exactly.

625. Do you know how it was made up?—I got a £5 note, two sovereigns and a couple of half-sovereigns. Four half-sovereigns, two sovereigns, and a £5 note.

626. Four half-sovereigns, two sovereigns, and a £5 note wouldn't make £10?—I know I got two or three sovereigns and a couple of half-sovereigns.

627. Previous to that had you any money transactions with Utred Knox?—I hadn't.

628. You passed an I.O.U. for the amount?—Yes.

629. Can you say what the date of it was—what year was it?—Sixty-seven.

630. What month?—August.

631. Were you ever since asked for payment of that money?—Never since.

632. Has Utred Knox kept the I.O.U.?—He has.

633. How was it worded, do you remember?—"I promise to pay Utred Knox the sum of £10." I don't exactly know the rest of it.

634. Did you get any other money?—I didn't.

635. When you got the £10 from Utred Knox what did you understand it was for?—To record my vote in favour of Major Knox.

636. Whom did you ultimately vote for?—I voted for Captain Flanagan.

637. When you got the £10 from Utred Knox did you intend to vote for Major Knox?—I didn't.

638. Did Mr. Thomas Wilson ever pay any money for you?—He did.

639. What did he pay for you?—The poor rates.

640. For what did he pay them?—To qualify me to have a vote. The amount was £3.

641. Whom did you tell Wilson you intended to vote for?—For Major Knox.

642. Did you really then intend to vote for Major Knox?—I didn't.

643. Where was the money paid for you?—In Mr. Wilson's own house.

644. Was it to qualify you to have your name put on the registry list for the next election that Wilson paid the poor rates for you?—Yes.

645. Did you give an I.O.U. for the money he paid for you?—I didn't. I signed a paper.

646. Was it an I.O.U. or a promissory note, do you remember?—It was a receipt, I think; I don't exactly know which.

647. I suppose you didn't care what you signed if you got the £3. Did you ask Wilson to pay the £3 for you?—No, never.

648. Did you tell him you hadn't paid the poor rates?—I didn't.

649. How did he know you hadn't paid them?—I don't know. I suppose the rate collector told him of it. The rate collector was in Mr. Wilson's house. I was passing by at the time. Mr. Wilson called me in and paid the rates for me.

650. How did he know you didn't pay the rates?—I don't know. I was passing by at the time and Mr. Wilson called me in.

651. Did you ever tell Mr. Wilson you would vote for Major Knox?—He was aware of it.

652. How was he aware of it?—In consequence of voting for the Hon. John Wynne, he thought I would vote in the same way at the last election.

653. Are you aware whether Mr. Wilson paid other persons rates?—I am not.

654. How did he know that your poor rates were unpaid?—I don't know. I suppose he inquired of the collector, who was present at the time.

655. Did he ever make any demand on you for the £3 since?—No, never.

656. How often did you ask Major Knox for money?—Only on one occasion.

657. Had you sent a memorial to Major Knox?—Yes, with a few signatures attached to it.

658. Were they electors?—Yes, electors.

659. Conservative electors?—Yes, Conservative electors.

660. Who sent the memorial to Major Knox?—Mr. Smith, Mr. Burrowes, and others.

661. Who else?—Mr. Hickson, Mr. Taylor, I think, and a few more I disremember.

662. What is Smith's Christian name?—William Smith.

663. What is the Christian name of Burrowes?—James Burrowes.

664. What is the Christian name of Hickson?—Robert Hickson.

665. What is the Christian name of Taylor?—Andrew Taylor.

666. Were there any other persons signed it?—There were a couple more.

667. Did any but electors sign the memorial?—No one but electors.

668. Where is it?—It is in Mr. Molony's office, I think.

669. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Was there anyone with Major Knox when he sent you to Utred Knox?—Utred Knox was with him at the time.

670. Did he hear what passed between Major Knox and you?—He came accompanied with Major Knox, and he asked me if I knew him. I said I knew the Clerk of the Peace. Major Knox then told me to call on Utred Knox next morning. I did so, according to arrangement, and he gave me £10.

671. Was it Utred Knox said to call next morning?—No, it was Major Knox said it.

672. Did Utred Knox hear Major Knox say it?—I think he did; they were both quite convenient in my shop at the time.

673. Then he must have heard what Major Knox said to you?—I think so.

674. And you did call next day on Utred Knox?—I did, according to promise.

675. Did he, when you called on him, say anything to you about the election?—Nothing, except to ask me wouldn't I vote for Major Knox.

676. Did he ask you?—He did, and I said I would.

677. Was it before or after you got the £10 from Utred Knox that he asked you?—He was giving me the money at the time.

678. Did you say you would vote for Major Knox, or that you would vote for him if you got the £10?—He asked me wouldn't I vote for Major Knox, and I told him I would, of course.

679. Did you say anything else to him?—No, nothing else.

680. What was the nature of the memorial?—That I was labouring under pecuniary difficulties, and they hoped that Major Knox would assist me.

681. What was the reason you got only electors to sign it?—I thought they had the best claim.

682. On the candidate?—Yes.

683. Were those who signed it all supporters of Major Knox?—They were.

684. Was it, in plain language, a memorial to give you money?—It was.

685. Did you request him to give you a pension besides?—No.

686. Was the memorial sent to Major Knox before you got the £10?—It was.

687. Was it sent to him before you called on Utred Knox?—It was.

688. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Did Mr. Wilson pay the rates for you before or after you got the £10?—Before I got the £10.

689. Was it before you got the £10 from Utred Knox that Wilson paid the rates for you?—It was in August I got the £10 from Utred Knox; and it was at the previous revision in October, I think, Mr. Wilson paid the rates for me.

690. Was it before or after you got the £10?—I won't be positive about that.

691. In what month was it you got the £10 from Utred Knox?—It was in August, '67, I think.

692. Can you say in what month it was the rates were paid by Wilson for you?—If I had the receipt by me I would be able to state, but I haven't it convenient now.

693. Have you the receipt at home?—No.

694. Had you always voted for the Conservative candidates at previous elections?—Twice I did. I voted for the Hon. John Wynne at his two elections.

695. Did you ever vote for a Conservative candidate except for him?—I did. I voted once for Mr. Somers in this town when he opposed Mr. Wynne.

696. You voted for Mr. Somers?—I did.

697. At what election was that?—I think it was in '37, if I am not mistaken. I am not positive what year it was.

698. Didn't you vote at the elections when Sergeant Armstrong and Mr. Macdonogh were candidates?—No. I had no vote then.

699. Did you pass for a Conservative voter in the town—were you believed to be a Conservative?—The people believed I would support the Conservative candidate.

700. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Why did you vote for Captain Flanagan at the last election?—Because the majority of the Liberal party were for him.

701. Did you get any money, or any promise of money, from Captain Flanagan, or on his behalf?—I didn't.

702. Did you get any promise for voting for him before the election?—No; not a shilling, directly, or indirectly.

703. At any time before the election?—At any time before the election.

704. Whom did you first make a promise to that you would vote for Captain Flanagan?—To himself, when he waited on me personally on his general canvass.

705. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Why did you vote, or promise to vote for Captain Flanagan—did you approve of his principles, or what was it?—The majority of the people, the majority of the Liberal party in Sligo were for him.

706. I thought you said you passed for a Conservative?—That was formerly; but I changed.

707. When did you change?—A good many years ago.

708. Was it since you voted for Mr. Wynne?—Yes.

709. Why was it you hadn't voted at the elections at which Sergeant Armstrong and Mr. Macdonogh were candidates?—My house wasn't valued up to the valuation.

710. Did you apply to have your name put on the registry at these elections—was your case heard?—No.

711. Did you receive any money for not applying to have your name put on the registry?—I never did.

712. Are you a Roman Catholic or a Protestant?—I am a Roman Catholic.

713. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Had you any expectation of getting any money from Captain Flanagan's side when you voted for him?—None whatever.

714. Had you any expectation in your own mind that you would get it?—No; there was no money going on his side. No elector in the borough of Sligo got money from his side.

715. Had you any expectation of getting any money at all for voting for Captain Flanagan?—I hadn't.

716. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Did anyone canvass you for Captain Flanagan but himself?—I don't recollect anyone did.

717. When did he canvass you himself?—The day he was on his general canvass he called to me.

718. Did anyone ask you to vote for Captain Flanagan?—No; they all knew I would vote for him on that day.

719. Did anyone know your rents were paid by Wilson?—I am not aware.

720. Did you tell anyone that he paid them?—Not that I recollect.

721. Think if you did?—I told James Burrowes, a painter and glazier, of the town.

722. Is he an elector?—He is.

723. Was he a friend of Captain Flanagan's or Major Knox?—Of Major Knox.

724. Did he vote for Major Knox?—He did.

725. Did you tell anyone about the £10?—He was aware of it.

726. Was anyone else aware of it—did you tell any of the friends who voted for Captain Flanagan about it?—Everyone whose name was attached to the memorial was aware of it.

727. Did any of the Liberals know it?—They did.

728. How did it transpire?—I don't know how it transpired.

729. You said it was always known you were going to vote for Captain Flanagan—how could that be if it were known that you took money from Utred Knox?—I don't know.

730. They must have thought you took the money for something?—I suppose they considered I would vote for Major Knox.

731. You told us it was known you would vote for Captain Flanagan?—They were not aware of it at first. When I got the money they were aware I would vote for Major Knox.

732. When did they change their opinion, and think that you would vote for Captain Flanagan?—When he was on his canvass; when he called on me.

733. You say they believed you were at first going to vote for Major Knox, and that when Captain Flanagan came to you everyone believed you would vote for him—did anyone speak to you on the subject of voting for Captain Flanagan before he himself asked you?—Not one; my mind was up to it.

734. Did you ever tell any one you were going to vote for Captain Flanagan?—Yes.

735. Whom did you tell?—Several of the neighbours.

736. Before Captain Flanagan came to you?—Yes.

737. How soon after you got the money was that?—It was a couple of months before his canvass.

738. You said you got £3 at the revision—that was not a couple of months before the election?—[No answer.]

James Grey.

James Grey sworn and examined.

739. The Chief Commissioner.—Were you engaged by Mr. Thomas Brennan before the last election?—I was.

740. Are you an elector yourself?—No.

741. At what rate were you engaged?—Well, I had no promise of anything. He gave me money.

742. How long were you employed by him?—I think twelve months before the election.

743. Were you examined at the trial of the petition before Judge Keogh?—I was.

744. Did you receive any money for the purpose of the election?—I did.

745. How much altogether did you get?—I could not tell you exactly what I got.

746. It was how much?—I think I got £20.

747. Twenty pounds?—Yes, to the best of my opinion I got £20.

748. Where is Mr. Thomas Brennan now?—I don't know; I did not see him since I saw him at Carrick.

749. Is he not in Sligo now?—I don't think he is, to the best of my opinion.

750. Did you hear from him since the petition trial?—Never.

751. What was he in Sligo before the election—what was he doing—in what business was he?—He lived with his mother.

752. In what business?—Oh, he lived with his mother.

753. In a shop?—Yes.

754. Is it carried on still?—It is.

755. Whose name is over the door?—I think his father's name.

756. What is that?—John Brennan.

757. Are you sure you only got £20?—Well, I would not say any more. I might have got more or less. I never kept an account of it.

758. What were you exactly employed for?—I and others were paid for the purpose of aiding and assisting Major Knox in his election.

759. Now, what other men?—Different men.

760. You must tell me the names of them?—There were so many men I could not.

761. How many?—Sixteen or twenty.

762. And how much were they paid?—He used to pay them a sovereign and half-a-sovereign at a time.

763. Was this going on for twelve months?—I think the first of it was twelve months before the election.

764. When you say £20, did you mean that you only got £20 for your own share?—Yes.

765. And you kept that for yourself?—Yes, I did.

766. And do you swear you only got £20 for your own share?—About that. I would not swear to any more. I got some of that, not from Brennan either.

767. Who else did you get it from?—I got £15 from Mr Wilson, but I divided £10 of that.

768. You got £15 from whom did you say?—Mr. Wilson—Mr. Thomas Wilson.

769. That is Mr. Thomas Wilson, the last witness mentioned as having paid £3?—It must be.

770. There is no other Thomas Wilson?—No.

771. When did Thomas Wilson give you the £15?—Sometime before the election—before the revision, I think.

772. What were the £15 for?—I got a card from Patrick Flynn that he got from Mr. Harlowe Phibbs, and I went over with that card to Wilson's, and he gave me £5 for it.

773. Who did you say you got it from?—Pat Flynn, and he sent me to Wilson's, who gave me £5 on it.

774. And what did you do with that, the £5?—I brought it back to Flynn's house.

775. Who did you give it to?—I gave Flynn 10*s.* of it, and I gave Dominic Kilcullen 10*s.* of it, and I paid to the amount of half-a-sovereign a piece to ten men, or whatever went round about them.

776. You say you kept £20 for yourself?—I think so.

777. You think so; how much besides that £20, altogether passed through your hands for election purposes?—I got £20 from Brennan himself before the revision.

778. That was not for yourself?—No.

779. But to divide among the men?—Yes.

780. And you got £15 from Wilson?—Yes.

781. That is £35?—Yes.

782. How much more did you get from anybody else?—I got £14 from Brennan.

783. Any more?—Oh, he used often to give me an odd sovereign when I met him backwards and forwards.

784. Did he give you altogether £20 or £30, besides the £14 and £20 in sovereigns and half-sovereigns during the year?—No.

785. How much?—I could not say how much.

786. You have mentioned £49, that passed through your hands in addition to the £20 for yourself; do you swear you did not get £20 more than that?—No.

787. Did you see Brennan giving money to other people, besides the money that passed through your hands?—Yes.

788. To electors?—Yes.

789. You must name them?—I saw him giving money to Pat Flynn.

790. How much to him?—A sovereign to him, one evening on Cleaver's-row.

791. Do you know Dominic Kilcullen?—I do.

792. Did you see him get any money?—I did.

793. How much?—I saw him get £1 one night, and I saw him get a half-sovereign too one night. I saw him give money to Mulligan too.

794. How much did Mulligan get?—I saw him give him two half-sovereigns. The first time I was acquainted with Brennan it was in Mulligan's house.

795. Martin Mulligan's house?—Yes.

796. Is he a publican?—No.

797. What business is he?—He keep's a carman's stage.

798. How many electors were there?—Two.

799. Who were the two?—Kilcullen and Mulligan.

800. And they got half a sovereign each?—They did.

801. How many other men got a sovereign each?—About seventeen altogether. There was £8 10*s.* divided.

802. Were any of those men electors besides Mulligan and Kilcullen?—No, not that night.

803. Was that the first occasion on which there was a division of money?—The first occasion.

804. And that £8 10*s.* is additional to the sums you have already mentioned?—Yes.

805. And you only got half-a-sovereign of it?—I did. I got another half-sovereign the next day.

806. You don't include that in the £20?—I do.

807. Did you yourself give any of the money to voters that you got from Brennan. You have named Dominic Kilcullen and Martin Mulligan?—I gave Martin Mulligan money.

808. How much?—£3 out of the £14.

809. Did you give a man of the name of Michael Rooney, a voter, any money?—No, but I saw him paid money.

810. Who paid him the money?—Brennan gave it to me, and I gave it to him. He handed it from his hand to me, and I handed it into Rooney's hand.

811. Why was that money not given to Rooney straight?—He said he could not do so, that he might be brought to an account about it.

812. Then you took the money and gave it to Michael Rooney?—I did.

813. How long was that before the election?—I suppose about two months before the election.

814. How much was given to Rooney then?—£1.

815. What was the £1 for? Did he say?—Oh, he made an excuse that he wanted it for seed-oats, or something like that.

816. Was it you brought Rooney to Brennan?—No.

817. Who brought Rooney to Brennan?—I was in the market. Rooney came to me and told me Thomas Brennan wanted me. "What does he want me for?" says I. "He wants to give me some money," says he, "and he cannot give it himself, you must come down and get it for me." "Where is he?" says I. "Below in M'Grath's," says he. So I went down to M'Grath's, and Brennan was there, and he handed me £1. "Give that to Rooney," says he; and I handed it to him.

818. What did you do with the £14 you got?—Brennan told me to keep £5 for myself, to give £3 to Martin Mulligan, £3 to Scanlan.

819. Is he a voter?—No.

820. What is his Christian name?—Bartle Scanlan. And Michael Kaveny £2 too.

821. Is he a voter?—No. And I gave Pat M'Goldrick £1.

822. Did he get £1?—I gave it to him.

823. Is he a voter?—No.

824. What did you do with the £20 you got?—I divided it too. I kept one myself.

825. And what did you do with the remaining £19? Who did you give it to?—I gave it round about to the men.

826. Well, did you give any of it to Pat Flynn?—I think I gave him a sovereign.

827. Did you give any to Dominic Kilcullen?—I gave it to his son for him. I suppose it is the same thing.

828. Does the son live in the house with him?—He does.

829. Did you give any to Michael Rooney?—No.

830. Did you give any to any other elector?—No.

831. What did you do with the remainder?—I gave it to non-electors.

832. How long was that before the election?—About a week before the revision and at the revision. Some time about the revision.

833. Did you know anything about Captain Flanagan's men getting any money—I mean by hearsay?—No more; only to hear it.

834. Did you hear it?—I only heard it going that they might get money.

835. Did you hear that there was money going?—I did hear that.

836. At the time of the revision was there an opposition mob to Major Knox's in town?—There was.

837. How many?—Different people going about.

838. Were there people sometimes in one mob and sometimes in another?—No; I don't remember that.

839. Did you go about that time to Major Knox?—Yes.

840. About paying this money?—Yes; I did, by Brennan's orders.

841. What did Brennan tell you?—That was after he came back from Dublin. He gave me a note to go Major Knox, and I went to him.

842. Where did you see the Major?—At his house above in the Mall; his lodgings—Utred Knox's house.

843. What did you tell him?—I told him that Brennan had sent me to him with that bit of a note, and that he expected the men would get some money; and he asked me was Brennan dividing the money fairly. I told him I thought he was. He told me he thought he was not, and that there should be some other man that would divide it fairly. I told him that Brennan was dividing the money fairly, so he told me to send Brennan to him the next day. That night I went over to Brennan and told him, and he went the next morning, and that was the morning he gave me the £20. He gave me £20 next morning, as I told you.

844. What did the Major tell you to do?—He told me to send Brennan to him next day, and I went over that night and told Brennan to go to the Major the next day, and Brennan went, I believe, to the Major the next day, and he brought £20 back, which he gave to me in presence of voters, too.

FIRST DAY.
October 5.
James Grey.

845. In presence of whom?—Dominic Kilcullen and other men that were by.

846. Were there any other voters there besides Kilcullen?—Not at the time. There was one man there, I remember.

847. Gillan?—No; I don't know that name.

848. Was there a man named Cabrey there?—He was.

849. What did you say about the £20?—I said that £20 was no good among all the men; that I would not take it.

850. Did you take it?—Not at that time. There was some talk about it being better to bring it back again; that it was no use, and the Major himself came on the ground before we had much discourse made about it.

851. What did you tell the Major?—We told him that £20 was no use, and he told Brennan to divide that £20, and there could be more got after, and went away.

852. Did you then divide it?—We did.

853. Did you divide it in the way you have told us?—Yes.

854. Was there any other elector besides Kilcullen talking to the Major at that time?—No, I don't remember any.

855. Did you ever hear Brennan say anything about Kilcullen having got money, or how much money Kilcullen got?—I did.

856. What did you hear him say?—I heard him say that Kilcullen would be well recompensed for his vote, and I suspected that he was to get money himself.

857. How much did you hear Kilcullen was to get?—I don't know what he was to get, but I know what Brennan told me he got.

858. How much did he get, then?—£25.

859. How did he get that money?—I asked Brennan how much did he get, and he said, "I wish you got as much, anyway." "How much did he get?" I said to Brennan, "did he get £20?" "He did." "Did he get more?" He did; he got £5 more, he got five-and-twenty. He got two ten-pound notes and a five-pound note."

860. Did he say who gave that money to him personally?—Yes—no.

861. Did he say that he gave it to him himself?—He said he gave it to him himself.

862. Brennan?—Yes.

863. Did you ask him for any money?—I did. I asked him what was the reason why I did not get something from him. I complained to him. He said, "I will get you something—some money," and I said, "Why not give it to me as well as to him?" He then said, "I will get you some money—I will get you a bill on the bank." Says I, "Very well; I don't care where you get it so as you give it to me." It was a week or five or six days after he said that he would get me a bill on the bank; he said he had put my name to a bill on the bank, and I believe he did.

864. Did you put your name on the bill?—No, but he did.

865. For you?—Yes.

866. Was that the occasion he gave you the £14?—Yes.

867. Do you know Peter Harrison?—Yes.

868. An elector?—Yes.

869. Had you any dispute with him?—I had no dispute with the man, but he charged me with assaulting him at the election.

870. What became of that transaction?—I was acquitted of it. I had to stand my trial for it here.

871. Who did Harrison vote for?—I don't think he voted at all. He went away out of the town.

872. Did you see Brennan give any other people any other money?—No.

873. I ask you on oath how much money did you see Brennan distributing in that way?—I could not say, indeed.

874. Did you see him give away £100?—I am sure he did, and more.

875. Did you see him give £150?—I think so.

876. Did you see him give £200?—No. I would not say that.

877. Did you ever see Brennan get money from any person?—I saw different letters from the Major, and orders for money.

878. To whom?—To Brennan himself.

879. What orders?—Bank orders.

880. For how much at a time?—I saw £10—a couple of orders. I don't know where they came from. I saw different letters.

881. How long was this going on before the election?—Twelve months before the election.

882. Can you say to what amount you saw the orders going to Brennan that he showed you?—Only two or three orders.

883. Who were they from?—I don't know who from—from Dublin, I suppose.

884. Do you know the bank they were on?—No.

885. You saw one order for £10?—Yes.

886. What bank was that on?—I cannot say.

887. Who sent that order—what is the name if any name—who did Brennan say that came from?—He did not tell me who it came from. I did not inquire who it came from.

888. Try and recollect again; you say you saw Brennan giving over £150?—I did.

889. Name again the electors you saw money given to?—I never saw him, Brennan, give any money to any elector but Flynn, and Rooney, and Kilcullen, and Mulligan.

890. Four?—Four.

891. Were they often with him?—At different times, except Rooney. I never saw him more than once with him.

892. What else used you and Brennan to be doing; had you any list of electors?—No.

893. Did you know any one who had a list of electors under Brennan?—No.

894. Do you know what I mean by a list?—I do.

895. Did you see a document like that (exhibiting a voter's list) with Brennan?—I think I did.

896. When you say you think, do you remember whether you did or not?—At the time of the revision I saw a list such as that with him.

897. Had Brennan any room in his house to which you and other supporters of Major Knox used to go?—No.

898. Was there any room?—No; it was generally we used to walk by the line up by Carnes.

899. But had you any room in a public house in which you met?—We never met in any public house.

900. Where did you meet?—At Carnes.

901. In any house?—No.

902. Do you mean to say you had no house where you used to go and talk about matters?—No, only the night we were in Mulligan's—we were in no house.

903. Did you call on any elector, and ask him to vote?—I called on Flynn.

904. Who else?—No one else.

905. What were you doing for the twelve months?—I was not doing much—the devil a much I was doing.

906. Did you only keep £20 yourself out of all the money?—I did—I got one pound and a half-sovereign, and I got £25.

907. Did you get two five pound notes?—I got £5 out of the £14, and I got £5 of Wilson's money, I got the rest I suppose in half sovereigns, and so on—I got £20 out of it I am sure.

908. Were you employed to hire a mob?—No, I was not employed for anything at all but to serve Major Knox and Brennan, that is what I was employed for.

909. How did you serve the Major and Brennan?—I did no good at all for the money.

910. What were those other men to do that were getting the half-sovereigns—what did Kilcullen do?—I never saw the men doing anything.

911. What did Michael Rooney do?—I never saw the man doing anything.

912. What is Michael Rooney?—He is a farmer.

913. Used he be in town with the mob?—He used to be in town often, on his business I suppose.

914. You swore Brennan gave you over £150; did you see anyone else giving money besides yourself and Brennan?—Oh, no, I saw no other except the Major himself. I saw him giving money backwards and forwards through the streets to the poor, and different people he used to meet at the time of the election—and before the election, when he used to come to town. Brennan told myself that the week of the revision he gave out £90.

915. Who did?—Brennan himself—that was to the people at the water side, and different parts of the town.

916. Did he tell you to whom he gave the money—was there any rioting going on in the town at the time of the revision?—Well, not much. He gave it for the purpose of getting men to assist Major Knox to get leave to pass, and assist him in his election. He told me it was for that purpose.

917. What do you mean by the people on the river side?—The men at the river side—Holborn-street, upper Pound-street.

918. Do you swear you do not know any others, but the four electors you have named to have got any money—you name four?—I did not see any more electors getting money.

919. You did not see any more?—No.

920. Did you hear of any more getting money at either side. You said "see," am I to understand you did not see any more getting money?—No.

921. Did you hear of any more getting money?—No, I did not.

922. You did not?—I might hear people talk of getting money, but I knew nothing of it.

923. Did you hear Brennan say any more got money—that is my question?—I heard him say that Neilan was to get money.

924. How much?—I could not say.

925. Who else?—I heard him say he would pay Flynn's rent—myself introduced Flynn to him.

926. Go on?—That is all the men he told me he gave money to.

927. Do you know of any people having left town to avoid voting?—Oh, there were people left town.

928. Do you not know that voters left town to avoid voting?—There were different voters.

929. Give the names?—Harrison is one, and the two M'Mullan's left town.

930. What is Harrison's Christian name?—Peter; I don't know the Christian names of the M'Mullan's.

931. They left the town?—Yes.

932. Where did they go to?—I do not know where they went to.

933. Did you know they were to leave it?—I did—I did not know it.

934. Who else left besides Harrison and the two M'Mullan's?—I don't remember the names.

935. You must try to remember; you will only be called up again?—Mulligan, the cooper; James Devanny, left the town.

936. You have named five?—I don't believe there were any more.

937. You must try your memory—more left town?—Oh, there did, I believe.

938. As regards these five men, from whom did you know that they left the town? Did any of those men leave the town on the Sunday before the polling. The polling was on a Thursday?—I don't know what day they left it, but I know they were not here the day of the polling.

939. Did you know that on the Wednesday before the polling?—I did not, only to hear it suspected, that they left the town the day or the night before the election.

940. You named five, do you name any others?—I believe Edward Gethins, I heard he left the town. I do not know more at present.

941. Did you hear of these six having left the town the day before the polling?—I did.

942. From whom?—I could not say from whom.

943. Did Brennan speak to you on the subject?—Oh, no, Brennan did not. I did not see Brennan for a fortnight before the election.

944. For a fortnight?—No.

945. Where had he gone to?—I don't know where he was.

946. Was he in Sligo?—He might.

947. How did it happen that you did not see him—what were you doing—had you left his employment?—Well, I did leave it. I did not go near him.

948. Did you leave his employment?—I did; I had nothing to do with him months before the election.

949. And did you go to the other side?—Well, I did not go to any side.

950. Did you get any payment from the other side?—No, not a shilling.

951. Did you know the two M'Mullan's?—Well, I know them.

952. Do you know these other men?—I do. I know Mulligan, Gethins, and Harrison.

953. Did you speak to them on the subject of their leaving town?—No.

954. Did you know who got them to leave town?—I did not.

955. Did you hear it in some way that they left town?—I heard they left town.

956. Did you hear they were "got at" to leave town—smuggled out of town?—I saw Devanny the night before the polling in the street, and I heard he was at Larry Burke's the night before the poll, and he got away.

957. Laurence Burke is a voter?—He is a voter.

958. He did not poll?—I do not know whether he polled or not. I think he did not poll.

959. Did you see Laurence Burke on the day of the polling?—No.

960. Or Devanny?—No.

961. Think of any other man—you have named six—who left the town?—I don't know of any.

962. Did Burke leave the town, or vote?—I cannot say. I did not think I would be asked these questions; if I did I would think over it better.

963. Take your time—we are trying to get at the truth?—Not answered.

964. What was the occurrence between you and Harrison that led to the charge of assault—on what day was it?—It was the night previous to the election—the night after the election—the night after the election or the night of the poll, I don't know which, he charged me.

965. Do you know a man named Dolan?—I do.

966. Was he one of the men that went away?—Well, I think he was.

967. What was his Christian name?—I do not know what is his Christian name.

968. What is he by trade, or profession?—He was the guard of a coach, I believe.

969. Do you know a man named Kearns?—I do.

970. Was he one of the men that went away?—I think he did go away—he was not to be had anyway.

971. He was not to be had?—No.

972. Where was Kearns?—I think he was in the hotel above there.

973. Miss Allingham's?—Yes.

974. Did you see him there?—I saw him going in the night before.

975. Did you see him after that?—I did not see him after that.

976. Was there anybody else you saw going into the hotel in that way?—No, not that I remember.

977. Well, some voters?—There were different voters. I don't remember who they were, but I know he was in it.

978. He was in it?—Yes.

979. And did not come out until after the polling?—No.

980. Do you know the voters?—I think a man named Gilmore.

981. Was he one of the men that went away in the same way?—No, I do not think he did.

982. Was he to be had?—I think he was to be had.

983. Do you know anything about him?—No.

FIRST DAY.
October 5.
James Grey.

984. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Can you read and write?—I can a little—I can write a little.

985. How was it that Brennan showed you the bank order you spoke of from Major Knox?—Well, I will tell you that. He got it on Saturday. I thought to get money from him that night, and he said he had no money, but he had a letter from Major Knox, and had an order for £10 for us, and he showed it to me on the Sunday after.

986. Did you see an order on any other occasion from Major Knox to Brennan?—I think I did, one; I don't remember rightly; I think I did, one.

987. On another occasion you saw one?—Yes, I think so.

988. Can you fix any time?—No, I could not fix the time.

989. Did you go about with Major Knox through the town during the canvass to protect him from the mob?—

990. Did you not get money to do so?—I might have gone after him, but I never went with him.

991. What did you get the money for?—Oh, to assist him with those electors, advising them to vote for Major Knox.

992. What voter did you advise to vote for Major Knox?—I spoke to Flynn.

993. Did you speak to anybody but him?—No, I did not; and I did not care what he did with his voters at the time.

994. Was the contract between you and Brennan this—that you were to advise the voters, and canvass for Major Knox?—I suppose it was his belief that I would do so.

995. That you would do so?—Yes.

996. And did he ask you on any occasion whether you had canvassed?—He asked me did I think Flynn would vote for Major Knox.

997. Did he never ask you about any other man but Flynn?—He did, about this man Kilcullen, would he vote.

998. Do you remember any other man you had canvassed?—Oh, Mulligan—Martin Mulligan. Major Knox himself asked me did I think they would vote for him.

999. Is it your evidence that you got £20 for merely speaking to Flynn?—I was speaking to other men for it.

1000. Did you speak to other men?—I did.

1001. Did you tell Major Knox you had got promises from them?—I did not.

1002. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—The conversation you say you had with Major Knox, about the time of the revision, when you said something about the money Captain Flanagan's men were getting—£100?—Oh, I told him that for the purpose of getting something for ourselves.

1003. But that was at the time of the revision?—Yes, I did not know what the men were getting.

1004. After that Brennan gave you £20?—He did.

1005. How long was that before the election?—It was the week of the revision, or the week before the revision, or about that time.

1006. How long was that before the election?—I don't remember the time. I cannot fix the time before the election.

1007. What was the last sum you received from Brennan after the revision?—The £20 was the last money I got from Brennan. I had only £1 of that myself.

1008. The first money, when was it?—In January—about January, 1868.

1009. And the last was at the time of the revision?—Yes.

1010. The revision, we know, was some time in October?—Yes.

1011. Now, do you expect me to believe you did nothing between January and October at all for the money you were continually getting?—Did I do nothing?

1012. Yes. Do you expect me to believe you did nothing for the money you were getting constantly?—I did not say I was getting money constantly.

1013. But you got a good deal?—I did.

1014. You got money in January?—I did.

1015. What was the next money you got?—I should say a couple of months after.

1016. What sum did you get then—was it the £20?—No, I kept no date of when I got it, or how much I got.

1017. But you detailed a great many different sums?—I could not tell you how much I got each sum, but I told you the amount of money received in sums. I told you I received £14 and £20; that is all the money I received for the purpose of paying out.

1018. But you received other money besides that?—I did—a half sovereign, and seven and sixpence, and fifteen shillings, and so on, according as he would meet me and give it, and I did not know why or what purpose it was for either.

1019. You swear you did not know for what purpose?—Except for the purpose of assisting Major Knox at his trial——

1020. What do you mean by assisting Major Knox——?—At his election.

1021. What do you mean by assisting him?—Assisting him—I suppose to speak to voters, or help him in his election.

1022. What do you mean—was it to help voters—to protect voters?—To advise them, I suppose.

1023. What do you mean by advise them?—Advise them to vote for Major Knox.

1024. Advise them to vote for Major Knox?—Yes.

1025. Do you mean to canvass for him?—Any man I had an influence over to speak to.

1026. And ask him to vote for Major Knox?—Yes; I did not know any other purpose.

1027. Did you canvass for Major Knox?—I canvassed Flynn, and advised him to vote for Major Knox.

1028. But did you continually canvass for Major Knox during the time you got this money?—Oh, not at all.

1029. You did not canvass for him?—No. When Brennan came up and gave me the money to be sure I would take it.

1030. I would suppose Brennan did not give you the money unless he found you were doing something, and that he went to find out what you were doing?—Well, I was doing no good for him anyhow, or no harm either. I was taking the money.

1031. Did you go with any of those men that you gave money to to go about the streets—the mob?—I never went about the streets shouting for Major Knox at all.

1032. Did you go about the streets with the other men who were shouting for Major Knox?—Very seldom, except I met them in the street and passed by.

1033. Did you ever go with them—I don't call meeting the people in the street going with them.

1034. Did you ever go with them?—No, I did not.

1035. You swear that?—I swear. One day in Market-street there was a row; the boys were shouting for Major Knox. I came by and went home, one day in Market-street. There was some sort of a row.

1036. You did not stop them?—No.

1037. Nor shout for Major Knox?—No.

1038. And you never did the whole time?—I did, one day up in our street, when Captain Flanagan was on his canvass. There were a lot of people with him, and they came shouting to my door, and I shouted for Major Knox that day.

1039. Where abouts?—At my own house.

1040. What time was that—was it at the revision?—After the revision, I think, or at the revision or before; I could not tell what time.

1041. But about that time?—About that time; a little before or after the gentleman was on his canvass.

1042. Was that the only time you ever shouted for Major Knox?—That is the only time I ever shouted for Major Knox.

1043. Was that the only time you shouted for Major Knox, I mean when you would meet the people, not accompany them, in the street?—That was the only time.

1044. Was that the only time you were part of a mob of people who were shouting for Major Knox?—That is all the time I ever was.

1045. At the time of the election did you take part with any mob?—I walked with the mob.

1046. You walked with the mob?—I walked with the people the day Captain Flanagan came into the town. I walked the streets.

1047. That is, you walked with the mob of Major Knox?—I walked the streets with all the people that were in it.

1048. But you know there were two mobs. I want to know were you with Major Knox's or Captain Flanagan's mob?—Major Knox had no mob at that time.

1049. Were any people shouting for him at that time?—For Captain Flanagan.

1050. No, for Major Knox?—No.

1051. You say you told Major Knox that Captain Flanagan's men were getting £100?—I did.

1052. Was that true—had you heard it?—No.

1053. It was not true then?—It was, for the purpose of getting money from Major Knox.

1054. Had you ever heard at any time that money was going on Captain Flanagan's side for getting up a mob?—Well, I did not hear it. I heard there would be money going, but I did not know of the fact.

1055. You did not know of the fact?—I got none myself.

1056. From whom did you hear that money would be going?—I do not know.

1057. Think before you answer the question. Try and recollect?—I could not recollect. It was often reported there was money going, and I used to see none of it.

1058. I dare say you did not, but who reported it. You must have heard somebody saying it?—I could not tell you.

1059. Think?—I could not tell you—it has just come to my recollection that I got money from this man here who is listening to my evidence, this Doherty (pointing to a man in court.) He gave me £3 one night I went to him.

1060. The Chief Commissioner.—What is his Christian name?—Michael Doherty, I did not remember that. It was one evening Major Knox was on his canvass. He was in the fields here, I was going down from Newtownholmes, and he was there on his canvass. We walked over the fields with him. This man (Doherty) came to me and said "you had better come to Major Knox to night, and you will get some money." I went over and he told me to wait until they came out. I waited, and when he came out, he handed me an envelope.

1061. How much was in it?—There was £3 in it, but he did not tell me what was in it, so I went away with the £3, and I opened it in Mulligan's house, and found £3. I divided the £3 with twenty men that were there. I met Brennan that evening. "Did the Major stand to you" says he. "He gave me £3" says I. "Well Doherty" says he "kept some of the money, the Major gave you £5," and Doherty the next day, when he heard about the money, sent me £2 more, and I divided it amongst the rest in the same way. I did not remember that until now.

1062. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—What time was that?—At the time of the revision or about it. It was about the time of the revision.

1063. What house did Doherty go into. Was it the house where Major Knox was stopping?—Yes. He was with him on a car.

1064. Major Knox was with Doherty?—Major Knox was with Doherty. It was Doherty gave me the money.

1065. Try and recollect who it was said there was money going for Captain Flanagan's men?—I could not tell you. I could not tell who they were. It was at a time I used not to pass any remarks, but I heard them say they would get money to-night, or money to-morrow.

1066. But you must recollect something of that?—I could not recollect, but I recollect to hear the word pass about men getting money.

1067. But you did hear people say that money was going on the other side?—I heard some talk about it.

1068. You heard talk about it?—Yes. I never saw any of it.

1069. Did you hear whether there was money given to voters or non-voters—to non electors?—I never heard about voters at all.

1070. Did you hear what the money was given for. Was it for drink; you must know very well what it was for?—[Not answered.]

1071. Was it for a mob?—I suppose it was.

1072. Did you hear it was?—Well, I suppose it was for a mob.

1073. Did you hear it was for a mob?—I did not hear what it was for. I believed it was for a mob myself.

[The witness withdrew.]

James M'Mullen sworn and examined.

James M'Mullen.

1074. The Chief Commissioner.—You live in Bridge-street?—Yes, I do.

1075. You are now an elector of the borough of Sligo?—I am.

1090. Whether it was two or three days before the polling day?—I could not tell.

1091. Did you go by train to Dublin?—I went from here to Bundoran.

1092. We all know that is not the direct way to Dublin?—Well, it is a roundabout—

1093. On what day did you go to Bundoran?—I think on a Saturday.

1094. Was anyone with you leaving Sligo?—Well, there was my father.

1095. Is your father also a voter?—He is.

1096. Is he William M'Mullen?—Yes.

1097. I suppose you left this on a car for Bundoran?—I did.

1098. At what hour did you leave?—I left early in the morning. I could not say what hour.

1099. Whose car did you go by?—I believed it to be Mrs. Buchanan's at that time.

1100. When you left this was it in order to go to Dublin?—It was.

1101. Did you sleep in Bundoran that Saturday night?—No, I did not.

FIRST DAY.
October 5.
James M'Mullen.

1102. How far did you go on that Saturday night?—I went straight ahead to Dublin.

1103. From Bundoran where did you go to?—From Bundoran to Enniskillen, and then by train to Dublin.

1104. Did you sleep either at Bundoran or Enniskillen on the way?—No, I slept none on the way.

1105. When did you arrive in Dublin?—On Saturday night. I left on Saturday morning and arrived in Dublin on Saturday night.

1106. That was the Saturday before the polling?—Yes, I believe it was.

1107. Now, had you ever been in this place in Dublin before, M'Dowell's the confectioner?—No, I never was.

1108. Who gave you the direction to go there?—Well, I was directed to a gentleman in Dublin. He brought me to this place.

1109. Who is the gentleman?—Well, I could not think of that man's name. He was a strange man to me. I saw him two or three times after, but I never remembered his name.

1110. You saw him two or three times after?—I did.

1111. Where were you directed to see him in Dublin?—I think it was in Mary-street, they call it.

1112. Mary-street?—Yes.

1113. Or Abbey-street?—No, not Abbey-street, Mary-street.

1114. What is the number in Mary-street?—That is a question. I could not tell the number.

1115. Did you get any piece of paper?—I was directed by a letter.

1116. Who gave you the letter?—My wife gave it to me.

1117. Your wife gave it to you?—Yes.

1118. What is your wife's name?—Her name was Margaret Rutherford—Margaret M'Mullen.

1119. Was this letter sealed?—No, I think it was not.

1120. Did you open and look at it?—No, I didn't; I would not open another man's letter.

1121. We must examine your wife?—You can't examine my wife. She is dead. She died while I was away.

1122. I did not know that?—Do you know who gave your wife the letter?—The letter—well, I believe it was Mr. Stokes.

1123. What is his Christian name?—Well, I don't know his Christian name.

1124. Is he Mr. Stokes of Sligo?—Yes.

1125. Had you any conversation with Mr. Stokes before that?—I had—very little.

1126. What was it?—Well, it was nothing of any great consequence, indeed. He asked me was I going to vote. I said I did not intend to vote at either side, for they had annoyed me very much before that. They had annoyed me to that degree that I told them I would not vote at either side. "Well," says he, "if you like I will give you a note to go to Dublin, a message from me." "Very well," I said, "I will go." There was no more about it then.

1127. Did he give you any money for your expenses?—Well, he did.

1129. One pound?—Yes; and my father said he would come along with me, and he got a pound also. The money was given to my wife, and none to me. It was to my wife it was given, letter and all, and sent to me for us to go.

1136. You took a third class ticket, I suppose?—I did.

1137. Did you go to the place in Henry-street, the confectioner's?—I was desired to take the note as quick as I could—some note of business. I could not tell what it was.

1138. But you knew the note was to a gentleman?—Yes, it was to that gentleman.

1139. That is the gentleman in Mary-street?—Yes, in Mary-street.

1140. You say you saw him two or three times afterwards?—I saw him in Grafton-street.

1141. How long were you in Dublin on that occasion?—It was two or three days after.

1142. Was it only in Dublin you saw him?—Only in Dublin.

1143. Did you speak to him?—Well, I did; just to have a couple of words with him—two or three words.

1144. What were the words—first, do you mean to tell the Court that you do not know the number of the house you say in Mary-street?—I do not know the number of that house.

1145. Was it in Mary-street?—I believe it was in Mary-street. I am not very well acquainted with Dublin. I never was in it before.

1146. Do you know where Nelson's Pillar is?—I do well.

1147. Was it in a street off that?—Yes, right down off that.

1148. Was it close to the confectioner's?—Well, it is about 100 yards off that.

1149. From the confectioner's?—Yes.

1157. Did he open the letter?—He did.

1158. What did he say to you?—He said nothing only to sit down, and he walked out to another room.

1159. Describe this gentleman. Was he an old or a young man?—Well, he was an elderly man. I could not say he was a young man.

1160. About how old was he?—About forty.

1161. Do you say now you have not the slightest recollection of his name or address?—His name? Well, at the present time I cannot think of the gentleman's name.

1162. Did you read the address on the letter?—I did—once—and then I asked for that man's name. I asked for his place and I took a car, and then the carman took me there.

1163. The carman brought you to the address?—He did.

1164. Did you then ask was "Mr." So-and-so at home?—I knocked at the door and presented the letter, and asked was that gentleman in. I did not name him, for I could not think of his name.

1165. You can read and write?—Yes, a little. I never heard any person of the same name before, therefore I could not think of it.

1166. But did it not make a great impression on you? Was it a queer name?—It was middling queer.

1167. Do you say it was in a street opposite Nelson's pillar?—That is the street I stopped in while I was there.

1168. You know Henry-street. Was that the street in which you found the gentleman? Was it a street off Nelson's pillar?—No, it was in a different direction altogether.

1169. Where was it?—It was up Sackville-street, and you turn to the left, and then it was one of the streets off there.

1173. Do you know where the Rotunda is?—I do.

1174. Was it in either of the streets opposite the Rotunda?—You go up to the Rotunda going to the place, and then turn to your left, right past the Rotunda, and it is the second street off that.

1176. Rutland-square?—I know there is a square there.

1177. Was it in a house in that square?—No.

1179. That is the street you were brought to?—Yes.

1180. M'Dowell's was in Henry-street?—Yes.

1181. But do you know the name of the street where this gentleman lived. Did you tell the driver where to drive to?—Yes. I went into a public-house and got a glass of whiskey, and then I saw the name of the place, and the cabman drove me there.

1182. James M'Dowell, confectioner, lives at 40, Henry-street?—Yes.

1183. That is the house to which you were directed?—Yes. I know the other street was somewhere off the Rotunda, not far.

1188. You know that is at the top of a continuation of a street from Dominick-street?—Yes, and I think you must go up Dominick-street to it.

1189. You say the left-hand side going up?—I believe it was on the left-hand side going up.

1190. About how far up?—I think about middle ways.

1191. Did the gentleman tell you who he was?—No, he did not; nor did I ask him.

1216. Nothing, in fact—what do you mean by nothing, in fact—were you working at your trade?—No.

1217. Were you earning any money?—No, I was not.

1218. Who gave you money during that time?—No person, except when I borrowed 5*s.* from my landlord.

1219. Was your father living with you all that time?—Yes.

1220. At M'Dowell's?—Yes.

1221. Did your father get any money?—I don't know; he will speak for himself.

1223. How much?—He gave me half-a-crown one time.

1224. Had he any money leaving Sligo?—He had.

1225. And he gave you only half-a-crown.

1226. How many months were you at M'Dowell's?—I do not know how many months altogether.

1227. Were you three months?—I think about two months, to the best of my knowledge.

1228. And during the whole of that time neither you nor your father were working?—To the best of my knowledge it was near two months.

1229. During the whole of that time did you and your father get your meals regularly at M'Dowell's?—Yes.

1230. And were comfortably kept there; it is a respectable house?—[Not answered.]

1231. Did you know you were to be so long away?—No, I did not.

1232. What made you stay so long away?—Well, I liked the town. I liked to see Dublin. I liked to see all that was in it.

1233. I suppose you amused yourself while you were there?—I went here and there looking about me.

1234. And had some pocket money?—No, I had very little pocket money. I cannot say I had pocket money.

1236. Does your father carry on the business of a dyer?—Yes.

1237. You are a partner of his?—Yes.

1238. Now, during the whole of this time did you ever call on the gentleman in Dominick-street?—Call on him?

1239. Yes?—Not to my knowledge. I never called on the gentleman after.

1240. Why did you not?—Because I was not sure of the place.

1241. Not sure of the place?—Not sure of the place he lived at—not sure of the house he lived at.

1242. Do you mean to swear that the house being on the left hand side of Dominick-street you could not find it?—I will not. I could not swear either that I could find the exact house.

1243. Was his name on the door-plate?—It was night when I was there.

1244. Were you only there on one occasion?—On one occasion. I think I never stood in his place but once.

1245. Are you sure?—Well, to the best of my knowledge only once.

1246. Did you go away in order to avoid voting at the election?—In order to avoid.

1247. Yes; did you go away for the purpose of not voting at the election?—I went away because I would not vote at either side.

1248. You went away in consequence of the election coming on on the following Thursday, and you not wishing to vote at either side, you say that?—Well, if I had stopped I was going to vote for Major Knox—but then they said they did not want me.

FIRST DAY.
October 5.

1256. Are you a Roman Catholic?—Yes.

1259. Did you know you were to be charged nothing at M'Dowell's?—No, I did not. I never was asked for anything.

1260. But you know you paid nothing?—Nothing.

1261. And your father?—Not to my knowledge.

1262. Did you not know you were not to be charged anything?—That I was not to be charged? Well, I had a guess of that.

1263. You had a guess?—Yes.

1264. Did any other electors leave Sligo with you?—Not one.

1265. Did you see any other Sligo men in Dublin the week of the polling?—The week of the polling? No, I did not.

1266. Well, the week after the polling?—Not one man, to my knowledge.

1267. I mean an elector like yourself?—Not for a fortnight after.

1268. Whom did you see then?—I saw a man named Gethins.

1269. Where did you see him?—In Henry-street.

1270. At No. 40?—No, I did not; he was passing the door.

1271. Did you speak to him?—No, I did not.

1272. What is Gethin's Christian name?—Well, I cannot tell you that.

1273. He is living here in Sligo now?—Yes, he is.

1274. Do you know where he lives?—He lives in Radcliffe-street.

1275. The Chief Commissioner.—Did you ever go from Sligo to Dublin before?—Well, not before that—I never did; I never went to Dublin.

1276. When was it you arranged with Mr. Stokes to go away?—I think it was on a Friday.

1277. Did Mr. Stokes send for you?—Send for me? Well, he did.

1278. Where was the bargain made about going away?—Well, it was made in his own house.

1279. In your own house?—Yes. He asked me there what was I going to do—was I going to vote. I told him I intended to vote for Major Knox. He said there was plenty without me, he did not want me, and he would give me a trip to Dublin if I would like to go. I told him I would go; so I started off on Saturday morning for Dublin.

1280. Do you mean to tell me you really went to Dublin for the purpose of carrying a letter or a message—is that your story?—Yes.

1281. And you tell that as the truth?—Oh, I tell that as the truth. I got a letter to take to Dublin.

1282. You were employed to carry a letter to Dublin by way of Bundoran—you knew that?—I did.

1283. Did you know you were to go by way of Bundoran?—I do.

1284. Was it in the evening you delivered the letter?—In the evening.

1285. Did you know you were to be supported in Dublin at somebody's expense?—I expected to be back in a few days.

1286. Did you know that while you were in Dublin, whether short or long, you were to be supported at somebody's expense?—So Mr. Stokes told me.

1287. Told you?—Yes.

1288. He told you while you would be in Dublin you would be supported?—He would see me all right—supported.

1289. Who suggested to you to call for the £2 to Mr. Hignell?—My landlord.

1290. Your landlord?—Yes.

1291. Was that when you wanted to go back to Sligo?—I got a letter from Sligo from my wife that she was dangerously ill, and then I said I would go to see her.

1292. Only for that you would have stayed longer?—I would have stayed longer.

1293. Where was it that Hignell gave you the £2?—I called to the office.

1294. What office?—It was to the back gate I was brought by a young man called Brennan.

1295. What was his Christian name?—Thomas Brennan.

1296. Is that the man whose name was mentioned in this inquiry?—Yes, I think it is.

1297. Have you any doubt about it?—No. I would know the man if I saw him.

1298. He brought you from M'Dowell's to where?—To the back gate of some place.

1299. To the back gate of what?—Major Knox's, and I saw Mr. Hignell there, and I spoke to him, and asked him would he lend me what would bring me to Sligo and back. He said he would.

1300. To bring you to Sligo and back?—He wanted me back again.

1301. For what?—To see the town and country.

1302. Don't answer me in that way—why did he want you back again?—He told me to come back.

1303. To see the town?—He told me to come back again after seeing my wife.

1304. Was there any employment to be had for you?—Well I thought there was, but there was none.

1305. Who was to get employment for you?—Well, I thought my landlord was to find me some employment.

1306. You mean employment in your trade?—Yes; I got none.

1307. During the whole time you were in Dublin, two or three months, did you seek for any employment?—No; I never did.

1308. Or your father?—No.

1309. Do you swear you got no more money when you left Sligo than £1?—That is all.

1310. Did you see any money given to any other person?—I did not—none.

1311. Did your father get a pound?—He got a pound.

1312. Did you see him get that?—Well, my wife brought £2 down.

1313. Had your father any money of his own when leaving?—He had.

1314. How much?—I cannot tell.

1315. Had he £10?—I cannot swear.

1316. Had he £5?—I cannot say what he had—or not—I cannot do it.

1317. You say your father only gave you half-a-crown?—That was in Dublin.

1318. Did he give you any money before he left?—No money before I left.

1319. Did your wife give you any money?—No, only the money that paid my fare, as I told you, £1 to me and to my father to meet our expenses.

1320. Was it your wife gave the money to your father?—Yes.

1321. You saw her give the pound to your father?—She gave a pound to him and a pound to me.

1322. Where did she take the pound from?—She took it out of his pocket.

1323. Had your wife any other money then?—She had.

1324. How much?—£3.

1325. Where did she get that?—Well, I earned it—I left it with her.

1326. Your own earning?—Yes.

1327. You left her £3, was that all the money you left with your wife when you were going away?—That is all.

1328. Your trade was stopped in Sligo when you and your father went away?—I left a man to carry on the business.

1329. Was he a man in your employment?—Well, he was a man in the poorhouse—he understood a little of the business.

1330. A man in the poorhouse?—Yes; and we took him out.

1331. When did you take him out of the poorhouse?—About three weeks or a month before I left.

1332. Was that for the purpose of managing the business while you were away?—No, it was not; I had not the slightest notion of going away that time.

1333. Was the business carried on then by this man while you were away?—It was a little, not much.

1334. I suppose it was barely enough to support the people left behind?—Well, they soon closed the place up.

1335. When was the place closed up?—Well, that I cannot tell.

1336. Was it immediately closed up?—It was a good while, I suppose, after that.

1337. Was it three weeks open before this gentleman from the poorhouse found he was unable to carry it on?—I think it was more than three weeks.

1338. Was it a month?—I think, to the best of my knowledge, six weeks.

1339. Did you know in Dublin your business in Sligo was closed up, and still remain in Dublin?—Yes.

1340. Did you intend then to resume the business in Sligo?—No, I did not; I intended to take another house and start business when I would come back.

1341. When did you intend to go back?—As soon as I could.

1342. Is that an answer? I ask you when did you intend to come back to Sligo to your family?—In about a couple of months after that.

1343. You knew you would be supported free of expense as long as you remained in Dublin?—Yes, I believed that; I heard the town was in a very bad state, and I did not like to come by myself.

1344. Do you mean to say you were afraid of coming back to Sligo?—I was.

1345. Do you mean to say that for that interruption of business and everything else you only got a sum of £3?—I did not get £3; I only got £2.

1346. One pound for expenses, and £2?—I got a pound to defray my expenses to Dublin, and £2 for expenses back.

1347. And £2 for expenses back; then you got nothing for all this?—Nothing, only what paid my expenses.

1348. Do you swear now you expect nothing more?—Well, I don't know; I may expect something.

1349. How much do you expect?—Well, I don't know, there was no bargain made, or anything to that effect, that I was to get anything.

1350. How much do you expect?—I do not expect anything, except just they may do something some way or other.

1351. For all this loss?—For all this loss.

1352. And ruin to your trade?—I must look out for a trade again.

1353. Has your business been opened again?—I did open it a little, and closed it again.

1354. And are you now out of employment?—Well, I am out of employment now.

1355. Has anyone lent you money since?—No, no person has lent me any money.

1356. You have no employment?—I have no employment but just as I get it through town, and take it home to my lodging and does it.

1357. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Before you got the pound to go to Dublin, had your wife any conversation with Mr. Stokes?—Well, I don't know; I think she had.

1358. Did she tell you she had?—She told me she had a little. I did not ask her what.

1359. It was she gave you the £1?—It was.

1360. Did she tell you the sum she got from Mr. Stokes?—She told me she got £2, one for me and one for my father, and the letter told us to go in the morning.

1361. Had your father voted at the previous election?—At the last election?

1362. Had he voted at any election before the last for the borough of Sligo?—I believe not.

1363. The Chief Commissioner.—Do you know the difference between Upper and Lower Dominick-street?—I do not know the difference between Upper and Lower Dominick-street at all.

1364. Would you know the name of this gentleman if you heard it?—I think I would.

1365. See if it is amongst the names I will mention to you. [The Chief Commissioner.—Then read from Thom's Directory the names of several residents in Lower Dominick-street.] While doing so the witness said, "I remember the name—it is Kavanagh."

1366. Kavanagh?—Yes, Kavanagh is the man's name.

1367. Thomas Kavanagh?—I don't know whether it is Thomas, James, Jack, or Jemmy.

1368. But Kavanagh is the name?—Kavanagh is the name.

1369. Do you swear now that the man's name is Kavanagh?—I do; I remember the name now.

1370. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Was it the first time you saw Mr. Stokes in Sligo that you told him you would vote for Major Knox, and he said he did not want your vote?—The time he sent for me and asked me what I was going to do, was I going to vote, I told him I was. I told him I was going to vote for Major Knox. "Well," says he, "I would rather you would not, for they don't want you; we don't require you; so," says he, "I will give you a run up to Dublin if you like." "Very well, I will go," I said, and I did so, I went.

1371. Were you surprised when he said they did not want your vote; it was rather a strange thing to say?—No, I was not. The reason of that was I was registered here as a Roman Catholic voter, and I did not want to vote for Captain Flanagan, for I thought he was an elderly man, and I thought the other man was much better.

1372. That is the reason you did not want to vote?—That is the reason. I thought he would be a better man.

1373. Did you tell that to Mr. Stokes?—No, I did not.

1374. But were you surprised when Mr. Stokes said he did not want your vote?—I was not; not a bit.

1375. It was rather a strange thing?—He said he had plenty without me.

1376. Before that interview with Mr. Stokes did anyone canvass you on the part of Captain Flanagan?—I never promised my vote to either one or the other.

1377. But did anybody canvass you?—Yes, Captain Flanagan came into the house, asked my father for his vote, and I was in ——

1378. Did he ask you?—No, he did not, I did not come near him.

1379. He did not see you then?—He did not see me.

1380. That was before you saw Mr. Stokes?—Before I saw Stokes; oh, I saw Mr. Stokes every day.

1381. But I am speaking of this time. When you had that conversation with Mr. Stokes, had you seen Captain Flanagan before that; had he ever asked you to vote before that?—He never spoke to me.

1382. Had anybody else ever asked you to vote for Captain Flanagan before that?—Yes, there did.

1383. Who?—Plenty of people asked me, and told me I must.

1384. Mention their names?—Gilligan, the butcher.

1385. Was he a voter?—Well, I don't know whether he was or not.

1386. Where does he live?—He lives in Sligo, somewhere.

1387. In what street?—In Bridge-street.

FIRST DAY.
October 5.
James M'Mullen.

1388. Do you know his Christian name?—I think it is James, if I don't mistake.

1389. Was he a supporter of Captain Flanagan's?—He was.

1390. And he canvassed you for Captain Flanagan?—He did.

1391. Did anybody else?—No, no one else. There were plenty of people coming to me and telling me I must vote for Captain Flanagan, if not, that I would be a traitor.

1392. Tell me some of those?—I do not know the names of parties.

1393. But you must know their names?—There were so many here and there coming after me, the whole town was running to see where they could get people to vote for them.

1394. Try and recollect some of the names of some of the people?—They were telling me—every person of the party of Captain Flanagan was telling me to be true and staunch to Captain Flanagan.

1395. Were any threats used to you if you did not?—Threats?

1396. Yes?—There were.

1397. What threats?—That I would "catch it" if I did not vote.

1398. That you would "catch it" if you did not vote?—Yes.

1399. Did they say in what way you would catch it?—Well, I suspected, a good milling.

1400. But did they say anything?—Say?

1401. Yes, did they say they would give you "a good milling," as you call it?—Well, they only used threats just as I say repeatedly, and I told them I would not.

1402. Did they often use them?—They did, and told me I should stand to my guns.

1403. Did you ever tell them you were going to vote for Major Knox?—I did, after that they did not persevere with me so much.

1404. They were quite civil to you?—Civil enough.

1405. They saw you were a staunch fellow, and not going to change?—I was not staunch; of course I had made up my mind.

1406. And you were resolved to stand to Major Knox?—Yes.

1407. Were you ever at the Irish Times' office but once?—No, only once.

1408. The time you got the £2 from Hignell?—Only then.

1409. Was it Brennan came to take you to the Irish Times?—Yes.

1410. Had you ever seen him in Dublin before that?—I had.

1411. How often?—Two or three times; three or four times.

1412. Where did you meet him first?—I met him in Henry-street.

1413. In Henry-street?—Yes, I met him in Sackville-street, two or three times I suppose.

1414. You both being Sligo men, I suppose you come together?—We walked about different times; two or three times.

1415. But you told us you saw him in the street? I don't care, whether Henry-street or Sackville-street. Had you known he was in Dublin?—I heard people say so, but I did not know.

1416. Who are the people that said so?—I heard others saying it.

1417. What others?—My landlord asked me did I know such and such a man. I told him I did; and he told us then he was in Dublin. He told me there was a man of the name in Dublin.

1418. Did he say where he was stopping?—No, he did not.

1419. You were not curious enough to inquire?—I did not inquire.

1420. You did not care about Brennan?—No, I did not care where he was stopping.

1421. Is M'Dowell a Sligo man?—No, I never saw him here.

1422. Has he any Sligo connexions?—No, not to my knowledge.

1423. Did Brennan, before you went to the Irish Times, come in to you; or did you meet him in any house or street accidentally?—I met him in Henry-street, and spoke to him, and told I had got a letter from my wife in Sligo, that she was in a very bad state. "Well," says he, "would you like to go home, and come back again to Dublin?" I told him I would. Says he, "If you come with me I will get you the lend of what will take you there and back." He asked me how I liked the city, and I told him I liked it well. So I got the two pounds—two sovereigns—and came up here, and went back again.

1424. That was before the petition was tried in Carrick?—A few days.

1425. Before the petition was tried?—Yes.

1426. Were you afraid to go back to Sligo?—Afraid to go back to Sligo?—yes, to come back at that time, I was afraid.

1427. How long was it before the petition was tried?—A few days, I think; about a week.

1428. About a week?—About a week.

1429. Did anybody say anything to you when you did come back?—No, I did not go out much.

1430. But I suppose somebody knew you were down?—I was only in town two nights and a day.

1431. Two nights and a day?—Yes.

1432. Did you keep yourself hidden?—Well, I was in the house.

1433. But you were known very well. Did you go out at all in the daytime?—I did not go through the streets in the daytime.

1434. Did you go out at night?—I did.

1435. Did you wrap yourself up?—No, I did not.

1436. Were you afraid of being beaten?—Afraid of being beaten?

1437. Yes?—I took good care not to go very far, except just out in the country of an evening, because there were parties on the look out for me to summon me to Carrick, and I did not want to go.

1438. Who told you that people were on the look out for you?—Well, I saw it in the papers. I saw that it was coming off, that the trial was coming off in Carrick, and of course I heard them say that men were being summoned. Brennan told me they were being summoned in Sligo—that they would like to have me there, and I would not like to go.

1439. Brennan told you that before you got the £2?—Yes, he did.

1440. Do you think that Brennan wanted you to go back to Sligo?—Well, I don't know. I assume he would like me to go back, as my wife was in a dying state, and she did die.

1441. Now, did Stokes say in the interview you had with him, anything about getting you money?—He never said anything to me about getting money.

1442. You never hinted anything to him that you would look for something?—I did; I said I would expect something.

1443. You said you would expect something?—I did, for my trouble.

1444. That is, for your pleasure trip to Dublin?—No, I was going on his buiness. I considered I was going on his business. I got a letter of business.

1445. And you believed that he wanted you to go by car to Bundoran, and so round to Dublin, instead of going straight on—to carry a letter?—Not answered.

1446. Did you believe, as you hope to be believed, that Mr. Stokes merely wanted you to go to Dublin to carry that letter—going round by Bundoran—did you believe that?—I did believe it at the time.

1447. You did believe it?—Of course.

1448. Think a moment before you answer?—Of course I did. I believe he wanted me to carry that letter which he gave me, and gave me my expenses.

1449. Did he not tell you he would give you a pleasure trip to Dublin?—To go there as quick as I could.

1450. That is your answer—he wanted you merely to go to Dublin to carry a letter?—To go as quick as I could with that letter.

1451. Do you believe he had no other object in wishing you to go to Dublin, except to carry that letter?—Well, I cannot tell what his object was at that time.

1452. But what did you believe?—I cannot swear what is in another man's mind.

1453. I want to know what you believed at the time—did you think it a strange thing?—Why should I think so? I thought I might never come back.

1454. Never?—I thought I might come back.

1455. You say you told him you expected something for your trouble?—I did.

1456. What did he say?—I did not mention any sum, nor did he mention anything to me.

1457. Did he say anything?—That it would be all right—"you will be all right," he said that.

1458. "You will be all right?"—I mentioned no sum to him, nor he mentioned no sum to me.

1459. But when he said "you will be all right," that was in answer to your statement that you would expect something for your trouble?—He told me to take a letter for him, I said then to Mr. Stokes "very well, when will I return back?" "Shortly," he says, "you can have a few days in Dublin." So I went to Dublin.

1460. But I want to know when he said "you may have a few days in Dublin," what did you say then?—I was very glad to go.

1461. What did you say, did you say you would expect something for being away from your business?—Well, I expected something for my going, to tell you the truth.

1462. But did you not tell Mr. Stokes you expected something?—He told me it would be all right.

1463. He told you it "would be all right?"—Yes.

1464. When did he tell you that?—Before I went away.

1465. In what part of the conversation was it?—Just when I was going away.

1466. The Chief Commissioner.—You say you came back to Sligo about a week before the trial of the petition at Carrick?—Yes; some time about a week before the petition.

1467. Your father remained behind in Dublin?—He did.

1468. How long did your father remain behind you in Dublin?—Till I went back.

1469. You went back to Dublin?—I did.

1470. When you went back to Dublin was the petition in Carrick going on?—No, it was not time, it had not commenced.

1471. It had not commenced?—No.

1472. Were you and your father in Dublin while the petition was being tried in Carrick?—Yes, we were in Dublin. I went straight to Dublin from Sligo.

1473. How long after the petition was on? I suppose you heard the judgment in the petition case; you read the papers?—Yes.

1474. How long after that did you remain in Dublin?—I cannot say how long.

1475. Was it a month?—Only two or three days; a couple of days after I went back.

1476. A couple of days after the petition was over?—No, after I left Sligo, after I went back; I think only a couple of days.

1477. Tell me; where were you when the petition was being tried in Carrick?—I went over to England, to Manchester.

1478. Who told you to go to Manchester?—Well, I was told I might like to go.

1479. Were you ever in Manchester before?—I was.

1480. Who told you you might like to go?—My landlord.

1481. Who gave you the money to go to Manchester?—He said he had a message over; he said he would go; he said he had business over, and we went over; he did some business.

1482. Did your father go with you?—He did.

1483. Had your father a message over?—He had not 1484. Who paid your fare to Manchester?—He did.

1485. Who?—My landlord.

1486. M'Dowell?—Yes.

1487. Was that before the petition was tried in Carrick?—Just a day or two before the petition.

1488. How long did you remain in Manchester?—That I cannot tell how long it was.

1489. Did you stop long in Manchester?—I think a fortnight or three weeks.

1490. Where did you stop in Manchester?—I stopped nearhand the London station, I think on the London line.

1491. What is the name of the street or the square?—Well, I cannot tell you the name of the street, but it is not far off the hospital.

1492. Had you any employment while you were in Manchester?—No.

1493. Why did M'Dowell bring you to Manchester—on your oath?—He was doing business there; buying one thing or another.

1494. That he required for confectionery?—Yes. He did business—a good number of things, odds and ends. I could not tell you what they were.

1495. That is, he did?—Yes.

1496. Do you mean to tell me that you were assisting in the purchasing of confectionery?—No.

1497. What were you doing in Manchester?—Walking about.

1498. What did M'Dowell bring you to Manchester for?—Merely to accompany him.

1499. Had you ever seen M'Dowell before that visit to Henry-street?—No, never.

1500. Did M'Dowell keep you and your father living in the same house with him in Manchester?—Yes, all in the one house.

1501. Was it a hotel or a private house?—It was an eating-house.

1502. A tavern?—No, not a tavern; they sold no drink.

1503. But a place where anyone could get good accommodation that paid for it?—Yes, of course—at least for eating.

1504. Did you sleep there?—I did.

1505. Was there a sign to the house?—There was.

1506. What was the name of the house?—I think it is——. Well, I will think of the name in a minute—I cannot think of the name of the place.

1507. What is the name of the landlord?—That is what I am thinking of. He had two houses, one next door to the other. I cannot think of his name at all.

1508. I ask you again, why did M'Dowell bring you to Manchester?—Oh, I don't know what his business was to Manchester, but I went with him. He paid our fare.

1509. Where did he bring you back to?—To his own house.

1510. Where?—In Henry-street.

1511. How long were you there after being brought back from Manchester—you were three weeks in Manchester?—Yes, about three weeks. When he came back to Dublin we came with him.

1512. How long did you remain in Henry-street after you came back from Manchester?—I cannot tell how long.

1513. Was it a month?—I think it was something about a month or three weeks. I cannot tell to the exact time.

1514. You did not come back to Sligo until about May last?—I was here in May—I was here in March.

1515. Do you mean that you were here in March for good?—I think some time in March—about the latter end.

1516. Was it while you were in Manchester you read the report of the petition being over?—No, not in Manchester.

1517. Was it in Dublin you heard of the petition being over?—It was in another part of England.

1518. Where?—A place called Clithero.

1519. Did you go from Manchester to Clithero?—Yes.

FIRST DAY.
October 5.
James M'Mullen.

1520. What brought you to Clithero?—Well, looking about through the country.

1521. How far is Clithero from Manchester?—I don't know.

1522. How many hours were you going by rail?—That I cannot answer.

1523. How long?—I think it was more than an hour.

1524. How long did you stop in Clithero?—Better than a week.

1525. At whose house did you, your father, and M'Dowell stop?—Mr. John Radcliffe's.

1526. Did you know him before?—No, I did not.

1527. What brought you to Clithero?—Well, I don't know. I went just with M'Dowell.

1528. Had he any business there?—Well, I do not know.

1529. Were you in any other part of England?—No.

1530. It was there you read of the petition being over?—It was.

1531. How soon after that did you come home to Ireland?—I stopped a while at Liverpool.

1532. After that you went to Liverpool?—Yes.

1533. How long were you in Liverpool?—Two or three days.

1534. What way did you come home to Ireland?—I came home in the boat.

1535. Was it by the Holyhead boat?—No, I came to the North Wall.

1536. What made you go to Liverpool?—Well, as he was going he said he would pay my fare if I would go, and I told him I would go. I was as well there as——

1537. Do you mean to convey to the Commissioners that M'Dowell was doing all this out of friendship for you?—Well, I don't know. He told me he would take me there if I would like to go. I said I would; so he was so kind as to take me there and back.

1538. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—What is the name of the man who helped to carry on the business when you left?—He was named Molony. He said he would ask no wages—nothing only something to eat the same as ourselves.

1539. Do you know where he is now?—I do not, indeed.

1540. What was his Christian name?—I do not know whether it was James or John, or what his name is, only Molony.

1541. The Chief Commissioner.—Is your father in court?—I cannot tell.

1542. Did he come up with you?—He did not. I did not see him since morning. He was in town this morning.

1543. Is your father still living in the town, or has he left?—He has not left the town at all. He is in town here and there.

(The witness then withdrew.)

Adjourned to Wednesday morning at ten o'clock.

SECOND DAY.
October 6.

SECOND DAY.

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 6, 1869.

The Commissioners sat at ten o'clock, when the following witnesses, who had been summoned, were called, but did not attend:—Robert Stokes, Stephen Cherry, and William M'Mullen.

Dominick Kilcullen.

Dominick Kilcullen, sworn and examined.

1544. The Chief Commissioner.—You are a voter for the Borough of Sligo?—I am.

1545. How long have you been an elector?—Since Sergeant Armstrong's election, I got on the revision after that.

1546. Did you ever vote before the last election?—No, never.

1547. What is the rating of your house?—The rating is £10 valuation.

1548. Did you get any money from Thomas Brennan before the last election?—I did.

1549. How much did you get?—He gave me half a sovereign one night in Martin Mulligan's house in January '68; he paid seventeen of us half a sovereign a man. After that he threw £25 on the path of my field—two £10 notes and a £5 note. He told me to look after him. When he went away I took up the money. It was dusk. I didn't count the money until I went home.

1550. What day was that?—I can't recollect what day it was.

1551. How long before the election was it?—It was a good while.

1552. Was it three months?—It was about that and better—it was somewhere about the end of July.

1553. Did you see Brennan give money to any other people?—I did. I saw him pay seventeen men £1 a man one night. He flung Mulligan's money and mine to us. We took it up.

1554. How much did Mulligan get?—£1. I got £1 at the same time.

1555. How long was that before you got the £25?—It was on the spot. There was not more than half an hour's difference—there was about half an hour's difference.

1556. Did you see Mulligan get more than £1?—I didn't.

1557. Do you know why Mulligan and you got more than the rest of the seventeen men?—I don't know.

1558. Were you and Mulligan the only two voters among the seventeen men?—We were the only two voters, that was all.

1559. Had you done anything previous to this for Brennan?—The d—l a thing—not a ha'porth, only taking up with him since '67. He sent over to my house for me in '67, and brought me to Carnes. He said he was up in Dublin with Major Knox, and that Major Knox would get a situation for my son. "All right," said I; "very well." That was going up to Carnes, walking. After a good while we came down, and he brought me to Pat Mahon's house. He pulled out his pocket-book and gave him five one-pound notes. He retained Mahon's car, as he was the agent for Major Knox; that was what he said.

1560. Was that the first time you saw him give money between November and Christmas?—It was. We came out. I bade him good night and I went home. I saw no money. He said he would write to Dublin for money as we were to have a spree at Christmas. We had no spree at Christmas, but in January he came up and gave £8 10*s.* to seventeen men in half sovereigns; they got one each, and I got another.

1561. Didn't you also get £1?—That was between my son and myself.

1562. Did you ever write a letter to Major Knox?—No, but Brennan answered a letter Major Knox wrote me, a letter he wrote me some time in January.

1563. You got a letter from the Major?—I did.

1564. Have you it now?—I haven't.

1565. Where is it?—I gave it up in Carrick, and I never saw it since. I asked Mr. Moloney for it; he said he has a copy of it, and he said the Judge kept it.

1566. Did you yourself ever speak to Major Knox?—I did.

1567. When first did you speak to him?—Brennan gave me a letter to him after I got the letter from Dublin, and after the Major came down in the summer

—it was in January I got the letter from Dublin—Brennan wrote me a letter, he said, to Utred Knox's house where the Major was stopping, to return thanks for looking after a situation for my son. I went over with the letter Brennan wrote, and Major Knox was engaged with a man named Hunt, of High-street. I was waiting in the hall, the Major came out and asked me was I a friend of Brennan's. I said nothing at all. I thanked him for the letter. I came out and went away. He asked me could he do anything for myself. I said I didn't want his honour to do anything for me.

1568. Now, as to Michael Hunt, was he working for Major Knox?—I don't know. I can't say. I know nothing about Hunt.

1569. How long was Hunt in the room?—I can't say.

1570. When did you last see Brennan?—In Carrick.

1571. Were you speaking to him then?—No, I said nothing to him, nor he to me.

1572. Did you see Mulligan get £2?—No, I only saw £1 that night and a half sovereign he got in his own house. I should say indeed that every fellow was looking for his money now and then.

1573. When you got the £25 with Mulligan—is his name Patrick?—No, Martin Mulligan.

1574. Did you see Brennan give £2 to anyone?—No; I saw him give a man named Flynn a sovereign one night—Pat Flynn, the butcher.

1575. Is that in addition to the seventeen men?—I can't say.

1576. Was that before you got the £25?—No; I had it at the time.

1577. Did you do anything for the half sovereign or the £25 you got?—D——n the ha'porth—not a halfpenny.

1578. Did you do nothing at all for it?—No; I did nothing that I know of.

1579. Were you part of the mob—did you shout for Major Knox?—No, I didn't shout for him.

1580. Did you go about canvassing for him?—I canvassed no one for him.

1581. Did you ever ask anyone to vote for Major Knox?—Never in my life.

1582. Did you ever promise to vote for him?—Never, nor did he ever canvass me; but before he came to the house I went to the houses where he was, and where he went—Thomas M'Alin and Bryan M'Keon. Mr. Phibbs was with him.

1583. What occurred there?—He canvassed the men.

1584. Who canvassed them?—Major Knox.

1585. For whom?—For himself.

1586. Were you with him on that occasion?—I was standing at the door with Major Knox.

1587. Did you walk up with him?—I went over to the two houses in his neighbourhood.

1588. Were they friends of yours?—They were nothing to me. I told Major Knox where the houses were and the way down to them, and then went away.

1589. Did the Major call at your house?—He didn't.

1590. How did it happen the Major knew that you knew the way to the voters' houses?—I was on the road at the time, and Mr. Phibbs asked me to go down.

1591. What did you get the £25 for?—I can't say. When I took up the money I asked Brennan what it was for—was it for my vote. "What is it for?" said I; "is it for my vote?" He said, "It is not, it is for your loss of time."

1592. And did you lose any time?—I did a little now and then. I walked about with Brennan, and he used send me out a good while after the first time.

1593. Did you ever promise to vote for Major Knox?—I never did.

1594. Did you ever while getting money from Brennan intend to vote for Major Knox?—I never intended to vote for Major Knox. Brennan's advice was to go away and not to vote at all.

1595. Did Brennan often ask you to go away?—Well, we had many a chat about going away. He said he would send a good many away.

1596. Whom did he say he would send away?—Martin Mulligan was one.

1597. Who else?—Jennings, a watchman in the town, was another.

1598. Who else was likely to be got to go away?—That's all.

1599. That's all that you remember?—That's all.

1600. Don't you know there were others to go away?—I don't exactly know it.

1601. Are you a Roman Catholic?—Yes, certainly. There was no talk of Captain Flanagan at the time, the talk was about Sergeant Armstrong and Major Knox.

1602. That was up to June?—It was up to the time of Captain Flanagan coming to this town.

1603. Did you promise Captain Flanagan to vote for him?—I did, certainly.

1604. Where did you promise to vote for him?—I met him one day coming from my business, he canvassed me for my vote, and I said I would vote for him.

1605. Was that the first time you promised to vote for him?—It was.

1606. Did you tell anyone then you got £25 from Brennan?—I did.

1607. Whom did you tell?—The whole town knew it. He told everyone he gave it to me himself.

1608. For what did he give it?—I don't know.

1609. You stated that Brennan asked you to go away?—Yes.

1610. Where were you to go to?—I don't know, he was to be with us himself.

1611. Was that discussed in the presence of Jennings and Martin Mulligan?—I think it was discussed in the presence of Mulligan, but not of Jennings.

1612. What was Mulligan to get to go away?—Of course they wouldn't go away for nothing.

1613. That was what I was thinking—what was Jennings or Mulligan to get for going away?—I can't say.

1614. What were you to get yourself for going away?—£100—£25 and £75.

1615. The £75 was to be in addition to the £25 you got?—Yes.

1616. When were you to get it?—When the election was over I was to get it.

1617. Who offered it to you?—Brennan offered it to me.

1618. Did he offer it to you more than once?—He didn't.

1619. When did he offer it to you?—It was the week before the voting took place.

1620. Where did he offer it to you?—He offered it to me in the Clearer Plantation, above the boat-house.

1621. Was anyone by at the time?—There was no one by only myself and himself.

1622. Did you go to him, or did he send for you?—He sent for me to the butter-market; he sent a man named Price, who is his own man, for me.

1623. What is Price's Christian name?—I can't say.

1624. Is Price in town now?—He is.

1625. Where does he live?—He lives in Holborn-street.

1626. When did Price come to you?—The week before the election.

1627. Had you at the time he came to you promised Captain Flanagan to vote for him?—I had.

1628. What did Price say to you when he came?—He said Brennan wanted me up to the boat-house.

1629. Did you go?—I did.

1630. When Price came to you and gave you that message, did you then know what Brennan wanted you for?—I didn't.

1631. What did you suspect?—I suspected it was about the election.

1632. When you went to the boat-house what passed between you and Brennan?—I don't recollect all that passed, but I know it was I advised Brennan to come to my house, and stop with me, and have nothing to do with the election.

1633. Why did you advise him to do that?—Because I knew he had a good trade, and I didn't like to see him going to ruin.

SECOND DAY.
October 6.
Dominick Kilcullen.

1634. What did Brennan say to you on that occasion?—He said he would give me an order for £75 on William Middleton if I would go away.

1635. What did you say to that?—I said I wouldn't have any more money, that I promised Captain Flanagan, and would have no more to do with them.

1636. Is that the Mr. William Middleton who lives in Sligo?—It is; and I don't think the same man would give a shilling on his order.

1637. Did Brennan ever say where you were to go?—He didn't.

1638. Or when you were to go?—No.

1639. That, you say, was the week before the polling?—Yes.

1640. Do you know what day it was? Can you fix the day on which that interview took place?—I couldn't; it was either on Tuesday or Friday; it was on a market-day at all events.

1641. You are sure of it?—I am.

1642. At any rate, it was the week before the election?—It was.

1643. Did he speak to you on that occasion about the previous money you had got from him?—He didn't.

1644. What was the sum he mentioned that you were to get?—£75.

1645. And you had positively got £25?—I had, but he made me pay back some of that.

1646. How much did he make you pay back?—£1 13*s.* 6*d.*

1647. To whom did you pay that?—I paid it to Peter Taney.

1648. Where?—In my own house.

1649. Why did you pay that?—I paid it for drink.

1650. Was it to give drink to the mob?—It was; it was drunk at Dunney Rock.

1651. Was it drunk by the mob?—It was.

1652. What made you pay it?—I was ordered by Brennan to pay it.

1653. Was the order in writing?—It was.

1654. What was in the order, do you recollect?—I don't know what was in it.

1655. What made you pay the £1 13*s.* 6*d.* if you didn't know what was in the order?—I thought at the time I would get it back again.

1656. I suppose you thought Brennan was a little short of money?—I did.

1657. To whom did you pay it?—I gave it to Peter Taney.

1658. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—How long was that before the election, when you paid the £1 13*s.* 6*d.* for Brennan?—Something better than three months.

1659. Can you tell exactly when it was—what month was it in?—It was about the middle of August—something about that time.

1660. The Chief Commissioner.—Did any other moneys pass through your hands?—No.

1661. Did you see any other money paid to anyone?—I saw £20 paid to James Grey.

1662. Where was that paid?—Behind Fox's.

1663. Who paid it to Grey?—It was paid by Brennan.

1664. How long before the election did you see that £20 paid to Grey by Brennan?—It was at the revision.

1665. That was just before the election?—It was at the revision some time; I don't know what time.

1666. Did you see any other money paid?—I didn't.

1667. Do you know James Devanny, an elector?—I do well.

1668. Did he vote at the election?—He didn't get on at the last revision.

1669. Do you know him?—I do well.

1670. Do you know that he went away?—I do.

1671. Do you know anything about his going away—on your oath tell the truth?—Two nights before the polling, or one night, I saw him at his own door, and he was talking to myself. He went down to Clement's, and from that to Burke's, in High-street; he wasn't seen since.

1672. Where was he last seen?—I can't say.

1673. Do you know where he went to?—I can't say where he went to; he said he went to Burke's.

1674. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—That was two days before the election?—It was.

1675. The Chief Commissioner.—Do you know Michael Dogherty?—I do.

1676. Do you know anything about his going away?—I don't. I thought he voted for Major Knox.

1677. Do you know Henry Mulligan?—I heard he was missed out of the house; he was away.

1678. Do you know anything of his going away?—I don't.

1679. Were you watching him?—I wasn't watching him.

1680. Were you watching Devanny?—I wasn't.

1681. Do you know that there were persons watching him?—I believe a few boys in the town were watching Devanny.

1682. Mention the names of the boys who were watching him?—My brother, Tom Kilcullen, I believe, was watching him.

1683. Were the boys employed to watch him?—I don't know; I can't say that they were employed to watch him. If they were never employed they would watch him.

1684. Was Tom Kilcullen and some other of the boys watching him?—I know there were three or four of them watching him; they had an eye on him.

1685. Did Edith Gethin get away?—I believe he did.

1688. Do you know anything of Michael Rooney?—He didn't go away; he is a neighbour of my own.

1689. Did you ever apply to Major Knox to get a situation for your son?—Never in my life.

1690. Did anyone ever apply to Major Knox, with your knowledge, to get a situation for your son?—Not one, unless Brennan answered the letter Major Knox sent me; that's all.

1691. Do you mean to say that before you got that letter we have here, you never asked him for a situation for your son?—Never in my life.

1692. How old is your son?—He is about twenty years of age.

1693. Were you looking for a situation for your son?—I was not. He is not fit for a situation; he hasn't too much learning to fill it.

1694. Did you understand that any promise was made of trying to get a situation for him?—Not one but what came through Brennan.

1695. Your son got no situation?—Not one.

1696. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Did you ever pay any more money out of the £25 except the £1 13*s.* 6*d.* and the £1 to James Grey—you never got more than the 10*s.*, the £1, and the £25?—Oh, I did; I got a little more backward and forward—I can't tell the amount of it—from Brennan.

1697. Try?—I can't mind the small sums, the trifles now and again I got.

1698. Money paid from Brennan?—Yes, and from James Grey.

1699. About what time—was it about the same time as the order for the money?—It was before it.

1700. Before you got the £25?—Yes.

1701. I suppose you were getting these small sums in shillings and half-crowns for two or three months?—He was paying them in shillings, half-crowns, and five shillings. He had ass races too. He used go out to the river side spending money, and paying money in the different streets in Sligo.

1702. Was he doing that in the months of July and June?—The first time was between Christmas and November, in '67. Major Knox was in town some time before that; I can't say what time it was. He then left town and went to Dublin. After a while he came from Dublin again and sent for me. That was the commencement of it in '67.

Dominick Kilcullen.

1703. You saw Major Knox at that time?—I saw him in Brennan's one day I was getting tobacco, and Mr. Phibbs, Mr. Pollock, and Captain Wynne were with him.

1704. What occurred then?—Brennan said I had a vote, and he came down and spoke about it. I told him we had a good man in Sergeant Armstrong. He said he had a better claim on the borough than Sergeant Armstrong; that he was a Mayo man himself. I said we had no fault to find with Sergeant Armstrong; that he was a good member.

1705. In fact he canvassed you, then?—Brennan gave him a nudge about it.

1706. That was in Brennan's shop?—Yes.

1707. That was in the spring of '68?—It was before November, '67.

1708. How long was Brennan giving you these small sums—was he doing so between Christmas and August?—He was until Captain Flanagan came to town.

1709. What time was that?—I can't say.

1710. How much do you think you got altogether in small sums?—I got a pound in my own field, and half a sovereign in Mulligan's house, and 10*s.* at another time. I got about £28 altogether—I suppose.

1711. Including the £25?—Yes, in all.

1712. Did you ever send in a memorial to Major Knox, asking for more money?—Never.

1713. Did you ever ask Brennan to do so for you?—No; never.

1714. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Did you ever vote at any former election?—I didn't. I had no vote until the last election.

1716. Did anyone ever offer you any money for voting for Captain Flanagan?—No; never.

1717. Did you expect any?—No.

1718. Did you get any promise of money?—No.

1719. The Chief Commissioner informed the witness that if his evidence was further required in court, he would get notice of it.

(The witness then withdrew.)

John Feeney sworn and examined.

1726. Do you know Mr. Leech's place in Castle-street?—I do.

1727. Did you go to Mr. Leech's place any time before the election, do you remember?—Yes; Mike Price came to me one day and said to go down to Mr. Leech's, that Major Knox was there, and wanted me.

1728. Who is Price, what is he?—He was a labouring man Tom Brennan had in Market-street.

1729. He was in Brennan's employment?—He was.

1730. Was he long in Brennan's employment?—He was in his employment for five or six years before the election.

1731. When Price came to you, what did he tell you?—He told me to go down to Leech's, that Major Knox wanted me.

1733. Did you go?—I did.

1734. Where did you go to in the house when you went?—The hall-door was open. Price was with me, and showed me up stairs, and I went up stairs to the front room.

1735. Who was there when you went up stairs?—Major Knox; there was another gentleman in the room whom I didn't know.

1736. Are you sure it was Major Knox the candidate, that was there?—Oh! certain of it.

1737. Did you hear Major Knox address the other gentleman, and call him by any name?—I didn't.

1738. You didn't know who he was?—I didn't; I never saw him before.

1739. Do you know now who he was?—I can't answer for who he was.

1740. Had you any conversation with either of the two gentlemen that you saw in the room?—Major Knox asked me what was my figure, and I said I didn't know. He asked me would £50 do; I said I supposed it would, but that if others were getting more I thought I would be entitled to as much as another. He said I would. I was then leaving the room, and he asked me to take a glass of wine.

1741. Did you agree to the £50?—He asked me would £50 do. I told him I supposed it would do.

1742. That's not what I asked you—the question is, "Did you agree to it?"—I did.

1743. Did you agree to vote for Major Knox for £50?—I had no notion of voting for him.

1744. That's not the question—did you convey to either of the gentlemen there in that room, that you would vote for Major Knox if you were secured in the £50?—I didn't.

1745. Did you tell anyone that you were offered £50 by Major Knox?—Price told me not to tell anyone.

1746. Did you tell anyone before the polling that you were offered it?—I did.

1747. Whom did you tell it to?—I told my own neighbours of it. I told my own daughter.

1748. Did you tell any of Captain Flanagans supporters of it?—No, never.

1749. On your oath, did you leave the people in that room under the impression that you agreed to vote for Major Knox for £50?—Yes; I walked out of the room, and Major Knox asked me to take a glass of wine.

1750. Did you take the glass of wine?—I did.

1751. Are you sure; was it wine or brandy?—It was wine. He wanted me to have a glass of brandy afterwards; I wouldn't take it.

1752. Did you ever ask any money from the other side?—Not a farthing—never.

1753. Why was it that, when whoever it was that asked you would £50 do, did you say, "I suppose it will?"—Major Knox asked me would £50 do, and I said I suppose it would, but that if others were getting more I would be entitled to as much as another.

1754. Was that to convey to Major Knox that you would vote for him?—Yes.

interview with Major Knox?—I can't. I know it was the week before the election. I think it was of a Tuesday.

1761. Do you know a man named West?—I do.

1762. What is his Christian name?—John West.

1763. Is he an elector?—He is.

1764. Did you see him about your vote?—He came to my own shop, to my own house, about it.

1765. Was that before or after your interview with Major Knox?—It was after it.

1766. Was West canvassing you—did he come more than once to you about your vote?—He came different times to me about my vote.

1767. Do you remember the day after you had the talk with Major Knox about the £50?—I do.

1768. Do you remember seeing West on that day?—I can't say, it was the day after that he called on me.

1770. When first did he ask you to go away, do you remember?—He wanted me first to go to Dublin, he knew I got goods from Dublin.

1771. What goods?—Porter.

1772. Well?—He told me if I went to Dublin the agents for the brewery were in town, and I could get an order for £50, and I would get whatever I wanted.

1773. What town, is it this town?—Yes, Sligo.

1774. Did you ask him what brewery he referred to—I didn't.

1775. Did he say what brewery he referred to?—He didn't.

1776. What were you to get for going away?—Fifty pounds.

1777. Did he say he would give you £50 if you went away?—He did; I said I would.

1778. Is West still in Sligo?—Yes, he is.

1779. Did he only once say he would give you £50 if you went away?—He said it different times.

1780. What did you say when he said that?—I told him I would consider on it.

1781. Were you serious when you said you would go away?—I wasn't; I wouldn't go away by any means, but I thought it just as well to keep quiet with him.

1782. Did he say anything to you about going anywhere else?—He did.

1783. Where?—To Mr. Allen's, Drumcliffe.

1784. That's near the town, I believe?—It is below the town.

1785. What were you to do there?—I was to be kept there while the polling was going on.

1789. Do you know Edward Chisholm?—I do.

1790. Did he ever speak to you about going to Dublin?—He did.

What did he say to you about it?—I was in Mr. Green's shop one day for two panes of glass; Mr. Chisholm was passing by, and as I was going out of the shop he came in and asked me wasn't I going to Dublin; he said if I was to go to Dublin, I had no time to spare; I said I had bad clothes, and couldn't go then.

1792. What did he say to that?—He said for me to go to Lyons or Williams's, and I would get clothes from either.

1793. Are Messrs. Lyons and Williams in business in the town of Sligo?—Yes, they are drapers.

1794. What did Gauthin say?—I told him I should go home before I went there.

1795. Was there anyone present at that conversation between you and Mr. Chisholm?—Andrew Green was present at the time.

1804. Do you know two women named Mary Gourlay and Mary Smith?—I do.

1805. Did you speak to them?—I did.

1806. What did they say?—I was down here in town, and they told me there were two gentlemen upstairs in my own place, and they wanted to see me. I then went upstairs and saw the two gentlemen there.

1807. Do you know the names of these gentlemen?—I never saw one of them before, but I heard it said at Carrick that his name was Waugh.

1808. Did you see him at Carrick?—I did.

1812. In what room in your house were they?—In the front room.

1813. Is that a room where people go to have drink?—Yes.

1814. State what occurred when you went upstairs?—When I went upstairs this gentleman, Mr. Waugh, said he was sent with a message from Major Knox; that he was told to say that Major Knox heard I was looking for him; and that he was now disengaged, if I would be kind enough to go down to Mrs. Hall's. Mr. Waugh then put his hand into his pocket and said, "Here's £50 if you come." He laid the money—the notes—on the table. I told him I couldn't go then.

1815. Was all the money in notes?—I saw a note on the top. I couldn't tell the amount of the notes.

1816. What did you say to him?—I told him I couldn't go then.

1817. Where did he ask you to go to?—To Mrs. Hall's.

1818. Who is Mrs. Hall?—The Court-keeper here.

1819. Did you hear Mr. Waugh state in Carrick what his Christian name was?—I didn't.

1820. Where did he put the notes?—He put his left hand into his breast pocket.

1821. Did he leave them on the table?—He laid them on the table. They were tied up, and he laid them on the table.

1822. How much did he say they were?—£50.

1823. What hour was it?—About nine o'clock at night.

1824. State the commencement of the conversation. Begin that conversation again, and state the whole of it?—I was down in the town here, and when I came in one of my daughters told me there were two gentlemen up stairs that wanted me. I went up stairs and saw the gentlemen; they had some drink before them; I think it was two glasses of ale. One of them, Mr. Waugh, told me he was sent with a message from Major Knox to come down to Mrs. Hall's, and to come with him. He said, "If you come here's £50 for you." I said, "I can't go down yet, until ten o'clock, and then I will go." He said, "You may as well go now." "I can't," said I, "I have too much to do." He said, "As soon as you come down you will get this money." "As soon as you come down you will get it," he again said; but I didn't go.

1825. Did you say you would take the money?—I said I would go down. He said I was to go down with him and I would get the money, and that I was to take it.

1826. If he gave you the money then would you have taken it?—I wouldn't.

1827. What hour were you to be at Mrs. Hall's?—Ten o'clock.

[Mr. Waugh, who was in court, was here called.]

1828. Is that the gentleman who brought the message?—That's the gentleman.

1829. Do you swear he offered you £50 on that night?—I do.

1830. On your oath?—I do, solemnly.

1831. And that he produced some notes?—There was a note on the top.

1832. Do you swear that all that occurred in the presence of Mr. John Fawcett?—I do.

1833. How long were you with these gentlemen in the room?—About five or six minutes.

1834. Did you promise to go down to Mrs. Hall's?—I did.

1835. To be kept there during the polling?—I don't know that.

1836. Didn't you understand that?—I did.

1837. Didn't you understand that if you went down to Mrs. Hall's you wouldn't be let out during the polling?—I did, that's a sure thing.

1838. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Mr. Fawcett was with Mr. Waugh at the time when the £50 was offered to you?—He was.

1839. And he must have seen you offered the £50?—He must.

1840. Was there anyone else in the room at the time?—There wasn't, there were only us three in the room at the time.

1841. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—When West spoke about the order on the brewery, did he mention the name of the brewery?—He didn't.

1842. He didn't refer to it at all?—He didn't refer to the name of the brewery; he told me to go to Dublin, and that the agents of the brewery would get me what I wanted.

1843. Did you understand what brewery he referred to?—I did not; he didn't name any brewery.

1844. When did you promise to vote for Captain Flanagan?—When he went round on his canvass.

1845. How long before the election was it?—I can't say.

1846. About how long was it?—About a week or a fortnight.

1847. Did you ever promise anyone to vote for Captain Flanagan before that?—No, never.

1848. Did you get any money from Captain Flanagan?—Not a farthing.

1849. Did you get a promise of any money from him?—No, I got no money, or promise of money, from either one side or the other.

1850. The Chief Commissioner.—Did you see any other money offered to anyone at the last election?—No, never.

1851. Do you know anything about people going away to avoid voting?—No.

1852. Do you know Tom Brennan?—I do, well.

1853. Did he ever offer you money?—He never offered me a farthing.

1854. Did he ever speak to you about going away?—Never, nor I to him.

1855. The Chief Commissioner then informed the witness that he might retire for the present, but that he was not released from his subpœna. In case, however, he should be again required, he would receive due notice.

Mr. Aaron Waugh.

Mr. Aaron Waugh sworn and examined.

1856. The Chief Commissioner.—When did you come to Sligo previous to the last election?—I think about a week or so, if not more.

1857. I may ask you in whose service you were at the time?—In Major Knox's. I was a reporter at the time.

1858. How long were you in his service?—A long time, between seven and eight years.

1859. And you are still in it?—Not now.

1860. When you came down to Sligo, who was it sent you here?—The managing reporter "marked" me in the usual way to come to Sligo.

1861. You came, I suppose, to report the election proceedings in the usual way that a reporter generally does?—Yes, in the usual way.

1862. Had you any instructions when leaving for Sligo, except to do your duty as a reporter?—None.

1863. Did you do your work in the usual way as a reporter—did you send up short reports of what occurred, and the like?—I did.

1864. Had you no duty to do in reference to the election?—I had not. I succeeded in getting two or three electors to vote for Major Knox who were vacillating, and in consideration of that I got £12 10*s.* as a canvasser.

1865. Who were these two or three electors?—The late Mr. Robinson, Inspector of schools, my brother-in-law and young Mr. Fawcett, who would have voted for Major Knox.

1866. What is your brother-in-law's name?—Allen. These were men whom Major Knox thought wouldn't vote for anyone, and they were personal friends of mine.

1867. Did you canvass other electors?—I think not; I spoke to others.

1868. Do you know a man named Brennan?—I do.

1869. Did you bring any money with you from Dublin to Sligo?—No, never; except my own expenses.

1870. Have you been in Sligo since the last election?—No, not until yesterday, when I got a subpœna from Mr. Greer's office. Let me remind you that that man Feeney at Carrick swore it was Mr. Fawcett offered him the money, and not I.

1871. Very well, we will inquire into that; did you go into Feeney's house the evening he referred to?—I did.

1872. Were you there more than once?—No, I never saw him before.

1873. You didn't know there was such a man previously?—No, never.

1874. Who brought you to his place?—It was Mr. Fawcett came with me to the barracks—we thought Feeney was the canteen man, but on inquiry we found he was the canteen man outside the barracks.

1875. What special reasons had you for going to Feeney's house?—I was standing at the door of the Victoria Hotel, and Major Knox, who was either passing by or standing, came in from the street, and said, "Mr. Waugh, do you know a man named Feeney?" I said I did not. He said he heard Feeney had been looking for him, and asked me to go to him and say he would be obliged if he would come down. "I do not like to go up there," said he, "as it is a bad locality," or something to that effect. "Kindly tell him I can see him any time after dinner, I will then be disengaged." Major Knox gave me his card also.

1876. To give to Feeney?—To show to him.

1877. Where was Feeney to call on him?—At the Victoria Hotel.

1878. Did you deliver that message to Feeney?—I did.

1879. When was that?—The evening before the election.

1880. How did Mr. Fawcett happen to go with you?—I passed from the Victoria Hotel to the Imperial, where I was stopping, thinking that I might meet him in the billiard-room, where I went to look for him. It so happened that he was there; I asked him to come with me to this place, and he did so.

SECOND DAY.
October 6.
Mr. Aaron Waugh.

1881. Was it because you didn't know the place, you asked him to go with you?—No; I knew the place quite well; I thought Feeney kept the canteen in the barracks; I knew the locality very well, but I didn't know the man's house.

1882. How often were you up and down between Dublin and Sligo?—I was up and down very many times. I came down to the revision, and to report several meetings.

1883. How often were you up and down during the election?—I was in Sligo all through the election.

1884. During that time did you canvass anyone?—No, I did not ask anyone.

1885. I thought you said you succeeded in getting two or three electors to vote for Major Knox?—That was before the election. It was before the election I asked the two men I mentioned.

1886. Had you any money with you the night before the election?—I had not, unless some small sums for expenses; I may have £2 or £3 with me.

1887. Were you waiting for Feeney in his place before he came to you?—Yes, he is correct there.

1888. Did you go upstairs when you went to his place?—We were sent upstairs. A sergeant from the barracks brought us to the place, as we didn't know it; and we, on hearing that Feeney was out, asked the sergeant to take some drink, and he took ale.

1889. Was your sole object in going there to give Feeney Major Knox's card?—I didn't give him the card at all; my sole object in going there was to deliver Major Knox's message.

1890. Had Mr. Fawcett any money with him that evening?—Not to my knowledge.

1891. Did he, to your knowledge, offer Feeney any money that evening?—He didn't, that I saw.

1892. Were you there all the time?—I was.

1893. How long were you in the room before Feeney came in?—Three or four minutes, I think.

1894. How long were you there after he came in?—About three or four minutes.

1895. When did the sergeant go away?—He went away before we went upstairs.

1896. Now state all that occurred that evening in reference to the message you got from Major Knox for Feeney?—On the evening in question I met Major Knox at the Victoria Hotel. He said to me, "Mr. Waugh, do you know Feeney, the canteen man?" I said "I did not; but," I said, "if you give me his address I will try and find him out." He said, "he has been looking for me several times. I would feel obliged if you would go up to him and tell him to come down. Tell him I do not like to go up there as it is a bad locality. Kindly tell him, I will be disengaged this evening after dinner, and I will be happy to see him then." I went down the street, thinking I would meet Mr. Fawcett, Mr. Robinson, or some one else I'd know. I met Mr. Fawcett, and we walked up the street together towards Barrack-street, as I was under the impression that Feeney was in the canteen of the barracks. They told me at the barracks he was the outside canteen man. The sergeant very kindly brought us to show us the place where Feeney lived. We went there and inquired if he were in. We were told at the counter that he was out. I then asked the sergeant who was so kind to us to have a glass of ale, and we ordered stout for ourselves. The sergeant then left, and the woman of the house said we had better go upstairs until Mr. Feeney came in. We went upstairs, the servant brought a candle, and after a few minutes Feeney came in. When he came in, I took out the card Major Knox gave me, and I said to Feeney, "Do you know that name?" he said he did. I said, "Major Knox heard you had been looking for him, and he desired me tell you he will be disengaged after dinner this evening, and for you to come down." He said, "very well."

1897. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Did Mr. Fawcett put his hand in his coat pocket on that occasion, and take out anything?—He did not.

1898. Could he have done so without your seeing him?—He could not.

1899. Did you give the card to Feeney?—I didn't. I merely showed it to him, and asked him "Do you know that name?"

1900. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Was the sergeant in the room when Feeney came in?—He was not; we left him downstairs before we went upstairs.

1901. The Chief Commissioner.—Is there a word of truth in what Feeney swore—that either you or Mr. Fawcett offered him money?—There is not—positively not; I had no authority to offer any money to him.

1902. That's not the point; whether you had authority or not, did you offer or give him any money?

1903. Could Mr. Fawcett have done so without your knowledge?—He could not.

1904. Did you go away together?—We did.

1905. Did you afterwards pay any portion of the election expenses?—Not a penny.

1906. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—How long after that did you continue to be a reporter for the Irish Times?—Until after the election petition was tried.

1907. The Chief Commissioner.—Did you know that the two Mulligans were in Dublin?—I did not.

1908. Do you know M'Dowell of Henry-street, Dublin?—I don't; I know the house.

1909. But not the man?—I don't.

1910. Were you ever in his house?—No, never.

1911. You know the house merely from seeing it when passing it by?—That's all.

1912. Do you know anything about M'Dowell getting money at the office of the Irish Times?—No, I never heard of it until I saw it in the paper.

1913. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Was it in the paper this morning?—No, it was at the election petition I heard something about it.

1914. The Chief Commissioner.—You wouldn't know M'Dowell, to see him?—No, I would not.

1915. Did you hear of what was stated here yesterday?—I did not.

1916. Do you know anything about men going away during the election?—No, I never knew anything about it until after the election petition and during the trial.

1917. Didn't you hear until I tell you now of it, that the two Mulligans were staying at M'Dowell's house in Henry-street?—I heard of their being spirited away—at Carrick.

1918. Did you hear that they were staying at M'Dowell's?—I heard that they were spirited away, but not where they went to.

1919. Do you know a man named Kavanagh of Dominick-street?—No, I don't.

1920. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—When you were canvassing for Major Knox, were you asked for money?—No, never; these persons I referred to were the only persons I induced to vote for Major Knox; I didn't canvass anyone else.

1921. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—You said the late Mr. Robinson was one of the persons you asked to vote for Major Knox. By the word "late," I suppose you mean some one who is dead?—Yes; Mr. Robinson was disposed not to vote at all, as he was in the Education office. He was disposed to vote for Major Knox without my speaking to him at all, but he was delicate about voting at all.

1922. What is your brother-in-law?—He is in town here.

1923. What is his name?—Allen.

1924. Had you to use any persuasion to make him vote?—I had not. I think you will find that Feeney swore at Carrick that it was Mr. Fawcett, and not I, gave him the money.

1925. The Chief Commissioner said they were ready to hear from Mr. Waugh any explanation, or any information that would throw light on the matter, as the charge against him was a very grave one.

1926. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Were you in court (at Carrick) when Feeney gave his evidence?—I was.

1927. And you heard him swear that it was Fawcett and not you offered him the money?—Yes.

1928. You have no doubt of that?—I have no doubt of it. When he mentioned my name, I stood up in the box, and Mr. Macdonogh asked him "Is that the man?" Feeney said, "it is not."

1929. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Did Feeney go up with you to Major Knox, on the occasion you went with the message to him?—He didn't.

1930. Why didn't he, do you know?—He said he was afraid to go up then: he said he would go up immediately.

[The witness, John Feeney, re-called.]

1931. The Chief Commissioner.—Feeney, which of the two gentlemen offered you the £50?—Mr. Waugh.

1932. Describe how he did it?—He put his left hand into his pocket, brought it out, and left it on my table.

1933. Did he say anything?—He said, "here's £50 if you come down with us to Mrs. Hall's."

1934. Do you say it was Mr. Waugh took the money out of his pocket, and not Mr. Fawcett?—It was Mr. Waugh took it out.

1935. Mr. Waugh.—He swore at Carrick that it was Mr. Fawcett did so, as you will find on referring to the report. Besides, I never had a pocket at the right side of my coat. I always have it at my left.

1936. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Mr. Waugh, did you use any persuasion to induce Feeney to come up with you?—I did not, I thought he was anxious to go. He said he was afraid to go at the time, but he said he would go as soon as possible.

William M'Mullen was then sworn.

The Chief Commissioner.—Before I examine you, I again tell you that if you tell the truth here to-day, you will be perfectly protected by our certificate against any consequences, civil or criminal; and you will be protected by the law against any man who will dare to molest you.

Mr. Commissioner Byrne—You must tell the whole truth.

1937. The Chief Commissioner.—M'Mullen, how long have you been living in Sligo?—I think about ten years or eleven. Between ten and eleven years.

1938. How long have you been a voter?—This is the first time—last year.

1939. You are rated jointly with your son, James M'Mullen?—Yes.

1940. And you live in the same house?—The same house. At least—pardon me—I am on my oath and must speak candidly. In consequence of my son's wife being out of her health, she was ordered to go to the country by the doctors. My son and I were then in the house; he came back and forward to me the same as usual, and kept the two houses.

1941. And you carried on your business there?—Yes.

1942. What family had you living in your house; who were living with you there?—Myself alone.

1943. Before the election did you get a man out of the poorhouse to assist in your business?—There was a man that was a dyer; he came on tramp here, and being on tramp fell sick in town, and was obliged to go into the Infirmary; and after he came out he applied to me for work, and I took him in as charity.

1944. And you gave him his meals, not paying him any wages?—Not at all; we agreed for none. He came for his meals.

1945. Do you remember before the last election, after Major Knox and Captain Flanagan were up in the town?—I do; yes.

1946. Were you canvassed on both sides?—I was.

1947. Did you promise to vote either way?—I did not promise to vote either one side or the other. I will inform you of this, that Major Knox came into me and shook hands with me three different times. My hands were black, and I says in joke, "Pardon me, your honour, I have my gloves on." "I don't care for that," said he, "and catched hold of my hand and shook it three different times, cheerfully." Well, he asked me for his interest, and I said I could not tell him. I would not give it. Then, after some time again, Captain Flanagan came in canvassing, and he asked me for my interest, and attempted to shake hands with me. I begged pardon, for my hands were soiled, but he caught hold of it very slightly—not so warmly, you know. He asked me for my interest; I said "I am very glad, your honour, to see such a noble gentleman in the field." That was the word I used, so there was no more. There were three cheers given for me without, and they all went away and left me. That's all.

1948. The mob outside thought you were going to vote for him?—I suppose so. I said I was glad to see such a noble gentleman in the field.

1949. How long was that before the election?—Well, when they were canvassing.

1950. Now, the week before the election did your son's wife, who is now dead, speak to you about your going away?—She did. I would not agree to it.

1951. Who was the first person who spoke to you about your going away?—Stokes.

1952. Mr. Stokes, the saddler?—Yes.

1953. Was that before your daughter-in-law spoke to you?—Yes.

1954. What did Mr. Stokes say to you?—He followed me in the street and told me that he would see me all right if I would go his side, and wanted me to go down to my son's at Ballytivnan.

1955. Did he say what you were to get?—Allow me, if you please. When I am coming out I will come out right.

1956. I am sure you will, as every honest man does?—I will tell the truth, and nothing but the truth. I came here for that purpose, and I intend to do it. I have been badly treated. Very well. This Stokes tormented me in the way of coming down the street, following me, talking to me, and wanting to talk to me. I saw persons standing at the News Room, on the steps, and said to myself "people will say I am going to sell, and I won't be seen talking to this fellow." I went away down towards Water's-lane, so as not to be seen or heard talking to him; but before I went away he says, "I am going down to see your son James." "Well," I says, "you can do that as you like." So he went away; and the first thing I heard next day was my son telling me that I was to go to Stokes' that evening, and that he was going to vote for Major Knox. "Well," I said to him, "if you do it will be a bad job; vote for nobody, and you will do best. So then he got me to go with him, and I went to Stokes. Stokes agreed to give me fifty pounds. He did not give me a halfpenny from that day to this. He has put me out of house and home, and I have nowhere at all now.

1957. What day was it that Stokes, as you have now sworn, agreed to give you £50?—The very week before the election took place.

1958. Where was it he made you that promise?—In his own house.

1959. Were he and you alone together, or was anyone by?—My son.

1960. Was the £50 to be given to you for both of you going away?—Fifty to me, and he was to give my son fifty.

1961. That's £100 for the two of you?—For the two of us; and there are very few in Sligo that would not take it, of the poorer order, if they got the chance.

1962. Did you there agree to go away for the £50 a piece?—Yes.

1963. What arrangement was then made to take you away?—They told me there would be a car for me, and so there was at Ballytivnan.

SECOND DAY.
October 6.
William M'Mullen.

1964. To go by Bundoran and Enniskillen to Dublin?—Yes.

1965. And you went to Dublin as your son told us on that Saturday?—Yes.

1966. Did you get a letter?—From Stokes—my son got a letter.

1967. To whom do you remember?—I got no letter.

1968. Did you see the direction?—Or my daughter-in-law got it for anything I know. I don't know which of them got it, but they have it betwixt them.

1969. Did you get any money going away?—My daughter-in-law gave me £1 to pay my fare to Dublin, and my fare was clear for a car to Bundoran.

1970. Was that all the money you got going away?—That was all.

1971. Your son got £1 also?—I believe he did.

1972. Had your daughter-in-law any more money that she got from Stokes?—Not that I am aware of; I believe not.

1973. You believe not?—Yes, I do.

1974. Then I presume she did not tell you she got any money from Stokes?—She told me that was all she got. I don't know any more.

1975. Did she tell you she got £2 from Stokes?—She did.

1976. For your expenses?—She told me.

1977. Now, when you arrived in Dublin, where did you go to first?—Well, that's a question I could not really tell. My son got a cab, and he went with the cabman and took us to some house.

1978. Did you go into the house or did you remain in the cab?—I went into it.

1979. Did you see a gentleman there?—I did not; I saw women.

1980. Did your son see anyone that told him where to go to?—Not at the time that we entered.

1981. What occurred then; tell it your own way?—I went in there and there was a drop of tea for us, a cup of tea apiece, I believe, preparing; and during the time a gentleman came in and we had a glass of punch after the tea.

1982. Just go on, M'Mullen; tell us your own way. Where did you go to then?—He told me he could not entertain us.

1983. You mean by that, keep you living there?—He said he could not entertain us. I said, "Where will we go?" We were then in Dublin, and I did not know where to go. Well, he said he would go with us and show us a place; so he took us to James M'Dowell's in Henry-street and we stopped there.

1984. Had you ever known M'Dowell before?—Never.

1985. Or the strange gentleman?—Nor the strange gentleman.

1986. What sort of looking man was he?—Well, I could not state; a jolly, respectable-looking man.

1987. What did he say to M'Dowell when he brought the two of you there?—I don't know. That was between themselves. I got plenty to eat and some drink, too, and was very comfortable.

1988. Plenty to drink?—I did.

1989. Every day?—Every day; no doubt of it.

1990. You were brought to M'Dowell's on Monday night?—I was brought to M'Dowell's on Saturday night.

1991. On Saturday night—I made a mistake; and you remained there during that week until the polling was over—the polling was on Thursday?—I could not tell you how long I was there.

1992. Had you and your son the one bed-room?—We had.

1993. And got your meals comfortably and respectably there at M'Dowell's?—Yes.

1994. And were treated well?—Very comfortably until such time as I got the cold shoulder and saw shyness.

1995. You went away in the middle of November and the polling was on the 19th?—I suppose it was.

1996. How long did you remain at M'Dowell's?—I could not tell.

1997. Do you remember the hearing of the petition coming on?—I do.

1998. I suppose you read the papers regularly?—I did not.

1999. Well, but you heard about the petition coming on?—I heard of some petition.

2000. When you left Sligo what money of your own had you with you; had you any money?—Well, as to that I could not say.

2001. You had not very much, I suppose?—Well, I don't know. That's a question. I don't know what I had.

2002. It is a question that I want you to answer?—Well, it's a question. I know I had money of my own.

2003. Did you get money from anybody before you left?—Where?

2004. In Sligo?—Not a shilling; not a penny, nor a halfpenny.

2005. When you got to Dublin did anyone give you any money there?—No.

2006. Did M'Dowell never give you any money?—No. Yes he did. I got five shillings from him one time.

2007. Did anybody else give you any money?—No.

2008. Did anyone call to see you?—Somebody came to see M'Dowell, but nobody came to see me to signify. There was no one coming for any good to me.

2009. Don't say "to signify," because we must decide on whether it signified or not. Did anyone come to see you while you were in M'Dowell's?—Many a one.

2010. So I thought; who were they?—I could not say. It was a public room, and people were taking tea, or coffee, or dinners, or what they liked in it.

2011. You don't mean to say that people came there to look at you? I mean, did any come to visit you?—I had no visitors at all, more than people coming to get their lunch or such like, or their tea.

2012. And used you to remain the greater part of the day in that tea-room?—The greater part of the day.

2013. You did?—I did.

2014. And had breakfast, and luncheon, and dinner, and supper, over and over again?—Yes, and I used to take a walk.

2015. Do you know Dublin well?—I do not, more than that I have walked through it.

2016. But you were there some long time?—I was.

2017. Do you remember the time your son went back to Sligo for a couple of days?—I do.

2018. Did you go with him to get the money for him to go back?—I did not, nor I knew nothing about his coming here.

2019. You did not know he was coming?—No; I was partly up all night uneasy about it, and when I saw the snow coming on I thought some accident had happened.

2020. Do you know Mr. Hignell?—Well, I can't say I know the man; I don't know you.

2021. But you would know me again if you saw me?—Upon my word I don't know that; if I saw you among fifty other men I don't know if I could pick you out.

2022. Do you know Hignell?—I know him by sight.

2023. That's what I mean; you know him by sight?—Yes.

2024. Did you see Hignell in Dublin?—I believe that's the man—the gentleman that brought me to M'Dowell's.

2025. Did you see him more than once?—Well, I did; I saw him passing me in the street several times, and he would not speak to me—would not let on that he saw me.

2026. How do you know it was Hignell that brought you to M'Dowell's?—Hignell; oh, I did not mean Hignell; I did not say I knew Hignell; I know nothing about Hignell; that's a mistake; I thought you said Kavanagh, or who brought me to M'Dowell's.

2027. Very well; do you know Kavanagh?—Well, I say I don't know him.

2028. But you would know him again if you saw him?—I, perhaps, might.

2029. Did you see him more than once?—I did, several times; I saw him in Dublin passing me in the street, and he would not so much as look at me.

2030. Did you try to speak to him?—I did; I wanted to speak to him.

2031. And he would not speak to you?—No—knew nothing about me.

2032. He said he knew nothing about you?—Knew nothing about me.

2033. Do you remember that your son came back from Sligo to Dublin after having been here a couple of days?—Do I remember?

2034. Do you remember your son going away from Sligo and coming to Dublin?—Leaving Dublin and coming to Sligo?

2035. Leaving Sligo and going to Dublin?—I do.

2036. About how long was your son away?—I think he was away between two and three days; I could not say the time.

2037. Did he tell you that he had got any money from anyone?—No, he did not.

2038. How do you know the gentleman's name was Kavanagh?—I cannot say what his name was, only that my son told me.

2039. That it was Kavanagh?—Yes, I know nothing more.

2040. When did your son tell you his name was Kavanagh?—When we were going to Dublin.

2041. Did you spend any money of your own in Dublin?—I did.

2042. About how much?—That's a question.

2043. Well do you know about how much?—That's a question. I am not to criminate myself. I spent my own money, and surely that's satisfactory enough.

2044. Spending your own money could not by possibility criminate you, and I will take care that it shall not?—I was not going to go away without some money on a journey like that.

2045. Of course not. Did you know that you would be away for a long time?—I did not. I thought I would be back in two or three days.

2046. Did you bring a few pounds with you?—I brought money with me of my own, besides the £1 I got from my daughter-in-law.

2048. I tell you it cannot by possibility criminate you to tell me the truth about how much money you spent. I don't ask you how you spent it, nor will I allow that question to be put unless it be connected with the election?—It is not connected with the election.

2049. No. Well, then, about how much did you spend?—I am telling you the honest truth so far.

2050. I believe you are up to this time?—And as to my money that I had I am not going to explain it.

2051. Had you £5 leaving Sligo?—I don't wish to explain what I had or had not. I paid every man twenty shillings in the pound until this unfortunate job came across me.

2052. Very well. We will go on for the present. Did you afterwards leave Dublin and go to England?—I did.

2053. Were you friends with M'Dowell all this time—was he friendly in taking care of you?—Sometimes, and sometimes very shy.

2054. What made you go to England?—Because he asked me to go.

2055. Was that before the petition was tried in Carrick?—I cannot say that.

2056. Do you remember hearing about the petition?—I do.

2057. And do you remember hearing about Major Knox being put out?—Well, I did—yes.

2058. Where were you when you heard that?—I was in England at that time.

2059. I suppose you saw that in the papers, or M'Dowell told it to you?—I did not, it was told to me.

2060. What town in England were you in when you heard that the Major was put out on a petition?—I could not say where I was; but I was in Manchester.

2061. What other towns were you in?—I was in a place called Clithero; and then I was very soon after that in Liverpool, and from there I was in Dublin.

2062. Tell me what made you and your son go about the country in this way, in charge of M'Dowell—tell me now?—I had no trade here that signified at that time. I was doing very little business. I had a promise of £50 for wages—"wages" was the word that was spoken. He was to pay me £50 for wages—for carrying a note for him where he would send it.

2063. Carrying a note for whom?—For Mr. Stokes. For carrying his note to where he would send it, he would give me £50, and also my son.

2064. Did M'Dowell promise you any money also?—Not at all. The man told me he never got a halfpenny for our diet or lodging, or anything from anybody, and whom was he to get his money from?

2065. Did you and M'Dowell and your son live together while you were in Manchester—I mean breakfast and dine at the same table?—Yes.

2066. And the same while you were in Clithero?—Yes.

2067. And the same while you were in Liverpool?—Yes.

2068. Had M'Dowell anything to do while you were on that trip except to mind you?—I don't know; he had no call to mind me.

2069. Well, but he was paying the hotel bills for you, though?—I don't know that either.

2070. At all events you did not pay?—I never saw him pay a shilling.

2071. Did you pay anything?—It might be like the poor sailor's old hat; he left money at many a place.

2072. We don't want to hear about the sailor. I want to know during the whole of this time did you pay any of the hotel bills?—I did not.

2073. Nor never will pay a farthing?—Oh, I don't know; maybe I will. I paid dearly enough for it.

2074. That's another matter. Who was it that said you must go to Clitherto when you were in Manchester?—No person said that.

2075. Did you know where you were going to when you left Manchester?—I went anywhere they brought me.

2076. When you were leaving Dublin did you go by Holyhead to Manchester?—No, we went from Dublin quay.

2077. To Liverpool?—Yes.

2078. From the North-wall?—I suppose so.

2079. And from that to Manchester?—Yes, to Liverpool.

2080. Did you know you were going to Manchester when you left Ireland for England?—I did not know where I was going, only that they were taking me across the water.

2081. And did you know where you were going to when you left Manchester for Clithero?—For Clithero?

2082. Yes?—I could not say. I went where they liked to fetch me.

2083. How long were you away altogether?—In England?

2084. Yes?—Well, I could not tell.

2085. Were you a month?—Well, I dare say I was, at least. I think I was a month.

2086. I tell you what will fix it in your memory—how long was it after the petition was over that you came back from England to Ireland?—Well, I don't know that; I could not say that.

2087. Was it a week or a fortnight—which?—I could not say.

2088. I must ask you when was it that your daughter-in-law died?—Well, that I don't know. It was some time before I came home here to Sligo.

2089. Were you and your son away either in

SECOND DAY.
October 6.
William M'Mullen.

Dublin or England at the time that your daughter-in-law died?—I believe that my son was at home with his wife. I was in Dublin.

2090. Did your son go more than once from Dublin to Sligo, or only once?—I believe only once.

2091. I suppose that at the time your poor daughter-in-law died he came up while she was in her last illness?—Yes, I believe it was something of that kind.

2092. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—That was the time he was two or three days away?—He was two or three days away.

2093. The Chief Commissioner.—Have you demanded £50 from anyone since you came back?—I went to Stokes and demanded a settlement with him. Said he to me, "Will you go to Kingstown?"

2094. To Kingstown?—Yes; that was the answer he made me. I said, "What do you mean by going to Kingstown?" "Why," said he, "don't you know; were you not talking about Kingstown to live there?" I said "No."

2095. When was this conversation with Stokes?—Not past a fortnight or three weeks ago.

2096. Was there any talk before about your going to Kingstown?—Not at all.

2097. Did you understand by Kingstown to set up in business in Kingstown?—I did not know what he meant; "But," said he, "you will have to go away there next week, or the week following, or perhaps this week."

2098. That is, this very week?—Yes; he said, "You will have to go next week, or, if not, perhaps you will have to go this very week."

2099. Did he say your son was to go too?—I suppose so.

2100. Did you understand from what had passed between you?—I suspected it was another "do" that he wanted me to go off on.

2101. Did you know at that time that the Commissioners were coming down here to examine witnesses?—Yes, I did.

2102. Was that after the advertisement had appeared in the Sligo papers on Saturday week,—did you hear about the advertisement in the Sligo papers?—I believe I did; yes.

2103. Was it that day that you went to Mr. Stokes?—I went to him before that; it is about a fortnight or three weeks ago.

2104. At that time, you know, the Commissioners were coming down to sit here?—Yes.

2105. Did you speak to Mr. Stokes about that?—I did not.

2106. Did he to you?—No; but he asked me was I going to live at Kingstown.

2107. What did you say?—I said why? what should I go to Kingstown for; what did I want to go to Kingstown for?

2108. Had you asked anyone else for any settlement about this business?—I went to his house before; I had no person to ask unless himself; I made no agreement with any person but Stokes; I went to his house after I came home; I think I came home on the 27th of May; I went to his house on the 28th or the 29th, I am not certain which; I was passing along the street, and saw a girl at the backdoor; I asked her was Mr. Stokes in, and she said "yes, she believed he was." "Would you tell him," said I, "that a person wants to speak to him." So the girl went in, and came back and told me he was not in. "Please," I said, "to tell Mr. Stokes that a person wants to speak to him." Well, I stood talking with the girl, when two policemen came down and took me prisoner, took me to the barracks, and kept me there for an hour and a half or two hours, after which I came out; I was charged before the magistrates, but did not appear.

2109. Charged with what?—With being drunk and assaulting Mr. Stokes; I didn't appear; I was fined, I believe, half-a-crown, or something of that kind.

2110. You have fixed the date at which you came back at the 27th of May?—Yes.

2111. Then you were away from Sligo from October till the 27th of May?—The 27th of May.

2112. You and your son came back together?—No, my son was at home long before me.

2113. Did you come from Dublin to Sligo?—I did.

2114. How did you come?—Why, I was going to walk it; I had no means, and was obliged to pawn my watch.

2115. Where was it that M'Dowell parted from you?—Where did M'Dowell part from me? He went out, and I came away; and he did not know that I was coming.

2116. When you came back from England did you go again to live at M'Dowell's in Henry-street?—I did.

2117. How long were you there after you came back from England?—I don't know.

2118. Were you there some time?—I was.

2119. Were you there a month?—I dare say I was, nearly.

2120. Did M'Dowell know you were going away?—He did not know I was coming away at all for I gave him the slip—I hooked it.

2121. How long before that did your son go?—My son was gone a good while before that.

2122. Then you got no money from anyone in Dublin to bring you back to Sligo?—I did not.

2123. Did M'Dowell know that for some time before this you had been without any money?—He did, and I could not get a shave. I had not a penny to get shaved.

2124. How long were you in this way without money in M'Dowell's place?—Oh, long enough. I could not tell. Too long.

2125. I don't ask you how much money you had leaving Sligo, but how long was it before it was spent—did you spend it all in a couple of months?—Well, I think I was pretty well "shook" when I had to pawn my watch.

2126. Is it still pawned in Dublin?—No.

2127. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—How did you get your watch back?—Oh, I got it back. I could not so much as finish to pay my train from Dublin here when I came, so I lodged some of it and came to my son, who found the money and went and paid the remainder.

2128. You pawned your watch in a Dublin pawn-office?—Yes, I did.

2129. How did you get the money to release it—was it your own earnings, or did anybody give it to you?—No.

2130. You earned the money yourself?—I did.

2131. You were living at M'Dowell's at the time you gave him the slip?—I was.

2132. Eating and drinking there?—He and his wife went out, and when they went out I thought it was time for me to hook it.

2133. What made you think they had an objection to let you go?—Well, perhaps they would hold me accountable for all the time I stopped there.

2134. Oh, I understand. Were you not friendly with M'Dowell?—Indeed I was not very friendly, nor with her either—that's his wife.

2135. When was it that he first began to be unfriendly, because you said he was friendly first?—He began to look very shy at me.

2136. As soon as your money was all spent?—All was nearly about gone, and when I would get tea I did not like old leaves in the teapot; and I thought it was shy enough—that it was time to leave off.

2137. You said you were taken up on the 29th of May, would you know the two policemen who took you up—do you know their names?—Well, I don't know.

2138. Would you know them if you saw them?—Well, I believe—Mr. Darcy, I think, was one, and I believe Mr. Burke was the other.

2139. You believe Burke was one?—I think he was.

2140. Who was the other?—I might be mistaken, but I think it was Darcy.

2141. Is that the man?—Oh, I believe this is the gentleman. (Identifies a policeman.)

2142. Did you never see Stokes between the 29th of May, when you were taken up, and the interview you had with him a fortnight ago?—No; I saw him at his door.

2143. I dare say, but did you speak to him?—No; because he seemed to be laughing at me.

2144. He thought he had got at the right side of you?—He had the right side of me. He is in the habit of laughing generally at anybody when he thinks he is doing you.

2145. What was it you first said to him when you came to him about a fortnight ago?—I asked him was he going to settle with me.

2146. Did you say anything about your making him settle with you now that the Commissioners were coming, or anything of that kind?—Oh, I did not. He says, "Will you go to Kingstown?" I said, "What will I go to Kingstown for?"

2147. Did he make it appear that he would give you £50 if you did go to Kingstown—did he say anything about that?—No, he did not; but "would I go to Kingstown."

2148. You said you would not?—I said, "What would I go to Kingstown for?"

2149. Was that all?—"Well," he said, "you will have to go next week, or perhaps this week, before the week is out."

2150. What did you say then?—I looked at him.

2151. Well, did he look at you?—He did.

2152. What happened then—surely you did not walk out simply without saying anything more?—I did. As I am whipped I am done—that was just my thought.

2153. Have you seen Stokes since that?—I didn't see him much since that more than at his door.

2154. What was the last day you saw him in your town?—Well, I could not say that. I did not see him, I think, hardly since I saw him in his shop the day I was speaking to him.

2155. Oh, but you said you did see him?—I might have seen him, but I did not pay any attention to the man, for I had got too plainly put about.

2156. Were you present when the gentleman that you say took you first when you went to Dublin, went into M'Dowell's?—Yes.

2157. Did you all go into M'Dowell's shop together?—Ay, but I had nothing to do with M'Dowell and that man afterwards—that gentleman.

2158. No, but I mean this, that when that gentleman whom you think is Kavanagh first took you into M'Dowell's shop on Saturday night, did he go into M'Dowell's coffee-room along with you?—My son and I went up into the room where tea and coffee, and such like, is made.

2159. Where did the gentleman go?—They stopped below, and whatever they had I don't know; but they came up to me afterwards, and he said, "I hope you will be comfortable here."

2160. Did you hear what the gentleman said to M'Dowell?—No.

2161. What did M'Dowell say to you first when he came up to you into that room—did he say, "Well, are you going to be a customer of mine," or anything of that sort?—No; he said, "I hope you will be comfortable—make yourselves comfortable."

2162. M'Dowell never asked you for any money in payment?—No, he did not.

2163. The Chief Commissioner.—Do you know of any other elector having gone away to avoid voting like yourself?—Well, I do not. I am not acquainted with it more than I know that parties in town here, I am told, went away.

2164. What parties?—Well, I cannot say their names; I am not acquainted with the people. I am only here in town about ten years, and I am a man that generally kept myself to myself. I had very little to do with any people. I don't know their names, nor who they are, nor what they are.

2165. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Were any threats used to you to make you vote for Captain Flanagan before you went away?—There were.

2166. Could you give me the names of any persons who said you must vote for him?—Well, I could not give the names of a mob of persons.

2167. Was there nobody besides the mob—nobody at the head of it; I don't want you to tell of a mob of persons shouting about you, but did nobody else?—Well, I was told that if I did not go "the right way"—and which the right way is I don't know—I would catch it.

2168. Was that told you by any supporter of Captain Flanagan's?—Not at all—no voter at all; I don't believe he was a voter.

2169. He might be a friend?—Not at all—only a well-wisher.

2170. What did you understand by that—that he wanted you to vote for Captain Flanagan or for Major Knox?—Well, I don't know. If I did not vote for the right side——

2171. Yes, but what do you think he meant by the "right side?"—I could not say. That is a question. I might imagine.

2172. Tell us what you imagine?—That I knew him to be as far as I thought a Flanagan's man.

2173. Could you give me the name of anybody now who said that? It is not every day that a man is told that he will catch it. Can you recollect one or two names?—As to that I could not.

2174. Come, now, try it, I think you will tell me. Recollect you are sworn to tell the whole truth?—Yes, but I am not to do any harm to myself.

2175. No harm will be done to you?—If I mention names perhaps my head will pay for it.

2176. I am bound to tell you that you must mention names, or harm will come to you. You are bound to answer all these questions?—Well, if you will secure my life I will tell names.

2177. The Chief Commissioner.—Do you remember any person who threatened you? You are bound to tell it to the Court, because you are on your oath, and in the interest of public justice. Do you now remember any man that threatened you?—Well, I cannot say much on that because there was no threatening to signify.

2178. No threatening to signify?—No, not of any consequence.

2179. Were you put in any fear by what was said to you?—No, not a bit.

2180. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—When you got the five shillings from M'Dowell, what did you say to him or he to you? Do you remember what you said when you were asking for the five shillings—what did M'Dowell say to you or you to him?—When M'Dowell gave me the five shillings he said nothing to me concerning it but only "here's five shillings."

2181. What did you say to him; did you say, "Major Knox will make it good to you," or something of that sort?—No, I did not mention Knox, nor he to me.

2182. The Chief Commissioner.—Did you ever apply to anyone else for compensation for all you suffered?—I did.

2183. To whom?—I went to Major Knox himself.

2184. When?—While I was in Dublin.

2185. Where was it that you saw the Major?—At his own office or place. There are two offices up stairs. I asked a boy could I see the Major. He said, "You cannot now go in, but if you sit there you will see him coming out after a while." So I waited till he came out, and then got up and spoke to him. "Pray, sir," said he, "who are you?" I told him that I was M'Mullen, from Sligo. "Oh," he says, "did you vote for me?" I said, "No, your honour, I did not." "Oh, well," he says, "what have I to do with you, go on about your business; what have I to do with you? I don't know you." So I had to go away then.

2186. Did you tell him that you were living with M'Dowell?—No, I did not. He had nothing to do with M'Dowell nor with me either, no more than that I got my victuals.

2187. Was it before or after you went to England that you saw Major Knox?—Before I went to England.

SECOND DAY.
October 6.
William M'Mullen.

2188. Was that the only time you saw Major Knox?—I saw him again, and he ordered me not to be coming there any more.

2189. Was that at the newspaper office that you saw him?—Yes.

2190. Both times?—Both times; upstairs in his office.

2191. What did you say to him the second time?—I told him that I was very hard up for money, that I had no means or ways to get home. "Well," he says, "I cannot help it; I know nothing about you;" and he told me to come back no more there.

2192. Now, did you apply to anyone else for compensation besides Mr. Stokes and Major Knox?—No, I did not.

2193. Did you write to anyone?—No, I did not.

2194. Or your son?—Never wrote to any person.

2195. Or your son?—I don't know what my son did. Not to my knowledge.

2196. Do you now expect to be paid anything by anyone?—Expect?

2197. Yes; to be paid?—I do not.

2198. You do not?—No. Though at the same time it would only be wages.

2199. The Chief Commissioner.—And do you now believe you wont be paid?—I don't believe I will ever be paid.

2200. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Did you say just now that Major Knox knew nothing of your being at M'Dowell's?—I don't know, but I never mentioned M'Dowell to him nor he to me; but he told me not to come there any more, that he knew nothing about me.

2201. The Chief Commissioner.—Why did you not tell him you were at M'Dowell's?—I don't know.

2202. Why did you not tell the Major what kept you in Dublin?—No I did not.

2203. Why did you not?—I did not tell him anything about the——

2204. Why didn't you?—Because I thought that he would know himself if I was anything connected——

2205. Did you not then tell him of any claim you had on him or of what you had done?—I did tell him that I had come away on his account.

2206. And that you were a voter?—And that I was a voter, and came away on his account and did not vote against him. "Oh," he said, "you did that of your own accord; I have nothing to do with you."

2207. Did you mention Stokes's name to him?—I did.

2208. What did you say about Stokes to the Major?—"I have nothing to do with him," he said.

2209. What did you tell him about Stokes?—I told him I came away on Stokes's account, that Stokes was the person who enticed me to come away.

2210. Did you tell him that Stokes had made you any promise?—I told him that he had promised to give me £50.

2211. Did you tell him that he had promised your son £50 also?—I did not mention my son.

3212. But you told him that Stokes had promised you £50?—Yes.

2213. What did Major Knox then say?—He said, "Well, what have I to do with that?" "scandalous," he said, "scandalous, scandalous."

2214. Did you go away and avoid voting because you were promised £50?—I went away as much to get out of the road as anything else.

2215. Would you have gone away if you had not been promised the £50?—Well I don't know that. I don't know whether I would vote for any person or not at the same time.

2216. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—You have said that you went away because you wanted to get out of the way; was that because you were frightened by the things said to you?—Well, I thought it would be a troublesome place.

2217. Was it because you were—I wont say frightened—but partly on account of what was said to you?—Well, I am not a man that's very easily frightened.

2218. No, you don't seem as if you were; still you say that all you wanted was to get out of that, and that you were glad to get the opportunity of getting away, and of course you were glad to get the promised £50 too?—I was glad to get the promise of both.

2219. But was the reason, partly the reason at least, why you wanted to go away, the threats used?—Well, I wanted to go away out of the road, for I did not want to have anything to do with voting.

2220. Was it partly on account of the threats that were used to you, that you would "catch it," as you know people said?—Yes.

2221. Was it partly on that account—did you think it possible you would catch it?—Well, I was afraid my son should vote for Major Knox; and if he did I thought he would be beaten; and in consequence of that I advised him not to do it; and I wished to go away.

2222. I suppose you thought that if you voted for Knox you would be beaten too?—No, I did not intend it.

2223. To vote for Major Knox?—No, I had no intention of doing it, nor would not do it.

2224. Did not people tell you that if you did vote for Major Knox you would be beaten?—No, but they expected I would go the right way.

2225. If you had voted for Major Knox do you think you would have been beaten?—I don't know that.

2226. But I want to know what you think?—I was not here to try them.

2227. No, you were not, but if you had been?—I cannot say as to that.

2228. What do you think?—That's a question I could not decide, because I was not here to try. If I had been here perhaps I might have got a pelt or two.

2229. At the time you went away what did you think about the chance of your being beaten if you voted for Major Knox?—I did not think anything of it. I thought about going away.

2230. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Would you have voted if the town had been perfectly quiet, and if there had been no violence?—I did not see any disturbance in the town previous to my going away. I went away the week before, and I heard children and such as that shouting.

2231. The question I asked you is, would you have voted if the town had been perfectly quiet?—If the town had been perfectly what?

2232. Quiet?—I would—yes; but I saw nothing; I only believed that it would be a disturbed town; and to avoid that I went away, on that account as much as the other—perhaps more so.

[The witness withdrew.]

Robert Stokes was called but did not answer.

Mr. Commissioner Heron.—Mr. Stokes, we all know, is a respectable man in the town of Sligo, carrying on business here; and he and everyone else must know that this Commission of Inquiry will not terminate until he and others whose names have been mentioned have been examined. Therefore it would be much better for him to attend at once.

Mr. John Fawcett sworn and examined.

2233. The Chief Commissioner.—What position do you hold in Sligo?—I am assistant master in the Diocesan school.

2234. Do you know Mr. Waugh?—Yes.

2235. Did you take any part for Major Knox at the election?—None, whatever.

2236. Did you canvass anyone?—No.

2237. Do you know a man named John Feeney?—I saw him twice—once here, and once in Carrick. That's all I know.

2238. You saw him the evening before the polling?—Yes, I did.

2239. What made you call on him?—I had been with Mr. Waugh during the day; and he told me he had to go up to the barracks to see some man there.

2240. When did he tell you that?—It was, as well as I recollect, about eight o'clock in the evening when I went up with him.

2241. Why did you go with him?—Merely because he asked me.

2242. You did not know the man?—I knew nothing about him.

2243. Did you wait in one of the rooms of Feeney's house till he came in?—Yes, we both waited together in the same room.

2244. Why did you wait?—Simply because he waited. He said there was no necessity for my going out, and I stopped there.

2245. Was there any disturbance in the town that evening?—Yes, there was.

2246. Was it advisable that you two friends should keep together?—Well, that was not exactly the reason why we kept together.

2247. What was your reason?—Simply because we had been together during the day.

2248. What were you doing during the day?—I could hardly say—walking about. We did nothing in connexion with the election whatever except on that occasion.

2249. Did you or Mr. Waugh offer any money to Feeney on that evening?—Not a farthing. I did not; and I am sure he did not; and I heard every word that was spoken between them.

2250. Did you yourself speak to Feeney?—I merely said, "Good night," when I was leaving.

2251. You did not speak to him before?—No, not a word.

2252. What was it that Mr. Waugh said?—He said that Major Knox had sent him up to him; and he gave him Major Knox's card, saying that he would wish to see him about nine o'clock. I really forget whether it was to be at Mrs. Hall's or the Victoria Hotel. He said he was afraid to go, but promised afterwards that he would come down at nine o'clock.

2253. You did not know Feeney at all?—I might have seen him, but I never took any notice of him before.

2254. Did you know or hear how he was going to vote?—No; I did not know anything about him until that moment.

2255. Did Mr. Waugh speak of him as a doubtful voter?—He did not. I don't believe he spoke a word to me about him. He said he wanted to see some man for Major Knox. When we arrived at the barrack he said it was the canteen master, and we went into the barrack through mistake. A sergeant showed us about the place—at least we were shown about the place by some man at the gate, and also the sergeant of the guard, and he brought us to this Feeney, who lives outside the barrack.

2256. How long were you in Feeney's house?—I think a quarter of an hour. We had to wait some time before he came in. He had been out.

2257. How long were you in the room with Feeney?—About five or six minutes, as well as I can recollect.

2258. Was the man unwilling to come to where Major Knox was?—Oh, he seemed perfectly willing, but said he was afraid on account of the mob.

2259. Was there any serious disturbance going on?—I did not see any, but I believe there was.

2260. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Now, when you were leaving the room did you say anything to him before wishing him good-bye?—I did not, as well as I can recollect. I spoke nothing to him about the election. I stood in one part of the room while Mr. Waugh was speaking to him. The whole thing occupied a few minutes, until we went away, and he said he would be down.

2261. Do you remember what you yourself said on that occasion?—When I went to Feeney's first?

2262. Yes?—Oh, I said nothing. Mr. Waugh asked was he in, and the woman said he was not. The sergeant had taken the trouble of coming up to show us the place, and I told the man to give him a glass of beer; and that was all I said.

2263. You went to him for the purpose of bringing him up to Major Knox?—I did not know it was for that purpose. I would have gone even had I known that; but I really did not know it was for that purpose till we went into the house.

2264. Did you give him any advice on that occasion?—Not a bit, as well as I recollect.

2265. As well as you recollect?—Yes.

2266. Would you try now?—Well, I could safely say I did not give him any advice.

2267. Did you tell him not to come up to Major Knox?—I did not.

2268. When you were leaving the room?—I did not.

2269. You were examined at the trial of the election petition for the town?—Yes.

2270. Do you remember, at that election petition saying, that when you were leaving the room you told him not to come to Major Knox?—I did not say any such thing; I am positive I did not say it.

2271. You are positive?—Yes, perfectly positive.

2272. Listen to this—"Question No. 4408,"—Have you told us all that occurred?—My conversation with the man consisted of five words. When I was leaving the room I told him not to come. I would not know the man now if I saw him. I have not seen him since. I heard the whole conversation between him and Mr. Waugh?—I don't even know now what that refers to.

2273. When I was leaving the room I told him not to come?—It is not likely when I went with Mr. Waugh that I would tell him not to come.

2274. Don't you know what that "not to come" refers to; could it refer to anything about going back to Major Knox?—I don't know really. I don't remember saying that at Carrick, because I am positive I did not say it.

2275. Would you tell me this, "when I was leaving the room I told him not to come," what's the meaning of that, in your opinion?—That's what I cannot tell, the meaning of it.

2276. You swear that?—I swear that I cannot.

2277. You were aware during the conversation that the object of your going was to bring him to Major Knox?—Yes, when I left the house I was aware of that.

2278. You now say that you don't understand what the meaning of this expression here—"not to come"—is?—No, seeing that I went up with a friend of Major Knox's, I don't see the meaning of my advising the man not to come to Major Knox. At least if I should have said anything, it would have been the opposite.

2279. The Chief Commissioner.—Tell me, Mr. Fawcett, did you hear all that passed between him and Mr. Waugh?—I heard every word. There was very little passed.

2280. How far were you from them?—The room altogether was about seven or eight feet square.

2281. It was a small room?—A very small room.

2282. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Could Mr.

SECOND DAY. October 6.

Mr. John Fawcett.

Waugh have laid down a pile of notes on the table without your observing it during that interview?—He could not possibly. Besides, the man swore that it was I, in Carrick.

2283. The Chief Commissioner.—How do you know that?—I was there.

2284. You were not here to-day while he was under examination. How do you know what he swears now?—Oh, I was speaking to Mr. Waugh, and he told me that.

2285. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Was the man willing to go to Major Knox?—Yes, he seemed perfectly willing. The reason he gave for not going was that he was afraid he would be beaten on the way—that is, for not going immediately, not going at nine o'clock. Yes.

[The witness withdrew.]

Constable Patk. Burke.

Constable Patrick Burke sworn.

2286. The Chief Commissioner.—You heard the witness, M'Mullen, say that you were one of the constables who arrested him?—I did.

2287. Did you arrest him?—I did not arrest him at all.

2288. Was he arrested?—He was arrested, and I was in the barrack when he came.

2289. Who charged him?—As well as I can recollect I think it was Constable Darcy. I can ascertain by the book.

2290. Was the man intoxicated?—He was.

Constable John Darcy.

Constable John Darcy sworn.

2291. The Chief Commissioner.—Was it you that arrested the witness M'Mullen?—Yes.

2292. What was he doing at the time you arrested him?—He was drunk in the street.

2293. Were you on duty at the time?—No.

2294. Who suggested to you to arrest him?—A gentleman, a very respectable-looking man, whom I had seen walking a day or two previously with Mr. Stokes, came to the barrack and said that M'Mullen was giving them great annoyance,—I think he said he was breaking in the door; I went down with police and found M'Mullen drunk in the street and disorderly, and I arrested him.

2295. Who was the gentleman who brought word to you to the barrack?—I don't know; he was a stranger; but I saw him walking with Mr. Stokes.

2296. You mean that he is not a gentleman in business in Sligo?—He is not.

2297. I presume you know most of the people here?—I do.

2298. Was he walking with Mr. Stokes?—Yes, I saw him walking with Mr. Stokes.

2299. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Was M'Mullen committing any outrage at the door?—No, he was not; he was not near the door at that time; he was within fifteen or twenty yards of it.

2300. The Chief Commissioner.—He was drunk and disorderly, and in your opinion you were quite right in arresting him?—Yes.

[The witness then withdrew.]

Mrs. Eliza Graham.

Mrs. Eliza Graham sworn.

2301. The Chief Commissioner.—Do you know Mr. Stokes?—Yes.

2302. Do you remember being examined at Carrick?—Yes.

2303. I believe you have some post cars at your hotel in Sligo?—Yes.

2304. Did Mr. Stokes hire any cars from you?—Yes, two.

2305. For what morning?—One to bring the M'Mullens.

2306. Did he tell you that?—He did not tell me at the time; I did not know whom the car was for.

2307. How did you know it was for M'Mullen?—I did not know whom they were for at the time.

2308. Did he tell you afterwards?—The boy told me afterwards.

2309. Who was the boy?—My servant.

2310. Sandy M'Gowan?—Yes.

2311. One car was for M'Mullen?—Yes.

2312. For whom was the other car?—I don't remember his name.

2313. Was it Shiels?—Yes, that's the man.

2314. At what hour were those cars to leave Sligo?—At a very early hour.

2315. On the Saturday morning before the polling?—Well, I could not tell the date; my book was brought away; I think, as well as I can remember, it was on the 15th of November.

2316. The polling day, I may tell you, was the 19th of November. Did you charge the car originally to Mr. Stokes?—I did.

2317. Did you afterwards alter that?—I did.

2318. By whose directions?—By my own.

2319. Why?—I was afraid I would get into trouble when I heard who the parties were that went away on the car; and as soon as I found that out, I changed the name.

2320. Who paid you for those cars?—I am not paid at all.

2321. Did you ever bill anyone for them?—I sent a bill to Mr. Stokes, and I was not paid.

2322. When did you send the bill to Mr. Stokes?—I could not exactly say when.

2323. Who told you the hour at which the car was to leave?—Mr. Stokes.

2324. Where did he make the engagement?—In my own house.

2325. When did he make the engagement?—The day before they were wanted.

2326. What were the instructions he gave?—That the car that was to go for M'Mullen was to go to Ballytiven; that it was to get two parties there; and that it was to take them to Bundoran. That's all I know about it.

2327. Did he give you any pass-word, or was any pass-word given to you, by which the parties were to be known at Ballytiven?—There was a light to be in the window.

2328. Was there any word about the "Golden Rappers"?—That was for the other car.

2329. Tom Shiels' car?—Yes.

2330. And there was to be a light in the window for M'Mullen's car?—Yes.

2331. Did you ever ask Mr. Stokes for payment besides sending in your bill?—No, I did not.

2332. How much was the bill that you sent into him?—Well, I could not exactly say. I changed the bill in the books as well. I put only the regular price down for the cars, 8*s.* 6*d.* to Ballytiven, seventeen miles. I changed that in the book as well as his name.

2333. Did you on that Friday evening when the cars were engaged know they were for voters?—No, I did not know they were for voters. I did not know who was gone on the first car until three or four days after.

2334. Who told you that?—My boy told me that it was M'Mullen. I heard that M'Mullen was gone, but I did not know that it was on my car until two or three days afterwards.

2335. About the car for Shiels—was there any sign for it?—There was: the "Golden Rappers."

2336. Is that the name of a real place?—Yes, it is.

2337. Where is that?—At Mr. Wynne's gatehouse.

2338. Near Hazlewood?—Yes.

2339. Did Mr. Stokes say anything to you about the "Golden Rappers" at any time?—Nothing, only that that was the sign the boy was to give.

2340. To the man he met on the road?—He was.

2341. When did he tell you that?—The day he was engaging the car.

2342. Was that Friday?—I don't know what day it was. I don't know was it Friday. I could not exactly say the date; but the date is in the book.

2343. What is the claim you have against Mr. Stokes for these cars?—Well, I intended to charge him a pound a day for them.

2344. How many days were they out?—There were only the two days for the two cars.

2345. Did you originally make a charge of £1 a day for the cars?—I did first, but I afterwards changed it.

2346. Where was Shiel's car to go?—To Manorhamilton.

2347. When did you make the alteration in the book?—As soon as I heard they were voters that went away on the cars I changed it lest I might get into any trouble myself. I did not think I would be summoned or I would not have changed it.

2348. When did you hear that Shiels had gone away?—The day the car was applied for.

2349. Who told you?—Mr. Stokes.

2350. What did he tell you about Shiels?—That he was to come, and that a car was to be ready for him, I think, at six in the morning.

2351. At the time that Stokes engaged the car for Shiels did he tell you that Shiels was the man to go away on it?—Yes, as well as I can recollect.

2352. You knew then that Shiels was a voter?—Yes.

2353. Had you any other cars ordered?—Not for the borough election.

2354. You are quite sure?—Quite sure.

2355. When you say for the borough election, you mean to bring voters out of town?—No, sir, not one.

2356. Were there any voters in your house?—Not one; I had no voters in my house at all.

2357. Do you know anything about those men who were brought away?—I know nothing in the world about them.

2358. Except these two?—Except the two cars I know nothing about them.

2359. How soon after the election was it that you made the alteration?—It was before the election I made the alteration as soon as I found out—no, I beg pardon, it was not; it was as soon as I heard about the—

2360. Petition?—Yes; I got frightened lest I should get into any trouble about it.

2361. Were all the entries in the book made by yourself?—Every one.

2362. Did you tell Mr. Stokes you had altered his name to Starkie?—I never told him, indeed, nor he never told me to change it, but I did it of my own free will.

2363. Did you order the man who took Shiels to engage another car from Manorhamilton to Enniskillen?—Yes.

2364. Are you liable for that?—Yes, I am, when I ordered it.

2365. Have you billed Mr. Stokes for it?—Oh, yes, I billed him for it, for I paid the man since.

2366. How much did you pay him?—I think, as well as I recollect, it was 10*s*.

2367. Whom did you pay for it?—Mr. Johnston, the proprietor of the car.

2368. That is a claim of yours also against Mr. Stokes?—Yes.

2369. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Mr. Stokes never denied his liability for the cars?—Oh no, sir, he did not.

[The witness withdrew].

Daniel M'Gowan sworn and examined.

Daniel M'Gowan.

2370. The Chief Commissioner.—You were in the employment of Mrs. Buchanan, now Mrs. Graham, in November last?—Yes.

2371. Were you the man that drove the car that carried away John Shiels?—Yes.

2372. Who was the man that drove the car that carried away the M'Mullens?—I am the man.

2373. Was it you drove the two cars?—Yes.

2374. On what day did you drive the one, and on what day did you drive the other?—To the best of my opinion on a Saturday morning I drove the M'Mullens, and on a Sunday morning Shiels.

2375. You told about the M'Mullens at the election petition trial?—Yes.

2376. What instructions did you get about Shiel's car?—I was to start, I think, about 6 o'clock.

2377. Who told you that?—The mistress, and I was to get this man on the road, and he was to ask me was this the way to the "Golden Rappers," and I said, "all right, step up;" so I did so, and up he got, and I brought him to Manorhamilton.

2378. Did you know him?—I never knew him, nor saw him to my knowledge before the morning.

2379. Did you know he was a voter?—I understood he was.

2380. From whom?—It was my own opinion; I was thinking he was.

2381. Did you drive anyone else out of town about that time?—None but the M'Mullens to my knowledge.

2382. Did you drive anyone on the Monday?—Well, I might have driven people on the Monday and Tuesday.

2383. Did you drive anyone over to Manorhamilton on the Monday?—

2384. On the Monday?—Well, I don't recollect that I did. I might have gone to Manorhamilton. I never passed much remarks on the people I would drive that way.

2385. On your oath did you drive anyone to Manorhamilton or Bundoran on either the Monday, Tuesday, or Wednesday—the polling day was on Thursday?—Not answered.

2386. On your oath did you or did you not?—On my oath I could not swear whether I did or not. I did not mind what I drove on the Monday, Tuesday, or Wednesday; on my oath I could not remember what cars I drove.

2387. Was it the mistress only told you about the "Golden Rappers?"—There were more than she told me.

2388. Do you know Mr. Sherry?—Yes.

2389. Did he give you a piece of paper?—He did.

2390. When?—The Saturday night before I went with Shiels.

2391. What did he tell you to do with it?—He told me to give it to the man I would get up.

2392. What was on that piece of paper do you know?—Well, I think, to the best of my opinion, he was going to stop at the Black Lion before that, and this was to go from Manorhamilton direct to Enniskillen. I do not know exactly what was on the paper.

2393. That Mr. Cherry gave you?—Yes.

2394. Did you see Mr. Stokes at all about either of those two cars?—Not about the cars. I did not see him. I saw him, of course, often at times.

2395. Did Mr. Stokes give you any instructions about these voters?—Well, he gave me no instructions, only before I went with them he asked me were all the horses and cars in order; and he said he might want a car, and to be in readiness. That is all the instructions he gave me, the same as any other person would do.

2396. Where was it Mr. Cherry gave you the piece of paper?—In Mr. Stokes's.

2397. Upstairs was it?—No, not upstairs; in a little room.

2398. How long were you in Mr. Stokes's house?—I could not say how long.

2399. Who told you to go there?—Well, it was the mistress; the mistress told me.

2400. Did you go in by the back door?—I don't know what door. I cannot remember what door I went in at, but I was in it any way, and I came out at the front door, the hall door.

2401. I suppose when you came to Manorhamilton Shiels went on?—He did; I saw him going on a car as soon as the horse was fed and prepared.

2402. Was there any other man on the car with the M'Mullens?—No, not one but the two.

2403. Was there anyone on the car with Shiels?—No, only me.

2404. Where did you leave the M'Mullens?—In Bundoran.

2405. In whose house?—Well, I dropped them off on the public road, and I went to a house to feed the horse. They came on, and were a while sitting in it along with Mr. Moffatt, at Bundoran, where I generally feed when I go to Bundoran.

2406. Did you know young M'Mullen?—I did not.

2407. Do you now know that the two men were the two M'Mullens?—Yes.

2408. I suppose you saw them examined yesterday and to-day?—Yes.

2409. And those are the two men you drove?—I knew the old man, I did not know the young one.

2410. You did not know the son?—No.

[The witness withdrew.]

Mary Dunlevy.

Mary Dunlevy sworn and examined.

2411. The Chief Commissioner.—What is your husband's name?—Thomas Dunlevy.

2412. Does he carry on business?—He is a tradesman—a stucco-plasterer.

2413. How long has he been a voter of the borough?—The last election was the first time.

2414. Do you remember after the election began, and when Captain Flanagan and Major Knox were canvassing?—Yes.

2415. Did you know these gentlemen before the election?—No.

2416. When first did you know Major Knox?—It was before the election.

2417. Who introduced you to him?—Mr. Pollock.

2418. How long before the election was that?—It was before the revision.

2419. When they called at that time, did they call at your house?—Yes.

2420. Was your husband at home?—No.

2421. It was you they canvassed?—They came in.

2422. What was said about the election then to you?—First of all, Mr. Pollock, and after a while Mr. Phibbs, came in, and Mr. Pettit. The Major shook hands with me, and stood a little bit in in the shop. I still stayed in the front, and Mr. Pettit looked about, and beckoned me a little back from Mr. Pollock. He asked me would my husband take a situation in Dublin; I said that I did not know, that he was not at home. I told him then that we were poor, and the Major said if I wanted to see him privately I could see him at Mr. Knox's, at the Mall. He made a motion with his hand, and I said no more. He asked me what trade he had; I told him he was a stucco-plasterer. He asked where was he at present; I told him he was working at Glenfarn chapel. He asked me when he would be home; I said I did not know. He told me to write for him; I told him I would write, and he would be home by Saturday night, and so I did.

2423. Did you tell him nothing about your circumstances?—Well, not at that present time. I called up to Mr. Knox's that evening on the Mall, and I did not see Major Knox—I was told he was not in; and I made it my business the next morning, about nine or half-past nine, as well as I can recollect, to go up; and after a while staying in the hall, Tom Brennan went upstairs. During my time in the hall, and after Mr. Smith of the Mall came out of the parlour and went upstairs, the Major opened the door and brought me into the parlour, and made me sit down. I told him I was embarrassed; and hearing that everyone got money from Major Knox, I thought it was no harm, and no danger of the law, for myself to look for it. At the same time, my husband was not at home, nor did he know I was looking for it, nor was I sure he would give it to me or not. But I told him the reason why I asked him—how I was embarrassed; I showed him the cause too.

2424. What was the cause?—It was nothing shameful; it was things of mine that were in the pawn-office, and the papers were a little over the date, and I know I had them in my hand when Mr. Pollock came in. The Major was working this way with his fingers (illustrating), and thinking on it. He said he did not know, and he would have advice from Mr. Pollock. Mr. Pollock came into the parlour; the breakfast things were not removed. I stayed at one side of the table, and on account of Mr. Pollock canvassing me along with him, I showed him what the reason was I made the application for the money. Mr. Pollock put his fingers before his eyes (illustrating), and said, "the matter will be arranged, but I cannot interfere, I won't interfere, but there will be something arranged," or something of that kind, as well as I can recollect, Mr. Pollock said; so I did not see Major Knox, nor did I get any decided answer about it till I think about a week or so. I was standing with a broom in my hand in the shop when Major Knox came in, and told me he was about to go to Dublin, and had left my commands with Mr. Pollock, £10 I understood, so in the afternoon I called to Mr. Pollock's house, but I did not get it, nor see Mr. Pollock in the matter.

2425. Was anyone present?—Yes.

2426. Who?—A boy named James Dowd was present; he was standing asking me where Francis, where my husband was; as well as I recollect he was wanting to go back to the town.

2427. Did the boy Dowd hear anything about the £10?—He was quite close.

2428. What was said about the £10 when he was present?—The Major said he was going to Dublin, and he had left my commands with Mr. Pollock.

2429. What were the words he used; did he say how much?—£10; that is what I made application for.

2430. Do you mean to say he used the words "£10" in the presence of Dowd, or any "commands?"—As well as I can recollect he did.

2431. Did you say that the word he used was the word "command"—you now say he used the word "£10?"—The word "commands" was used.

2432. By whom?—By the Major himself, and as well as I can recollect, it is going on twelve months ago now—as well as I have it on my mind—the Major said in a way that Dowd could hear, "£10."

2433. What happened then?—I did not receive it from Mr. Pollock.

2434. Did you call on Mr. Pollock?—I did, that evening.

2435. What did you say to him?—I could not get to see him.

2436. Did you ever ask him for the £10?—I did not see him.

2437. Did you ever ask him for the £10?—[Not answered.]

2438. Did you ask him for the £10?—I did not stop him in the street to ask him.

2439. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Mr. Pollock was not by when the money was named?—No.

2440. The Chief Commissioner.—Now state what occurred after that; at the time of the revision did the Major come to your house?—He came across from the far side of the street.

2441. What did he do then?—He shook hands with me, and said he was going on successfully in court. I told him I was glad to hear it, but I was greatly disappointed in the promise he made that I never got the commands he left with Mr. Pollock.

2442. What did he do then?—He asked me did I call. I told him I did call, and that Mr. Pollock's son came to the door, and said I could not see his father that evening, and the answer I made was that I would not ask to see him again, and that this gave me to see how he would be treated at the election. He said he would make matters all right, and gave me £10.

2443. Do you swear that?—I swear on my oath, as sure as I may get heaven, that he gave me £10, and asked me would my husband be a supporter of his.

2444. How did he give you the £10—in what sort of notes?—Single notes.

2445. Where did he give them to you?—In my own shop, standing.

2446. In the open shop?—In the open shop.

2447. Were you behind the counter?—Indeed I was not. I was in the middle of the shop, just standing with my back to the counter. He came over from the far side of the street.

2448. Did he leave the £10 down on the counter or give it into your hands?—He left down something on the counter as well as I can recollect. I had to pass him for a little child to whip it up from the door. "Now, Mrs. Dunleavy," says he, "make no mention of this."

2449. Did he give the notes into your hand or leave them on the counter?—He gave me, as well as I can recollect, the notes into my hand.

2450. Were they in a bundle?—He had them rolled in a single fold.

2451. When did you count them?—Immediately. I did not ask to count them for a few minutes after.

2452. Did you count them until he left?—No.

2453. Where was your husband?—In the kitchen.

2454. Did he see what you were doing?—Well, he saw me, certainly, getting the money. Let the punishment of the law be what it is, I will tell the truth.

2455. Did he see you getting the money?—He saw me getting it. There is a window between the shop and the kitchen, and I saw him shaking his hand at me. I did not know what the shaking of his hand was——

2456. Was it through the window he saw you?—He could see both through the door and window; the door was not closed.

2457. Did the Major say anything after that to you?—[Not answered.]

2458. Did he?—Perhaps he did; I quite forget—it is so long.

2459. Do you forget whether he said anything more to you?—I will bring my mind to the recollection of it at the present moment.

2460. Was he with you any time after giving you the £10, or did he go away, do you remember?—Well, I did not see him after that until I saw him in the Court-house here at the time of the revision, unless I saw him passing through the street, coming up.

2461. Do you know Mr. Woods?—I do.

2462. Did he come to you at any time, or send for you?—Well, I quite forget.

2463. About Mr. Woods?—About Mr. Woods.

2464. Did Mr. Woods ever speak to you about your husband's vote?—I declare I quite forget if he did; I don't recollect if he did; perhaps he might, but I don't bring my mind to the recollection now about it.

2465. Do you know Mr. Woods well?—Oh, I most humbly beg your pardon—I thought it was Mr. Woods, the bookbinder, you meant.

2466. Did any gentleman of the name of Woods ever speak to you about your husband's vote?—Oh, yes.

2467. Tell what occurred?—Mr. Woods, he got some manure of mine, but he made no bargain about it, and he came into my premises; it was in the street; he came to the house; I was not well in my health; he asked me to show him where the manure was, to get it out of the way; it was an inconvenient thing to do, as the street—as the yard was full of horses; he insisted on seeing it, and called the attention of some of the boys sitting in the kitchen to remove some of the horses, that he might see the pit; he would see it; so I went to the door to call some of the boys down, to have the yard readied, and enable the gentleman to see the manure; he said he wanted to speak to me privately; I looked at him; he asked me to go upstairs, that he wanted to speak about some particular matter; I went upstairs, and he asked me where was Francis; that was the first word, as well as I can recollect; I told him he was in Tipperary: "Where there?" says he; so I told him at a place called Roscrea; he said then he supposed he had plenty to do; and he asked me what I would think of having him left away for the election, that I would be well rewarded for doing it; I said I would not like it, that I would like he would come home at all events.

2468. What was said then?—He said I had better have him away, that the town was greatly disturbed; I said I did not dread a disturbance, not the cheering of little children, that it was not a farthing to me; "It is better," said he, "you should leave him away, and you will be well rewarded;" I asked him about the reward; he said, "If Frank was here he would take my advice—this will be my advice: it is better for you and your husband to have good interest; if you left Frank away, you know I might go security for the plastering of the Town Hall for him," says he. He asked me for his direction; I said I would consider on it; he wanted to get the direction of the shop; I told him I would not give him the direction until I considered about it.

2469. Did he offer you money?—He told me he would give me £50 after the election would be over.

2470. What did you say to that?—I told him I would, if he gave the money on the spot.

2471. What did he say to that?—He said that was against the law, that he would give an I O U or a bill on the bank, with his name signed to it.

2472. He said he would give what?—An I O U, I think, he said.

2473. Did you owe a man named Galbraith any money at that time?—Yes.

2474. Was it for rent he was security?—No, for shop goods.

2475. Did Galbraith send for you?—He did, the same evening.

2476. Where did you go to when he sent for you?—I went of course. I asked a young man in another part of the shop could I see Mr. Galbraith. He said he was upstairs. So I saw him; he was at his desk when I went in.

2477. What occurred on that occasion?—Mr. Galbraith kept me in conversation about my health until young Mr. Woods, Mr. Joseph Woods, came in, and Mr. Woods said the place was too exposed there, so they brought me upstairs.

2478. Where did they bring you to?—They brought me into something like a wareroom on another floor up over where we were.

2479. Were you and Mr. Galbraith and Mr. Woods then there?—We were; he gave me a chair and told me to sit down, and asked me was Mr. Woods in with me. I told him he was. He asked me would I not comply with his wish. I said I would not like to have Francis away from the election, that he would come home and do what he liked. "It is better," says he, "to leave him away." "Well, I don't like, Mr. Galbraith," I said. Mr. Galbraith reasoned the case very fairly, mentioning that he went security for the rent of the house, another rent, and for an amount of goods in the shop. He told me he had a decree, and that he had it still.

2480. A decree against your husband?—Yes.

2481. How much was the decree for?—I think £10 10*s*.

2482. Go on with the conversation?—Mr. Galbraith told me he would look over the decree altogether, and if I wrote a letter to his satisfaction he would give me £20 for myself, not to interfere with what Mr. Woods promised at all, and I told him then I would.

2483. What was your husband to do—was he to vote or go away?—No; a letter was to be sent to him, and I believe Mr. Galbraith said he would be particularly well taken care of; that some man would go to him from Dublin to Tipperary—to Roscrea, where Frank was working.

2484. Did you agree that he was to be kept away?—Well, I told Mr. Galbraith that I would write the letter for the £20. He laid down money on the desk and said he would give me the £20 for myself.

2485. Did you get the £20?—I did not, nor a shilling of it.

2486. Did you write the letter?—I did.

2487. Who gave you the paper?—Mr. Galbraith.

2488. When you wrote the letter, were Mr. Galbraith and Mr. Woods present?—They were; it was according to his dictation I wrote the letter.

2489. Who dictated the letter to you?—Mr. Galbraith.

2490. Was your husband then in Roscrea?—He was.

2491. In the county of Tipperary?—Yes.

2492. In some employment there?—Yes.

2493. In whose employment?—Mr. Morrissy's.

2494. Who directed the letter?—Mr. Joseph Woods.

2495. And who took away the letter?—Mr. Joseph Woods.

2496. Did you tell him the direction to write on the letter?—Yes.

2497. That was your husband's direction?—Yes.

2498. And who finally got the letter from you—was it Mr. Galbraith or Mr. Woods?—Mr. Woods took up the letter to dry it at the fire, and both of them read it over—both Mr. Galbraith and Mr. Woods. Mr. Woods had the letter in his hand, and he took the letter to the fire—to the grate—to dry it, and when I saw Mr. Galbraith rolling up the money I claimed the letter. I asked him was he not going to give me the money—would he not be as good as his word. He said I might rely upon his word, and that he would do so after the election would be over.

2499. How much?—£20.

2500. Did your husband remain away?—He did not.

2501. When did he come back?—He came back for the polling.

2502. For whom did he vote?—He voted for those he ought to vote for, Captain Flanagan. If I got £300 I would not let him stop away, much less £20.

2503. Did you write another letter to your husband?—I did, to come home and give no heed to the mock letter.

2504. When you wrote what you call the "mock" letter, did you intend to keep the £20?—I did surely, and make him vote for Captain Flanagan; on my oath, if I got £300 I would make him vote for Captain Flanagan.

2505. Did you ever demand the £20 before the polling day from Mr. Woods or Mr. Galbraith?—I went up on the Monday morning to Mr. Galbraith, and asked him.

2506. What did he say?—He said the state of the town was so much troubled that he would give me so much to take me out of the place for some time. I told him I was not a bit afraid of anyone in Sligo, that the cheering of children could not annoy me.

2507. What did Mr. Galbraith say?—He told me he would give it after the election would be over, that I might rest my mind, that I might be quite sure of it. He paid me off with a great deal of empty compliments—he told me that Frank would be all right, well taken care of, and sent home safe.

2508. When did your husband come home?—He came home by the half-past ten train the night before the polling—the polling, I think, was on Thursday.

2509. Did you know he was coming home?—I did, for I went for him.

2510. Did you go to Tipperary?—Not all the way. I intended to go to Tipperary, but I met him at the Portarlington Junction.

2511. You went to bring him home to poll for Captain Flanagan?—I did. I did not begrudge ——

2512. Mr. Commissioner Bruce. — Who gave you the money to go for him?—My employer, Mr. Morrissy.

2513. Is it all paid back again?—Mr. Morrissy stopped it; it is a customary thing when tradesmen get an advance of money to stop it at so much a week.

2514. Was it advanced to your husband?—Certainly it was, and it was stopped from my weekly support.

2515. Is your husband still in Mr. Morrissy's employment?—He was at that time; he was working down in Tipperary.

2516. But in whose employment?—In his employment.

2517. I understand Mr. Morrissy employed him to go down to Tipperary.

2518. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Did you complain that you got no money to the Major?—That I got no money.

2519. On your oath did you make any complaint to the Major that you got no money?—I spoke to Mr. Phibbs of the expenses of the revision.

2520. And you swear you made no complaint to the Major?—On my oath, on my solemn oath I never did.

2521. Did you ever complain to John Farrell that you got no money from the Major?—No.

2522. Did you tell the neighbours that you got no money?—Well, they suspected I got it, for the boys used to say that I got a good sum of the Major's money. I did not say a word about it, and if I thought it interfered with the law I would not do it, I would not interfere with the Major or his money; the devil a bit the better I am of it to-day.

2523. Did the Major on any occasion say anything to you about land?—Indeed he did; he told me he would give me land, and send for my husband to Glenfarn.

2524. What land did he promise you?—He told me he had bought a good deal of Colonel Tennison's estate about Sligo, and he would give me ten acres at a reasonable rent, and in a short time I would be a comfortable woman. It is not once he promised me that.

2525. Did he ever say he would have nothing to do with you?—No, Major Knox never offered me the slightest insult.

2526. On the first occasion that you saw the Major did he say he had left the commands with Mr. Pollock to give you ten pounds, in Mr. Pollock's presence?—No, he did not give me a decided answer that morning at all, but came into the house with word ——

2527. He gave you no answer that morning that Mr. Pollock was with him?—Not that morning, but in his presence Mr. Pollock said they would consider the case, and have the matter arranged.

2528. But while Mr. Pollock was by did he say anything leaving the commands with Mr. Pollock?—No.

2529. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—What do you say Mr. Pollock said at that time. I did not distinctly catch it?—He said the matter would be arranged for me; he said they could not interfere in consequence of the law; something like that, as well as I can recollect. When I showed him the tickets he put his hand up to his eyes, like as if he did not like to see them.

2530. Did he say matters would be arranged for you?—Mr. Pollock explained a few words as it were about it to the Major, the Major said the matter would be arranged; Mr. Pollock said he would not interfere if the thing could be arranged.

2531. The first time you saw Major Knox did he say he could get your husband a situation in Dublin?—It was Mr. Petitt asked me first.

2532. The Chief Commissioner.—The conversation about Colonel Tennison's land, where did that occur first?—It was in my own house.

2533. Was it before or after the conversation you got the ten pounds?—Well, I think as well as I can recollect, it was on the same day I got the ten pounds.

2534. Was it after you got the ten pounds or before it on the same day?—I am sure it was after it.

2535. State what occurred in the conversation about Colonel Tennison's land after you got the ten pounds?—He told me he would get the plastering of the Town Hall for my husband, and he also said he would get me some land, and he asked me if that would suit me. I said it would, very well. He said he was about purchasing Colonel Tennison's estate, and he would get me ten acres of good land, and he asked me would I be able to manage nine or ten acres. I told him I understood the management of land, for I was born under the Right Honorable Mr. Wynne, and all belonging to me, and that I was accustomed to land.

2536. Do you know of any other people being sent out of the town?—No.

2537. Were any of your neighbours, voters, out of the town on the day of the polling?—None of my neighbours that I knew, except the two M'Mullans, that I heard of.

2538. Do you know of anyone else in the same position as the M'Mullans, going away from the town to avoid voting?—No.

2539. Can you give the Court any information as to the names of any persons who went out of the town to avoid voting, except the two M'Mullans? Did you hear Shiels went?—I knew nothing of it except I heard he did go.

2540. When did you hear he was gone—was it on the Sunday?—I think it was on the Sunday or Monday, as well as I can recollect.

2541. Who told you?—Well, I forget.

2542. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—At what time of the day did Major Knox come into the shop and give you the £10?—Well, I think it was, to the best of my knowledge, between twelve and two o'clock in the day, as well as I can recollect.

2543. What street is your shop in?—In the Mall.

2544. Is that a small street or a large street?—It is not a small street.

2545. Are there many people passing there?—Oh, yes, plenty pass.

2546. When the Major came in, you say, he shook hands with you?—So he did.

2547. You said you were disappointed?—Yes.

2548. Then did he move to the back of the shop?—No, he did not.

2549. He stopped near the door?—He stopped near the door; he was not at the step of the door, but he moved a little in, not in any sort of a hiding manner.

2550. You said he could be seen by your husband in the back?—Yes, and by any person passing.

2551. Were you behind the counter?—No, I was not.

2552. Were you standing near the door then—you said you had a besom in your hand?—I had a broom in my hand.

2553. Were you standing near the door then?—I stood inside, rather between him and the door. I went to pass to pull the little child in from the door, and he stood over——

2554. When you said you were disappointed, he took the notes out of his pocket?—Yes.

2555. Was it out of a pocket-book?—I saw him put his hand into his pocket. I drew back a little; I did not like to press too much, though I was glad to get it the same day.

2556. He took out the notes; how did he put them into your hand—did he offer them openly?—He had the notes in his hand, and he gave them a single fold and put them into my hand, and said he hoped my husband would be a supporter of his at the poll.

2557. You say he drew back a little?—But it was not for the purpose of hiding me or him.

2558. Could any person passing see him?—There is not a person in the town but saw Major Knox coming several times into the house, or at least a couple of times.

2559. On the first occasion, you say Mr. Petitt asked would your husband take a situation in Dublin. Mr. Pollock and Major Knox were there then, and did you not also state Mr. Phibbs?—Yes.

2560. Mr. Phibbs and Major Knox were there. Did they hear Petitt say that?—They were near enough to hear—they could have heard; the shop is not altogether so extraordinarily big. They could have heard. I am not sure whether they could, but there was no secrecy in Petitt's saying. He beckoned me a little back of Mr. Phibbs and Mr. Pollock, and asked me who lived in the opposite house. I did not know Mr. Phibbs till that day only to see him, but I did not know his name.

(The witness withdrew.)

Michael Rooney called, but did not answer; Peter Harrison called, but did not answer; Henry Mulligan called, but did not answer; James Devanny called, but did not answer.

Michael Doherty sworn and examined.

Michael Doherty.

2561. The Chief Commissioner.—Were you examined at the petition trial?—No.

2562. Are you an elector?—I am.

2563. Whom did you vote for at the last election?—Major Knox.

2564. How long have you had a vote?—I was only on the register previous to the Reform.

2565. Previous to the late Reform Bill?—Yes. I never voted only at the last election.

2566. You never voted before the last election?—No.

2567. Had you ever a vote at any time before, or did you only get on the register at the passing of the Reform Bill?—I got on in '67 or '68, I am not sure which.

2568. At all events you never voted before the last election?—No.

2569. What is the rating of your house?—I was registered as rated, I think, at £9 10*s.* for house and land, under the Reform. I am at present only rated for the house alone.

2570. Do you know Thomas Brennan?—I do.

2571. Were you working with him for Major Knox?—No.

2572. Did you ever canvass anyone for him?—No. I accompanied the Major on his canvass.

2573. You voted for Major Knox you have already said?—I did; but only one day I accompanied him, when I was with Mr. Phibbs. I met Mr. Phibbs and he together. Mr. Phibbs asked me where was I going. I said over to Mr. Allen's, of Seafield. He said he wanted to see Mr. Allen, and I had better step up on the car.

2574. Did Thomas Brennan ever give you any money?—Never.

2575. I mean to give to other people?—Never.

2576. Was it you was mentioned in relation to £5?—It was; and I wish to tell you that when that was stated yesterday I was going to make an application yesterday evening before I was summoned to be examined. I wished to tender my evidence, but Mr. Purcell prevented me until the sitting of the Court this morning. Previous to the sitting of the Court I was summoned. I knew then I need not enter into any explanation, being summoned to tell the truth.

2577. Well, you heard what was sworn about you yesterday?—Yes.

2578. Do you remember what it was?—I do.

2579. What occurred on that occasion?—What the witness Grey swore?

2580. That is what I am referring to?—Partly true, and partly false.

2581. Well, I ask you to give your version of what did occur?—On the day I allude to, the day Mr. Phibbs asked me to come along with him on their car, I gave the money to Grey. We had to go in through the country, into the suburbs, where no car could pass.

2582. You mean the roads were so bad?—There were no public roads through the place. They were wanting to open in Caltra, and Major Knox and Mr. Phibbs knowing I knew the locality so well brought me with them, as I said there were none but us there.

2583. You knowing the people?—Knowing the people. Knowing every one I may say, locally acquainted with every one; but while on the line in Caltra, I was surprised to see a large number of those non-electors assemble immediately to meet us, to give every assistance to Major Knox; amongst the rest Grey, although he swore yesterday to a question from Mr. Commissioner Bruce that he never was on the canvass with Major Knox.

2584. State what occurred?—On our return home and after the canvass, the Major said to me, "Mr. Doherty, I will give those fellows the price of a drink." "Do what you think fit" says I. "What do you think will do it?" I did not know what sum, but I think I mentioned, but through me he gave £2 and £3.

2585. Did you give any money?—I did.

2586. How much?—Three pounds to Grey and two pounds to a man named Michael Mulligan. That was the £5 I got from Major Knox. They were both non-electors.

2587. Then you gave the £5;—I did.

2588. Did the Major give you this money that day?—He did.

2589. And you gave it out that way?—But he gave me a great caution that no elector should handle a shilling of it. It was merely for the refreshment of those non-electors who accompanied him on his canvass.

2590. Two pounds to Mulligan?—Two pounds to Mulligan.

2591. Did you ever give any other money?—Never in my life. I never gave a shilling. I never was authorized, and I know on all occasions—and I was in the confidence of Major Knox—on all occasions he was most cautious, and always set his face against the idea of giving a shilling to any person.

2592. Do you know the two M'Mullans?—I do.

2593. Did you know they were going away?—No, I did not, I never heard a word of it until they were gone.

2594. Did you hear they were gone on the Sunday?—I do not recollect what day I heard they were gone.

2595. Was it before the polling?—I heard they were gone before the polling.

2596. Did you afterwards know where they were?—Never in my life, except to hear. I heard they were in Dublin.

2597. You heard they were in Dublin?—Yes, by report.

2598. By report?—By report.

2599. Did you know Shiels was gone?—No, I did not. I did not know he was gone until the day he returned to Sligo. I think that was on the day previous to the polling, if I do not mistake. I met him here convenient to his own house, in company with another, Mr. Hunt, I think the young man; it was in the way of conversation I knew it.

2600. Do you know Michael Rooney?—I do.

2601. Do you know whether or not he voted?—He voted, I believe.

2602. And Peter Harrison?—I believe he did not vote.

2603. Do you know what become of him?—I heard he left the country, or at least the town.

2604. Did you hear that before the polling?—I cannot say. I may have heard it, but I do not recollect that I did.

2605. Henry Mulligan?—I heard he left before.

2606. James Devany?—I did not hear that he left before.

2607. Do you know whether he voted or not?—I know he did not.

2608. You appear to be telling the truth, can you give us any information about those men, and about where they went to—the men that did not vote?—On my solemn oath I do not know a ha'pworth about it.

2609. Do you know anything of Edward Gethins?—I do.

2610. Tell me what you know of him?—I know Edward Gethins was in company at Mrs. Hall's—that is the house here—he came down with the intention of voting.

2611. On the polling day?—On the polling day. I had better tell why I came to Mrs. Hall's?

2612. Certainly—tell frankly everything about it?—On the evening previous to the polling I came up the street. I saw from the appearances—at least I dreaded something would occur to myself or some other persons on my account if I remained at my own house, to come up to poll the next day. I live at some distance. I live down at the railway station in George's-street, and I expected I would have to be brought up by an escort of constabulary; otherwise I would not be safe, or I would be taken away by the mob. I wished of course to avoid all this. I dreaded from the appearance of the place that there might be some collision. I had seen instances of that kind before, and I think I came up and spoke to one or two. I said, "from the appearances I see this evening I dread something may occur to-morrow; it would be safer for me not to go home to-night, and to send home word to my house." I asked one or two persons the best place to remain for the night, and Mr. Farrell's house was suggested to me. I said I could not go there, that I thought other persons there did not like to be associated with me.

2613. You mean other voters?—Other voters.

2614. What is Farrell's Christian name?—John—and I do not know whether myself or some other person mentioned Mrs. Hall's. I went to Mrs. Hall's on that evening (it was not dark—it was November) about, I suppose, four or five o'clock—and I asked Mrs. Hall could she entertain me for the night, that I intended to remain there until the next day, and then go up and poll, that I did not wish to go home. She said, "of course, you know my terms." I did not know—"well," says I, "what are your terms?" so she told me 5*s.*, and I paid her that. I remained. Gethins was there, to my astonishment. Gethins and others were there, and on my solemn oath I did not know a sinner, being, or Christian was in it at the time I went into it.

2615. Edward Gethins, is it?—Edward Gethins was there.

2616. And who else?—I wish to remark while I am at Gethins' name, that the man Grey, in giving evidence, swore that Gethins left the town and did not vote.

2617. And Gethins did not vote?—He did not. He told me in the course of the day of the polling that he would not. He came down there with the intention of voting, and was really reconciled to voting up to some late part of the day, when the rioting and violence were so great—and his house being thrown down—he got information about this, and he told me he could not vote.

2618. What other electors were in Mrs. Hall's?—John Reid, John M'Guirk, Pat Clancey—he came there in the morning.

2619. On the morning of the polling?—On the morning of the polling, Timothy Farren, Michael M'Gouldrick senior, Michael M'Gouldrick junior—if you have the register of last year let me see [Register handed to witness]. George Beatty—I beg your pardon, I am not sure of him—

2620. You don't know?—I don't know, I think he was there. Edward Ferguson, John Gray, James Gray, Robert Lyndsay, Andrew O'Beirne, that is all.

2621. You have mentioned thirteen?—Well, I think there were fifteen.

2622. You yourself would be the fourteenth, there is only one man missing?—I don't know if Samuel Gillmore was there or not.

2623. From your recollection there were fifteen, including yourself?—Oh no, there were fifteen without me.

2624. Who are the absent ones?—I forget now.

2625. What hour did you go there?—I went I suppose about four or five o'clock in the evening.

2626. Before the polling day?—Yes.

2627. Did you find all these parties there or did they drop in?—Oh, I saw Pat Gallagher, he came in after I went there. I do not think Samuel Gillmore was in it. I am not quite certain.

2628. Did you find all those parties there that you have mentioned?—Not then, but they were there on the morning of the poll.

2629. How many of them slept there that night?—They all slept there.

2630. You all slept there that night?—I cannot say we slept. We stopped there—sleep we could not get—it was a noisy place, outside.

2631. I suppose you had supper, and were amusing yourselves?—Well, of course you could not expect us to pay for it without getting it; anything we had we paid for it, and paid for it saucily. I paid I think about ten shillings for the twenty-four hours I was in it.

2632. Did you know when you went there that other electors were there?—Not a ha'porth, nor was I ever informed, nor told. It was never mentioned nor suggested to me to go to Mrs. Hall. It was owing to accident I went there.

2633. Those fourteen or fifteen electors did they belong as far as you know to the Liberal or the Conservative party, or were some of them of one party and some of another?—No, they were all of Major Knox's; they came there for the purpose of voting for Major Knox the next day, and the chief object of going there was for fear they would be kidnapped the night previous to the poll. That was the object. Some of them lived in the suburbs and could not be safe in it.

2634. Did any of these men not afterwards vote?—Two of them.

2635. Which of them?—M'Guirk and Gethins.

2636. They did not vote?—Yes, I think I was the means of causing M'Guirk not to vote.

2637. How so?—When I came in that evening I saw M'Guirk sitting at the fire. There was another man in the same trade as M'Guirk, a hair-dresser of the name of Clancy, who came in the morning. Clancy and his son were in the ranks, and on the night previous to that I was present when Clancy's son who had promised to Major Knox that he would vote for him left by the train—by the mail train—to avoid voting for Major Knox, that is the young man.

2638. What is his name?—Charles Clancy.

2639. Did he leave on Wednesday?—I think so, through some interest held out to him by Captain Flanagan's party.

2640. Charles Clancy at all events left to avoid voting?—He did, through inducement, I believe.

2641. Tell me anything you know on the subject?—I have no doubt he was induced to go. I saw friends of Captain Flanagan accompanying him. I was at the railway station, in the water-closet, at the time he came in, and he changed his dress, and sent another man out for his ticket, and went away. I was told at my own house. At the time he passed up I was told by one of my own family he was going up, and I suspected he was going away, although he had faithfully promised to vote for Major Knox.

2642. And you went up?—I went up to ascertain that fact, for I felt jealous to say that he would go away and I should vote, for he was in similar circumstances as I was.

2643. What do you mean by that—is it in politics?—In politics, exactly, and, together with that, he was doing business for Mr. Phibbs, who was acting for Major Knox, and in the employment of Major Knox. I felt annoyed that he should be allowed to go away.

2644. And you being obliged to vote?—I was not obliged to vote, for I was my own master.

2645. You were obliged by your conscience?—By my conscience.

2646. You were annoyed at his going away?—Yes, certainly.

2647. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Is Charles Clancy the son of Robert Clancy?—He is the son of Robert Clancy. I was remarking on the case of M'Guirk not voting. When I came in M'Guirk was there. He was not in good friends with Clancy. They were not on speaking terms, and it was more to encourage M'Guirk I mentioned that Clancy had gone away. I thought he would find pleasure in it.

2648. Being in the same business?—Being in the same business; that is the fact. I merely told him; that was my object in telling him. The moment I told him that he said, "I never will vote," and both the Clancys never polled.

2649. Did you see Charles Clancy change his dress?—I did.

2650. To disguise himself?—Not to disguise himself.

2651. What do you mean by changing his dress?—He put an outside coat on himself. I was in the yard of the water-closet. I saw him send out a messenger that brought in his railway ticket.

2652. You said some of Captain Flanagan's supporters were with him?—They were.

2653. Who were they?—I think Cahill of Market-street, was with him, and his brother, Henry Clancy, was with him.

2654. Was Henry Clancy a voter?—He was not.

2655. Did these people wait until the train started?—They did. I saw a clergyman with him not belonging to Sligo.

2656. Do you know his name?—No.

2657. Do you mean a Roman Catholic clergyman?—From his appearance I would say so.

2658. Did he go with him?—He went in the same train with him.

2659. Did he go in the same carriage with him?—I could not say, because I did not go out.

2660. You did not show?—I did not show until the train was about starting; and "Do not forget to be down in the morning," says the brother—says Mr. Cahill. "Oh, of course I will be back," was the answer.

2661. Did Charles Clancy not return until after the polling?—He did not.

2662. Do you not know where he went to?—I heard he went to Longford to a brother.

2663. To his brother?—To a brother-in-law of Cahill's, at Longford. I heard he went there; I don't know whether it is true.

2664. You said Gethins and M'Guirk, who were here, did not vote. Were the others there who polled for Major Knox that day belonging for some time to his party?—To whose party?

2665. To the Conservative party?—There was Lyndsay, I think I mentioned him as one.

2666. Pat O'Brien—did he belong to the Conservative party?—He did, sometimes, I believe. I know he voted at Wynne's election.

2667. Did Gethins or M'Guirk?—M'Guirk voted for M'Donough, Mr. Gethins voted for Sergeant Armstrong.

2668. Did any person come in to see you during the evening?—The only person I saw on the occasion was Mr. Hignell.

SECOND DAY.
October 6.
Michael Doherty.

2669. Do you know Mr. Hignell's Christian name?—No, I do not; but it was in to see me he came—he called upon me.

2670. What did he call on you about?—To know what number of men were there, that is all.

2671. You told him the number?—I think so.

2672. The number of voters that were there?—The names were what he wanted.

2673. And you gave him the names as a matter of course?—Yes.

2674. Had you them written there for him?—No, I got them for him.

2675. Did he write down the names?—No, I think it was myself supplied him with a list of the names.

2676. A written list?—I think so.

2677. What employment are you in?—I am a civil bill officer, and I have been in the employment of Major Knox for the last five or six years.

2678. I suppose you assisted at the revision here?—I took some little part in it.

2679. I mean you gave assistance?—No, I did not interfere much in it, nor even at the election.

2680. Did you canvass M'Guirk or Gethins during the polling day?—There was no necessity; during the polling day they were inside.

2681. Did you see anyone during the day bring them up to the poll?—Oh, yes, I did—no, I did not see any person personally asking them to come up to vote. I asked them myself.

2682. Did you report from time to time that they would not vote?—I had no opportunity.

2683. At what time of the day did these thirteen men poll—did they poll as early as they could?—No, they did not. It was my wish to be the very first man that would poll that morning. I did not get the opportunity. I made a promise to Major Knox twelve months previous that I would be the first man to poll for him, and I did not get the opportunity. I was very sorry for it.

2684. Did the other voters there not poll before nine or ten o'clock?—No, they did not.

2685. What is the reason of that?—I do not know.

2686. Were there any efforts made between two and three o'clock, or before the close of the poll, to make Gethins and M'Guirk poll?—There were.

2687. Who called on them to try to get them to the poll?—I saw M'Guirk on one occasion.

2688. Did you see Mr. Hignell?—I think Major Knox asked M'Guirk would he poll, and he said not. Major Knox smiled and shook his head, and walked away. He said no more.

2689. When did you finally leave the house?—I went that night home to my own place.

2690. The night of the polling?—The night of the day of the polling.

2691. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—At what hour did you poll?—I could not say now.

2692. Was it in the morning?—No, about midday.

2693. How did you leave Mrs. Hall's?—I went out publicly into the street by the front door.

2694. Is Mrs. Hall the court-keeper?—She is. Some person wanted me to go out in company with him. I said I would not go in company with him, that I would go up independently and vote myself.

2695. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—You say you believe Charles Clancy was induced to vote?—I do.

2696. What reason have you for thinking so?—I would rather not mention.

2697. The Chief Commissioner.—You must mention, we want the information?—I was told previous to that he was at the Presbytery with the Bishop, and that he made a promise to the Bishop.

2698. To vote or not to vote?—Either one or the other.

2699. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—I suppose Clancy was a Roman Catholic?—He was a Roman Catholic.

2700. The Chief Commissioner.—Were any other electors of the fifteen Roman Catholics?—They were all mostly Roman Catholics, except Robert Lyndsay.

2701. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Was Lyndsay a Protestant?—Robert Lyndsay is a Protestant, and Edward Ferguson, all the rest were Roman Catholics.

2702. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Did you hear money was going on Captain Flanagan's side?—I had no opportunity of hearing that.

2703. I ask you did you hear?—No, I did not.

2704. Did you hear any report of money going on Captain Flanagan's side?—Oh, I did hear a report; there was a general flying report going—those parties who promised to vote for Major Knox and afterwards violated their promise—that it must be caused by some promises held out to them, held out by the Flanagan party to induce them to vote.

2705. Could you remember the names of any of the voters that were reported to have got money from Captain Flanagan?—I could not.

2706. Do you know the names of the persons that promised faithfully to vote for Major Knox, and did not vote for him?—[Not answered.]

2707. The Chief Commissioner.—You know the names of some; look at the register. [Register handed to witness.]

2708. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—What are the names?—I know Dominick Kilcullen was one. I do not say money was promised, but they were always supposed to be supporters of Major Knox—agreeing that way.

2709. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—We are merely asking you as a rumour?—He did not vote, and I think the report was circulated that he must be induced, through monetary matters or the like of that, to violate his promise to Major Knox. Michael Rooney of Cornagee, I heard.

2710. Anyone else?—Thomas Scanlan of Thomas-street; I heard that he was not to vote; he told me himself he would not vote; I heard he was induced through the same means, but I don't believe it; I know Scanlan so well myself, I don't believe it.

2711. What other names?—In fact, I could not bring them to recollection.

2712. Try your memory?—Certainly, I do not wish—I have no reason in the world to conceal a simple name from you; I am neither afraid nor ashamed to expose it if I can.

2713. Can you remember any other names you heard mentioned by report as having been induced by Captain Flanagan?—There is another in that list that I forgot to mention, Sergeant Boyle.

2714. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Do you mean in Mrs. Hall's?—Yes. He was a Roman Catholic; there was a man named Rennick who was understood to vote for Major Knox.

2715. The Chief Commissioner.—Thomas Rennick?—I think so; I am not sure; but it was always supposed he would vote for Major Knox; the night previous to the polling his house was smashed by the mob; I did not know it was smashed until after the election; I was looking out of Mrs. Hall's window, and I saw him coming up with a body of the voters of Captain Flanagan, and I was surprised to see him coming up along with them.

2716. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—His house was smashed?—His house was smashed.

2717. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Did he vote?—No, he did not vote; I afterwards heard the mob took him with them.

2718. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Do you remember anyone else, besides Rennick?—I know Charles Tiernan was to vote for him.

2719. The Chief Commissioner.—He was examined?—Yes, he was examined yesterday.

2720. He was to vote for Major Knox?—I know he was, but he said in consequence of the Church question he changed his mind; everyone in court was listening to that.

2721. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Did you hear of anyone coming to him and inducing him to vote for Captain Flanagan?—Who?

2722. Tiernan?—I did, to be sure. I often canvassed with him myself.

2723. Did you hear of any person in particular having induced him to change his mind?—Not in particular.

2724. Do you see anyone else on the Register besides Tiernan?—Martin Davy of Caltrag. He promised in my presence to vote for Major Knox, he voted afterwards for Captain Flanagan. I do not know who induced him to do so. Francis Dunlevy was to vote for Major Knox, at least his wife told me, for I saw her coming several times to Mr. Phibbs in Stephen's-street, endeavouring to have an interview with him. He refused to see her; and I am perfectly certain if she did not get what she required of him she would make her husband vote on the other side.

2725. The Chief Commissioner.—In the way of money?—In the way of money. She told me on one occasion there was some property of hers in the pawn-office—and they were past redemption—and she was going over to Mr. Phibbs, wanting to get them redeemed, and Mr. Phibbs would not hear her, but ordered her out of the place. She told me that as I met her coming out of the door.

2726. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—She told you that?—She told me that.

2727. Is there anyone else besides Francis Dunlevy?—Pat Flynn promised him. There was a man named Gooravin. He said he would vote for Major Knox. I saw him at Mr. Phibb's house.

2728. Do you see any other name?—Patrick Neilan, I understood, was to vote.

2729. The Chief Commissioner.—When did you see Patrick Neilan last?—Some time last week, I think, but I have been informed by a person outside that he saw him this morning or yesterday evening. He has been seen in the street.

2730. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—I am merely asking you as to rumour—not whether you believe the rumour—did you hear of any persons on Major Knox's side being bribed, except those that were mentioned either at Carrick or here?—On my oath I never did.

2731. You never heard anyone suspected, or named in connexion with bribery?—No, I cannot bring myself to the recollection of any other person except those named. Those that voted for Major Knox, as a matter of course, the other side said were all bribed; that was the rumour.

2732. Did you hear any rumour or suspicion of anybody being bribed at Captain Flanagan's side except those persons you have named?—No, I did not. I had not the opportunity I might otherwise have had in the matter. Of course all the people in Sligo knew very well that I was to vote for Major Knox, nothing would induce me to vote for any other man but Major Knox; therefore they would not let me into their secrets, and I always avoided going to such places where Captain Flanagan's friends would be. I knew I would not be a welcome guest there, and I did not like to be there, I avoided it as much as possible; in fact the houses of the Catholics which I used generally resort, when I found Captain Flanagan resorted to them, I used to avoid going to, for fear of causing annoyance.

2733. I want now to direct your attention to a transaction with a non-elector that has been mentioned, Laurence Burke, do you know him?—I do.

2734. Did you see him at the time of the election?—No; I do not know when I saw him before the election, although he lived in the town. I might see him before the election, but I do not remember I did.

2735. Do you know anything about his not voting?—Not a ha'porth. It was said as a matter of course—it was reported—it was a public rumour that he was kept back by Major Knox's friends.

2736. But you do not know anything of his going away, or remaining in town?—No, not a ha'porth.

2737. James Devany, do you know anything of him?—I heard he left town. James Doolin of Chapel-lane—I forgot to mention his name—it escaped me here in the list. He was to vote for Major Knox, and he had been induced, I understood, by the opposite party to abstain from voting.

2738. But did he leave town?—No, not to my knowledge. I don't think he did. I don't believe he did.

2739. Do you know Mathew Feeney?—I do.

2740. Do you know anything of his not voting?—No, except from what I heard.

2741. From himself?—Well, from himself. The man was in a public employment, and he did not wish to vote at either side.

2742. James Keebles?—Captain Keebles.

2743. Do you know anything of his not voting?—He was not available then, I think.

2744. Do you know anything of John Kearns not voting?—John Kearns was in the Victoria Hotel. On the night of the day of the polling I saw him in the Victoria Hotel. The night I left Mrs. Hall's, that is the night of the day of the polling, on my return I went into the Victoria Hotel to see the police officers, to get an escort home, and I think I saw him in the Victoria Hotel that evening.

2745. Do you know anything of Henry Mulligan?—Nothing, except that I heard he was away previous to the election.

2746. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Were you in Sligo at any previous elections?—I was since 1832. I do not suppose there was ever an election in Sligo I was not present at.

2747. Was there not violence at the election when Sergeant Armstrong was returned?—Oh, there are mobs generally in Sligo at every election. There was not violence at every election. At the Right Hon. Mr. Wynne's election; at Mr. Somers' election; at Mr. Butt's; at Mr. Townley's; at Mr. Sadlier's election.

2748. The Chief Commissioner.—Do you remember so far back as that?—I took an active part sometimes in them.

2749. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Did that mob violence prevent electors from voting, as far as you could see?—Oh, I don't know; I could not say if they did or did not. Of course it had a tendency to intimidate them.

2750. As a matter of course it was for that purpose?—It was.

2751. Was there more or less of mob violence at the last election than at the election when Sergeant Armstrong succeeded. There was more of mob violence at the last election than ever I saw in Sligo.

2752. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Was that long continued before the election?—It was, months before.

2753. The Chief Commissioner.—Months before it?—I think so, for months before and after it. For my part I must say I was treated very kindly by them. I think I was the only Roman Catholic elector in Sligo that escaped from insult, or from having his house injured. They did nothing of the kind to me; there was not even a pane of glass broken in my house.

2754. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Could you give us some instances of the mob violence you witnessed at the last election?—Oh, Gethin's house was torn down; Burke's house; Devany's house; Crozier's house; Kearney's house; Sergeant Boyle's; M'Gowan's.

2755. Were these all voters?—All voters. The whole houses were so dilapidated that no being could live in them—the counters, the windows, the doors were torn down.

2756. The Chief Commissioner.—Were all these the houses of Roman Catholic electors who had voted for Major Knox?—Yes, who voted for Major Knox; their property was taken away—everything they could leave their hands on.

2757. Did that appear to be a deliberate attack on the Roman Catholic voters generally who exercised the franchise as they thought fit?—Not a doubt of it; it was after they had exercised the franchise it was done.

2758. After it was known how they did it?—After it was known how they did it.

2759. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Did the police or the military interfere to protect those people that were attacked?—Not as the people expected; there was a larger force in Sligo than I ever saw at any election, and a more useless set of men were never in it. They were standing, actually standing by when these dilapidations were committed, and they did not interfere.

2760. Were the mobs very numerous and very formidable?—Oh, indeed they were, and none so violent as those who were receiving the pay of Major Knox previously.

2761. Were these violent mobs armed with anything else besides sticks and stones?—I do not know. I could not say.

2762. Did you see sticks and stones?—Oh, sticks and stones.

2763. And did they use them very freely?—Yes, I saw them during my stay in the court-house, at Mrs. Hall's, the day of the poll. I looked out of the front window, and the street was in an awful state at the same time.

2764. This M'Guirk that did not vote, whom you represented would not vote, the man at Mrs. Hall's, was he informed of these mobs and the violence?—He was, and from what I could learn, his son, the rere of whose house comes up to the rere of the court-house or Mrs. Hall's, came up from the rere then, and by influence got in to tell his father the state of the case.

2765. Were there any particular leaders of these mobs, do you remember?—Well, I could not say that, the mob were fighting so much with each other.

2766. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Were they not under command at one side or the other?—[Not answered.]

2767. Was Grey one of a mob?—Sure it was I paid him. He swore yesterday he did not know he was of the mob, but no one in this court believed a word of that.

2768. I do not want your opinion on his evidence. Did you see him in mobs?—I did, to be sure.

2769. The Chief Commissioner.—From the experience you have had in elections, can you say are those mobs paid?—They would not turn on their heel without they got it. I have known them on occasions when they had not been paid, or were refused payment, to use the threat that they would go on the other side and fight for them.

2770. Then did these mobs that you have described as acting in this outrageous way at the last election, did they appear to you to be the ordinary organized paid mobs?—Always.

2771. And you say these people would not turn without being paid?—Certainly not.

2772. What is the usual pay of a mob per day?—Why, from what I could learn, from what I know myself, from experience—I know at Mr. Sadlier's election there was plenty of money, and going back so far as that as an instance—I may say they considered £100 a night very little for them.

2773. One hundred pounds a night to be divided amongst a mob?—Yes.

2774. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—How many would be in a mob for £100?—There might be a couple of hundred, or three hundred.

2775. The Chief Commissioner.—Do you consider a Sligo mob expects from 5*s.* to 7*s.* 6*d.* per man?—Indeed they do.

2776. Daily?—Daily, and £5 if they could get it.

2777. With regard to the getting up of those mobs, does a ringleader generally command twenty or so?—I suppose so.

2778. You suppose so?—Yes.

2779. Is he paid more than the rest?—I should think a little more sticks to him than any of the rest.

2780. That is if he has the payment of them?—Yes.

2781. He keeps some of it?—Yes.

2782. Can you identify any of these ringleaders at the last election?—Oh, as I said before, they were all so fighting with each other that I could not name one more than another. It is a very delicate thing to name any person.

2783. I don't want you to name anyone in particular?—Well, I am endeavouring to give you the whole truth as I know it, as far as I know.

2784. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Did the mob violence that you indicate was so strong at Sadlier's election, continue at subsequent-contested elections?—Oh, not so much.

2785. But it did continue, although less in degree. Was there mob violence at all elections from Sadlier's?—There was mob violence to some extent at all elections, but not to such an extent as this time, or at Sadlier's election.

2786. Was there mob violence to a considerable extent at Sergeant Armstrong's election?—No, there was not.

2787. But there was some?—There was some, and I believe in my heart, and I am here sworn on my oath, that there was more money expended at Sergeant Armstrong's election or after it than there was at Major Knox's that there has been a great deal of talk about. I have known myself persons to tell me that they received from £15 to £20 for voting for Sergeant Armstrong.

2788. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Do you recollect the names of any persons who told you that?—Yes.

2789. Give their names?—Stephen Hughes told me he got £20 for voting for Seregant Armstrong; he told me it was for his vote.

2790. The Chief Commissioner.—Give any other names you know?—John O'Beirne of Market-street, told me he got £15; John Reid told me he got £15; Thomas Devans told me he got £15; in fact I believe all the tenants of Colonel Tenison got £15, while others got £20.

2791. They got £15 only when the others got £20?—They were paid £15.

2792. Take up the register and state the names of any voters who told you they were bribed at the last election but one?—Sergeant Armstrong's election.

2793. Yes—any voter who told you he was bribed mention his name?—I don't mean to tell you that he told me he was bribed for voting; I mean to tell you he told me he had got the money after the election—[Reading from printed register]—Pat Barry of Abbey Quarter, I think I recollect hearing him examined at the petition at Carrick. He admitted then that he got £15 if I don't mistake.

2794. State any other names of persons who told you?—It would not be any use to tell you others who came up and voted on promises made to them?

2795. At present I only want the names of the men who told you they got money?—Who personally told me?

2796. Yes?—Pat Neelan told me; he did not tell me how much.

2797. He told you he got it, though?—He did; he will be able to tell you himself. I don't know of any other person that I have recollection of that told me.

2798. Now, mention the name of any person you heard got money at, say Armstrong's election?—That I heard?

2799. Yes?—I heard Andrew O'Beirne got money, Edward Gethins, Pat O'Brien—he is dead—John Hart, Mailcoach-road, Michael Hunt, John M'Grath. I know I heard a great number more merely by report.

2800. Did you hear of any person getting money on Mr. Macdonogh's side?—Yes, I did.

2801. Mention them?—I heard Samuel Gillmore.

2802. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Tell us those who told you they got money for voting for Mr. Macdonogh?—None.

2803. None told you?—None. I heard he got money.

2804. Only Samuel Gillmore?—That's all.

2805. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Try and remember any?—I cannot. I was not in the confidence of Mr. Macdonagh.

2806. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—You were supposed to be on Sergeant Armstrong's side?—I was always on the Liberal side until Major Knox's time, and would perhaps to-morrow. Unless the Sergeant was in the field, there is no man I would vote for before Major Knox.

2807. The Chief Commissioner.—Did any people at this election apply to you—any voters—to get them a share of the money that was supposed to be going?—No; oh, yes, in a passing jest they might say to me—"I know you can do us a good deal of service—do what you can for us."

2808. About how many of the electors spoke to you in that way?—You mean as a jest—at least two dozen, but for all that I have not the slightest doubt if I handed it to them they would pocket it.

2809. How many of the electors do you say spoke to you in that way?—I could not name them. I could not number more than twenty, occasionally meeting them in the street.

2810. I ask you did more than twenty-five electors apply to you in that way?—I would not say they did.

2811. How many?—Perhaps a few acquaintances I had of my own, passing me a jest, would ask me. They knew I was in the confidence of Major Knox—in his employment—and they thought I could do them a service, and in fact I would if I could.

2812. You would get money for them if you could?—I would.

2813. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—But except the £5 you say you never got any money?—Never a shilling.

2814. Do you know of any of Major Knox's mob changing sides in consequence of their not being paid money?—[Not answered.]

2815. For instance, did Grey join Captain Flanagan's mob?—Of course he did, and I know there was a lot of the mob, fifty or sixty fellows in Pound-street, who alleged that they had a claim on Major Knox, and were rendering him the greatest service, and on the evening of the election a few days after they all turned over against him; and I saw they were the most violent of the whole mob, these parties that were getting the money of Major Knox.

2816. You told us with respect to certain voters, and of a rumour that they must have been bribed, did these men change in the same way, or was there any other reason for it, these mobsmen?—Of course there were some voters amongst them, and I speak of them as mobsmen.

2817. Was it because Major Knox did not pay them, or stopped paying them, or how?—I cannot say as to that. I had no knowledge of paying or anything of the kind. But the fact is, I told Major Knox, eighteen months previous to his election, that he would be sold by those very parties, and when the petition was over at Carrick Major Knox said he regretted he did not take my advice in time, I knowing them too well.

2818. Was it in fact a strike for wages?—To be sure it was; and the object Major Knox had, he said it was necessary to have these to counteract the violence of the opposite party.

2819. With respect to Clancy, at what time of the evening did he leave Mrs. Hall's?—Is it the Clancy that did not vote? he was not there at all; he was not in Mrs. Hall's at all; he was not in Sligo.

2820. I thought you said you saw him in some yard?—The polling was on Thursday, the 19th, if I don't mistake; and I think he left on the Tuesday night previous.

2821. You stated you saw him putting on an overcoat?—I think I saw him going on Tuesday night previous, by the night mail, which leaves at half-past eight.

2822. Where did you first see him?—I was sitting in my own house in George's-street, as you pass to the railway station; some of my family were at the door, and they saw Clancy, with two or three others, passing by; they came and told me, and it occurred to me, or I suspected, that Clancy was leaving town; in order to be certain of that, I went up to the railway station, and I met his brother outside; in a few minutes I passed in and went into the water closet; I remained there for some time, and before I left I saw Clancy and the other coming into the yard of the water closet; I did not come out, I remained where I was, and watched the whole proceeding that went on, and I am satisfied he left town for the purpose of not voting.

2823. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—With respect to mob violence, are you aware of any threatening language of any sort having been used to intimidate—I mean used on Captain Flanagan's side, by any of his party?—I am not; I could not swear that they had used threatening language, not to my own knowledge, I could not say; I do not think I was threatened myself.

2824. Have you heard of any threatening language being made use of by any person acting for Captain Flanagan?—No, I cannot say; I have no recollection myself; some foolish expressions might be made use of by drunken men, or the like of that—that is all; there was an allusion made on yesterday by Grey to £2—I am anxious to have that explained.

2825. Certainly; explain it?—It is due, I think, to myself.

2826. Explain anything that affects yourself in the evidence given yesterday?—I mentioned that I gave him the £3; the Major said, "Boys, see Doherty in the evening, he will give you the price of a drink," or something to that effect. A man whose name, as well as I can recollect, was Hugh Gallagher, a non-voter, a non-elector, said, "If you give the money to this fellow we will never see a shilling of it; there are four, or five, or six of us who never get a shilling. I will tell you what you will do: keep some of it for us; don't give him the whole of it." So when I got the £5 note, I put £2 into my pocket, and gave £3 to Grey; Mulligan was present, and I said, "Mulligan, you are to get none of this," although a non-elector, for previous to the revision he was not on the register at all. "There is a direct order from the Major that no elector shall receive any portion of this." "Oh," says he, "I don't want it all." The next day I met a man named Michael Mulligan, and I asked him, and he mentioned the names of Henry Gallagher, Michael Gallagher, Denis Cullen, and a man named Garvey; and he said all these fellows should get a drink. "If that is the case," I said, "here is the £2; give it to them in drink or anything else." I gave Michael Mulligan the £2, and that is all the money, public or private, in connexion with the election, that I ever saw from Major Knox or anyone else.

2827. Had you any communication with Major Knox with respect to the £2?—Nothing more than that he gave me £5 to hand to them.

2828. The Chief Commissioner.—Did any money pass through your hands at the previous election; Sergeant Armstrong's election?—Nothing; I never received a shilling, as much as would buy a halfpenny worth of tobacco.

2829. Or did you give money to any other people?—Never.

2830. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Had you ever anything to do with mobs?—When not an elector, I very often took an active part, but I never was paid for it, I always came off worst.

2831. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Were your companions paid—those in the mobs along with you?—To be sure they were: I must say they were paid, and I must call them companions when I associated with them.

[The witness withdrew.]

Peter Harrison sworn and examined.

2832. The Chief Commissioner.—You are a voter for the borough of Sligo?—Yes.

2833. Did you vote at the last election?—No, I did not.

2834. Where were you on the day of polling?—I was in Dublin.

2835. At whose house were you in Dublin?—I think it was at a man's named Hughes.

SECOND DAY.
October 6.
Peter Harrison.

2836. What street?—I think in Queen-street.

2837. When did you leave Sligo?—Well, I think it was six or seven days before the election.

2838. The election was on Thursday, the 19th of November?—Yes.

2839. On what day of the week did you leave Sligo?—I can't remember the day of the week; I was either five or six days out of it on the day of the election, but I cannot recollect the very day.

2840. How did you leave Sligo?—I went by the railway.

2841. From the terminus here?—No, from Colooney.

2842. Did you drive out to Colooney on an outside car?—Yes; there was a car of Mr. Williams's going to Colooney on his own business, and two of his boys; I went down on the quay before this occurred, and some of the quay fellows came up to me, and said if I would not vote on the right side the head would be knocked off me; so that I thought it well to get ready and go with those men on the car; I am working for Mr. Williams for the last thirty or thirty-five years; I am forty years in another man's employment in this town.

2843. You are in Mr. Williams's employment?—Yes, and Mr. Anderson's; those are the two employments I had—forty-four years with Anderson.

2844. What are you?—A quay porter.

2845. Did you know where to go to in Dublin when you went up there?—No.

2846. Did you tell anyone you were going to Dublin?—Mr. Williams told me nothing at all—not a word; his two young men were along with me on the car, and they paid the fair in Colooney, whatever it was; I did not pay it.

2847. Two young men of Mr. Williams's, your employer, were on the car with you?—Yes.

2848. What are their names?—Mr. Acheson is one, and the other was Mr. Cloughery; he had business going to Boy, and Acheson had business going to Colooney, and I came with him.

2849. What is Acheson's Christian name?—George.

2850. And the other—Mr. Cloughery's?—I can't tell what is his Christian name.

2851. What hour was it when you left Sligo?—About seven o'clock, in the dark; I dare not go earlier; if I was seen I would not be safe, and if I did not go that night, you know I might lose my life the next day.

2853. About what time did you tell Mr. Williams or Mr. Acheson you wanted to go to Colooney?—They told me they were going; I told them I wanted to leave the town.

2854. When did you tell them that?—The very time I was going; for if I was afraid to stop in town during the election, that I would be destroyed; for if I did stop I would have voted for Major Knox; then if I voted for him, I would lose my life on account of it, and I went very near losing it as it was.

2855. How long was it before the cart started that you told Mr. Williams that you wanted to go out of town?—I did not tell Williams anything at all; it was more than an hour or two before the car started.

2856. Was it a covered car?—No, it was not; it was a side car.

2857. These two gentlemen were with you to Colooney?—They were; one of them was with me to Boyle; I think he belongs to Boyle, I am not quite sure; I think his family are from that side; I am not sure.

2858. Did Acheson drive back on the car from Colooney?—He came home on his own business.

2859. Did you know the car was going to Colooney?—I did; he told me he was going to Colooney.

2860. I want to know why you did not take your passage to Colooney from the railway station here?—Because it might be known I was leaving, and I might be murdered before I got away.

2861. Did you tell Mr. Acheson that?—Mr. Acheson knew it himself as well as me, and so did the whole of them.

2862. Did you tell him that?—No, I did not.

2863. How much money did you bring with you to Dublin?—I did not bring much money to Dublin with me at all; I had just as much as paid my way back, and I came back the whole way on my own account; the night after the election I came into town; I was dragged out of my house, kicked out of my house, my blood was running, there were large pools of blood on it, and I was three weeks in the Infirmary after the beating I got.

2864. Tell everything that happened to you when you came home? Did you come home by rail?—I did.

2865. To Sligo?—To Sligo.

2866. How soon after arriving were you assaulted?—About half-past ten I came, and when I went to my house and saw nobody there, the windows and the door were all broke down by Flanagan's mob, I went in, thinking I might see some of my family in the house, and searched the house all round, but could not see any of them; there were five beds stripped, and everything in the house was taken away that they could carry away; I came downstairs and called to the girl next door to get me a candle; I gave her the price of a candle, and she went in to her master's house to get me one, but she would not be let bring it into me, that man that lived the next door to me; very well, all right then, I came down to the kitchen, I hunted about; I had two coats on me, and I took one of them off and hung it up, and kept the other on; I was going about the kitchen, and did not know what to do, not knowing but my family were all killed; I walked about; there was a gas lamp one side of the door, opposite the street; the front windows were out, and the door was open, and the gaslight played on the door and gave me light, and I saw a man coming in in the door; when he saw me coming to meet him he turned his back to me, but I knew him; I am myself a sober man, a teetotaller for twenty-nine years, and I could not be deceived in him; and with the light of the gas flame I knew him; just as I passed by him he slipped his hand into the collar of my coat and caught a hard hold of me; I was just on the step at the threshold of the doorway, being out on the flags on the street, and he gave me two or three swings, and the third put me out on the flags and knocked me down; and then, the very minute they got me out, there was 100 of them there; everyone was vieing who would give me the first kick or thump; they knocked me down in the channel, and kicked till I was nearly dead; I then came to myself again, and they kicked me again; they gave me three kicks here (on the forehead), and I was bleeding, and every bit of me was all black; I had on a frieze coat, and only it got stiff and hard with the dirt and water, when I was knocked down in the channel, I would not live ten minutes from all the kicks I got; then there was a shout raised, and everyone of the neighbours, both decent and indecent, closed their doors, and not one came to my relief, my neighbours next door, up and down, but not one came to relieve me; there was a woman then just got out of bed; she came over, she thought it was a friend of hers, and she threw herself on the top of me, and then all was right; and when I came to again they gave me three times as much, until another woman cried out to leave the breath in me; so the people began to gather, a few soldiers were coming up then; there were no police to relieve me, and when they saw not the police but the soldiers, they walked away; and these very women who saved me, when they came here to give evidence, they dare not say one word on my behalf in this court house, they were too much afraid; when the mob ran away, I went over to a man named Woods, a baker; I was trembling with my blood, and wet and cold, and I asked him would he let me in through the back door to the bakehouse till morning; he said if I was to die he would not let me in; I went upstairs again, took off the wet coat I had with me, and drew another working coat on me, and lay down and slept till half-past eight o'clock; in the morning there come in one of the same mob, and called me down to the kitchen; I did not know the man; my nose was bleeding, and I was worse in the back; and I said "I do not know you; who are you?" "I am John Hart," said he. "Well, If you are you don't want me down there," said I. "You must come down," says he. "No," said I, "I won't go down." "Well," said he, "if you don't I will come up." "Well," said I, "if you do I will knock your brains out." The lobby was full of stones, where they fired them in the previous evening; I lifted a stone; then he came upstairs. "Well," I said, "I will never kill a man." I could have struck him with a stone; he came up with a gate before him, and another man came up after him; I ran into my own room and I bolted that room, and I had a bolt on it with a staple; they put the prong of the grate between the door and the jam, and burst the bolt, and the two came in. "Hould him," said one, "till I search his pockets." "Very good." One of them then held my hand, the other searched my pockets; they got no money; they thought I had money with me from Dublin. I went down; other parties were below in the kitchen knocking down the dresser and smashing all the things—you never saw the kitchen in such a state. Shortly after the police came in; they brought me away to the Infirmary, so that I suffered well by the election; I lost a great deal of blood, and I lost all.

2867. Was it on Friday you came home?—The day after the polling? No, in the evening.

2868. On the 20th?—I came home on the 21st; I was brought to the Infirmary.

2869. Was the place you stopped in in Dublin at Hughes, 23, Queen-street?—I think so.

2870. How did you know you were to go there?—Well, I got a card and gave it to the cabman.

2871. Who did you get the card from?—I do not know who it was; I do not know which of them gave me the card who were along with me.

2872. Who were along with you?—Two men were there and another man from Boyle.

2873. But either of the two persons who left Sligo with you—either Mr. M'Cloughery or Acheson gave you the card?—Either one or the other.

2874. Mr. Hughes' house was not a tavern—it was a private house?—A private house.

2875. Did you give him the card?—No, I gave it to a little girl about eight years of age that came to the door.

2876. What was written on that card?—I could not tell what was written on the card.

2877. Was there any writing on it beside the name?—No, I did not see any writing on it at all.

2878. Did you pay Hughes anything for the time you stopped there?—No, but I promised to send the mistress a lot of potatoes—they were dear at the time—when I came home, but I was in the Infirmary before I knew where I was.

2879. You did not send the potatoes?—No, but I will send them to her.

2880. Did you ever see Mr. William Hughes before?—No.

2881. Was it a lodging-house?—I think so.

2882. Were there other people lodging there besides yourself?—Yes, there were people upstairs that did not belong to the house.

2883. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Did they ask you to pay anything when you were going away?—I went away unawares of them; I knew my house was wrecked; I knew all was gone; I could not rest; I went away unknown to them; I went up in the course of the day to the railway station, and heard the time the railway would be going; I just walked over, paid my passage out of my own pocket, and came home. That is the way I got home, and it was the dear home to me.

2884. The Chief Commissioner.—Did anyone give you any money to go away?—No, not a penny I got; but I got 15*s.* from these two young gentlemen—5*s.* and 10*s.*

2885. That was to pay your fare to Dublin?—Yes, to pay my fare to Dublin.

2886. And those two young men that gave it to you were M'Cloughery and Acheson?—Yes, they had no more about them. If they had they would have given it to me for they knew they were sure of getting it back again.

2887. Was that all the money you went to Dublin with?—That is all.

2888. Did you pay back that 15*s.* since?—Yes, I got a deal more, for I work for him. I do a good deal of business.

2889. Do you mean to say that was stopped out of your wages?—I do not know whether it is stopped yet or not. It is every twelve months I settle with him.

2890. Do you know whether it is stopped or not?—I could not swear to that.

2891. After you came home did you get any money at all from Mr. Williams?—He never gave me a pound or a shilling on account of that business at all.

2892. Nor from anybody else?—No, except what I got as my own earnings.

2893. Was the 15*s.* all you had going up to Dublin?—This was all, except some little money of my own.

2894. How much money had you?—Not much; I had 3*s.* after coming home.

2895. Do you know what is the third class fare from Dublin to Sligo?—I do, well—11*s.* 4*d.*

2896. Do you remember what it is from Colooney to Dublin?—No, I do not.

2897. You say you had 3*s.* coming home?—Yes.

2898. Did you expect anything for going away?—I did not expect anything, nor never asked it.

2899. Did you vote at the previous election of Mr. Macdonogh and Sergeant Armstrong?—No, I did not.

2900. Was this the first time you had the franchise?—No, I voted for Sadlier and Somers, and did not get a shilling from them.

2901. You did not vote at the election between Mr. Macdonagh or Sergeant Armstrong?—No, I did not. Had you the franchise then?—No. At the last election I would have gone with Macdonogh against Tennison, but Mr. Tennison did not oppose him. He was going to assist him, but he gave up.

2902. Do you swear positively that you did not go away to Dublin with any hope of getting rewarded?—I did not go away with any hope of reward from Major Knox. I never spoke a word to him or to Captain Flanagan either. I merely went away to save myself. I told the mob I would not vote for either of them, but that if I did it would be for Major Knox.

2903. Do you swear you went away from fear of violence from the mob?—I do, for I knew what I would get, for I had no help. What would one man be amongst a whole lot of them.

2904. What family had you in your house?—My wife, a girl, and a boy.

2905. What became of them?—They went to the country and were near being killed there also. They were near knocking down the house on the top of them.

2906. Mr. Commissioner Bruce—Are they in Sligo now?—The boy is in Sligo now, but the daughter is away for her health.

2907. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—What is the Christian name of the son?—Peter.

2908. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—How old is he?—My boy is Peter and my daughter is Maryanne; she is in Ballymore now for the good of her health, in consequence of a fright she got in the country.

2909. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—After that assault you say was made upon you, you were three weeks in the Infirmary?—Yes.

2910. What is the name of the doctor that attended you?—Dr. Little. He was examined at the assizes.

SECOND DAY.
October 6.
Peter Harrison.

2911. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Do you know any of the mob that beat you?—I do not know them very well, but Grey is the man who dragged me out of my own house, and the rest, you know, assisted him. Only I was strong I would not live two days after the beating I got. I got a mortal beating; I never could put my hand back since. I am not able to straighten my arms yet. The velvet collar of my coat they kicked off. They kicked me on the chest. The hair of my head they kicked off.

2912. Do you say that Acheson was the first man you told of your intention to go up to Dublin or away from Sligo?—Yes, I told them I must go.

2913. Did you go to Acheson to tell him you were going away, or did he come to you and say you had better go away?—No; I am continually going into the shop. I am working for that shop. They were saying they were going to Colooney, and I told him I would sooner go than be here. If I had the good fortune to stop two or three days more away, I would be all right, but I could not stop; I was uneasy. I knew everything was wrong. I knew my children were killed.

2914. And when you told him you were going away did he suggest to you to go to Dublin?—He told me I might go as far as Colooney, and that I had a better chance to take train from Colooney than from Sligo.

2915. Was it then that Acheson offered the 10*s.*—did he offer to lend the 10*s.* then?—No; it was in Colooney they gave me all the money they had about them.

2916. Was there anything mentioned by Acheson to you about your travelling expenses before you got to Colooney?—No; not a word. He told me that would do me.

2917. Did he ask you how you intended to pay your railway fare up and down—did he know you had not much money?—He knew very well that I would not want much money, because I was a teetotaller. He knew I would not spend much; I did not spend 2*d.* in Dublin.

2918. Did you get any money in Dublin?—Not a farthing, on my oath; nor did I ask anyone for it, for I had no one to ask it from—not one.

Michael Rooney sworn and examined.

Michael Rooney.

2919. The Chief Commissioner.—You live in Coruagh?—Yes.

2920. Whom did you vote for at the last election?—For Captain Flanagan.

2921. Had you promised Major Knox at any time, or any of his party, to vote for him?—He came to me early in February, and there was no other candidate in the field; and at that time I made him a promise, there was no other candidate but himself.

2922. Did you ever get any money?—I got £1 from James Grey.

2923. Did you get any other money—now tell the truth?—I did.

2924. Tell the truth now?—Of course I will.

2925. Tell the whole truth?—Previous to that I heard he was a liberal man in giving money to people back and forward, and I was told if I wrote to him he would send me some money. So I did; and I wrote to his address—Major Knox.

2926. To Dublin?—Yes.

2927. Go on now; tell the whole truth?—And a fortnight or so elapsed before I got an answer, and then I got a cheque with no name to it for £12.

2928. Did you cash that cheque?—I did.

2929. Where did you get the money?—In the Ulster Bank, in Sligo.

2930. Whose name was to the cheque?—Well, I could see no one's name, only not to exceed £12 on it. It was a small cheque.

2931. Was it a cheque or a bank draft?—A cheque.

2932. Was it signed by anyone?—No; I did not see any signature to it. I put my name on the back of it, and then got the money.

2933. You got £12 in the Ulster Bank?—I did.

2934. Was there any letter accompanying that cheque or draft?—There was a blank piece of paper folded round the cheque.

2935. What month was that letter sent to you?—In the latter end of February.

2936. The February before the election?—Yes; on the 20th of the month.

2937. And you put your name on the back of the cheque?—I did.

2938. And got £12?—I did.

2939. You say that was on the 20th of February?—Something about that day, or the end of the month.

2940. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Was it at the Ulster Bank you cashed it?—It was.

2941. Before you got that £12, what was in the letter you wrote?—I wrote that I was in difficulties—that I did not see him when he was in Sligo—I believe he was in Sligo before that, but I did not see him—and that I would be obliged if he would send me that, and I would pay him again. I wrote for £15 and I got but £12. I asked for £12 or £14; he did not send for about three weeks; I could not see his name to the letter.

2942. Do you remember what colour was the cheque?—Reddish.

2943. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—A red paper?—Yes, I think it was red; not the paper, but the letters were red.

2944. And was the paper white?—It was between red and green.

2945. The Chief Commissioner.—How long before you got the cheque was it that you had sent the letter to Major Knox?—It was about three weeks.

2946. Did you show that cheque to anyone before cashing it at the bank?—Not one.

2947. Did you ever tell this before you told it to-day to anyone?—No, I did not, except my misses.

2948. Did Thomas Brennan, for example, ever know of this?—I could not say.

2949. I mean from you?—No.

2950. At the time you got this £12, had you got any money from Brennan?—No, not a shilling I ever got from him or from any other one except the £1 from Grey. There were races here, and in James-street he met me. I said, "You are a bad fellow not to give a treat, and you having plenty of money." He handed me £1. That is all the money ever I got.

2951. What did you do with that £12—I bought seed, oats, and wheat with it, and sowed my land.

2952. Did you yourself, with your own hand, write the letter?—I did.

2953. And direct the letter?—I did.

2954. Where did you get the address of Major Knox from?—I got it in town from some of the boys; I forget whom.

2955. Did you yourself post the letter to Major Knox?—I did.

2956. Have you got the envelope that enclosed the £12?—No.

2957. What became of it?—I mislaid it; I could not keep it. I did not mind it. It had both the Dublin mark and the Sligo mark on it.

2958. You say you never told this story to anyone?—No, except my misses.

2959. Were you subpœned for the trial of the petition at Carrick?—No.

2960. Were you not—I mean the trial before Judge Keogh at Carrick?—No.

2961. Do you know of anyone else having got any money while the election was going on—while the canvassing was going on?—Oh, I heard of people, but I do not know of any man getting money.

2962. Did you vote at the election before?—I did.

2963. Whom did you vote for?—For Sergeant

Armstrong. I have always voted for the liberal party for thirty years.

2964. Did you get anything at the previous election—whether before or after that election did anyone give you any money—you are on your oath now and you must tell the truth?—Well, I did; but not money—in value and money.

2965. Was it before or after the polling?—It was four or five months after.

2966. Who gave it to you?—One Chrystal, in the town here.

2967. What is his Christian name?—I cannot say; I think it is Pat.

2968. What was he, or is he here still?—I think he is.

2969. What did he give you?—He gave me to the amount, between value and cash, of £20.

2970. What value did he give you?—He gave me some bran and some seeds for cattle; an order for it.

2971. An order on whom—what shop did you get it at?—At Mr. Keighron's.

2972. Did he give you a written order?—Sometimes he would, but I continued for six or seven——

2973. Then you got it from time to time?—Yes.

2974. How much money did he give you?—About £9 or £10, and the balance in value up to £20.

2975. How did you know this man was to give the value and money at that election?—He said he could not give any money, and I said I was badly off. I used to deal there off and on, and I went and spoke to him, and he gave me what I wanted.

2976. Do you mean to say that he gave you this as a loan—is that what you mean to convey to the Court?—It was.

2977. Was this money and value given to you after the election?—It was.

2978. Had he given you anything except after the election?—I often had transactions with Mr. Keighron. I was carrier for the railway, and I got accommodation and anything I wanted.

2979. Did you ever pay that £20 since to anybody?—I paid part of it.

2980. How much?—A few bags of oats I brought in, and the next season I would give him more.

2981. How long ago was that—Last season.

2982. But Chrystal's £9—you were paid that?—No.

2983. Now I will bring you down to this election. When did you make up your mind to vote for Captain Flanagan?—I always voted for the liberal party, but there was no one of them in the field when I made the promise to him.

2984. Did you promise Major Knox personally?—When he was canvassing he came past my door, and asked me to vote for him. I said, as he was accompanied by all my friends, I would be in the field along with him, and would not be worse than another.

2985. Did you get any money after the last election?—No, nor anything else—not to the weight of a penny.

2986. Did you get any money before the election began?—No, as I am a sinner, nothing but the £19 mentioned; and I was not along with the mob, or anything else. I did not take any active part in either side, only that I voted when it came to my turn.

2987. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—When did the Major canvass you?—It was, I think, two or three months before the election.

2988. It must be more. That was a long time after you wrote for the £15. You say you got the £12 in February—that was seven or eight months before the election?—He was down here then and was here afterwards again. He used to canvass the town, and did not go outside it till three or four months before the election.

2989. Did he canvass you more than once?—No.

2990. Was there anyone with him when he did convass you?—No one—only Mr. Phibbs and Doherty.

2991. Were they both with him?—They were on the car.

2992. Did you say anything to Major Knox, when he canvassed you, about this £12 that he had sent you?—No; nor did he. He only canvassed—did not delay a moment.

2993. He asked you to vote for him?—He asked my vote. I said, "I am glad to see you accompanied by neighbours, and I will be along with them." He did not come into the house at all, but remained on the road outside.

2994. Was that before Captain Flanagan was in the field?—It was.

2995. I would like to get from you the address you put on the letter you sent to Major Knox?—Well, I cannot remember it.

2996. Just try now and say what was written on the back of it?—I cannot; I do not remember it—but his residence is well known.

2997. Can you not tell the address?—I forget it.

2998. For you said something about a captain?—Laurence Knox was on it, and the letter I got was directed to myself.

2999. How soon after you wrote did it come?—About three weeks; it might be a month. It was long after the fair of Carricknegat, and that is in February.

3000. Did they make any inquiry at the Ulster Bank about the cheque—I suppose you do not keep an account there?—No, they did not. I was a carrier there, bringing my goods, and they knew me.

3001. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Who told you how to direct the letter to Major Knox?—It was one of the boys, perhaps, in the town.

3002. Do you remember the name of the person who told you?—No, I do not.

3003. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—With regard to this man Chrystal, and what you said about the £20 in money and value—how was it you came to talk of £20 exactly, was not that paid for your vote for Sergeant Armstrong?—No, I do not consider so.

3004. Do you swear that if you had voted for Mr. Macdonagh, Chrystal would have paid that £20 to you?—I could not say.

3005. Do you think he would?—I could not say, for I often had a transaction with Keighron before.

3006. But had you any transaction with Chrystal before?—Well, I had.

3007. What transaction was that?—He deals in eggs, and I used to draw for him from the quays backwards and forwards.

3008. How often used you draw for him?—Several times.

3009. What made you go to him to ask for £20—come now?—What made I?

3010. Yes?—I said I was embarrassed, and I said if he lent it to me, or got it for me—that I heard——

3011. The Chief Commissioner.—You heard what?—That he could oblige a man with some money, and that if he could oblige me I would be obliged to him.

3012. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Who told you he could oblige a man with some money?—I was told it.

3013. Who told it to you?—I do not remember.

3014. Try and recollect. You must tell?—I cannot remember.

3015. The Chief Commissioner.—Who told you the money was going at Chrystal's for the election?—Some of the boys that were in the mob.

3016. Told you that the money was going at Chrystal's for the election?—No, I told them how I stood and they said if you speak to him, he will send for you.

3017. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Do you say some of the boys in the mob?—Yes.

3018. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—That is some of the boys of Sergeant Armstrong's mob?—There was a mob at that time.

3019. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Did they tell you at the same time that they got money themselves?—No, but they had some money for their accommodation—they had some money I suppose.

3020. The Chief Commissioner.—Did anyone else get £20 at Chrystal's beside you?—No, not in my time.

SECOND DAY.

October 6.

Michael Rooney.

3021. Before that did anyone tell you he got £20 at Chrystal's?—No; there was some people talked of £15.

3022. Was that for Colonel Tennison's voters?—That is what I heard outside the town where they lived, that they got £15.

3023. At Chrystal's?—No.

3024. Where?—I could not say.

3025. I want to know how you were directed to get £20 at Chrystal's?—I told you already it was some of the boys that were in the mob said to call—they did not mention any sum of money to me—and I might be assisted too, and got out of difficulties.

3026. Did you hear of anyone else get £20?—No, I did not; I heard report of it, that is all.

3027. Who?—I think it was John Jennings.

3028. Did you hear he got £20 or £15?—£20.

3029. Well, who else?—I do not remember any other person, except to hear of it.

3030. How do you know that John Jennings got it?—He told me—he told me he got it.

3031. Did he tell you he got it before or after you got it?—About the same time.

3032. Where did he tell you he got it?—From Chrystal, I believe.

3033. You now remember John Jennings. Now, think of somebody else?—I do not remember. He is the only voter near me there—he lives by my place.

3034. Where does he live?—Above my own place.

3035. Is he a Comaghee voter?—He is.

3036. Do you know any other voter at Comaghee, who voted for Sergeant Armstrong, and who got money?—No.

3037. Did they all vote for the Sergeant—the Comaghee boys?—They did, except Colonel Barrett. There are not many in it.

3038. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—When Jennings told you he got £20, did you not hear that others got it?—No, but we heard some of the tenants on the old road got money—£15.

3039. The Chief Commissioner.—Who are they?—Colonel Tennison's tenants.

3040. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—He told you they got £15?—Yes.

3041. The Chief Commissioner.—Where?—I could not say; some where in town.

3042. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Did you understand they got the £15 at the same place that he got the £20?—Well, I think not.

3043. And when you heard that you said, "I may as well have £20 as well as you. I voted for the Sergeant as well as you?"—No; I think I got it before him. [The witness withdrew.]

3044. Did you not hear of anybody else by name who got £20?—No, I did not.

3045. The Chief Commissioner.—Was it you told Jennings to go to Cherry?—No, it was not.

3046. Did he know it without you?—I do not know; he is a watchman, and up at night; I did not see him.

Henry Mulligan sworn and examined.

Henry Mulligan.

3047. The Chief Commissioner.—Are you an elector?—I am.

3048. Did you vote at the last election?—No.

3049. On the polling day where were you?—In Dublin.

3050. What are you by trade?—A cooper.

3054. How did you go from Sligo to Dublin?—By railway.

3055. From what station?—From the Sligo station.

3056. On what day did you go?—The Friday before the election.

3057. The Friday in the week before the election?—Yes.

3058. What train did you go by?—The morning train, a quarter-past six.

3059. Before this election what party had you supported in the borough of Sligo?—The Conservative party; I voted always with my landlord.

3060. Who is he?—Mr. Wynne.

3061. You have been a tenant of his?—Yes.

3062. I suppose you are a Roman Catholic?—I am.

3063. Did you vote for Mr. Macdonogh?—I did.

3064. And voted for the Right Hon. M. Wynne whenever he stood?—I did.

3065. Did many speak to you about leaving town on the occasion of the last election?—Not a single one ever spoke to me; I went of my own accord; I would have voted for them, too, but for the Church question, and I went up to my son to avoid voting; for months before the election I said I would not vote, and I told both candidates so.

3066. You tell me you would vote with your landlord except for the Church question?—Exactly.

3067. Did anyone hold out any inducement to you to go to Dublin?—Not one.

3068. On either side?—Not one; nor no one knew it but my son; I told him what I would do, and that I would go until I liked to come back.

3069. Were you afraid of the violence of the people if you remained here and did not vote?—I knew very well if I remained that I perhaps should have to vote contrary to my inclinations.

3070. That is by force?—Yes—just so.

3071. Was your house attacked?—There were some panes broken, not many.

3072. There were only some panes broken?—Only some panes, some few panes.

3073. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Was that before you went away?—After.

3074. The Chief Commissioner.—I suppose it was known in the town you went?—I suppose so, a day or two after.

3075. You went openly from the Sligo station?—Yes.

3076. You say you remained in Dublin seven or eight weeks?—I did.

3077. Were you out of employment all that time?—I was, indeed.

3078. I suppose you had some one who minded your house at home?—We were not very busy at home.

3079. It was the slack time of the year?—It was the slack time of the year.

3080. Now, do you tell me on your oath that no party on either side held out any inducement to you to go away?—I can tell you on my oath that no party at either side interfered with me, nor I with them. I went of my own accord. I had nothing to do with any of them.

3081. And no one gave you any money?—Not a farthing, not a shilling, nor I never looked for it.

3082. Did you expect to be paid because you did not vote at the last election?—No.

3083. Did you get anything for voting at the previous election?—The previous election—some time after the election, a good while after. I never made any bargain, or anything of that sort. I always went with the party. There was a sum of £10 sent to the house to me. I never looked for it—never.

3084. Was that after you voting for Mr. Macdonogh?—Long after it.

3085. But it was after that election?—Yes.

3086. And before the canvassing for this election?—Oh yes, it was.

3087. Who brought the £10 to your house?—Well, he was a man named Rowlett.

3088. Is he a Sligo man?—He is.

3089. Does he live here?—He lives down in the town.

3090. What is he?—He is a clerk.

3091. In whose employment?—I think in Mr. Wynne's.

3092. Was it he brought the ten-pound note to your house?—It was.

3093. Did he give it into your own hand?—He did. I never expected it, nothing of the sort, nor looked after it.

3094. What did he say to you?—He said that was a present sent to me.

3095. By whom?—I did not put the question, but I guessed who it was. He gave me to understand. I did not say anything about it.

3096. Did you understand that ten-pound note was given to you having regard to the election?—I did. I guessed it was from that quarter it came.

3097. Was it a new ten-pound Bank of Ireland note?—Well, I cannot say what Bank.

3098. But at all events you took it?—I did.

3099. Do you know anyone else that got £10 at that election?—No, not one; neither did I inquire or make myself in any way busy about it.

3100. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Did you hear?—No.

3101. You told us that you feared you would be forced to vote against your inclination?—Certainly, if I stopped.

3102. Was that in consequence of the mobs and the violence about the town?—Certainly.

3103. Were you canvassed for Captain Flanagan by anyone?—I was.

3104. By whom?—I was canvassed by himself. I told him that I had determined not to vote—that I would not vote against him.

3105. And by whom else?—I was canvassed by Major Knox, and I told him the same, that I had made up my mind not to vote, and I would not vote.

3106. But did anybody else canvass you on the other side? I want to know was there any pressure?—No pressure whatever.

3107. Not to vote?—Not to vote. They saw there was no use. I told them bluntly I would not vote, and they never came back again.

3108. They left you in peace?—They did.

3109. You say you left the Sligo station, was it by the night train?—No, by the morning train. The train that leaves at a quarter past six.

3110. Did you meet any people you knew going by the train?—Not one. All I met was a man going to Ballyshannon on business. He came into the carriage when I was at Boyle. He was not a Sligo man.

James Devany sworn and examined.

James Devany.

3111. The Chief Commissioner.—You are an elector of the borough of Sligo?—Yes.

3112. How long have you been an elector?—Some twenty years, in or about.

3113. Did you vote at the last election?—No; I did not.

3114. To what party had you belonged before the election?—I always voted with the liberal party up to the last.

3115. Where were you on the day of the polling?—Well, I left my own house about nine o'clock on the night before the polling, and I went to M'Grath's.

3116. What is M'Grath's house?—He in the same manner is one of the absentees that did not vote with either party. He lives in High-street. He has the police barrack convenient to his place, and it was just the safest quarter people could go to.

3117. What is his Christian name?—John.

3118. Were there any other voters there?—There were two more.

3119. Who were they?—Michael Hunt and Laurence Burke.

3120. That is four of you were there?—Four.

3121. What party had the other three belonged to before the last election?—I suppose the same party as myself.

3122. The liberal party?—I suppose so. I cannot speak generally, you know.

3123. How long did you remain at M'Grath's?—We remained in it that night—the night before the election—and we left there then and went to another place, and remained the next day during the polling.

3124. Where were you?—It is rather a delicate thing. They are people in business—females—and you would do me a service if you pass that by. If you press it ——

3125. We will not ask you for the present. Who suggested that you should go to M'Grath's?—It was my own suggestion. No one had anything to say to it.

3126. Do you mean to say that you and the other two electors met by accident at M'Grath's at the same time?—Laurence Burke—I sent down for him to his own house, and he and I walked down that way. I asked him to have a glass of wine, or something that way. I took wine myself at all events, and he came in with me, and we had a glass of wine there. The other two gentlemen were there before me, and we all remained there and did not leave.

3127. How did the whole four of you meet together without any previous arrangement?—There was not the slightest arrangement in it.

3128. Do you mean to tell me the four of you were there by accident?—They are two brothers-in-law, M'Grath and Hunt; they supposed they were in their own place; I had no notion of meeting them there at the time.

3129. At what hour did you leave there?—It was near ten o'clock—about a quarter to ten o'clock—at night.

3130. When you left your own house did you intend to stop away from it?—I did.

3131. Had you made up your mind not to vote?—I had; no—I promised Major Knox to vote.

3132. You had promised him to vote?—I did, distinctly.

3133. When did you promise him?—Well, I promised, I think, some three or four days before the election; but I think, too, six months before that.

3134. You knew the Major was opposed to the liberal party you had always supported?—Well, I will tell about. I had two friends of mine here from Ballysodare; they were going up to Dublin, to Dr. Wilde's. On going up to Dublin, a man I met introduced me to the Major. I never knew him before. He called at my house, but I was absent, away in Glasgow. We went up to Dublin to have the children's eyes examined and put under the care of Sir William Wilde. Major Knox was acquainted with him, and he wrote a note, and sent a man with me to the place. We did not see the Doctor then—he was not at home; but we saw Wilson, his acting man, who acts professionally for him, and we spoke to him, and he looked at the children, and gave me his opinion about them. The children remained in Dublin a considerable time, and the father paid every shilling for them. The Major never paid a shilling, nor anyone else, for them, but the father of the children. He is my father-in-law, Andy O'Hara.

3135. Was it because Major Knox sent his servant to Sir William Wilde's you made a promise to vote for him?—No; I did not imagine that I was wanted to vote for some time. After that we had a chat on the head of the election, and we talked it over, he told me he hoped he would be remunerated; and afterwards he called on me, but he did not see me.

3136. Did any money pass through your hands?—Money—not a shilling.

3137. Did you know of any money passing through

SECOND DAY.
October 6.
James Devany.

the hands of anyone who has been mentioned?—Not a shilling, to my knowledge.

3138. Were you afraid to vote for Major Knox from violence?—Well, I could not exactly say I was afraid, for I did not know how the town stood on the day of the election. I knew before that, for every day I walked through the town, backwards and forwards, and saw a good deal, one way or another; and on the day of the election they smashed my own house nearly to the ground.

3139. They smashed your house?—Yes, after the polling was over; I could not exactly tell you when, because I was not there, but the polling was over.

3140. Did you consider when you left your house that you were in danger if you voted for Major Knox?—Well, I did not consider the danger was so great as it really was, for it turned out by-and-by that it would be rather dangerous to vote for him.

3141. Were you afraid to stay in your own house?—Well, I was not; in one sense I was afraid: I knew if they left their hands on me they would bring me up against my will—that is the truth.

3142. Did the other three voters and yourself remain up all night?—No, we slept in Mr. M'Grath's that night.

3143. Was it not for the purpose of concealment you went the following day, the day of the polling, to the house, the name of which you are unwilling to mention?—It was; I found I could hardly remain; notwithstanding the great force of military and police, we could hardly remain without some violence being used towards us.

3144. Did the mob break into M'Grath's place during the day?—I heard so; I did not see them.

3145. How long did the four of you remain in the other house?—We remained up to about one o'clock at night.

3146. Where did you go to then?—I went to my own house, accompanied by Burke; I found it in a state that we could not live in it; it was in a desperate state; I met my wife and poor little children in a terrible way; I asked her "Is that the state of things?" She said, "Yes," and blamed me for leaving them in that terrible way. I said, "Can we live here?" She says, "No, we have nothing here." The covering of the bed, in fact, were all taken and carried away, and we had to go down to Burke's to get blankets, and carry them up to sleep in that night, one under and one over us; they did not leave a single pin's worth in the house that they did not take away; and, worse than all, when I came under Judge Keogh for compensation, I did not get half what would repair my house.

3147. Have you given all the reasons that induced you to leave your pay?—There were no reasons in it but what I have described to you; I have described them to you as near as my memory can bring me; I did not promise the party; I said I did vote; I think Mr. O'Connor was the last gentleman I saw the evening before the election, and I told him I would go up against him.

3148. You told him you would go up against him?—Yes I did, when I heard the state of the poll, and found that I was not required to remain where I was.

3149. Did any people come to you at M'Grath's?—There were people called, but I did not see any of them; it was after I left the locality.

3150. Did anyone come who was managing or conducting the election of Captain Flanagan or of Major Knox?—I heard that some of Captain Flanagan's party did come, and were looking for me and looking for Burke, and so on in that way.

3151. Was it your intention to go up and vote for Major Knox if the state of the poll required it?—I could not say for that; I was disposed myself.

3152. Were you disposed yourself?—I was, although I promised another gentleman I would not vote.

3153. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Who is that gentleman?—Well, his lordship. His lordship sent for me some days before the election.

3154. The bishop?—The bishop, Dr. Gillooly. He sent for me some four days before the election; or at least some parties requested me to go before him, and I did go; and there and then I had a long chat with him, and I told him my intentions—that I intended voting for the Major. He said, "Sure you will not do that." He took my hand and said, "My child, sure you won't do that?" catching me by the hand. I said, "Well, my lord, I won't vote against you." That is the word I said going out, so I did not vote.

3155. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—You recollect the election of Sergeant Armstrong?—I do.

3156. Did you get anything for voting for him?—Well, I could not say I got it for voting, I got £20; but I never applied, nor asked, nor looked for it; nor did I know of it until I was sent for.

3157. Who gave you the money?—A man named Chrystal gave me two ten pound notes—Bryan Chrystal.

3158. How soon after the election?—It must be more than eight months—six or eight months, as far as my memory serves me. I never knew he had anything of the sort in his possession for me. When he sent to my house to go to him I was away in Glasgow at the time he called. When I came home I was told he was inquiring for me. I went over, and he gave me two ten pound notes.

3159. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Was he a friend of Sergeant Armstrong's at the election?—I suppose he was, for he canvassed for him, I think.

3160. He canvassed for him?—He did. I know where he canvassed myself.

3161. Tell where he canvassed?—He canvassed a man named M'Goldrick—John M'Goldrick.

3162. The Chief Commissioner.—Do you know of anyone else getting £20 at the previous election?—Well, I think, Mr. Burke got the same—Laurence Burke.

3163. Did he tell you?—I cannot say—he did tell me so.

3164. He told you so?—He did.

3165. Do you know of anyone else getting £20?—Well, I do not know of any other one.

3166. I do not mean that you saw getting the money, but that you heard had got it?—Oh, I heard of several parties, but I have no memory now of who they were that got money. In fact, I believe the greater portion of them got money altogether at that time; I think so, if I be right.

3167. They got £20 a piece?—From fifteen to twenty pounds; it is a fact, I believe.

3168. The greater portion of the electors of Sligo?—I think that.

3169. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—That is, you mean the greater portion of those who voted for Sergeant Armstrong.

3170. Did you hear anything as regards money paid to those who voted for Mr. Macdonagh?—I heard something of those other people, but I could not say.

3171. You were not on that side?—No.

3172. Did you get any money at all this time?—No, I never got a shilling from any of them.

3173. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Was there any promise of money?—No. I never got a man to promise that he would give me money in any case.

3174. Do you mean at the previous election?—Never. I did not know Chrystal had it for me no more than you did when he sent for me.

3175. Where did Chrystal pay you the money?—In his own house, upstairs.

3176. He was not an elector?—He was an elector; whether he is one now or not.

3177. What is Chrystal?—He was in the butter business. I do not know if from the state of his health he is able to be in it. He is rather a delicate man.

3178. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—At Sergeant Armstrong's election were there mobs acting for him?—There were.

3179. Are you aware of any mobs, or persons in mobs getting money?—Well, I cannot say. I never was connected in that way, that I would know anything about that, I always kept partly by myself. I never mixed myself with them in that way.

3180. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Did you hear money was going at the last election, at either side?—On which side?

3181. On either side—what was the general report as to money?—Well, they were saying money was going on both sides. I know that some of the parties wanted to tamper with me and offered me money. I would not hear of it at all.

3182. On whose side?—On Captain Flanagan's side.

3183. Give the names of those parties?—Well, he was a stranger, the man that came particularly to me, and told me he would give me £20—told me he would give me £30—told me to take the names of other parties for getting it if I would talk to them.

3184. What were the names?—Young Tighe, young Donegan, young Rooney, three of the parties he said he would give money to, or get it for me.

3185. Do you know the stranger's name?—Well, I will think as much as I can—Lenihan was the name; he was a very active man for Captain Flanagan.

3186. What is the Christian name?—Well, I could not think of that. I did not ask the name although he came to me. I am informed he came ten or fifteen times to my house; I would not hear the man at all. I was always against it; I said I could not take it.

3187. Was Lenihan a Sligo man?—No. He is, if I be properly informed, an under agent of Captain Flanagan's.

3188. He came and said he would give you £20 or £30?—He said he would give me £20. I would not hear tell of it. He came again and said he would give £30. He came again, and said to name my own figure, and I would get it.

3189. You told him you would not take it?—In my house, days before the election, and up to the day of the election he was with me.

3190. He told you to put down the names of young Tighe, young Donegan, and young Rooney, was that to get them money?—No, but to bring them with me, and talk with them, and they would give me the money.

3191. To talk with them, what is the meaning of that?—That is, that often things would go by, they would give me the money.

3192. That you trust them, knowing them?—[Not answered.]

3193. Did you hear of any of your friends, or of any people you know getting money, or being offered money?—Well, no, not particularly. I never heard of any in particular—that is the only time that money was offered me—although James Tighe offered me money at another election—at Sadlier's election. He told me I could get money then. I said I could not think of taking the bribery oath, and take money; that was my answer to it, in James Clement's house.

3194. Try and recollect the name of any other person that got money?—I cannot tell exactly. I am giving my evidence very straight; take it as you like, I am giving you the truth of the matter.

3195. Are you quite sure that you can recollect nothing more?—Nothing than some general report that money was going on both sides; but I never saw it.

3196. The Chief Commissioner.—Did you see Lenihan in company with Captain Flanagan's supporters?—Well, I did not. He came unto me—he had another man with him named Conlan.

3197. What is his Christian name?—[Not answered.]

3198. What is Conlan—is he a bailiff or rent-warner?—No, he is not; he is a respectable man, I believe; a farmer like.

3199. Did you know Conlan before that day?—I did.

3200. What is his Christian name?—I could not tell; he is a farmer at Geevagh.

3201. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Is he an old or a young man?—He is an elderly man, over fifty.

3202. The Chief Commissioner.—You say you saw Lenihan in company with him?—He accompanied Lenihan into my house.

3203. Did you see Lenihan in company with Captain Flanagan's supporters?—I did not; but Lenihan told me himself that he had been with different parties through the town; that he was with John Hart and some others that felt aggrieved, as at the last election they got no money, and he was going to have them righted, and so on.

3204. John Hart was one of the men who felt aggrieved?—Yes.

3205. Had he voted for the liberal party at the last election?—I could not say; I suppose he did.

3206. Who else were the aggrieved men?—Well, there was Moran and Hunt and M'Grath.

3207. The man in whose house you were?—Yes.

3208. And they voted for the liberal party at the last election?—They did, I think.

3209. Anyone else?—Thady Kilgannon was one of the aggrieved parties; he did not get money.

3210. Was he looking for money?—I do not know how that was——

3211. Was he looking for money?—I heard so.

3212. Did Lenihan give you to understand that he was going to make it all right with these people?—He did. He told me he saw them, and that everything would be all right.

3213. Were these men refusing to vote for the liberal party?—They were.

3214. Unless they got the money they thought was due to them for the previous election?—I think they were; of course they will speak for themselves; you will have them before you.

3215. That is what you understood from Lenihan and the other people also?—Yes.

3216. From both of them?—Yes.

3217. Did anyone else belong to the aggrieved party?—I think six or eight of them were banded together—five or six of them were banded together——

3218. Hunt, Moran, M'Grath, Kilgan—who else?—Hart; I think that would be all.

3219. You have only given five?—Five or six.

3220. Were you one of the party?—No, I was not.

3221. What is Hart's Christian name?—John Hart. He lives on Mailcoach-road.

3222. Is it William Hunt or Patrick Hunt?—It is Michael Hunt, James Morgan, Thady Kilganan, and John M'Grath.

(The witness then withdrew, and the inquiry was adjourned till Thursday morning.)

Third Day. October 7.

THIRD DAY.

Thursday, October 7, 1869.

The Commissioners sat at ten o'clock, when the following witnesses, who had been summoned, were called, but did not attend :—Thomas Brennan, Robert Stokes, Stephen Cherry, Patrick Neilan, and Francis Dunleavy.

John Kearns

John Kearns sworn and examined.

3223. The Chief Commissioner.—Are you an elector?—Yes.

3224. How long have you been an elector of the borough?—As well as I recollect I am an elector for the last fifteen or sixteen years.

3225. Did you vote at the last election?—I did.

3226. Who did you vote for?—For Mr. Flanagan.

3227. Is there another elector named John Kearns?—There is.

3228. Where do you live?—I live in Abbey Quarter.

3229. And where does the other John Kearns live?—He lives up in Temple-street.

3230. Were you examined at Carrick?—I was.

3231. Was the other John Kearns examined at Carrick?—He was.

3232. Before the last election which party had you belonged to always?—To the Liberal party.

3233. Who did you vote for at the election between Sergeant Armstrong and Mr. Macdonogh; or did you vote at all?—Well, I disremember that.

3234. You disremember?—I do.

3235. Do you know a man named Thomas Brennan?—I did.

3236. Were you offered any money for your vote at the last election?—I was.

3237. Who offered you the money?—I was told by Mr. Lyons that I would get £50 in an envelope.

3238. Where did Mr. Lyons tell you that?—In his own house.

3239. Is that Mr. Henry Lyons?—Yes.

3240. Of Sligo?—Yes.

3241. How long was that before the election?—As well as I recollect that was on the 9th of November.

3242. Was anyone present when he told you?—Yes.

3243. Who?—Mr. Barry.

3244. What is his Christian name?—Pat Barry.

3245. What made you go to Mr. Lyons' house?—Well, Thomas Brennan came with a message to Mr. Barry, and told Mr. Barry for him and I to go to Mr. Lyons, and that we would get some money, so Mr. Barry delivered the message to me, and we both agreed and went.

3246. And was Barry to get money, too?—Yes.

3247. How much was he to get?—£50.

3248. How much were you to get?—£50.

3249. In what sort of money?—Half notes.

3250. Did you agree?—No.

3251. What did you want?—I made Mr. Lyons answer that I would not take half notes, but that if I got the real cash I would take it.

3252. What did Mr. Lyons say to that?—Mr. Lyons then said that we might go home, and about seven o'clock the next evening to come to him, and that he would see what could be done.

3253. Now, what were you to do for the £50; to vote or to go away?—To go away.

3254. Go away where?—To leave the town till after the 23rd.

3255. Were you to get any money for travelling expenses?—Yes, £5 each.

3256. Did you agree to go away for the £50?—No, not in half notes.

3257. I mean did you agree to go away if you got the £50 down?—Well, we were fully determined.

3258. That is what I mean—you would have went?—Yes.

3259. After that did you see Mr. Stokes?—Mr. Lyons then came to Barry next day—on the 10th, about twelve o'clock, and he told Mr. Barry that he withdrew the conversation between him and Barry and I and them. Mr. Stokes came, I think, between four and five o'clock in the evening.

3260. When Mr. Stokes came what did he say to you?—He came to me and he asked me if I would go a message for him. I told him I would.

3261. Go a message where to?—He did not care where to—to Dublin or London, or anywhere I would until after the 23rd.

3262. Did he say what the message was?—He did.

3263. What was the message?—To bring him home after the 23rd either a walking stick or a walking switch.

3264. When were you to get the £50?—On the spot. He then told me that he would go for the cash, and that he would go for pen, ink, and a stamp that I was to sign my name to. Well, I then took counsel with my wife and family about it, and he was to return in half an hour after. As I said, I consulted with my wife and family, and she told me to have nothing to do with him.

3265. Did you then determine to have nothing to do with him?—When Stokes then came back I told him that I would have nothing to do with him—through the Church question that I would have nothing to do with him.

3266. Now, did you get any money at the last election from anybody?—At this last election?

3267. Yes?—Not a shilling, nor a sixpence.

3268. Did anyone promise you any money on either side except what you have mentioned?—No.

3269. On Captain Flanagan's side?—No.

3270. On your oath?—Never.

3271. After the last election between Sergeant Armstrong and Mr. Macdonogh, did you get any money?—I did.

3272. How much?—I got £15.

3273. From whom?—Well, I got it from two. I got £5 from James Leonard, and I got £10 from Mr. Phillips.

3274. What is Mr. Phillips' Christian name?—Martin Phillips.

3275. Is he here in Sligo now?—He is.

3276. How long was that after you had voted?—Well, I think, as well as I recollect, it was eight or nine months after Sergeant Armstrong's election.

3277. Do you remember now, you forgot it before, that you voted for Sergeant Armstrong?—I do.

3278. Did anyone tell you before you got the £15 that you were to get the money?—Not a man—no man ever told me.

3279. Where was the money paid to you?—I got £5 from Leonard on the street, and I got £10 in Mr. Phillips' house.

3280. Did you hear of any other voters being paid £15 the same as yourself?—Well, I did.

3281. Who were they?—I heard of Mr. Barry to get £15.

3282. That is Pat Barry?—Yes, and I heard of Thomas Brennan to get £15, that is all.

3283. Is that Thomas Brennan who took so prominent a part in the last election, or another Thomas Brennan?—Yes.

3284. Another Thomas Brennan?—Yes.

3285. The Thomas Brennan that was in the court to-day?—Yes.

3286. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Where does that Thomas Brennan live?—He lives in Abbey Quarter.

3287. The Chief Commissioner.—Anyone else?—No one else to my recollection.

3288. Did you ever get any money before at any election?—I did, at former elections.

3289. Do you remember the elections at which you were paid?—Well, I do not.

3290. Do you remember that before Sergeant Armstrong was returned Mr. Macdonogh was the member?—It was Mr. Macdonogh and Sergeant Armstrong that contested that election.

3291. Do you remember that before that Mr. Macdonogh was the member?—I do.

3292. And do you remember the time that he was returned—Mr. Macdonogh?—I do.

3293. And do you remember that before that Mr. Wynne and Mr. Somers contested it?—Yes.

3294. And that one time Mr. Wynne was in and another time Mr. Somers was in—Do you remember that?—I do.

3295. Now after which of these elections that I have mentioned were you paid, and by whom were you paid, and for whom did you vote?—I voted at that election for Mr. Somers.

3296. And did you vote before that for Mr. Somers?—I did.

3297. How much were you paid for these elections?—I never received a shilling: no more than you.

3298. Then was it before that?—It was I think—as well as I recollect it was at Sadlier's election.

3299. Then you say you got nothing when you voted for Somers?—Never.

3300. You voted for him twice?—Yes, and I never got a shilling or sixpence.

3301. Mr. Commissioner Bruce—Did you hear of others geting money?—No.

3302. Did you get anything the time Mr. Macdonogh was returned when there was no contest?—No, I never received a shilling.

3303. That time you went to Mr. Lyons who spoke about the £50 first—when Barry and you went into Lyons?—When we went in to Mr. Lyons he showed Barry into one room, and he showed me into another, and he went into the room with Mr. Barry. I could not say what passed between them. In about ten minutes after they both came into the room I was in. Mr. Lyons then said that we would get £50 a piece in half notes.

3304. But you are positive Mr. Lyons spoke first?—I cannot say.

3305. Try and recollect?—I do not recollect that.

3306. Are you sure that you did not say it to Mr. Lyons when he came into the room—"if you give me £50 I will go away"?—I am sure I did not.

3307. And Mr. Lyons mentioned the £50 to you first?—Yes; in half notes. He did not say that he would give it to me; but that I would get it in an envelope.

(The witness withdrew.)

Thomas Brennan (Abbey Quarter) sworn and examined.

Thomas Brennan

3308. The Chief Commissioner—You are an elector?—Yes.

3309. How long have you been an elector?—I think since '63.

3310. 1863?—Yes.

3311. I believe you were not examined on the trial of the petition before Judge Keogh?—Only a few words were asked me.

3312. Are you any relative of the Thomas Brennan mentioned so often in this inquiry?—I am not.

3313. Whom did you vote for at the last election?—Captain Flanagan.

3314. You were only asked a few words at the petition trial about a letter?—That's all.

3315. You heard the last witness examined?—I did.

3316. Did you get the £15 after the previous election?—I did.

3317. Whom did you vote for at that election?—Serjeant Armstrong.

3318. Who gave you the £15?—Well, it is very painful to be obliged to tell you. If I could, I would not wish to mention any person's name.

3319. You must tell it, I see you have been a constable and you understand the obligation of an oath in a court of justice—you must tell it?—It was, I suppose, about six or eight months after the election that I got the money. When I heard of the report of the money being in town I applied to a particular friend and he got me the £15.

3320. Who was the particular friend?—Mr. Magill.

3321. What is his Christian name?—Daniel Magill.

3322. Was it he gave you the money?—It was.

3323. Who did he apply to for the money?—I could not tell that.

3324. Was it a committee that was giving the money?—So I understand.

3325. Who were the committee?—I cannot tell.

3326. Did you hear of any other persons name except Magill as being one of the committee?—I think Mr. Phillips' name was mentioned.

3327. Martin Phillips?—Yes.

3328. Was that a committee to pay the voters?—Yes, a committee to pay and to arrange matters at the election.

3329. Was Mr. Chrystal one of the committee?—I do not know who were on the committee or who were members of it.

3330. Where were you paid the money?—In Mr. Magill's own house.

3331. How long had you applied for the money before you got it?—Only a few days.

3332. Who told you the money was going?—It was rumoured all through the town that the money had come down from Dublin.

3333. Who did you hear brought the money down?—Oh, indeed I could not tell you that. That is a question I could not answer.

3334. Were you paid at any previous election?—Never in my life since or before, and I did not even expect that at the time.

3335. Do you know about anyone else being paid?—Only Barry and Kearns.

3336. Barry and Kearns?—I heard of them; that is all.

3337. Did any one tell you he got £15 before you got it, any other elector?—Well, I do not recollect that.

3338. Now you seem a respectable man, on your oath, do you know about anyone else being paid?—I do not, on my oath.

3339. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Was there any report that money was generally going?—The report at this time was that the money was in town for the voters. That was the first time I heard it.

3340. That is for those who had voted for Sergeant Armstrong?—Yes. That is the time I made the application.

3341. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Did you hear that any money was going on Mr. Macdonogh's side?—I did not hear.

3342. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—You have been a long time in the town—you say you have only been a voter since '63—but do you recollect the election between Mr. Somers and Mr. Wynne?—I had no connexion at all with them at that time.

3343. But do you recollect the election?—I do.

3344. The one in '59?—Yes, I do, and I was here at Sadlier's election.

3345. You were not a voter in 1859?—No.

3346. But did you hear a report about money going on either one side or the other?—I can assure you I did not mix myself up with any party there. I know I did not hear it.

3347. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Did you hear of any money going at Sadlier's election?—Yes, I heard that there was money going at Sadlier's election.

Third Day.
October 7.
Thomas Brennan.

3348. Do you know of any person who got money at Sadlier's election?—I do not. I was not in any way connected with the election at the time.

3349. Were you aware of the mobs at the last election, when Major Knox was returned, being paid—the mobs on Flanagan's side?—I know nothing at all about mobs and parties at all. I am not connected, in any way, with such matters.

3350. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Were you canvassed by Major Knox last time?—I was.

3351. Did you get any money, or did anybody offer you any money for him?—Not a farthing.

3352. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Where does Daniel Magill live?—In Pound-street. I think it is called Pound-street.

(The witness withdrew.)

Patrick Barry

Patrick Barry sworn and examined.

3353. The Chief Commissioner.—You are an elector?—I am.

3354. How long have you been an elector of the Borough?—I dare say I am about fifteen years.

3355. What is your business?—I am a publican.

3356. Did you vote at the last election?—I did.

3357. Whom did you vote for?—I voted for Mr. Flanagan.

3358. Had you always belonged to the Liberal party?—I had.

3359. Were you examined at the trial of the petition?—I was.

3360. Was any offer made to you of money for your vote at the last election?—There was.

3361. Tell who offered it, and how much?—Well, Mr. Stokes was the man that offered it to me—it was £50.

3362. Where did he offer it to you?—In my own house—in my own room.

3363. Tell what he said to you?—Well, he came into my house, on the evening of the 9th, I think, and he says to me, "I am told," says he, "you are going out of town." "Well," says I, "I intend to do so." "Well," says he, "as you are going, have you any money. I am never without it, and I want you to bring me £50 worth of curled hair." I made him an answer, and the answer I made was that he could write and get the train to take down £50 worth of curled hair. I had a pipe in my hand, with respect to you, sir, and he says, "you are not up to me," says he. "Well," says I, "I am not up to you—I am very ignorant on many points; but I will hear from you what it is." "Well," says he, I had a pipe in my hands, "bring me the full of that pipe of curled hair after the 23rd," says he, "and I will have no claim upon you." With that I said I could not refuse. "Well now," says he, "I am going to have an arrangement between you and I; I am going to bind you that if you are taken any way, no matter where you go, and brought back to Sligo before the 23rd, you are bound to me to be forthcoming with the £50." So I agreed to that, and I thought it very desirable, as I intended to go. "There is no mistake," says he. He asked me then did I know where John Kearns lived. I told him I did, and he and I left the room together, and went out at the back door and through my own field. "Now, Mr. Stokes," I said, "I want to have a remark made to you, do not come with the £50," I says, "if you do not bring my expenses along with it," leading him to Kearns' house at the time, through my own land. "Well," says he, "you are getting the full amount and the amount," says he, "that is not given by many." "I do not know," says I, "but I trust you will bring the expenses and the money both together." Says he, "you might go into a hotel that would be very expensive, and carry on, in your way, according as you wish." "Well, no sir," says I, "you may be sure I would not go to a gentleman's hotel, which is only for those that have an estate; I would go to an humble house that is qualified for me," says I, so he went into John Kearns' house, and I did not see Mr. Stokes afterwards until John Kearns came in with Mr. Stokes on the same door that he went out at—my back door; so he came into me, and the room was dark, and I brought a candle in with me, and he had a pen, and ink, and paper, ready for to sign the stamp as to the arrangement between him and I; so I asked him had he the travelling charges along with the amount, and he said not. "Well," says I, "hurl out yourselves—walk out," and they walked out on the spot; and that is all I know about Mr. Stokes and me.

3364. Did you ultimately get anything at all at the last election?—Never.

3365. Were you paid after the election between Sergeant Armstrong and Mr. Macdonogh?—I was.

3366. How much?—£15.

3367. Who gave you the money?—Mr. Martin Phillips, in the course of eight or nine months after that.

3368. Who told where to get the £15 before you got it?—Well, it was rumoured through the town and I heard it. Stephen Hughes was the first man that told me he got it. That was the first man.

3369. Stephen Hughes told you he got £15?—He told me he got £20.

3370. Is he still living here?—He is.

3371. Whom did he tell you he got the £20 from?—From Mr. Keeghron, of the Mall.

3372. Did you go to Mr. Keeghron?—No.

3373. To whom did you go to try to get the money?—I went to Mr. Conry. I was told Mr. Conry was paying.

3374. What is his Christian name?—Maurice, I think.

3375. Did you hear he was one of the committee?—I did.

3376. Of the committee that paid voters?—Yes, that he was paying voters.

3377. Who else did you hear was on the committee?—Well, now, I cannot say. I am not one that minds these things; I stop about my own place; I do not mind things that way.

3378. What elector besides Stephen Hughes told you he was paid?—John Kearns told me he was paid, and Thomas Brennan told me he was paid.

3379. These are the two men who have been examined to-day?—Yes, they are neighbours of mine.

3380. Who else?—I will not go farther. I do not travel the town for information of any man's business.

3381. In whose place were you paid?—In Mr. Phillips' shop.

3382. What did you say when you went in?—I told him I had a demand on him for £20, that I heard £20 was going. He said that he had not got it, that he was only allowed £15, so I took the £15 from him at the end of six or seven weeks.

3383. Six or seven weeks?—I think so.

3384. Or months; you mentioned months; you said the money came down eight or nine months after the election?—It was eight or nine months.

3385. Do you mean to say that he had paid some before you heard it?—It was some time after the election—three or four months after the election—the money was paid; myself and Kearns were the last paid it.

3386. Take time to consider. You remember the time of the election?—I do.

3387. That is the election at which you voted for Sergeant Armstrong?—I do.

3388. How long after that was it that the word was going of money being in town?—Well, I think eight or nine months, to the best of my recollection. I think it was more than that. I would not swear it.

3389. You were one of the last that was paid?—I was; myself and Kearns were the last.

3390. Did you ever get any money for your vote before that?—Never in my life—not a shilling, nor did I ever look for it. I was not in the habit of voting.

3391. For whom did you vote before that?—Before Mr. Armstrong?

3392. Yes?—I did not vote at all.

3393. Was that the first time you voted, when you voted for Sergeant Armstrong?—No; I was to vote for Mr. Tennison, but he did not come on and I did not vote.

3394. Did you never vote for the Right Honorable Mr. Wynne?—Never, nor I never voted for Mr. Somers. I never was called upon. I had my contract with the town for fourteen or fifteen years, and both parties were satisfied not to call on me. I kept myself to myself all through.

3395. Did you get any money for not voting?—No, never, before my God, from either one side or the other.

3396. What was the contract you had?—For cleansing the town. I had it for fifteen or sixteen years.

3397. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—When you demanded the £20 from Martin Phillips, and he told you he had only been allowed £15, did he tell you why he was allowed £15?—He did not. I took it and made no remark. He only just gave it to me and I walked out. We were not three minutes in conversation.

3398. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—You heard that Maurice Conry was one of the committee, who told you that?—It was from Stephen Hughes I heard it. He said he was paid by Mr. Conry, £20.

3399. Had Mr. Conry canvassed you for Sergeant Armstrong?—Never. I met Sergeant Armstrong in the street with some gentlemen, and he had a smile on his countenance, and he came up and asked me to vote—he asked me to vote in the open street. I had no more notion of voting then than I have now, and I just gave him my vote on the spot.

3400. Was Maurice Conry an active partisan of Sergeant Armstrong's at that election?—Well, I heard he was one of the committee.

3401. You heard he was one of Sergeant Armstrong's committee?—Yes.

3402. From whom did you hear that?—From people passing. I could not swear who it was.

3403. It was Conry sent you to Phillips?—Yes, Mr. Conry told me I would be paid by Mr. Phillips.

3404. Was it Phillips or Conry told you he had only been given the £15?—Mr. Phillips.

3405. Do you recollect having an interview with Mr. Lyons with respect to the last election?—Well, I do.

3406. Tell us about that?—Well, about that. I was in my own house, and Tom Brennan was up on my land, and he sent a messenger down to me, and I spoke to him. Says he, "You are wanted at Mr. Lyons' house at six o'clock this afternoon." I went up to John Kearns, and I told him what Brennan told me, and we both consulted, and we both went to Mr. Lyons' house.

3407. Was there a message for Kearns as well as for you?—The same. The advice for him Brennan gave me, and I gave to Kearns, because I was aware that Kearns was to go away as well as me. There was confidence between us. So Mr. Lyons opened the hall-door, and I went in, and he placed John Kearns in one room on the left, and I went in with him on the right of the hall, and Mr. Lyons said to me—says he, "I am told you are going out of town." "Well, I am, sir," says I; "I intend to do so." "Well," says he, "what is your figure for going?" "Well, sir," says I, "John Kearns and I have determined not to leave Sligo without £50 and travelling expenses." So Mr. Lyons said that was a high figure. "Well, now, sir," says I, "before we go any further, my comrade is in the next room, and I don't want to have any conversation between you and I, unless John Kearns might think you and I had some plot that he was not aware of—anything you have to say to me say it in the presence of John Kearns." So, then Mr. Lyons called John Kearns in, and they had some chat, and I listened and I heard Mr. Lyons say to him that he would get him £50 in half notes in an envelope, but I did not hear Mr. Lyons say he would pay that himself, but that he would get the money for him, and to be certain of it, but Kearns said he would not take anything but the "hard cash." That was the word he used, and Mr. Lyons then left, and we parted; but before we left Mr. Lyons said he would see us about seven o'clock on the following evening. The day came on, and about eleven o'clock I was in my own field, and Mr. Lyons came to me, and he said to me, "Paddy," says he, "what passed between you and I and Kearns last night I have nothing to do with;" opening his hands, he says, "I have nothing to do with you." And on the evening of the same day Mr. Stokes came across me as I told you.

3408. You say Mr. Lyons said to you, "I hear you are going away;" had you intended to go away before you went to Mr. Lyons?—Well, I told Thomas Brennan that I would go away, and I told Thomas Brennan I had no right to vote, for my son was voting on the other side, and I was not asked to vote at either side, and I had a right to go away. My son was going to vote for the Liberal side. I had intended to vote for Major Knox.

3409. Had you intended to vote for Major Knox?—I had, all through the piece.

3410. All through?—All through, up to the very last moment—and I had all my little preparations made at 4 o'clock that morning to go to Dublin to my son—no mistake about it.

3411. When did that conversation with Mr. Lyons take place—how long before the election?—Well, I think it was about the 9th or 10th of November.

3412. That was eight or ten days before the election?—About that. I have not a good recollection of it, but I think it was the 9th or 10th.

3413. And up to that time you had intended to vote for Major Knox?—I had.

3414. What made you change your mind?—Well, Mr. Stokes changed it.

3415. Mr. Stokes changed it?—On my solemn oath my mind was made up that morning that I would vote for Major Knox, and any man I could bring to him—no mistake about it.

3416. But you have told us Stokes offered you £50 to go away?—Yes.

3417. Did you not intend to vote for Major Knox?—I did.

3418. When did you first intend to vote for Major Knox?—When Mr. Phibbs was by in my room, when I pledged myself to Major Knox to vote for him.

3419. How long was that before the election?—There was not a word about Mr. Flanagan before that, it was some months before that, or before the Church question either.

3420. At that time no money was offered to you at all?—Not a shilling.

3421. When was it you first began to think of going away?—After I had pledged my vote to Major Knox, then I settled with Tom Brennan that it would injure my establishment business. And I said I would not vote at either side as my son was voting for the liberal side—and that I thought of going away and not voting for either one or the other.

3422. That conversation with Thomas Brennan was before you saw Mr. Lyons?—Yes.

3423. And it was before you had the conversation with Mr. Stokes about the £50?—It was.

3424. Who put it into your head to ask for £50 if you were determined to go away? Did you want £50 to go away?—I did.

3425. Did you always determine you would get money to go away or did anybody suggest it to you?—Never a man—only my promise to Major Knox. I never was solicited by any man or spoken to by any man. Major Knox never spoke to me or told me he would give me money or any one belonging to him.

3426. I want to know when you first thought of getting £50 for going away?—I thought of it in my own mind; often when I was in bed I would think of it—that if I would get it I would take it.

3427. Was it before you went to Lyons you thought of getting the money for going away?—It was.

THIRD DAY.
October 7.
Patrick Barry

3428. Had you made up your mind to go away supposing you did not get money?—Not answered.

3429. Was this what was in your mind "I will go away if I get Mr. Lyons or Mr. Stokes to give or somebody else to give me £50, but if they will not give me £50 I will stop and vote for Major Knox"—was that what was in you mind?—That was in my mind. I had made my promise to Major Knox, and I still supported that up to the last moment.

3430. You say you made your promise to Major Knox?—Yes.

3431. And you made up your mind you would not vote but go away?—Yes.

3432. Did you make up your mind you would not go away unless you got money?—If I did not get a shilling I would vote for Major Knox.

3433. But you resolved you would try to get the £50?—Yes. I would get it if I could, but if I did not get a shilling I would vote for Major Knox.

3434. But you voted for Mr. Flanagan?—I did, through Mr. Stokes' shabbiness.

3435. You were angry with Mr. Stokes?—I thought I should have the travelling charges. I thought he would put it into his pocket, and that he was tricking me.

3436. Are you quite certain it was Thomas Brennan came to you and told you to go to Mr. Lyons?—I am.

3437. You did not send the message to Mr. Lyons direct?—Indeed I did not.

3438. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Are you a farmer?—I am.

3439. Who is your landlord?—Sir Richard Gethins.

3440. Did you hear of Mr. Tennison's voters getting £15 a piece after Sergeant Armstrong's election?—Never, nor had I any interference with them.

[The witness withdrew.]

Mary Gourley

Mary Gourley sworn and examined.

3441. The Chief Commissioner.—Were you in Mr. Feeney's employment last November?—I was.

3442. Do you remember seeing two gentlemen come to his house one evening before the election?—I do.

3443. Was that gentleman there, Mr. Waugh, one of them?—He was.

3444. Was there a sergeant from the barracks with them at the time they came?—There was.

3445. Tell all that occurred from the time they came in?—I was standing in the kitchen when they came into the shop. They came up to the counter to Mrs. Feeney at the bar, and asked her if Mr. Feeney was in. She said not. They then called for some drink for the sergeant. I can't say what it was, as I was minding my business. They appeared to be two servants from the major in the barracks. They asked if Mr. Feeney was in, and she said not. They then asked her how long he would be out. One of the gentlemen asked her was there any place where they could sit down until he came in. She said there was, and she called on Mary, her daughter, to get a candle to show them upstairs. I said she was not in, and she said I would do.

3446. Did you bring them upstairs?—I did.

3447. To what part of the house did you bring them?—I brought them to the front room looking into the street.

3448. What occurred when you took them upstairs?—One of them asked me if they could be seen off the road. I said they could. He then asked could the windows be screened off. They called for two glasses of ale.

3449. Did you do anything to the windows?—Yes, I asked Mrs. Smith to put the blind on the windows. She took off her apron and put it on the window with pins or nails.

3450. Who told that to be done?—Mr. Waugh asked me if he could be seen off the road; he paid me for the glasses of ale, and told me to send up Mr. Feeney when he'd come in. I said I would.

3451. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Was there any house on the opposite side of the road?—There wasn't.

3452. Was there a house near it?—No, not for a good distance off.

3453. The window was upstairs?—It was; facing the road.

3454. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Were there many people on the road at the time?—I don't exactly say there were many on the road at the time. I can't exactly say, as I was in the kitchen doing my business.

3455. Did you observe how the apron was put on the window?—She had no blind convenient to put across it, she then took off her apron and put it up with pins and nails.

Mary Smith.

Mary Smith sworn and examined.

3456. The Chief Commissioner.—Were you in Mr. Feeney's house the night the last witness spoke of?—I was.

3457. Are you any relative of his?—Yes, I am his daughter.

3458. Were you assisting in attending to the business for him?—I was.

3459. Did you see that gentleman, Mr. Waugh, come into the house on that night?—I did.

3460. Did you do anything to the window upstairs on that occasion?—I did. I blinded it with my apron, which I took off.

3461. Did you hear Mr. Waugh say anything?—They told me to blind the window.

3462. Which of the two gentlemen said that?—I couldn't say which of the two said it, as their back was turned to me.

3463. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Did he say why he wished the window to be blinded?—He asked me could they be seen from the road. I said yes. Would you be kind enough, he said, to blind the window. I said I would, and I took off my apron and fastened it to it.

3464. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—How did you stick it up?—With two nails that were in the window fastening the blind the day before.

Mr. Aaron Waugh.

Mr. Aaron Waugh recalled.

3465. The Chief Commissioner.—Mr. Waugh, you heard the evidence of these two witnesses now examined?—I did.

3466. Was the window blinded when you went upstairs?—There was no blind on the window when I went upstairs—their statement was very correct. My object in blinding the window was—and I am glad I have an opportunity of explaining it—that the road overlooked the room; you could see us from the road in the room. The town was in a very disturbed state at the time; the locality was a bad one, and I didn't like the idea of a stone. The people knew I was Major Knox's reporter, and I thought they might throw in a stone through the window at us. That was my reason for getting the window blinded.

3467. Did you give any explanation of this before Judge Keogh at the trial of the petition at Carrick?—I was not asked anything about it at Carrick.

3468. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—That was a part of the town that was hostile to Major Knox?—It was, exactly.

James M'Donnell was called, but did not answer.

Edward Gethin sworn and examined. Edward Gethin.

3469. The Chief Commissioner.—Are you an elector for the borough of Sligo?—Yes.

3470. How long have you been an elector?—Since '64, I think.

3471. Did you vote at the last election?—I did not.

3472. Have you belonged to any political party since you became an elector?—I voted for Sergeant Armstrong at the previous election.

3473. Did you get any money after Sergeant Armstrong's election?—The election, I think, took place in July, and the following April there came a neighbour to me, and said there was a message in such a place for me.

3474. Did he tell you what the message was about?—He didn't, but he asked me to go up to this house.

3475. Did you do so?—I did.

3476. What occurred there?—There was a man there who handed me £15. It was made up in a parcel at the time.

3477. Where did you get the money?—In Brennan's of Market-street.

3478. What is Brennan's Christian name?—Pat.

3479. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Is that the place you were told to go to?—Not to Brennan's, but to another place.

3480. The Chief Commissioner.—Who told you to go there?—Thomas M'Gettrick.

3481. Is he a voter?—He is.

3482. Did he tell you that he got money himself?—He did not.

3483. Do you know of anyone else being paid £15?—I don't.

3484. It was M'Gettrick first told you of the money?—I no more expected a halfpenny than the man in the moon. I didn't look for it. I didn't want it. Of course ——

3485. Of course you would take it, I suppose you were going to say?—Yes.

3486. M'Gettrick told you to go to Brennan's?—He did.

3487. At the last election you did not vote at all?—No.

3488. Where were you on the day of the polling?—Abroad in Mrs. Hall's.

3489. Were you there the whole day?—Yes, from the night before—no, it was on the night of the nomination I went in there.

3490. Who told you to go there?—I went there for my own protection.

3491. But who suggested to you that it was a place to go for protection?—No one; but being in conversation with other men of the same way of thinking—some eight or ten others—I heard it. I never would have gone there but for the treatment I received.

3492. Tell the truth and you will be protected for it. What treatment did you receive?—It was circulated about town that I was a supporter of Major Knox, when I wasn't; and through that my house was watched, my customers were assailed, and different things of that sort. The next time Major Knox came round and asked my vote I promised him.

3493. What business are you in?—A grocer and provision dealer.

3494. Did you see any of your customers assailed?—I caught one man in the act of assailing a customer. I had to shake him for it.

3495. How long did that treatment continue—when did it commence?—It was some time in August it commenced.

3496. Go on—you say you promised Major Knox?—Yes.

3497. And you went to Mrs. Hall's the day of the nomination?—The evening of the nomination.

3498. The other electors who were mentioned were with you there?—There came only very few after I went there. There was a whole lot when I went there.

3499. What did you pay for what you got there?—I paid fifteen shillings. I didn't use five shillings worth, and I paid for what she demanded.

3500. Why did not you vote at the last election?—I had the voting paper in my hand to record my vote when my wife came in a terribly abused and agitated state she received the night before. She also told me that Captain King was shot. She was in such a miserable state that I didn't wish to go out to vote.

3501. What hour of the day was that?—About eleven o'clock.

3502. Was any injury done to your house?—They couldn't do any more.

3503. Were the windows broken?—They were.

3504. Was the furniture injured?—It was.

3505. Did you afterwards go to get it off the county?—I did. I put in a presentment. I got £158, and if I got £400 it wouldn't cover all my losses.

3506. Were there any threats used to you in reference to your business?—Not to me.

3507. What do you mean by "not to me?"—Not to me personally.

3508. Were there any threats used to your wife?—Not that I am aware of. It didn't amount to that when the customers were abused, and were afraid to enter the shop.

3509. Do you swear that they were afraid to enter the shop?—It might as well not be opened at all for three months after the election, and for three months before it.

3510. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Did any of them tell you that they were afraid to enter your shop?—They did.

3511. Can you give any of the names of those who said they were afraid to enter your shop?—There was one.

3512. Did you go to Mrs. Hall's of your own free will and notion?—Yes, certainly.

3513. And you did so in consequence of the violence you apprehended?—Yes.

3514. You had a conversation with other people of the same way of thinking, as you said, and by that you mean that you were to vote for Major Knox?—Yes.

3515. Are you a Roman Catholic?—Yes, I am.

3516. The others that were in Mrs. Hall's when you went there, went there, you think, of their own free will?—They had good reason for it.

3517. Had you any conversation with them on the subject?—I hadn't much conversation with them.

3518. You saw no restraint placed on them while you were there—were they at liberty to go where they pleased?—They were; they were as free as air, they could go where they wished.

3519. The Chief Commissioner.—Did you ever get money before the £15?—Never.

3520. Nor any promise of any money?—Never. At that time I wouldn't take £100 to vote against Sergeant Armstrong—no consideration whatever would induce me to vote against him..

3521. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Did you ever hear up to that time of the custom of voting, of money being given for votes?—No, I was only a new voter at the time. I was only a short time in business, and I knew nothing of it.

3522. Are you a native of the town?—I am.

3523. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—What is your wife's name?—Adelia.

3524. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—You say it was £15 you got after Sergeant Armstrong's election?—Yes.

3525. Do you know a man of the name of Brennan?—It wasn't Brennan gave me the money.

THIRD DAY.
October 7.
Edward Gethin.

3526. You said just now it was?—I did not.

3527. The Chief Commissioner.—You did?—I didn't. I said I got it in Brennan's house.

3528. Then who gave it to you?—A man named Foley.

3529. What is his Christian name?—Michael.

3530. Is he in Sligo now?—I think so.

3531. What is he?—A merchant.

3532. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Where does he live?—In the town.

3533. In what street?—In the suburbs of the town.

3534. The Chief Commissioner.—Who was by when the money was given to you?—I think Brennan was.

3535. Who else was present?—No one.

3536. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Was it in the shop you got it?—It was not; it was in a little parlour up stairs.

3537. The Chief Commissioner.—Did you see any more money there than the £15 you got yourself?—I did not.

3538. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—You say the £15 was made up in a parcel when you got it?—It was. I was unprepared for it, I didn't expect it, I didn't look for it, nor did I want it.

3539. The Chief Commissioner.—Do you mean to say you did not know what you were going for when you went to this place?—I did not.

3540. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—But when you got the £15 I suppose you knew what it was for?—I had an idea.

3541. Was Michael Foley engaged on behalf of Sergeant Armstrong?—I don't think he was. It's a great pain to me to mention his name at all.

3542. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—You are only doing your duty.

Mrs. Anne Hall.

Mrs. Anne Hall sworn and examined.

3543. The Chief Commissioner.—I believe you were examined before Judge Keogh at the trial at Carrick?—I was.

3544. You remember the voters coming to your house before the last election?—Yes.

3545. Where is the book in reference to the entries about which you were examined before Judge Keogh?—The judge kept it at Carrick. There were in it only a few names—the names of the men who paid me.

3546. Mr. Whitty (registrar to Judge Keogh).—It was handed back to this lady at Carrick.

3547. The Chief Commissioner.—You swear you never got it back?—To the best of my knowledge I never did. I heard the judge, or the gentleman who addressed me—I don't know which—say they would keep the book.

3548. Who paid for the lodging and entertainment of these people that came to your house before the election?—The men themselves. The most part of the men there paid me. There were a few who did not pay.

3549. Tell me the names of the men who did not pay you?—I couldn't tell you. It's a long time ago.

3550. How many men paid you?—Twelve or fourteen paid me.

3551. How many were in your house altogether at that time?—There were, I think, nineteen altogether.

3552. Are you sure of that?—To the best of my opinion that was the number.

3553. These five or six who did not pay you, I suppose they owe you fifteen shillings or a pound each?—I can't exactly say; it is according to the time they remained with me; they may owe me more, and they may not.

3554. Have you sent bills to those who did not pay you?—I did; I sent bills to all, to the best of my recollection.

3555. Did you never look after payment afterwards?—Never; it dropped there; I never thought of it more.

3556. Did anyone else give you anything for these days the voters were in your house?—Certainly not.

3557. No one?—No one but the men themselves.

3558. Had you any voters in your house at the previous elections?—Never before; nor would I have these, only that they came to me to ask me to protect them. They said they were so badly treated at the other election it would be a great charity to take them in. It was very distressing to me. I felt for the men; I pitied them, and I took them in. O'Brien, the first man that came to me, asked me would I take him and some friends of his in as they wanted protection. I said they would get it elsewhere. He said, "I think they would be better protected with you, as having the army and police about the place."

3559. I suppose they all went away at the end of the polling day?—Yes.

3560. From whom did you get the names of the men that were in your house?—I got a list of the names from Mr. Cherry.

3561. Was Mr. Cherry in and out of your house during these days?—I was very intimately acquainted with Mr. Cherry, and he used to come in very frequently as he knew I was a very nervous woman.

3562. You were to protect the nineteen voters in your house?—Yes; it wasn't a pleasant thing at all.

3563. At all events Mr. Cherry gave you the list of the names?—He did.

3564. Why did he give the list of names?—I asked him for it, as I didn't know the men themselves.

3565. Did Mr. Cherry write down the list in your house?—He did.

3566. Of the nineteen men?—It may be twenty-one names. I can't say now how many there were.

3567. Do you know these names now?—I think I would know them if they were read for me.

3568. Well I will read them for you—Michael Larkin?—Yes.

3569. Michael Dogherty?—Yes.

3570. John Reid?—Yes.

3571. John Maguire?—Yes.

3572. Patrick Clancy?—Yes.

3573. Timothy Fallon?—Yes.

3574. The two M'Goldricks?—Yes.

3575. Patrick O'Brien?—Yes.

3576. George Beatty?—Yes.

3577. Edward Ferguson?—Yes.

3578. John Grey?—Yes.

3579. James Grey?—Yes.

3580. Robert Lindsay?—Yes.

3581. Andrew O'Beirne?—Yes.

3582. Patrick Gallagher?—Yes.

3583. Do you remember any others?—I do not; but if they were named to me I might. That was about the number. How many names are there there?

3584. Fifteen?—Well, there were more.

3585. Edward Gethen?—Yes.

3586. You are sure there were nineteen or twenty-one?—I am. It is a very long time ago now, but to the best of my opinion I think I had nineteen or twenty-one men there.

3587. I believe Mr. Cherry sent you mattresses for these men?—I had not beds sufficient for them, and they said they would throw themselves on the floor as they came there for protection. I then asked Mr. Cherry to lend me five or six mattresses, he said he would, or anything in the house, and he did lend them.

3588. Did Mr. Cherry call on you again about these men?—No, he called in occasionally as he passed by the house, and I often called him in when I saw him passing by.

3589. Were there any people watching these men that were in your house at the time?—How watching.

3590. Taking a list of the names. I believe some of Major Knox's friends were stopping in your house at the time?—Counsellor Robinson was stopping there.

3591. What arrangement did you make with the electors as to what you were to charge?—I asked them if they were agreeable to pay a certain amount, and they said they were.

3592. How much was the amount?—Five shillings a day.

3593. Was Mr. Mossom staying in your house?—He was.

3594. Was he there before the election?—I really couldn't say.

3595. Had he anything to do with the election—had he a vote at the election?—He had a vote—a lodger vote.

3596. Was he one of the electors that came to your house for protection?—He lived with me.

3597. Did he vote out of your house?—He did.

3598. Was Gilmore—I do not mean the Major, but one of the electors—there?—Yes. I remember that name.

3599. That is in addition to those read?—Yes.

3600. I do not mean the Major, remember?—No, he is from the country. There was also there a man named Beatty.

3601. I mentioned him—George Beatty?—Yes.

3602. Who else were staying in your house at that time, sleeping in the house?—I don't remember.

3603. Had you thirty persons in your house on that occasion?—I think not.

3604. Who, besides Mr. Mossom, had been staying in your house previously?—I hadn't more than two or three gentlemen in the house.

3605. Who were they?—Mr. Mossom, Mr. Robinson.

3606. Anyone else?—I can't say.

3607. Had you any strangers from Dublin staying with you at the time?—I can't say. I think not, to the best of my knowledge.

3608. Can you mention the names of the five or six who had not paid you, I mean the electors who were staying in your house for protection?—I can't, as I left the memorandum with the Judge, at Carrick. I kept no account of the names. I don't know who they were. I thought there never would be any more about it. I will tell you one man didn't pay me, I think he lives over near the old church, I don't remember his name.

3609. If you do not remember the other names—the names of those who did not pay you—unless they come in of themselves to pay you, you never will be paid?—I don't mind that—it will be no great loss—they were very poor people, one of them told me he was very poor.

3610. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—When the electors came to your house was the town in a very disturbed state?—It was very disturbed at the time.

3611. On the morning of the election what state was it in?—It was as bad as it could be, with uproar and tumult. I had to call on the police officers to send in some men.

3612. Was there a mob outside the door of your house?—There was a violent mob outside.

3613. Did they do any damage to your place?—I don't know. I couldn't see. I couldn't look on I was so much alarmed, and I had to ask the officers to send in some men, as I was certain the place would be broken into.

3614. Was there any gentlemen stopping in your house, who was injured on that occasion?—There was one friend of Major Knox's who was near being injured.

3615. Who was that?—Mr. Morrison.

3616. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Was he a voter?—He was not; he was an intimate friend of Major Knox.

3617. The Chief Commissioner.—You understood he was an English Barrister?—Yes.

3618. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—You know Mr. Cherry?—I do.

3619. I believe he came several times to your house—he was in the habit of dropping in occasionally?—He came in a few times, I asked him to come in once or twice.

3620. What part of the house were these nineteen men?—I had rooms for them in different parts of the house; when the bedrooms were supplied I had larger rooms for them.

3621. Did Mr. Cherry, when he came in, go through the rooms where these men were, to have a conversation with them?—He didn't.

3622. But he gave you a list of the names?—I asked him to see who the men were, and he went and got a list of their names. I didn't know the men personally myself, though I knew a great many of them by sight.

3623. Was there any understanding, as far as you know, between Mr. Cherry and these men?—To my knowledge there was none whatever.

3624. There was a gentleman in regard to whom you were examined before Judge Keogh, at Carrick—Mr. Harloe Phibbs?—Yes.

3625. He was not in your house at this time?—He was not, to my knowledge. The time is so long ago, I can't remember.

3626. There is, I believe, a passage leading from your house to the Court-house, by which a person can go into the Court-house without passing into the street?—There is.

3627. Did any of the men go to the Court-house by that passage?—Yes, some of them did.

3628. Some of them?—Yes; some of them were afraid to go by the hall-door to vote.

3629. I believe there was a polling place in the Court-house?—Yes.

3630. And some of the men you say were afraid to go out by the hall-door to vote?—Yes.

3631. Who were they?—The Roman Catholics were afraid to go out by the hall-door, and they asked me to allow them out by the passage.

3632. Did the Protestants also go to vote by that passage?—No; the Protestant party went to vote through the hall-door.

3633. Do you remember who used the passage?—The Roman Catholics.

3634. Did all the Roman Catholics use it?—They did, to the best of my opinion.

3635. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Do you keep the Court-house?—I do.

3636. There is immediate connexion between your house and the Court-house, I believe?—There is.

3637. So that people can pass from your house into the Court-house without going out on the street?—Precisely.

3638. Your house is part of these buildings?—It is.

3639. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Do you recollect a man named Andrew O'Beirne being one of those who came to your house for protection?—I do.

3640. Do you know whether he used the passage or not?—To the best of my opinion all the Roman Catholics used that passage; as many as could were passed on by it.

3641. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Your door, I suppose, was locked during the night always?—Yes.

3642. Was it locked during the day?—Certainly not; we could not have it locked during the day.

3643. Why did you take these men into your house?—I asked the voters to leave the house; they wouldn't do so; they said they could not, they wanted protection.

3644. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Did you hear any cries outside from the mob on the polling day?—I did. I thought they were going to break in the door.

3645. What kind of cries did you hear outside?—I heard very wonderful noises and tumult and uproar outside.

3646. What were the mobs doing?—I don't know what they were doing. I thought they were going to break in the door. I was afraid to go to the window to see what they were doing. I was afraid if I opened the door they would rush in, and that the men might be injured. The police asked me to send out for men as they hadn't enough of men to protect them.

3647. Do you say the Inspector asked you to do so?—No, the police said they hadn't sufficient men to protect the men inside, and they asked me to send out for men to the hall-door.

THIRD DAY.

October 7.

Mr. Benjamin Whitty.

Mr. Benjamin Whitty sworn and examined.

3648. The Chief Commissioner.—You were Registrar to Judge Keogh at the trial of the election petition at Carrick?—Yes.

3649. Have you any documents that his lordship ordered to be kept by you after the trial?—Yes.

3650. I will ask you to give these to the Secretary, and he will make copies of them?—I have them as I folded them up at the trial. I never opened them since. This is Mrs. Buchanan's book—[Book handed in.] These are the documents that relate to the Sheils', and are separate, and those relate to Dominick Kilcullen.—[Documents handed in.]

3651. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—All these have been in your possession since the trial?—Yes.

3653. Did you receive telegrams from the telegraph office?—Yes, these are the telegrams which Mr. Sanger was asked to produce, and he produced them.

The following witnesses who had been summoned, were called, but did not answer to their names:—Michael M'Goldrick, senior and junior, Daniel M'Goldrick and John M'Goldrick.

Charles Tighe

Charles Tighe sworn and examined.

3654. The Chief Commissioner.—You are an elector?—I am.

3655. How long have you been an elector?—The last election, only.

3656. Only since the last election?—Yes.

3657. Whom did you vote for at the last election?—Captain Flanagan.

3658. What is your trade or occupation?—I am a cooper by trade.

3659. In whose employment are you?—Mr. Gorman's.

3660. Did anyone offer you anything for your vote at the last election?—There did.

3661. Who did?—Mr. Stokes.

3662. What did he offer you, and where did he offer it?—He was in the yard, and the first time I was not there. When I heard he was there I went over. He wasn't there when I went; but he was almost as soon as I was there.

3663. Tell us now what occurred when he came into the yard?—"Good day, Mr. Tighe," said he. "Good day," said I. "Have you a vote?" said he. "I have," said I. "For whom are you going to vote?" said he. "For Captain Flanagan," said I. "Well," said he, "come over here," said he, "I want to speak to you." He then brought me to the turf house, and looked about him; there was a loft over head. When I went over with him we went out to another house outside it again. He then said, "What would please you for your vote?" "I don't know," said I, "what would please me for my vote." I heard that a good deal of money was going. He took a stick, and with it made thirty-five strokes. He said, "Would them thirty-five strokes please you?" I asked him what he meant by that. "My dear child," said he, "they are nothing but pounds." "I haven't made up my mind yet," said I, "about what I'll do." "Well," said he, "I will put five more to it; will that please you?" "I must see what my son will say first," said I. "Well, my dear sir," said he, "I can't allow a third person to be by," so I went away.

3664. That is to be a witness?—Yes. So then he asked me hadn't I made up my mind. I said not; so he said he would meet me again. The same evening I was going over the bridge; there was a great gathering outside. He brought me into a parlour off the shop, and put me sitting down. His wife was in it at the time. I can't say whether there was a man there or not. He told the person there to withdraw for a while. He said, "have you made up your mind yet." I said, "I haven't made up my mind; I have no money." "Well," said he, "you won't want money, but where ever you like to go I will send you, and you will get money." "How will I go," said I. "There will be a man at the train that will meet you and send you to Dublin." I don't remember the man's name; I did not mind it at Carrick. He said, "you will go to Dublin, and a person will be there to meet you. You will be treated well there, and when you come back there will be smiling faces for you, and it will never be forgotten to you." So I sat down in a chair, he said, "you haven't your mind made up yet." I said, "I will go." He said, "we'll part, you and I will not be the worse friends." I then wanted to go out through the shop door. He said I couldn't go that way. I said I would go by the same way I came in. He said, "no, you can't, you will go this way, which the whole of them went by."

3665. Well, what else occurred?—That's all.

3666. Would you have taken the money if you got it?—I would.

3667. And voted for Major Knox if you got it?—I would.

3668. Or gone away if they wanted you to do so?—I wouldn't. I would stand my ground and vote for Flanagan.

3669. If you took money for your vote, would you have voted for Major Knox?—I would. If I took his money I would certainly vote for Major Knox; but I never promised him.

3670. Did you intend to vote for Major Knox?—Never. If I took his money I would vote for him.

3671. Did he canvass you?—Yes. I refused him when he came to canvass me.

3672. Were you in earnest in endeavouring to get the money?—Never.

3673. Then am I to conclude that you would not have taken it?—I would have taken it if I got it. I never looked after it.

3674. Were you going about during the election, trying to do your best for Captain Flanagan?—I wasn't.

3675. Did you go about canvassing for him?—I never canvassed anyone for him.

3676. Did you get anything by the last election?—No, sir, I didn't.

3677. Nothing at all?—Not a farthing.

3678. Were you promised anything by anyone?—Never.

3679. Were not you promised money by Stokes?—That was the only promise.

3680. Did you get no treat of any sort?—Never.

3681. Did you ever talk to anyone, or did anyone talk to you about going away to avoid recording your vote?—Never.

3682. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Do you mean to say you never talked to anyone about going away?—Never.

3683. Do you mean to say you never talked to Stokes about going away?—I did, that night, in his parlour.

3684. Would you go away?—I would.

3685. You said, a moment ago, you would not go away—that you would stand your ground?—I said I would vote for Major Knox, if I got his money.

3686. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Do you say that, if you got his money, you would have voted for Major Knox?—I would.

3687. Were you examined at Carrick?—I was.

Let me read for you this question, and answer from your evidence given at Carrick. "I suppose you would not take £10,000 to vote for Knox?—No, I would not. I am a poor man, but I would not take all the money he has in the world, or you either, or any man in court, to vote for him. I told him that, and he is there now."

3688. Did you say that?—I said I wouldn't vote for him, but if I took his money I'd vote for him.

3689. Which is the true answer?—Before that—the time that Mr. Stokes spoke to me, I said I wouldn't vote for Major Knox.

3690. Were you telling the Judge the truth?—I was.

3691. Are you telling us the truth?—I am.

3692. Do you expect us to believe you?—[No answer.]

Dominick Oates sworn and examined.

Dominick Oates.

3693. The Chief Commissioner.—Are you an elector?—I am.

3694. How long have you been an elector?—At the last election.

3695. You never voted before the last election?—Never.

3696. What business are you in?—I am a baker.

3697. Did you get anything for your vote?—Not a half-penny.

3698. Were you promised anything for your vote at the last election?—No, only that I was brought to Mr. Stokes to see if I would take it.

3699. Who brought you to Stokes?—Aleck Shaw.

3700. What is Shaw?—He is a watchmaker in the town.

3701. What did Shaw say to you?—He had fixed a clock for me, and it was not going right. He called in to my place one day, and when he came in he went up to the clock; and said he came to see how it was going; I was in bed at the time; it was half-past eight or nine o'clock at the time, and he said to me, "sure, it's not there you should be." "Why," said I, "any one that has to stay up all night, it's little enough for them to sleep a few hours in the evening." "Well," said he, "it's looking after the election affairs you should be, to get some of the money." "I think there isn't any money going," said I. "There's plenty," said he. My wife was in the room, she walked down stairs, and came up with a candle. "Would you take it, if you got it," said she. "Why wouldn't I," said I. "I know a man, that is an acting man for Major Knox, if you would take it I would speak to him about it." It was a week or ten days after when he came to me again. I was in bed at the time; he called me and asked me if I would go down to Mr. Stokes, as he and Mr. Stokes had all the arrangements. I said I would not. "Well," said he, "you may as well come, he is waiting for you at the door." "If," said I, "I were seen going down to that man, I might not come back alive." "Change your clothes," said he. "I have no other clothes," said I, "except my Sunday clothes."

3702. Do not mind the conversation with Shaw, did you go to Stokes?—I did.

3703. Where did you see him?—I saw him in a little room off the shop. He was at the door when I went down.

3704. What did he say to you?—He asked me would I go over to Glasgow in the morning in the boat. I said I wouldn't, that I was not prepared for it. "Well," said he, "if you aren't, sure you can go to Dublin and cross over to Glasgow for a few days." "What am I to go for," said I. He said, "I will give you a letter and travelling charges, and you will meet a man on the quay at Glasgow, who will give you a hearty shake-hands, and kind reception and your money.

3705. How much money were you to get, did he say?—"Twenty-five thanks," he said I was to get. I said I didn't understand that style of speaking. He said "Shaw will tell you all about it." Shaw told me it was £25. "I wouldn't put on one of my shoes for it," said I, "nor lose one of my customers. I think I am long enough here. I wish I was out of it." I then rose and came away.

3706. Did he offer you more than £25?—He sent a man named Leonard to see if I would take five pounds more.

5707. What is Leonard's Christian name?—Thomas Leonard.

3708. What did Leonard say to you?—He said Mr. Stokes sent him to see if I would take £5—that is £30—to vote.

3709. Is Leonard a voter?—He isn't, sir.

3710. Do you know Thomas Brennan?—I do. I know the man you mean.

3711. I mean the young man?—Yes. I know him.

3712. Did you go to Brennan?—I went with him. I didn't know where he asked me to go, and he said to go up a bit of the road to Fox's stables.

3713. What Fox is that?—Captain Fox. He told me he was sorry he didn't see me in time. "We have enough," said he, "out of the way now, unless for the honour of a great majority, we like to have a few more; your neighbour is gone since last night. Williams has him settled."

3714. What Williams is that?—Tom Williams, he said.

3715. Who was by when you had the conversation with Brennan?—No one, he came out of the stables to me.

3716. Had you any conversation with anyone else on the subject of money?—Shaw called me the Sunday before the election, and asked me if I wasn't settled with. I said I wasn't. He said "I hear you are." He said, "I amn't."

3717. Would you have taken the money if you got enough of it?—I wouldn't. I didn't like to go against them.

3718. Why did you go to Stokes and Brennan, if you would not take money?—I went to see how much was going.

3719. Would you have gone for £50?—I wouldn't.

3720. Did you ever intend to vote for Major Knox?—No; I never had any intention to vote for anyone but Captain Flanagan.

3721. Did Major Knox ever canvass you for your vote?—He did. He asked me to promise him. I said I wouldn't, that I didn't know I would be on the revision. He asked me what my valuation was. I said £7. He said, "you are sure to be on, there's a long time to consider yet."

3722. You voted ultimately for Captain Flanagan?—I did.

3723. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Do you swear you had no intention of taking money when you went to Mr. Stokes?—I hadn't a bit.

3724. The Chief Commissioner.—Were you in the town the time of the election between Sergeant Armstrong and Mr. Macdonagh?—I am living in the town eighteen years.

3725. Did you get anything for your vote at that election?—No, I didn't.

3726. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—You were not an elector then, I believe?—I wasn't.

3727. Were you a mobsman then?—I wasn't. I never was a mobsman, and I never will be a mobsman in my life.

3728. When Shaw came to you and asked you to go down to Stokes, you said you had no clothes?—Yes.

THIRD DAY.
October 7.
Dominick Oates.

3729. What did he say to that?—He told me to put on my other clothes.

3730. Why did you not like to go down to Stokes?—Because I thought that a man having the name of going away, if there was a drunken man passing, might not be safe in coming back.

3731. Notwithstanding all that, you say it was to see how much was going—pure curiosity—that took you down to Stokes?—[Not answered.]

Michael M'Goldrick, junior.

Michael M'Goldrick, junior, sworn and examined.

3732. The Chief Commissioner.—I believe you were not examined at the trial of the petition at Carrick?—I wasn't.

3733. Did you vote at the last election?—I did.

3734. For whom did you vote?—For Major Knox.

3735. How long have you been an elector for the borough?—Twelve months.

3736. You were not on the registry at any previous election?—I wasn't.

3737. Were you in Mrs. Hall's at the last election?—I was.

3738. When did you go there?—On the Tuesday before the election.

3739. I believe you are a Roman Catholic?—I am.

3740. Have you or any of your family ever belonged to the Liberal party in this town?—My father voted for Sergeant Armstrong.

3741. Were there any threats made use of towards you before you went to Mrs. Hall's?—There were. The town was in a very bad state. I was told I would get my head smashed, and I thought I wouldn't be safe if I remained at home.

3742. Who was it that suggested to you to go to Mrs. Hall's?—I heard that there were lodgings in Mr. Farrell's and Mrs. Hall's. I went to Farrell's to see them, and I didn't like them. I knew that Mrs. Hall had a comfortable house and I went there.

3743. Were you rated with your father?—I was.

3744. What business do you carry on?—We have post horses and cars.

3745. Was any injury done to your house during the election?—There was.

3746. What?—The windows and doors were all smashed.

3747. Did you send in a presentment in consequence?—Yes.

3748. How much did you recover?—£17 19*s.* 6*d.*

3749. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Was any injury done to your furniture?—Very little.

3750. The Chief Commissioner.—Did you pay Mrs. Hall for what you had while you were at her house?—I did.

3751. Are you sure of that?—I am, for she sent me a bill for £2 for my father and myself. I disputed it as the agreement was for five shillings a day, which would make it only £1 15*s.* I paid that.

3752. Did you pay it out of your own pocket?—Yes, out of my own pocket.

3753. Have you been ever repaid it?—Never.

3754. Did you get any money since the election?—I didn't.

3755. Did you ever promise Major Knox to vote for him?—I don't believe I ever promised Major Knox to vote for him.

3756. When you went to Mrs. Hall's on Tuesday morning did not you intend to vote for him?—I did.

3757. And you knew his supporters were there?—I heard of it.

3758. You did not hear that that house was for the supporters of Captain Flanagan?—I didn't.

3759. Did you see any one protecting?—I saw no one protecting it, except the police and military, and they were in the back of the house.

3760. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Your father, you said, voted for Sergeant Armstrong?—Yes.

3761. Do you know if he received any money, at any time, for voting for Sergeant Armstrong?—I never knew him to receive a shilling for bribery, for voting for him.

3762. Was he ever promised any money for voting for Sergeant Armstrong?—Never.

3763. Was he ever canvassed by him?—He was. Sergeant Armstrong came in and canvassed my father for his vote. I said to Sergeant Armstrong I would not vote against him. I took my father to the poll, and he voted for Sergeant Armstrong. My father didn't tell or promise Sergeant Armstrong that he would vote for him, but I said he wouldn't vote against him.

3764. At the last election did he vote for Major Knox?—He did.

3765. Was there any talk of money going at the last election?—I never knew of it to be going.

3766. But I suppose you heard it was going?—I might have heard it.

3767. You know Mr. Stokes the saddler?—I do.

3768. Had you any conversation with him about the election?—Not before the election.

3769. Who canvassed you to vote for Major Knox?—I can't say.

3770. Did Cherry?—He didn't.

3771. Did Tom Brennan?—No.

3772. Were you ever in Brennan's house?—Never.

3773. Were you ever in Stokes', upstairs?—Never. I never was further than the hall-door.

3774. Were you ever in Cherry's upstairs before the election?—I bought goods in Cherry's before the election.

3775. What brought you to his place before the election?—I bought goods there.

3776. How often were you in Cherry's before the election?—I don't think I was ever more than once or twice in his house before the election.

3777. How long before the election was it since you were in Cherry's house?—I can't say; it might be years.

3778. Did you canvass for Major Knox at the last election?—I didn't.

3779. When did you make up your mind to vote for Major Knox at the last election?—I made up my mind for a good while before.

3780. How was it that you voted for Major Knox when your father had at the previous election voted for the Liberal candidate?—Because I was supported by the Conservatives in business, and I was determined not to put them against me. My father voted for Somers every time he was a candidate, and at the last election he voted for Mr. Macdonogh when Mr. Somers stood.

3781. You are likely mistaken—there was no contest with Mr. Somers when Mr. Macdonogh stood as a candidate?—I don't know.

3782. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Who is your landlord?—Mr. Middleton of Pollardstown.

3783. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—You said, I think, that you are supported by the Conservatives?—Yes.

3784. How was it that you advised your father to vote for Sergeant Armstrong at the previous election?—I was young an inexperienced in election matters when I told Sergeant Armstrong that my father wouldn't vote against him.

3785. The Chief Commissioner.—Did you get any money after Sergeant Armstrong's election?—I didn't.

3786. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Did you lose any of your custom for voting for Sergeant Armstrong?—It didn't serve it, I think: it might have injured it.

3787. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—You must have been canvassed for Major Knox?—I gave him to understand that I would vote for him.

3788. Did any of your customers ask you to vote for him?—No, none of them did.

3789. Did you or any of your family ever receive any remuneration for your vote for Major Knox?—No, except that Major Knox got a nomination for my brother in the Excise office.

3790. The Chief Commissioner.—Had Major Knox promised to get it for him?—He did.

3791. Was your brother appointed since?—He was.

3792. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—When was he appointed?—He was appointed the 26th August of this year.

3793. The Chief Commissioner.—Was it this last August that he was appointed?—It was.

3794. When did he get the nomination?—He got it in July.

3795. Was there any promise about it?—Yes. Major Knox promised to get him a situation.

3796. Has your brother a vote?—He has not.

3797. When did you hear that Major Knox promised to get him a situation?—About twelve months ago.

3798. Where did he promise it?—My brother was a clerk in the Irish Times office at the time.

3799. Was he then in the Irish Times office when the promise was made?—He was.

3800. When was he first employed in the Irish Times office?—In May, '68.

3801. Was it after Major Knox was canvassing the town?—I think it was.

3802. Previous to the election who told you that your brother was promised by Major Knox a situation in the Excise?—I think it was Tom Woods introduced my brother to Major Knox; Major Knox promised to get him a situation at first, but not being able to get it for him at the time he offered him a situation in the Irish Times office.

3803. Are you certain it was Tom Woods that spoke to Major Knox about your brother?—I am not; but I think it was.

3804. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Was it your father was promised the situation?—It wasn't; it was my mother—it was she was looking for the situation for him: she always tried to forward him as much as she could. He was at school until lately.

3805. Who applied for the situation?—It was he himself wrote for it.

3806. But you were all aware of it?—We were.

3807. And approved of it, I suppose?—It was against the will of my father that he went to the Irish Times office.

3808. The Chief Commissioner—Why was that?—Because my brother, he thought, was too young to go to Dublin, where he had no one to see after him.

3809. Mr. Commissioner Byrne—It was the situation in the Irish Times office your father was opposed to?—Yes.

3810. You had no objection to his taking a situation in the Excise?—Not at all.

3811. The Chief Commissioner—Do you know anything of anyone getting money at the last election?—Not one.

3812. Did you get it yourself?—Never. I never asked for it, I never looked for it—it never cost me a thought.

3813. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Was the situation in the Excise offered as a consideration for your father's vote?—It wasn't.

3814. Or for your own vote?—I had no vote at the time. If I wanted anything of the sort there are several gentlemen in the town and neighbourhood to whom I would apply, and who would get it for me. I never applied to Major Knox for anything of the sort.

Michael M'Goldrick sworn and examined.

3815. The Chief Commissioner—You are the father of the last witness?—I am.

3816. How long have you been an elector for the Borough of Sligo?—Since Mr. Somers first came to town.

3817. You went to Mrs. Hall's house at the last election?—I did.

3818. You voted, I believe, for Sergeant Armstrong at the previous election?—I did, and I voted for Mr. Macdonogh. I voted for Somers all through until it came to two votes, until I found it to be no use. When Mr. Macdonogh was in the field I voted for him.

3819. But you voted for Sergeant Armstrong afterwards?—I did.

3820. At any previous election had you left your own house to go for protection anywhere?—Never, though it was smashed at the time.

3821. At what time did you make up your mind to leave your own house to go to Mrs. Hall's?—Through the mobs and intimidation that was everywhere I thought no one was safe who voted for Major Knox, and I made up my mind to leave my house.

3822. Who told you to go to Mrs. Hall's?—I can't say how it came round, some of them told me to go there.

3823. Who told you?—I can't say.

3824. Was it some of Major Knox's supporters?—It was.

3825. Did you know that there were police in Mrs. Hall's house protecting it?—I didn't until the next day. The police were at the back of the house to prevent people coming in at the back.

3826. At what hour did you go to Mrs. Hall's?—At daylight on Tuesday, when there was not much noise in the streets.

3827. Was your son with you when you went there?—He was not.

3828. Which of you went first?—I went first, my son followed me.

3829. Was there much disturbance in the streets when you left your house?—There wasn't. There was great noise abroad during the night.

3830. When had you made up your mind to vote for Major Knox?—When I heard that he was in the field I did so.

3831. Did you always vote for the Conservative candidate?—I did.

3832. Did you never vote for the Liberal candidate?—I voted for Somers, because I thought he was badly treated.

3833. You voted also for Mr. Sergeant Armstrong?—I believe I did.

3834. After Sergeant Armstrong's election did you get any money?—Never, I never asked for it.

3835. Did you hear, after his election, about money going about the town?—I didn't know it myself. I heard that there was a rumour of that kind, but I can't say who said it.

3836. Do you swear you didn't ask for any of the money that was going after Sergeant Armstrong's election?—I never did, not since I was born.

3837. Were you ever offered money for your vote at any election?—I was offered money by Sadleir when Somers was in the field; I voted for Somers against Sadleir and John Wynne—in every case I voted for Somers, because I considered that he was badly treated.

3838. Do you know of anyone having got money for you after Sergeant Armstrong's election?—I don't.

3839. Do you believe that anyone did?—I don't believe there did.

3840. Did you make any application for any money?—I didn't.

3841. You heard that money was going, and you made no application for it?—I didn't. I gave no credit to the rumour.

3842. Do you swear that you went to Mrs. Hall's house because you were afraid to stay in your own house?—I do; my wife was afraid to let me stay in my own house, and she told me to go there.

3843. Your house was smashed at the last election?

THIRD DAY.
October 7.
Michael M'Goldrick.

—It was. I came to Mrs. Hall's on Tuesday, and went away on Friday; and when I went back I found my house was smashed.

3844. Was any intimidation or violence offered to you at the last election?—They insulted and blackguarded me, but I didn't mind that.

3845. Was any annoyance given to you?—Yes, but I didn't mind it.

3846. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Did you ever vote for the Conservative candidate, previous to the last election?—I voted for Mr. Macdonogh and for Mr. Adams, sir.

3847. Are you sure you voted for Mr. Macdonogh?—I am, though he never asked me.

3848. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Were you ever canvassed for Captain Flanagan?—I was.

3849. By whom?—By the mob.

3850. Did Captain Flanagan ever canvass you himself?—He did, he canvassed me twice.

3851. What did you say to him?—I told him I never promised anyone until I go to the hustings.

3852. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—How long, previous to Major Knox's election, did you hear that he asked for a situation for your son?—I can't say. My son went to the Irish Times office; he was a smart fellow, and Major Knox got him into the Post Office—I think it was. He then got him a nomination, but my son did not pass his examination.

3853. How long, before his appointment, did your son get his nomination?—It was a long time.

3854. Did you suffer for voting for Mr. Macdonogh?—I didn't. I lost by Sadleir's election.

3855. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Are you in the posting business too, as well as your son?—I am.

3856. Who are your principal customers?—I may say the Conservatives are.

3857. Is that since the last election?—It was so, both before and after the election.

3858. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Are you, yourself, a Liberal in politics; are your opinions Liberal?—I am a Liberal as far as I'd think there would be justice going.

John Dolan.

John Dolan sworn and examined.

3859. The Chief Commissioner.—You are an elector?—I am.

3860. Did you vote at the last election?—I didn't.

3861. How long have you been an elector?—I don't exactly know the year.

3862. Have you voted at every election before the last?—I have not voted for the last two or three elections.

3863. Whom did you vote for at the election between Sergeant Armstrong and Mr. Macdonogh?—I was, in fact, driven to vote for Sergeant Armstrong.

3864. What is that?—I was persuaded to vote for Sergeant Armstrong.

3865. You did vote for him?—I did.

3866. Previous to the last election did you get any money from Mr. Utred Knox, the Clerk of the Peace?—I did. I borrowed £6 12*s.* 6*d.* from him.

3867. Under what circumstances did you borrow it?—My landlord, at the time the rent was due, on the 1st February, '67, put in a bailiff on me. I was lying ill in bed for many weeks before that. I came out after that; I met Mr. Tom Browne and Mr. Utred Knox, and I told them what had been done by my landlord. They asked me what was the sum due by me for rent. I said a half-year's rent—£6. "It's a small sum," said Mr. Knox, "I'll lend it to you on your I. O. U." He was aware that Major Knox was applying for compensation for me, for injuries received by me as mail-guard. I told Mr. Knox that if he lent me the money I would repay him when I'd receive the compensation I applied for. He then asked me upstairs, drew out an I. O. U. for £6 12*s.* 6*d.* in presence of Mr. Tom Browne. I got the money, and by it I discharged the bailiff.

3868. Mr. Knox stated he gave you money on two occasions?—He did. A few weeks afterwards I had a small bill of £7 on the Bank of Ireland, and I asked him if he'd lend me £5. I said I would repay him when I got compensation. He lent me the £5.

3869. Do you fairly and honestly owe Mr. Knox these two sums?—I do, fairly and honestly owe £11 12*s.* 6*d.* to Mr. Knox. I apologised to him for not paying him, and he said it was time enough to apologise when I was pressed for payment.

3870. Did he ever apply to you for that money?—Never. I apologised to him two or three times for not paying it, and he always said it was time enough to apologise when he pressed me for payment. I told him the moment I'd get a settlement for the injuries I received I'd repay him.

3871. What injuries have you received?—I met with three railway and two coach accidents in Ireland, and three railway accidents in England, which incapacitated me as a guard.

3872. You say you voted for Sergeant Armstrong at one time?—I did; I may say I was driven to do so.

3873. How were you driven to do so?—By the threats of persons who threatened me with the anger of the O'Conor Don; it was the O'Conor Don's father got me the appointment of mail-guard.

3874. After Sergeant Armstrong's election did you get any money, eight or nine months afterwards?—From anyone in Sligo, is it?

3875. From anyone in Sligo or elsewhere?—I was promised it by Maurice Conry.

3876. How much were you promised?—He said I'd get £20.

3877. Where did he promise it to you?—I was living in Sligo after that election, and he promised it to me at my own house.

3878. When was that?—It was the April after the election. The election was in July, and the April following I was to get it.

3879. Do you mean that the promise of the money was made after the election?—Nearly twelve months.

3880. Did you apply for it then?—I went down to know if the money was forthcoming, and he said not at that time.

3881. Did anyone else promise you money?—Never.

3882. Were you promised any money before that election?—I wasn't.

3883. Did you ever get money for any election?—I got a present from Sergeant Armstrong after the election—twelve months nearly after it—but he said it had nothing whatever to do with the election.

3884. How much was the present?—£20.

3885. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—How did you see Sergeant Armstrong when he gave you the £20?—I saw him at his own house.

3886. The Chief Commissioner.—Was that after the promise to Conry?—It was.

3887. Who told you to go to Dublin to Sergeant Armstrong's?—I was on the Dublin and Sligo mails at the time.

3888. I know, but who told you to go to the Sergeant's house?—No one.

3889. Did you tell the Sergeant, when you went to his house, of Conry's promise?—I didn't. It was before Conry's promise that I was with him.

3890. How long before it?—It was the day before, I think.

3891. Did you get the £20 the day before Conry spoke to you?—I did.

3892. Did Conry send for you, or did you go to him?—He didn't send for me, I went to him.

3893. Was the word passed through the town that money was there?—I can't say.

3894. Did Conry tell you to go to him?—He did.

3895. You must relate all the conversation that passed between you and Sergeant Armstrong when you went to his house?—He told me that his friends were that day in Sligo.

3896. Doing what?—Settling his bills and his accounts: he said that after the election his accounts were never settled up to that. "I am sorry," he said, "you were not there, maybe you'd seen them." I said I had no knowledge of anyone being there. He then made me the present, and said, "this has nothing to do, mind, with the election."

3897. How was the money given?—By a cheque.

3898. Where did you cash it?—At Cork Hill, in Dublin.

3899. At the Hibernian bank?—Yes.

3900. Did you tell Conry you got the £20 from Sergeant Armstrong?—I didn't.

3901. Did you try to get £20 from Conry also?—When I went down to him he said I had got in Dublin what settled with me. I said, "Sergeant Armstrong will be here to-morrow"—which he was, at the banquet—"you will meet me, I will go face to face, and ask the Sergeant had you anything with him." He wouldn't come the following evening. Therefore, I wrote an explanation and gave it to the Sergeant. I never heard any more about it from that day to this.

3902. What was the explanation you wrote, it was about what Mr. Conry said.

3903. Listen to me now, did you, when Conry was in Sligo, mention that amount in order to get the other £20 from him?—Certainly. I expected he would give me what he promised. I did.

3904. You did not tell him that you got £20 from the Sergeant?—I didn't; because I was told by Sergeant Armstrong not to mention it to mortal man—that it had nothing to do with the election.

3905. Did you write the explanation?—I did.

3906. Asking for the £20 Conry promised you?—No, I told him to come to meet the Sergeant, because I would like him to say whether he did or not—that was the word I said.

3907. Was Sergeant Armstrong in Sligo the day following?—He was, at the banquet.

3908. Were you at the dinner?—I wasn't.

3909. Did you ever get any other money afterwards, for the election?—Never.

3910. Or any promise of it?—Never.

3911. Was your name in the cheque you got from Sergeant Armstrong in Dublin?—I signed my name on the back of it.

3912. Was your name in the body of the cheque?—I couldn't say.

3913. Had you done anything at the election?—Nothing, except to give my vote.

3914. Did you know of anyone else getting £20 or £15 of the money that was going for votes?—I heard of some persons getting it.

3915. Who did you hear got it?—I heard that Bernard Flynn and John Mooney got £15. They are dead.

3916. Try and mention the names of those who are living, and who got some of the money for their votes?—I cannot.

3917. Do not you know the town and the people in the town?—I do.

3918. And cannot you tell me the names of those who you heard got money?—If I knew any more I would tell you as well as I told them.

3919. Who did you hear was giving the money?—I heard it was an old man over at Stephen-street that was giving it, and that Bryan Chrystal was the messenger.

3920. From whom?—From the person that gave these two sums I mentioned; that was what I heard.

3921. Do you know was there a committee named for conducting the election?—I heard of its being in existence.

3922. Did you hear the names of that committee?—I did not hear.

3923. Do you know where the committee-rooms at the election were?—I do not.

3924. Tell me, do you, on your oath, intend to repay the £11 you borrowed from Mr. Utred Knox?—I do.

3925. Do you intend to repay the £20?—I do not, because it was given to me as a present. I borrowed the £11 12*s.* 6*d.*

3926. How long is your application for compensation for the injuries you sustained in?—Since '67.

3927. Has it been refused?—It has not.

3928. Do you still expect to get it?—I do.

3929. Were you told that it was refused?—I got no plump or decisive refusal. I got a promise of a favourable result.

3930. Have you any pension?—I have.

3931. What is the compensation for that you applied for?—I want compensation for injuries which caused me to retire from my post as mail-guard nine years before I should give up. The medical certificate from Dr. Toler is attached to the memorial.

3932. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Who threatened you with the anger of the O'Conor Don?—Mr. Cogan.

3933. What Mr. Cogan is that?—The sub-sheriff.

3934. Did you go to Sergeant Armstrong to ask him for anything, in Dublin?—I did. I did not ask him for any sum. When I went in he went to his desk, filled a cheque, and handed it to me as a present.

3935. Did you go to his house in Stephen's-green?—I did.

3936. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Was that in April?—It was.

3937. In what year?—I think it was '65; I won't be certain as to the year.

3938. That was the April after the election?—It was.

3939. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Why did you go to Sergeant Armstrong?—I had a little amount to meet at the time, and I intended to ask him for some favour. I never asked him anything when he made me the present.

3940. He surely asked you what you came for?—He never asked that question.

3941. Did not he ask what brought you to Dublin?—He did not. He knew I was in the habit of going to Dublin, being the mail-guard.

3942. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—You stated that Mr. Cogan threatened you with the anger of the O'Conor Don. What did he say to you when he so threatened you?—He said, "You would not wish to incur the anger of the O'Conor Don."

3943. What did you say to that?—I said I wouldn't, as I got my appointment through his late father. "Well, judge for yourself," said he, and he walked off.

3944. That was the only threat you got at that election?—The only one.

3945. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Did you vote for Mr. Somers?—I didn't. I wasn't here in these days.

3946. Were you an elector at Mr. Macdonogh's first election?—I was, and I promised to vote for him.

3947. Did you get any money for your vote on that occasion?—Not a sixpence.

3948. Did you ever get any money for it?—Never.

John Reid sworn and examined.

John Reid.

3949. The Chief Commissioner.—Were you examined at the trial before Judge Keogh?—No, I was not.

3950. You are an elector?—Yes.

3951. How long have you been an elector?—About six years.

3952. Whom did you vote for at the last election?—Major Knox.

3953. Whom did you vote for at the election before that?—Sergeant Armstrong.

3954. After Sergeant Armstrong's election did you get any money?—I did.

THIRD DAY.
October 7.
John Reid.

3955. How much?—£15.

3956. Who paid that?—Mr. Poe paid me. He is dead now.

3957. What was his Christian name?—Robert.

3958. Where did he live?—In Knox-street.

3959. Who told you to go to him?—Mr. Phillips.

3960. Mr. Martin Phillips?—Yes.

3961. What did he tell you?—Two or three days before the election I promised Sergeant Armstrong when he came in to canvass me that I would vote for him. Mr. Phillips came in in a day or two afterwards, between that and the polling day, and said there was a certain thing allowed for me. I never asked him what it was, nor never applied. Mr. Poe came in in a day or two afterwards and told me the same, that there was a certain thing. I never applied to Mr. Poe, nor never asked any of them for anything.

3962. When you say that they told you a certain thing was allowed to you, how much did they tell you?—They never told me anything.

3963. Was the phrase, "A certain thing," used?—A certain thing was allowed.

3964. You understood that that meant money?—Well, I took it to be that. I never asked whether it was money or what it was, but I took it to be that. So I said no more until the time came on—I think it was the April after—that I heard the money was given out. I was not at home on the day I believe it was supposed to be given out. I was at Dumsna at an auction. When I came home I heard that these two gentlemen were not ——

3965. According to promise?—I heard of others getting it.

3966. What others did you hear got the money?—Well, I heard that Pat Carroll got it. He is dead. I cannot exactly say who was the other at the time; but I went to Mr. Phillips and said I supposed there was a certain thing, whatever it was, that I was to get. "I have nothing to do with you," said he. "I never promised it to anyone, nor never said anything about it." "Well," I said, "which is it you or Mr. Poe that I am to rely on?" "Oh, go to Mr. Poe," said he, "you are on his list."

3967. On his list?—On his list. So I went down to Mr. Poe and he told me there was £15 allowed to me, so I got £15.

3968. Was not it before the election that Mr. Phibbs told you that something would be allowed to you?—It was.

3969. A certain thing?—Yes.

3970. And also before the election Mr. Poe told you?—Yes; Mr. Poe came to my own house; I never went after any of them.

3971. Go on about the payment of the money?—So I went down then to Mr. Poe and said, "I suppose that certain thing, whatever it is, you will be equal to your word now." Says he, "There is £15 allowed for you." "How comes it," says I, "that others are getting £20 and others £40; is not one man's vote as good as another's?"

3972. You mean as valuable as another's?—Yes.

3973. What did he say to that?—He said the committee would not allow me more, because, he said, the fact of the matter was I did not want it. I said, "I did not come after any of you to ask you; you came voluntarily yourself."

3974. Who did you hear got the £40?—Mr. Patrick Neilan.

3975. When did you see him last?—I saw him last week.

3976. He is living here in Sligo?—Yes.

3977. Who else did you hear got £40?—I did not hear of any other.

3978. Who did you hear got £20?—Paddy Carr.

3979. Anybody else?—Gunning.

3980. What is his Christian name?—I don't know.

3981. He is on the registry?—Yes.

3982. Is he a voter still?—I think he is.

3983. Is it Patrick Gunning of Pound-street?—Yes.

3984. Did these men tell you that they had got that?—They did.

3985. Patrick Neilan told you he had got £40?—No, he did not. He did not tell me anything, but that is what I heard. I had no speaking with Patrick Neilan.

3986. Did Carr tell you?—He did.

3987. That he got £20;—Yes.

3988. Did any other voter tell you that he took it?—Well, I am not exactly sure.

3989. I think Peter Cunningham got it?—He is not fit to come here, because he is bedfast.

3990. Of Market-street?—Yes.

3991. Is he bedridden?—He is.

3992. Anyone else?—I did not hear; I could not recollect them.

3993. How many did you hear got them?—To the best of my opinion—why the fact of the matter is, a great number of them; I could not give you a correct account.

3994. Were there fifty?—Well, there might be thirty or forty; I could not say; I never calculated them in my own mind, for I minded my own business and had enough to do.

3995. Did you ever get any money before for voting?—Never.

3996. Did you vote at the election before that?—I had no vote before that.

3997. Was it all twenties and fifteens that you heard were given, except the case of Patrick Neilan?—Yes, twenties and fifteens, and some tens.

3998. Who did you hear got ten?—I heard that Patrick O'Brien did. He is dead.

3999. Did you hear who were the gentlemen paying these sums of money?—Well, I heard of Mr. Martin Phillips, Mick Foley, and I think Mr. Kidd.

4000. Which Mr. Kidd?—I think Mr. Kidd of Knox-street.

4001. Do you mean Mr. James Kidd?—Yes, and Bryan Chrystal.

4002. Did you hear of anyone else paying money?—Michael Foley.

4003. Now, was your name down in any list to vote for the Sergeant?—Not that I am aware of, because I was independent myself. I wanted to be on no man's list, for I never went after one of them to ask for sixpence.

4004. When you did vote, did you vote according to your principles?—I did, according to my principles at the time.

4005. Do you remember the time you got the money—was Sergeant Armstrong in town?—No, he was not.

4006. Did he come to the town after that?—I think on the day after.

4007. Did you see the Sergeant then?—I did, but I never spoke to him.

4008. Of course not?—I never spoke to him except once, and that was the day he came to canvass me.

4009. About how long after the election was it that the money was paid to you?—I think it was in April.

4010. Now, on the occasion of the election between Major Knox and Captain Flanagan were you canvassed by both parties?—I was not canvassed by Major Knox. I was canvassed about eighteen months before that by himself; but I was canvassed by Captain Flanagan and his party.

4011. Did you promise Captain Flanagan?—No, I did not. I had no inclination to vote for the gentleman or his party either; and, therefore, I was not going to promise to him.

4012. You are a Roman Catholic?—Yes.

4013. When did you make up your mind to vote for Major Knox?—A month before the election I had made up my mind not to vote for either side; but from the intimidation that was carried on with me I said I would vote for Major Knox then in spite of any people, and I carried out that resolution, and would to-morrow if he were here again. I would go from this to Belfast to vote for him in preference to the persecution I suffered from the Liberal party.

4014. Now, describe the intimidation or persecution you say you suffered?—On the first day, I think it was, about the 14th or 15th of October—that was the second day of the canvass of Captain Flanagan—I was not in my own house but was out on my business. I believe Captain Flanagan called to my house, but I was not there.

4015. What is your business?—I am a furniture-broker. I was coming up Knox-street and Captain Flanagan's party was in Castle-street. There was a great gathering, a great mob, and they belonged to both town and country. One man got a hold of me and brought me back through the mob. I had two pictures with me. Another man got a hold of me, and another. One man came over with great fury and got a hold of me by the cravat; and they all began to haul me here and haul me there, and kick me, and my pictures were kicked and smashed, and my face was scraped and the cap taken off my head and kicked. It was Father Morris that came and took me out of the mob and let me home. The police could not get near me with the fury of the mob. My cap was kicked after me to my own door. From that day I was determined I would vote for Major Knox if I was brought to the infirmary; if I had it said that I would be carried on a door I would vote for him; in spite of the Liberal party I will as long as I am in Sligo, for I will never be coerced by any man.

4016. That was, you say, about the 14th of October?—I think so, to the best of my opinion.

4017. Did you receive any other insults?—I did.

4018. Go on?—The people hooted me every time they would go up and down the street; my shop windows were broken, and on the following Sunday night my windows were broken; that was the Sunday night before the election.

4019. Why did you go to Mrs. Hall's?—For protection for my life.

4020. Do you tell the Court that that was your sole reason for going?—That was my sole reason, because I did not want to have myself dragged and hauled on the day of the polling, leaving my own house; for I knew the fury of the mob, and that they were so determined that they would not certainly let me safe from my own house to the Court-house. I did not care at what expense, I was determined to go there for protection for my own life.

4021. I suppose you had learned that Major Knox's friends and supporters would be protected at Mrs. Hall's?—Yes.

4022. And that the house was there for them if they wished to go?—Yes.

4023. Who informed you of that?—No one informed me at all. I just partly guessed it from myself and from others that I heard went to it.

4024. Did you pay Mrs. Hall?—I did.

4025. Out of your own money?—Out of my own hard, honest earnings.

4026. Do you expect ever to be repaid that by anyone?—Never; nor never asked it. I would pay it to-morrow again for the same occasion.

4027. Was any offer of money made to you at this last election for your vote by either side?—No, sir, no money.

4028. Was any promise of any kind made to you?—No promise. I asked none, and was promised none.

4029. By either side?—By either side. I kept within myself, as my mind was fixed to vote for Major Knox from the intimidation that was carried out against me; and I would to-morrow. I would go from this to Belfast to vote for him.

4030. Did you ever get any other money for your vote at an election except the £15?—That's all the money I ever got for any election.

4031. Do you expect any money now in relation to this last election?—No, nor don't expect it; nor never will ask it.

4032. Has anyone directly or indirectly given you a promise, or have you heard a word about money?—Neither indirectly nor anything else; nor never asked it. They won't come to me, nor did I go to anybody.

4033. Was your house injured in any way?—It was.

4034. What was done to it?—The shuts were broken, and the greater portion of the windows were broken, and my doors were smashed.

4035. Did you make application for compensation?—I did, and got £10.

4036. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—You thought you ought to have got £20 instead of £15?—No, £14 was what I had in for compensation.

4037. Yes, but as to the voting for Sergeant Armstrong—you thought you ought to have got £20 instead of £15?—I did. I thought I was as well entitled to it as others. I did not see what distinction there was as to my vote.

4038. Before you went to Mrs. Hall's had you heard that money was going on Major Knox's side?—No, nor on Captain Flanagan's. I never bothered my head about these things, for I mind my own business.

4039. Did anybody tell you that there would be money going on Major Knox's side?—No, they did not.

4040. Did anyone tell you?—No.

4041. When were you first canvassed for the Major?—The Major canvassed me, I think, eighteen months before the election.

4042. So I think you said; but I mean after that?—Never, but one.

4043. What did you tell him that first time?—I told him that it was rather soon to make a promise before there was a word of an election. There was a rumour of a dissolution at the time, and I told him it was rather soon to make a promise; that I had no fault to find with Sergeant Armstrong — that he was a gentleman.

4044. Did you think he was a gentleman for giving you the £15?—No, sir. It wasn't for that that I gave him my vote. I never went after any person to ask till they came to the house.

4045. The Chief Commissioner.—Did you do any work at the election for the Sergeant?—No, I never interfered more than on the day of the polling.

4046. To give your vote?—Yes.

4047. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Tell us again what was said to you when you said you were as well entitled to the £20 as others?—He said that was all they allowed—the committee allowed.

4048. Did he give you any reason why they allowed you less than another?—Why they thought I was a little more independent, and that I did not want it at all; that was it. I made this reply to him—what did he know as to my private affairs.

4049. At the time you say this first assault was made on you, about the 14th of October, had you been canvassed by Captain Flanagan?—I had.

4050. What did you say?—It was in the latter end of July or August, I cannot say which, that Captain Flanagan came in to me and asked me to vote for him. I said it was too soon to make a promise. He asked me would I promise not to vote against him. I told him I would promise no such thing; that I would act freely and independently, as I thought fit, myself; that I would not be coerced by any man; that I was my own master; that I would do as I liked with what belonged to myself—and will do it.

4051. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Well, now, what induced you to change from the Liberal side to the Conservative—you voted for Sergeant Armstrong?—I did.

4052. What made you change your politics to Conservative?—I tell you, sir. I believed that Major Knox was a man that could represent the borough of Sligo. He had done a good deal for it; and hearing of his papers being read, and everything else, I believed that he was a man that would serve the borough more than any other member that could be returned for it. I believe that up to this day.

4053. When you say that he could do better than anyone else, do you mean by that that he could get situations?—I don't mean situations. I mean that I believed him to be a man that could get up a company, or factory, or something of that sort, and forward the interests of the town.

THIRD DAY. October 7. John Reid.

4054. The Chief Commissioner.—You mean that he was a man that would promote public works, and the general improvement of the town?—Exactly, sir. He was an advocate for tenant-right, according to his paper.

(The witness withdrew.)

Laurence Burke.

Laurence Burke sworn and examined.

4055. The Chief Commissioner.—I believe you were not examined at the trial before Judge Keogh?—No.

4056. Did you vote at the last election?—No.

4057. Did you vote at the election before that, between Sergeant Armstrong and Mr. Macdonogh?—I did.

4058. Whom did you vote for then?—Sergeant Armstrong.

4059. How long have you been an elector of the borough?—About twenty-five years—something about that.

4060. After the election between Sergeant Armstrong and Mr. Macdonogh did you get any money?—Twenty pounds.

4061. Who gave it to you?—A man named Brien Chrystal.

4062. Who told you to go to him?—I did not go to him.

4063. Did he come to you?—He came to me with the money.

4064. Did he pay it to you in your own place of business?—He did.

4065. What is your business?—I am a hatter.

4066. Did you know you were going to get that money—Well, I don't think I did. I did not think I would get it.

4067. What do you mean?—I could not swear I was sure.

4068. I do not mean sure; but did you hear before you got the money that money was in town for voters?—I heard that there would be money got.

4069. Did you hear of that before or after the polling?—I think I heard it both times, but after the polling I think I heard it most.

4070. Who told you before the polling?—Well, I think one Devanny.

4071. What is his Christian name?—James Devanny.

4072. What did he tell you?—He told me that there would be money given; but the amount I did not know.

4073. To whom?—To me and to him, and to others, he said.

4074. Whose supporters were you to be?—Oh, this was after the election, I think.

4075. What was the money to be given for?—I could not tell unless for voting.

4076. Was it for voting for Macdonogh?—It was Armstrong I voted for.

4077. At whose side was the money to be given that you heard about?—At Armstrong's side.

4078. Do you know of anyone else having got £20 besides yourself?—Bedad, I heard of James Devanny getting it, but I know of no person.

4079. Did James Devanny tell you he got it?—He did.

4080. Who else told you?—I am not certain.

4081. Tell according to the best of your recollection—amongst your neighbours and friends?—Well, I heard nothing. I could not tell. Several told me they got money.

4082. Electors?—Several persons.

4083. Did ten tell you?—I could not be certain.

4084. Did you hear of any person having got £15?—I did.

4085. Besides £20, did a different set of people get £15?—I did—I heard of that.

4086. Do you know what was the reason of the difference?—I could not say.

4087. How many electors altogether did you hear of as having got money?—I could not tell you.

4088. Did you hear of twenty?—I could not say.

4089. What did Chrystal say to you when he gave you the money?—He told me he was told to give me that £20.

4090. By whom?—He did not mention.

4091. Was it bank notes or a cheque?—In bank notes.

4092. Was it in your shop he gave it to you?—It was in a room over my shop.

4093. Then I suppose when he called you were in your shop attending to your business?—Yes.

4094. Did he bring you upstairs to give it to you?—Yes.

4095. Had he a list?—I did not see one.

4096. Did you see any paper with him except the notes he gave you?—Not to my knowledge.

4097. Had you ever got any money at any election before?—Never to my knowledge. At Sadleir's election £5 10*s.*, or something, was given for windows broken, but a penny of election money I never received but that from man breathing.

4098. You have mentioned Sadleir's election—did you vote for Sadleir?—I did.

4099. You say you got £5 10*s.* for broken windows?—Yes, for what was broken in my windows, but not for voting.

4100. Did you vote for Somers in his elections?—I did, several times.

4101. Were you always before this a member of the Liberal party?—Well, sir, I could not say. I was very indifferent about either party since 1848 I may say.

4102. Now, at this last election where were you on the day of the polling?—I was—well I prefer that you did not ask me that question—I went to Magrath's with Devanny the night before the polling.

4103. Who were there?—There was no person there when I went in but, I think, John Magrath himself. We sat awhile there, and Michael Hunt came in, and we sat together there.

4104. Yes?—And agreed to remain.

4105. At that time had you made up your mind not to vote?—Well, I had not.

4106. You had not?—I had not made up my mind not to vote.

4107. Whom did you intend to vote for, then?—Well, if I voted for any person I think I would have voted for Flanagan; but I was indifferent to vote for either.

4108. Then why did you leave your house if you intended to vote for Flanagan?—Devanny sent for me, and I went up to him, and he and I left the house together, and came down the street, and we went into Magrath's both of us, and sat down to drink.

4109. Well?—Then we agreed, and Michael Hunt came in shortly afterwards, and sat down with us, and we remained there.

4110. Did the whole of that party that you mentioned yesterday as the absentees—did the whole of that party there not vote?—None of them voted. There were but four—three, and Magrath, the man of the house.

4111. And none of you voted?—No.

4112. Did you intend not to vote when the whole of you were together there?—I did.

4113. What passed between you as to making up your minds not to vote?—Well, I could not tell; but we made up our minds to remain, and not vote at all.

4114. Did you get any promise for not voting for anyone?—No.

4115. From any human being did you get any promise?—No, sir; no person promised.

4116. Did you get any money?—No, not a shilling.

4117. Did anyone lend you any money?—No person lent me money.

4118. I do not mean about your business; did anyone lend you any money about that time?—No such thing.

4119. Did you pass an I O U about that time?—No.

4120. Did you pass any I O U the week before the election?—No.

4121. Or promissory note?—No.

4122. Has anyone now promised you any money?—No, sir.

4123. Why didn't you vote?—Well, I was indifferent to voting, and when I sat down to drink I suppose it made it worse. I did not care much about voting at any time on account of the way in which members go on in the House of Commons; it is only places they look for. Before this I absented myself from voting.

4124. Did your drink add much to your indifference?—Well, I don't know.

4125. You said that after you took a drop of drink you became more indifferent?—Well, certainly I was more so.

4126. You say you went away from Magrath's on the polling day?—Yes, that morning.

4127. What is your objection to tell the name of the house you went to?—Well, it's a lady that keeps the place, and it might injure her business.

4128. Do you tell me that really your only reason for not wishing to mention it is lest the lady should be injured in her business?—Nothing, on my oath, more.

If so, I will not ask you.

4129. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Did the Major canvass you?—No, sir. He was there, but I was out at the time.

4130. Did anybody ask you to vote for him?—No, sir; there might be people who asked me what way I would vote, but I said I was indifferent as to voting at all.

4131. Did anybody ask you to vote for Major Knox?—Not to my knowledge.

4132. Do you know Thomas Brennan?—I do.

4133. The young man?—Yes, I do.

4134. Did he often ask you?—Never had a word with the man.

4135. You know Cherry?—I do, well.

4136. Did he never ask you?—Never.

4137. Nor Mr. Stokes?—No man.

4138. Was there a good deal of rioting going on about the day of the election?—There was awful, sir—awful—desperate. Dreadful rioting that day. Awful. My house was destroyed altogether.

4139. Was your house smashed?—It was.

4140. Yet you say you were quite indifferent as to whether you voted or not?—Well, I may say since Sadleir's affair I was indifferent.

4141. Why did you not vote, and prevent your house from being smashed if you did not care much?—I don't know about that.

4142. Did not you believe that you would have some violence done, and some inconvenience done to your house if you did not vote?—No, sir, not at that time I did not.

4143. Why did you go away to Magrath's?—I went in with this young man to take a sup.

4144. Devanny asked Magrath to take a drink?—He did.

4145. What day was it that he asked you?—On the eve of the election, about half-past nine at night.

4146. When you went into Magrath's did you intend to stop all the election day there?—Yes, when I sat down a while I made up my mind to remain with him.

4147. Was it in consequence of anything Devanny said to you that you made up your mind to spend the day there?—No, I think not.

4148. Did you intend to stop there drinking the whole night and the whole day?—No, sir, I intended to stop there.

4149. You say you went there on Wednesday night?—Yes, I did.

4150. Well?—And then I made up my mind to remain with him.

4151. All night?—Yes.

4152. And all the next day?—And all the next day.

4153. And not to vote?—And not to vote.

4154. At that time did you believe your house would be smashed?—I did not. I had no knowledge of it at all.

4155. On the morning of the election was there any crowd about Magrath's?—There was a crowd on that day.

4156. You mean on the morning of the polling day?—There was a great crowd.

4157. Were they trying to get you out?—I don't know about that. I could not say. I believe they were trying to get them all out; but I don't know anything about it. I could not say. I was not up, and did not see them.

4158. Did you leave Magrath's in consequence of that crowd—were you afraid of violence?—We left it in the morning.

4159. Yes, but there was a crowd that morning?—Yes, sir, there came a crowd about that time, but we had left it.

4160. You had left before there was a crowd?—Yes.

4161. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—I suppose there was plenty of drink?—There was.

4162. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Did you pay for any?—I suppose I paid my part.

4163. I do not want to know what you suppose, but what you did?—Well, I did. I seldom or ever drink at another man's expense.

4164. Tell us distinctly whether you did pay or not?—I know I paid money in it.

4165. You did pay money?—Yes.

4166. Did you pay for your bed?—No.

(The witness withdrew.)

Michael Hunt sworn and examined.

Michael Hunt

4167. The Chief Commissioner.—You are an elector of the borough of Sligo?—I am.

4168. How long have you been an elector?—About a quarter of a century.

4169. Did you vote at the last election?—No.

4170. Where were you on the polling day?—I was in Magrath's.

4171. Were you with the last witness?—I was.

4172. Did you vote at the election before that?—I did.

4173. Whom did you vote for?—Sergeant Armstrong.

4174. After the election did you get any money?—No. I would not take any money, nor never got any money. I would scorn the idea of it.

4175. Have you been a supporter of the Liberal party?—Just when I thought they were right.

4176. Up to the last election?—When I thought they were right.

4177. I mean did you vote for Somers?—I did, always.

4178. Against Mr. Wynne?—Yes.

4179. And you voted for Sergeant Armstrong against Macdonogh?—I did.

4180. Did you promise anyone to vote before the last election?—I promised Major Knox that he would have my sympathy; I did not promise him my vote.

4181. Did you refuse Captain Flanagan's party?—I did. I thought he was not a fit man.

THIRD DAY.
October 7.
Michael Hunt

4182. Did you refuse him at the same time before the election?—I did at all times.

4183. Was there any intimidation practised upon you?—There was plenty of it, but I did not care for it.

4184. Just describe what it was?—All my windows were broken, and shutters smashed, and everything of that sort.

4185. Was that before the election?—It was and after.

4186. Were you one of those who made claims for compensation?—Yes, I was.

4187. How much did you get?—£10 only, though it cost me more.

4188. Why did you go into Magrath's?—He is my brother-in-law, and I just walked in there casually.

4189. Did you stay there the evening before the polling?—I did, sir.

4190. The whole night?—I did, sir. I stopped there the night before.

4191. Why on that occasion did you leave your own house?—I did not leave it for any particular occasion; I just happened to walk in there.

4192. Were you afraid to remain in your own house?—Well, I was not afraid, but I did not care about stopping there.

4193. When you left your own house did you intend to remain with your brother-in-law?—Well, I think I did at that time.

4194. Did you make an arrangement about the other electors being there?—No, not a bit. I just happened to meet them there casually.

4195. How did it happen that they all went to Magrath's?—I don't know indeed. He keeps a public-house, and they were in there. I found them tasting a drop when I went there.

4196. You had no arrangement with them?—No arrangement. I just met them casually, and they asked me to have a drink with them, and I did so.

4197. Did you remain up late that night at Magrath's?—I did remain I think to about eleven or twelve o'clock or so.

4198. You stopped with your brother-in-law that night?—I did, and slept with himself too.

4199. How long did you stay in his house the following day?—I think to about eight or nine o'clock, or something of that kind.

4200. In the morning?—Yes.

4201. And you did not then go home?—I did. I went home the evening I went to Magrath's, and came back again. It was only just two or three houses off, and I could go up as I liked.

4202. The polling began at eight o'clock, where were you then?—It commenced at eight o'clock I suppose.

4203. Were you then at Magrath's?—No, I was not there. Oh, I left Magrath's, I think—I did not leave it till the polling commenced. I did not leave it till about nine o'clock. It was hardly light at eight o'clock, and I don't think I left it till about nine.

4204. Where did you go to then?—Well, I would rather you would not ask that question. It is of no importance where I was then. I am found now.

4205. Did you remain away from home during the polling?—Yes, and when the poll closed I came up to Magrath's; and I went down to see how my house was, and came back again.

4206. Did you canvass anyone?—I was very anxious about his return, because I thought he was a fit and proper man, and that is just the reason.

4207. Then why did you not vote?—Well, perhaps that is just the question you might not ask me.

4208. I must ask you?—Well, if you do, his lordship, the bishop, sent for me.

4209. Now go on; tell what occurred?—He went so far that I just did not like to vote against him. I would rather not answer if you don't ask me.

4210. What did he say?—Two days before the election I told him that I had promised and that I would not break my word.

4211. That is, by voting against Major Knox?—Yes.

4212. You told him that?—Yes.

4213. You must now tell us all that occured between you and his lordship?—He went very hard on me to vote against my promise, but I would not do so. I told him then and there that I would not do it.

4214. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Just tell us what passed, Mr. Hunt, as far as you can?—He sent for me and Magrath both; and we went down and walked in and asked him did he want us particularly. He said about the election. I said I had promised Major Knox and did not like to go back on my word; that I was an anxious supporter of his and thought that he was a good man,—the right man in the right place; that I did not think an imbecile man like Captain Flanagan would be a useful member if returned; that he was a country gentleman and a man not suited for Parliament; and that if his return would please a few fanatics it would not please me at all. I told him that explicitly. I parted with him and said I would not vote.

4215. What did he say?—He could not say anything, once I said that, unless he took me by the neck and choked me. I did not care about priest or bishop, or any man,—I would not break my word for St. Peter.

4216. He did not use any threats?—Oh! no. Why would he use them to me? I am not so much afraid of a bishop.

4217. What did he say?—He said I was not bound by the promise I made and all that sort of thing.

4218. Did he say why you were not bound by your promise?—He did not say why, but he said he thought I was not bound by it, but I thought differently myself.

4219. Was there anything more on that conversation?—Oh! there was a great deal—casual conversation.

4220. Try and remember it?—I could not recollect it indeed. There was a good deal about one thing and another.

4221. Try and remember all he said to you?—Well I think it turned all on Martin Phillips. He said he thought he was a very good proper man. I said perhaps if he knew as much about him as I did he would think differently. Because after Sergeant Armstrong's election he called on me and offered to put £20 into my hand, saying I should give a receipt for it. "What's this for?" said I. "Oh! £20 for voting," said he. "Go along, sir," said I. "I never took money in such a way and I have been voting for a quarter of a century;" and I ignominiously rejected it.

4222. The Chief Commissioner.—Did he do that after Armstrong's election?—He did, and put it into my hands, but I put him outside the door. I am telling you the truth.

4223. You were perfectly right. What you say is to your credit and honour. You say that Phillips paid another man £10?—He did.

4224. Who was that?—Patrick O'Brien.

4225. In your shop?—Yes.

4226. And had a £20 note for you?—He put the £20 note into my hand. I asked him what it was for.

4227. What did he say?—He said it was of course what they were all getting; said I, "I never take money on such occasions as that." "Well," said he, "I will give you the address of the party and you can return it." "I don't want to have anything to do with you or your money," said I—"Go out of that, you common scoundrel; how dare you come to me with your money?"

4228. Do you know of any other money having been paid on that occasion?—I heard of plenty of money being paid, of course, because the whole of them were paid.

4229. How many were paid on that occasion?—Oh, God knows how many. I went over the list, and I think they were all paid except thirty.

4230. Everyone who voted for Armstrong?—Yes, all paid except thirty.

4231. How many were on that list?—Oh, I think about a hundred and seventy, or something like that.

I happen to know them all pretty well, you know, this long time.

4232. How did you go over the list?—I went over the printed forms.

4233. With whom?—Oh, with one or two more perhaps, scanning it over, for I knew them to be all paid.

4234. Was there any committee?—The committee were Patrick Keighron, Maurice Conroy, James Kidd, Martin Phillips, Michael Foley, and a whole lot of them.

4235. You mentioned Patrick Keighron?—Yes.

4236. Any other person?—Robert Poe; he that paid Reid.

4237. Did any of the voters themselves tell you they were paid?—They did, some of them.

4238. About how many?—Oh, plenty of them. Peter Davy told me he got £20 from Maurice Conroy for himself and £20 for his son; and not only that, but he told me he had great trouble to get it from him. He was promised £30.

4239. Did any more electors tell you they were paid?—Oh, plenty told me, but I cannot recollect them now. Thomas M'Gettrick told me he was paid £25 by Foley.

4240. Refresh your memory by going over the list?—(List handed to witness.)—What list is this?

4241. That is the present list?—Oh, I could point out plenty that I heard got it.

4242. Yes, that you heard got it for the election of 1865? (Looks at list.)—I heard that Owen Brewer got it—that is, from Armstrong's election; and Laurence Burke. This is not the list for that year; perhaps there are some names here of persons who were not electors then.

4243. Name any others?—Bryan Crystal, down there, was the paymaster—one of those fellows down there; Patrick Clancy, Hugh Conlon, Michael Coyne, Edward Crummie—he got £10 from James Kidd; Peter Cunningham, Peter Davy.

4244. Take this list, now, of 1865, it will tell you better?—These are parties that I heard got money, you know.

4245. Yes, certainly. (Takes another list)?—James Devanny, Owen Devanny, Thomas Devanny, Francis Donleavy, John Gallagher, James Gallavagh, Michael Gilligan, Michael Gillam, Charley Gillam, John Hagerty, Richard Hanna, John Jennings, John Kearns, Thomas M'Gettrick, John Mooney, Patrick Neilan, Andrew O'Beirne, John O'Beirne, Michael O'Beirne, Patrick O'Brien, William Pyne, Patrick Pyne, John Reid, James Reckey, Peter Tallant.

4246. Did any of these men tell you that they received money?—Some of them did.

4247. Did they tell you when they got the money and from whom?—Yes.

4248. These are the names you have already mentioned?—They are.

4249. Do you know anything at all about similar transactions on either side at the last election—that is, between Knox and Flanagan?—Well, I think there was not a shilling on either side at it—at least I did not hear it. I think it was the purest election that ever occurred in Sligo. In fact the electors were always pure in Sligo until Priest Phillips brought the notorious Sadleir here, and that was the man that ruined the whole town. The elections of Somers were very pure, for he was too poor, and we used to subscribe to keep him in.

4250. Are you giving us information now about the election of 1865?—I am giving you what I know to be true.

4251. I want to know do you know anything at all, on either Knox's or Flanagan's side, about anybody paying money at the last election?—I don't know one person who was paid money, not one, nor never heard of one.

4252. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—But you have read the evidence taken before Judge Keogh?—I was present listening to it. I was summoned, but was not examined.

4253. You heard them admit there that they got money?—It was true, I suppose. They would not admit it unless they got it.

4254. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—From your knowledge of the borough do you think Sadleir thoroughly corrupted the constituency?—I may almost swear that he was the greatest curse Sligo ever saw. They were the purest and honestest electors until foreigners and scoundrels were imported here. Until then I never saw purer or more decent electors. They subscribed to put Somers in; until scoundrels that wanted to put money in their pockets—

4255. It was not made purer by Sergeant Armstrong's election?—The man was imposed upon. It was extorted out of him. He had no more notion of paying them than you had, or I either.

4256. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Did you hear anything of money going on Macdonogh's side between him and Armstrong?—I heard there was.

4257. Could you point out on the registry any names of persons that you heard got money on Macdonogh's side?—(Registry handed)—That got money on Macdonogh's side?

4258. You have told us of a large number getting money on Sergeant Armstrong's side?—At that time, having voted for Sergeant Armstrong, I had not the same opportunity of talking with the electors; but from repute I could point out a few that I heard got it, and some that told me they got it.

4259. Just go over the list and tell us the names of those who told you that they got money, and the names of those who you heard got it?—I heard that George Blair got money, whoever he got it from.

4260. He voted for Macdonogh?—I don't know whether he did or not. I happen to catch a name here now, whoever he got it from, I heard that he did get it. John Burke I heard got it. James Burrows——

4261. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Mention any of those that told you they got money from Mr. Macdonogh?—Samuel Gilmore, I heard got some; Thomas Graham; Alexander Jackson, I heard got it; James Kerr; Henry Mulligan, I heard got it, James Wallace. There are a good many more; but I say what I heard.

4262. The Chief Commissioner.—Did any of them tell you?—Some of them did—two or three, perhaps.

4263. Whom did they tell you they got money from?—One of them told me it was put under his door in an envelope—fifty pounds.

4264. Who told you that?—James Johnston.

4265. Who else told you that he got any that you remember, and how did he get it?—I forget now, really. I could not think of them, it is so long since; but I know I had conversations with some of them.

4266. Who was the paymaster on that side?—Well, I could not tell that. I did not hear it, I think, directly from anybody.

4267. Was the name Rowlett mentioned?—I never knew him to be anything of the sort.

4268. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Did you know him?—I did, well, sir. He is a land agent who lives three miles out of this.

4269. What is his Christian name?—Mathew Rowlett.

4270. You have told us that the corruption began in Sligo when Sadleir came?—That is the first I ever knew of it.

4271. Do you mean to say that in the election between Somers and Wynne there was not any?—Mr. Wynne would not lose a farthing, and Mr. Somers hadn't it, so how could it be?

4272. As a matter of fact?—As a matter of fact there was none to my knowledge. If there was I had nothing to do with it.

4273. I am not saying that you had anything to do with it?—No, I would scorn the scoundrels.

4274. Is it your opinion, from your knowledge, that neither in 1857 nor 1859, was there money going on either one side or the other?—In 1857 or 1859?

4275. Oh, yes, at both these elections?—That was Wynne and Somers. I don't know of such a thing at all. I don't recollect it. On one occasion Somers got only a few votes, and they all voted for Mr. Wynne, so that there was no trouble then.

THIRD DAY.

Michael Hunt

4276. The year before that was the one in which Somers was unseated on a petition?—That's the one.

4277. He had a majority of six then?—That was it; and Mr. Somers could have been returned at that, only for a clap-trap meeting held in a newspaper-room in Knox-street, and they got thirty or forty Liberal electors together, and made them vote for Wynne to get rid of Somers. He had no money for them, and they wanted to get rid of a nuisance.

4278. Was that in 1859?—When they put Somers out.

4279. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Was it after that that Sadleir came at the next election?—Sadleir was in 1853, I think; '52 or '53. I never paid much attention. I did not think I would be brought here for any nuisance of this sort. Set of rubbish! They were all plundering and robbing, and that is all they care about.

4280. The Chief Commissioner.—You are now giving evidence, and you are not to give opinions?—I am giving what I believe to be true.

4281. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—You say they turned Somers out in 1859, because they could get no money out of him?—I think that is the reason they wanted to get rid of him. He was a favourite, and they kept him in by subscribing for a long time.

4282. Surely they expected money from Mr. Wynne?—No, he would not lose a farthing. He did not care about it until it was actually forced on him. He came to canvass me and said, "I don't care much about it."

4283. You said you went over the list that you have been going over now. On what occasion was that; was it just from curiosity that you did so?—The thing was so notorious that my attention was called to it; that was the reason.

4284. It was from no political reason that you did so?—Not a bit. I did not care a jack straw about any of them. I was under no compliment to any man living; there is not a man in Europe that I am under compliment to. In fact I would not identify myself with some of them at all.

4285. You have told us about that interview between you and the bishop; had you any other interview with any other clergyman?—Oh, I had; they called frequently. I always told them the same thing—that I thought the Major was a good man, and would vote for him. And so I would vote for him only for the intimidation that was carried on. If he came to-morrow I would vote for him. I think him to be the right man in the right place. They will never get as good a man.

4286. Were there any threats, religious or otherwise, used towards you?—Nobody dared to do so to me.

4287. I do not want to know whether they dared, but whether they did?—There was no such thing. I would not allow anybody to threaten me at all.

4288. The Chief Commissioner.—Do you know anything about ten voters agreeing together and wanting to get £1,000 from Captain Flanagan?—I don't know any thing at all about ten voters. I never knew of more than four or five.

4289. That what?—From Captain Flanagan—no such thing at all.

4290. Do you know anything about any small body of voters?—I recollect that at the Armstrong election there were five or six.

4291. What did they want?—They were making some terms, I don't know what. I never had any conversation with them about it.

4292. Making what?—Making terms with some parties to vote for Armstrong. The fact is, I was anxious that Armstrong should be returned, and I kept them secured. If I take an interest in a man, I take to him with heart and soul; and if I don't, I am against him.

4293. Who were these four or five?—Well, James Moran, John Magrath, Thady Kilgallon, and John Harte.

4294. Are these the men?—These are the men.

4295. Were they going together?—They seemed to be. Whichever one would vote for they would all vote for.

4296. Were these men to be secured by money?—I am not aware of that of my own knowledge. I don't know anything about it.

4297. How much did they want a piece?—I never heard of anything of the sort. I heard some one say about £50 a man, or something like that. I don't know it of my own knowledge—mere hearsay.

4298. Did they offer themselves to the Sergeant's side for £50 a man?—I don't think they offered themselves at all, inasmuch as they were all anxious to vote for him; and I was doubly anxious, and strove to secure them as well as I could, for it was a crisis.

4299. How did you strive to secure them?—Well, I just kept secreting them. I thought I would bring them in a tally, and make them vote together, as they were all anxious to do.

4300. Where did you keep them?—A while in my own house, another while in another house. I was trying to make a tally as I thought Armstrong was in a very close crisis.

4301. How long did you keep them together?—About an hour or two; but they were not kept together; they were going and coming.

4302. And whatever one was to do the others were to do?—Well, I thought so.

4303. You mentioned £50 a man?—I heard that; something about that.

4304. Did you hear Kilgallon say that?—I did not.

4305. Who did you hear say there would be £50 a man for them?—I heard Moran and Magrath and some of those talking about £50 a man; that it was scarcely enough for them, or something like that.

4306. Did you know any man that wanted a small sum this last election?—I did not.

4307. Did you ever ask anybody for money—I don't say for yourself, but for some of the poor electors?—Did I ever ask anybody for money? An elector may have told me to speak for him, or something like that.

4308. Just so?—That is the very thing I would do. I might sign a memorial for him, or something like that, if he was wanting something.

4309. Did you, in point of fact, as regards this last election?—No, sir. I did not, indeed, that I recollect.

4310. You say, "signing a memorial?"—I don't recollect that I did.

4311. Why did you use the phrase, "signing a memorial?"—Well, that they might have asked me, and that I would have done so.

4312. To whom?—To anybody; to either of the members. If anybody said he was distressed, and asked me to write a bit of a note for him, I would do so.

4313. Do you think you have done so?—Well, I don't know. I am sure I did not do so at this last election, for I don't know whom I would write to. Of course I would not write to Captain Flanagan, and I would not like to intrude on Major Knox.

4314. Did you mention to anyone on Captain Flanagan's side that some of the poor electors would have to be bought?—Not that I recollect. Indeed I did not, because I did not care about any party; that's the truth. I did not care about any party, and I let everybody fight for themselves, and return whom they could.

4315. Did you mention anything about money to the bishop?—Oh, not a word. I never heard about money.

4316. The bishop, I presume, spoke to you about other electors!—He did. I don't recollect that there was a word about money.

4317. No. Understand me?—He just sent for me to strive to bring me round to make me vote for Flanagan against my will and against my promise, and that's all about it.

4318. I am not asking you about yourself, but in giving your opinion did you mention any person who, you said, would require to be paid?—No, I did not.

4319. Are you sure?—I am quite sure, for I know I would not be capable of doing such a thing.

4320. I do not mean that you asked money for them, but did you give your opinion that they were men that would have to be paid?—I don't think I did. To be candid, I would not do anything so openly.

4321. Did you know any knot or "cave" of men—some five, six, or ten—that were going together this time?—No, I did not.

4322. Were there the same men who were in the band of five at the election of 1865?—I knew that some of them voted for Flanagan; I think about three out of six—Hart, Moran, and Kilgallen.

4323. Did you poll these five men for Armstrong?—I did, and returned him too.

4324. Who else were working at those five men?—I don't recollect anyone working at them, or striving to keep them together, except myself. That is my opinion.

4325. Did you give them the word, that it would be all right after the election. I did not. They had some word about it. I did not care about any consideration whatever.

4326. Were these men paid afterwards?—I think they were not.

4327. Not paid?—No, this Phillips went round gathering them together. He even came to myself, insulting me with £20. It would have been rather late, after twenty-five years, to take £20 from a scoundrel like that. It would have been very low to do such a thing, indeed.

4328. Well, I am glad I asked you the question, for you acted as became an honourable man?—I am very glad myself, for if they had said the contrary of me I would have come up to tell you that some of the fellows were damned liars.

The Chief Commissioner.—Well, I can make allowance for your excited feelings.

4329. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Do you remember when Mr. Macdonogh was the sole candidate, and got in without a contest?—I do.

4330. Did you hear of any money going then?—I heard he paid them very liberally after it, though there was no contest at all.

4331. Do you know the names of any of them that you heard were paid?—I heard of a great lot, but I cannot just give them now.

4332. The Chief Commissioner.—Were they the same men?—The very same men that I read out for you the second time.

4333. Were they, as you understood, paid at the uncontested election?—They were; that was the time that they were paid. I heard them all exclaim, the last time, that they got nothing at all. When the man was out they got nothing. He paid them liberally, in order to ensure them and have them for him; but you know they have new politics every day in Sligo, and if you are with them this day you are not with them next week. You cannot depend much on them—that is one thing certain.

(The witness withdrew.)

James Moran examined.

James Moran.

4334. The Chief Commissioner.—Were you examined at the trial in Carrick?—Yes, I was, one day. I never was called upon there. I merely went up upon a letter.

4335. Were you sworn and examined there?—Never.

4336. Are you an elector?—Yes.

4337. How long have you been an elector?—I have been a long time—nearly thirty years.

4338. Whom did you vote for at the last election, or did you vote at all?—I did.

4339. Whom did you vote for?—Captain Flanagan.

4340. Was any offer of money made to you at the last election?—No, never.

4341. By any one?—By any one.

4342. Whom did you vote for at the election before between Mr. Macdonogh and Sergeant Armstrong?—I voted for Sergeant Armstrong.

4343. Did you get any money after the election?—Never.

4344. Did you hear that any money was going?—Oh, indeed I did.

4345. Did you apply for any?—Well, I did.

4346. Whom did you ask for the money?—Mr. Phillips.

4347. Mr. Martin Phillips?—Yes.

4348. What did he tell you?—Well, he told me he had only a certain complement.

4349. How much?—£20.

4350. That is £20 a man, is it?—Yes.

4351. Did you refuse to take that?—I did not take it.

4352. Did you refuse to take it?—I did.

4353. Because you did not think it was enough?—I suppose so.

4354. You must answer—you are on your oath?—Yes.

4355. You put your name on that (piece of paper exhibited)?—Yes.

4356. You are one of the persons that the witness yesterday described as the aggrieved party?—Yes.

4357. How many others were in the same position as yourself—who would not take the £20?—Five, I think.

4358. Who were the five?—Hunt, himself, M'Grath——

4359. Hunt, himself?—Yes.

4360. Do you mean the Hunt that was examined here just now?—Yes. Michael Hunt that was here now and John M'Grath.

4361. And do you mean to say that he refused to take the £20 because it was not enough?—I heard him say so.

4362. Where did you hear him say so?—Well, so far as that, I can't well say, but it was some time about the time of the occurrence.

4363. Now, there were five of the aggrieved party—who were the other two?—M'Grath, John Hart, Hunt, and myself.

4364. Do you remember who the fifth was?—Haven't I told you five? Hunt, M'Grath, Hart, and myself.

4365. That is only four?—'Pon my word, I can't well call to mind.

4366. Was it Thady Kilgallen?—It was not. He never was in the place at all.

4367. Thady Kilgallen you mean?—Yes. He was not in the place at all.

4368. Was it Laurence Burke?—It was not.

4369. How do you know that all these men refused to take the £20—did they tell you so?—Yes, they did; some of them I think told me.

4370. Who did they tell you offered them the £20?—Well, I believe it was Mr. Phillips.

4371. Did you speak to Mr. Phillips more than once on the subject?—I did.

4372. What did you say to him?—Well, I said at the time he told me he had it for me, he never offered it to me—I said I would not take it. Then again I demanded it, and I would not get it.

4373. Then you demanded it afterwards?—Yes, but I could not get it. He said he had none.

4374. How long was it afterwards that you demanded it, when you found you would get no more?—Well, I suppose it was a week or two. I could not say.

4375. Did you complain of this treatment?—To whom?

4376. To any one—did you complain of it to Sergeant Armstrong?—I did.

4377. Did you write to him?—Not I.

4378. Who wrote for you?—Well, I think it was Hunt.

4379. Do you mean Hunt who was examined here to-day?—Yes.

THIRD DAY.
October 7.
James Moran.

4380. Did you ask him to write for you?—Well, indeed I never did.

4381. How did you know he wrote for you?—Well, I suppose when he wrote for me he wrote for the party.

4382. For the five?—Decidedly.

4383. For the aggrieved party?—Well, there was no agreement more than that we went in one day at the election, and we took a glass or half glass of brandy from one to the other, and we just agreed to have it so.

4384. Did Hunt apply for the five of you?—He never did anything at all of the kind. We went in as he kept a public-house, and told the terms one to another, and we compacted to do so.

4385. Were the five agreed to go together—that is, the way one was to vote the others were to do the same?—Decidedly.

4386. And you had not made up your mind whether to vote for Sergeant Armstrong or Mr. Macdonogh?—Well, we were inclined to vote for Sergeant Armstrong.

4387. Were you quite made up on the subject?—Well, I am sure we would vote, no matter how it went.

4388. Did Mr. Hunt ever speak to you about his having written to the Sergeant for you?—He never did.

4389. And how did you know he wrote to the Sergeant?—Well, I give you my word and oath I could not well say, but since you put the question, I think there was something about it.

4390. Between whom?—Magrath and Hunt. I don't know if there was a fourth person in it.

4391. Did you complain of your treatment at the last election when you were canvassed by the Liberal party at this election?—Complain!—well, I believe I did.

4392. To whom?—Troth, I don't know now who it was.

4393. You must tell us now; that gentleman will be examined afterwards?—Well, I never made my appearance to them at the time of the canvass I did not chance to be in. I didn't hide from them, but I did not chance to be in my own house at the time. I might have complained to several parties.

4394. You must tell us to whom did you complain of the bad way you were treated in not being paid for your vote at the election of '65?—Whom did I complain to?

4395. Yes?—I could not point out any single person now.

4396. Well, name two or three if you like?—I don't know that I complained at all in a matter of the kind.

4397. Did you want on this election to be paid your losses in '65?—Did I want it?

4398. Did you want to be paid the money—the £20 that you ought to have got for the '65 election?—I did not want it.

4399. Did you ask for it?—I never asked any party except a young man that was in my own place that said he knew these parties that were going to the room. But to make it public to anybody I didn't.

4400. Who was the young man?—A young man named Boyle, a clerk to myself and Mr. Foley. We were in partnership at that time.

4401. Was that Michael Foley?—Yes.

4402. And in what business was he in partnership with you?—In the butter trade.

4403. What did you tell it to Boyle for?—Merely because he was a clerk in the tally-room of the other party.

4404. Which other party?—The Liberal party, at Captain Flanagan's. I am not in the way of making complaint to anyone save and except to him, and it passed between ourselves.

4405. What was the complaint you made to him—was it that you had not been paid for the election of '65?—Decidedly, and that I wished to be compensated.

4406. Did you mention the names of the other five at all?—I believe I did not, for he knew the circumstances as well as I did myself.

4407. And the whole town knew it, too, I suppose?—That may be.

4408. That you were not paid what other voters were paid at the time—that you did not get the £20?—I could not say.

4409. Who told you that they were paid?—I heard a great deal of rumours that people were paid, but whether they were or not I can't say.

4410. Did anyone ever speak to you about compensating you?—Compensating me at the last election?

4411. Yes?—Never to my knowledge.

4412. I mean compensating you for your losses at the '65 election?—I have no recollection of it.

4413. Is that all you swear?—That is what I swear distinctly.

4414. Was this at the time of the revision?—No; but just coming on the election.

4415. Did Boyle, the clerk in the tally-room, ever bring any word back to you from head-quarters?—Yes. Well, he used to tell me stories—whether they were true or not—to the effect that I would be compensated.

4416. Tell what he told you—did he tell you you would be compensated?—He told me I would.

4417. And the rest of the fry?—No, I don't recollect that.

4418. When did he tell you that?—Some days previous to the election.

4419. Did you believe him then?—Well, I could not well now say whether I did or not.

4420. Whom did he tell you that he had spoken to?—I give you my word I could not say that.

4421. Did he tell you he had spoken to anyone on the subject?—I give you my word I could not say any one certain person was.

4422. When Boyle told you that you would be compensated did you understand that to be the £20?—I did not.

4423. What did you understand it to mean?—Well, I could not say.

4424. How much?—Whether it would be a bigger or a lessor sum I could not say.

4425. Did you ever ask £50?—I did.

4426. Whom did you ask it from?—I said I thought I should get £50, or some words to that effect.

4427. Whom did you say that to?—To Boyle.

4428. Did that mean the £50 you were promised for your vote in '65?—Well, I believe it was.

4429. Cannot you answer me frankly?—I say it was distinctly.

4430. Who promised you that £50 in '65?—Who promised it to me?

4431. Yes?—We were promised it at Hunt's by Mr. R. Phillips.

4432. Was Michael Hunt present?—Well, he was in the place, but I could not know whether he was distinctly listening to the words.

4433. Was he in the room with you when Mr. Phillips promised the £50 for your vote in '65, that is a plain question?—He was in the room, in the one apartment, but whether he was listening or not I could not swear.

4434. Were the rest of the men there?—They were all there.

4435. Were they promised £50 a piece by Mr. Phillips?—I think I was promised it on their part.

4436. That is Mr. Phillips promised you that each of the five would get £50—did he?—Well, he did something to that effect. I could not well say whether what he said was that we would be liberally treated or not. He came round it. I don't know on my oath that he mentioned pounds distinctly.

4437. But "fifty" was mentioned between you?—Well, there was certainly.

4438. Very well. We will not say £50, but "fifty" was mentioned?—Certainly.

4439. Was Hunt also to get "fifty?"—Well, we were all the same.

4440. Was Hunt one of the five that were to get £50 a piece?—Decidedly.

4441. Did Hunt know that?—I believe he knew it as well as we did.

4442. Was that the reason he refused the £20?—Yes.

4443. Then in order to get the compensation for the breaking of the previous promise in '65, did you think the Liberal party this time would give the £50?—I would be glad they would.

4444. Did you try to get it from them?—I did, on conditions. I'll tell you——

4445. What conditions?—Through the clerk going to their tally room.

4446. Did Boyle give you to understand you would get £50 a piece, the five men?—He did not.

4447. Did he give you to understand you would get it yourself?—No, he did not, but he was telling me we would be all right, and this, that, and the other you know, but he never could say it from himself.

4448. He never said, I suppose, "I will give you £50 for your vote?"—He never said it as plain as that.

4449. But did he tell you it would be all right?—Yes.

4450. Was there any word going at the last election beside "all right?"—Any word?

4451. Any hard word that you understood?—Never. I was asked, and I said I would vote for Flanagan, no matter what the consequences would be. A certain gentleman asked me.

4452. Who asked you?—Father Morris.

4453. Now, was there any talk about the £50 between you and anyone else beside Boyle?—Never. I had nobody; I did not look after it. I never interfered in my life in any election to ask a penny except on one occasion, and I think it was through taking liquor then, and I was sorry for it, and I never intended the like after.

4454. But through taking liquor you did ask some money?—I did.

4455. Whom did you ask it from?—I am after telling you over and over; I asked it from Mr. Phillips and a whole lot of those Liberal men that wanted, you know, to get at the voters, and, of course, when we refused, and they found that we were there, they came and insisted that we should.

4456. Was that this last election?—Not at all.

4457. You are talking about the previous occasion?—I am telling you about the last.

4458. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—When you voted did you expect it would be "all right?"—At the last election?

4459. Yes?—I never intended to get a shilling.

4460. Attend to what you say. You said you told Boyle you expected to be compensated?—I did till it came to the latter days; but finding no money going, I made no inquiries, nor did not look for anything.

4461. Who told you there was no money going?—I found it; I knew it, from hearing the talk of the people over the town, that there was not a shilling to be given on the part of Captain Flanagan.

4462. Who told you that?—I heard it talked of by several; I could not exactly say by whom.

4463. Try and recollect the name of any person who told you?—Oh, I could not; I heard it by many persons that there was not a shilling to be given on the part of Captain Flanagan; that his lordship and the clergy prohibited him from losing a shilling on that occasion.

4464. Was that after you had the interview with Boyle?—Yes.

4465. And did you go to Boyle again after that?—No, I did not. He was only a young man that was backwards and forwards in this tally-room, and, of course, when he was in my employment, he would like to tell me matters of that kind.

4466. But did you not say to Boyle, "How is this? You said it would be all right, and afterwards I find there was no money going?"—Finding after that there was no money. There was a great report that there would be money, I suppose, or something to that effect—dear knows. I cannot——

4467. But I want clearly to understand what you mean. You say that you first believed it would be all right?—I say that when they came and canvassed me in my own place, and when I was not there, I said to this Boyle that I should like to get what I was put out of on the former election, and he said he had made some inquiries, and that I would be all right, or something to that effect. I cannot say for a certainty, but I am telling you what I know of it.

4468. And you heard afterwards it would not be "all right?"—I found afterwards that there was no money on the part of Captain Flanagan whatever; then I did not go further with it.

4469.—Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Did you make any application to Mr. Phillips for money till the April after Sergeant Armstrong's election?—I did not. I don't know for the exact time, but I did not make any application to him till I heard such was going.

4470. You made no application till you heard the money was being paid?—Decidedly.

4471. Did you hear of any money being paid after Mr. Macdonogh got in without a contest?—Mr. Macdonogh.

4472. You remember Mr. Macdonogh getting in without a contest?—I do.

4473. Did you hear of any money being paid to his supporters?—I might hear it, but I have no recollection, for I had no great conversation with that party that I know anything at all about it.

4474. Did you hear it?—I did. I often heard it. Some months after his return? It might be. I don't know what certain time.

4475. And you were quite content to wait for Sergeant Armstrong's money till some months after the election?—Well I suppose I had to do what every one was doing.

4476. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Did you vote for Mr. Somers?—I did at all times, and I gave £10 myself on one occasion to help to support him.

4477. Did you get any money for voting for him?—Never.

4478. But you gave £10?—Yes.

4479. When Mr. Sadleir was elected, who did you vote for?—For Mr. Sadleir.

4480. And did you get any money for voting from him?—I never did, or in my whole life get a shilling.

(The witness withdrew.)

Mr. Robert M'Cullagh sworn and examined:

4481. The Chief Commissioner.—You are manager of the Ulster bank here?—Yes.

4482. A person named Rooney was examined as a witness yesterday. He stated that he brought a cheque without a name to it, to your bank, and that he was paid £12 on it. Have you made search in the books for the entry?—Yes.

4483. Will you refer to it?—We never paid any such document—we never saw it. The only thing I can find with his name was on the 14th of February. I am quite sure the man has misdescribed it.

4484. What you mean is, that you never paid a cheque without a name to it?—Certainly not.

4485. But on the 14th of February was there £12 paid to him through your office in Sligo?—I don't know that it was to him, but there was to a Mr. Rooney. These are the full particulars (hands in a document).

4486. Did your office pay £12 to Michael Rooney on the 14th of February?—Yes, on that letter of credit.

4487. On a letter of credit drawn by the Ulster bank in Dublin upon the Ulster bank in Sligo?—Yes.

4488. The letter of credit was dated 13th of February, '68.—Yes.

4489. Now in the course of business in your bank,

THIRD DAY.
October 7.
Mr. Robert M'Cullagh.

can it be ascertained who lodged or gave in the name when the £12 was lodged that was transmitted from Dublin to Sligo through your bank?—At the Dublin branch I am sure they could give the name. They generally take the name of the party getting a letter of credit.

4490. In the course of your business at your office, the person fills the docket or paper with his own name?—His own name as applicable to the letter of credit.

4491. Is this letter numbered in your books?—It is merely our own number is on it, but it would give no information. It is numbered though in Dublin.

4492. Does not the number indicate that £12 was paid to the Dublin branch in February?—Certainly.

4493. And in that way it can be ascertained?—Yes.

4494. Well, in order not to put the bank to any inconvenience I will ask you to write to Dublin for that information?—Very well.

4495. Otherwise we will have to subpœna the gentlemen from Dublin to bring the bank books, and of course we do not wish to cause unnecessary inconvenience to a public office such as yours. Now would it be possible to get the original requisition?—Certainly.

4496. Is that filled regularly?—They are filled regularly.

4497. Well, will you write to Dublin this evening for the original requisition, and when it comes I will ask you to produce it here.

4498. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—If by any chance the original requisition is lost, ask for an extract from the bank book?—Yes.

4499. The Chief Commissioner.—The name of the man who lodged money is put in the bank book also?—Yes.

4500. Very well, get a copy of that and the original requisition.

John Hart.

John Hart sworn and examined.

4501. The Chief Commissioner.—You are an elector of the borough?—Yes.

4502. How long have you been an elector?—For ten or twelve years, I suppose, something like that.

4503. Did you vote at the last election?—I did.

4504. For whom?—For Captain Flanagan.

4505. Now at the election of '65, for whom did you vote?—For Sergeant Armstrong.

4506. Did Martin Phillips make you any promise before you voted?—Never.

4507. Were you in the room with the four other men?—Unfortunately I was.

4508. Why unfortunately?—Because I went in to take a drop of drink along with the others, and I was sorry afterwards for going into it in consequence of that.

4509. Did you see Phillips there speaking to Moran?—No.

4510. Did you ever hear you were to get any money?—Well, in the course of the evening I heard them say—he mentioned promises but did not say what.

4511. You heard Phillips say that?—Oh, no.

4512. Whom, then?—I heard Moran and some of the party say that Phillips made promises.

4513. For the five?—I could not say. I was a little hearty, and I pledge you my word I never got it nor never asked.

4514. Do you remember what occurred?—Very badly.

4515. You say you remember there was some talk about promises?—Yes.

4516. That it would be "all right," was that phrase used?—No.

4517. What phrase was used?—I could not rightly tell. Allow me to explain. I went in to have half a glass of whiskey and I got half a glass of brandy. I am not a good drinker, and I did not think myself altogether the better of it.

4518. You heard that Phillips made some sort of promises?—I heard either Moran or M'Grath—I could not say which of the two—say that they were talking to Phillips about it, and that Phillips made them some sort of promise—I could not say what.

4519. Do not you now know perfectly well that that was a promise of money for your vote?—I dare say.

4520. Do not use the phrase "I dare say." Have you any doubt on the subject?—I have not a doubt about it.

4521. How much?—I could not say.

4522. How much did you understand? How much money?—I heard them talking about £250 or £300, I could not tell you which.

4523. Between whom was that to be divided?—Between the five that were there.

4524. Who were they?—Hunt, M'Grath, Moran, and myself. I can't say who the other was.

4525. You cannot say who the fifth was?—I am not sure whether it was young Hunt, a brother-in-law of Michael Hunt or not. I was a little tipsy and could not say.

4526. Was young Hunt a relative of the Hunt examined here to-day?—I think he is his brother-in-law. I don't know him. I heard them talking of Thady Kilgallen. I was a little tipsy. I heard them talking of it afterwards.

4527. £250 or £300 you say were to be divided?—Something like that.

4528. Who was to get that money for the rest?—I cannot say, really; I think it was Moran or M'Grath, or some of those that were speaking to Phillips.

4529. Did you dissent from that arrangement, and say you would not take the money?—I did not.

4530. And would you have taken the money if you got it?—Indeed I suppose I would.

4531. Do not say "I suppose?"—I would certainly; positively I would.

4532. After that election did Mr. Phillips offer you £20?—He called me in one day off the street.

4533. Did he offer you £20?—No, £15.

4534. When did he offer you the £15?—Well, I could not rightly tell you; it is a good while ago.

4535. Was it about the month of April after the election?—I think it was coming on May.

4536. Was it close to the time Sergeant Armstrong came down to visit Sligo?—I do not recollect that. It was about March or April, I cannot say which.

4537. He called you in and offered you the money?—Yes.

4538. What did you say?—Well, I really could not say what I said.

4539. Did you refuse to take it because it was too little?—I certainly did not.

4540. Did you refuse to take it?—I did.

4541. Why?—Well, I thought that he spoke some way bitter to me. He said he had money to give me, or something like that, and I said I would not take it.

4542. Do you mean to say you told him you would not take it?—I would not take it.

4543. You would not take a shilling?—Well, now, it's likely I would, but I would not like to take it.

4544. Do you mean to say that he had the money counted out for you?—He had two £5 notes on the counter.

4545. That is only £10?—And a cartridge of silver.

4546. Why did you refuse to take the money?—I told you before he called me in and appeared to be angry. I was intimate with him before that, and I thought he spoke crossly to me.

4547. Were you afraid if you took the money you would be lowered in his esteem?—No, I was not; but I felt I would be lowered in my own esteem, for I was tipsy when I went in, and I would not wish for £20 Sergeant Armstrong would be beaten as a Liberal.

4548. Did you say then that you would have nothing to say to the money?—I did.

4549. Did you afterwards ask for it?—No, nor would not take it.

4550. Did you make any complaint about not having got the money?—Never.

4551. Never?—Oh, I might be talking about it.

4552. Did you make any complaint about not having got the money?—I do not recollect.

4553. You do not recollect?—Well, no; I might say to the parties that might be sitting and talking to me that I did not get it, of course.

4554. That you were badly treated?—Well, I did not say that I was. I might say it, but I forget.

4555. In your own opinion did you think you were badly treated?—I think I was well treated not to get it, because I knew it was a very bad job, and a low act of the Liberals to do. I was very sorry for it. I just went in and took a drop of drink.

4556. Did you ever get any money before at an election?—Never, nor I would not take it.

4557. Did you vote for Mr. Somers?—I did.

4558. Did you vote for Mr. Sadleir?—No, I was sick at the time.

4559. Did you speak to anyone coming on this last election about not having got this money?—No; if I had £20 I would give them to Flanagan and no mistake.

4560. Did you ever ask them to compensate you?—Never. I was very sorry for it, indeed; and I think the man treated me and the others right not to give it, because it was a very low act, and I was sorry for it; but it was the drop of drink that got me to it.

4561. Do you not think Phillips thought you would take it when he offered it to you?—Oh, I was perfectly sober when he offered it.

4562. Do not you think he offered it to you intending that you should take it?—Well, I suppose he did.

4563. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—If he had offered you £50 would you have taken it?—If he had offered me £150 in the way he spoke to me, I would not take it.

4564. Did Phillips offer it to you after he had offered it to Moran?—I could not say that.

4565. You say Phillips looked angry?—Well, he did. He had a better notion about me. He thought I should not do a thing of the sort, and he spoke very angrily.

4566. Tell us what he said?—I could not tell.

4567. Try now?—Well, I really could not recollect.

4568. This is rather a remarkable incident in your life?—I really could not tell. He was distant to me and said something cross to me, and then I said something the same to him.

4569. Try, now, and recollect what he said?—I think he said I was a mean, low fellow, and I said I certainly was; and one word borrowed another till I got a little angry with him.

4570. Did he say you were a mean, low hound?—No, fellow; something like that.

4571. Did he come in and put that £15 into your hands, and say, "You are a mean, low fellow?"—No.

4572. How was it?—He stood behind his own counter, and laid the two five pound notes on the counter and a cartridge of silver, and he said, "You are a low fellow to look for the like," and I said I never looked for the like nor never told you that I looked for it, nor I never did in my life. I went unfortunately in to take a half glass of brandy, and I was very sorry for it.

4573. Had you any conversation with Hunt about the £250?—No, we were merely smoking and talking and laughing like over half a glass of whiskey.

4574. Did Hunt ever tell you he expected £50?—Well, I don't think he did. We had not much conversation. We had very little conversation.

4575. Because, you know, Hunt says this is all humbug—that nothing of the sort took place at all?—What do you mean?

4576. Hunt says he never was promised any money at all?—Well, I don't say whether he was or not.

4577. The Chief Commissioner.—Who was to get the £300?—I am after telling you I heard mention of £250 or £300, or something of the sort, and consequently, of course, the four or five, whoever they were, were.

4578. Was not Hunt one of them?—Yes. I would not wish for £50 I went there myself.

Patrick Clancy sworn and examined.

4579. The Chief Commissioner.—You are an elector?—Yes.

4580. How long have you been an elector?—Ten years.

4581. Whom did you vote for at the last election; or did you vote at all?—I voted for Major Knox.

4582. At the previous election whom did you vote for?—Mr. Macdonogh.

4583. Have you always supported the Conservative party?—Yes, except at the time of Mr. Somers's election.

4584. You voted for Mr. Somers?—Yes.

4585. Had you any promise made to you at the last election?—None.

4586. Did you get any money?—No.

4587. Did you get any money after Mr. Macdonogh was returned?—I neither asked for it, looked for it, nor got it.

4588. Did you get any money after Mr. Macdonogh was defeated?—No, I did not vote for him that time; I only voted for him once.

4589. Were you at Mrs. Hall's?—I was.

4590. Were any threats or intimidation offered to you?—During Captain Flanagan's canvass my shop window was broken, and I went on the morning of the poll to Mrs. Hall's and left it that evening again.

4591. You were there only one day, then?—That's all—during the polling day, for which I paid her.

4592. In your own money?—I did.

4593. Have you any promise or expectation of being paid that money back?—Not the least.

4594. Do you know anything about Clancy, who went away to avoid voting?—He is a son of mine. I think he did not promise either of the gentlemen.

4595. When did he go away; was he living with you?—He is.

4596. When did he go away?—I don't know if it was the evening or the second evening before the poll, but it was close to it.

4597. Did you know he was going away?—Yes.

4598. What did he tell you about it?—He seemed to me to be very much afraid for the last fortnight.

4599. Afraid of violence?—Just so.

4600. Where did he go?—He went to Dublin at his own expense, and came back again, and told no one—voluntarily from himself.

4601. And told no one he was going?—Not one.

4602. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Had you voted for the Liberals before the last election?—I voted the time Mr. Somers was here, for Mr. Somers.

4603. Did you ever vote for a Liberal candidate before?—No.

4604. What is your business?—A hairdresser.

4605. And are your customers principally on the Conservative or Liberal side?—I have a mixed party.

4606. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Did you get any money at all at the time Mr. Macdonogh was elected, when there was no contest?—I never got a halfpenny at any election, nor looked for it, nor asked for it.

4607. Were you ever offered it?—Never.

4608. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Did any of your family get any money?—Not one.

4609. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Were you canvassed for Captain Flanagan?—Captain Flanagan canvassed me.

4610. Anybody else on his side?—Mr. O'Loughlin canvassed me three times, and he asked me would I venture to say I would not vote, and I said that I would not lead him astray, that I would vote.

THIRD DAY. October 7. Patrick Clancy.

4611. Did anyone else canvass you?—Well, I dare say Mr. O'Loughlin canvassed me, and a gentleman, Mr. Kelly, I think, who was on the canvass with Captain Flanagan, I think, was there.

4612. Were there any threats used to you by any person in case you did not vote?—Nothing more except the window was broken on the day of the canvass.

4613. But no threats were used towards you?—Oh, no, I did not interfere at all; I kept within and did not interfere with any man, backwards or forwards.

4614. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Did Major Knox say he would give you anything?—No; he never canvassed me but once, twelve months before the election.

4615. And what induced you to vote for him?—I thought he would be the proper person to represent Sligo.

4616. Did he ever get any situation for any of your family?—None; I didn't want it.

4617. Or promise to interest himself for any of your family?—No.

4618. Or did any connexion of Major Knox's?—No, not one.

Mr. Alexander Gilmore.

Mr. Alexander Gilmore sworn and examined.

4619. The Chief Commissioner.—You are Mayor of Sligo, Mr. Gilmore?—Yes.

4620. How long have you been Mayor?—Since the 1st of January.

4621. A year nearly?—Yes.

4622. Were you in Sligo at the time of the last contested election?—I was.

4623. And for some time previously?—For a number of years.

4624. Will you describe the state of the town as regards the mob on either side—and what they were doing, and what was going on? What state was the town in?—In a very bad state indeed. It could scarcely be worse, particularly for a fortnight previous to the election, it was in a very riotous state.

4625. Were there mobs in the streets?—Yes.

4626. Were they on both sides?—Oh, no; certainly not.

4627. On which side were the mobs?—Well, the mob was altogether on the Liberal side; no question of it.

4628. What was the mob doing?—Well, they were carrying on shouting, stone throwing, and window breaking at night, and such as that for a length of time.

4629. Were the supporters of Major Knox, in your opinion, in danger?—I think so.

4630. Going about the town?—Yes.

4631. Were there police and military in the town?—There were, a large number.

4632. Were they kept in the streets?—Yes, I saw them patrolling the streets occasionally.

4633. Now, in reference to the mob breaking windows, was that done by night or by day?—Principally at night—in the evenings. The days, you know, are very short in November, and perhaps from five o'clock till eleven or twelve, or one at night, you would hear those noises going.

4634. Were the mobs so great that it was impossible for the authorities to prevent this?—Well, I declare I think it would have been very hard to do it, for unless you had military and police in every street in the town almost, you could scarcely check it, for the police would be in one end of the town and you would hear the rioting in the other. The mob took advantage of that.

4635. Could the supporters of Major Knox, in your opinion, canvass the town openly with any safety?—I don't think there were any people with Major Knox canvassing, except, perhaps, Mr. Phibbs. I think everyone studiously avoided canvassing with him; that's my opinion.

4636. I must ask you, Mr. Gilmore, some questions in reference to transactions that you were examined about at Carrick?—Yes.

4637. Did you pay any money for a man who was arrested?—I did; at least I lent it to him.

4638. Who was he?—A man named Currid.

4639. Had you known him before?—Not till the day before.

4640. Had you known what way he would vote?—No; I never saw him in my life till the evening previously.

4641. Had you known what way he was going to vote?—Only that he promised me that he was going to vote for Major Knox.

4642. Just describe the occurrence?—The night previously a man came to me in the street, and said Currid wished to see me, and I asked, "Where is he; let him come to me." The man said, "No; he does not like to leave the house because there is a decree against him;" and I went up and saw him for the first time in my life. He said that as I was a friend of Major Knox's he wanted to tell me there was great pressure brought to bear on him to vote for Captain Flanagan, and that as it would be contrary to his principles to vote for him, he would vote for Major Knox. But he said, "A decree is hanging over me, and it is likely that when I am going to vote I may be arrested." I said, "In the excitement of the polling, if you go down in the morning, perhaps, no one will notice you;" so he said he would take chance and come down. I was in the hall of the court and saw the man coming up the steps without anyone with him, and suddenly I saw him arrested by two men. I was about twenty yards from him, and it was about ten o'clock in the morning. When I saw him arrested, it struck me that he was arrested under the decree. I approached him, but was struck, and nearly knocked down by the mob who got between him and me, and I thought the best plan was to let him go away. He did go away, and I began to consider over the matter. I thought to myself that I had brought this man—I said to myself, "I brought that man into a wrong position, and as a matter of honour I ought to leave him as I found him—he came down to vote for Major Knox." I went to a solicitor and asked him was there any danger if I lent the money the man was arrested for. He said he thought there was not. I then asked a member of the Bar who was here at the time; he said, "Not at all, but have nothing to say to him or to his voting." So I walked over and lent him the £15, and he paid the fellow, and I never saw him afterwards, until I saw him on the table here.

4643. Has he ever paid you that money?—No. He wrote me a letter saying he would pay it very shortly, some time ago.

4644. Some time ago?—A couple of months ago.

4645. Did you ever ask that man to vote for anyone?—Never. I have told you the occurrence as it took place. I never saw the man in my life before.

4646. You know Mrs. Dunleavy?—Yes.

4647. You were here while she was examined, and you heard what she said here and in Carrick?—I heard her in Carrick; I did not hear her evidence here.

4648. Did she ever speak to you?—She repeatedly asked me to get money from Major Knox for her.

4649. State what she said?—She said she wanted the loan of some £10 or £12, and she thought if I asked Major Knox he would give it, and would I do so. I said I would not take such a liberty, and I would not do it.

4650. Did you ever speak to Major Knox on the subject?—I did not. I never attempted to do such a thing.

4651. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Can you fix the time she came to you?—It was some time previous to the revision, as well as my memory serves me—July or August; certainly, two or three months previous to the revision.

4652. Did Dunleavy the voter ever speak to you?—He did.

4653. What did he say?—He came on a similar errand.

4654. Did he ask for money?—To get it for him from Major Knox, just as she asked me.

4655. What did she say about voting?—She said she would get him to vote for him when he got it, but he had not a vote at the time of the revision.

4656. What did you tell Dunleavy?—I gave him a similar reply; that I would not take such a liberty with Major Knox to ask money for such a purpose.

4657. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Are you quite certain that it was before the revision that Mr. Dunleavy called on you?—He called on me after the revision, I recollect.

4658. Think a moment. Can you positively say whether she came after the revision?—She did, certainly. She called on me once after the revision.

4659. What did she say to you then?—She made a sad complaint, as I took it. She said, "I have asked for money from Major Knox, now that Francis has a vote, and he refuses me. I think it is very hard. He might have done so when he had not a vote."

4660. That must be after the revision?—It was, certainly, that is what impressed it so much on my mind.

4661. The Chief Commissioner.—Did Currid give you an I O U?—He did.

4662. Do you never expect to be paid?—Most assuredly.

4663. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Do you know the house called Haggerty's house?—I do.

4664. Did you go there from time to time before the election?—No.

4665. Did you ever go?—I might be once in it perhaps. I recollect one day going into it, of a Saturday, I think, it was.

4666. For what purpose?—I will tell you exactly the purpose. I met a man named Anderson, who lives inside the town. He complained bitterly that Major Knox never called on him. He was a Conservative voter. I was talking to him when who should come up at the moment but Major Knox. I said, "By-the-by, Major Knox, here is a gentleman you did not call on—you never called on him during your canvass." "Well, we had better not talk here just at the door," Major Knox said, "come inside." We then went in—that was all.

4667. Whom did you see in Haggerty's house?—I don't believe anyone on that occasion.

4668. Did you ever see any managers of the mobs there?—I saw Thomas Brennan. I heard he had got a great beating, and I went in to see him, over at the river side—that was, perhaps, three or four days before the election.

4669. Was Thomas Brennan what is called a manager of the mobs?—I never heard of it.

4670. Had you anything to say to the getting up of mobs?—I had no communication with Thomas Brennan at all.

4671. But as a matter of fact, was there no rumour?—Oh, yes, there was a rumour, he was the leader of a few men in Pound-street.

4672. He was the leader of a mob for Major Knox?—Yes; as far as rumour went. I heard that certainly, but I knew nothing of him.

4673. Have you heard of these mobs being got up in Sligo, and of the paying of the leaders of them?—Well, nothing beyond the general rumour.

4674. Nothing beyond that?—Nothing beyond that.

4675. The Chief Commissioner.—I put it to you this way. Would any of these men go out unless they were paid—these mobsmen?—Well, I do not wish to mention that, but if I must give my own opinion, I think they would not.

4676. Are they very wild?—Yes, in fact half drunk. One fellow followed me into my house, and beat me in my house.

4677. Was he one of a half drunken mob?—Yes.

4678. Did you see the houses in which those people composing the mobs got drunk?—No. I never saw them getting drunk anywhere.

4679. Do you know anything of the management of elections—do you know what are called "orders?"—No; nothing whatever.

4680. You never heard that phrase in Sligo?—No, never.

4681. Do you know anything about any houses where these people were getting drunk?—No; certainly not.

4682. You can give us no information on that subject?—None whatever.

4683. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—You took an interest in the election?—I was anxious for the return of Major Knox.

4684. Could you tell me the names of any gentlemen who were actively engaged for Major Knox in the conduct of the election—you must, of course, know them?—Well, I do not know any person beyond his agent who might be called actively engaged.

4685. Do you mean only Mr. Lawler?—Yes.

4686. Was Mr. Harlowe Phibbs acting for him at all?—I know nothing of him.

4687. Or of Thomas Brennan?—I know nothing of it beyond what I have told you.

4688. Seeing him in Haggerty's house?—Yes; on that occasion I had heard he got a great beating and I went in to see did he get a great beating, and at least he had the appearance of it.

4689. Or Mr. Woods?—I am told he took no part, that he was very indifferent about the matter.

4690. I would like to have some description from you of the size and description of these mobs—were there mobs of one hundred or several hundreds, or of forty or fifty people?—On the morning of the election I saw a mob come down the street, and take possession of it, that would terrify an army, every man with a cudgel or weapon; there were 3,000 of them I am sure when they got possession of the street, immediatly after it Captain King's death occurred. I begged of some of the military to draw the military across the street, to prevent them——

4691. When the rioting first began, how many months or weeks was it before the election?—What I may call general rioting was going on for three weeks before the election; there might be occasional fighting before that between the two parties.

4692. But you think the greatest amount of violence was for three weeks up to the election?—Yes, I am satisfied of that.

4693. The Chief Commissioner.—This mob of 3,000 individuals, were they composed of the townspeople or of people from the country?—Oh, I think most of them were country people.

4694. That is, from a distance?—I could not say from what distance; they had the appearance of country people.

4695. Were they farmers' boys, or that class of lads?—They were lads of say from twenty to twenty-five, stout, young country fellows.

4696. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—What is the population of Sligo?—I think at least between 12,000 and 13,000. You will get it in Thom's.

4697. There is, of course, a town clerk of the borough?—Yes.

4698. With respect to those mobs, how long was the rioting continued after the election? I suppose it culminated in violence at that time?—Oh, there was a great deal of it immediately after the election, after the night of the polling and the next day. After that there were occasional rows and smashing of windows, but not to any very great extent I should say.

4699. How many houses do you know had their windows smashed?—I could not say. A great number.

THIRD DAY.
October 7.
Mr. Alexander Gilmore.

4700. Do you think 50?—Oh, perhaps not so many; perhaps 30. For instance, my own house was smashed; 50 or 60 panes were smashed.

4701. Were any houses wrecked—we were told that some houses were utterly smashed?—I think you have heard of most, if not all.

4702. Can you give me an idea of how many of them?—Well, I think, Gethins', Devany's, and Burke's houses were injured; I cannot think of any others at present.

4703. Were all the persons whose houses were wrecked, or to whose houses great damage was done, Roman Catholics; who had either voted for Major Knox or had abstained from voting?—Quite so.

4704. You do not know any case of a Protestant who had serious damage done to his house?—I really don't know.

4705. Are you a Protestant or Catholic yourself?—A Protestant.

4706. Your windows were smashed?—Yes.

4707. Do you know of any other Protestant whose windows were smashed?—I do not.

4708. But the windows of Protestants were smashed?—Oh, yes.

4709. You are familiar with the register of voters?—Yes.

4710. Can you tell me how many voted, and how, at the last election—I believe 241 voted for Major Knox, and 229 for Captain Flanagan?—Yes, I think there were nine or ten between them; I think there were thirteen.

4711. Can you tell me how many of those 241 that voted for Major Knox were Roman Catholics?—Well, I could not tell without looking at the list.

4712. We would feel obliged to you if you would go over the register of voters at the last election, and mark the names—I suppose you know the religion of all of them?—Yes. I should think so.

4713. If you marked the names and religion, and how they voted it would probably save the expense of sending to Dublin for the poll books—we must get the information some way or other, and we are anxious to avoid expense if we can?—I think I can suggest a place where you can get a copy of the poll books.

4714. Where?—I think the agents will have them—Mr. Lauder may have them. The gentlemen acting for Major Knox kept exactly the same record as the poll books, and that record will tell you how the people voted.

4715. Will you mark the list, showing the Roman Catholics and the Protestants?—With pleasure.

4716. Who is the town clerk?—Mr. James M'Kinn.

4717. Has he been town clerk long?—About three years I am informed.

4718. I suppose you as mayor would be the returning officer?—I would be this year.

4719. That is what I mean—the mayor of Sligo is the returning officer?—Yes.

4720. Have you the custody of any books showing or giving information as to former elections?—No, I have not the poll books.

4721. Have you any official documents showing the number of voters, and how they voted?—No. I think the official books are returned to the Hanaper's office, all the official documents I think go back.

(The witness then withdrew, and the inquiry was adjourned till Friday morning.)

FOURTH DAY
October 8.

FOURTH DAY.

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 8, 1869.

The Commissioners sat at ten o'clock, when James M'Dowell, Martin Phillips, and John M'Grath who had been summoned were called, but did not answer.

Thomas Kavanagh.

Thomas Kavanagh sworn and examined.

4722. The Chief Commissioner.—Where do you reside?—At 50 Lower Dominick-street.

4723. Do you know the two M'Mullens who were examined here?—I do.

4724. Had you known them before the last election?—No.

4725. I presume you never had seen them?—I never had seen them.

4726. Do you remember these men coming to you?—I do.

4727. On what evening was it?—I could not tell you—it was immediately previous to the election—a very short time previously.

4728. Did they bring with them a letter?—They did not.

4729. Did they bring with them any message?—They said they were sent to me.

4730. By whom?—They did not say. I asked where they were from—they said Sligo. Then I got into a detail of conversation with them. They told me they were voters of Major Knox's, and that they had to leave the town—that they were sent out of town—had to leave. That they would have voted for Major Knox, but were not wanted, and left the town and were sent to me—but I never received a line from anybody about them.

4731. Did they not mention to you who sent them?—They did not.

4732. Do you know Mr. Stokes?—I do not know a single one of them. I do not know a single man connected with the Borough of Sligo.

4733. You are not a Sligo man?—This is the second time I was in Sligo in my life.

4734. Did they inform you why they were sent to you?—They did not. I beg your pardon. I keep a house—a furnished house—in Dominick-street, and I presume they thought they could come lodge with me. Well, the men were not suited to my lodgings, and I provided a lodging for them at M'Dowell's in Henry-street.

4735. Do you know Major Knox?—I do, well.

4736. You have a house of furnished lodgings?—I have; and I had two lords lodging with me at the time—a lord and his brother.

4737. You thought these two men would not suit your house?—They would not. I was sure of it.

4738. Did you bring them down to M'Dowell's?—I did.

4739. Without any previous communication between you and M'Dowell?—No, we had no previous communication with M'Dowell; but I told him they were from Sligo, and to keep them there, and it was likely he would be paid for them, and so he was paid by me, and out of my own pocket, and I never received a farthing of it myself since. At the time they went there I did not expect I would have to pay, but I found after they went there nobody to pay; so, under the circumstances, I thought it was not fair that he should be at the loss, and I put my hand into my pocket and paid M'Dowell myself. Not the whole, but at least one-half.

4740. How much did you pay M'Dowell?—I paid altogether about £33; it might be more or it might be less.

4741. You say you paid it out of your own pocket?—I do; and I did not receive a single farthing since.

4742. Did you know the men were brought away to Manchester, to Clithero, and to Liverpool?—I know they were there. I did not know they were going at the time, but I knew they were there afterwards.

4743. Why were the men brought away from Dublin—tell me frankly as one man should deal with another—why were they brought away from Dublin?—I could not tell. I suppose it was to be there during the petition. I would say so.

4744. That is the answer I would expect from you?—I will tell you all I know, and nothing but the truth.

4745. Had you any talk with M'Dowell about the petition coming on?—No, I had not; I had no talk about it. We never talked it over.

4746. The M'Mullens, or one of them, said here they spoke to you in the street, and you refused to speak to them?—Well, I did. I did not want to do so. I did speak to them afterwards, and I may remark that I told the two M'Mullens, and, I think, in the presence of M'Dowell, for I called on him, that I had no control over them, that they might go home to Sligo or anywhere, that I had no control, and that I would be glad they came away.

4747. I suppose they were a nuisance at M'Dowell's house?—I know they were a nuisance to myself at all events to have to pay for them.

4748. Did you hear they were going away when the trial of the petition was coming on?—Well, I believe I did. I will not positively swear I did, but I believe I did.

4749. Whom did you hear it from?—I think from M'Dowell.

4750. Did you ever tell Major Knox that these men were up in Dublin?—I never did.

4751. Did you expect to be repaid that £33?—I did expect, and do expect if they have honour, to be paid still. I have no means of getting it if they don't pay it.

4752. You have no legal means?—No legal means.

4753. But in honour you expect to be paid?—I do.

4754. If there is honour in anybody you have a right to be paid. Does that £33 include the expense of the trip to England?—No, I had nothing to do with that. I paid nothing for them there.

4755. We have November the 14th as the date fixed when the M'Mullens left Sligo and they did not return till the 27th of March?—I paid nothing for them in England.

4756. Up to what time did you pay the money to M'Dowell?—I paid it at two or three different times. I did not pay the amount altogether. I could not tell you the date of the payments.

4757. I presume you did not pay anything after they went to England?—I think I did pay something to M'Dowell after they returned.

4758. You told me you did not pay anything for them in England?—I did not pay anything for them whilst they were in England.

4759. To anybody?—To anybody—I really thought I was done with them.

4760. When they went to England?—Yes.

4761. You thought you would hear no more of them?—I thought I would not. I would be very glad I did not.

4762. Did the M'Mullens see you after in Dublin? No.

4763. Did they ask you for money?—They did.

4764. What did you say?—I said I had none to give.

4765. Did they often ask you for money?—No.

4766. I suppose you know Mr. Hignell?—I do.

4767. Did you tell him the men were up there?—I did.

4768. When did you tell him?—Well, I told him after the election that they were there—he said he had nothing to do with them.

4769. What did you tell him?—I told him two men had come up to me named M'Mullen, and I asked "Did you send them?" He said, "I never saw or heard anything about them in my life."

5770. Did these men when they came to your house ask you to accommodate them?—They did not.

4771. What did they ask you to do?—They told me they had come from Sligo to me.

4772. To stay with you?—I don't know whether to stay or to come to me. I asked them who sent them and they did not tell me.

4773. They did not tell you?—They did not tell me.

4774. Do you expect to be repaid by Major Knox?—Well, I could not say. I will take it from anybody that will give it. I do not expect Major Knox will pay me personally.

4775. Not personally—but do you expect the money ultimately will come from him?—I would expect it.

4776. At all events in honour?—In honour.

4777. Did any other man come to you from Sligo?—No.

4778. At the election time?—No, these were the only two men that came to me at the election. I saw other men in Dublin.

4779. What other men?—Oh, I saw two or three. I did not know them. They were only pointed out to me as being from Sligo.

4780. Who pointed them out to you?—I think it was a man named Thomas Brennan. He pointed out two or three of them.

4781. He pointed out two or three of the Sligo voters?—Yes, but not at the election time, weeks after it, a month, or a fortnight after.

4782. Where did he point them out to you?—In Sackville-street.

4783. Were you walking with him?—No. I never walked with him. I met him in the street. I did not know exactly who he was. I was told.

4784. Who told you who he was?—I could not exactly say who told me. It was a long time after the election I was told who he was.

4785. Do you know Mr. Lawder?—I do not.

4786. You told me before you did not know the Sligo people?—No, I do not.

4787. How did you happen to meet Thomas Brennan—was he walking with anyone he knew?—Upon my word and oath I could not tell you.

4788. Was he ever at your house?—Never, to my knowledge. Oh, he was in my house, but it was five weeks ago.

4789. About five weeks ago?—Yes. He came to my house. I do not know why on earth he called. I never had any conversation with him. I was not there at the time he called.

4790. But you understood from your servant that he had called?—Yes; I met him frequently afterwards through the street, and I spoke to him any time I met him.

4791. You spoke to him?—Yes.

4792. You knew he was a witness that had been examined at Carrick?—I did. He told me himself he was.

4793. The men that he pointed out to you in Sackville-street, was he walking with them?—He was not. They happened to be passing by accident.

4794. Was it by accident you met Thomas Brennan?—I was coming up to Mr. Nelson's office when I met him in the street, and Brennan spoke to me. I saw him before.

4795. Who introduced Brennan to you?—I could not tell. I cannot remember who did.

4796. How long had you known him before?—I never knew him until he came down, until I saw him in Dublin. I never saw the man in my life until about a month after the election.

4797. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Did you ever see him in the Irish Times' office?—I saw him at the door frequently.

4798. The Chief Commissioner.—Do you call to see Major Knox often?—I do not, indeed. I did not see him more than three times for the last four months.

4799. Did any money for the election pass through your hands?—None whatever; not a farthing.

4800. Did you send anyone to Sligo?—I did not.

4801. Do you know Mr. Cherry of Sligo?—I do not.

FOURTH DAY.
October 8.
Thomas Kavanagh.

4802. Nor Mr. Stokes?—Nor Mr. Stokes; I never saw them to my knowledge.

4803. And you had no previous communication with them, either socially or in a business way?—No, indeed; never in my life.

4804. Did you know them by name even?—Only by what I heard and read in the paper.

4805. But before the two M'Mullens came to you?—I did not; nor know any elector at all in Sligo save the two M'Mullens who came up to me at that time.

4806. Tell me how it was the M'Mullens came to your house?—I cannot tell you more than I have told you.

4807. Do you mean you can give no information?—No.

4808. I ask you on your belief?—I cannot give you the slightest—any more than I told you.

4809. Did you not think it a most extraordinary thing that these two men should come to you?—Well, I did think it was an extraordinary thing that they should come.

4810. And you cannot tell us anything more than what you have told us?—Nothing but what I have told you.

4811. Why did you not speak to Major Knox on the subject of the M'Mullens?—He never spoke to me, and I never spoke to him on the subject.

4812. Did you avoid speaking to him on the subject?—No.

4813. Did you assist him at all in preparing for the petition?—I did not.

4814. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Was there any arrangement made between you before the election that voters should be sent up to you?—No, never.

4815. The Chief Commissioner.—Or a hint?—No.

4816. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Are you quite sure when the M'Mullens came up to you that a letter was not handed to you by one or the other?—I swear most positively I never got a letter from either of them.

4817. From either of them?—From anybody—a line of anything.

4818. And did you act on their own statement alone in sending them to M'Dowell's?—I did.

4819. Entirely?—Entirely.

4820. Were you aware beforehand that voters were to be sent up to you to get lodgings?—No.

4821. Is it not strange that you should act on the statement of two men strangers to you?—No doubt about it, it looks strange to you gentlemen, but it did not look strange to me, and unfortunately I am the victim.

4822. Had you no reason to believe before the M'Mullens came to you that they were voters?—None whatever.

4823. And you acted merely on their statement?—I did.

4824. You know Major Knox well?—Well, Major Knox befriended me very frequently, and I would do anything I could for him. The name was quite sufficient for us. When they mentioned his name, I would do anything I could for them, that is if I knew I was doing nothing that was wrong. I swear that positively.

4825. The Chief Commissioner.—Do you swear you can give us no further information about this occurrence?—I cannot, indeed.

4826. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Had you no conversation with Major Knox about the M'Mullens?—Not a word—not a sentence—in fact I had no conversation with him at all.

4827. The Chief Commissioner.—What did Brennan say when he pointed out the men to you in Sackville-street?—He said, "There are some of the men that were down in Sligo—some of the men that voted in Sligo. I suppose they had, like myself, to cut."

4828. Was that coming on the time for the trial of the petition?—Oh, it was long after the trial of the petition. I think so. It was long after the trial of the petition.

4829. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Did you ever say anything to Brennan about the extraordinary occurrence of these M'Mullens coming to you?—No, I did not say anything at all to him. I did not talk it over with anybody.

4830. The Chief Commissioner.—You are a shrewd man. Do you not know the M'Mullens were brought away to England for the purpose of not appearing to give evidence at the trial of the petition?—I do not know; I suppose so.

4831. Is not that what you believe?—That is what I suppose.

4832. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Do you recollect did Brennan introduce himself to you the first time you met?—No, he did not. Some person pointed out Brennan to me.

4833. Who was it?—I cannot tell you who it was.

4834. Do you recollect where it was?—I think it was in the street—somewhere about Sackville-street.

4835. The Chief Commissioner.—Was it the first time you were introduced that he pointed out the Sligo voters to you?—Well, I would not be positive it was. I could not say it was.

4836. You told us, you know, that at the time the Sligo men were pointed out the petition trial was over?—That is the time, I think.

4837. But you knew Brennan long before that?—I don't think I did much longer than that. In fact I do not know him at all more than to see him. I did not know him until I saw him in Dublin.

4838. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Had you or have you any employment from Major Knox?—No; I am in Mr. Nelson's office in Abbey-street. I am cashier there.

4839. Is there any relative of yours in his employment?—No brother or relative in the world.

4840. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—How did you pay the £33 to M'Dowell?—I left a portion of it with his wife; I left a portion of it in his house, some more with another party who gave it to him.

4841. Was it all given in two sums?—No. I think in three sums—about three sums—that is what I paid.

4842. Were they all paid about the same time?—No; they were paid at different times.

4843. Can you give us about the times?—I could not give you the date or a single thing. I know I paid it.

4844. The Chief Commissioner.—Did you take receipts from him?—No, I did not.

4845. No writing passed between you and M'Dowell at all?—No, I think not—M'Dowell will tell you himself.

4846. Did you ever write on this subject to anyone?—No, I did not.

4847. You never mentioned M'Mullen's name in any letter?—Never, to my knowledge.

4848. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—What was the reason of your not speaking to Major Knox on the subject?—I had no right to go ask him about Sligo. I do not think he would speak to me on the subject—that is one reason.

4849. Why do you think he would not speak to you?—I don't know. I don't think he would.

4850. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Do you remember at what time you paid the £33?—I could not give you the date.

4851. Was it after the trial at Carrick?—It was long after the trial at Carrick I paid the £20—long after it.

4852. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—That is when you paid the £33?—No, the £20. I could not give you the date—but it was long after the trial at Carrick I paid £20 of it.

4853. That must be after they were in England?—I should say so. I think I told you before it was after they were in England.

(The witness withdrew.)

James M'Dowell sworn and examined.

4854. The Chief Commissioner.—Have you read in the newspapers the evidence that has been given by the M'Mullens?—I read a portion of James M'Mullen's evidence in Dublin.

4855. I presume you did not know these men before they were brought to you by Mr. Kavanagh?—I never saw them.

4856. What did Mr. Kavanagh tell you?—He asked me had I not accommodation for these two men—board and lodging—I told him I had, and he told me to take charge of these men and I would be paid for it; so they remained in my house.

4857. I find by the Directory that you keep a confectionery establishment?—Yes.

4858. Do you also keep a lodging house?—Yes.

4859. Did you understand how long these men were to be with you?—I did not.

4860. Did you know they were Sligo voters?—I did not know at the time.

4861. How soon did you ascertain that they were Sligo voters?—Well, I should think about, perhaps, a month; when they were about a month in the house.

4862. Did they tell you themselves?—The old man told me one day that he was a dyer by trade, and from Sligo. That was the first intimation of what they were, or where they came from.

4863. Was it usual for you in your business to have lodgers of that class—tradesmen?—Oh, certainly.

4864. These men remained with you until they and you went to England?—Yes.

4865. Who suggested to you the trip to England?—Well, I received a note—the party that brought it was a perfect stranger; a man I never saw before—to take these men to England if I could go at the time.

4866. Have you the note?—I have not.

4867. Can you not tell the party who brought it to you?—I cannot.

4868. Tell what was in that note, every syllable of it?—To the best of my recollection I will tell you. It was to take the two M'Mullens to any part of England—and I got £9 in the note, and to communicate then back, to send word here to my own place, when I arrived, and when I went to Liverpool I wrote back to my wife, and told her I was there.

4869. Do you mean to say that that was all that was in the note?—That is all. Not a word more, to the best of my recollection.

4870. Was there not a signature to it?—There was no signature to it.

4871. Did it come to you by post?—No, by hand.

4872. Did you see the man that brought it?—I did.

4873. Did he give it to you?—He did.

4874. Would you know him again?—I would know him again.

4875. Did you know him then?—I did not personally; he never was in my place before. I never saw him before.

4876. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Did you ever see him since?—Not since.

4877. The Chief Commissioner.—What sort of a man was he?—He was a young man, about twenty-two or twenty-five years of age.

4878. Was he a gentleman by appearance?—Well, not particularly; he appeared to be a working mechanic.

4879. Was he a printer?—Well, I do not know. I could not say.

4880. A man in Dublin could give a guess as to the trade another man belonged to?—Well, that is a fact; but he said nothing about his trade he belonged to. I never saw the man before.

4881. But could you not guess by his appearance?—Well, he was dressed very respectably. I would consider him perhaps a clerk.

4882. You said a working mechanic a moment ago?—I cannot define the man accurately. In fact, I never saw the man before.

4883. What I mean is, you would know a man that was a tradesman from another man?—Well, he was, in fact, I think, something in connexion with the law business.

4884. He had the appearance of a respectable attorney's clerk?—Yes.

4885. Nine pounds were in the note?—Nine pounds.

4886. In what notes?—One pound notes.

4887. Was there any direction in that note that you should tear it up?—No.

4888. You got no word to do so?—No.

4889. Did you destroy it at the moment of getting it?—I did. When I read the letter I thought it better not to keep it. I did certainly.

4890. Had you any business of your own to England?—Well, I had not.

4891. Did you know at that time that the election petition was coming on?—I did not.

4892. Did you not pay any attention to that?—I did not. I had my own business to attend to in the shop.

4893. What day did you leave Dublin for Liverpool?—Well, I think, on a Thursday night.

4894. How soon after you got the note?—Well, about three hours.

4895. The trial of the election petition began on the 19th of February, now tell me when you left Dublin with the two voters for Liverpool?—Well, I could not give you the date.

4896. Friday, the 19th of February, was the day of the trial of the petition?—I left on a Thursday.

4897. Do you not now know, refreshing your memory with what the M'Mullens have sworn, and what you have read, that it was sometime about the middle of February you left?—Well, I could not say without going back to the date.

4898. Without going back to what?—Without refreshing my memory for the date. I could not tell you now what month it was.

4899. You brought them by the North Wall to Liverpool?—Yes.

4900. What did you tell them when you said you would bring them over?—They were sitting up in the room, and I told them I was going to Liverpool, and I wished them to come along with me—that I received a note wishing them to comply, and the two of them complied and said they would go.

4901. Did you know people were looking for them to try and find out where they were, to have them examined as witnesses?—No, I did not.

4902. Did you, at the time, suspect you were taking away witnesses, in order to prevent them being examined in a court of justice?—On my oath, I swear I did not.

4903. Did you not know it was an offence against society to do so?—I did not.

4904. How much money did you bring with you for yourself and the men?—£9 to pay our expenses when going first to Liverpool.

4905. How many days did you remain there?—Two days.

4906. Did you keep the men with you always?—Yes.

4907. Where did you go to then?—To Manchester.

4908. Where did you stop at in Liverpool?—I think Reynold's hotel in Lime-street.

4909. When you say you think, you remember it was in Reynold's hotel?—Yes.

4910. Where did you stop at in Manchester?—At Mr. Greaves', on the London road.

4911. A tavern on the London road?—Yes.

4912. How long did you stop there?—Well, I think, about fourteen or fifteen days.

4913. And were you keeping these two men all that time?—I was.

4914. Did you get any money while you were in England?—I wrote home to my wife for money, and she sent me £5 of her own money.

4915. You were fourteen or fifteen days in Manchester?—Yes.

FOURTH DAY.
October 8.
James M'Dowell.

4916. Why did you go from Liverpool to Manchester?—Well, we went up to see the town. I never was there before. I was anxious to see Manchester.

4917. Do you mean to say it was curiosity—to see the streets as a visitor?—No, not for that, we used to go to the theatre. I used to bring them to the theatre.

4918. Every night?—Not every night.

4919. I suppose they got the best of everything?—Well, as far as I could, that is, for their station in life.

4920. There was punch every day for them?—Not every day.

4921. You then went to Clithero?—Yes.

4922. Why did you go?—I received a letter to go there.

4923. A letter?—Yes.

4924. From whom?—I received a letter from Mr. Kavanagh to go to Clithero.

4925. From Mr. Kavanagh?—Yes.

4926. Have you that letter?—I have not.

4927. Did you burn it or tear it up when you read it?—Well, I cannot say. I don't think I burned it at the time, but it was destroyed afterwards, with some papers in my pocket.

4928. How long after you got it did you destroy it?—I was in Clithero. I destroyed it, perhaps, about a week after that.

4929. What was in the letter?—To leave Manchester and go on to Clithero.

4930. With the two M'Mullens?—Yes.

4931. Do you mean to say that was all that was in the letter?—Yes.

4932. Are you sure that letter was written to you from Dublin by Kavanagh?—Yes.

4933. Did it begin, "My dear M'Dowell"?—No, it commenced in this way:—"Leave Manchester and go up to Clithero—go there and you will see a gentleman there who will accommodate you with a lodging." I went, and saw the gentleman.

4934. Was that all?—That was all.

4935. It was signed "Thomas Kavanagh?"—Yes.

4936. I suppose you had known Mr. Kavanagh a long time?—A long time.

4937. And knew his handwriting?—Yes.

4938. You then moved on to Clithero?—Yes.

4939. Where did you go to there?—To the Brownlow Arms.

4940. Was that mentioned in Kavanagh's letter?—No, it was not; a gentleman I met there brought me.

4941. Whom did you meet there?—Mr. Mitchell.

4942. What is his Christian name?—I do not know; the gentleman was a stranger to me, but he lives in Clithero.

4943. How did he find you out?—I had this letter to him, to meet him——

4944. A letter directed to Mr. Mitchell?—No; my instructions were to see Mr. Mitchell.

4945. You did not mention that before—he gave you Mitchell's address?—Yes.

4946. What is the street?—I could not call to mind, it is about a quarter of a mile out of town; I asked at the railway, and a railway porter told me he was well known there.

4947. What business does Mr. Mitchell follow?—He is a paper manufacturer.

4948. Wholesale?—Oh, wholesale.

4949. A man of position?—Yes.

4950. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Do you know his Christian name?—I do not; I never saw the gentleman before.

4951. Were you at his place of business—the factory?—Yes.

4952. What is the name of the firm?—Mitchell and Sons.

4953. Was it old Mitchell you saw?—No, his son.

4954. What is his name?—I do not know.

4955. How many of the family are there conducting business?—Old Mitchell and his sons.

4956. Do you know the Christian name of any of them?—No, I do not.

4957. You went according to directions to Mr. Mitchell's house?—I went to the factory.

4958. You went up to the office?—I went up to the office.

4959. Whom did you see?—Mr. Mitchell, junior.

4960. What did you say to him?—I showed him my note, and he appeared to be aware of it; then he came along with me and provided accommodation at a hotel for me and the M'Mullens, and after arranging that he retired, and I saw no more of him.

4961. Did he give you any money?—No, he gave me no money.

4962. Did you get any money in Clithero when coming away?—I got £3 from him to pay my expenses when coming away.

4963. How long did you remain in Clithero?—I cannot be positive; I suppose about four weeks.

4964. What were you doing all this time away from your business; you were nearly two months in England?—I was going through the country, seeing the country. I went out every day; whatever was to be seen I saw; I went and saw the factories, and went through the place.

4965. And you brought the M'Mullens with you—you never let them out of your sight?—I did frequently.

4966. You knew they had no money?—That I could not say.

4967. Did you not believe it?—I could not say.

4968. Did you not support them and pay their railway fare?—I did.

4969. And did you allow them any pocket-money?—They had some; I think they had 10*s.* a piece.

4970. Do you mean when coming away from England?—No; going to England.

4971. Who gave them that?—I did.

4972. How much money did you give the M'Mullen's altogether?—I suppose I gave the two altogether something under £2.

4973. Do you mean all the time from first to last?—From first to last.

4974. Did you know at Clithero that the election petition was over—M'Mullen swore he did—did you?—Yes, I did know.

4975. Who told you?—I read it on a placard outside a periodical shop.

4976. And then you went in and bought the paper?—Yes, I bought the paper.

4977. When you saw the news?—Yes, and I read that the trial was over.

4978. And you told the M'Mullens?—I did.

4979. And on the following day did you leave Clithero?—Not the following day.

4980. How soon after?—A couple of days after.

4981. How often did you see the M'Mullens during the time you were in Clithero?—On the occasion I was going away—the day before I went away—that is the only interview I had.

4982. Did you not know that you were bringing these men about the country to avoid their being examined at the trial of the petition?—No.

4983. Did you believe it?—I did not believe it.

4984. What did you believe the men were brought there for?—They were brought to me perfect strangers, put into my house by Mr. Kavanagh; on the faith of his word that I would be paid for them, I kept them, and then when I was wanted, when I was asked to go to England, having no particular business to prevent me going, I availed myself of the opportunity, and I went along with them.

4985. What were your entire expenses while in England, you were nearly two months there?—I could not tell you what the expenses were entirely; £12 I had altogether.

4986. Do you mean to say that you supported yourself and two men, and defrayed your travelling expenses, for £12?—No, I do not; I suppose it was Mr. Mitchell, for I did not pay the bill in Clithero.

4987. You did not pay the bill in Clithero?—No.

4988. For four weeks?—No.

4989. You had £9 going away?—Yes, and my wife sent me £5 in Manchester, and I had £3 from Mr. Mitchell; that was all I got.

4990. Did you spend the £17, or did you bring back any of it?—I brought back about 5s., and no more.

4991. Do you expect to be paid for your loss of time?—Well, I don't know, for old M'Mullen walked away while I was out.

4992. He gave you the slip?—Yes, and his son did the same thing, so I have no security for my money.

4993. Did you make any application to anyone?—I spoke to Mr. Kavanagh, and he expressed his astonishment when they were gone away that he did not know it.

4994. Did you ask for payment?—I hold him responsible for it.

4995. How much did you demand?—Well, there is £30 due to me.

4996. How much did you get?—Well, I never received any money in connexion with the M'Mullens, but Mr. Kavanagh paid my wife in the place, and left with my shop girl money, altogether amounting to twenty-two or twenty-three pounds.

4997. Did you never record what the M'Mullen's got in your books?—No; I took them at so much a week.

4998. How much do you charge a week for them?—Two pounds.

4999. Two pounds a week each?—Yes.

5000. And do you charge anything at all for your loss of time while you were in England?—Yes, I charge for my time; that is included in my bill.

5001. Did you write out a bill?—Yes, I wrote out a bill.

5002. And gave it to Mr. Kavanagh?—Yes; that included my own time and all.

5003. Have you a copy of that bill?—I have not.

5004. Tell me what is in the bill?—My first item was the balance due by M'Mullens, and then there was for my own personal services——

5005. How much do you charge of personal services?—Twenty-four pounds.

5006. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Including your expenses?—Including all.

5007. The Chief Commissioner.—You charge £24, as it were, for your loss of time and what you did?—Yes.

5008. And your maintenance?—Yes.

5009. Was Kavanagh the only person you made any application to?—Yes; I had no dealing with any other party or any interview but with Mr. Kavanagh.

5010. Did you know that young M'Mullen went to the Irish Times office to get money to go to Sligo to see his dying wife?—Yes, he told me that.

5011. Who did he tell you he got the money from?—I think Mr. Hignell gave it to him.

5012. Do you know Mr. Hignell?—I saw him once or twice.

5013. Was it in your house?—Not to my knowledge.

5014. Where did you see him?—In Lower Abbey-street.

5015. Do you mean in the Irish Times office?—No, not in the office; towards the Marlborough-street end.

5016. Did you see him in any house there?—Yes, at the corner—Mr. Greville's tavern.

5017. Do you mean you only met him there socially?—Socially.

5018. To have a glass in the evening?—Yes.

5019. Do you know him well?—No.

5020. Do you know Major Knox?—No; I never spoke to the man in my life; I never had an interview with him; I know nothing whatsoever of him.

5021. Do you read the Dublin papers every morning?—Not every morning.

5022. Do you swear when you brought the men to England you did not know of the trial of the petition about the Sligo election?—No, I could not swear that. I was aware that the petition did come off, but when I did not know.

5023. You were aware of the petition?—Yes, certainly.

5024. Do you mean to say you did not suspect you were bringing away the men to avoid being examined?—No; nor did I know there was a necessity to bring them there.

5025. For what purpose did you suppose the men were brought to England?—Well, I could not assign any particular reason for it.

5026. Did you ever bring voters away before?—Never.

5027. I would advise you not to do so again?—I will not have any more connexion with it.

5028. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Was it at Manchester you got the letter from Kavanagh to move on to Clithero?—Yes.

5029. How did he know you were at Manchester?—Because I wrote home to my wife.

5030. Was it from Manchester you wrote to your wife?—Yes; and from Liverpool I wrote—from Liverpool home; and, I presume, she met Kavanagh and told him.

5031. Did you receive any letter from Kavanagh before you got the letter at Manchester telling you to go to Clithero?—No; unless the letter to go to Clithero, that is the only communication I had from Kavanagh.

5032. What is your servant's Christian name?—Jane—her name is Jane Branagan.

5033. Is she with you now?—She is, I think, in Tuam.

5034. The Chief Commissioner.—What is your wife's Christian name?—Mary.

5035. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—You say a month after the election you heard from the M'Mullens that they were Sligo voters?—Yes, a month.

5036. Did you get into conversation about the Sligo election?—No. It was not about the election then we were talking, but about his business.

5037. Did you ever talk with him about the election between the time you heard they were Sligo electors and your going to England?—Well, there might be some remarks made that I cannot call to mind at the present time about the election.

5038. Try?—I cannot remember anything particular in connexion with it.

5039. Did you never ask them had they voted?—No; I never asked them.

5040. Did you designedly abstain from asking them whether they had voted?—I had no particular reason for not asking them; but I am positive I did not ask them such a question as that.

5041. Did they never tell you they had come away to avoid voting?—No.

5042. Neither one nor the other?—No; they never told me that.

5043. When did you first hear that they had come away to avoid voting?—I never heard that they had come away to avoid voting. The first intimation I had that they were Sligo men was after a month's expiration, in my place, in a conversation with the father.

5044. Can you state the conversation?—We were walking through town, and he saw a dyer's shop, and stopped to explain the texture of some article in the window, and he told me then that his business was in Sligo. That was the first intimation I ever had of where he was from.

5045. That was a month afterwards?—A month afterwards—it may, perhaps, be a few days over that.

5046. And you felt no curiosity at all about them?—Not the slightest.

5047. And when you got the note with the £9 did you not ask any question from the man who brought it to you, as to what it was for?—No; he put the note into my hand. He asked me was my name M'Dowell, put the note into my hand, and walked away.

5048. Before you read the note?—Before I opened the note.

5049. Had you known Hignell at that time?—No, I had not.

5050. Had you any suspicion of from where the note came?—Well, I thought first it might be a note

FOURTH DAY.
October 8.
James M'Dowell.

from Kavanagh, but when I opened the note I found it was another handwriting entirely—not his.

5051. That satisfied you it was not from Kavanagh?—Yes.

5052. Had you any suspicion of from whom it came?—I had not at the time.

5053. Have you any suspicion now?—Well, no; I could not positively say.

5054. I ask you have you any suspicion now?—No, I have not.

5055. Did you ever speak to Mr. Kavanagh about the receipt of that note?—I spoke to him, I think, when I came back.

5056. You did not see him between the receipt of the note and your going away?—No, I did not.

5057. You went away, did you not tell us, within three hours of your receiving the note?—Yes, in three hours.

5058. Was there nothing in the note to point to that very earnest haste of three hours—so short a time for making your preparations, leaving your shop for an indefinite period?—No, nothing particular in the note more than just merely what I told you.

5059. You tell us that you were two days in Liverpool, fourteen or fifteen in Manchester, and about a month in Clithero. Was it towards the end of the month you read the account of the Sligo Election Petition Trial being over?—Well, I could not tell you the date.

5060. Try and fix it?—I cannot tell. I do not know anything of it. I could not go back positively to swear to the date.

5061. I do not ask you to swear to the day, but was it towards the end of the month?—I could not tell you distinctly.

5062. You say you saw the news in the window of a shop where they sold newspapers?—Yes.

5063. An advertisement of the news of that day's paper?—A summary of the news of the Manchester Guardian.

5064. And there was a paragraph announcing the Sligo Election Petition?—Yes.

5065. I suppose it was of that day's paper, or of the paper the day before?—I think it was of the day before.

5066. How soon after you read that did you go to Mr. Mitchell?—The following day.

5067. What did you say to Mr. Mitchell when you went to him?—I told him that I saw by the papers that the inquiry in Sligo was over, and I wanted to know if he knew anything about my remaining—to see what time I would stop in Clithero, and he told me he did not feel why I should stop any longer.

5068. What then?—I told him I wanted some money to take these men back, and he gave me £3.

5069. And then you went back immediately?—No, in about two days or so after; we stopped in Liverpool a day.

5070. So it must be within three days of the end of the month you were stopping in Clithero that you saw the account in the newspaper?—Well, I cannot say what date it was.

5071. Did you not tell me you went immediately to Mr. Mitchell?—Yes, but I cannot give you the date.

5072. I do not want the date of the month, or the day of the week, but was it within the last three or four days of your stopping in Clithero that you saw the newspaper account?—Yes.

5073. Did you ever see Mr. Mitchell between the first interview you had, when you gave him Kavanagh's letter, and the last, in which you got the £3?—Yes; I saw him on one occasion; I went up to see Mr. Mitchell——

5074. Tell us what passed?—Nothing; I never opened my lips to him; it was his foreman met me and took me over the place.

5075. You went to see the mill?—Yes, to see the manufacturing of paper.

5076. Had you no personal interview with him at all?—No.

5077. Did the M'Mullens, during the time they were with you, converse with you regarding Sligo and the election?—No, not that I am aware of; it might be mentioned; there might be some allusion to the election, but there is nothing to refresh my memory of anything; it is possible it may have occurred.

5078. You have told us that immediately upon reading in the paper about the Sligo petition—that being over—you went to Mr. Mitchell, and said, now that the trial was over, was there anything to keep you there?—Yes.

5079. Do you now persist in your former answer, that you had not any idea of why these people were taken to England?—Well, when I was taking the men to England——

5080. Answer the question in the first place—"Yes," or "No." Do you persist in your answer, that you had no idea of why these men were taken to England?—I had an idea.

5081. Tell us what that idea was?—Well, they were taken to England by me in connexion with a letter I received at the time, and I had an idea that they wanted to have them in England.

5082. What for?—That, I could not tell; perhaps the reason was that they feared meeting any of these men.

5083. Who do you mean by "they"?—Any of the parties down here.

5084. What parties?—Well, I do not know; they told me on one occasion they feared some parties were in Dublin from Sligo.

5085. Who told you that?—Old M'Mullen, that there were some parties in Dublin he was afraid would see him.

5086. The Chief Commissioner.—What parties?—Oh, I do not know who they were.

5087. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Did he say why he was afraid?—No, he did not.

5088. Had you any idea that because it was "they" wanted them, that they were taken away?—No; I did not know.

5089. The Chief Commissioner.—When you came back what conversation had you with the last witness about the £9?—Oh, when I saw him I told him that I went away, and I received the £9 for going away, and he asked me who gave it. I said I could not tell who the party was.

5090. Do you think it was he sent it to you?—I think he did.

5091. Did you ask him?—No; I do not think I did.

5092. When you mentioned the £9 was there any debit and credit account between you and him?—No. When I met him some days after I came home, I told him that I was home for two days previous. He asked me who sent me away, and I told him a party called on me, that I never saw him before, and I did not know who he was at the time I received the note with the £9 enclosed in it.

5093. Did you speak to him about his own letter to you to go to Clithero?—I did, certainly.

5094. What did he say?—I said I received the letter and acted in accordance with it, and went from Manchester and remained there.

5095. Did he ask you instantly who sent you the letter he wrote to you to go to Clithero?—I had written to my wife apprising her ——

5096. See, do you mean to say that the last witness asked you who sent you away, as if he did not know who it was?—No. I mean to tell you when I told him I received this letter he asked me to give it to him. I was under the impression at that time that he had sent it to me.

5097. You told him you had acted on his advice about going to Clithero?—Yes.

5098. What did he say to that?—Well, he made no reply. He said it was all right, at least.

5099. He said it was all right?—Yes.

5100. Did Hignell know you were away?—No.

5101. Do you swear that?—I do not know.

5101. Did you speak to him about it after coming back?—No, I did not.

5102. Did you never speak to him on the subject?—Oh, I spoke on the subject to him about a month ago, when I met him in the tavern.

5103. What did you say to him?—I told him I was in Liverpool with these men—with these two men, and he asked me which two men. So I told him two men who were stopping in my house. He asked me who they were, and I told him the two M'Mullens from Sligo.

5104. Do you mean to say that Hignell asked you that question as if he did not know the M'Mullens?—That is what he asked me as if he knew nothing about it.

5105. Did you know then he had given young M'Mullen £2?—I did not hear anything about £2.

5106. Did you not read the evidence of the younger M'Mullen that he got £2 to go to Sligo?—But I was not aware of it from M'Mullen.

5107. You were not aware of it from either of the M'Mullens?—No; I never heard of it.

5108. Did you not tell me that M'Mullen told you he got £2?—No; I do not remember telling you such a thing as that.

The Chief Commissioner.—Let the shorthand notes be referred to.

[The shorthand writer read the previous answers of the witness.]

5109. The Chief Commissioner.—What do you say to that?—That is not saying I knew he got £2; I did not know what money he got.

5110. That is the point you make—you knew he got money?—That is my answer to your question.

5111. You knew he got money?—He told me he got money—he told me he got money when he was going away.

5112. The phrase he used was, he got money?—Yes, "money."

5113. But did not know the exact amount?—Yes, he did not tell me.

5114. When did he go to Sligo?—Well, I cannot exactly say the date.

5115. Was it before or after Christmas?—[Not answered.]

5116. How long before you brought him to England was it?—I could not tell the date.

5117. We can fix the exact time you went back to England; you read the newspapers of the day in Clithero?—Yes.

5118. Judge Keogh's judgment was delivered on the 24th of February, and, when you read it, you had been five or six weeks in England?—Yes.

5119. Do you now remember that you went away early in January?—Yes; I cannot say it was early in January—I could not say positively as to the date. I cannot give you the date of M'Mullen's going home to see his wife.

5120. Was it before or after Christmas—he only came to you in November?—Well, I think it was after Christmas.

5121. How long before you brought him to England?—Oh, I think it was after we came back from England he went to see his wife.

5122. After he came back?—I think it was; I am not positive.

5123. You do not remember?—I do not remember; I think, to the best of my belief, it was after he came back we went.

5124. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Did Mr. Mitchell tell you to destroy Mr. Kavanagh's note?—No, he did not.

5125. Did he give the note back to you?—Yes; he handed it back to me, to the best of my recollection.

5126. How soon afterwards was it destroyed?—Well, I put it into my pocket, and a day or two afterwards I was sitting in a room in the hotel, and I took it out with some other papers from my pocket and threw them into the fire.

5127. The Chief Commissioner.—Had you anything else to do with this Sligo election but that?—Not a ha'porth.

5128. Had you any other papers connected with it?—No papers connected with it.

5129. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—You say you met Mr. Hignell two or three times in a public-house?—No, I met him only on one occasion in that house in Marlborough-street.

5130. Were you talking to him then?—Yes.

5131. Had you ever seen him before that?—Well, I might have seen him—not to know the man—he was a perfect stranger to me up to that time.

5132. He was a perfect stranger to you at that interview?—Yes, at that interview.

5133. Did you meet him in the public room taking a drink?—Yes; in the public room, standing just at the bar.

5134. Did he enter into conversation with you then, do you recollect?—Well, I cannot positively say.

5135. Try and recollect?—There were Mr. Kavanagh, and Mr. Hignell there and I.

5136. Mr. Kavanagh was there?—Yes. I was going down Marlborough-street, and I met Mr. Kavanagh.

5137. And you went into this place for refreshment?—Yes, and he introduced me to Mr. Hignell.

5138. How did he introduce you to Mr. Hignell?—As his friend, Mr. M'Dowell.

5139. Did Mr. Hignell appear, from his manner, to know anything about you?—No, I don't think he did, for he was rather reserved, I thought, at the time.

5140. Are you perfectly certain that M'Mullen's name was not mentioned in that conversation?—I am positive.

5141. Did you ever meet Mr. Highnell afterwards in that house?—No; I met him in Sackville-street, the second interview I ever had with him.

5142. How soon was it after that?—I suppose a month, or perhaps five weeks.

5143. Five weeks after the first?—Yes.

5144. When was the first interview?—I do not recollect, as I told you.

5145. Think?—It might be ten days or so after I came back.

5146. After you came back from England?—Yes.

5147. Did anything take place at that second interview with Hignell?—No, nothing particular. It was standing at the corner of Sackville-street.

5148. Was anything ever said by you to Hignell, or by Hignell to you about the Sligo election?—Well, to the best of my recollection, Mr. Hignell never mentioned the name of Sligo in the interviews I had with him. I am positive he never made use of the word Sligo, or anything in connexion with it.

5149. Did he never make any mention of the election without using the word "Sligo"?—No, he never alluded to the election—he never made any allusion in connexion with the election to me.

5150. Did you ever make any allusion to it to him?—No I did not, for I had nothing to do with Mr. Hignell. [The witness then withdrew.]

Thomas Kavanagh recalled.

5151. The Chief Commissioner.—You are already sworn?—Yes.

5152. I think you can give us more information about this matter than you have done?—I don't think I can.

5153. You don't think you can?—No.

5154. Did you write that letter?—On my oath I have not the slightest recollection of doing anything of the kind. If I can bring it to my recollection when I arrive in Dublin I will tell you.

5155. We must have your evidence in court?—I cannot give you any more.

5156. Did you hear Mr. M'Dowell?—I did. I did not know Mr. Mitchell; I had nothing to do with him; I did not know anything at all about him; I did not write to a man I knew nothing about. I never heard of his name in my existence.

FOURTH DAY. October 8. Thomas Kavanagh.

5157. You heard the last witness?—I did.

5158. Do you now contradict him?—Well, I cannot contradict him. I don't believe I did write. I may have written, but I cannot recollect. I cannot recollect that I did.

5159. Did you ever hear of Mitchell in your life before to-day?—I did.

5160. It is a well known house, I would say, Mitchell and Sons?—I did—but at the time he was away. I did not hear of it at the time he went away, nor did I know a single particle more of it; and what he was speaking of, the £9 enclosed in a note, I know nothing. I never knew of it.

5161. Did you hear the last witness say he spoke to you on his return from England, about having followed your letter of instructions and gone to Clithero?—I did.

5162. On your oath did that conversation take place?—I cannot say.

5163. Do you expect to be believed?—Well, I don't know, you may believe me.

5164. I ask you do you expect that answer to be believed?—I do. I would not give it to you if it was not true. I had a conversation with him, but as to the letter I do not know anything. I have nothing to gain by telling an untruth. If I wrote it I would tell you. If I had the slightest recollection of it I would tell you.

5165. Is it possible such a transaction could escape your memory?—On my oath I have no memory of it. If I can call it to memory I will come back and tell you.

5166. Did he tell you he had been in England?—He did.

5167. You knew he was in England?—I will tell you how——

5168. Who told you?—Mrs. M'Dowell, his wife, told me he wrote to her.

5169. What took you to the shop?—I used to go to the shop very frequently—every day.

5170. Did you ask about the M'Mullens?—No.

5171. You did not?—No.

5172. Did Mrs. M'Dowell tell you her husband was away with the M'Mullens?—She did—she told me they were in England.

5173. On your oath did you tell that to anyone?—I cannot say that I did—maybe I did—I did.

5174. Are you not sure you did?—I did. I think I told it to Mr. Hignell.

5175. To Mr. Hignell?—Yes—that I heard they were, from Mrs. M'Dowell.

5176. Where did you tell that to Hignell?—Well, I think it was in the Irish Times office.

5177. Did you walk down from the confectioner's shop to the Irish Times?—Indeed I did not—not probably for a day after or two days after.

5178. What business had you to go to the Irish Times to tell Hignell that the two M'Mullens were in England?—Well, I used to go into the Irish Times office every day in the week.

5179. What concern was it of yours to tell Hignell that the M'Mullens were in England?—I think it concerned me when I was paying for them.

5180. Were you paying for them in England?—No.

5181. Well, what concern had the English portion of it with you?—It had no concern, no more than I have told you. I have told you all I know about them.

James M'Dowell and Thomas Kavanagh.

James M'Dowell and Thomas Kavanagh confronted.

5182. The Chief Commissioner (To James M'Dowell).—Did you receive a letter in the handwriting of the witness, Thomas Kavanagh while you were in Manchester?—Well, to the best of my belief it was a letter in Mr. Kavanagh's handwriting.

5183. You have known him for years?—Yes.

5184. As a friend?—Yes.

5185. It was a letter, as you have described, signed "Thomas Kavanagh"?—Yes.

5186. And that letter directed you to go to Clithero?—To go to Clithero.

5187. The Chief Commissioner. (To Thomas Kavanagh).—On your oath did that occur?—On my oath I do not recollect it. On my oath I do not.

5188. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Do you deny it?—I do not deny it. I do not recollect.

5189. The Chief Commissioner.—You do not deny it?—I don't deny it. It may have occurred, but I do not recollect it.

5190. You now say it may have occurred?—I said that all through. It may have occurred, but I do not recollect; if I did recollect I would at once have told you.

5191. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—(To James M'Dowell). Did that conversation take place between you and Mr. Kavanagh, in which you referred to the letter?—Yes. I told him when I came back that I received his letter.

5192. His letter?—His letter, and removed to Clithero up to the time we returned.

5193. Mr. Kavanagh did not deny having written any letter?—No, I don't think he did.

5194. This is an important point—are you positive?—He did not.

5195. The Chief Commissioner.—Did he say he never wrote such a letter?—No, he did not.

5196. Did the conversation go on after you said you got his letter and acted upon it?—Yes, there were some more words after that.

5197. The Chief Commissioner.—(To Thomas Kavanagh) How did you know about the Mitchells?—I think it was a letter of M'Dowell's that caused me to know—a letter to his wife.

5198. About the Mitchells?—I think so.

5199. What was in that letter?—I could not tell—she told it to me.

5200. Did you see the letter?—I did not.

5201. What did she tell you?—She told me they were at Clithero.

5202. At Mr. Mitchell's?—I think so, or something like that.

5203. Was that the first you heard about them being at Clithero?—I cannot say.

5204. On your oath?—On my oath I cannot say whether it was the first or not.

5205. Did you go to Mrs. M'Dowell to ask were they at Clithero?—I did not.

5206. Did you know Clithero?—I did not. I never was in it in my life.

5207. You never spoke to Mr. Mitchell?—In my life—never—or knew there was such a man in existence.

5208. Did you know the house of Mitchell was supplying any Dublin establishment with paper?—I did.

5209. What establishment?—The Irish Times.

5210. What establishment?—The Irish Times.

5211. Who told you that?—I heard it in the Irish Times.

5212. From Mr. Hignell?—Yes.

5213. From anybody else?—No.

5214. When did Mr. Hignell tell you that?—I could not tell.

5215. Did you know that before they went to Clithero?—I did not know they were in Clithero, or gone at all until I heard it.

5216. Do you swear that you did not know they were gone to Clithero, or gone at all until you heard they were there?—I did not know. I did not hear of their going to Clithero.

5217. Do you swear positively you did not hear of them going to Clithero?—I do swear positively.

5218. Do you swear positively you did not write the letter?—I will not swear positively I did not write; it may be.

5219. Do you swear at all you did not write the letter?—I do not swear positively.

5220. Do you swear at all you did not write it?—I won't.

5221. Do you know that you said before that you did not write that letter?—I believe I did not. My belief at the present time is that I didn't. If the letter is here it is easy to decide it—it is very easy to see whether I wrote it or not.

5222. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—You say you heard Mr. Mitchell's name mentioned, and by Mr. Hignell?—I did.

5223. Can you fix the time you heard it?—I cannot.

5224. Can you swear positively it was not before the M'Mullens went to England?—I do swear positively it was not before it.

5225. You swear positively it was not before it?—I do.

5226. Do you swear it was not during their absence?—Yes, it was during their absence.

5227. It was during their absence?—It was. I swear it was.

5228. Can you not fix the time more closely than that?—I cannot.

5229. You will not swear it was not during the first week or fortnight of their absence?—I think it was. I believe it was.

5230. That is, you admit that you heard of Mitchells, and of their supplying paper to the Irish Times before the date which M'Dowell fixes to the letter?—I do; but I do not know the date of the letter, and I cannot.

5231. Have you had any conversation with Mr. Hignell lately?—Well, I see him every day of the week.

5232. Did you see him after you received the subpœna?—I did.

5233. State accurately what conversation took place?—Nothing at all—none at all. I had not a minute. I got it at two o'clock—run home—and leave at four.

5234. Where did you get it?—At my house. After getting it I had to go to my office and called round and told him I had got a subpœna to come down here. I returned to my office and house and then came down here.

5235. Where is your house?—In lower Dominick-street.

5236. Where is your office?—In 104, Abbey-street.

5237. Which Abbey-street?—Middle Abbey-street.

5238. Why did you go to Mr. Hignell?—Well, I I think I did not do any harm by going to tell him I had got a subpœna to come down.

5239. Had you any reason for going?—No, I had none whatever; I did not stay five minutes when I went away and got ready to come down.

5240. You say you see Mr. Hignell every day—I suppose you have had some conversation about this election inquiry?—Well, we had very little.

5241. But you had some?—Very little, only about myself. When I saw it in the newspapers I said, "I suppose they will be bringing me down."

5242. When did that take place?—When I saw in the papers that M'Mullen mentioned my name.

5243. But had you any conversation with Mr. Hignell about this inquiry before that?—No, I had not.

5244. When you had that conversation with Mr. Hignell after you read the newspapers what took place—did Mr. Hignell express any surprise at hearing of the M'Mullens?—He did not; not the slightest.

5245. What did he say to you?—Well, I could not tell. No more than to say they were examined and gave evidence; that is all.

5246. Do you mean to say that Mr. Hignell said nothing to you about the M'Mullens?—He must have read the newspapers. I know I did.

5247. You said to him with respect to their examination that you supposed they would be wanting you?—I did, and he said he supposed they would.

5248. Did anything else pass?—I cannot recollect.

5249. You must recollect it is only two days ago?—I tell you honestly——

5250. The Chief Commissioner.—Don't be protesting?—I tell you all——

5251. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Tell me the conversation?—I cannot tell any more.

5252. Do you mean to swear that nothing more passed between you two than your saying, "I suppose I will have to go to Sligo," and he saying, "I suppose you will?"—Nothing that I am aware of.

5253. Do you swear nothing else did pass?—I will. Nothing else passed. Nothing about the Sligo petition.

5254. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Did Hignell say to you, "Give as little information as you possibly can?"—No.

5255. Or anything of that sort?—No. He never advised me to do anything of the kind.

5256. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—You told us before that Hignell denied all knowledge of the M'Mullens?—He did.

5257. Did he say, "What is the meaning of all this about the M'Mullens?"—No, he did not.

5258. Have you been paid this money?—No.

[The witness then withdrew.]

Major Laurence E. Knox sworn and examined.

5259. The Chief Commissioner.—Major Knox, I believe it was in February, 1867, you formed the idea of canvassing for the representation of Sligo?—Yes; not of canvassing, but of standing. I did not canvass until the year after.

5260. State, after having formed the idea, what steps you took in any way, and whom you consulted and advised with about the success of your candidature?—Well, I chiefly consulted with Mr. Wynne of Hazlewood and different gentlemen—the leading men of the party. I consulted with them. I did not consult much for some time; not for a few months. I was away a good deal.

5261. It would be convenient for us if you would just state in your own way what you did after you formed the idea?—Well, there was a meeting held here, at which they asked me to come forward. There was likely to be a vacancy. The Reform question was before the House of Commons; and soon after they passed that resolution I came down. I did not canvass, but I called on some leading, certain leading supporters I expected to have, and I saw them. The next thing I did was to subscribe to the registry. That was chiefly what I did. There was no vacancy then in question.

5262. You mentioned a subscription to the Registry. How much did you subscribe, and what expense were you at altogether about the registry?—That year very little. My recollection is that I did not—I am sure I only gave £25 the first year.

5263. That is '67?—'67; yes. In '68 I gave a very large subscription.

5264. How much?—Well, the Registry for '68 cost me at least £600. I think, perhaps, that is almost under the amount.

5265. Did you keep an account of what I may call the election expenditure?—Oh, I did of the election expenditure.

5266. I mean the expenditure with a view to forwarding your election?—No, not in toto. I kept no account of that registry expense accurately. I could tell you what it was exactly, but I did not keep any.

5267. To whom did you give principally the £600?—Well, I gave a good deal of it to the Conservative Society here, which was then represented by the late Captain Fawcett and Mr. Robinson; they were treasurer and secretary; but in addition to that I paid fees to counsel and agents—fifty guineas to counsel, and thirty and forty to agents, and so on.

5268. I presume that £600 was paid principally by cheques?—I think it was entirely, almost entirely by letters of credit. I generally to the country send letters of credit; it is the most convenient.

5269. Did you keep an account at a branch bank in Sligo?—No, never;—no, I think I never kept an account, but I arranged sometimes to have a cheque paid here by the bank.

5270. Which bank?—The Ulster Bank in this town. They paid my cheques—any cheque I drew.

5271. You made an arrangement, a very usual one, with the manager?—To pay my cheques.

5272. That your cheques should be honoured?—Exactly.

5273. When did you make that arrangement?—My recollection is, it was some time before the revision of 1868. I think I wrote to Dublin for my banker there to "advise" them here to pay any cheques I would require larger than I usually would draw on the bank. It was before the revision of 1868; I remember something of the kind occurring.

5274. You have stated you gave £25 for the revision of 1867, and about £600 for the revision of 1868?—Yes.

5275. When in 1867 or 1868 did you begin to make an expenditure with a view to forward the election?—Well, there was no expenditure as regards the election until the election almost. I was not here till about ten days of it. I spent nothing until I came down; not a shilling until I came down about the 2nd of November.

5276. Had you an agent for election expenses?—I had Mr. Andrew Clokey of the Bank of Ireland.

5277. Did you appoint him?—I did; a regular agent.

5278. It was a regular appointment?—Yes.

5279. Did he lodge an account with the Sheriff?—He did. I am sure he did. I had to sign an account, I know, for the Sheriff, and I think it was £800 or £900. It was published; but I think it was £800 or £900 my expenses were.

5280. That was the "Expenses Agent" account?—Yes.

5281. It was the "Expenses Agent" account returned to the Sheriff?—Exactly; I looked for it, but could not find it coming down here. It was published in the local papers.

5282. Did you return to the Sheriff the bills and vouchers?—To the Mayor; he is the returning officer of the borough.

5283. That was about £800 or £900?—I think it was £800, as far as I can remember. I paid one or two since then that ought to have been in it; one or two agents—Mr. Rutherford, and one or two others that were forgotten.

5284. What amount did you pay in the same category of expenses as the "Expenses Agent" account since?—Oh, not much; about £20, not more; between £20 and £25. Two agents I think that had been forgotten.

5285. Now, Thomas Brennan has been mentioned both on the petition trial and here?—Yes.

5286. Where is he now?—I don't know; I have no idea where he is.

5287. Where did you see him last?—I saw him some weeks ago; not very long ago in Dublin. He was looking for employment. I recommended him to the Dublin Brewery Company, or one or two places. I do not know whether he got it. I do not think he did.

5288. You mean employment as a clerk?—Yes, or something. He cannot come back here; he was desperately maltreated before.

5289. Was any of the money expended by Thomas Brennan included in the "Expenses Agent's account?"—No.

5290. How much money did he get from you?—He got at first—the first time we decided that we ought to have a mob—he got £50. I remember then he got another £50. He got altogether fully £200. My cousin, Valentine Knox, since gave him money for me. He got fully £200. He told me he expended more. He told me he spent his mother's money—some money of his mother's.

5291. You say that £200 was for the purpose of employing a mob?—Yes.

5292. Did you give any other money for that purpose except to Brennan?—No, never; oh, never; except once or twice when we were out a mob would come and ask for drink, and I gave £2 or £3 once or twice to get rid of them; but it was only a small thing out of my pocket—what I happened to have. I gave £5 one time and £3 another.

5293. Did you at any time make up an account of what the last election has actually cost you up to the present?—No, not accurately; but I calculated that the election and petition together cost me £7,000—the two together, but I never kept them separately.

5294. Seven thousand pounds?—Seven thousand pounds at least.

5295. At least seven thousand?—At least seven thousand.

5296. Did you make that up on paper in any way?—No, merely as a man of business going through my accounts at the end of the year—that is the way—I think it was the last quarter I did that, but I have kept no regular account of these—I could not accurately say—but it cost me fully that.

5297. You have mentioned the "Expenses Agent's Account"—we have sent to the Mayor of Sligo for it—did you keep any particular cheque books for election expenses; I have known in some cases that was done, and then by taking up the particular cheques, the numbers would tell?—No. I did not—of election expenses—but the sums can be ascertained; there were some things I paid myself separately before Mr. Clokey was appointed; and I believe the law was that he should put them into the return, and both he and I signed it. I believe that is the way.

5298. You have mentioned Brennan and Clokey?—Yes.

5299. To what other persons did you give money for the purposes of the election?—Well, there were the agents, of course, at the different revisions—there was a great deal of money spent on houses for making votes.

5300. How is that?—Many houses were taken or bought and votes made; of course that involved a loss of the rent or nearly the rent—then there were a few cases of distress which were relieved—there were very large subscriptions to local things—innumerable matters of that kind. In fact my desire was to do everything I could that was not illegal, as liberally as possible.

5301. We will want in some way to have the names of the persons to whom?—I doubt being able to give it in detail. There was constantly one thing or another. Brennan got this money. Mr. Phibbs expended money for me on different things about the votes and the revision, and things of that kind. We had houses. I paid a considerable sum to Mr. Wynne, and other landlords for houses. I bought a few myself. £500 or £600 I paid one time for houses.

5302. Five or six hundred pounds for houses?—Yes, for houses. If all that is totted up it makes nearly £4,000 with the revision expenses, and then the petition cost me £3,000.

5303. Now, I want you to analyse the £4,000 as conveniently as you can?—Very nearly £1,000 of public expenses—nearly £1,000, taking it roughly; then £600 for the revision, that makes £1,600; then £200 or £250 to Brennan for the mobs that is £1,850; there were £600 at least paid for houses, or more—perhaps more—that makes £2,400 or £2,500. Then there were a great many things—whenever I came down—for instance we had regattas here. I had to pay a great deal of money in different ways. I had a yacht here, and a number of the mob pulled it through the streets. I think I paid £50 for pulling the boat through the streets—I think it cost me that. I gave it to a man named M'Carrick, I gave £50.

5304. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Was that the Regatta of 1868?—It was, I think, at both regattas. The boat was brought to sea across through the town, to the lake—then perhaps I include my expenditure for building the yacht—things of that kind—I rather think I do, but I know it cost me fully altogether £7,000. There were a great many local subscriptions —cases of distress and other things.

5305. Mr. Hignell is still in your employment?—He is.

5306. Had he any authority to pay money for you?—None whatever. Do you mean here—in any way connected with the election.

5307. Yes?—No—none whatever. He paid none.

5308. Did you hear of the evidence that he gave £2 to M'Mullen?—I know all about that. I am aware of that; and though I did not hear of it till after the petition, I said I approved of it. This young M'Mullen and his father were always regarded as supporters of mine—no doubt they were—but the state of the town was such that they could not vote, and they went away. They were, I believe, in Dublin,—so I hear; I don't know where they were, but Mrs. Lyons wrote up to Mr. Hignell and said young M'Mullen's wife was dying and it would be a charity to send him down, and that he would call. I believe Mr. Hignell never saw him; he would call on him at the Irish Times office. I was not there. I think I was in London. He did come and Mr. Hignell gave him £2. He told me after the petition; he thought he should not tell me before that. I quite approved of it and gave him the £2. I fully approved of what he had done. I would have done it myself had I been at the Irish Times office.

5309. Did you know M'Mullen had not voted for you?—I did, quite—I knew it, of course. I may have forgotten the name at the moment, but I knew he was a supporter. I was very glad they did not vote; they would be murdered if they did.

5310. Did you know that they were going away from Sligo?—I did not at the time; but I knew it at the petition; it was alleged there.

5311. But did you know before the trial of the petition that they were away?—No, I did not know it. I was not aware of that. In fact, I thought they got out of the way like some others, but had not left the town.

5312. Did you make any inquiry in view of the election petition trial as to where they were?—I think during the petition I did. I think I asked and I do not know that I heard at the time; but I knew afterwards they were in England. I got a letter from Mr. Mitchell and another man, whose name I forget, in Clithero, where they stayed. I took no notice of it. I wrote to Mr. Mitchell. I have said I knew nothing of it, but notwithstanding these men having left because they were supporters of mine, I must say I should most unhesitatingly have paid their expenses. I would do it for every man, a supporter of mine, who had to leave from such violence. I did not do it. I did not know the facts, but I should have done it. I did it in one instance.

5313. In whose instance?—A man named M'Morrow who voted for me. He was maltreated very badly. He came to Dublin and I paid for him where he stayed.

5314. How much did you pay for M'Morrow?—I paid £15 or £16 at the rate of thirty-five shillings a week for him while he was here. He returned when the town quieted; but I would have paid it from that time to this such was the state of the town. He was examined, I think. He suffered a good deal. You can have no conception of the state of the town; you could not believe it possible.

5315. We will examine you fully as to that. Where was M'Morrow staying in Dublin?—He was staying with a man, I think, of the name of Armstrong—Mr. Armstrong, I think, a man in Guinness and Mahon's office. That is my recollection.

5316. Was it to Armstrong you paid it?—He called on me and told me the man had been staying there. I ascertained he was the right man and I paid him at once.

5317. With regard to M'Mullens, I asked you at the time of the petition trial in Carrick, or immediately after, did you ascertain that they were in England?—I ascertained it in Carrick—but I think——

5318. Who told you in Carrick that the men were in England?—Well, I think it was Mr. Hignell—that is my recollection—whether I heard it from him direct I do not know, but I heard it through him. I remember talking of it and asking him what became of them.

5319. You knew they were in Clithero then?—I did not. I did not know they were in Clithero until I got a letter from that place afterwards from Mr. Mitchell stating that they were staying at some place and he should pay the money for them.

5320. It has been stated to us already that this house of Mitchell and Son supply you with paper?—They have off and on, not many times, but he is a very old friend of mine Mr. Mitchell and of Mr. Hignell's; I believe they knew each other in England.

5321. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Have you got the letter Mr. Mitchell wrote to you?—No, I did not keep it. It merely mentioned that.

5322. The Chief Commissioner.—At the time Mr. Mitchell wrote were the men staying in Clithero?—Well, I am not certain, I cannot say—that is the first I heard of their being in Clithero. I was rather surprised. I did not know that they had gone there at all, and I don't know, I think they were, but I am not quite sure, but it is my idea that they were still there, and I think it was at Rancliffe's house, some name like that, Rancliffe or Radcliffe—but there was no secret about it. It was known that several of my supporters had to stay away. It was an absolute necessity; they would be killed if they came back here; I quite approved of it.

5323. You are, of course, to pay all the expenses of the M'Mullens while being away?—Well, I have not. Mr. Mitchell did not ask me, but if he asks me I will pay it.

5324. If he asks you, you will pay it?—Yes.

5325. And of course you will pay James M'Dowell's bill?—Well, I don't know anything about him at all. He wrote to me for it and I refused to pay it. I did not authorize it. I did not know anything of it, but I know they could not return here from what I heard, and I feel bound to pay the expenses of anyone who could not return and who supported me.

5326. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Did you know of any other supporters of yours being in England?—I thought so more than once; I did not know where they were—but I knew Mr. Gethins was away.

5327. The Chief Commissioner.—During the trial of the election petition was it?—Well, I don't know. When he came back I knew he was away.

5328. Who else do you know was away?—I knew Mr. Brennan was away. He came up with his ankle dislocated and his nose broken, and I sent him to the Meath Hospital, and paid the fee to my doctor for attending him—afterwards when he left the place he was attended by the doctor out of hospital. There was another who had to leave. My recollection is that Devanny had to leave. I think he had to leave too.

5329. You paid nothing for him?—No, I did not. I think he paid it himself.

5330. Have you paid anything else for voters that absented themselves?—The names I mentioned of those who absented themselves would have all voted for me except the two M'Mullens, and I paid nothing at all except for M'Morrow. I paid for him. He voted for me, and was beaten and came up to town.

5331. How much have you paid—irrespective of the petition, and the expenses of witnesses—since the election?—Since the polling day, with the exception of M'Morrow's—that payment of £15, or £16, I have not paid sixpence—since the polling day—nor was I asked for sixpence, nor is sixpence due of an account.

5332. I wish to have it quite clear that since the polling day, with the exception of M'Morrow's which you have mentioned, you paid nothing connected with the election?—Not a shilling, nor have I been asked.

FOURTH DAY. October 8.

Major Laurence E. Knox.

5333. And the whole of the £3,000 you have mentioned was paid prior and up to the polling day?—Yes.

5334. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Of course, to that you must add the £20 you said was omitted from the auditor's account?—I mentioned that—yes—Mr. Rutherford, an agent, and a couple of poll clerks—a mere trifling thing that I paid. With reference to the payments of money, it is due to my constituents to state that 241 voted for me, and of that number not one either before or since the election asked me for sixpence for his vote or anything else. I wasn't asked for a farthing or for anything in the world by any of them. It is also due to the memory of my late opponent to say that I am certain he paid nothing either—if he did we would have known it, for we took steps to know it. Nothing of the kind was asked for on either side.

5335. Do you know a man named Michael Rooney?—I never saw him. I know of the man. I know he lives at a place called Cornagee.

5336. Did he write a letter to you for money?—I remember he did. My recollection is that he sent me a kind of memorial, signed by others—it must be a long time ago, two years ago; I don't remember the date.

5337. What Rooney stated in evidence was that he got £12 enclosed in a blank envelope?—What occurred was this, as well as I remember—he sent a memorial to me. I acknowledged the receipt by return of post, as I always do in these cases, and said I would give it my attention. I forgot it, and I got a second letter from him. I was, I think, going to London at the time, and I gave directions that Mr. Barker (who, I think, was in my employment at the time) should look into the thing and send the money. He asked it, I think, for a loan, or for his crops, or for something of the sort; but he said nothing of his vote at all.

5338. And you sent the £12?—Yes. I didn't know that it was sent until afterwards.

5339. Did any others apply to you for money?—One or two others did at about the same time as Rooney applied to me. There was one man named Neilan, I remember.

5340. Did you know Rooney was an elector?—I didn't know; I believed he was an elector, but he said nothing about his vote.

5341. Did he vote for you?—He voted against me.

5342. Did you canvass him?—I didn't; I knew he wouldn't vote for me; for some reason or other we knew he wouldn't vote for me; the man was in distress.

5343. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Did anyone else besides Rooney and Neilan apply to you for money?—Yes, I think a man named Flanagan did; I remember I sent him money; he wasn't a voter, I think.

5444. How much did you send Flanagan?—Six pounds. He asked me for something to pay his lodgings or his rent, or something.

5345. The Chief Commissioner.—Did you know Neilan was a voter?—I did not; I didn't know it; Mr. Pollock didn't know it.

5346. How much was given to Neilan?—I think it was £20; I am not quite certain how much it was.

5347. Was it through Mr. Pollock that money was sent?—It was. I sent the letter to him, and asked him to do what was right in the matter, and if he found that the man ought to be relieved to relieve him.

5348. How long before the election was that?—It was about the same time as Rooney's, whatever time that was.

5349. When did you ascertain that Neilan was an elector?—I didn't know it until the petition at Carrick; I thought he was not an elector even then.

5350. Did you ever canvass him?—I did not; I mentioned that at Carrick.

5351. When did you ascertain that Rooney was an elector?—I inquired about it this morning and I ascertained that he was.

5352. This morning?—Yes, this morning.

5353. Will you look over the return of election expenses—this is what is returned to the Mayor; it amounts to £797 4*s.*?—Yes. [Return handed to witness.]

5354. I find in this return only the statutable expenses for counsel, agents, clerks, and messengers are one item—I mean as one classification; then the advertising and other statutable expenses amount to £614 10*s.* 4*d.*; the remainder is put down here as for car-hire, for the purchase of a house for a residence, and for household expenses; canvassers and messengers, £49; telegrams, £21; bill-sticker, £20; now, it is quite obvious, Major Knox, that the items here form a very small portion of the election expenses?—I don't think there are any fees for counsel or agents there. No agent got fees at the election, for if they got fees they couldn't vote; and we therefore thought we might be more liberal towards them at the revision.

5355. Why didn't you return all the expenses for the election?—I think they are all here as far as I know. There wasn't a shilling charged which is not here that I ever heard of.

5356. Why did you not put down the £250 you gave to Brennan?—That had nothing to do with the election. He got it before the revision for a mob. There was no mob at the election, nor since the revision.

5357. Had you any house where your friends met to consult?—Some of them used to meet at a house in this (Albert) street; in Hegarty's, I think, it was.

5358. Did you pay for the use of that house?—I did not; it's my own house.

5359. Who used to meet there?—I don't know that they used to meet there exactly; they met at Farrell's, the next house, and there is a communication between the two.

5360. Tell me the names of some of those who used to meet there?—I heard some of the names at Carrick. A man named Williams.

5361. Thomas Williams?—Yes.

5362. And Stokes?—He said he was there once.

5363. Cherry?—I don't know whether he was there or not. I was only once there myself, and there was no one there at the time but Woods and some one else.

5364. I see an item here for canvassers; who were the canvassers; was Frazer a canvasser?—I think he was. There was some one of the name a canvasser, I know.

5365. Frazer, P. O'Connor, Waugh, M. O'Connor, Leonard, Garlick—was Frazer a canvasser?—He was, I think.

5366. Was Waugh?—He came down to do all he could, and as we paid his expenses we had no other head under which we could put them.

5367. M. O'Connor?—Are there two O'Connors?

5368. Yes?—I don't know him.

5369. Leonard?—Yes.

5370. Is that Thomas Leonard?—He was a messenger. I gave him £5.

5371. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—When you say you gave him £5, do you mean by that you paid £5?—He and others used go messages, and I gave £1 to each of them.

5372. The Chief Commissioner.—Do you know that your cousin, Mr. Utred Knox, used some money to persons?—I heard it at Carrick.

5373. He never told you he did it?—He didn't; it was his own money.

5374. Have you learned since that anyone else lent money in the same way?—No, I have not.

5375. Have you any doubt of its having been done?—I doubt of its being done. He did it because he was very anxious about me. I don't believe anyone else did.

5376. You have no doubt he did it to forward your interests in every way?—I am sure he did. I once had a conversation about relieving cases of distress, and we were told that it was a legitimate way of doing it, where we didn't know that the parties had votes, or where we knew they had no votes.

5377. Did you take advice as to whether you could relieve the distress of a voter?—We did to that effect, that if a man did not say he had a vote, and we were told it didn't signify.

5378. Were you advised to that effect?—Yes, junior counsel so advised us.

5379. To the effect, that if he didn't mention that he was a voter, you could relieve him?—Yes, decidedly.

5380. In how many instances did you act on that advice?—I know my cousin relieved a man whom I would not relieve.

5381. Who was that?—A man named Tierney.

5382. Charles Tierney?—Yes, I knew his history previously.

5383. Tell us about that?—It is well known that at a former election here there were two candidates—Mr. Townley and some other man. When he was going to vote he went to one of the candidates, who said, "Didn't you shave me this morning?" "I did," he said, "but I've cut some one else's hair since."

5384. Did Tierney apply to you for money?—He did, frequently.

5385. Who else of the electors applied to you for money?—A man named Kilcullen.

5386. Is that Thady Kilcullen?—Dominic Kilcullen.

5387. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—He applied to you for money?—He did, once or twice.

5388. The Chief Commissioner.—How long before the election was that?—When I was down here staying on the Mall, at the revision in '68, or in the July of '68, at the regatta, I remember his coming there.

5389. I now refer you to the applications for money about which you were examined at Carrick by, I think, the Judge—I refer you to the minutes of evidence commencing with question

"5620. You mentioned last evening that numbers—I think the word you used was a 'great number,' a 'great number of elector fellows'—were constantly coming to you and asking you for money?—They were, these poor ones.

"And in writing?—Oh, perpetually.

"When you said a 'great number of these elector fellows,' to what extent would you say?—Well, there appeared to me to be a certain class of them.

"But what number?—I think they were nearly the whole of the inhabitants of that poor part of the place. I should think, I am sure I got from thirty to forty.

"Asking money?—Generally.

"Asking for money, of course?—They always used to begin by saying they were distressed, and then saying they would be great supporters of mine when the time came, and they hoped, in the meantime, I would remember them, and that kind of thing.

"Does your recollection go to the extent of thirty or forty?—I am sure there were fully thirty at different times. It used to be a long thing, generally on blue paper. My table was covered with them at Mr. Knox's house. It was a dreadful thing. The doors used to be knocked all day by these people.

"Asking for assistance?—Asking for money. My hall was full of them. I had to go out and stay at Mount Shannon, I was so persecuted; but they were all of the same class."

5390. Does your recollection extend to thirty or forty applications for money?—There were thirty or forty applications. I can tell you of a good many of electors.

5391. Mention some of them?—A man named Flynn came to me once, and sent a letter to me once; Reynolds, Dunleavy and wife; this man Flanagan, and several others from the same district. They appeared to me to look on a candidate as legitimate prey.

5392. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Tierney was one of these?—Yes, he applied for money several times.

5393. The Chief Commissioner.—They all applied for money?—Yes. They didn't say they would vote for me if I gave it; but they wished his honour long life, and said they would be supporters of mine, and hoped I would succeed. Not one of them, however, voted for me.

5394. Did you refer any of them to Mr. Utred Knox or Mr. Pollock?—No; I may have mentioned the matter to them. I always saw every one of them myself, that came; I generally had some one with me when I saw them.

5395. I wish you to mention to how many electors you gave money, or authorized it to be given. I mean all persons whom we now know to be electors?—There was Rooney, Neilan, Kilcullen, got money.

5396. From whom?—From Brennan, Kilcullen told me he got up a good mob. I got a letter when I came down here, and was staying at Leech's house, in which he said he had 12 men ready. I understood he said he did not get money.

[Letter read from Kilcullen to witness, dated Nov. 5th, 1868, enclosing the names of the men.]

5397. Were any of these men voters?—I am not sure of one—I think not. I didn't read them carefully. [Witness reads the names.] I think not. I am not sure of the man Hart.

5398. Mr. Commissioner.—John Hart is a voter.

5399. The Chief Commissioner.—Mention any more that applied for or got money?—There were no more who got money, but I am sure that more applied for it. Some applied for situations for their sons, and some for recommendations to Dublin. It wasn't so much the money they applied for, but the perpetual memorials that were coming in, and all from the same class of people.

5400. At all events you remember writing a letter to Kilcullen, that I will read for you from the evidence given at Carrick? I didn't remember that letter; I remember it now.

"53, Fitzwilliam-square, Dublin,
"January 25th, 1868.

"DEAR SIR,—Would you kindly let me know what appointment your son would wish to have, as I will do my best to obtain it for him, and it will afford me pleasure to further your wishes regarding him.

"I remain, dear sir, yours respectfully,

"LAURENCE E. KNOX.

"Dominick Kilcullen, esq."

Witness.—That is January, 1868, before I had the pleasure of knowing him. I didn't put "esq." to his name afterwards.

5401. Did you know he was an elector then?—I didn't.

5402. Have you his letter to you?—I have not.

5403. Did he apply for a situation for his son, in his letter?—He did; I forget what his son wanted. I think it was something in the post office—I am not sure what it was.

5404. Did he afterwards write to you for the situation he wanted?—I am sure he did.

5405. Had you then the registry of the electors?—No; I used to get a return of it.

5406. From whom?—From Mr. Wilson.

5407. Who is he?—The secretary of the Conservative Society.

5408. What sort of a return was it?—It was the registry marked. They were not classified.

5409. When did he send it to you?—Towards the end of each year, after the registry.

5410. Did he send it in October, 1867?—He did, probably. I suspect he did. If he didn't, he sent an analysis of it.

5411. Was Kilcullen, or Neilan, or Rooney mentioned in it?—I am not aware. I was asked that at Carrick. We looked into it, and Neilan and Kilcullen were on it.

5412. Is Rooney an opponent of yours?—Decidedly.

5413. That was on the registry in October, 1867?—Yes. Mr. Wilson will assure you of it himself.

5414. When these applications used be made to you, did you look at the registry to see who were electors, and who were not?—Never. I was not aware it made any difference as long as the application was not asked as a condition for the applicant's vote.

5415. Didn't you believe when you advanced money to those people that it would influence their votes?—I believed that relieving cases of distress would be looked on as a popular thing, and that such a thing would be expected from a candidate.

Fourth Day.
October 8.
Major Laurence E. Knox.

5416. Did you think it would forward the election?—Certainly; it would advance one's position in the borough.

5417. In the list of expenses elections you mentioned £4,000. I ask you now to classify the balance of £3,300?—There is, first for instance, now annually spent on houses several hundred a year; furnishing the house on the Mall, two or three hundred; expenses connected with the yacht, five or six hundred; subscriptions to everything in the town, which I, as a candidate, had to pay as a matter of right; subscription to the registry, and there was the revision, which cost me £700 for '68, because my subscription was not sufficient. There were a great many agents, and, not being able to give fees to them at the election, of course we had to retain them all at the revision instead.

5418. How was the £600 expended at the revision?—Fifty guineas each to counsel—there were two counsel, 100 guineas; each agent got ten guineas retainer, and thirty guineas fee; I think ten guineas retainer, and forty guineas fee.

5419. Do you mean the solicitors?—Yes; there were six of them—Mr. Phibbs, the two Mr. Sedleys, Mr. Pollock, Mr. Beckett, and another Mr. Phibbs—Mr. Griffin Phibbs.

5420. When you were giving this money at the revision, it was, I suppose, with a view to their services at the election?—Well, the revision under the Reform Bill required a great deal of working, as you know; it was a new Act of Parliament—to do in the most effective manner the work dependent on it; and, secondly, we knew we could not give a fee to them at the election; it was, therefore, necessary to be very liberal to them at the revision.

5421. I will have to ask you, Major Knox, to make out from your bankbook the details of all the expenses in addition to the election expenses returned in the return to the Mayor?—I will go into that for you.

5422. I want to know did you know the M'Mullens were going to leave Sligo?—I didn't.

5423. What voters did you know were going to leave?—As to leaving actually, I knew that O'Connor on the day of polling was afraid to vote for me, and had to keep out of the way. M'Guirk, Gethen, Mark Anthony, and several others could not come up.

5424. Did you know Harrison to go away?—No; I don't know him at all.

5425. The old man?—I always looked on him to be a supporter; he is on my list; I think he is on Mr. Watson's list as a supporter. The M'Mullens were always supporters of mine.

5426. Mrs. Dunleavy you heard examined in Carrick?—Yes.

5427. Did you ever give her any money?—I never gave her any money in my life; there isn't a word of truth in it.

5428. State all that occurred between you, her husband and Mrs. Dunleavy?—She called several times at the house on the Mall where I was staying. The servant didn't leave her in—she made some excuse, as I was bothered by people calling. At last she wouldn't go away one morning, she was shown in. She commenced making some request when Mr. Pollock came in, and immediately went off. He got rid of her, and said he wanted to speak to me. She went away, I think. I told Mr. Pollock what occurred, and said I was persecuted by her. He told me that she was a dangerous woman. I saw no more of her then until next evening, when she called again at the house. I saw her then. I was not civil to her at all. I told her she really must not come again—that I would give her nothing. She was very abusive, and went away. I never spoke to her since. The servant came back and told me she was very abusive. I was twice, I should state, at her house—passing once canvassing with Mr. Phibbs; I had no conversation, except to bid good morning to the man, and ask him if he would give me his support. I don't know what he said. Another time I was canvassing, and Mr. Pollock was with me; he wished her good morning, and said nothing more. These were the only times, but as to offering her money ——

5429. It is unnecessary to go into details—she also stated that you gave her £10 in her shop?—She alleged that at Carrick, and Judge Keogh scouted it, because I told him there wasn't a word of truth in it.

5430. Not a word?—Emphatically, there isn't a syllable of truth in it. The statement of another witness, Feeny, was that I offered him £50. Observe, as regards one item in that woman's evidence—she stated that I took out my purse, counted out £10 in notes, and gave it to her. It so happens I never had a purse in my life. I always carry my money loosely in my pocket.

5431. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—She said it was from a pocket-book you took it, I think?—I never carried that either.

5432. The Chief Commissioner.—You did not carry it in a portmonnaie?—No; I carry it like that [producing some papers from his side pocket].

5433. You remember it was a man named Pat Flynn whose ejectment was paid?—Yes, I remember that at Carrick.

5434. There was £10 and the costs of the ejectment paid—out of whose pocket were the costs of the ejectment paid?—That was explained at Carrick. Brennan raised it on a bill on the bank.

5435. Do you mean to say that Brennan paid it out of his own pocket?—He did; he raised it on a bill which, I understand, is still unpaid.

5436. You say that Brennan paid that £10 out of his own pocket?—He and Flynn, I understand, put their names on a bill on the bank; I find that the bill is still unpaid.

5437. Have you, or any one on your behalf, paid that £10?—I never heard of it.

5438. If Brennan is to pay that bill, do you consider yourself in honour bound to pay it?—Most decidedly not.

5439. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—To what purpose was that money applied?—It was, I believe, applied for paying rent due by Flynn. Flynn was one of Brennan's mob.

5440. The Chief Commissioner.—Who recommended Neilan to you about the money?—I think he wrote to me himself.

5441. Do you know did Leonard interfere in the matter?—Not with me.

5442. Did anyone else?—Not that I know of. I am sure if he did I would have sent the letter to Mr. Pollock. I sent Mr. Pollock only one letter—I sent him only two letters.

5443. How much did Mr. Pollock say he gave Neilan?—I think £20.

5444. When did you repay him?—We were not clear about that at Carrick.

5445. Did you include that £20 and the two sums paid to electors in the general expenditure of the £4,000?—Yes, quite.

5446. What friends, strangers to Sligo, had you coming with you from Dublin for the election?—Mr. Hans Morrison, a young English barrister; Mr. John Valentine Knox, my cousin; that was all that came with me. Perhaps a reporter from the Irish Times also came.

5447. Did Mr. Hignell come with you?—He came down afterwards.

5448. Where did Mr. Hignell stay when he came down?—I think it was at the Victoria hotel. I know I saw him in and out there. I am nearly sure it was.

5449. Where did Mr. Morrison and Mr. Valentine Knox stay?—They were staying at Mr. Leech's with me.

5450. Mr. Morrison came as your personal friend I suppose?—Yes; he came to make a speech.

5451. What did Mr. Hignell come down for?—He came down to give all the help he could in every way; he was a good deal of assistance to us.

5452. In canvassing?—No. He had to send telegrams for us; he wrote letters for, and he did everything that was required to be done; he was my man. I sent him to Dublin to bring down some one.

5453. Of the £4,000 how much went through the Sligo branch bank—to your bank in Sligo?—Nothing except what Clokey paid here, which was paid by the Ulster bank when I told him to pay my cheques for the revision.

5454. Do you know the amount of your cheques that were honoured here?—£400 or £500. I couldn't tell you exactly.

5455. Did anyone else, to your knowledge, pay any money except the £4,000 you paid?—Decidedly, nothing except what I paid myself.

5456. Do you believe that no other money was paid at the election?—Certainly. I am sure there was not.

5457. Do you know that Stokes and Cherry were very active, and canvassed for you?—I don't know that they canvassed, but I know they were very anxious about me. Stokes was especially so.

5458. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—You know that a witness named Sheil gave evidence before Judge Keogh with regard to certain transactions with Cherry. Certain receipts were produced to show that a certain amount of money was paid by him. You don't include that at all?—I don't. That wasn't my money at all.

5459. Only £4,000, as you say, is what the election cost. Do you believe that that was all the money that was expended by you or by anyone on your behalf?—I don't believe there was a sixpence expended beyond what I told you. I am convinced there was nothing more expended.

5460. You don't include in the £4,000 the loans from Mr. Utred Knox?—I don't. They were all out of his own pocket.

5461. Whether do you believe that there was any other money expended with regard to the election?—I understood from his evidence that the men who got the loans from Mr. Utred Knox were only men who went to him as Clerk of the Peace. He had nothing to do with me, and no one else did so.

5462. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Was Sligo in a disturbed state during the election?—It was very much disturbed for a long time prior to the election; but it was very much more so for eight or nine days before the election. The town was excessively disturbed during the revision for one or two days. I was very much mobbed myself; and I and my supporters were obliged to have a guard of police from this place. There was no actual injury done. A week before the election mobs came into the town. To the credit of the people I must say they were strangers to it. They were like savages from the mountains, and we had a hot time of it for that week.

5463. Have you had any experience of elections in Ireland, I do not mean as a candidate, but as a spectator merely?—I have, both as a spectator and while in the army.

5464. Is it your opinion that there was more violence at the last election in Sligo than at ordinary elections in boroughs in Ireland?—On the polling day I saw more violence at the last election here used by unarmed mobs, but on the other days I saw as much in other places in Ireland; for instance, in Tipperary I have seen as much.

5465. Were there any instances of violence that struck your attention particularly?—Yes, they broke into my house at Mr. Leech's, and we had great trouble to get them out certainly; my servant and I had to come down stairs with pistols.

5466. When was that?—It was the night before the election. I am glad to say they were all strangers to Sligo.

5467. Were the mobs numerous?—They were very large. They rather appeared to me to flock into town to see the fun.

5468. Did they appear to be under any head?—I should say they weren't under any leaders; there wasn't much organization. The question at the time—the Irish Church question—naturally excited them.

5469. What day did you see most violence?—On the polling day I had to get a guard of police, and on the nomination day also, to get from this place to my hotel.

5470. You mentioned a sum of £600 for the purchase of houses, could you give more particulars of that expenditure?—I can give you more particulars, but I think the expenditure was more than that, it is nearer to £1,000.

5471. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Were these houses purchased for the purpose of making votes?—Yes, for the purpose of increasing the number on the registry of those who would vote for me.

5472. How was that done?—A house or townpark, as the case may be, was taken or bought, and if it was rated sufficiently high to put three tenants into legitimate occupation, these were thus made voters.

5473. The Chief Commissioner.—How many electors were manufactured in that way?—Not a great many were actually made in the end. Something always happened; they didn't come on the registry.

5474. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—You say you paid £6 to a man named Flanagan?—I think £6 was the amount.

5475. Was he a voter?—I understand he was not a voter. I didn't ask at the time.

5476. Do you remember at what time you gave that sum?—It was early in '68, or at the end of '67; it was some time after it was known that I was coming here.

5477. Was the application made to you by himself?—He wrote to me himself, and he referred me to Mr. Wynne of Hazlewood, to whom, he said, he had been a teacher.

5478. Had you got memorials, previous to the election, for money, signed by voters, to be given to other persons, and not to themselves?—I got one in favour of a man named Jenkins, who was found to be useful at the revision, which was signed by a good many in his favour. It was stated that he should get £10, and I gave it. In '68 I gave it again to him.

5479. Was he a voter?—He was not.

5480. You said you were aware of Rooney being an elector this morning for the first time?—Yes, I mistook him for another man, until this day I was under that impression.

5481. The Chief Commissioner.—Were you a party to keeping away witnesses from the Carrick trial?—I was not, but I mentioned the absence of Brennan to Mr. Macdonogh, and I told him that he should be produced. Mr. Macdonogh said he should. I sent to London to get him. At the conclusion of the trial I heard that the M'Mullens were away.

5482. Didn't you say you got the letter from Clithero?—That was long after. My belief is that they left Clithero and that Radcliffe had kept them.

5483. Had you ever any conversation with Kavanagh?—Never. I knew him to be in the police; I knew him to be one of the heads of the detective force—that was the way I knew him, having come to the office once that some things were taken from it.

5484. You said the mobs were mainly composed of strangers to the town?—Yes, I think so.

5485. Can you state from what estates they came? I believe they mainly came from the direction of the estate of Mr. M'Ternan, a barrister in this country. I heard a great deal of knowledge of him among them.

5486. How far is his estate from the town?—Five or six miles or so. I think they came from that side of the country.

5487. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Was he a voter?—He was a very active supporter of Captain Flanagan. I must say that Captain Flanagan was most anxious that there should be no violence whatever during the election; he was most anxious that everything should be conducted in a legitimate way.

5488. You told us that it was February, 1867, you first came to Sligo?—That was the first time I came here as a visitor; I stayed two days here at the time.

5489. Did you make any canvass then?—I did not, as there was no vacancy.

FOURTH DAY.
October 8.
Major Laurence E. Knox.

5490. But you called on some of the principal voters?—Yes, I called on the leading gentlemen.

5491. Did you ask any promises of support?—I didn't.

5492. It was on that occasion you subscribed to the registry?—It was, or very soon after.

5493. When did you come back next?—I did not come back again until the regatta, which in '67 was in September. I came down for the regatta.

5494. Between these two dates—February and September—had you any correspondence with Sligo, or was anything done with a view to your personal candidature?—A good many of the houses had to be taken between these two dates.

5495. Mr. Phibbs was your agent in Sligo?—He was, for the Conservative Society.

5496. Was not he your own private solicitor?—He was not. Mr. Pollock did anything in the way of deeds, or in the way of purchasing houses for me.

5497. That was your chief connexion with the borough between these two dates?—I knew very few of the electors for some time later.

5498. Was it in September you first thought of building the yacht?—Yes, when the regatta was over I had it built. It was then I first met Brennan, who had a boat running at the regatta.

5499. Some boat of his he called after your paper, the Irish Times?—Yes.

5500. Of course your yacht was built here?—It was, by Mr. M'Carrick.

5501. Was he a voter?—He was not. I knew he was not.

5502. Do I understand that you include the expense of this yacht in your expenses?—Oh, I include everything that my thinking of the borough of Sligo involved of every description.

5503. Of course your building of the yacht seemed to you a very natural thing under the circumstances?—Exactly; and I built a number of boats here, rowing gigs, with the same view. They were built by another M'Carrick, a cousin of the man already mentioned.

5504. Is this other man a voter?—No, he is not.

5505. What was your next visit to Sligo—I suppose you were down at the revision in the year 1867?—No, I was not. I was not here again until a ball, perhaps. I am not sure whether I was down here till the regatta of 1868. I don't think I was. If I was it was only for a day just; but I came to the regatta of 1868, in July.

5506. That was the time——?—She was running then—the yacht: and I came down and staid here some little time, and then called on a great many electors.

5507. In fact you then began your canvass?—Yes. The Reform Bill had just passed; and we knew that the £4 voters would come in, and we called on as many as we thought would be in.

5508. And, I suppose, made preparations for the revision?—Yes; made almost all our preparations then.

5509. Were the agents engaged at that time?—No, they were not. They were not engaged, I am nearly sure, till late in August, or perhaps early in September.

5510. Are you certain whether you received, after the revision of 1867, the registered list of voters, or could you ascertain that?—I will try to ascertain it. I certainly did the one for 1868, but I am not so certain as to 1867. I was rather new here, and I am not sure if I did. The one of '68 I did, undoubtedly.

5511. The Chief Commissioner.—Who was the gentleman that used to send it to you?—Mr. Thomas Wilson. He would know.

5512. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—At what time did you first get the support of the Conservative Society of Sligo?—They held a meeting here in February, 1867, I am sure—a large meeting—and asked me to come forward, and they sent me resolutions—a requisition.

5513. Were you at that time the Conservative candidate for the borough?—Yes, I was a candidate.

5514. The Chief Commissioner.—Major Knox had got very extensive Liberal support?—Yes; I got very large Liberal support.

5515. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—From that time were your friends, the members of the Conservative Society, active in seeing what houses would probably constitute votes under the new Reform Act?—I don't think the Society—certainly the Society supplied no money for the purpose, for I paid everything of the kind.

5516. When I say the Society, I mean the active members of the Society?—Oh, yes.

5517. They looked after the houses?—Mr. Phibbs did. Yes. Mr. Pollock took an active part for me in securing and arranging the purchases.

5518. The Chief Commissioner.—How many votes do you calculate that you made by that means?—Well, I think, I suppose, there may have been thirty, perhaps.

5519. Thirty?—Perhaps not so many, twenty-three I would say.

5520. Can you give a list?—Perhaps I am rather over it still, and should say twenty, because some would have been on for their own houses, and they sometimes made it a way of getting a better house by coming into my house at a less rent. Twenty is the utmost.

5521. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Did they all vote for you?—No, they did not.

5522. The Chief Commissioner.—Did some of them vote against you?—One man went away, and I am not even sure if one or two did not vote against me; but one man, Clancy, went away.

5523. Charles Clancy?—Charles, yes.

5524. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Before the revision, did you get any list of names likely to be put on the registry under the new Reform Act?—I did.

5525. How long before the revision?—Oh, a very short time before the Reform Bill passed; I think in the end of July, or, I suppose, about the middle of August. It took some time—perhaps the end of August.

5526. Whom did you get the list from?—I got it from Mr. Farrell, the poor-rate collector, through Mr. Wilson. We sent to Mr. Farrell for it, and he got it for us from the rate-book.

5527. While the Reform Bill was under discussion in Parliament, did you get any list as to persons who would be likely to become voters under the future Reform Bill which would pass?—Not a list; but I know I got up once or twice a list of its probable effects on the constituency.

5528. Of its probable effects?—Yes, and I sent it to Lord Mayo.

5529. How far back did you get these lists?—Well, I got these lists during the discussion, and that would be—the Irish Reform Bill was on late in the session—June or July, July, I should think. Yes.

5530. What was the earliest of these lists that was furnished to you?—I got no real list until about near September; but I may have got—I doubt if there were names in the early list I got. I suspect it was merely an analysis as to the probable effects on my supporters, how many would be on, and how many would be likely to be against me. The state of the case was this exactly. Before that Reform Bill I had a certain majority of seventy or eighty nearly; but the result of the Reform Bill would be, to reduce my majority, we calculated to about thirty.

5531. So that very early in the progress of the Reform Bill you were getting information as to the probable effects of the Reform Bill on the constituency?—As an Irish question.

5532. As an Irish question?—Not as a Sligo question. I took a great interest in the Irish Reform Bill, and was in London nearly the whole time during its passing. I got the same return from some other boroughs too.

5533. What I am anxious to know, if you can remember it, is, when was the first of these returns in point of date, that you got from Sligo?—Well, it would be, I should think, July. The Irish Reform Bill was very late; the English Bill had passed before it began. I should think it would be about the first week in July.

5534. Before July did you get any information in a rude, rough way?—Oh, I had letters constantly. Mr. Phibbs wrote to me several times.

5535. In fact, I suppose, from that time your attention was very much directed to the condition of the town, and the number of houses that would give votes, and so on?—Well, I did not know much about details; but if a house was to be sold at such a price I used to write to Mr. Pollock to complete it for me, and I approved of it. That was all I did.

5536. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—To your knowledge, Major Knox, was any money given to any person—any voter registering his vote at the revision?—Oh, certainly not, not a shilling.

5537. As far as you know?—No.

5538. You don't believe such a thing was done?—No, certainly not, for registering his vote.

5539. Are you aware of any exertions having been made to keep persons off the registry?—I am.

5540. Mention them?—There were several men who expressed the view that they would wish to support me, but thought, from the state of feeling that was growing up, that if they were on the registry they would be coerced to vote against me. So several of these—I don't know their names, in fact I heard their names—I know did not come up. I remember one man did not come up, and they went down and brought him up, and he was put on. He hid himself in a yard. I don't know his name, but I heard of it. There were a few cases of that kind—I should think not many—only three or four cases.

5541. Was any money given for it?—Not that I am aware of; but I heard there was. I did not give any.

5542. You heard that there was money given for that purpose?—Yes, some small sum.

5543. Who gave it?—I don't know. I did not hear. I heard that Mr. Stokes got one or two to stay away who were tenants of mine.

5544. The Chief Commissioner.—By giving them money?—Well, I don't know that he gave them money. There was a kind of report of it though I gave none. There was one man by the by, that I think got something—whether he got it through me I don't know, but I think he did—for not registering his vote; a young man—I forget his name.

5545. How much did he get?—I think he got £10 or something of the kind. We consulted counsel on that question, and they told us we could do anything we liked of that sort.

5546. Of that sort?—Yes; that we could pay any of them for not being registered; that it was nothing illegal before they were on the registry—that you could pay them in any way. We consulted both our counsel.

5547. How much money was paid away in that way?—Well, not much. I think £10 or £20, or £30. It was given in globo in a cheque. I can send you the details.

5548. Whom was the cheque given to?—Well, I gave the cheque to Mr. Ormsby.

5549. Which Mr. Ormsby?—To Mr. William Ormsby to pay two or three things of that kind. I don't exactly know how he distributed it.

5550. How much was it?—Well, I can tell you. I forget the amount of the cheque.

5551. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—You only paid one man on that occasion?—Oh, that's all. It was considered no harm. I can get you all the information about it here in town without leaving.

5552. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Before you came down to Sligo, Major Knox, had you any information or belief with regard to money having been formerly spent at elections for illegal purposes?—No, I had not.

5553. You had neither information or belief?—No.

5554. Had you not heard a report that Sligo was a place where elections were to be gained by bribery?—No; but from my knowledge of the place after a little time I came to this conclusion, that there were a certain number of birds of prey, and that these birds of prey would go to any candidates who came down, and that they would take his money if they could get it, and vote just any way they chose to vote. That is the opinion I formed of a certain class in the poorer district, and I fancy from what I heard, that it is the case.

5555. That is, that they would take your money and vote against you?—Just exactly, and that it made no difference with their votes. That is what I gathered.

5556. Could you give me any idea as to the number of those birds of prey?—Well, it is hard to say, because I did not encourage them. After I began to know them better I took no notice of them; but if once I had encouraged them they would have increased in number. I dare say there were twenty-five or twenty perhaps.

5557. Were those five and twenty persons whom you include in the thirty or forty?—Oh, they were decidedly. The people who sent me letters were twenty or twenty-five. There were a few of them not electors; and perhaps as many had votes. A man named Reynolds had not a vote but expected to get one. He was not put on because he had not paid his rates; and he was constantly visiting me at my house on the Mall. I always found him there every evening.

5558. In that class of voters that you call "birds of prey," do you include Kilcullen and Rooney?—Most decidedly. No, not Rooney, I did not. Rooney's letter to me was that of a really respectable man in a distressed state. He never mentioned anything at all; but that Kilcullen was a man who took money regularly for mobs. Brennan once or twice sent me a list of names—I have been looking for it but have not got it—of his mobs. Kilcullen was always a prominent man.

5559. The Chief Commissioner.—What was the name of the man who got £10 for not putting his name on the registry?—I don't know his name. I am not aware of it. I should know it if I heard it. I forget his name. I could find it out and let you know.

5560. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—You never heard of more than one?—I never heard of more than one; but I heard of three or four, who it was thought likely, would be disposed not to register, and that kind of thing; but whether more than one did it or not, I don't know. I think not. I think at the last they all came up.

5561. I don't know whether you were in court when Kavanagh and M'Dowell were examined?—Only part of the time; just near the end.

5562. M'Dowell said that, when the M'Mullens were lodging in his house—and the time fixed was about the latter end or the middle of January—he got a letter from a person whom he did not know, and never saw before or since, containing £9, and a direction to take the M'Mullens over to England?—I heard that to-day.

5563. I suppose you believe that that was done by somebody to get him out of the way of the Election Petition?—Well, I have no doubt of it. I heard afterwards that they did not wish to be examined at all, and that they were greatly afraid of being examined. I think they were afraid of their lives. One of them—the old man—came to me one day at my office, and told me he would be killed.

5564. The Chief Commissioner.—That was before he went away?—No, long afterwards. It was after the Petition that he came. I asked him what he was doing in Dublin, and what he wanted. I did not know the man; and I asked him if he had voted for me, and whether he had been injured in consequence. He said no, he had not, but that he would be maltreated if he came down. He really was afraid, I believe.

5565. You did not give him any money on that

FOURTH DAY. October 8.

Major Laurence E. Knox.

occasion?—Oh, never. The only money I was aware of this M'Mullen getting was £2, which I repaid to Mr. Hignell after the Petition.

5566. Have you any idea of from whom that letter came containing the £9?—I have not the least. No, not the most remote; I never heard of them at all till to-day.

5567. You have no idea of through whose influence the M'Mullens were taken away to England?—To England? Not the least. No; but I was astonished at their being away from Sligo. My impression for a long time was, that they were taken away to damage me—I mean by the opposite party. That was my impression always. I always looked on them as thorough supporters of mine.

5568. Did Mr. Hignell, at the hearing of the Carrick petition, appear to know where they were?—He certainly did. Before the petition was over, and before I left Carrick, he evidently knew—that's my recollection—that they were in England; but I don't think he knew the place. It occurred to me that he knew just that they had gone; and I don't think he knew anything about them till the petition came on.

5569. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Of course, Major Knox, either now, or when you shall be recalled to give us a detailed account, if you have any statement that you wish to make relating to the election in any way, we shall be most happy to hear you?—I don't know whether you will require any explanation of the man named Tiernan, or any further one as to Mrs. Dunleavy, or the man Flynn.

5570. The Chief Commissioner.—Unless you wish to give it Major Knox?—No; in the most unqualified way I deny having ever given any of these men money; and my cousin, Mr. Utred Knox, I think, will be here to-day, and I think he will explain as to Tiernan.

5571. Mr. Pollock.—It was alleged by Mrs. Dunleavy that he gave me £10 to give to her. Perhaps you would kindly ask him whether there is a word of truth in that statement?

5572. Witness.—No, certainly not.

5573. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Did you give a man called Clancy any money?—Clancy? No, never.

5574. That was with regard to the £1 that you said you gave Brennan to give to Mrs. Marra?—In Pound-street. I remember. I explained that at Carrick.

5575. You gave that for drink?—To get out of the house.

5576. The Chief Commissioner.—There are some trifling matters of that kind that we have not asked you. Try to make up the account as well as you can.

(The witness then withdrew.)

Mr. Sergeant Armstrong, sworn and examined.

Mr. Sergeant Armstrong.

5577. The Chief Commissioner.—You were returned for the borough, as we know, in the election for 1865?—Yes.

5578. Have you estimated what that election cost you from first to last?—Not with accuracy, but I can approximate to it tolerably closely.

5579. About how much?—Well, before I answer that question I should like to know if you require me to include in it subscriptions given for charitable purposes, and local purposes of a perfectly—as appears to me—obvious character, such as regattas and races in the neighbourhood.

5580. No, because I should say these are matters that the member of a county or borough is expected to give everywhere?—Well, I should think so. Exclusive of these, if you will just give me a moment—(calculates). Subject to correcting by such means as I have in my power, I should say about £2,200.

5581. After the election in the following April—the following spring—were your bills settled in the town?—I understood everything to be settled. So I was assured both by my conducting agent and my agent for expenses.

5582. Who were your conducting agents?—Mr. Tracy, of the firm of Kernan and Tracy was my sole agent—I had no other.

5583. Who was your agent for election expenses?—Mr. James Lynch Byrne of the Hibernian Bank.

5584. To whom did you pay money for the purposes of the election?—To Mr. Tracy. I estimated in my own mind, having regard to what I heard in reference to the expenses of this place, that something within £500 would be a fair sum to put into his hands to work upon—that it should cover all legitimate expenses. So I calculated. I gave him a cheque for £475.

5585. That was before the election?—Before the election, for the purposes of the election and accompanied with a very strict letter of instruction as to its application.

5586. Then to whom did you give the other sums amounting to the sum of £2,200?—Well, I should say almost the entire of it to Mr. Byrne, I think two cheques—either two or three would represent the substance of the rest.

5587. Now the whole of that expenditure of £2,200—at which date do you close that?—Well, I would close it in April 1866, to the best of my recollection, and I am pretty certain, too, about it.

5588. Did you pay any large sum about April, 1866,—Yes.

5589. How much then?—To the best of my recollection, I think it was in two cheques. Their amount can be ascertained with accuracy; but I am pretty close to it I think. £1,484, I think it was—close on £1,500.

5590. And that was given to Mr. James Byrne?—That was given to Mr. Byrne, in I think, two cheques. I think so; but the very figures can be ascertained, because they were cheques on the Hibernian Bank.

5591. Did you ever get a return from him as to how he applied the money?—I did.

5592. To whom then, according to the return, did he pay that money?—Well I would desire to offer a little explanation in reference to that. Having consulted with some of the leading Liberal gentlemen of the place, I was strongly advised,—urgently advised—especially by his lordship the Roman Catholic bishop here, to carefully avoid anything whatever in the shape of undue interference with the liberty of election, in any shape or way, and to rely upon the exposition of my principles, which were pretty well known. These were my instructions, very stringent, and very peremptory, in writing, to Mr. Tracy: and having giving him that cheque for £475, and having come down for the election, I left this town under the impression that not a shilling had been illegitimately applied, nor any illegitimate promise whatever made; and I believe now, that no promise ever was made. But in the month of March particularly, as well as I now recollect, letters began to come to me, some of them rather urgent, and numerous, from persons whose names I was barely acquainted with, men and humble voters making claims and asking for something. I in all cases referred these matters to Mr. Tracy for his advice on them. He told me to take no notice of them. Afterwards I received very urgent letters from gentlemen of superior position, who had been—particularly two of them—active friends of mine; and the upshot of these letters was—all of which I destroyed long since; I never kept them; it is not my habit to keep letters and I kept none of these, not supposing that it would ever become the subject of investigation—having no such prospect, I preserved none of them, but I recollect the substance; it was, that very urgent dissatisfaction was preserved by the people of Sligo at my not doing something for them. That was the tenor of them. Having got, I think, either two or three such letters as these, I referred them to Mr. Tracy for his advice. I was rather indisposed to move in the matter; but nevertheless having seen a very urgent letter finally he came down at my request, with Mr. Byrne, to see the writers of these letters and other gentlemen who had acted as my friends here, and to see what was to be done, and what was wanted. They returned to me stating that it was money that was required: and accordingly they came down and made such arrangements as they could. I said—"do the best you can; if anything is done it is wholly opposite to my instructions at the time of the election. I never authorized it. I gave Mr. Tracy distinct directions to the very contrary; but if any promises were made and that gentlemen have undergone engagements to me, I don't see what course I have but to meet them." And accordingly I gave cheques to the amount which Mr. Byrne represented to me was required. That's the way.

5593. To over £1,400?—A little more, I think the payments were close upon £1,500.

5594. Did you understand that that sum was to be given to electors who had voted for you?—I most unquestionably did. I could not imagine otherwise, and for this reason, that I believed and was assured that everything I ever owed was paid. I could not bear the notion of owing anything, and I believed it was all settled for. I did believe everything was settled for. I would not have allowed a matter to remain for a moment that I knew to be due.

5595. Was anything said to you of the number of persons to be so paid, and the sums they were to receive each?—Not one word until the whole thing was settled here. Not a word beforehand to me—not a word.

5596. Did you then ascertain how many had so received money?—Well, as represented to me——

5597. As represented to you?—I believe to the best of my recollection, ninety-seven.

5598. How much each?—It varied; I cannot——

5599. What was the largest sum?—Well, I have a recollection; I think that one voter got £40, and I do not recollect a higher sum than that to any person. Some got £5, and some £15, and some £25; I recollect they varied. But until all that was done here I did not know what was going to be done. I know there was a strong dissatisfaction; and I formed the belief in my own mind—though in any communication the language was most ambiguous, and I would not say designedly mysterious, but without intimating exactly what was meant—but my own common sense drew the conclusion that it was meant to be given to these people, and that they had nothing else to be dissatisfied about except at not getting it. And I was under the impression that the gentlemen who applied to me and made these representations—I was under the belief that they had entered into engagements. I now believe they never had—that they never made a promise. I don't believe that a promise was made; but I was led into the notion because you can well understand poor people here put a pressure on me and said "we have behaved very generously; we have exacted no terms; we have voted according to our consciences, and it is a very bad thing not to give us something." I can understand that, and I believe it was the truth.

5600. Did you get from Mr. Byrne, or were you afterwards informed who were the persons in the town of Sligo, your supporters who distributed this money in April, 1866?—Yes.

5601. Who were the gentlemen?—I am sure it is quite unnecessary to say it is with the deepest dissatisfaction to my own mind that I make these statements; but I know the obligation I am under, and I have no alternative. The obligation to the Commission amounts to my own obligation under which I speak. I cannot forbear, of course; I must answer the questions; it is very annoying to have to do so, of course, but I must answer. Well, I can give the names of some; I will not undertake to give the names of all; but there is no difficulty about that for Mr. Byrne, I venture to say, will recollect them, though I have not seen him since I was summoned. I don't know if he is coming here. He is in Ballinasloe today. I conclude some of them will be able to tell who are his colleagues and associates.

5602. As far as you remember now who were they?—Well, as far as I can recollect, there were Mr. James Kidd, Mr. Conroy.

5603. Was that Maurice?—Maurice Conroy, Martin Philips.

5604. Was Michael Foley one of them?—I think not. I will not answer that as I cannot say.

5605. Was Chrystal?—No, I think not. I don't know. I am trying to be accurate.

5606. Perhaps some of those gentlemen will tell us?—They will tell you the rest but I wish to give you as far as my memory serves me. I have my own feelings on that subject. Mr. Petrie was one; Mr Harper Campbell was one as well as I recollect. There may have been others, and I believe were; but at the present moment I cannot recollect. But anyone can tell you.

5607. Now James Doolan was examined here, and he says that he is a superannuated mail-coach guard, and that in that April he called on you at your house in Dublin, and made some demand about money, and that you made him a present of £20 by a cheque—do you remember that?—Well, I shall tell you as far as I recollect what occurred in reference to that. As to whether he was Doolan or Dolan, or what he was, I believed him to be an elector of the place at the time; and I believed what was told to me that he was a mail-guard, and had no doubt that he was representing the truth. He came to me and told me that he was in deep distress and difficulties, arising from the pendency, as well as I remember, of a process against him, something very peremptory; that he had been a warm supporter of mine, and had voted for me, and that without the slightest expectation of ever getting anything; and he put it entirely ad misericordiam. He said, "I have acted generously towards you, and am now in extreme difficulties; and in fact if I were arrested, on any process of that sort issued against me I should forfeit my situation as mail-guard; and will you see me ruined and in such an extremity?" I gave him a cheque, I believe, for £20; I have no doubt he got it. I venture to think it must have been a cheque on the Hibernian Bank, for I would not be likely to have had so much money lying in my drawer. But I most distinctly gave him that as a piece of charity; I yielded to the man's earnest solicitations. I endeavoured to postpone the matter, at all events, in order that I might see Mr. Tracy on the subject, and have some conference about it; but the man was very urgent and stated that the thing was absolutely necessary, and that he did not know the moment he would be in difficulty; and I gave him the money. I have no doubt I gave him the money.

5608. Do you remember saying to James Doolan that your friends were now in Sligo settling matters?—I think so. My recollection is, that it was after I had sent Mr. Byrne and Mr. Tracy to Sligo that he called upon me, or about that time; and it may have been that they were actually there at the moment. I really cannot now say; but it was about the same epoch; and I recollect stating that I really could not give him any money, and I endeavoured to avoid giving him any money.

5609. Mr. Tracy, I believe, is not now in Ireland?—I am sorry to hear that he is not; but I believe he left it on matters wholly unconnected with the Sligo election.

5610. The Chief Commissioner.—I have no doubt at all about that.

Witness.—I am sure that if he were here he would tell you whatever he knew.

5611. Did you give any money to any other elector but Dolan?—Never, to my recollection, for anything connected with his vote at all. I must be very particular. As soon as it was ascertained that I was about to be a candidate here, the Conservative local press, of course, wrote such articles and such strictures as they thought judicious and fit, having regard to the circumstances of my candidature. Mr. O'Farrell, of the Sligo Champion, very warmly espoused my cause and my views; and I have no doubt that many articles appeared in his paper which he would not have gone to the trouble of, but upon my account; and he was a warm personal friend. I made him a present; but it was no more with the idea of influencing his vote, or in the slightest degree of affecting his mind, than any other transaction in the world could be—it had nothing whatever to do with it. I gave him the very small sum of £25. I have mentioned this matter, and I felt great reluctance in doing it; but I know I am not to suppress anything which might have any possible bearing on the present subject of inquiry. I also gave him a loan, and he insisted himself on giving his promissory note for it. I did not want it; but he would not take it otherwise than as a loan. That promissory note I hold, but I don't intend to make him pay a penny of it, although he insisted on becoming responsible. I say it had nothing to do with influencing his vote, for he was a warm and anxious supporter of mine.

5612. Were these the only cases in which money passed between you personally and electors?—I have not the slightest recollection, though there were numberless applications. People came to me in Dublin, and in a very peremptory way some of them, without exactly stating what they wanted; but, from their manners, and gestures, and intimations, I could perfectly understand what they wanted; and in all cases, they not putting their case upon any ground of the immediate pressure of poverty, I never yielded to them, and I never gave anything.

5613. Was there any application of that nature after the settlement of 1866?—Certainly.

5614. After that?—Yes.

5615. And from these ninety-seven men that were paid?—I think not. Well, I have no doubt that they were paid, because if I can be certain of anything in the world it is, that the gentlemen who got my money never kept a single sixpence of it.

5616. You knew them to be your supporters?—Yes, I did. However, I had not known Sligo before; and though I had canvassed the entire Liberal constituency, I have but a very partial recollection of some of them. Two, in particular, I recollect very well, came on more occasions than one in a very peremptory manner, but I declined to have anything to do with them.

5617. There was mentioned a party of five, called in the course of the inquiry by the witnesses, "the aggrieved party," namely, Harte, Moran, Hunt, Magrath. I am uncertain whether Thady Kilgallon was one of them or not. Some of these men it is stated, were promised £50 a piece?—Never by me; never by any person by my authority. I never made the slightest promise nor held out the slightest inducement to any man, woman, or child, in this place to expect aid from me. On the contrary, the only case of a direct suggestion to me that occurred in the whole course of my canvass was this. I should say that I was met in the most generous way. Instead of any reluctance to accept my pledge I was met in the most open and warm-hearted manner by the Liberal party generally, and the only single occasion was this,—and I now neither recollect the precise position in the town, for it was the first day I was going through it, nor the individual, and I doubt if I should know him if I saw him. But I was canvassing in the usual way, requesting the honour of his support. I was accompanied by a few gentlemen of the town who were good enough to come with me as an introduction. He asked me to come into a little parlour, for he had not a shop, and he closed the door and said that on a former election—by which I believe he referred to Mr. Sadlier's time; I think he did not name it, but he clearly referred to it—he put his hand on the chimney-piece and said there was a £50 note put there and another £50 note put on the top of it at that time, and "What I said was," he said, "if there was another £50 put there I would not vote for you." "Sir," said I, "if you mean to insinuate that you would get anything from me I would not give you one shilling to be returned for the borough of Sligo with that object," and I turned round and walked out of the place. That was the only instance of any direct overture to me during the whole of my canvass; that was the answer I gave; and neither directly nor indirectly did I ever hold out the slightest hope to any person that they would be one shilling the better of me in consequence of my candidature.

5618. Did you mention that man's name?—I cannot recollect it.

5619. Do you know in what street he lives?—prefaced what I said by stating the fact that I cannot recollect. I know it was a small house and a small hall, and he appeared to be in no sort of business or trade, but to be of some other way of life; an humble-looking man. I doubt if I would know him.

5620. I have mentioned these five that called themselves the "aggrieved party"?—They never had the slightest promise from me.

5621. Did any of them apply to you about the £50?—There are two that I think I could identify, and that I take now to be Moran and Magrath. I will not be positive. If there be any difficulty I would like to see them.

5622. I may mention that these men said that they were afterwards offered £20 at the settlement, and that they refused to take it?—I know nothing whatever about that. I know nothing whatever about what was done on the subject, save what was afterwards represented to me.

5623. He said he refused to take it because they had been promised £50—I want to know what any of these men, or the two that you took to be Moran and Magrath said to you at any time?—The substance of it was this—of course their visit was unexpected—I was engaged upon some professional matter, possibly, in my study, when they came in in an abrupt and not very courteous way, and they said, "Arn't you going to settle, or give us satisfaction?" or words to that effect, that clearly indicated that they wanted money. I said that I would certainly give them nothing whatever; that I had put my affairs into the hands of two gentlemen whom I had sent down, and that I could not interfere with them in any sort of way. But they never alleged any promise nor pretended anything of the sort; nor there never was.

5624. Was that after you had put your affairs into the hands of the two gentlemen, or was it before you paid a visit to Sligo that spring, or was it after you paid that visit to Sligo?—Oh, it was before it.

5625. Before?—I think so.

5626. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—It is stated that you came down to some dinner at the Imperial Hotel, and it appears in evidence that it was shortly before that?—And that's what I believe what I am stating. My impression is, that they were in town twice with me—that's my impression; but at least one visit of these men was just at or after the time. Messrs. Byrne and Tracy were here or had just returned—I cannot say which.

5627. Did you ever get a letter from a man called Michael Hunt, said to be one of those five men, claiming £250 or £300?—Oh, never, never got any claim whatever in writing from any man. No man ever named a figure to me—a sum of money. I got a great many letters, written in a hand which I really never could read, from a poor fellow of the name of Hunt—but he is not this Michael Hunt at all—never asking money, but always congratulating me on being member for the borough, and saying that he was a great friend of mine; and he latterly became very lengthened in his correspondence, and the handwriting so bad that I could not read it; but there never was any demand of money.

5628. Except these things which you understood to be demands, and which led to the settlement?—Oh, of course.

5629. It was said that you put this settlement in the hands of two gentlemen; were they any one of these, James Kidd, Michael Conroy, or Martin Phillips?—No; the two gentlemen I refer to are Mr. Byrne and Mr. Tracy. I sent them down. I consulted Mr. Tracy, and said—"Here are these urgent letters; what's the meaning of them?" I said—"It is perfectly plain to my mind that you must go down and see about the meaning of those letters;" and the next thing I heard was that this arrangement was come to; and though they never told me—no one told me, and I now believe there never was a promise made to any man to induce him to vote, that I firmly believe—nevertheless, at that time, from the urgency of the letters I received, I was under a different impression; and I considered in my own mind that if these gentlemen had, wisely or unwisely, made themselves responsible, either by having beforehand put their hands into their pockets, or by having made promises, I had no alternative but not to leave them in a difficulty.

5630. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—At the time when you were communicated with, with regard to the complaints and matters which brought forward this settlement, did you hear anything that led you to believe that though there was no promise given, there was an understanding that money should be paid?—Never; on the contrary.

5631. I am speaking, you know, of long subsequent to the election, in March or April afterwards?—I have always heard that there never were promises.

5632. But there may have been an understanding?—I never heard that there was—that is, an understanding in which both minds concurred. I can well understand that poor people about the town would expect something, as they got it according to all accounts on former occasions from Mr. Sadlier, as I heard; but beyond that I believe that no gentleman who espoused my cause in town had any understanding with any of them. I have no reason to think it.

5633. When these applications were made to you in March did you consult any of your principal supporters in Sligo?—Well, I considered that the two gentlemen who wrote these urgent letters were important supporters, and I rank them amongst my principal supporters; and I instructed Messrs. Byrne and Tracy to see the other gentlemen whose names I have given you and to consult generally.

5634. Who were these two gentlemen whom you refer to?—From whom I received the urgent letters—they were Mr. Phillips and Mr. Petrie, I really think there were two or three letters of Mr. Phillips, certainly two; and there was one jointly signed by Mr. Petrie and Mr. Phillips.

5635. Was there any representation or statement made to you by Mr. Petrie or Mr. Phillips, that some months after the contested election a certain class of the Sligo voters expected to get something?—Never further than these letters contained. It was the first I heard of it.

5636. Do you remember what was in these letters; what were the contents of them or the substance of them?—To this effect that there was a strong feeling of dissatisfaction, and that people were complaining, and that sort of general language—perfectly general language.

5637. In a mysterious way?—Well, now a man of intelligence could draw his own inference. I had no difficulty in drawing mine.

5638. Did they say in these letters that the people of Sligo did not think they were treated as they used to be?—No, there was no reference to anything former whatever—certainly not.

5639. But that they were badly treated?—That was the substance.

5640. The applications to you did not commence until the time you have mentioned, namely March?—I believe not. I am pretty certain they did not. I would recollect it.

5641. There was no reference to money having been received on the other side?—Not any, the slightest allusion to anything of the sort. In fact I never heard of such a thing. I have no imputation to make on the subject. I did not mix myself up with such a matter at all. There were no such statements in any letters to me. You know at an election you hear that there is money going—various rumours, which I let in at one ear and out at the other.

5642. The Chief Commissioner.—How did you ascertain the sum for which you gave the cheques to Mr. Byrne?—It was in writing—put down in writing.

5643. From Sligo?—It was in writing.

5644. I want to know why you gave that exact sum?—I don't understand ——

5645. The £1,420?—Whatever the tot came to.

5646. I want to know by what calculations that was ascertained to be the correct sum which you were to send to Sligo?—The sums that these gentlemen had ascertained amongst themselves, as I understood, would be satisfactory to the men who were to get them.

5647. That is the sums that your Sligo friends agreed ought to be paid?—Precisely. I understood that Mr. Byrne and Mr. Tracy met these gentlemen, and that they considered what was best to be done, and that they arrived at that tot; and I was under the impression—though it was never represented to me, and I don't now believe that they had promised or ever gave a penny out of their own pockets, and I hope they never did—that they had made themselves responsible in some way or other; now I believe they had not, and I would not leave them in the lurch, be the consequences what they might. There is another very small matter which I don't know whether, under this thing of telling the whole truth, I should mention—it is a very small matter, a mere matter of personal confidence. I was told that one of the voters was hesitatating very much as to whom he would give his vote to at the election; and that his little son, not more than nine or ten years of age, said to the father—I was told he said it—in a very animated way, "Father, mother is looking down from heaven at you; vote for your country and the Sergeant;" and the man immediately said, "I will vote for Armstrong." I sent the little boy a locket with a small likeness of myself in it, in an attitude of speaking with my hand up, as I was speaking in the Court-house here, as I had had struck off. The child afterwards wrote me a letter of thanks, in which he stated that his father was very poor and in great want, and asked if he could get some schooling; and I gave a few pounds—I think £4 a year—and promised to have him put to school. It was a mere bagatelle, and had nothing whatever to do with the vote.

5648. The two cheques amounted to £1,400 odd?—That's my recollection.

5649. The original cheque to Mr. Tracy amounted to £475?—Yes. That £1,400 was after the election. Then there was another; I have it down here. I stated that there was £2,200.

5650. I want to know about the difference?—The way I put it down—here is my calculation now. The return of expenses that I made to the Mayor of course is forthcoming—I only speak from memory. I should say that I never read these things. I never troubled myself about reading them; I knew I was liable to pay them. I never went into details; I had my reasons for that. I had the highest reliance on the personal honour and friendship of Mr. Tracy, and never taxed nor scrutinized his account. I never did, and would not do it. He offered to furnish an account, but I declined. I said, "If £475 is paid to yourself and Mr. Gethin, and the other solicitor, it appears to me to be very extraordinary if I look into the account; I won't do it;" and I never did. Then Mr. Byrne, with a view to settling the expenses of the election, got a cheque amounting to—to my recollection, and I speak from recollection—I know it is less than £300, and I put it down here at £286; my cheque-book will show the very figure. That £475 and £286 were what may be called the election expenses. That £475, I rather think, we returned, but there were other matters. What they were I really cannot tell, because Mr. Byrne is my brother-in-law —he is married to Mrs. Armstrong's sister—and I scrutinized nothing in his account, but took his word for everything. In fact, I scrutinized nothing, but was resolved, when I was left under the impression that gentlemen whom I met as strangers, and who warmly espoused my cause here, and with whom I formed great and warm friendships, had either actually paid or promised money, I was determined that they should not be at a loss, though it was in the very teeth of my express instructions to Mr. Tracy; and I left Sligo believing that I left it as clean and as pure from corruption as ever any man left a borough going to Dublin.

5651. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—These two sums of £475 and £286 I understand you to include in the expenses of the election?—They represent the expenses. As I understand, about £486 was returned to the Mayor, but there were other matters. You are bound to make the return to the Mayor at a certain time. I understood from Mr. Byrne, in general terms, after he did his best to make up the account and return it truly to the Mayor, according to the best of his calculation, some other claims came in, which I was not the least astonished at, and which I honoured at once, and felt no difficulty about.

5652. You talked about voters coming in after the settlement in a peremptory manner?—Who came after I had given this authority to Mr. Byrne and Mr. Tracy to go down and see what it was all about.

5653. Could you give me any idea of the names of those persons that came?—Only two that I recollect upon that occasion—I speak in reference to what the Chief Commissioner was pleased to call the "ill-used"——

5654. The "aggrieved party" was what they called themselves?—Well, I think only two of these ever came; but poor men, that I did not know at all, used occasionally to present themselves at my house. For instance, a very poor man came, almost in the rank of a beggarman—a labouring man—who said he shouted for me in Sligo, and that he was going to Liverpool, and asked me, for God's sake, to give him some relief, and I put my hand in my pocket and gave him £1. I don't know his name.

5655. Did you know whether he was a voter or not?—I am sure not; I am certain he was not, for he was in the rank of a poor beggarman. I don't know whether he came from Sligo or not either.

5656. I do not know if I understand you to say that the two voters came at the time you put your affairs into the hands of Mr. Byrne and Mr. Tracy?—After I had done so.

5657. I understood you before to have said that after that you had a good many persons who came and made peremptory demands—pressed for money?—Well, I would be wrong in saying "after that," if I said so. I don't say that a good many came. I recollect a respectable looking lady called—I cannot tell her name—accompanied by a younger lady, and they said that they had some sort of house of refreshments in the town, and that a number of glasses and tumblers were broken and never paid for. I said that really I could not notice such a thing. She said that she had a daughter in town sick, and that she would be very much obliged to me for £10; I said I could not listen to it at all. No, I don't say "after that." I don't recollect any peremptory applications; in fact, I never heard of anything of a formidable—I mean of an unpleasant kind—but these two gentlewomen who came and presented themselves in a very forward way, as if they had some right; and, in reference to that, I would wish to say, in reference to what are called the "aggrieved party," that I never heard the expression until the Chief Commissioner mentioned it; and I recollect the party that, I believe, are referred to. I heard that there were five or six men who were not coming down to vote, and I went up to the shop of one of them, appealed to him, and requested him to come down and vote, saying, it was still important, and that they were required; and without the slightest inducement but my simple request, in the most off-hand and, as it struck me at the time, generous manner, he collected the others and we marched down, two abreast, myself escorting them as a sort of sergeant's guard. They all happened to vote together, and they voted for me. The voters on the other side were getting thin at the time; and these six, all at the same time, created such an impression, that I dare say the men thought they ought to get something particular for it in their own minds. Beyond that, there was not the slightest foundation for it.

5658. The Chief Commissioner.—You paid no money for a mob, Sergeant?—I told you that I never read what Mr. Tracy did with the money; and I do believe there may have been to a certain extent, but I never was aware of it; and this I must say, that if there was a mob they never behaved like one, for there never was a stone thrown in the town, nor window broken, nor offensive word used to man while I was in it; and I have no reason to think that there was any mob save for the just purpose of preventing my supporters from being carried away at night; and I believe it was for that purpose; I think Mr. Tracy told me so; but I believe that to be quite a legitimate purpose.

5659. Were they called "watchers"?—Watchmen, and I was informed that while I was sleeping comfortably in bed, these poor fellows were up all night to prevent my men from being carried away. I know one case in which I was obliged myself to go out to a house where one of my supporters was a prisoner, and I, myself in person, went in with three or four gentlemen, my supporters, and released him from the fellows who had him in custody, and brought him to the poll.

5660. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Was there any violence on the other side?—I understand there was no shadow of violence in the town. The only thing approaching to violence was an inclination to offer insult in words which might have ripened into action towards a highly respectable gentleman, a Conservative of this place. I happened to overhear it, and made an appeal to the men and said, "you are no friends of mine if you do such a thing—don't presume to insult him;" and finding that they were irritated I said, "I want to make a speech to you," and took them off to a different part of the town, and made a speech to them, and the whole thing was soon perfectly quiet. There never was a policeman brought into the town, nor were there windows broken, nor any mobbing whatever. There was an attempt, in this court, to prevent one man, that it was known, from popular rumour, would vote against me from doing so. My supporters were very anxious that he should vote for me, and thought that if he consulted the dictates of his own conscience, he ought to do so. There was a very violent screaming of people in court—of the better class of people—to prevent him. I got on the table myself, and entreated them to allow the man to exercise his vote freely. They did so—the clamour subsided, and he voted for the other side. I saw no violence whatever; there was none.

5661. Have you any reason to suppose that there was any other money spent by any person in your behalf, at that election?—Not one farthing. I don't believe that directly or indirectly any body of men or any individual ever gave one sixpence; I would not allow it. If I thought there was any gentleman a pound note out of pocket I would pay him to-morrow, no matter what the consequence, or what the law might be.

5662. The Chief Commissioner.—In reference to anything you have seen in the evidence, and know yourself about the election, do you wish to say anything further now to us?—Well, Mr. Commissioner, in reference to some of the evidence I read coming down in the train yesterday—so much of it as appeared in the Mail, and Post, and Irish Times—the record is not very ample, not perhaps quite full, and I know nothing of what occurred yesterday; therefore, if there be any matter that you think my attention ought to be directed to, I shall feel obliged by your doing so, as I am not in a position to recapitulate it.

5663. I have mentioned to you the case of Doolin, the mail-guard?—And I have told you that I had no object whatever in conciliating the man. I didn't care anything about him; the election was long gone by at the time.

5664. There was nothing that occurred yesterday in reference to your election that we have not directed your attention to?—Very well.

5665. Several electors were examined, who deposed that they got either £15 or £20; and the names of others were mentioned who stated that they got either £15 or £20 at your election?—I cannot doubt that, because I know that the gentlemen got the money from me, and are utterly incapable of appropriating one single sixpence of it. Of course, they got it to do the best they could.

5666. That is the only matter connected with your election referred to yesterday, and in reference to that we have examined you?—And I don't recollect anything in connexion with the other evidence—nothing occurs to me at the present moment. In matters so full of detail, and covering such a period of time, it is hard to recollect.

5667. The Chief Commissioner.—If you wish, Sergeant Armstrong, to make any other reference to the election, we will be most happy to hear you.

5668. Sergeant Armstrong.—I wish to make this observation, that, in addition to explaining my political views, and how I intended to act if elected, as I thought it very natural, and becoming, and necessary to do, I applied to the bishop—the bishop of the place here. I had the advantage of his lordship's cordial support, but it was accompanied by his urgent advice to me—and I think I referred to this before, not to him by name—to take care to avoid anything in the shape of illegitimate expenditure. I communicated that, in the most marked way, at any meetings which took place amongst my friends. I never had a committee, it is right to say. I never had agents; I appointed nobody. Gentlemen used to meet kindly, and consider over matters; but there was no committtee, and no agent, but Mr. Tracy and my expense agent, none whatever. I communicated that; and, as I said before, I left Sligo, believing in my heart that not a promise had been made to any man, and that no man got an unfair shilling, and that it was perfectly understood that poor fellows who were up all night to look after mobs, and see that they did not carry off my voters, ought to be paid. I thought that was perfectly fair, and that the election could not be carried on otherwise.

5669. The Chief Commissioner.—The Commissioners do not require your further attendance at present, Sergeant Armstrong. Sergeant Armstrong intimated his readiness to attend again when required, and then withdrew.

The Mayor of Sligo was sworn and examined.

5670. The Chief Commissioner.—Do you hand us in a copy of the registry, with the Protestants and Roman Catholics marked on it, and the way they voted at the last election; and also the electors who did not vote, divided into Conservatives and Liberals; and also showing the Protestants who voted for Captain Flanagan and the Roman Catholics who voted for Major Knox, truly returned?—Yes.

5671. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—You made out the list from your knowledge of the borough?—Yes.

Martin Phillips sworn and examined.

5672. The Chief Commissioner.—Were you a supporter of Sergeant Armstrong at his election?—I was.

5673. Did you after that election get any money to distribute among voters?—I did.

5674. In April, 1866?—I did.

5675. How much did you get?—I think about £180.

5676. Who gave you the money?—Mr. Harper Campbell.

5677. What did he tell you to do with it?—He did not tell me to do anything with it; I knew what to do with it without getting any instructions from him.

5678. How did you know?—Well, a number of gentlemen were engaged to assist in the election for the return of Sergeant Armstrong. Mr. Harper Campbell was one of them, and I received the money from him.

5679. Did you know you were to get it?—I did.

5680. How did you know you were to get it?—I met Mr. Tracy and Mr. Byrne at the hotel, and on that occasion there were present Mr. Harper Campbell, and I think twelve or fourteen other gentlemen. There was a sum named for each gentleman to distribute.

5681. Was there any list of electors there?—I don't think there was a list.

5682. Did you get any list of your men to be paid?—I made out a list; I don't know whether I gave it in or not.

5683. Of how many?—I cannot say whether there were thirteen or seventeen—not less than thirteen or more than seventeen.

5684. Give the names of those thirteen or seventeen as far as you remember?—I may perhaps forget some of them, but as well as my memory serves me, Peter Cunningham——

5685. Have you that list?—No, I have no list.

5686. Go on and give their names?—Peter Cunningham, John M'Gouldrick, Felix Derham, Denis Rooney, Patrick Collery, James Leonard, Paddy Barry, John Cairns, a man named M'Hugh; I really don't know his Christian name; he lives in the neighbourhood of the courthouse; a man named Hickey, and Pat. O'Brien. There may be others, and I am sure there are, but I can't call them to mind.

5687. How did you happen to have these men on your list?—They called on me after the election and made statements to me.

5688. How soon after the election?—Well, perhaps it may have been two or three months after the election. They repeatedly called afterwards.

5689. And made statements?—And represented to me that having lost by having voted for Sergeant Armstrong, made enemies for themselves in business, and lost employment as tradesmen; and as I had strongly recommended them and urged them to vote for Sergeant Armstrong, and as they did vote, I was bound to make them some remuneration.

5690. Did you think you were bound to make them some remuneration?—I was not bound by any promise to do so.

5691. Did you think you were bound in honour?—Well, I don't think I was. I think if I had not made them, that in honour or principle I could hardly have suffered in any way.

5692. Was any sum mentioned between you and them that you were to get?—No sum whatever.

5693. How did you arrange the sums that your committee paid these men?—According to circumstances. According to the position in life in which they were, and the injury that I considered they suffered by having voted for Sergeant Armstrong.

5694. Did you afterwards pay all these men?—I did.

5695. What sums did you pay them?—I paid some of them £20.

FOURTH DAY.
October 8.
Martin Phillips.

5696. To whom did you pay £20?—To Peter Cunningham. Some of them £15—most of the others £15; to some I paid £10, and so on.

5697. Did you, at a meeting of the Sergeant's supporters, mention the sums that in your opinion those men ought to get?—I might have mentioned it. I hardly recollect having done so.

5698. Don't you think it likely that you did?—The sums that these men should get was a subject of conversation, and very likely I may have given an opinion that certain sums should be given to certain individuals.

5699. Had you ever paid money similarly before?—Never.

5700. Had you ever given any money to any elector?—Never. I might have on one occasion. I think I assisted, or had something to do with giving £6 for a municipal vote. I think I was some way connected with it, either in accepting the money for the voter, or I think I had something to do with it; but in no other way had I ever been connected with an election.

5701. You mean a vote for the election of an alderman?—A member of the Town Council.

5702. Did any money besides that pass through your hands?—No other money but the sums I have mentioned.

5703. Did any money go through your hands at the last election?—Not a penny. I used some of that £180 that I mentioned to you for other purposes as well.

5704. What other purposes?—There was an attack made on the house of a Mr. Irwin, who lives on the mail-coach road, a very feeble gentleman who was then one of the electors. Lest an effort might be made during the night previous to the election to take him away, I paid a sum of money for the defence of the house and to prevent Mr. Irwin from being taken away.

5705. How much did you pay?—I hardly recollect the sum I paid.

5706. Was it £20?—Not so much as that. It was not £10.

5707. Did you pay it to a number?—To one to be distributed amongst the men.

5708. Who was the man to whom you paid it?—He was a servant of Mr. Irwin.

5709. What is his name?—Well, I am not very certain about his name, but I think it was Marley. Within the last two days his mother showed me a letter she had received from him in America, and I think the name was Marley.

5710. You know Michael Hunt?—I do.

5711. Did you get £20 for him?—Yes.

5712. Why was £20 got for him?—Well, it was considered that he would be hardly satisfied with less.

5713. Had he made application for it before he got the £20—to you?—No, not to me, unless in this way, that he had five or six voters in his house, and that it was considered, about three o'clock on the day of the election, that the polling of these six voters would be of the utmost importance to Sergeant Armstrong; and I was requested by a number of neighbours and friends of the Sergeant to call at Hunt's house, and I did so.

5714. Were these John Hart——?—Yes, he was one of them.

5715. James Moran, John Nugent, and Michael Hunt. Who was the fifth man?—Dominic Hunt.

5716. What relation is he to Michael Hunt?—Brother-in-law.

5717. When you went up to the house on that day, the polling day of the Sergeant's election, what occurred between you and these five men?—The five men, as well as I can recollect, must have been aware—I was going to mention to you, that I think they were in the house.

5718. Did you know beforehand that these five men were going together?—I had reason to think that they were; it was generally believed through the town that they were.

5719. Go on?—I went to Hunt's house. They were drinking brandy. There was a bottle of brandy before the number of men whose names I have mentioned to you, on the table. I was urging them very strongly, and recommending them as well as I could, to give their votes to the Sergeant. They were rather reluctant to do what I asked them. They spoke plainly to me enough about terms, and told me there was a very large sum offered to them from the other side.

5720. From Mr. Macdonogh's side?—Yes. I reasoned with them, and told them their sympathies should lie in favour of the popular candidate. They were disposed to come to business.

5721. What do you mean by "coming to business?"—That is, to speak of pounds, shillings, and pence.

5722. Yes; go on, Mr. Phillips?—One of the parties took me into an adjoining hall, and put his hand into his pocket, and took out a fist full of coins—I don't know what the coins were, but I think they were mixed silver and copper—and took his oath that a certain gentleman in town had offered him half notes for £300.

5723. Who was the certain gentleman he named?—Am I called on to mention his name?

5724. You must?—Mr. Henry Lyons. I am sorry to be obliged to mention his name. He offered him half notes for £300.

5725. Who was the man that told you that?—James Moran.

5726. Go on?—And that if he was asked to vote for the Sergeant for less than that, it would be an injury to him; and that if I deceived him in any way, he would never forgive me.

5727. I suppose you understood that the £300 was for five votes?—No; there were to be six votes for the £300.

5728. Who was the sixth man?—I am not at liberty. I can only guess. He did not mention to me.

5729. The sixth man?—The sixth; but the sixth was talked of by the others in the house.

5730. What was the name?—Mr. Thady Kilgallon. I don't know whether he was the man he meant or not.

5731. But at all events he was talked of in the house?—Yes.

5732. When Moran mentioned that Mr. Lyons offered £300 for the six votes, what did you say?—I put up my hand, and said, I can't speak to you about money; I shall make no offer or promise; unless you come and act with the Sergeant without promise I shall leave the house. I did leave the house.

5733. Did you tell him to go and vote for Sergeant Armstrong?—I did; I recommended him strongly.

5734. Did you say, "go now and give your vote"?—I recommended him as strong as I possibly could to go and vote for the Sergeant.

5735. After he mentioned about the money?—I might have done so after he mentioned about the money. I think I left him very abruptly after he mentioned to me that £300 had been offered for six votes.

5736. Look here—did you tell him you would not give him a penny?—I did.

5737. And that it was illegal to offer it?—I did not speak of the illegality of it, but I said I would not make him a promise or give him a penny.

5738. Did you tell him to go and vote?—I did.

5739. And were you smiling at him the way you are smiling now at the court?—I have no reason to do anything but smile now, sir, and I would have smiled then.

5740. Were you looking at him plainly and telling him to go and vote?—Well, at the election time people look as plainly as they can, if they want to coax people to do things they are not inclined to do.

5741. You have heard some of them examined?—I did not hear their names.

5742. You heard about what some of the five men swore?—I heard that Hunt was leaning very heavily on me, but I pay no attention to it.

5743. Never mind that?—I thought you were alluding to that.

5744. When you were getting the money that was to be distributed after the election, did you get £20 for Michael Hunt?—I did intend to give him £20.

5745. Twenty pounds for James Moran?—I did.

5746. Twenty pounds for John Harte?—I did.

5747. Twenty pounds for Magrath?—I did.

5748. Twenty pounds for Dominic Hunt?—I did.

5749. And twenty pounds for Thady Kilgallon?—No, I could not take him in, because his name was not mentioned to me.

5750. Not to you?—I had no list.

5751. Then you got £100 out of £180 for these five men?—I think so.

5752. You are not sure of it?—Well, I am pretty sure of it.

5753. Did you get that £100 for them, because you had canvassed them, and asked them to vote for the Sergeant?—No, I did not.

5754. You did not?—Not because I asked them to vote.

5755. Why did you get the £100 for the five men of the "aggrieved party"?—Because the number of persons near town who were to get money was divided. There were gentlemen present at this meeting.

5756. Who were the gentlemen?—Shall I mention their names?

5757. Certainly?—Mr. Harper Campbell, Mr. James Kidd, Mr. William Petrie, Mr. Daniel Magill, Mr. Maurice Conroy, Mr. Patrick Keighron—I think there may have been others present.

5758. Now, did you return any other voters to be paid £20 except those five men?—I don't recollect.

5759. What did you return the others to get?—I returned them to get from £15 to £10; and I was to exercise my own judgment as well as the rest of the other gentlemen who were to act in distributing that money.

5760. You were to have the same control in distributing the money?—That was the arrangement made between those who were engaged in the distribution of the money.

5761. Now, do you mean to convey to the court that these five men who had suffered most and lost most, as you say, lost a penny by the transaction?—I had reason to suspect that an offer of £300 had been made to them; and I thought that their voting for Sergeant Armstrong deprived them of that £300.

5762. Is that the loss to which you referred on making compensation to them and giving them £100?—Well, that might be an item in the loss.

5763. An item in the loss?—Yes.

5764. That is, they having lost £300 you thought you would give them £100, is that what you mean?—That is what I mean.

5765. Did any of them apply to you for any money before you put down their names for £20 apiece?—They did.

5766. Who?—John Harte.

5767. Did he charge you with having promised him money?—He came to me and stated that James Moran had accommodated him with a bill for £50, in the expectation of receiving £50 from Sergeant Armstrong.

5768. Go on?—That that bill was about coming due and that he had no funds to meet it. I listened to the conversation. I made him no promise or pledge. That was a considerable time—perhaps two or three months before I offered him £15.

5769. Did you ever write to the Sergeant yourself?—I did.

5770. Did you convey to him that his friends had made promises for him?—I think I did, I think I conveyed it to him in this way, that without promises having been made, those who voted on the recommendation of the Sergeant's friends expected to be remunerated.

5771. When they voted?—Not when they voted.

5772. Did you convey to him that the Sergeant's friends had made promises for him?—Well, I don't know exactly. I have not a copy of the letter.

5773. If we had a copy of the letter I would not be asking you. Did you convey to him that the Sergeant's friends had made promises for him, on your oath?—I conveyed to him, I think, that it was expected by those who voted on the recommendation of the Sergeant's friends, that they should be remunerated.

5774. Paid?—Remunerated.

5775. When was that expectation formed—was it at the voting, or immediately after the voting?—It was after the Sergeant had been returned.

5776. That they expected to be paid?—Yes.

5777. How soon did applications begin to come in to you for payment?—They were applying to me for payment immediately after his return.

5778. The week after?—Not so soon, perhaps.

5779. Within a month?—Perhaps a month or two.

5780. Did you pay John Harte?—I offered him the money.

5781. He refused to take it?—He did.

5782. Did he not demand £50 from you, saying you had promised it to him?—I don't know exactly whether he said I promised £50.

5783. Did he demand it?—In the way I mentioned to you he did, on account of the bill.

5784. Did you offer it to James Moran?—No.

5785. Never offered it to him?—Never.

5786. Why?—James Moran came to my house and demanded money from me.

5787. How much—£50?—He became exceedingly rude and insolent to me insomuch that I was obliged to put him out of the place; and I instructed my solicitor to take proceedings against him.

5788. For slander?—For slander.

5789. For saying you had money to give him, and would not pay it—was not that it?—Well, something of that kind. He was very abusive. I know he annoyed me.

5790. Did he say you had money to give him?—Oh, I believe he said I kept the money.

5791. Had you any money?—I had not then. I will explain to you why. I had £105 of the sum in my hands, and was coming from England where I had been on business. I called at the Hibernian Bank in Dublin, on a friend of Sergeant Armstrong's.

5792. What friend?—Mr. Byrne. I said, "Mr. Byrne, I hold £105 of the sum placed in my hands for distribution. I feel uncomfortable about having this sum of money in my hands. It is not mine, and I wish you would take it from me." Mr. Byrne requested me to keep it for a few days, as he had reason to think that some of the voters were still suffering for having voted for Sergeant Armstrong, and he would let me know in the course of the week who these were. Some short time afterwards a gentleman called on me with a list of names.

5793. Who called on you?—Mr. Maurice Conroy. He gave me a list of names to give the sums to the parties named in that list, and it left me a surplus of £3, which I handed to Mr. Conroy, and that disposes of the £180.

5794. Michael Hunt—you offered him £20?—I went to his house.

5795. Tell all that occurred about that?—After having received that money I was giving a sum of money to a man now no more, and taking his receipt——

5796. Paddy O'Brien?—Yes; the money was on the counter, and I offered it to Hunt, and Hunt said he would not take it.

5797. Did he say why?—No, he did not tell me why.

5798. Did you understand from him that he would not take it because he would not take a bribe?—If I could interpret his manner it would look like that.

5799. Did you offer the money to Magrath?—No.

5800. Why?—Because Moran in the course of the day came to me and said he was dissatisfied with it, that he expected £50, when he heard that only £20 had been given to him.

5801. Then you did not pay Magrath at all?—No.

5802. Did you give anything to Dominic Hunt?—I did.

FOURTH DAY.
October 8.
Martin Phillips.

5803. What did he say?—Dominic Hunt took it, and in an hour afterwards he came back to say his wife would not allow him to take it, as she had reason to think that £50 was given for him.

5804. Given to you?—Yes.

5805. Did he return the money to you?—He did.

5806. And he never got it afterwards?—Never from me.

5807. Did you know that persons were dissatisfied at the last election at not having been paid this money?—At the last election?

5808. At the election between Knox and Flanagan?—Well, I heard they were always dissatisfied. It is generally believed that they are dissatisfied; hardly ever satisfied.

5809. Do you mean that nothing would satisfy them?—Well, I don't know, but they are always grumbling.

5810. Did you know a man named Lenihan?—No.

5811. Did you know a man named Lenihan who came from Geeva, and who was working for Captain Flanagan?—No, I don't know him.

5812. Did you know any man that came from Geeva side?—No man whatever.

5813. I wish you, before you leave court now, to write out a list of the voters to whom you paid that £180 that you got, and the sums you paid to each?—Very well, I will do it. If I cannot do it in court, will you give me a day or the course of the evening to think of it?

5814. Certainly, because I want to have an accurate list from you of the voters who got the money?—I may mention to you that I gave some of that money to the party who defended the house.

5815. I know you did?—I may add that after having given the money some of the supporters of Sergeant Armstrong called on me, and whom I knew to be in distress. I had then no money, having given the surplus to Conroy, and I gave the clothes off my shelves, for which I never will be paid, to those that I considered had suffered for having voted for Sergeant Armstrong. I can name them if necessary.

5816. How much did you give in that way?—I might have given £9 or £10.

5817. I want to ask you another question—do you swear that no money passed through your hands at the last election?—Positively I swear it; not a penny.

5818. I presume you voted for Captain Flanagan?—I did indeed, and was very glad to have the opportunity of doing so.

5819. Do you know anything about the organization of mobs?—Nothing, whatever.

5820. You saw the mobs in town on his side?—Well, I saw the ordinary crowd that attend an election contest.

5821. You know the town well these many years?—Very well.

5822. Were not these people who came into the town strangers?—Most of them were strangers.

5823. From a distance?—Perhaps ten or twelve miles.

5824. From which side did this mob come—I mean whose tenants were they, for example, as you understood?—I could hardly say whose tenants they were. There were persons from the county Leitrim on that occasion who seemed to take a deep interest in it. I saw many from Leitrim—from the neighbourhood of Dromahair.

5825. Acting as part of the mob?—They seemed to take a deep interest in the return of Captain Flanagan. I knew them to be distant countrymen.

5826. Were these the men that were throwing stones and breaking windows?—I should think not.

5827. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Did you see any of them throwing stones or breaking windows?—I saw stones thrown but it was at night. I saw the glass breaking from the effects of the stones; I did not see any stone thrown.

5828. Were there not violent mobs during the whole of the polling day?—I think not.

5829. You swear there were not?—I do, considering the provocation, as you might call it, the mobs got.

5830. What do you call the provocation the mobs got?—On one occasion three gentlemen came through the street with revolvers in their hands. I considered that very great provocation to an excited crowd.

5831. I am not speaking of that occasion?—That was the occasion that I refer to—the late election.

5832. Was the town not in the possession of a violent mob at that time?—Not violent. There was a very large crowd, but I did not consider they were violent.

5833. How long have you been a resident of Sligo?—Perhaps about sixteen years.

5834. Do you recollect the election at which Mr. Macdonogh was returned, and at which there was no contest; do you recollect that in 1866?—I do.

5835. Do you recollect the time at which Mr. Wynne was returned?—I do.

5836. Did you take an active part in Mr. Wynne's election?—I took as active a part as I could on every occasion of the kind, and made myself as useful on the Liberal side as I possibly could. We have had so many elections that I can hardly distinguish one of them from the other.

5837. On whose side did you work so actively in 1859, when Mr. Wynne was returned?—It is not likely that it would be on Mr. Wynne's side.

5838. I want to know on whose side it was?—My political feelings were not always in unison with his.

5839. Was it for Somers you worked?—There was one occasion on which I was active for Somers, but only one occasion.

5840. Was that in 1859?—I could hardly say. I could hardly tell you. In one of the last elections at which he was returned I was active in his support.

5841. Do you tell us that you never got any money to distribute at the time of Wynne's election?—Not a shilling ever passed through my hands for election purposes but those I have mentioned in my examination.

5842. You have told us that applications were made for payment by persons who had voted for Sergeant Armstrong shortly after the election?—Yes.

5843. Why did the persons who made these applications expect money when no money was given on the former occasion?—They stated to me—"You recommended me to vote for Sergeant Armstrong; you know the offers that have been made to me from the other side; I might have got £25 or £30," and mentioned extravagant sums that I did not always believe.

5844. I should like to get a little more about that. You told us, you know, that one man, Moran, said he was offered £300 to vote for Mr. Macdonogh by Lyons?—Yes.

5845. Mention any other person who made an application to you stating that he was offered money by the other side?—The wife of Peter Cunningham repeatedly mentioned to me that she could get £50 for her husband's vote.

5846. The Chief Commissioner.—What was her Christian name?—I could hardly tell you.

5847. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Did she say who offered it to her?—She mentioned three or four names.

5848. The Chief Commissioner.—Who were they?—She mentioned the name, I think, of Harloe Phibbs; she mentioned the name of Mr. Henry Lyons. I hardly recollect any other name. I think she mentioned these two.

5849. Did anyone else make a similar application?—Well, Hart frequently said to me too, ——

5850. He was one of the five?—Yes.

5851. Did Hart mention any person except Henry Lyons?—He did not mention Henry Lyons. Hart always represented himself to me as having lost seriously by having voted for Sergeant Armstrong.

5852. When you say "lost by having voted for Sergeant Armstrong," you mean that he did not make money by voting for Mr. Macdonogh?—Yes. He is in the butter trade, and always represented to me that he made enemies for himself among his Conservative supporters, and lost thereby. He is a cooper as well.

5853. Can you mention any other person to whom you paid money, or who said he was offered money by

Mr. Macdonogh?—John M'Gouldrick. I paid him £15. He mentioned to me that he could have got £50 if he had voted for the other side.

5854. Did you believe John M'Gouldrick?—I did not believe him.

5855. Felix Derham—did he?—He did not complain very much of having lost by it.

5856. What did you give him, do you recollect?—I gave him £10. I think so.

5857. Denis Rooney?—I gave him £10 also.

5858. Was he offered money on the other side?—He stated to me that he was.

5859. Who, did he say, offered it?—He did not mention any name.

5860. Patrick Collery—did he complain of having lost?—He said very little, but he said he did not lose much by it, and was very willing to give his vote on the popular side, but that he might have got money, and a larger sum than I gave him, if he had voted on the other side.

5861. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Did you canvass for Captain Flanagan at the last election?—I did.

5862. Whom did you canvass?—I canvassed almost all the electors in the town with him.

5863. Did any of those voters that you canvassed ask you for money?—No.

5864. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Oh, mention about it?—I don't recollect their having spoken to me.

5865. Try now, and remember whether any of them asked you for money, the way the Hunts asked you and those "aggrieved persons" in reference to Sergeant Armstrong's election?—I don't recollect.

5866. You don't recollect?—No.

5867. They might have asked you?—Perhaps they did, because I myself endeavoured, from the outset of Captain Flanagan's canvass here, by my conversation with people, to remove any idea of money being given in an illegal way.

5868. Why did you do that?—I thought it was only just towards Captain Flanagan in the first instance to do it—only fair towards those who might be expecting money, and afterwards not get it; because if expectations of that kind exist, and are not satisfied, it creates dissatisfaction.

5869. What made you think there would be no money going at Captain Flanagan's side?—Captain Flanagan himself, and every friend of his told me there would not—that they were determined to conduct it on the most legal and honest principles they could.

5870. Were not you told the same thing at the time of Sergeant Armstrong's election?—Yes.

5871. Why did you not try to prevent people from entertaining that idea at the time of Sergeant Armstrong's election?—I might have had some experience by Sergeant Armstrong's election that I profited by at Captain Flanagan's.

5872. Had you?—I had.

5873. What was the reason?—That was one of the reasons.

5874. What other reason had you?—That was the principal reason.

5875. Well, there were others?—I should add that the great annoyance I got myself personally, and having my name mentioned not very creditably, and myself abused by those who did not get the sums they were expecting—that was another of my reasons.

5876. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Could you remember the particular names of any of those voters that you took the trouble to convince would get no money?—I cannot recollect one. In speaking on that subject perhaps I was general, not particular.

5877. But you often had occasion to make those statements?—In the conversations that went on about the probability of his success, and the counting of votes, I always took occasion to do so.

5878. So that you very often—I suppose in most instances—when you were canvassing you took occasion to warn them that there would be no money going?—No, not when I was canvassing, but in conversations meeting my neighbours and people coming in to my place of business, if the conversation turned on the election, I always endeavoured to tell them that if they were expecting anything they would be disappointed. I made it my business to do that.

5879. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—But you never said that when you were canvassing?—If there was an occasion for it I would, but I never was asked the question when canvassing. In canvassing many persons were present, and you would only remain perhaps a few minutes in each house.

5880. Did nobody ever tell you, whom you canvassed for Captain Flanagan, that they had been offered money by Major Knox?—Oh, yes. Oh, I was told that frequently.

5881. What did you say then; you did not say, or did you say, "recollect, you are to expect no money from Captain Flanagan"?—No, I did not say that; but I said—I always said I would be surprised that any amount of money would induce a Liberal elector to vote for Major Knox in preference to Captain Flanagan.

5882. I dare say you always said—"Go, I tell you to vote"?—No, I did not.

5883. You did not?—I did not.

5884. Because you said that in Sergeant's Armstrong's time, but you said you could make no promises?—I did; I said I could make no promises.

5885. The Chief Commissioner.—No promise, but go and vote?—That I would recommend you to vote.

5886. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Did you tell them the last time that you recommended them to go and vote?—I recommended them strongly to vote; I urged them as much as I possibly could.

5887. I ask you, on your oath, did you think that none of those whom you canvassed to vote, voted under the impression that they would get money at Captain Flanagan's side?—I declare most solemnly, on my oath, that I don't believe a single elector on Captain Flanagan's side expected a penny from me as voting on my recommendation for Captain Flanagan.

5888. Did they expect it from Captain Flanagan?—I cannot say what they expected from Captain Flanagan.

5889. What do you think?—I don't believe they did expect it from Captain Flanagan.

5890. The Chief Commissioner.—From what you know of elections, working at them for so many years, do you mean to say that the successful candidate for Sligo does not generally pay after the election?—I am not working at elections for so many years. I never took an active part in elections—a very active part—but at the two last. I never took an active part at all in the elections but the two last.

5891. But this time, when you canvassed the five men that were mentioned as going together, and told them to go and vote, I ask you now, did not you believe these men expected something?—They did expect it, to be sure; but it was not by my manner, or conversation, or promises.

5892. I am just asking you now what you believe?—I believe they expected money.

5893. They did then expect it?—The fact of the man bringing me into the hall, and telling me that Mr. Henry Lyons had offered £300, in half-notes, for votes for the other side.

5894. Do not you believe that when those five men voted, they expected to get something from the Sergeant?—I did. They might have expected it. I may mention to you that I recollect as distinctly, as if it had only occurred yesterday, that when Moran said to me that £300 had been offered to him in half-notes, I held my hand up and said, "I cannot speak to you about money; if Sergeant Armstrong cannot be returned without a promise of money, I will have nothing to do with it."

5895. Why did you go into the little room?—He called me and said, I want to speak to you.

5896. Did you not know very well that he wanted to come to terms?—No; Moran——

FOURTH DAY.
October 8.

Martin Phillips.

5897. He was a voter on the day of poling at three o'clock, a critical time—were you ahead at the time?—Well, there was a difference of opinion about that.

5898. Were you running neck and neck?—I thought we were ahead; some of our friends said they were not.

5899. At all events, it was a critical time?—Very critical.

5900. And you were excited?—I was anxious.

5901. Now, do not you know very well, that when he and you were brought into that room together, it was in order that he might name his terms?—I knew he would be very glad to catch me make him a promise if he could.

5902. Did you not know he wanted you to bribe him?—I was sure he expected I would speak to him.

5903. To bribe him?—To make him a promise.

5904. Answer me; when he brought you into the room with your two selves do not you now believe he wanted you to bribe him?—I could hardly think he did for this reason, that in conversations I had with him some days previously, before this night, I repeatedly told him there was no money to be spent illegally in Sergeant Armstrong's election.

5905. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—You told him that in Sergeant Armstrong's time?—I am speaking of Sergeant Armstrong now.

5906. The Chief Commissioner.—Would you take the list of voters and write opposite to each name the sum of money you gave?—I gave money to others as well as voters.

5907. Well, put down the names of all the persons you paid money to?—I would with pleasure, as well as my recollection of the facts serves me.

5908. The sooner you do it the sooner you will be released from attendance.

5909. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Do you remember the time Sadlier was returned?—I do.

5910. Are you aware that money was spent on voters at that election?—I am not.

5911. Or after the election?—I am not. I have not the slightest knowledge nor anyone belonging to me. Although the name of a friend of mine was mentioned yesterday in connexion with Sadlier's election, I solemnly declare that I was not a participator to the value of a penny in that election. The value of a penny I never gained by that election, nor do I believe that my friend, whose name was mentioned yesterday, did either.

5912. You had nothing to say to the money that was going at the time of Sadlier's election?—Nothing whatever. I took neither act nor part in Sadlier's election. I had been but four months living in Sligo and was endeavouring to press on my small business, and I could not afford to lose even time by attending to election purposes.

5913. The Chief Commissioner.—Did anyone tell you, when you were canvassing at the last election between Knox and Flanagan, specifically, that he had been offered money on either side as a voter?—When I was canvassing with Flanagan?

5914. Yes?—Yes, I was told by several that they were offered money.

5915. Who told you?—Well, I assure you the thing is so general that I would almost have to name the whole list nearly.

5916. The whole list?—Middle-class persons.

5917. Do you mean to say that fifty persons told you they were offered money?—Perhaps fifty did not.

5918. Twenty?—Well, no, not so many as twenty; but in the conversations that I had with a few they mentioned to me their neighbours as having had similar offers made to them.

5919. I want you to mention to me the names of the persons who were offered money, and of the persons who offered it to them?—Patrick Flynn told me that he was offered money, a very large sum, on the other side. I would recollect the name distinctly if I saw the list; perhaps I would be able if I refreshed myself.

5920. You had better withdraw now for the present and write out the list, and bring it to me?—Give me till to-morrow and I will make it out.

[The witness withdrew].

Maurice Conry.

Maurice Conry sworn and examined.

5921. The Chief Commissioner.—You were a supporter of Sergeant Armstrong at his election?—Yes.

5922. Did you distribute any money after the election of Sergeant Armstrong in 1866?—I did.

5923. How much?—I think £115.

5924. Have you now the names of the voters to whom you gave that money and the amounts?—I think I can name them for you:—Patrick Marren, £20; Thomas Ward, £20; Michael Gilligan, £20; William Lovatt—I am not certain as to the amount to him. Michael Coyne, £20; Martin Davy, £15.

5925. Had these men applied to you immediately after the return of the Sergeant?—No.

5926. Did they ever apply to you for money?—I think not, with one exception. One party applied to me for money—indeed I don't think he applied to me till he heard that Mr. Tracy and Mr. Byrne were in town—and that was Doolan, the guard of the coach.

5927. What passed between you and Doolan?—When Mr. Tracy and Mr. Byrne came to town he called in, I think, the day after, if I don't mistake. He said to me, "I am in want of money; I am very badly off, and I expect you will get something for me. I think he spoke to me before they came to town some short time. At all events he called on me afterwards. "Well," said I, "I attended a meeting the other evening, and I did recommend you to get £20." He came again and asked for it. I said, "I have not got any money for you." "At all events," he said, "you will let me have it to-morrow or next day." I said, "I don't know." He went off and I did not see him for, I think, two days. He returned to me one morning early, about half-past eight o'clock, and said in rather a friendly way something about it being well for me that I had been in bed during the night, as he had been travelling, and said then—"Have you got the money for me." I said, "No." "Why," said he. "Because," said I, "I have not got any money for you Mr. Doolan." "I don't want to tell you just now," I said. I am merely repeating the substance of the conversation, I can't exactly say the words. I had a letter that morning from Mr. Byrne from Dublin, stating that Doolan had gone to Dublin, that he had waited on Sergeant Armstrong, and that the Sergeant had given him—in fact it is better for me to hand in the letter. (Produces letter.) I may tell you that I had disposed of the money up to this £20 for Mr. Doolan. He got very indignant. I said to him, "Were you not in Dublin the evening before last." He said, "Yes, I was." I said, "Did you get any money there; did you see Sergeant Armstrong or Mr. Byrne, or anyone?" I forget the answer he made; but at all events I asked him, "Did you get £20 then?" "No," said I, "there is no use in your trying it on me in this way; I received a letter this morning from Dublin to the effect that you got £20, and you will get no more from me." He threatened then to take proceedings against me, on the ground that I had promised that £20 to him two days before. I said "you may go about your business, I will have nothing more to say to you." I sent for a person who I think was a friend of Coyne's, and gave this party the £20. He went away, and returned in some short time—about ten minutes afterwards—with a receipt from the man.

5928. From Coyne?—From Coyne.

5929. You had nothing more to do with Doolan?—Nothing more.

5930. You saw that he was trying to get a second

£20?—Oh, evidently. I evidently saw he went to Dublin for the purpose of getting £20 in Dublin and coming back to me, for I told him I would recommend him for that sum.

5931. You had a previous consultation, as we heard, with some friend?—Yes.

5932. About dividing the money amongst the electors. How did you fix on £20 for some of these men and £15 for others?—I think the reason of that was that each man that wanted it had his terms.

5933. Who fixed the amount to be divided?—I could not exactly tell you. We all had a conversation about it—every one of the party. Everyone that was there, I think, had a conversation about it. I know Mr. Byrne waited on me; I received his note, I think, about one or two o'clock in the day but did not attend to it. He called on me in the evening, and I told him there was nothing I could possibly do to secure the return of Sergeant Armstrong that I did not do, but that I was very unwilling to have anything to do with money matters; and I may as well tell you that my chief object in not wishing to have anything to say to money matters was least it might be supposed that I did not dispose of all I got.

5934. But I want to know, first of all, on consultation between you and the other gentlemen who had been supporters of the Sergeant, how was it arranged that so much money, for example, was to come down from Dublin?—I think some parties gave in names of persons who applied to them for money. I was not applied to, I think, until the day the parties came to town. I was not applied to by any other; nor was I ever asked for money subsequent to Sergeant Armstrong's return until that day.

5935. You were not asked for money at all?—I was not asked for a penny, good, bad, or indifferent.

5936. Then, how was it arranged that you were to get so much for these five or six men?—I gave the names of three or four parties, one that I knew was a very poor man, indeed.

5937. Who was that?—Gilligan, who was extremely poor. In the first place he owed nearly half a year's rent to his landlord in Dublin, which was paid out of that £20. That was £15. He was a very poor man, indeed. At that time, I think, if I don't mistake, that Marren and Ward were in gaol. They were arrested on suspicion of Fenianism, and had been for a long time in gaol. This was named for these parties.

5938. Did you name these five?—I don't think it was I; but they were in my immediate neighbourhood. I know I named Marren.

5939. Had you canvassed Marren?—I had.

5940. Had you canvassed the other four?—I had; I am sure I had.

5941. Do you believe it was on your recommendation, amongst other things, that they voted for the Sergeant?—I was with the Sergeant when he was canvassing, and canvassed with him; but neither directly nor indirectly did I ever make a promise either before or after the election.

5942. I do not say you did; but you canvassed them and pressed them to vote for the Sergeant?—There was no pressure; in fact, I think the Sergeant had often reminded me of the manner in which he was received by the wife of one of these men.

5943. Did any other money pass through your hands at that election?—No.

5944. Did any money pass through your hands on this occasion?—Not a penny.

5945. Had you ever anything to say to the distribution of money before or since?—Never; in fact I never took an interest in any election up to Sergeant Armstrong's.

5946. Why did you and the rest of the gentlemen—I will not call them the Committee—who met there consider it right to distribute this money?—Well, I declare I don't know what answer to give to that question.

5947. It is a very simple one; I ask you why you thought it right to distribute this money?—The probability is, in my mind, from what I heard on the occasion, that parties in town expected that they would be considered by the Sergeant after the election.

5948. If he was returned?—Oh, he was returned.

5949. I know; but is not that what you mean, that the voters at the election expected——?—No; I think that is not my view of the matter.

5950. Put it in your own way?—I think myself, that from the very independent manner in which the Sergeant was returned, as I believed, then and now, without promises, or anything of the sort, being made by Sergeant Armstrong or any of his friends, some of these people expected that the Sergeant would be generous; that's the only view that I can call to mind. I may as well tell you, because I think I am partly the unwilling cause of the name of a person being introduced here, how the thing occurred. Bryan Chrystal is a very delicate man, and is at present, I believe, in Scotland. I did not like to have money passing through my hands. I got this money, and I asked Mr. Chrystal to distribute it to the parties named. I gave him receipts, which he was to get. I don't know whether I filled them myself or not. At all events, he brought me back receipts for the different sums he had paid, which receipts I sent up by the first post to Mr. Byrne, and which I presume he has in Dublin. It was Mr. Chrystal that paid the money for me, except the one sum of £20 to Coyne. I don't think I paid more. Marren's son-in-law, as well as I can remember, came to the place one day, and I gave him his £20.

5951. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Did you canvass at the last election?—I did. I went out as far as Ballysodare to meet Captain Flanagan, who asked me to sit in the carriage the day we went through the town.

5952. Did you canvass with him?—I canvassed the greater part of the first day with him; in fact, I was almost the whole time with him on his canvass.

5953. While you were exerting yourself for Captain Flanagan, did any voter say to you that promises had been made to them by the other side?—I don't recollect that there did.

5954. Was there any reference made to money at all?—Well, I can't charge my memory now that there was anything said, for we went about in a general way from house to house, and I cannot charge my memory that there was anything said about poor parties expecting money. In fact, nothing was said about money to me, or to Captain Flanagan in my presence at all.

5955. Nothing said to you about money coming from the other side, or offers being made by the other side?—I don't recollect. At all times when there is a rumour of an election here, there is a talk of money; but I don't believe the one-tenth of what is said. It is all for the purpose of getting parties to say what will you give. I don't believe the one-half of what is said about matters of the sort.

5956. The Chief Commissioner.—To your knowledge were any attempts made on the part of electors to get promises from Captain Flanagan or his canvassers?—I am not aware.

5957. None were made to you?—No.

5958. With your experience of the payments that were made in Sergeant Armstrong's time, did you take any pains to tell the electors in Captain Flanagan's time that the precedent would not be followed?—No; I don't think I had any necessity to say anything about it, because I merely went about with Sergeant Armstrong canvassing from door to door, and I did nothing further than that.

5959. You never canvassed, then, by yourself?—No.

5960. Of course not. You were present at the interview with a good many gentlemen at the time this settlement was made—when the arrangement was made as to who was to distribute this money?—Yes.

5661. Was any surprise expressed by the gentlemen who were present on that occasion at the applications having been made?—I declare I cannot recollect.

5962. Now try, Mr. Conry; you have given your evidence very fairly?—Oh, I have come with a determination to tell the truth.

FOURTH DAY.
October 8.
Maurice Conry.

5963. But try now. Was there no surprise—was there any disapprobation expressed?—I think there was a general disapprobation expressed that money should be so expended. I think there was a general disapprobation expressed by the majority of the parties there, that the money should be expended.

5964. But was there disapprobation expressed at the applications having been made?—I don't recollect.

5965. Do you think there was none?—I don't recollect.

5966. Was it thought a natural thing?—It may have been by some.

5967. Did anybody say?—I have no recollection.

5968. Did anybody say anything about it having occurred before—that the winning candidate always paid?—I often heard of money going at elections here in Sligo; I never knew anything about it myself.

5969. At what election did you hear?—At Townley's election, and Sadlier's, and all those.

5970. I am speaking of a recent one—the third election back—the time Mr. Macdonogh was elected, though there was no contest?—The first time.

5971. He was only elected once, and there was no contest?—No, I did not hear anything. That's the first time?

5972. The first time?—I did.

5973. You heard of money being paid to people on his side?—I heard of a list being handed. A man named James Hall, now dead, told me that a list, I think, of thirty names, with £50, I think, opposite to the name of each, was handed in, which amounted, I think, to £1,500; that that money was paid, and that his name was on the list; and he said that his name was put on the list without his knowledge, and that he never received a penny of it; that when he heard it he wrote to Mr. Macdonogh, but Mr. Macdonogh did not reply to his letter.

5974. You say Hall told you that a list was "handed;" handed by whom?—I don't think he said to whom; but he said that, at the time, a man named Williams processed Mr. Williams in town for £25, which was the balance of his £50 that was on this list; that Mr. Williams, he stated, paid him £25 out of the £50; and that the process for the balance was tried in this court, and dismissed.

5975. They were both called Williams?—Yes.

5976. Where did he say he processed him?—It was a matter of inquiry in this court. We all recollect it.

5977. Tried here?—Yes.

5978. Do you recollect what year that was?—I do not, indeed. I think it was the time Mr. Macdonogh and Colonel Tennison were candidates here.

5979. It was then either that year or the year afterwards?—That was the circumstance to which he alluded.

5980. But that is a circumstance that must have created a good deal of sensation in the town of Sligo, I should think—one man processing another for money to be given for bribery—surely you could tell us more about it?—I don't know anything more about it; I was not at the trial here. I heard it was asserted by this man, Sam Williams, that Mr. Williams was to give him £50. Mr. Williams came into court and swore that he never gave him £25, and never gave him a promise of a penny, and the case was dismissed. That's my recollection of it.

5981. Is Williams living still?—He is.

5982. Tell me where he lives?—In the High-street; he is a highly respectable gentleman.

5983. Do you believe that Mr. Thomas Williams was the gentleman to whom the list was given?—I could not say.

5984. Not positively, I know; but do you believe it?—Well, I don't know; I could not take it on myself to say.

5985. Now, who was it that gave that list?—I forget; he told me, I think, but I forget.

5986. Oh, now, Mr. Conry?—Oh, if I could recollect it I would tell you.

5987. Try and recollect?—I will tell you nothing but the truth; I cannot recollect; I don't know.

5988. Was it a person who was an active supporter of Mr. Macdonogh—could you bring it to mind?—It strikes me that he did not mention the party's name; but he said it was handed in by a person, as well as my recollection serves me, in Mr. Macdonogh's interest.

5989. Do you recollect the name of any other person whose name was on that list?—No, I do not; I did not pay much attention to it, to be candid with you, for I don't believe half of these stories.

5990. From your knowledge of the town and of the place where elections were carried on and closely contested, did you look on it as not unnatural that people should expect money from Sergeant Armstrong when returned without promises; I don't know; I don't think I could give you an answer to that question.

5991. I am speaking merely of the effect upon your mind—not about whether it was natural or not. Were you surprised?—Oh, I was not surprised.

5992. Not surprised?—Not surprised.

5993. And therefore you thought it natural?—I was not at all surprised to hear that some parties might have expected money. I only say that I never was asked myself either before or after the election.

5994. In what class of life were those persons generally who got the money—were they voters at the very bottom of the list, the poorest people, or the middle class?—They were not the poorest.

5995. What class, generally, would you say—were they small shop-keepers?—One of them was very poor, that is Gilligan, a farmer living in the neighbourhood of the town.

5996. I see Marren, whom you mention, is rated at £13 15*s.*; what is his employment?—I think he is a licensed publican, and he keeps cars. He was one of the parties that were in gaol.

5997. I see Michael Coyne rated at £20; is he in a respectable class of life?—He is a respectable grocer and publican in the town, and appeared to be doing a large business.

5998. Doing a large business?—I believe so. In fact I do not know much about it.

5999. Why was it that he got the £20?—I know nothing more about it than that letter I have just handed in.

6000. Now, I want to ask you a question as to your belief—do you believe that if Captain Flanagan had been returned, money would have been paid at this election?—I don't think it would.

6001. What is your reason for that belief?—Well, I think that Captain Flanagan had not large means that he could afford to do anything of the sort, and I know that the bishop had set his face completely against it. I don't think Dr. Gillooly would recognise it.

6002. But he did that in Sergeant Armstrong's time, we know?—I think Sergeant Armstrong has satisfied the Court that the first thing the bishop did was to warn ——

6003. Most clearly; but that, you know, did not prevent the applications for payment of the money by Sergeant Armstrong?—No.

6004. So that I want to know whether you have any reason to form a belief that money would not have been paid on Captain Flanagan's side nine or ten months afterwards?—Well, really the best answer I could give is, that I don't think Captain Flanagan had it.

6005. That is a very good reason; but do you think it was expected by the people who voted—and a good many voted for him that voted for Sergeant Armstrong—do you think that some people expected to get money?—I don't know.

6006. You can form no opinion whatever?—I can form no opinion whatever. They are all aware now that the law is more stringent than it was.

(The witness withdrew.)

The inquiry was adjourned to Saturday morning at ten o'clock.

FIFTH DAY.

Saturday, October 9, 1869.

The Commissioners sat at ten o'clock.

Mr Martin Phillips, who had been under examination the previous day, handed in a list of the persons to whom he gave money at Sergeant Armstrong's election. Martin Phillips.

6007. The Chief Commissioner.—Mr. Phillips, now read out for us from that paper, the names of the men to whom you gave money, and the sums?—John M'Goldrick, Pound-street—there is another M'Goldrick in Pound-street, Mark M'Goldrick—£15; James Flynn, Pound-street, £15; Denis Rooney, Knox-street, £10; Felix Durham, Knox-street, £15; Pat Collery, Pound-street, £15; Pat O'Brien, draper, Market-street, £10; Peter Cunningham, Market-street, £20; Michael Gillen, High street, £15; Pat Barry, Knox-street, £15; James Leonard, Chapel-street, £15;——M'Hugh (I don't know his Christian name), Jail-street, £15; John Kearns, Cranmore, £15; Michael O'Beirne, Gallows-hill, £10; cash to Maurice Conry, £3.

6008. You understand that this list is part of the evidence you have already given?—Oh, yes, I understand that.

6009. Do you swear that you gave these men the several sums affixed to their names?—I do.

6010. I want to know, in reference to this money, who called you to the meeting at which it was arranged to divide the money?—I think I got a message from Mr. Tracy, inviting me to the Imperial hotel.

6011. Mr. Tracy was Sergeant Armstrong's agent, I believe?—He was.

6012. Do you remember who brought the message asking you to go to the meeting at the hotel?—I think it was a servant from the hotel that came for me.

6013. Do you remember was the message a verbal one, or was it in writing?—It was a verbal message. I didn't attend to the message at first sent to me, and Mr. Petrie called on me to go down.

6014. Did you know what the meeting was for?—I did. I advised such a meeting.

6015. Why did you advise it?—Because I thought the persons to whom the money was given, expected that such a distribution would take place.

6016. What reason had they to expect that a hundred persons should get money?—They complained that they lost by the election, and had made sacrifices in their trade and business.

6017. Were you of opinion that a hundred persons should be paid?—I wasn't. I disapproved of paying so many persons.

6018. How many persons, in your opinion, should have been paid?—Do you mean in the whole borough?

6019. Yes; you agreed, you know, to pay ninety-seven persons?—I was of opinion that forty persons should be paid.

6020. Is that your opinion?—Yes. I think so. I may be wrong, I may be giving my opinion too hastily; but that was my opinion at the time.

6021. Why did you consider it necessary that forty should be paid for having voted?—At least forty are very poor persons, to whom great temptations were offered on the other side, which they resisted.

6022. And you considered that, having resisted the temptations offered on the one side, they ought to be paid by the other for their votes?—They had no right to be paid; but my opinion was that these forty should be paid, for the reason I gave you.

6023. Do not use the word "right"—You know they could have no such right.

6024. Did not you know these people got the money because they voted for Sergeant Armstrong?—I did.

6025. Did not you know that giving money in that way to electors for their votes was bribery?—I didn't know it then.

6026. Why did you think it was not bribery?—Because there was no inducement held out to them before they had voted.

6027. Was there any sum fixed on, or mentioned as the sum that was to be paid to those men?—There was no sum mentioned.

6028. It was in April the money was distributed?—Yes.

6029. And they voted in the July previously?—Yes.

6030. Do you mean to say you thought it was not bribery to give money to these people for having voted for Sergeant Armstrong?—I didn't think it was.

6031. Did you express any opinion at the meeting in the Imperial hotel to the effect that forty persons should be paid for their votes?—I mightn't have said that number, but I expressed my disapprobation of paying so many.

6032. Why did you express your disapprobation of paying so many?—Because I considered that there were among the number some who didn't deserve any money.

6033. Were not there among the number of ninety-seven, some respectable persons who did not want the money?—There might be some of them, who didn't want money.

6034. Do you mean to say that out of that number there were five aggrieved parties that were in want of money—you do not mean to say you offered him money, the man who appeared here so respectable—do you think Michael Hunt was in want of money?—I had no idea of Michael Hunt's circumstances, but I am aware that before he voted we considered—those acting with me considered it advisable or desirable not to go near him; in fact some of those acting with me on behalf of Sergeant Armstrong advised me to be very cautious in approaching him—that he was a very dangerous man to induce to vote.

6035. You have sworn that you had no conversation with Michael Hunt about money?—Not a sentence.

6036. Nor about his vote?—I recommended him to vote, but I had no conversation with him about money.

6037. Had you any idea at the time of the election that Hunt was to be paid a shilling for his vote—I mean the polling, that I call the election?—I know he expected money.

6038. How did you know he expected money?—He said he had five others; he had four in his own house.

6039. Each of these four have been mentioned, mention the name of the fifth to me now?—He said the fifth was absent at the Point, and had made arrangements that they shouldn't vote until the other returned from the Point, and that they should get £300 for their votes—for the six votes.

6040. Who was the other man?—Michael Gilgallon.

6041. You did not mention him before?—I think I mentioned him.

6042. You did not mention him?—I don't recollect, but James Moran told me that Kilgallon went to the Point—to Ross Point—a bathing place in the neighbourhood, and that before he left, he bound the other five to act in concert with him, that each were not to vote until they should all vote together, and that they should get £300 in notes, in half notes.

6043. Offered by whom?—By Mr. Henry Lyons.

6044. What did he go to the Point for?—I don't know.

6045. You had better come to the point yourself—what did Moran say the other went to the Point for?—Do you mean Kilgallon?

6046. Yes?—I had no conversation with Kilgallon

FIFTH DAY. October 9.

Martin Phillips.

at all. He is in the habit of having a lodge there for his family every year—I can't tell whether he had a bathing lodge there or not that year.

6047. What did this man tell you Kilgallon went to the Point for—what connexion had his going to the Point to do with his vote?—I am sure it had something to do with the proceeding—bringing up parties, looking after the voters and bringing them up.

6048. I want you to explain what his going to the Point had to do with his vote?—Some of the parties—voters—are anxious to be pressed, are anxious to make compliments of their votes, and I believe a friend of his, a clergyman of the town, went to him to the Point, and in his company he came to the poll and voted.

6049. Who was the clergyman that went to the Point for him?—The Rev. Mr. Morris.

6050. Do you mean that Kilgallon went to the Point to be out of town, to be pressed to come back?—That was the reason given to me. He may have a lodge there—I am not aware that he had a lodge there at the time.

6051. Do you think he wanted to be waited on at the Point?—I don't know, but I think his motive was to be out of town.

6052. Explain why you believe that Michael Hunt expected money when he voted?—Because Moran took me aside into an adjoining hall, and said "there are five of us here, the sixth, Kilgallon, has gone to the Point. We are bound to him not to vote until he comes back; we are to get £300 for the six votes."

6053. Was that the reason and the only reason you suddenly offered Hunt £20?—It was.

6054. Without communicating with him?—Yes.

6055. As compensation for not having got the fifty?—Yes. That was the only reason—that was my reason.

6056. Were you on good terms with Michael Hunt up to that?—I was on the ordinary terms.

6057. Of neighbours in the town?—Yes. I had no reason to be on bad terms with him. Not an angry word passed between us up to that. He never made use of an offensive observation to myself.

6058. Was there any body by when you offered him the £20?—There wasn't.

6059. Did you get receipts from the men to whom you gave the money?—I took a memorandum of the men who got the money.

6060. Did you get receipts from them?—I took receipts from some of them.

6061. Have you those receipts?—I searched for them, but I couldn't find them.

6062. What was the form of receipt you got from them?—Nothing more than an acknowledgment of having received the money, and the date.

6063. "Received from Martin Phillips the sum of £10," or whatever the sum, was that the form of it?—It was.

6064. Did the receipt state what it was for?—It didn't.

6065. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Did it strike you as a strange proceeding that the money should be given nine months after the election?—It did'nt.

6066. And you say you didn't consider the giving of the money bribery?—I didn't; and very prudent men of the town who were acting with me at the election, considered that it wasn't bribery.

6067. Did anyone mention its being done at former elections?—I don't remember its being mentioned by anyone.

6068. Was there any talk of its being done on any other occasion, after any other election?—I didn't hear anything of it.

6069. By anyone?—There was some talk or conversation among gentlemen to say that if a similar course had been pursued, if a similar arrangement had been made, on former occasions, Michael Hunt and persons acting like Michael Hunt, could be conciliated. There was an occasion when Mr. John Ball was a candidate for the borough of Sligo. Then I did nothing but give any assistance I could. I only voted. I was not long an elector at the time, It was said and believed that it was owing to a letter sent by six gentlemen and placed before Mr. Ball demanding a large sum of money before the election that he abandoned the town of Sligo.

6070. The Chief Commissioner.—Who were the six gentlemen?—Michael Hunt was one.

6071. Was Moran one of them?—I don't know. I can't say. Dominick Hunt was another.

6072. Was M'Grath one of them?—I don't know. I believe James Tighe has a good deal of experience and knowledge of the matter. He recollects the candidature of Mr. Ball, better than I do.

6073. Who else was one of the six?—I don't know anyone else. I should mention that Hugh Conlan knows a great deal about the affairs of our borough.

6074. Are you quite sure you cannot find the receipts you got from the voters to whom you gave the money?—I am. I searched for them.

6075. Did you give them to Mr. Byrne as the person who brought down the money?—I didn't. I gave him a list. I called on him. I showed him a list of names, offering £105. I think I showed him a list of names.

6076. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Are you the Postmaster of the town?—I am.

6077. How long have you filled that office?—A few days; it is not more than three weeks since my formal appointment.

6078. How, your formal appointment?—I was acting in that capacity, for five weeks before I was appointed.

6079. Then your appointment is only a recent one?—Within the last month.

Mr. Francis Macdonogh, Q.C.; sworn and examined.

Mr. Francis Macdonogh.

6080. The Chief Commissioner.—You were, I believe, member of the borough of Sligo at one period?—I had that honour.

6081. You contested, I believe, an election with Sergeant Armstrong?—Yes.

6082. And you were on that occasion the defeated candidate?—Yes.

6083. Will you state for the information of the court how soon you went into the field before the election at which you were returned unopposed?—That was my first election?

6084. Yes?—My recollection is that it was July, 1860.

6085. What steps did you take to ensure your return—consulting the feelings of the borough, and the influential gentlemen who were supporters of your politics in town—tell us shortly what you did?—Do you wish it in a narrative form?

6086. If you please?—I came to Sligo, and put myself in communication with the various respectable voters in the town. Another gentleman of very great respectability, Major Ffolliott, was also nominated a candidate. In order to determine to which of the aspirants to the honour of representing the borough the votes of the Conservative portion of the constituency should be given, a meeting was held for the purpose of presenting the two names, and of determining on the choice. Captain Fawcett, a very respectable old gentleman—who is now no more I regret to say—I can't say I am sure of what occurred at the meeting as I wasn't there, but I understand it was resolved that the opinion of the majority was to bind the minority—met me, and, on communicating with me, asked me, "will you consent that, in case Major Ffolliott will be selected by the meeting as the candidate of its choice, you will give him all the aid in your power to secure his return?" "Most certainly," said I; "on condition that should I be selected as the candidate, Major Ffolliott will give me all the aid in his power." Nothing could be fairer, and the choice fell on myself. For some time, I must say, the condition wasn't complied with, for the friends of Major Ffolliott were not active in supporting me; but on that gallant and honourable gentleman himself coming forward and redeeming faithfully his pledge, he drove about with me, and they one and all adopted my interests, and did all they could in my favour. So matters went on until the evening of the poll.

6087. The Chief Commissioner.—The evening of the nomination, I suppose?—Yes, the nomination is preceding. Mr. Tennison, Mr. Somers, and myself were put in nomination. On the evening before the polling Mr. Tennison retired, and the result was that no votes were given for him. I had a hundred odd votes in my favour before two o'clock in the day. Mr. Reilly came forward and polled five votes, I am told, for himself. Ultimately I was declared elected. That is the short history of that election. I have endeavoured to compress it within as narrow a space as possible.

6088. Somers went to the poll also, I believe?—I think not. My recollection is that he did not. I am not sure. I am just informed by a gentleman in court that Mr. Somers polled one vote.

6089. What is the date of the letter inviting you to Sligo?—July, 1860.

6090. What was the whole expenditure of that election to you?—The whole expenditure was about £500—I am not perfectly precise or accurate as regards the figures; I speak entirely from recollection now—and a sum of £850.

6091. Was the £850 given some time after the election?—It was.

6092. When you refer to a sum of between £400 and £500, which you say was the whole expenditure before the election, you mean to convey that was the account sent in to the mayor?—Certainly.

6093. Who was your agent for conducting the election?—Mr. Harloe Phibbs.

6094. And who was your expense agent?—There was then no expense agent as there is now.

6095. Had you any other agent for election expenses, or to whom money was given by you for expenses, except Mr. Harloe Phibbs?—My impression is that it was paid through the election auditor.

6096. Did anyone among the supporters in your behalf, except Mr. Phibbs, ever give any money for your election, or did you, yourself, give any other money, except what you mentioned?—I think not. Mr. Phibbs settled all the accounts, and I paid the money through the election auditor.

6097. You mentioned a sum of £850—the election was in July, 1860—how soon after the election, do you recollect, was it that the £850 was spent?—I can't exactly say. I know I gave it to Mr. Henry Lyons some time in the month of February '61—that's my recollection.

6098. Had you a committee at your election?—I had not.

6099. Have you committee rooms?—I am not quite sure. I rather think that it was so. You know it is nine years ago.

6100. Was Mr. Lyons one of your active supporters at that election?—Yes, certainly he was.

6101. Did you give him the entire of the money by cheque or by draft?—I gave him £800 in notes and £50 then.

6102. Where did you give it to him?—At my residence in Dublin.

6103. On what representations did Mr. Lyons get that money from you?—I should go back a little to tell you the whole of the circumstances. During the progress of the supposed contest Mr. Lyons asked me had I brought any money to Sligo with me. I said I had not, except what would pay my own personal expenses, as I hoped to have a perfectly correct election.

6104. You did not tell him what you brought?—I did not.

6105. What did he then say?—I first said that if money was required I should go to town for it. He then said he would save me the trouble. He wrote on paper 850 in figures, on an envelope, and he asked me to put my initials to it.

6106. Did you put your initials to it?—I did. He then gummed it.

6107. When was that?—In February. I heard no more about it until after the election.

6108. When did you put your initials to the paper?—It was during the period of the supposed contest.

6109. What was it you put your initials to?—He wrote 850 in figures on an envelope, and asked me to put my initials to it. He then gummed the envelope.

6110. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Was it an I. O. U.?—It was not; it was what I told you.

6111. The Chief Commissioner.—What did you understand it meant?—I concluded that it was to be applied to carrying the election. I never asked what it meant, and he never told me.

6112. That is, that the money was to be paid to voters?—I never formed an idea on the subject. Of course if it was necessary to be done I had no objection that it should be done legally and properly.

6113. Did not you understand that, when you put your well-known initials to the paper, it was a promise to give £850 to be disposed of by Mr. Lyons as he thought proper?—I felt myself bound to that extent.

6114. Did you understand that he asked you for your initials as a sort of guarantee?—I don't think he did. Mr. Lyons knew well he could depend on anything I either said or did.

6115. Why, then, did he ask you for your initials?—I don't know; I can't say; I presume it was to remind me of it, or to show that I had done it. That is what I conclude.

6116. Do not you suppose he showed it to a committee or knot of electors?—I don't think he did, or intended to do so, and I will tell you my reason for thinking he didn't, because he gummed the envelope in my presence after putting my initials to it.

6117. Was the envelope what is called a blank envelope?—Yes.

6118. Go on, Mr. Macdonogh, with your narrative?—In the month of February—as I am almost certain, I looked into my bank-book, and I was able to find the sum —— in February I find that £850 must have been drawn out of the bank. Mr. Lyons came to my house and produced the envelope on which I had put my initials. I asked him how much it was, he said £850, and I then handed it to him.

6119. Did he ever give you any account of that money, or of how it was distributed?—Never. I never asked it.

6120. But you believed that he gave or distributed it among the electors?—I did, certainly.

6121. Did it occur to you that he faithfully distributed the money according to the honourable obligations that existed between you and him?—I believed it. I believe Mr. Lyons is a most honourable gentleman, and that he would do what is right.

6122. Mr. Lyons never gave you any return of how the money was expended or distributed?—Never. Indeed I never asked him for it. He gave me this much to say. In a letter to me he said, "Mr. Macdonogh has acted in the most honourable manner; I know no one that has any claim on him."

6123. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—You say that was in the month of February?—Certainly.

6124. The Chief Commissioner.—Besides these two sums you mentioned, did you, as member for the borough, subscribe any money, or assist the revision by money?—I did.

6125. State the commencement of that—state for instance, in 1860, what you gave to assist the revision?—I can't say I commenced then to subscribe the annual sum which I subscribed subsequently; but I know I subscribed to the county registry, and to the registry for the borough. I allowed Mr. Wilson £50 a year to watch the registry for me, and I paid that sum punctually—the last payment to him was made after I finally parted from Sligo. I paid other sums for the registry of course. My outlay was very large during the five years I stood for Sligo, and I was the more generous for this reason—I wanted for future elections that not a penny should be spent improperly. I thought that by generosity and kindness I would have got such a hold on the borough that there would be no contest. I was constantly coming to Sligo whenever it was thought necessary—whenever it was useful for the borough. I subscribed very largely to the various charities in the town—the various members of the different persuasions, Methodist, Presbyterian, and the Church of England, all received very liberal treatment at my hands.

6126. About how much did you give in money as member for the borough?—That I could not answer correctly, but I could approximate to it. I didn't keep an account of it, but this I know, that from the first day of my connexion with Sligo, until I paid all my bills, and all demands on me, I sold out and expended £13,000 of New Three Per Cent. Stock.

6127. Did you spend all that in Sligo?—No, I didn't; but between living in London during the sittings of Parliament, and my expenditure in Sligo, every penny of it was exhausted.

6128. You stated that during that time—between 1860 and 1865—when you were defeated—you were generous, and determined that not a shilling should be spent in bribery?—Yes.

6129. During that time did any elector get any money from you—I mean during the time you were member for the borough?—I think I gave something to a man named Stewart, who, I was informed, had fallen into bad circumstances. He lived, I believe, in Castle-street. I know I headed a list for him, as charity entirely, and not at all in reference to voting.

6130. How much did you head the list with?—Not much—a small sum of £20. When the Presbyterians wrote to me previously I sent down £20; so I went on in that way. I don't think I ever gave money to voters, except in the way I told you to the man Stewart when he was in bad circumstances.

6131. Did you ever lend any money to voters?—I lent a sum of £30 to a person named Gethin, who, I was informed, was also in bad circumstances.

6132. Was his name Edward?—I really don't know.

6133. How soon was that after the election?—I can't say; but I should say it must be a considerable time.

6134. Were you member for the borough at the time?—I think I was a member.

6135. Was it after the £850 was given to Mr. Lyons?—I should say yes. That's my recollection at present.

6136. Did you lend any other money besides what you lent to Gethin?—I lent a sum of £27, £28, or £29 to a man named Kearns.

6137. Was that John Kearns?—That's my recollection.

6138. How long after the election was that?—It was a long time, I think.

6139. Used you receive frequent applications for money from electors while you were member for the borough?—No, indeed. I think not, at least. I could indicate every case.

6140. You mentioned £13,000 as the total amount of your expenditure for the five years you were member, I suppose you meant that as your expenditure in globo?—Certainly.

6141. Can you tell us how much of the £13,000 you spent on the borough?—Between the two elections, and my expenditure for the five years I was member for the borough, I should say about £8,000—for the five years and the two elections the sum total of the expenditure was £8,000—that's my belief. I don't venture to assert it positively. It's my belief.

6142. How much per annum would you put down as expenditure—how much, in consequence of your being member for the borough, did you spend on the borough between the two elections?—My travelling expenses were very heavy during that period.

6143. I do not mean personal expenditure?—That's for all.

6144. The question is—they use a phrase in England, "nursing the borough," that is, the member for the borough is obliged to have regard to popularity—is obliged to subscribe to local matters—how much, Mr. Macdonogh, did you spend on the borough in actual subscriptions, including the revision—did you spend £500 a year "nursing the borough; it must be more according to your own calculations?—It must be that at the very least; that's all I can say; but I am sure it must be that at the very least.

6145. I will have to ask you to mention names. It was sworn before us that a man named Mulligan, a voter, got £10 from a man named Rolette, after your unopposed election—do you know that man?—I know a man of that name, he was, I believe a tenant of Mr. Wynne's.

6146. He was described, I think, as a person being in a rent office—do you know anything of that transaction?—Nothing whatever.

6147. It was stated that he was paid, after your election, £10?—I know nothing of it. I know of no human being having received any money, except in the way I described.

6148. Have you seen Mr. Lyons since you came to town?—Yes. I saw him yesterday. I walked down the street with him.

6149. I now come to the election of 1865, which lay between you and Sergeant Armstrong, you were determined to contest the borough against everyone that came?—Most certainly.

6150. I suppose you made preparations in the usual way for contest, by ascertaining the state of the constituency and consulting the most influential voters on the Conservative side?—Yes. I had ascertained, and I was so informed, that we had a majority on the registry, just as I had hoped would be the result.

6151. What majority had you on your calculation—I now direct my attention to the time before Sergeant Armstrong came to Sligo as a candidate?—The calculation was that it couldn't exceed ten, or about ten—I think I am rather under than over the mark. I would rather be under than over it.

6152. Were you calculating the state of the registry with your influential friends?—I did so with my agent.

6153. In calculating what would be your chances at the election of 1865 were you informed by anyone that some of the electors would require to be paid for their votes?—Not then. I heard rumours that they were expecting it always in Sligo.

6154. Always?—So I heard.

6155. I would like you would give a short history of the two elections, for instance, as to your calculations of a majority on the registry, to what you attributed your defeat at the second election—whether promises were broken or the other causes that you think led to your defeat?—I remember when I came down to sligo—I wasn't so long here then as on former occasions—I investigated the state of the registry, in company with Mr. Phibbs; and certainly on paper he had a majority, and if all those who professed Conservative principles came forward and polled I had no doubt of the result. There was no occasion, as I thought, to improperly apply any money, and I was determined to avoid doing so if I could. I naturally expected after five years' connexion with the borough, endeavouring to benefit those of the same views as I did, that they would have adhered to me. One of the causes of my defeat was that a sufficient number of professing Conservatives abstained from voting—if they had voted the result would had been different. There was a majority against me of ten.

6156. I find there were 166 votes for Sergeant Armstrong, and 155 for Mr. Macdonogh?—Yes, a majority of eleven. There was a sufficient number of Conservatives to turn the scale in my favour, if they had voted.

6157. You intimated that you were determined to avoid any improper or illegal expenditure of money?—Yes.

6158. Before the polling day were you informed by anyone that some of the electors required money?—It was generally discussed that a great many of the opposite party would require payment if they were applied to; and that some of our own party would also require it.

6159. How many, do you think, or did you hear, were corrupt voters?—I don't believe there were many on the Conservative side—not more, I suppose, than ten or fifteen.

6160. Was Mr. Lyons your active supporter in 1865 as he was in 1860?—He was a faithful friend always.

6161. Did he get any money?—He didn't.

6162. You knew he was a supporter of yours, and had canvassed for you?—I doubt that he had canvassed for me—but he was always a supporter of mine and a faithful friend.

6163. Who was your conducting agent in 1865?—Mr. Phibbs.

6164. Through whose hands did the money pass to pay the expenses of that election?—Through the expense agent, Mr. Davis.

6165. What is his Christian name?—Josiah Davis, I believe.

6166. What was your whole expenditure for the election of 1865?—The entire expenditure which I ultimately paid was £905 15*s.* 2*d.*

6167. Were any demands made on you after the election of 1865, similar to what I may call the demands of Mr. Lyons in 1860?—One, and one only was all that was demanded of me.

6168. What was that?—I will tell you exactly.

6169. I wish you to divide the money?—Yes. A sum of £394 16. 5*d.* was returned to the Major; a sum of £20 18*s.* 9*d.* was paid to Mr. Josiah Davis—that made £415 15*s.* 2*d.*; and the sum I ultimately paid to recoup the party was £490, making altogether £905 15*s.* 2*d.* I believe, with the exception of my personal expenses, that is the sum total which that election cost me.

6170. To whom did you give the £490?—On the day before the poll it was ascertained that some of the Conservative party were holding back—they didn't vote against their principle, but one of them said, in the hearing of another gentleman, that I ought to retire, and show the true cause why they wouldn't come forward to vote. I came to the conclusion that they had the power to carry the election, if they had desired to do so. I said to myself, "I'll make it a matter of principle." I came to Sligo determined—and I told my friends so—that I wouldn't spend a single shilling in any improper or illegal manner. In the course of the evening I said to some of my friends, who had been talking the matter over with me, "I will now retire to rest, I won't spend a farthing in any illegal or improper manner, and I will give orders that I shan't be disturbed." I then retired to rest, and, I remember, I gave orders to my servant not to allow any person into my room to disturb me. I was determined that it should be a contest of principle; I knew if I was defeated I had my petition, and, if I prosecuted it, I was certain of the seat. When I was nearly fast asleep my servant awakened me, and said he came to tell me that Mr. Robert Shekleton, the barrister, desired to see me. I said to my servant to show him in. When Mr. Shekleton came in I said to him, "Why disturb me?" he said, "I called on you to tell you I have done an act which I am afraid you may not approve of. I was dining out at a friend's, and came over to see you. At dinner we entered into conversation about the election, I was sent for to go to a meeting of your supporters, and I gave £490 to one of the gentlemen there." "You did a very wrong act," I said, "you did contrary to my directions." Mr. Shekleton, in the course of the day, had said to me, "I have £500 here, and I will be happy to place it at your disposal." "I will have nothing to say to it," I said, "take it home." Nothwithstanding that he came to tell me that he gave this money, "you have done very wrong," I said, "you have embarrassed us very seriously; in fact, the conduct of the election is now taken entirely out of my hands." He said, "I thought it a pity not to do so after all the money you spent." "Where is the gentleman," I asked, "to whom you gave the money?" "The gentleman is gone to make arrangements," he said. "This is a very pretty business," I said; "I not only told you that I wouldn't have anything to do with your money, but I told it to my friends down stairs also." Mr. Shekleton then asked me, should he follow the gentleman to whom he gave the £490? and I said, "I think it's now too late." I heard no more of the matter until our return to town. A few friends said Mr. Shekleton had acted for the best; I said, no doubt, he had; but that it was a very hard case on me—that I couldn't think of preferring a petition, for the purpose of putting a gentleman out of the representation of the borough, when I couldn't put myself in. Very strong representations were made to me to the effect—what a loss it would be to Mr. Shekleton to lose the £490 which he gave for the election? and I said I would take my own time to consider the matter, and repay him. I told that to a mutual friend of ours.

6171. Did you repay the £490 to Mr. Shekleton?—I did; I happened to find amongst my papers the last cheque I sent for the amount.

6172. To whom did Mr. Shekleton say he gave the money?—He told me he gave it to Mr. Charles Sedley.

6173. You may as well give into the Secretary that cheque you say you found, what is the amount of it?—It is for £200.

6174. It is dated January, 1865; it is a cheque on the Bank of Ireland, in favour of R. W. Shekleton, for £200—that was the balance of the £490?—Yes; I had paid £90, and £200, and this was the last cheque I sent to make the £490.

6175. Was Mr. Charles Sedley acting for you at that election?—He acted always as a kind friend of mine; he refused everything like remuneration.

6176. I do not mean that he acted for you as a paid agent—was he one of your zealous supporters?—He was; he was a faithful supporter of mine.

6177. Did you speak to Mr. Sedley at any time after you heard that the £490 was given to him by Mr. Shekleton—when were you told that the money was given to him?—I was told it the evening before the poll.

6178. Did you see Mr. Sedley the following day?—I did, certainly.

6179. Did you see him early in the morning?—No; I think it was about mid day.

6180. Did you then speak to him about this money transaction?—I think that he spoke to me about it.

6181. Where did he speak to you about it?—In this very hall, I think it was.

6182. What did he say to you about it?—He said "I have given none of that money to the Roman Catholics as yet," these are his words, as I remember.

6183. Did he say anything else on that occasion?—I don't remember that he said anything else.

6184. What did you say to that, if you said anything?—"I think you were right," said I.

6185. Were you then in a minority on the poll, or were you neck-and-neck with the Sergeant?—I can't recall to mind just now, but I think we were neck-and-neck; or perhaps I was one or two superior to my opponent.

6186. At all events, it was a very close matter?—I think it was; but I am sure that if the professing Conservatives came forward to vote, there would be, and there were, enough to secure my return—six votes would have done it.

6187. Before you retired to rest the night of which you have been speaking, can you tell me who were the gentlemen who gave it as their opinion that money was necessary for the purpose of carrying the election?—I don't think they were giving an opinion that money was necessary at that moment; we were generally discussing the subject, that so many of the Liberal party would leave the town, I think it was said. I then said I was determined not to spend a single shilling at the election in any illegal or improper way.

Fifth Day.
October 9.
Mr. Francis Macdonogh

6188. Do you recollect who the gentlemen were that were present with you on that occasion?—A man named Williams was there——

6189. That's Thomas Williams, I suppose?—Yes.

6190. Was Mr. Charles Sedley?—He was. Mr. Hunter, I think, was present; I am nearly certain he was. Mr. Henry Lyons was there, I think.

6191. When these gentlemen were present, and it was stated that so many of the Liberal party would leave town for a consideration, what did you say?—I said I was determined not to spend a shilling improperly or illegally at the election.

6192. Were they present when you said that?—They were present when I categorically said I'd have nothing to say to anything of the species—that this election should be conducted on principle. I announced the same determination of mine to a gentleman who happened to be in another room, and who approved of it.

6193. Do you remember who that gentleman was?—I am not sure who that gentleman was, but my recollection is that it was either Mr. Chism or Mr. Crawford; I am sure it was one or other of them.

6194. When these gentlemen were discussing the matter on that night in your presence, were the names of those who would go away for a consideration mentioned?—I think not.

6195. Was the number of those who were likely to go away for a consideration mentioned?—I am not sure. I understood that six or eight would go away at some time.

6196. What time was it understood they were to go away?—I think not.

6197. Of course, from your having repaid to Mr. Shekleton the £490, you perfectly understood that it was spent on your behalf?—I took it for granted that it was. I assumed it was. I assumed that Mr. Sedley had applied it properly. I never doubted his word.

6198. And of course you perfectly understood that that money was spent on your behalf in the way that was discussed the evening previous?—I can't tell how it was spent; I never asked about it.

6199. Who was the mutual friend on whose representations you repaid the money to Mr. Shekleton?—Shall I mention the name?

6200. If you please.—Mr. Thomas Mostyn, who is now gone.

6201. From first to last, was that all the last election cost you?—It was. There was a small sum of £14 or £15, which I wasn't sure was included in the return, but I find it was returned to the Mayor.

6202. What was that £14 or £15 for?—It was for tickets for out-voters.

6203. In my opinion that would be a perfectly legal payment?—Perfectly legal payment.

6204. Have you any reason to believe that at either of your elections any money was spent, as supplied by any private persons, or as coming out of any public fund?—I am certain there was not.

6205. Was the entire of your expenses paid by yourself, and did the money come from yourself?—Yes, solely; no money was remitted to this town for the purposes of either of my elections from any club or association whatever. I suppose you are referring to money being sent from clubs in England.

6206. I am referring to large sums of money coming from London for election purposes?—I heard it stated that the Carlton Club had assisted my election in that way, but I am sure that not a penny the Carlton or any other Club or association ever supplied me with. I didn't ask them for it, nor did they volunteer to give it to me. I paid everything from myself.

6207. At neither election, I believe, had you any formal committee?—Certainly not.

6208. Who were the gentlemen at your last election who used to meet you in your apartments or in any private room?—I don't know that there was any private room. They sometimes called at my lodgings.

6209. Where were your lodgings?—At Mr. Leech's. They didn't all come together at the one time, but at different periods.

6210. Do you remember who those gentlemen were that used to call on you?—I could hardly recall all their names, but they were prominent supporters of mine.

6211. Was Thomas Williams one of those who so called on you?—I think not; Williams, I think, was away at the time.

6212. Did you then know of any elector at the election between you and Sergeant Armstrong having been given money to avoid voting?—I wasn't informed of it.

6213. Did you ever hear of its being done?—I never heard it.

6214. Do you think it occurred?—I should think it never occurred. I don't know anything of it.

6215. Had you any clue, after the £490 was given by Mr. Shekleton to Mr. Charles Sedley, of the persons to whom it was to be paid, except the observation made by Mr. Sedley, that the Roman Catholics were not to be paid?—I had no clue whatever. But your question reminds me that I saw a list a considerable time after.

6216. How long after did you see it?—It was a few months, I suppose. It was in pencil.

6217. Where was it you saw it?—I think it was either Mr. Shekleton or Mr. Sedley showed it to me.

6218. I was supposing something of the kind was done. Was it in Dublin you saw that list?—Yes, it was.

6219. That list, I suppose, contained the names of the persons to whom money was given, and the sums given to each?—It contained the names, not the sums.

6220. How many names were on that list?—I should be only guessing. I don't exactly recollect.

6221. Go as near as you can to the number?—I suppose between thirteen and fourteen; but that is only a guess.

6222. Did that list purport to represent the names of the voters among whom the £490 had been distributed?—It did, or a portion of it.

6223. In whose handwriting was the list?—I think it was in Mr. Sedley's handwriting. My recollection is that; but I am not positive in whose handwriting.

6224. I am not now asking you about what passed between you and Mr. Mostyn. Tell me when Mr. Shekleton showed you the list; was it after Mr. Mostyn had spoken to you about him, do you recollect?—I think it was before he spoke to me; but I am not certain of it. I am inclined to think that Mr. Shekleton said he asked for the list to satisfy himself.

6225. Did Mr. Shekleton give you any explanation as to why he brought down the £490 to Mr. Sedley?—I never asked him for any explanation, and he never gave me one.

6226. He couldn't have thought, I suppose, that you wanted the £490 or £500?—He never told me why he brought it down to him. I should mention that one of the observations made by Mr. Mostyn to me was, that the money wasn't Mr. Shekleton's own, that it was the money of another person, and that it would be a hardship for him to lose it.

6227. Did Mr. Mostyn mention whose the money was?—Yes; he said it was Mr. Shekleton's father's, for whom he was receiving rent.

6228. Can you fix the last date when you paid election expenses?—That was the last payment I ever made in connexion with Sligo.

6229. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—You stated, that in the discussion at the meeting held before the election of 1865, it was stated that expectations were always entertained by some of the voters of Sligo, to the effect that they should get money to avoid voting—do you remember that?—I don't think I said it was at that meeting I heard it; I heard it at some time, I know.

6230. Have you any recollection who were present when that was mentioned?—I think it must have been some one of the gentlemen I named, or more of them. If I heard it at that meeting, they were all present.

6231. Was Mr. Harloe Phibbs present at the meeting?—Certainly not at that meeting.

6232. Was Mr. Pollock present at it?—He wasn't. I think not.

6233. Did either Mr. Phibbs or Mr. Pollock mention to you anything of that fact—that there was a class of voters for the borough who expected to get money?—Mr. Pollock didn't, I am sure. I had very little communication with Mr. Pollock at that election.

6234. Did Mr. Phibbs mention it, do you remember?—I think that in 1860 Mr. Phibbs said there were people who required money, and that they were chiefly on the other side.

6235. Did he ever ask you to give money in that way?—Never.

6236. Was Mr. Lyons the Mayor of the town in 1860?—I think he was. I am not quite sure; but that's my recollection.

6237. In 1865 it was Mr. William Abbott Woods?—Yes.

6238. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Could you give us approximately—we couldn't expect you to do so accurately—as to the amount of £8,000 which you said was expended in connexion with your candidature for Sligo? how much of that sum of £8,000 was spent on contributions to charitable or public bodies—you must certainly have kept some account of that?—I am sure I kept no account of anything of the kind. I came to the town at great expense. There were individual cases of distress which were from time to time brought under my notice, and these I occasionally relieved. To give an illustration—there was the case of a man, once in respectable circumstances, against whom Dr. Ferguson brought an action. The case, after being fully heard, was about to go to the jury, when I heard of it. I was very anxious to save the character of the borough of Sligo. Before Chief Justice Monahan, who tried the case, charged the jury, I said, "Let it be settled; I will give £20 towards the expenses," and I followed it by a cheque for that amount. That saved the man from annoyance. Another man, I remember, came to me one day, crying, and said he owed a bill of costs to Mr. Sedley, which he couldn't pay. I paid the costs, and he was saved from further annoyance in the matter. These are merely illustrations of others of a similar class.

6239. I am not referring to that species of charity at all, I am speaking of donations and contributions towards public institutions; for instance, churches, chapels, and the like?—I will tell you how I acted. If I went to a Presbyterian place of worship I put £5 on the plate; if the Independents required aid, I gave a sum of money to the respected head of that body; and so on; but I kept no account of these sums. I always thought that if I were acting generously and kindly towards all, they would stick to me when I'd require their assistance.

6240. You gave donations to all the religious bodies in the town?—Yes, with one exception—the Roman Catholic. I chiefly gave my donations to the Protestant and Conservative bodies. The Roman Catholics didn't apply to me, though I was anxious to go among them, and make acquaintance with them, and to make friends with them. Some of my friends said, however, that if I extended any countenance in that way to the other side I would forfeit the favour of many of my most influential supporters.

6241. You have spoken of the expectations of voters with regard to getting money, can you tell me is it your present idea that they expected they should be paid by the winning side after the election?—I can't say that it was at all limited to the one side or the other. I think, as far as I recollect, that it was merely a rumour in the town. I had no opportunity of knowing whether there was any truth in it or not.

6242. Do you remember if a voter ever asked you for a loan of any money?—I have no recollection of any voter ever asking me for a loan of any kind.

6243. You know, I suppose, that the £850 of which you spoke was applied after the election in the payment of persons who had voted for you?—I infer that it was so applied.

6244. You know that no application for money was made to you after your last election?—I wasn't asked for money either before or after either of my elections. I believe that those among the Conservatives who expected money were very few indeed, if any.

6245. I have the registry of 1865 before me, could you tell me what was the majority you calculated on paper before the election that year?—My memory is that it was ten.

6246. I see that there are 388 voters on the list?—Remember I made my calculations from what I was told by others, and I took everything cum grano salis. I took those who professed to be Conservatives, and made my calculations from what I heard; but I limited my views by good sense, and I took my estimate rather under than over. I entertain no doubt whatever that, if those who abstained from voting had voted, the result would have been different.

6247. The Chief Commissioner.—Had you any information that any of the Conservatives who abstained from voting did so from mercenary motives, or because they were bribed not to vote?—I never heard that they were bribed.

6248. Had you any information that any of them abstained from voting in the hope that some of your friends would give them something?—As to whether they abstained from voting in the hope that they would get something from my friends, that's another matter.

6249. In how many cases do you suppose that was done?—They were very few—not more than four, I suppose. I don't exactly know how many cases of that kind there were.

6250. Do you know of any person who could give us information as to who these four were?—I do not, indeed.

6251. You heard that the number was about four?—I didn't hear it; it was only my own suspicion.

6252. Your suspicion; from what you saw going on?—Yes, from the hanging-back of voters, as you understand.

6253. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—You say you calculated on a majority of ten at your election of '65?—Yes.

6254. That in a constituency of 388 would give you about 200 votes?—Yes.

6255. How long before the close of the poll did you calculate on some of them holding back?—Not until I saw it with my own eyes.

6256. How long before the close of the poll had you a suspicion that they would hold back?—The day previous I had a suspicion that they would do so.

6257. What caused your suspicion?—A very respectable gentleman said to one of the voters who hesitated about voting, "Don't vote for Mr. Macdonogh. Didn't you vote for him before, and he didn't do anything for the borough. I think I'd advise him to retire and show the true cause."

6258. The Chief Commissioner.—Who was it said that?—Mr. Charles Sedley.

6259. And who was the voter to whom he expressed himself in that way?—Mr. Stokes.

6260. Mr. Stokes the saddler?—Yes.

6261. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Had Mr. Stokes pledged his vote to you?—He had voted for me on the former occasion. He was a Conservative, and he gave no reason for me to doubt that he would vote for me.

6262. I suppose you canvassed him in the usual way; you had been in his house?—I did. I was in the house that day. I took it for granted that the men who supported me before would do so again.

6263. The Chief Commissioner.—Did you infer from Stokes' manner that he wanted money for his wife?—Do you wish me to answer?

FIFTH DAY.
October 9.
Mr. Francis Macdonogh.

6264. I do?—My impression was certainly that. I hope I am doing that gentleman no injustice.

6265. It is part of the history of the election?—On that day I did not conclude my inference. I did on the next day.

6266. Did a word pass between you and Stokes on the subject of money?—Not a word; he never asked me for money—no voter ever did ask me for money.

6267. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—What circumstance was there that you remember, to increase that impression on your mind in reference to Stokes?—I again asked him to come up to vote, he said, "Lord Palmerston is my landlord, I will suffer if I do," I said, "You will not suffer." I said I had written to that noble lord, and that I had received a very kind answer from his lordship to the effect that he wouldn't force any of his tenants to vote, but that he couldn't ask them to vote for me. I had received information that his lordship's agents were interfering actively on behalf of the Liberal candidate, and I accordingly wrote to Lord Palmerston and received the kind answer I have mentioned. I showed Mr. Stokes that Lord Palmerston was a gentleman incapable of pressing his tenants in their votes. That apology was, however, put by, and Mr. Stokes stood at his door the greater portion of the day. He didn't leave the town, he was ready, he was there, but he didn't vote.

6268. The Chief Commissioner.—As an advertisement?—You reached the thing immediately.

6269. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—You canvassed both on the day before the poll and on the day of the poll other Conservatives who you had reason to suppose would support you, but who abstained from voting—could you give the names of any of those besides Mr. Stokes?—I canvassed Mr. John Lyons, and he resolutely said he wouldn't vote against me, but—though he supported me before—wouldn't come up to vote, that I should go to my other friends. I certainly was very unhappy. I spent an hour endeavouring to induce him and his wife to give me his vote.

6270. For whom did he vote subsequently?—I rather think he did vote for me afterwards, later in the day, but he held back in the earlier part of it. That is merely an illustration of how some professing Conservatives held back.

6271. The Chief Commissioner.—Were there any other electors you would place in the same category as Stokes?—There was a very poor man, a tenant of John Lyons's, as well as I can recollect.

6272. What was his name?—As I remember, it was Armstrong, he was a shoemaker.

6273. Of Ballytureen?—No. I am told by a gentleman in court that the name is Atkinson.

6274. John Atkinson, of John-street?—Yes, that's the person. He held back and wouldn't promise to vote for me.

6275. Did he subsequently vote for you?—I believed he voted against me, he certainly refused to vote for me.

6276. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—The impression on your mind was that he was holding back for money?—Yes, clearly.

6277. The Chief Commissioner.—What was his conduct when you canvassed him?—It was of that character that it led me to the impression that he wanted to be paid.

6278. Would you place anyone else in the same category with Stokes and Atkinson?—I think there was a person living in Knox-street, who kept a flour establishment.

6279. Did he vote for you at your first election?—Yes, he voted for me, at my first election. His name I understand is Blair.

6280. That is George Blair, of Knox-street?—Yes. He voted for me on my first election.

6281. Did he hang back on the second?—I am told he voted against me on that occasion.

6282. What did he say when you canvassed him?—He gave a plain intimation to me.

6283. He did not say, I suppose, "Give me £60"?—No, he said it was very troublesome to vote.

6284. Did you understand, not from any of these, for of course they wouldn't speak to a candidate on the subject, what was to be the figure?—I didn't. I always abstained from holding any conversation on the subject. I never was applied to by a voter for money. I have been applied to for charity.

6285. When you were applied to for charity before the election did you always give money?—No. I did not. When I was applied to to relieve cases of distress it was generally certified from authoritative sources that the person so applying was really in distress—whether a voter or not.

6286. Was there anyone else you would place in the same category with Stokes, Atkinson, and Blair?—I really think not. I can't bring to my memory another person.

6287. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Did any Liberal vote for you at the election of 1865?—I believe not. I won't undertake to say that positively, but I think not.

6288. The Chief Commissioner.—Have you any reason to believe, or can you give the Court any information, about any sum spent illegally at either of your elections, besides the sums you have mentioned?—Positively not.

6289. Had you any reason to believe that any other sums were so spent?—My belief was that there were not, as I wasn't applied to recoup anything. I was never applied to for money, and I presume that if any kind friend had expended any money for me he would certainly have applied for it to me.

6290. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—When you first went to the borough I suppose you went to consult some of the most influential voters?—Yes. I applied to the most respectable persons; and I applied to Mr. Kernaghan, of the respectable firm of solicitors—Messrs. Kernaghan and Saunders—at both of my elections. I should say Mr. Kernaghan was not at the last, it was his partner, Mr. Saunders. Then I had Mr. Harloe Phibbs as my conducting agent, and he pointed out to me the persons who should be employed in a subordinate capacity. I went to Captain Fawcett, and that respectable gentleman acted in accordance with the tenor of his life.

6291. Did you at any time hear from any of your supporters or friends that any money was expected by voters in the elections before your first—take for example, the election of 1859 or 1857?—I don't remember the names of the candidates at these elections—if I did I may be able to tell you.

6292. The Chief Commissioner.—In 1859 the Right Hon. John Wynne was the successful candidate, and in 1857 Mr. Somers beat Mr. Wynne, but he was unseated on petition.

6293. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—We will go to the election of 1859—did you hear that money was expended on votes at that election?—I never heard a word of the election of '59.

6294. Did you hear that money was expected by voters in the election for 1857?—I heard nothing of it.

6295. The Chief Commissioner.—That was the election at which it was alleged that the poll-books were tampered with?—I remember hearing of it.

6296. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—You heard nothing of the 1859 election?—That was malversation, I believe, of a different character.

6297. The Chief Commissioner.—Have you any reason to believe that there was on either side in the 1857 election any corrupt expenditure of money?—I am sure that there wasn't any on the part of Mr. Wynne.

6298. It has been stated that Mr. Wynne was determined not to spend much money at that election, and that Mr. Somers was not in a condition to spend it?—I have no reason to believe that Mr. Somers did so expend money; I know nothing about it.

6299. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Do you include your travelling expenses in the £8,000?—Certainly, my travelling expenses were very heavy. I used to post from town to town—at that time there were no railways as there are now—I used sleep at Longford and then post on, and I used to stop at Enniskillen and post on from that. I never refused to come down when I was asked—both in frost and snow; I never refused to go to London to present, when asked, petitions of no great consequence sometimes—so that my travelling expenses were enormous.

6300. You could not give us any approximation of the sums spent in public as separate from the sums expended in private charities?—I couldn't. If I did so I would be only guessing in the wildest possible manner.

6301. Had you an account at any of the banks in this town?—My bankers are the Bank of Ireland, and the branch bank here had some money of mine for some time, but I think it wasn't continued.

6302. The Chief Commissioner—But I suppose it would have honoured any cheque of yours here?—Certainly, it would.

6303. You held no separate account here?—Occasionally there were some small lodgements made by me.

6304. Was that at your first election?—Yes; but they were for my own personal expenses, and were entirely confined to that. I had an account in the Bank of Ireland for the new three per cent. stock.

6305. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—You didn't keep any separate cheque-book for Sligo?—Certainly not. All my cheque-books are accurate; every penny I expended I can authenticate.

6306. On an examination of your cheque-books, would not you be able to give any further information as regards how much of your expenditure was public, and how much was private?—Certainly not. Positively not.

A man stood up in the side box and said—"A Mr. Gethens has been mentioned as having given money to a person. I wish to say I never had any communication with that person at all."

Mr. Macdonogh.—I do not know this gentleman at all. I am told this gentleman's name is Edward Gethens. I am informed the name of the other is Williams.

The Chief Commissioner.—This gentleman can be examined if it is necessary. With respect to the evidence of Michael Rooney, the manager of the Ulster Bank produces now the original draft upon the Ulster Banking Company, Dublin, 12th of February, 1868—"Wanted, a draft on demand on the Ulster Bank for the sum of £12 in favour of Michael Rooney, Sligo. Thomas B. Hignell."

Mr. Sergeant Armstrong recalled and re-examined.

6307. The Chief Commissioner.—Yesterday you excluded from the expenditure of £2,200 the sums you mentioned for charity and as subscriptions as member for the borough. I ask you for convenience how much do you recollect you spent on the borough between 1865 and 1868, including public and private charity, subscriptions for races, regattas, and other popular sports, &c.?—Am I to include my expenses in London and travelling to London?

6308. I do not require that at all. I merely want how much money you spent on the borough—how much the people here got of your money, either in charity or in public subscriptions?—Well, I declare it must be very much a guess, but I think I can go near it. I would rather be under than over. I think not more than £250 probably.

6309. For the whole three years?—I think so; or say £300.

6310. Was that all you spent in addition to the £2,200 in consequence of your holding the position of member for Sligo?—Exclusive of the necessary expenses of going to London and coming back, I had very little travelling; I was not able to be away, nor to be here as often as I could wish, and when I did travel I went on Bianconi's car. I wish to say that one thing entirely escaped my recollection. My subscription to the registry, that is a matter that I should have included. It is only by seeing Mr. M'Kniffe, the association of ideas has brought it to my mind. Before I announced myself as a candidate here at all I felt my way a little. I found it necessary to have the registry attended to, and I requested Mr. M'Kniffe to have the matter attended to, and to his exertions I mainly owed my success, and I feel very grateful for it. He received from me, and never demanded more, and always appeared to be perfectly satisfied with the very small and insufficient remuneration of £30, or twenty guineas a year. It was a merely nominal thing, for he acted as a staunch friend.

6311. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Is that amount included in the sums you have mentioned, the £2,200 and the £300?—No, it would be exclusive, say £300, otherwise it would be exclusive. I paid altogether to him only £100 as my subscription to the registry. In fact I did not pay him for the last year; having got into bad health, I did not see him until I saw him here. That is all I ever gave him, and he never made a demand on me for more. I just gave him a cheque for that.

6312. Were there any other registry expenses, or if there were, were they included in that £2,200?—There were no other registry expenses. I never knew of any. I never heard of any Liberal club, or anything of that sort, but they were kind enough to attend to the matter for me for that merely nominal sum.

Mr. Henry Lyons sworn and examined.

6313. The Chief Commissioner.—Are you in business in Sligo?—Not now. I have been in business for thirty years and more.

6314. How long have you been living in Sligo?—About thirty-five years.

6315. Were you Mayor in 1860?—In 1859, I think, as well as I remember.

6316. Have you been Mayor more than once?—Yes, since then again.

6317. Did you get, as Mr. Macdonogh has stated, a sum of £850 from him?—Yes.

6318. Had you been his supporter?—Yes.

6319. Who proposed him?—I declare I do not know.

6320. You were neither proposer nor seconder?—No.

6321. You got from him the initials for the £850?—Yes, I think I did. I heard him say so. I think it is quite correct. I do not remember that I got it, but I think it is quite correct. I am sure it is.

6322. Why did you get from him his initials to the £850?—Well, he had no money, as he stated, coming to Sligo—he was not provided with money sufficient, and I was spoken to by a friend of mine, whom I may name, Mr. Monds.

6323. What is his Christian name?—Moses—Moses Monds. He said if I would draw on him for £800 and get it discounted I would largely assist in the return of Mr. Macdonogh, as it might be wanted, and he had brought no money. He was afraid to go to the Bank himself. He did not like to give a cheque lest it might be seen at election times for such a purpose, and might get abroad——

6324. For what purpose?—For the purpose of assisting the election.

6325. For what purpose?—I suppose for the purpose of preparing people for voting.

6326. Was it for the purpose of giving money to men to vote for him?—I think that was the ultimate object of it, not at that time.

6327. When you say you "think" that was the ultimate object, have you any doubt of it?—Well, I have not a doubt of it.

6328. Why do not you say so?—Well, I do say so. I think so.

6329. Did you and Mr. Monds draw the bill?—Yes. He gave me his acceptance and I put it into the bank.

6330. You were the drawer and Moses Monds the acceptor?—Yes. These are the facts of the case.

6331. Into what Bank did you put the bill?—Into the Bank of Ireland.

6332. Of course you got the money less the usual discount?—I do not know what the discount was. The money was given out. I did not myself use a penny of the money.

6333. You went to the bank?—Yes.

6334. And got the money from the bank?—I did. I don't know whether I got that sum or gave a cheque to Mr. Monds.

6335. Did you not bring the bill to the bank to get it cashed?—Certainly.

6336. Did you not then get the whole money from the Bank of Ireland?—No, they put it to my credit. I had a current account always in the bank.

6337. And they placed that bill to your credit?—Exactly.

6338. To whom did you give that money?—Well, I gave it to three or four parties in town.

6339. Have those three or four parties any names?—Mr. Monds was one ——

6340. How much did he get?—I cannot tell—perhaps £180 or £200, or £250. I do not know exactly what it was.

6341. Who was the next man you gave money to?—Well, I think I gave some to Mr. Charles Sedley.

6342. When you say you think, have you any doubt on the subject?—No.

6343. Then don't use the word "think." You gave some to Charles Sedley?—Yes.

6344. Who else?—A brother of my own, who is dead; and I do not know myself personally how it went, but I think I sent some to Mr. Thomas Williams; I don't know; I think I did. There was a confidential person. That is my explanation of the matter.

6345. A confidential person?—Yes; I am just telling you the truth——

6346. What day was it you drew the bill?—I do not know what day it was.

6347. I mean with respect to the polling. Was it before the polling day?—Oh, I think it was; I am sure it was; I would not be sure, but I think it was.

6348. How long before the polling?—Really I don't know. It might be a month, or it might be more, or it might be less; I really don't know.

6349. Will your account at the Bank of Ireland show how you chequed off that money?—Well, I really don't know; I know the book will show the amount to my credit at a certain date, and any drafts perhaps; but I don't know, for my drafts were numerous in the way of business transactions, and I made no separate account of it.

6350. But could you not now perfectly identify the £850 as it went through the books of the bank?—Well, I don't think I could myself.

6351. There were only four persons to whom it was paid?—Yes, it was paid amongst the four persons.

6352. Could you not, by looking at the cheques and the dates in the bank book, identify every shilling of that money?—Well, I really don't know whether I could or not.

6353. You will try to do so?—I will do everything I can and that you wish me to do in the matter to give you information.

6354. Have you any list of the persons to whom the money was distributed?—Oh, no; I knew no more of it personally than to give it to those parties.

6355. Did you tell Mr. Macdonogh afterwards that you had raised this money for him?—Oh, I think I did; I think he must have known it. I don't know whether he did or not. I don't know if I told him; I cannot charge my memory, but I think he must have known it.

6356. Now, did you not know this money was to be spent in bribery—that is a short question?—I did not expect anything else.

6357. Had you any consultation with Mr. Monds as to how much money it was necessary to raise to carry the election?—No, I do not think I had. It was mentioned to me £800, to draw for.

6358. Who told you to draw the bill?—I think Mr. Monds suggested to get a bill; that Mr. Macdonogh did not bring cash, and was afraid to cheque on the bank for money or send to Dublin; that it might be found out, or something of that kind. I think that was the way.

6359. Do you mean to say that Mr. Monds told you Mr. Macdonogh had said that to him?—I don't know whether he did or not.

6360. Repeat your answer—about being found out?—Well, I think Mr. Macdonogh said to myself that he had no money with him—and that he would not like to cheque on the bank here; and that he would have to go to Dublin for it to get it out—he said that I think to myself.

6361. Did you tell Mr. Macdonogh or intimate to him what the money was for?—Did I tell him—well, I declare I don't know what I told him. I don't know whether I told him or not.

6362. Did you know yourself what the money was for?—I had no doubt of that—I said so before.

6363. Did you intimate to Mr. Macdonogh for what you got the money?—I do not mind that at all—only that the money was wanted.

6364. Did you ask Mr. Macdonogh for the £800?—No. I never asked it. Mr. Monds I believe asked him.

6365. He asked him for £800?—I don't know whether he did or not, I believe he did; but it was mentioned that that amount was wanted, and accordingly I drew.

6366. Did you tell Mr. Macdonogh you were going to raise money?—I don't know whether I told him I was going to raise money or not—perhaps I did, but I could not charge my memory with it.

6367. Why did you get from him his initials?—I got his initials merely as an acknowledgement that the money was given him—that the money was getting for him—that is the real fact.

6368. Was there any Committee then?—No, not that I knew of.

6369. Did Mr. Monds ever show you any list of voters?—Not that I remember.

6370. Had you then calculated with others how much money was required to carry the election?—No. I don't think he ever entered into such a calculation.

6371. How was the £850 fixed on—was it mere chance?—So far as I was concerned that sum was mentioned to me as likely to be wanted, and I drew a bill for that, and cashed it, and that is all I know about it.

6372. How many months was the bill to run?—Three months.

6373. When it came to maturity was it renewed?—I do not know whether it was renewed or not.

6374. I suppose the books of the bank will show?—I really don't know. I don't know whether it was renewed or not. Perhaps it was renewed. I cannot charge my memory—I suppose it will be seen in the bank book.

6375. Do you remember getting the money afterwards from Mr. Macdonogh?—Perfectly well.

6376. How long after the election?—In February or March—in the spring of the year, some time after the meeting of Parliament.

6377. Were you aware of any law about twenty-one days after the meeting of Parliament?—No, I am not.

6378. Did you ever hear of it?—I don't know.

6379. Did you ever hear there was a time within which to present a petition?—Yes, I heard that.

6380. You are old at electioneering—what is the time now?—I really am not sure—fourteen or twenty-one days—but I could not tell at the present moment.

6381. You could not tell?—I could not tell, but Mr. Macdonogh must know very well, and I suppose he would not give me the money until after that time would be up.

6382. Was not that your idea in going up after the meeting of Parliament?—I went up, as I said to get it, that is the fact.

6383. Was not that your idea in not getting the money until after the twenty-one days?—I supposed I would not get it. I did not know it required twenty-one days, but I knew it required some time after the meeting of Parliament.

6384. You went up to Mr. Macdonogh?—Yes.

6385. What did you say to Mr. Macdonogh?—Oh, I did not say a word. I believe he knew what I came for. I was sitting in the room and he came in, in a few minutes and paid me the money.

6386. Was it paid in notes to you?—It was.

6387. Not by cheque or draft?—No.

6388. Large notes?—Large notes.

6389. Hundred pound notes?—Yes, hundred-pound and a fifty.

6390. The bill was only for £800?—Eight hundred.

6391. What was the odd fifty for?—Well, contingencies I suppose. I don't know—perhaps it was for interest, and there were some other things to be paid afterwards, £25 and £10, and other matters. I believe I lost the interest by the transaction.

6392. You believe you lost by it?—I believe I did.

6393. People generally do lose by these transactions. You lost money?—Well, I did not make money. I never did by politics. I lost hundreds beside that.

6394. Are you under the impression you did not get the whole of the expenditure?—I do not think I did.

6395. Within how much?—I do not know.

6396. Within £10 or £20?—I never went into particulars about it.

6397. At the time you got the £850 had you any money to pay?—Well, I do not think there was. I paid no money.

6398. What did you do with the £850?—I put it to my credit, where it was before I gave it to him.

6399. Then in all probability the bank book will show that the bill was put to your debit when it reached maturity?—I think it would be put to my debit—it is the usual course.

6400. Do you mean to say you cannot give the Commissioners any information as to what voters of Mr. Macdonogh's got this money?—Well, I can assure you on my oath that I never, I think, called on a voter or asked him during the time of the election to vote or not to vote for Mr. Macdonogh, to the best of my knowledge.

6401. That is not an answer—you are an intelligent man?—Well, I do not know personally.

6402. Personally will not do. Who did you hear got the money?—Oh, I heard a report of several.

6403. Who was reported to have got the £850?—Indeed I do not know who got the £850.

6404. I do not ask you who you know. You did not see it paid to the voters?—Certainly not.

6405. Who did you hear got it?—Some of them are dead—it is some time ago.

6406. First remember the living?—Several of our supporters. There was one man I heard got it and he was not satisfied. That is what I heard passing. I heard that people were not satisfied, and were making a shout about it.

6407. Who were the unsatisfied men?—One man I heard was James Wallace, of Knox-street; another was James Johnston, of High-street.

6408. How much did he get?—I do not know; but I knew afterwards what he got to quiet him. He got my poor brother to take a bill from him for £25 to keep him from giving any annoyance, and when the bill was not lifted, he lifted it, and turned round on me to ask me to pay it. That is the way part of the £50 went. There was £25; I paid it.

6409. You paid the £25, and he got the £25 bill?—I have the bill by me still. I have his acceptance by me still.

6410. I will ask you to produce it?—I will give it to you. I think I have the old bill still, if I am not mistaken.

6411. Then James Johnston got £50 altogether?—I do not know what he got. He got that £25. I paid it to quiet him. I did not want Mr. Macdonogh to pay that then. I thought he had paid quite enough, and should not be annoyed.

6412. Are you that £25 out of pocket?—I am certainly—and more than that.

6413. That £25 was paid to the man only to quiet him?—Yes.

6414. And you have never been repaid it?—I never got a penny of it from Mr. Macdonogh, or from any other person. Nor did I ever ask Mr. Macdonogh for it.

6415. Did James Johnston get anything before the polling day?—Oh, I do not know when he got it, or what time he got it.

6416. Did you hear that half notes were going then?—No, I did not.

6417. How much did James Wallace get?—I do not know myself.

6418. Who paid him?—I think it was Mr. Monds—that is what I heard. I, being a friend, I heard it in that way. I heard he was dissatisfied, and that Mr. Monds paid him very well, as far as I understood.

6419. Do you know George Blair?—I know there is such a man.

6420. Did you hear he was paid?—I do not think I did.

6421. Do you know John Burke?—I do.

6422. Do you know whether he was paid?—I do not know anything about it.

6423. Did Samuel Gilmor get money?—I think I heard his name mentioned.

6424. When you say you think are you not perfectly certain?—Well, as far as my memory goes, but I could not swear.

6425. I do not want you to swear to precise sums paid, but I want any information you can give from what your brother or anybody else told you, as to voters being bribed?—Well, I could hardly swear that I heard Samuel Gilmor's name. I might have heard it, but I cannot swear.

6426. Thomas Graham?—I think I heard his name mentioned.

6427. For how much?—I do not know, nor who paid him.

6428. Alexander Jackson?—I think I heard his name mentioned, but I do not know what he got or who paid him.

6429. James Kerr?—I think his name was mentioned as one of the lot.

6430. Henry Mulligan?—Yes. I think I heard him mentioned.

6431. How much did he get?—Well, I believe, as far as I was concerned he got £10 out of the bank. It was Rowlett who paid this business for me. He takes up rents for me. He had a house from Mr. Wynne, and I think Rowlett got £10 from me to pay his rent—to pay Henry Mulligan's rent.

6432. When did you give Rowlett the £10?—It was perhaps a year after. I don't know how long after.

6433. A year after?—I don't know what time it was. He came to settle rent. He takes up rent for me, and I do not know whether I gave him the money or he stopped ten pounds from me.

6434. Is Rowlett still in your employment?—He is. If he is summoned here he will tell you exactly.

6435. Did you give him any other money?—Yes, I think I did; two or three tenants which I had forgotten altogether until Mr. Rowlett brought it to my memory. I believe it when he says it, but I did not remember it good or bad. He said he gave it to three of Mr. Wynne's tenants.

Fifth Day.

6436. Who are the three?—Henry Mulligan was one, and M'Donnell.

6437. Did he get £10 too?—Yes, Rowlett told me so. I had really forgotten it. I did not know what the three ten pounds were given for at the time. I did not know whether it was for municipal purposes it was given or for any other purpose. I did not really know, nor can I positively say for what purpose, whether it was for the borough election or for the municipal election.

6438. Did any other moneys pass through your hands in a similar way to this at Mr. Macdonogh's election in 1860?—No, not that I know.

6439. Did you ever give any money to voters yourself?—I think not.

6440. You think not?—I don't believe I did.

6441. The four gentlemen you named, to whom you distributed money, were all electors?—Yes, they were.

6442. Did you not give all this money before the polling day?—Oh, I think so.

6443. Are you certain you did so?—As far as my memory can bring me back I believe I did.

6444. As far as your memory and intelligence can go you did?—My intelligence is not getting brighter. I am getting older, and I find my memory is not as good as it was twenty years ago.

6445. You gave the money, as far as you can remember, before the polling day?—I did, decidedly.

6446. How long before the polling day?—I do not know. It might be three or four days, or a week. I cannot tell.

6447. At all events it was during the excitement of the election before the polling came on?—Yes, I think so.

6448. Do you know the constituency well?—Well, middling, perhaps. I never went much through them. I don't believe even in that election I went to the tenants to whom I let my houses to ask for a vote. I knew them by observation and that sort of thing.

6449. Did you understand that the £800 you raised in this way was to be given to the Conservatives who were hanging back, or to the Liberal party who otherwise would be disposed to vote for Somers or Tennison?—I do not recollect what it was given for. It was to be used at the discretion of the parties, in my opinion.

6450. You mentioned nine names, did they not always belong to the Conservative party?—I thought Blair acted with the Liberal party.

6451. With that exception?—I think so.

6452. Henry Mulligan?—He always voted with the Conservative party, although he was a Roman Catholic. Mr. Wynne was his landlord, and he always voted with him.

6453. Did you distribute any money at the election between Mr. Macdonogh and Sergeant Armstrong?—No, I think not.

6454. You think not?—Yes, there was one sum—no, it was afterwards.

6455. Afterwards?—Yes, one sum.

6456. How much?—Well, it was a large one for one man to get; it was £40.

6457. Who got that?—Wallace.

6458. James Wallace?—The very same man. That was the only money I distributed during that election—James Wallace £40. He got that certainly.

6459. Was that rather a high figure for him?—He said he was getting it from the others, and it was no use——

6460. When did you give James Wallace the £40?—Some time afterwards. I gave it from my own money out of my own desk.

6461. How long after the election?—I do not know whether a week or ten days; it was shortly after.

6462. Had you canvassed Wallace?—Well, I did call on him.

6463. I thought you said you did not take an active part?—That is not the last election.

6464. I beg your pardon. Were you canvassing then for Mr. Macdonogh against Sergeant Armstrong?—Well, of course I did canvass at that time.

6465. Did you promise Wallace anything before he voted?—No.

6466. Did you tell him to go and vote?—He said he would go and vote, provided I advised him.

6467. Did you "advise" him?—Yes.

6468. Did Wallace say he would go and vote if you advised him?—He said he would vote with me.

6469. Did you then say go and vote?—No, I think he came with me.

6470. You polled him?—He walked up; I did not poll him.

6471. Did you walk along with him to the court-house?—He walked along the side path; I was not walking with him exactly.

6472. Did you not watch him until he was polled?—No.

6473. Or enter the court-house?—No, I did not doubt him at all.

6474. Did he vote on your recommendation and advice?—I think he did.

6475. When you say you "think" you are perfectly certain he did?—I can say I believe so.

6476. Is that all you can say—are you not perfectly certain he voted on your advice?—I think he did.

6477. You are a respectable and intelligent man. Do you not believe that James Wallace expected to be paid when he voted on your advice?—I have no doubt in the world of it; I don't want to conceal anything.

6478. You thought he was entitled to £40?—Well, I gave it to him out of my own desk, and I did not get it back again.

6479. At all?—No.

6480. Do you mean to say you are out of pocket that £40?—No.

6481. Who then paid it to you?—I am out of pocket £10 of it; I only got £30 of it.

6482. Who gave you the £30?—Well, it was given after the election; I think it was Mr. Sedley. At the time Mr. Sedley gave me the £30 I told him I had given Wallace £40. He said that was too much, and gave me £30 out of £40, and I never got the £10 from Wallace or anybody else.

6483. Did Mr. Sedley give you any other money after that election?—No, not a shilling.

6484. I mean for other people?—No; he gave me no money.

6485. Do you not know that James Wallace was bribed at that election by you?—Well, I think he was myself.

6486. Did Wallace get any money at the previous election?—I don't know about the previous election.

6487. Do you remember the election between Mr. Wynne and Mr. Somers in 1859?—Mr. Macdonogh got in in '60 on the resignation of Mr. Wynne; the election of '59 was between Mr. Wynne and Mr. Somers.

6488. Do you remember the election between Wynne and Somers?—Yes, I do.

6489. Do you know of any money going at that election?—No, I do not think I do. I do not remember.

6490. You do not remember?—No, I do not.

6491. From a man of your intelligence that is not quite satisfactory?—I say I do not remember.

6492. Have you any reason to believe a little money was going then?—Well I don't know. It did not pass through my hands, as far as I remember. There was an election between Mr. Wynne and Mr. Somers in '57 and Mr. Somers beat Mr. Wynne, but was unseated on petition on account of the poll-books being tampered with.

6493. Do you remember that?—I do.

6494. Well, at the election between Somers and Wynne did you hear of any money going?—No, I do not think I did. I am not aware of it.

6495. You do not remember?—I am not aware that there was.

6496. Will you undertake to say that at that election between Wynne and Somers, or after it, that no money passed through your hands?—I don't think there did. I cannot tell at which election Mulligan got the ten pounds at all. I did not remember anything of it until I was reminded of it.

6497. Did you ever draw a bill before this one for the purpose of an election?—Oh, never.

6498. Who was it asked you to draw that bill?—Well, I think it was Mr. Monds suggested it to me.

6499. Did Rowlett get any of the £800? Was he intrusted with the giving out of any of it?—No, he had nothing to do with it.

6500. Come now to the last election between Major Knox and Captain Flanagan; did you pay anything in that election?—No.

6501. Did you canvass?—No, I did not canvass.

6502. Did you vote?—I voted.

6503. I believe you always vote with the Conservative party?—Oh, of course.

6504. Did any money pass through your hands at that election?—No, not a shilling; I never handled a shilling of Major Knox's money.

6505. Do you suppose it was unknown in town, this last transaction of 1860?—Was it unknown in town?

6506. Yes; I mean was it kept quiet between you and the four gentlemen who got the money?—Well, I think it was kept quiet. I think the people that got the money were satisfied, and I do not think there was any talk of it. I think it was kept very quiet, as well as I remember. I am quite sure it was.

6507. Is it your impression from the best of your recollection that Mr. Macdonogh knew about your having drawn the bill?—Well, I really could not say whether he was aware or whether he was not aware. I could not say either one way or the other.

6508. Is Mr. Monds in town?—He is.

6509. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—When was the £30 paid to you by Mr. Sedley on foot of the £40 you paid to Wallace?—It was paid after the election.

6510. How long after?—I do not remember how long.

6511. What year was it in?—I think it was in 1860. Oh, no, 1865.

6512. Was that £40 given to James Wallace in respect of his vote in 1865?—Yes.

6513. How long after that election of 1865 was that £30 given to you by Mr. Sedley? Try and remember?—It might be two or three months. I do not know how long it was. I know I gave the money to him out of my own desk.

6514. Was it given to you within the last couple of years?—Oh, yes. Oh, no.

6515. Are you quite sure it was not?—I think it was not.

6516. You think not, but you are not quite sure?—I am sure it was not within the last couple of years.

6517. On your oath are you quite sure of that?—Of course I am. I am telling you the truth. Most assuredly, every word of it.

6518. Were you mayor at the election of 1860?—Yes, I think so.

6519. Were you a magistrate at that time?—Yes.

6520. Are you now?—Yes, for the borough, and county then; but I am not now for the town. I am a magistrate for the county now.

6521. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Do you know a man named Moran?—I know such a man.

6522. Is he a voter?—I believe he is a voter.

6523. I believe he voted for Sergeant Armstrong?—I believe so.

6524. Had you ever any conversation with him with respect to his vote?—No.

6525. Before that election?—No.

6526. You swear that positively?—Indeed I do. I heard he swore here yesterday of his being offered £300 in half-notes and refusing it. I never spoke of such a thing in my life.

6527. Did you never offer £300 to Moran?—Never. Not a shilling, nor hinted it. I never spoke to him about his vote. He belonged to a body of religious people that I really do not interfere with at all; nor was there any necessity for such a thing.

6528. Then it is an untruth that you offered any money to any of those who are called "the aggrieved persons"?—Not one shilling; nor did I speak to them about their votes.

6529. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—This payment of £800, you think, was kept quiet because it reached very few persons?—Well, I think it was.

6530. Because it reached very few persons?—I think so.

6531. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Did you ever hear any persons complain after the election of 1860 that they had got no money?—That Johnston is the only one I can charge my memory with now. I think the people were satisfied certainly, and I am satisfied none of the parties made any money for themselves.

6532. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Your brother, John Lyons, held back at the last election. Did he vote for Sergeant Armstrong?—No, he did not. The poor man was in a dying state at the time. That was one of the reasons he did not vote.

6533. He did not vote for Mr. Macdonogh?—Oh, he did. He came up. He was, in fact, I may say, carried. He was in a very poor—a dying—state; and it was really at the risk of his life.

6534. But he did come up and vote for Mr. Macdonogh?—Certainly.

6535. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Have you any belief of the number of persons who got money at the election of 1860?—I never made a calculation; never in my life.

6536. Do you think you could form an idea? You may take plenty of time?—I suppose there might be twenty. From twenty-five to thirty who would expect it. I would not say so many as thirty, but I think there would be twenty.

6537. Did I understand you to say that Rowlett got part of the £850?—No.

6538. I am not speaking of himself, but for distribution?—No; I did not know he got anything, but he told me himself, as I said before I had totally forgotten the transaction, and it is on his representation I am taking it. I believe it, because he says it.

6539. How much?—He says he got three ten-pound notes.

6540. That £30 is not included in the £850?—It came out of the £50 I think.

6541. You think it came out of the £50?—I think it must.

6542. You lost £25 to Johnston, and £10 to Wallace?—Decidedly.

6543. Did you lose anything more?—I do not think I did. I never calculated it. I did not look to it. I was rather too liberal, and I did not care much what the expense was one way or the other.

6544. But people who lose a large sum generally know it. If you lost a thousand, or five hundred, or even one hundred you would know it?—I suppose I would, but if I lost only a few pounds I would not know.

6545. At what time of the day did Wallace get this £40?—I think he got it early in the day. I think ten or eleven o'clock.

6546. Did Wallace mention any person as having offered him money on the other side?—No; he said he was offered money on the other side, but I did not ask him who they were or anything of them. But he said he was offered money.

6547. Did he say he was offered £40?—He did.

6548. Was that the sum mentioned?—It was—the exact sum mentioned.

6549. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Do I understand you to say that you cashed that £800 bill at the time of the election?—Oh, yes. I put it into the bank at once—but they did not give me the money; they placed it to my credit only.

6550. That amount passed to your credit in the bank?—Exactly.

FIFTH DAY. October 9. Mr. Henry Lyons.

6551. And was mixed up with your other money?—It was mixed up with my account—exactly.

6552. Was it after the bill fell due you distributed the money?—Oh, no. In fact it was believed that Tennison's money was going through the town a day or two before that to a considerable amount of money. It was understood money was going on Tennison's side. I had good reason to believe it was, and then of course to meet that state of the case the money was looked for to fortify the friends against any loss, and I do not think they gave the money until after the election.

6553. As much of the money as was thought necessary was used at the time?—It was all used as far as I know. It was given to these parties. I do not know what time it was used.

6554. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Do you know a man named John Kearns?—No.

6555. And a man named Pat Barry?—I do.

6556. Did you send for them before the last election?—Never, at any time.

6557. Did they send to you?—They came to my house one evening about dark—after dark. I was coming down from the town. I have an office in town. I was coming down—these men were at my place—my private house, outside the hall door. I did not know anything about them. I was asked about this before at Carrick-on-Shannon, and I stated the facts. They came to me; I opened the hall-door, and asked them in—I took Barry in—and Kearns I showed into my sitting-room. Barry I knew something of. He keeps boats at the River-side. I knew something of him, and I asked him ——

6558. What I want to ask you is—did you then offer Barry or Kearns £50 each to go away?—I never offered them a shilling at all. They wanted to get money. They came to propose to go away, if they would get money.

6559. Did they mention £50?—They did, and their expenses, and they said they would go away.

6560. And did you at that time not give them a decided answer?—I told them I would not think of it. I went away from my house—I left it. They wanted to come back the next morning. They wanted money. They wanted to come back to me; I told them they might come if they liked, but I would have nothing to do with them.

6561. But you did not give them that answer at first?—Yes, I told them I would give no money; decidedly, I never offered them a farthing.

6562. Did you tell them on the first occasion you would not give a farthing?—I told them I would give no money.

6563. On the first occasion?—Yes, that was the first. He wanted to get the money. I said to him, "will you not take anybody's word?" "No," said he, "I will take nobody's word, if I did, I would take your own." "I am very much obliged to you," I said, "but I do not want you to take mine."

6564. Did you tell him to come back the next evening after that proposition was made?—[Not answered.]

6565. Now, Mr. Lyons, answer fairly?—I will answer fairly.

6566. Was there not a negotiation?—Oh, that was the negotiation, mere talk.

6567. But was the negotiation whether you would promise money or not?—I would not promise money, I had a conversation with them, but nothing beyond that. If a penny would purchase them I would not give it.

6568. Did you intend and determine from the first not to give money?—I did determine to give no money. I thought I would see what they were about; what they wanted and what they intended to do, which they told me.

6569. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—You say this sum of money, the amount of the bill, was distributed at the time of the election?—I do not say the time.

6570. Well about the time of the election?—As far as I was concerned I do not know what time it was distributed.

6571. As far as your knowledge goes all you can say is, that it went amongst those four persons?—That is all I know of it.

6572. Whether it was paid away that time or some months after you do not know?—I do not know, indeed.

6573. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Have you, from your knowledge of the electors of this town, any reason to believe, or do you in fact believe that, at the time of the last election, the persons who voted for Major Knox ultimately expected to get anything?—Oh, I think they would expect to get something. I confess to you, I think, when they do vote that way, and are asked by friends to vote, and so forth, that they do expect something afterwards. There is no engagement to give it—no positive arrangement; but that they do expect something, I have no hesitation in saying, I believe they do—afterwards.

6574. And is that an expectation amongst a large number of voters?—Well, I would not say a very large number—it might be an expectation amongst forty or fifty of the whole constituency.

6575. That is forty or fifty of the Conservatives?—Oh, no; I do not make any difference between Conservatives and Liberals in the matter. I believe a great many do expect it on both sides.

6576. The Chief Commissioner.—On both sides?—I do believe it.

6577. And you say that from your own knowledge?—I do.

6578. From a great number of years that you have been connected with Sligo?—I do.

6579. And also from personal communication with the voters, and their speaking to you on the subject?—I do believe it.

6580. You apply that to almost any election you know?—Well, I do.

6581. Were you a voter at Townley's election?—Yes; I believe I was.

6582. And at Sadlier's election?—Yes; I think I voted for Somers against Sadlier——

6583. At that time?—Yes.

6584. Whom did you vote for at Townley's election?—In fact, I think I voted for Somers, too.

6585. You spoke about this general expectation—I presume that is amongst the poorer and least respectable class of the electors?—More than anyone else.

6586. Do parties prepare lists according to the amounts for which they asked the electors to vote?—No; I do not think they do.

6587. How is it done?—I think they give it indiscriminately, just as they themselves feel disposed to the men, giving some more and some less. I do not think they make any special list or anything of that kind; I think it is done more indiscriminately or without any method.

6588. Do you tell us that you never, except on the one occasion, had anything to do with the distribution of money at elections?—I do not remember that I had; I do not think it did enter my hands to distribute it, never.

6589. So you say. I want to know had you anything to say, before or after elections, to the receiving of money for distribution, unless on the one occasion?—I never remember receiving money for any election. I have subscribed sums to the municipal elections, and other sums were subscribed. I have subscribed some of the money to the fund myself, of course. We have had very hard contests often in Sligo, and party feeling is very high, and so forth; but we certainly did not attach the same importance to them as to the others, and we did not conceive there was any risk at all in giving money in that way.

6590. Had you any subscribing to the funds for the municipal elections?—Not many, except at the time—four or five might subscribe four or five pounds.

6591. Would that be for the purpose of bribing voters?—We did not consider it bribing. We really believed there was no law against that.

6592. No law against bribing at municipal elections in Sligo?—We did not believe there was any harm in getting a vote—we did not know, nor do I believe it is known up to the present moment in Sligo that there is anything against it.

6593. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Was the money given for the municipal elections at all in relation to the parliamentary elections?—No, not at all. It was solely a local matter.

6594. The Chief Commissioner.—Were the voters you supposed to be easily got at for the parliamentary elections the same men who were bribed at the municipal elections?—Not in every case. Not all.

6595. But a good number of them?—There might be. We never thought of that. I do not think we ever thought of what effect it might have on them in that way. It was solely on the ground of returning men to the Town Council and so forth.

6596. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Do you remember the names of persons who received money at the municipal elections?—[Not answered.]

[Parliamentary voters list for 1868 handed to Witness.]

6597. The Chief Commissioner.—Look over that list and tell me are there any names on it of persons who received money at the municipal elections?—Well, I do not know that any received it to my knowledge, personally; but I may see people that I believe got money. I heard Blair got it.

6598. How much?—I don't know. I do not know whether Wallace got it or not. I don't think there is anyone on the list that strikes me now.

6599. Come back to your own memory. Can you mention any people who were in the habit of being bribed at the municipal elections?—I could not say in the habit of being bribed.

6600. Well, bribed once or twice?—Well, indeed, I cannot charge my memory at present. There are so many changes in the town, and there is little done in that way for the last two years—nothing at all for the last two years.

6601. Nothing at all?—Nothing at all for the last two or three years.

6602. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Try and remember the names?—I cannot.

6603. The Chief Commissioner.—You subscribe?—Occasionally I do. Some fifteen years ago, perhaps, I did each year.

6604. Did you subscribe several hundreds of pounds yourself?—No, no, but I lost plenty. In the Queen's Bench and other ways I lost it.

6605. Who used to get the money to be given at the municipal elections?—Well, I declare I could not tell you just at this moment.

6606. Was it Captain Fawcett?—No, I do not think it was.

6607. Or Mr. Robinson?—Oh, no. Captain Fawcett was treasurer. He signed cheques for revision purposes and other purposes. The money he would get would be for revision purposes and that sort of thing.

6608. Was there any money subscribed to your knowledge for a parliamentary election?—Yes, I think money was subscribed to put in Mr. Wynne free of cost to himself, the first time he was put in.

6609. Was that the election of 1857 or 1859—his first election?—I do not know the year, but I know they subscribed to put him in free. That was the time Somers was unseated.

6610. That was a remarkable event, the unseating of Somers?—I heard it was the first time Mr. Wynne was put in. I suppose Somers was unseated.

6611. And then a vacancy was made?—Yes, I think it was that time.

6612. Can you give any idea of the amount that was subscribed by the party then?—I know I myself subscribed £10. I could not tell.

6613. Do you think there is anybody in town who could?—I do not know that.

6614. Do you recollect who was Mr. Wynne's agent on that occasion?—I think it was Mr. Thomas Moyston.

6615. You have told us very fairly what is your general opinion about the town with respect to people expecting money, and you said that every election you had known that was so. Was that so at the two elections when Mr. Wynne was a candidate?—Well, I do not know.

6616. I am not speaking as to your knowledge?—Well, if I said "every election," perhaps I should have exampled that one. I do not know—I do not think—I could not say, but I do not think any money was given at that election. I do not think it was to be given.

6617. Did you take an interest in those two elections?—Well, I was active and anxious for the return of Mr. Wynne.

6618. But you will not say that there was not an "expectation" at that time?—Well, indeed I don't know. I could not say. It was a peculiar election.

6619. Do you recollect a conversation just immediately before the polling day of Mr. Macdonogh and Sergeant Armstrong's election, at which I believe Mr. Williams, Mr. Sedley, Mr. Hunter, Mr. Macdonogh, and yourself were present—it was the night before the polling?—Yes. I think so.

6620. Be kind enough to tell what took place at that conversation, as well as you recollect. Mr. Macdonogh told us about the holding back of Conservative electors whom he expected to vote?—Oh, I could not really say—there certainly was a great deal of disaffection amongst a number of Mr. Macdonogh's supporters. They had given him the cold shoulder—they would not come forward to support him. I knew he was very much cut up about it, certainly, and very much disappointed in the matter. There were a good many who did not take an interest in his second election.

6621. As one having an interest in Mr. Macdonogh's election, you were acquainted with those persons?—Well, not particularly; some I would not interfere with.

6622. But you would with some?—Some of the men I would not speak to on the subject. I would not take that liberty.

6623. But did you speak to some?—Well, I don't know indeed.

6624. Try and recollect?—Well, I could not say.

6625. What was the number of those persons who were holding back and compromising the election?—I could not say how many. Maybe six or ten, but I could not say, for I never had the particulars of it.

6626. Try and recollect; Mr. Macdonogh told us he calculated upon a majority of ten, that is, he thought there would be to support him 200, and these were all Conservative electors. We know about 150 voted for him?—Yes.

6627. Do you think that the balance, that is fifty Conservative electors were holding back?—Oh, no. I don't know indeed.

6628. Do you think the Conservative electors who held back were mainly influenced by the wish to get a promise of money?—I do not know that indeed.

6629. Can you form an opinion?—Well, I could not. I think they were advised on the other side—merely that.

6630. That is to say you think they were bribed on the other side?—I do not mean to say—I could not say, whether they were or not. I offer no opinion as to what they did on the other side. I think I should not do it, but I think they were perhaps promised or advised in some way or other to Sergeant Armstrong.

6631. Did you ever hear that they were?—I heard of several persons supposed to be Conservatives supporting Sergeant Armstrong.

6632. Did any of them ever tell you that they had got money, or had been promised money, or expected to get money?—Well I could not say. I don't think I could say so.

FIFTH DAY.
October 9.
Mr. Henry Lyons.

6633. Try?—There may be some that might expect it, I would suppose. I have no doubt whatever some expected money.

6634. Mr Commissioner Byrne.—About the time Mr. Macdonogh came down to canvass for his second election, did you hear any expressions of dissatisfaction amongst his Conservative supporters at not getting money?—No, I did not 6635. Did you hear any of the Conservative voters complain that they were not paid?—No, not that I heard. Nothing but what I told you. I mentioned that Johnston and Wallace were dissatisfied. I know that Johnston kicked up a shine about it.

6636. The Chief Commissioner—Have you still your bank-book of 1860—the pass-book between you and the bank?—I do not think I have, but I will get it for you.

6637. If you have not got it I will ask you to get, from the Bank of Ireland, a copy of your account, showing the lodgment of the £800, and the cheques that you drew on that sum?—It will show the cheques.

6638. You will be able to identify them?—I never looked at them from that to this. I will do it with pleasure.

(The witness withdrew.)

Charles Sedley.

Charles Sedley sworn and examined.

6639. The Chief Commissioner.—At the last election between Sergeant Armstrong and Mr Macdonogh you got £490?—I thought it was less. Mr. Sheckelton produced a roll of notes. He said there were £500, and a sum of money was taken out of it in Leeche's drawing-room. I understood that sum to be £15, but of course if Mr Sheckelton says it was £490 it is correct. I understood that £15 were taken out of it. He stated that he wanted that £15 to repay some other person whose name I now forget.

6640. Before you got that sum of money had you a discussion with any of Mr. Macdonogh's supporters as to the necessity of spending money in bribery?—I came down to Sligo only a few days before the polling, and on the day previous to the polling I left Sligo on my own private business. I remained out of Sligo near Ballysodare for a couple of hours. On my return I was told the election was lost because I left town. I did not understand how my casual absence on my own business could have occasioned that, but it certainly created great confusion amongst Mr. Macdonogh's friends, and there was a meeting, and it was considered that the game was lost. I think it was suggested that Mr. Macdonogh should resign, but shortly after that I recollect Mr. Sheckelton being mentioned. I do not now recollect that Mr. Hunter was present, but I suppose the gentleman's memory is more accurate than mine now. Mr. Henry Lyons was present, Mr. Williams, Mr. Macdonogh, and myself, and Mr. Sheckelton. There was then a talk about the necessity of strengthening the Conservative electors, because it was understood—

6641. When you use the word "strengthening," you mean giving them money?—That was the phrase as well as I recollect; that was the understanding amongst ourselves. We did not say give money——

6642. But that was understood by it?—It was, of course, understood if the Conservatives would stand together and support Mr. Macdonogh, as certainly they ought to have done, his election would be secured; and we did not conceive it at all necessary to give any money to the Roman Catholic electors, because there was numerically a majority of Protestants on the list, and all that was considered necessary would be to confirm those that were wavering. That was mentioned, and then Mr. Macdonogh, who was present at that conversation, stood up and said—"Gentlemen, I can take no part whatsoever in that transaction; I can have nothing to do with it;" and he left the room, leaving Mr. Sheckelton, Mr. Williams, Mr. Lyons, and myself present. I am not certain about Mr. Hunter, but possibly he was there. The fact of Mr. Macdonogh's disclaimer was understood by us in an opposite sense, and on that understanding——

6643. What do you mean by that?—That I certainly would not have taken the money if I had understood Mr. Macdonogh distinctly to say that he would not be a party to it. I certainly did not understand that. Mr. Macdonogh used the words unquestionably, and he left the room immediately; but the impression produced on our minds immediately was such that Mr. Sheckelton left down the money on the table.

6644. Did you understand when Mr. Macdonogh left the room that he sanctioned the money being given?—I may be wrong. Mr. Macdonogh said nothing to justify the impression; he did nothing, but there was that sort of tone that produced that feeling amongst the whole of us.

6645. Then do you say you believe Mr. Macdonogh authorized it?—I believed on my soul he did. Then there was a talk as to who should take the money. I had never touched money previously. At the previous election I had never asked a man to vote for money. Persons spoke to me, and I turned my back on them. A man named Gethins came to my house, and I brought him up to my drawing-room, and when he wanted to speak of money, I distinctly refused to talk of money; I would have nothing to say to him——

6646. Go on with what occurred about the £490?—Well, I got the money.

6647. Mr. Sheckelton gave you the money?—Yes.

6648. Who were present when he gave you the money?—I am certain Mr. Lyons was—Mr. Williams, Mr. Sheckelton, and myself; Mr. Hunter I have no recollection of.

6649. Had you any further discussion then as to what was to be done with the money, and to whom it was to be given?—It was then distinctly understood that all the gentlemen present were to go through the town amongst the persons considered to be doubtful, and tell them that funds were forthcoming. Mr. Lyons went on that mission; Mr. Williams went on that mission; I did not go.

6650. Mr. Williams and Mr. Lyons left the room to tell the Conservative electors that the money was forthcoming?—Yes.

6651. Did any other gentleman go on that errand?—I do not recollect. I do not want to do any injustice to Mr. Hunter. I have no recollection of his being there. If he was he left on the same mission.

6652. What is his Christian name?—Robert Hunter. This brought the evening to a tolerably late hour. Mr. Sheckelton had been dining out, and, I think, was in Mr. Josiah Davis's. Some person went for him. I think I accompanied one of the gentlemen. I don't know which; I cannot charge my memory with it; but we brought Mr. Sheckelton out and over to Mr. Macdonogh's lodgings, and the matter occurred th ere that I have stated.

6653. At what hour did Mr. Lyons and Mr. Williams leave to give the word to the Conservative electors?—It was a summer's evening, and probably it might be nine o'clock, more or less.

6654. At what hour was it Mr. Macdonogh left the room?—It was shortly previous to the money being produced.

6655. Tell now what you did?—On the polling day I held the money, and certainly I found myself in a very embarrassing position. I did not give any money on that day, except two sums I will tell you of. There was a man named John Ryan who lived near this court-house; he is a blacksmith, a tenant of Lord Palmerston, and Mr. Fox was in with him soliciting him. I was told Ryan wished to vote for the Conservatives, but wanted to be paid. Fox was in there and I went in to prevent Fox using any influence on Ryan, and I spoke to him and left on the understanding that if the money was given to Robert Stokes it would be all right, and accordingly on that day, indeed early in the morning, I gave £23 to Robert Stokes for John Ryan, and shortly afterwards I saw John Ryan voting; I also gave Mr. Stokes on the same day a sum of £30 for a gentleman who is dead—probably the Court will not ask me to name him as he is dead.

6656. You must name him?—Mr. Buchanan, who was the proprietor of the North Hotel on the Mall.

6657. Did he vote?—I believe he did; I believe he voted. I gave Mr. Stokes those two sums on that day. I also believe I distributed in small sums—not for the purpose of bribery, but the particulars I cannot charge my memory with now—the sum of £20. With the exception of that £20 I would be able to account, by documents, for every distribution that I made. Well, then the election went on and Mr. Macdonogh was beaten.

6658. Before we pass from the polling. Did you see Mr. Macdonogh on the polling day?—Oh, frequently.

6659. Did you speak to him as he said to-day about your having the money?—Yes.

6660. Tell the whole of what occurred?—I certainly told Mr. Macdonogh I had not given any money to Roman Catholics, because the object, the sole object in taking it was to strengthen—to induce the Conservative party to remain together.

6661. How did you happen to mention that to Mr. Macdonogh? Where was it?—It might be hereabouts.

6662. In the Court-house?—I think so.

6663. How did you happen to make use of that expression, a remarkable one, certainly, that you had not yet given money to the Roman Catholics?—I did not say "yet." I said I did not give any money to the Roman Catholics. I did not say "yet," because it was not understood I was to give any money to the Roman Catholics.

6664. Did he make any observation to you before you spoke about it?—Well, really, I think he spoke about—I don't mean to say positively—but I think it must be on the subject of the doubtful fortunes of the day, that the clouds were lowering, and matters of that kind; and I said I did not give any money to Roman Catholics.

6665. What did he say to that?—I do not recollect.

6666. Did Mr. Macdonogh then express any disapprobation at you giving the money in that way?—Not at all. I had the full authority of all present, I believed, for what I did.

6667. Do you include Mr. Macdonogh in that, when you say "all present?"—I do; conscientiously, I do, in the way I state. The gentleman said nothing. He did nothing, but, unquestionably, he left—whatever it was, there was a sort of electricity in it, that left on the minds of all present that feeling——

6668. Go on and state about the distribution of the £490?—Well, the election was over, and it was lost, and a balance of the money remained in my hands; and, certainly, at first, I considered the propriety of returning en masse to Mr. Sheckelton, but it was stated to me that it would be unfair towards the persons whose names I am about to mention. For a long time that was considered, and, at length, the money began to be distributed, and I will give you the details, and I have the vouchers, the I. O. U.'s of the persons for all the money that I paid.

6669. Before you go to that, why was it considered unfair by Mr. Macdonogh's supporters that his voters should not be paid?—I cannot tell you.

6670. Did you discuss it with Mr. Lyons?—I presume I did. I really cannot tell you.

6671. Or with Mr. Hunter?—I must have discussed with Mr. Lyons, for here is an envelope of Mr. Lyons to me on the subject. [Produces envelope, and reads]—"I think you have Burrowe's name on your list; kindly arrange with me——"

6672. Who is Burrowes? Is he an elector?—He is one of the persons on the list.

6673. That is Mr. Lyons' handwriting?—That is Mr. Lyons' envelope to me.

6674. Now, tell the distribution of the money, the different sums, and show the document you have from each voter?—This is the document. [Produces document, and reads]—"I. O. U., Charles Sedley, the sum of £15——"

6675. Have you a list of voters and the sums you paid?—But the dates are not on it [produces document].

6676. Is that a list of the voters and the sums you paid to them?—Yes.

6677. And did all these vote for Mr. Macdonogh?—There are one or two sums in that—for instance, Pat Jenkins, £3—that was for personal services, not for bribery.

6678. Read the names?—John Ryan (through Robert Stokes), £25; Mr. Buchanan (the Christian name I do not know—through Mr. Stokes), £30; Henry Lyons, for James Wallace, £30; John Robinson, £15; Thomas M'Keene, £15; James Burrowes, £15; Samuel Gillmore, £20; Andrew Crozier, £15; Joseph Phair, £15; James M'Keen, £20; Patrick Jenkins, £3—that was not for bribery, that was for personal services; William Smith, £15; James Hall (he is dead), £15; John Burke, £20; James Grevatt, £15. I think it right to state with respect to Grevatt, that when I called on him and gave him that money, because his name was on the list, he expressed surprise, and seemed not to expect it. Robert Henderson, £15; Thomas Jackson, £15; Henry Mulligan, £15; Samuel Williams, £15; George Wilson, £10; Peter Macdonald, £5—this was given a long time after the election; James Cunningham, £15; Owen Gunning, £15; Robert Lyndsay, £10; Matthew Allen, for two persons named Lynch—I cannot make out their names, but he got the money for these two—£20.

6679. Is Mr. Allen himself an elector?—Yes.

6680. He got nothing for himself?—I do not believe he did.

6681. Who prepared that list?—That is my handwriting.

6682. By whose direction or in consultation with whom did you arrange the same to be given?—With the parties that were present—they were there constantly.

6683. Who were they?—Mr. Lyons and Mr. Williams—perhaps not in every instance, because some of the parties it was not known that they could be settled with, but a good deal was arranged at the time.

6684. Was a good deal arranged that evening before the polling?—I think some of them were arranged with before the polling. I am not sure of them.

6685. When was that list written by you?—It was written at the time. I had it with the vouchers.

6686. That list you have read, was it prepared before the polling day?—Yes, it was prepared before the polling day, the amounts were not filled in. There are additions to them, some in pencilling.

6687. The amounts are the real amounts?—The amounts are the real amounts.

6688. But the names were entered before the polling day?—Oh, the names were all written before the polling day.

6689. Did you produce that list in the room that evening before the polling day. Was it then in your possession?—Well, I think it was made out then, or partially made out. I won't say altogether made out, because it was more important to go through the town amongst the electors than to be going through the details of the list.

6690. And you knew all the names I heard?—I knew the names perfectly well.

6691. Did you yourself personally pay all that money?—Yes, every shilling of it.

6692. You took I. O. U.'s from the men?—Yes, I did. There is a sample (hands in document), that is to Alderman Lyons from Wallace for £30—that is Alderman Lyons' handwriting.

FIFTH DAY.
October 9.
Charles Sedley.

6693. Were they all in the same form?—No, they were all written by the parties themselves—that is, "I. O. U. Charles Sedley," so much.

6694. I suppose you took the I. O. U. only as an acknowledgment. You had no intention of holding it over then?—Oh, not the slightest intention. I intended these as vouchers, to produce when I was called on to account. I have every one of them here (hands in several documents).

6695. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Are all those I. O. U.'s dated?—They are all dated. Some bear date considerably after the election.

6696. The Chief Commissioner.—Your name was mentioned as getting a portion of the £800 raised by Mr. Lyons in 1860?—What I recollect about that is this. I heard of the matter about the figuring on the piece of paper between Mr. Lyons and Mr. Macdonogh previous to what I am about to state. It was then considered who would be the best person to distribute some of the money, and John Burke was arranged with by Alderman Lyons as one of the distributors. It was then considered how the money could best come to Burke's hands, and it was arranged that a parcel of notes should be sent down to me, and John Burke should come for them, by arrangement. Accordingly a parcel of notes was filled up and indorsed—to the best of my recollection, but I cannot speak positively. Alderman Lyons knows the precise amount. It was £250 was in the parcel of notes. They were brought down. I took no memorandum or anything of that sort. Mr. Burke called. I never opened the parcel of notes. I never looked at more than the indorsement on it. It was left in a particular spot in the office. Mr. Burke called and took it away, and that is the only connexion that I had with that money. They were in an envelope sealed up, and sent down, and Burke called for it, and got the envelope unopened in the same way, but a penny piece of it never went into my hands, except in the way I have stated.

6697. That was after what you call the "figuring" between Mr. Macdonogh and Alderman Lyons?—It was after I heard of what I informed you. I think Mr. Lyons told me.

6698. What did he tell you?—He told me he had arranged with Mr. Macdonogh for £850.

6699. For what?—For distribution at the election.

6700. Amongst the voters?—Amongst the voters. That was understood. He did not say that; that was understood.

6701. In plain language it was for bribery?—Certainly.

6702. Was anything said about Mr. Lyons raising the money then?—It was distinctly understood that Mr. Lyons was to provide the money. I understood that.

6703. From himself?—I believe so; and it was considered a very spirited thing of Mr. Lyons at the time to advance so considerable a sum of money. We all had that opinion of him at the time.

6704. Do you know anything at all about the distribution of that money?—Not a penny piece of it. I do not know who got it. I could not tell. I did not inquire. I never inquired. It passed through my hands in the way I have stated, and that is all I know about that transaction.

6705. Is John Burke still here?—He is in court.

6706. Did you know Mr. Skeckelton had the money?—Not until it was produced. It came on me by surprise. I wanted to have nothing to do with it, for I was not familiar with it.

6707. How soon after Mr. Macdonogh left the room did Mr. Sheckelton produce the money?—Probably two or three minutes.

6708. What did he say?—He said, here is the money. He just took out a roll of notes, and said here was the money. And then he said, "there is a sum I paid to so-and-so." I really forget the name; I cannot charge my memory with it.

6709. A sum for bribery?—I do not think it was. That is not the impression on my mind. It was a sum of money advanced for expenses or something of that kind. That money was taken out of the £500 roll, and the balance was given to me. I thought it was a sum of £15. I suppose I am wrong.

6710. Would you have undertaken that charge at that election unless you believed you had Mr. Macdonogh's authority?—No, decidedly not. I never got a shilling from the gentleman from the day he came to Sligo till he left. He certainly most generously offered me a sum of money for services rendered to him at other times, and I never handled a shilling of his money.

6711. Had you ever before or after this anything to say to the payment of electors in Sligo?—Never, except on that one occasion, to my regret. I took no part in the last election; I knew I had done wrong, and I studiously avoided and determined I would never repeat it again.

6712. You have been attending to the elections and to the politics of the town for some years?—Yes.

6713. In your opinion, do the poorer class of electors on both sides expect to be paid by the successful candidate?—Well, that is the prevailing opinion of the town for several elections. I believe the history of the transaction is, that that most unfortunate gentleman, Mr. Sadlier, when he came to Sligo, began it, and it was that principally influenced the electors of Sligo. Upon several occasions the electors of this town would not vote for any amount of money—previous to him——

6714. Since that time, from what you know of the politics of the town—living here, and knowing the town thoroughly—and from your communication with the voters themselves, is it your opinion that a class of them invariably expect to be paid?—There is not a shadow of doubt about it. It is a very disagreeable thing to make the statement, but it is the truth.

6715. Is the way they expect to be paid this—through the intervention of the respectable gentlemen who canvass them?—The person asks them to vote in a particular way, and then they vote, and it is understood that that request must be redeemed afterwards.

6716. Nothing, of course, passes verbally about money?—Well, I declare I have had no experience of it, except on the one occasion, as I tell you, and I said nothing to any of these persons about the money I would give until they got it.

6717. But did you tell them to go and vote?—I told none of them to vote, with the exception of Ryan, in his own place. I was in it on the day of the election; but any of the other persons appeared to have communicated with Mr. Lyons, or Mr. Williams, or some one else—they were not communicated with by me. It is possible that Grevatt was not asked by anybody.

6718. What is the exact number you paid?—Twenty-five.

6719. You paid twenty-five voters?—Yes.

6720. Does that include Jenkins?—It does; he is not a voter.

6721. Then you paid twenty-four?—Twenty-four.

6722. And all these, with the exception Grevatt, appeared to have been communicated with either by Mr. Williams or Mr. Lyons, and all knew they were to get something?—Permit me to look at the list again. [Looks at list.] There is a man here that certainly refused to come up until I brought him to the poll.

6723. What is his name?—Samuel Gillmore.

6724. You polled him?—He came to the poll with me—Andrew Crozier, certainly. I am not sure about George Wilson. This money was given afterwards at the request of Mr. Monds. I am not quite sure that that man voted on account of any inducement, nor about Peter M'Donald, that got the £5. I am not quite sure of that. But, with these exceptions, I think the list is right.

6725. Have you totted up the amount you paid?—Four hundred and twenty-three pounds. There is a balance undistributed, and I wish to say on that subject, I have frequently put myself in the way of Mr. Sheckelton; I always had these vouchers ready, and the gentleman exhibited the strongest unwillingness to enter into any conversation on the subject; and that is the reason the balance is not returned to him. I was always quite ready, and waiting, and expecting to be called on to account, and I have the documents ready.

6726. Then £67 remains undistributed?—I hold that money.

6727. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Were you aware at the election of 1860 that Mr. Macdonogh sanctioned the distribution of £850?—I was aware of what has been stated on the table to-day, of the figuring done on the piece of paper. I heard for the first time to-day that Mr. Macdonogh had put his initials to it. I was only previously aware that Mr. Lyons had put down the figures on a piece of paper and shown them to Mr. Macdonogh. That was all I heard. I was not aware of his initialing it.

6728. At that meeting at which you think Mr. Hunter was not present, was Mr. Macdonogh there before Mr. Sheckelton?—Well, I have no distinct recollection of how Mr. Macdonogh came into the room, and I am perfectly convinced the gentleman has given an accurate account of how he came into the room, but I do not remember it, because, as I say, we were all in great confusion. It was late at night. We had been over at Mr. Sheckelton's getting him over, and very possibly Mr. Macdonogh had retired to rest.

6729. But you, Mr. Macdonogh, and Mr. Hunter were discussing the matter, and there was an understanding that funds should be forthcoming?—Certainly; the discussion was how it was possible to fight the game.

6730. Was that in Mr. Macdonogh's presence?—Certainly. But when the question of money came to be discussed Mr. Macdonogh left the room and said what I have stated.

6731. Were you aware before this from Mr. Macdonogh that he had brought down no money for the election?—Well, I really cannot charge my memory with having any particular conversation with Mr. Macdonogh on the subject. I cannot say that I had. At first we all thought that the Conservatives were so strong that Mr. Macdonogh would get in without much trouble, and there was no talk about money until the day or so before the election, and it was in consequence of the voting away against Mr. Macdonogh of several Conservatives that the election was lost.

6732. Have you any doubt of Mr. Macdonogh's statement that he did not bring down £500?—I believe anything the gentleman says.

6733. You have no doubt of it?—Not the slightest doubt of it.

6734. Then, not having money, was it not very natural for him to repudiate it and say he would not distribute money on that occasion?—You are asking me what was passing in Mr. Macdonogh's mind, which I really do not know.

6735. I am asking you as a matter of common sense is it not very natural if a man has not money to distribute that he would not distribute it?—He said he would not sanction the distribution—that he would have nothing to say to it, and walked away.

6736. At that time was there any reference to any person having money in town that could be got for the purpose of the election on his side?—Certainly not.

6737. None whatever?—Certainly not.

6738. Were you aware of Mr. Sheckelton having money then?—I was not. I know it was produced in the room with surprise to me, so far as I was concerned.

6739. Did Mr. Sheckelton come into the room after Mr. Macdonogh had retired?—Mr. Sheckelton was in the room previous to the retirement of Mr. Macdonogh. We went to Mr. Davis and brought him over to Mr. Macdonogh's lodgings.

6740. I understood that Mr. Macdonogh had retired to rest before Mr. Sheckelton came?—I believe Mr. Macdonogh's statement to that effect, but I do not know it.

6741. Try and remember. Was Mr. Sheckelton present when Mr. Macdonogh repudiated having anything to say to the matter?—Certainly he was present.

6742. He was present?—Certainly.

6743. Was there any difference in the language he used in repudiating the transaction before Mr. Sheckelton came and after?—There was only one repudiation.

6744. Was there no discussion about the money, or the distributing of funds until after Mr. Sheckelton came in?—No; certainly not.

6745. Who sent for Mr. Sheckelton?—I do not know who sent.

6746. Was there not a good deal of discussion before Mr. Sheckelton was sent for?—Well, I think not.

6747. Have you any recollection of the words Mr. Macdonogh used on that occasion?—We talked about the necessity of giving money to the Conservative electors, as otherwise the game would be lost. Mr. Macdonogh instantly stood up and said, "Gentlemen, I can have nothing to say with this discussion. I have nothing to do with it," and he immediately left the room, leaving us altogether.

6748. The Chief Commissioner.—As a matter of accuracy I may mention that the tot of the sums you specified as having been paid is only £403?—There were £20 I said I distributed, of which I have not the particulars. That is the addition.

6749. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—On the day of the polling when you met Mr. Macdonogh in the hall here, did you give him a very gloomy description of the state of things—you say you spoke of the clouds lowering, and soforth?—Well, we spoke very strongly of the disaffection of the Conservative party, several of whom were voting for Sergeant Armstrong.

6750. And did you at that time take a rather gloomy view of his chances?—Well, it was from an early hour of the day pretty generally felt that Mr. Macdonogh could not succeed.

6751. And when you mentioned to him that no money was given amongst the Roman Catholics, did he in any way give you any hint, or was there anything in his manner calculated to leave on your mind the impression that he wished you to distribute money amongst the Roman Catholics?—I will tell you the truth. I did not recollect the observation until Mr. Macdonogh stated it on the table here to-day. His statement to-day has revived my recollection of it, and I now recollect that I said it. Therefore you see my recollection is not very strong on the subject. I would not have thought of it but for Mr. Macdonogh's statement.

6752. That you do not recollect his giving you any encouragement at all?—I do not. It was never understood, I may say, that we were to bribe the Roman Catholics. We thought the Conservatives strong enough if they stood together to carry the election.

6753. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—According to your experience do the persons who are paid for voting generally vote on their own side, or will they take much less from their own side than they would from the other?—A man would like to vote with his party.

6754. But if he is paid sufficiently will he vote against his party?—Well, I know very few instances, until Major Knox's election, of Roman Catholics voting for the Conservative candidate.

6755. Or of Conservatives voting for Roman Catholics?—The feeling is as strong that way as the other. Mr. Macdonogh was put out by the Conservatives voting against him—five or six Conservatives on whom he relied. Mr. Petre voted for Mr. Macdonogh at the first election, and voted for Sergeant Armstrong at the next. Mr. Phibbs voted against Mr. Macdonogh, Mr. Balfour, Mr. Burns, Mr. Wilson, who were Conservatives voted against him. These six would have counted twelve, or more than the majority against him.

FIFTH DAY.
October 9.
Charles Sedley.

6756. The names you mention are Balfour, Petre, Burnes, Wilson ——?—And Mr. Phibbs of Seafield, and Mr. George Campbell, cabinetmaker, Wine-street. He is a Presbyterian.

6757. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—At that interview when you, Mr. Lyons, Mr. Hunter, and Mr. Macdonogh were present, was not the object of that interview with Mr. Macdonogh to get funds for the purpose of fighting the contest?—No; it really was the object of the interview to induce Mr. Macdonogh not to resign. I think that was the impression on our minds, that he contemplated resigning.

6758. Was the impression on your mind then that the election would be lost, until funds were forthcoming?—Oh, certainly.

6759. And was it the impression on the mind, as far as you could judge, of Mr. Hunter and Mr. Lyons?—It was the impression on the mind of all, except Mr. Macdonogh, who expressed himself the other way.

6760. But, from the first moment, was that the impression on the minds of the persons meeting there?—Certainly.

6761. You had a discussion at the outside about the chances of the contest?—Yes; but we did not like the unpleasant prospect of giving Conservatives money to vote at their own side.

6762. But, I suppose, from the outset it was suggested that funds should be forthcoming?—Well, I think so; I should say it is likely.

6763. Who first suggested going for Mr. Sheckelton?—Well, I declare I do not know. I did not know where Mr. Sheckelton was at all, nor his object in being there, for I was out of town.

6764. It was not Mr. Macdonogh suggested to go for Mr. Sheckelton?—Certainly not.

6765. So then the suggestion of funds being forthcoming, first came from Mr. Sheckelton himself, by his saying he had money—is that so?—As far as I am aware, the first suggestion was the producing by Mr. Sheckelton of the roll of notes in the room.

6766. After Mr. Macdonogh had left the room?—Oh, certainly; Mr. Macdonogh had left the room.

6767. The Chief Commissioner.—When you got the money, of course you had a discretion to do as you wished with it?—Subject to consultation with other parties.

6768. Was it understood between Mr. Lyons and Mr. Williams that they were to mention you had the money for the electors?—Decidedly. I was the stakeholder; they were to go through the electors and inform them that I had the money, and that the money was all right.

6769. And, of course, anyone thus informed you had the money, felt perfectly safe it would be distributed?—I paid all the men on the list.

6770. But that was the idea?—That was the idea.

6771. That when it was known you had the money, the electors would not require payment on the day of polling?—With the exception of the two I have stated, they would not vote at all until the money was paid.

6772. But the other men voted cheerfully?—The other men voted cheerfully.

6773. Knowing you had the money?—Knowing I had the money.

6774. As you understood?—As I understood.

6775. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Did you hear the six Conservatives who voted for Sergeant Armstrong were bribed?—Certainly, some of them were not.

6776. Did you hear of any that were?—Do not ask that question.

6777. Do you not recollect the names?—Don't ask that question—some may be gentlemen whose names I would not mention on reflection.

6778. Do you know the name of anyone whom you heard was bribed to vote for Sergeant Armstrong?—I cannot say, except the impression on my mind; and cannot, even here, be evidence. I cannot distinctly say I heard anyone was bribed.

6779. Do you believe any were?—I would rather not answer that question.

6780. You must answer—do you believe any of them were bribed?—Do not force me to it; I have told you everything I know—please don't ask me.

6781. I am afraid you must tell—enumerate the names again?—I am certain Mr. Petre got no money; Mr. Phibbs of Seafield voted from personal hostility.

6782. Can you give any information about anyone whom you have reason to suppose was bribed?—Well, I really cannot give the information; I don't know anything definite—nothing sufficiently explicit to state it.

6783. We are the judges of what is sufficiently explicit—can you give us any information, or give any instruction to us from knowledge, information, or belief?—As to belief, if you force me to it, of course I must state it; I believe Mr. George Campbell, cabinetmaker, of Wine-street, was bribed.

6784. Anyone else?—Mr. Wilson, possibly, the hotel-keeper. I do not know that he is in Sligo at present. Beyond these I do not think I can state any.

6785. The Chief Commissioner.—Has there been a system to your knowledge of giving orders for drink or refreshment to publicans and grocers to supply the mob?—That all occurred on the other side; I know nothing about it.

6786. That occurred on the Liberal side?—That occurred on the Liberal side. You can get much better information from them than I can give you.

6787. You have seen the mobs in this town?—I have.

6788. And you know perfectly well that these mobs would not work without meat and drink?—No doubt of that.

6789. Do you know anything of persons giving orders for £2 or £4 worth of drink?—No; I know nothing on the subject.

6790. You have mentioned George Campbell's name?—Yes.

6791. Whom do you suppose, if subpœnaed as a witness, can give information about him?—Well, I think Mr. Petre ought to know something about it.

6792. Was he a supporter of Mr. Macdonogh's up to a short time before the election?—He was looked upon as a Conservative elector.

6793. You have mentioned two out of six names?—Well, there are two or three of them above mentioning.

6794. You have named Campbell and Wilson. Is there any other except those two?—Well, I really cannot say; I did not prepare myself to give evidence on the subject; I am taken by surprise, and I cannot do it.

6795. Did you hear what Campbell got?—No, I did not.

6796. Or has said to have got?—No.

(The witness withdrew.)

Mr. Francis Macdonogh, Q.C., recalled.

Mr. Francis Macdonogh.

6797. The Chief Commissioner.—Do you wish to make any statement?—Do not in any way understand me as impeaching the correctness of intention of the gentleman who has been giving evidence; but I think when Mr. Sedley is reminded—and possibly he will kindly listen—he will see that he is under a slight mistake as to dates. He said his memory is not quite accurate. There were two interviews—the one he refers to when I was present and Mr. Sheckelton occurred early; that was about the time I told Mr. Sheckelton to take away his money; that I would have nothing to say to it, as I stated in my evidence. That was the first interview and the first occasion, and he was not present when I told Mr. Sheckelton to take away his money. He was at the interview which he has fairly described when I said I would have nothing to say to anything of the kind, and retired to rest. After that Mr. Sheckelton must have been sent for. He was dining at Mr. Davis's, and certainly my memory is that he was not present when I retired to rest, telling Mr. Williams and the other gentlemen, "I am now going to rest for the night; I shall give directions that I shall not be disturbed, and this election is to be fought on principle. I will have nothing to say to anything about money." I think it must be after that Mr. Sheckelton was sent for. I did not know of his being sent for. I was in bed, as I stated to you, when he came to my room and told me of the transaction. I think Mr. Sedley has mixed up these two interviews in point of time; that is all.

Mr. Sedley.—I never thought I would be examined on this subject, and my recollection may be wrong, but that is the impression on my mind; but it is very possible that Mr. Macdonogh is right.

6798. The Chief Commissioner (to Mr. Macdonogh).—Why did it not occur to you to stop the money in Mr. Sedley's hands—I presume you knew Mr. Sedley would do anything you told him?—Mr. Sheckelton told me he had given the money to Mr. Sedley, and Mr. Sedley had gone with it. He said to me what I have already stated to you, "Will I endeavour to get it from him?" I said, "I think it is too late," and no more, just as I have detailed it to you. That is exactly what occurred beyond all doubt, and I thought it would not be right to interfere about the matter with Mr. Sedley. The other matter I would call attention to was about what Mr. Lyons stated as to some bill of exchange which he drew on Mr. Monds. I never heard of that till to-day; of course it was nothing to me. I never heard how he got the money. That is all I have to trouble you with.

(Mr. Macdonogh withdrew.)

Mr. Charles Sedley recalled.

6799. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Did I not understand you rightly to say that Mr. Sheckelton came back to you at the interview you had in Mr. Macdonogh's rooms?—I was not aware of any interview between Mr. Sheckelton and Mr. Macdonogh at all. Of course when it occurred I was not present at it. The first time I saw Mr. Sheckelton about the transaction was when we brought him from Mr. Davis to Mr. Leech's lodgings. I am under the impression—I may be wrong—that Mr. Macdonogh was present at the interview; that is the impression on my mind.

6800. But when Mr. Sheckelton and you parted that evening, the list having been made up of persons to whom money was to be given, you did not see him again until the polling day?—Oh, I did not see Sheckelton that night again. I did not see him till morning—that was the night before the polling.

(Mr. Sedley withdrew.)

Major Knox recalled.

6801. The Chief Commissioner.—Have you made out a detailed list of expenses?—Yes.

6802. Read it; that will be the most convenient way? [Reads]—"Election expenses as by returns from Mayor, £791 4*s*. 9*d*. Expense of revision '68, £600." That is near as I can go—just about what it cost. "Paid for mobs at regatta and revision, £250. Sent to Mr. Wilson after the revision, £15 for the same purpose. Purchase of houses in Sligo and building connected with them, £550."

6803. Have you any list of the persons who were the tenants—voters?—No, I have not.

6804. Can you ascertain that?—I am sure I can. I will get that. Yes, I am sure, from Mr. Phibbs.

6805. Does Mr. Phibbs know?—Oh, he does. In consequence of the reduction of the franchise by the Reform Bill, the votes actually made by those houses were almost nothing, because the men we had taken were from small houses, £5 for instance; it was a mere change of tenant. Rents of houses, &c., two years, £370. Expenses of yacht building, £450. Boats, £50, paid to M'Cormick.

6806. Was all that money for the expense of building yacht?—Well, building, fitting, and ballast; everything connected with it; for instance, the ballast cost £80. Paid to another, M'Cormick, £50 for boats. Paid to Mr. Pollock, law expenses connected with houses, £40, and £20—£60. Paid for cars and carriages during visits to Sligo, and for cars at revision; that is, revision of 1868, £75 entirely.

6807. Who were employed for that £75?—Mrs. M'Goldrick; she has a small hotel.

6808. Is she the mother of a voter?—She is the mother and the wife of a voter. Both her husband and her son have votes.

6809. The two of them?—Yes.

6810. Were the two M'Goldricks examined here?—Perhaps they were before I came. I did not see them.

6811. You paid them £75?—Seventy-five pounds. That is exclusive of a small sum I paid at the election time. I made one or two small payments for cars to the Victoria hotel people. Ordinary subscription to Registry Society for two years at £25 a year—£50. That was irrespective of the special subscription. Two small items overlooked at the last election—Mr. Rutherford and Mr. Wilson six guineas and thirteen guineas. For retainer to local solicitor, £120, when I was first asked to come forward. Expense of house on the Mall, £60. A house I had. Firearms for the protection of supporters at election. Paid to Mr. Leech, £14; it may be a few shillings more, for revolvers, subscription to Town Hall, and regattas, £100 each. Sligo railway, £100.

6812. What is the total amount of these?—£320; these are public subscriptions. Then there were local charities, bazaars, coal fund, &c. I put down £100; that cannot be quite accurate. I very often gave them without any record. But, as far as I recollect, I am sure that covers them. Then there were cases of distress—applications from men named Neilon, £20; Flynn, £6; Rooney, £12; Mrs. Leger, £5; Jenkins, £8 or £10. I put it down at that.

6813. Is he an elector?—No, I think not; he is not an elector. With respect to that item I am not quite clear whether there was not another man who got money under similar circumstances—I am not certain, but I will try in Dublin. I think he was a man named Henderson, but I am not sure. M'Morrow's expenses in Dublin. He voted for me and had to leave from mob violence. He was beaten, £15. Paid T. R. Wilson two years' superintending revision £52 a year, £104. It was paid by my predecessor and I continued it. Paid two local newspapers £25 for publishing different things for two years. Paid a doctor for attending Brennan, and expenses in connexion with that, £18. Then expenses of the petition.

6814. First tell me the total of the election expenses?—The total of the election expenses would be £4028 10*s*. 9*d*.

6815. That is the total for the election?—For the election.

6816. That includes every item that has been mentioned either at Carrick or here up to the present?—Oh, every single thing. In addition to the £4,028, I put down £3,000 for the costs of the petition—the costs on both sides unfortunately—that is, a total of £7,000. I estimated the costs of the petition rather higher in one item than they actually will be. I put down £900 and something. I only paid £700. The bill in some matters was wrong £200, but I put down the whole.

FIFTH DAY. October 9. Major KNOX.

6817. I wish to direct your attention to some evidence given here by Feeny. He said, "Major Knox came in and shook hands with me, and he said, 'What is your figure?' and he asked me would £50 do. I said, 'I suppose it will.'" He says you said that?—That evidence I had to answer at Carrick. Of course I disproved it; if not I would have been found guilty of personal bribery. I may mention the circumstances connected with that man. They are these. A man named Hart, I think, came to the hotel door and told me that Feeny was dissatisfied at my not having canvassed him. I told Hart to apologise; to say I could not go about the town in the state it was then in; and just as that happened, a minute afterwards, a gentleman then connected with the Irish Times, Mr. Waugh, came in—there was someone else with him—and I gave him some message to see Feeny. But I never saw the man before. I may, possibly, have seen him in my canvass, but I never knew who the man was: I think I never saw him, and I think I would not know him again. I never said, "What is your figure?" His statement is untrue; there is not a word of truth in the whole thing. He says that I offered him a glass of brandy. I never had any brandy in the house at all. He said I gave him a glass of wine. I saw him in the drawing-room. I had no wine in the drawing-room. I was at dinner when he came. A cousin of mine was present, Mr. John Valentine Knox, and a friend, Mr. Morrison. We did not think it necessary at Carrick—Judge Keogh said it was necessary—to examine Mr. Morrison. That man also said he went to the house opposite, and Mr. Green and Mr. Chism promised him clothes; but both Mr. Green and Mr. Chism were both produced and proved it to be an utter fabrication.

[Bank docket handed to witness.]

6818. That is Mr. Hignell's handwriting?—Oh, it is. I have no doubt of it.

6819. You directed that £12 to be given by Mr. Hignell?—Yes, I think I personally told Mr. Hignell.

6820. Did you send away that sum in a blank envelope?—I do not know, I think he said at Carrick he got it in an envelope with a paper folded round it.

6821. But what it was sent in was merely a blank piece of paper?—Well, I think I can account for it. I think the man also stated what is accurate, that he got two letters from me. I think the second letter—it is a long time; but my recollection is, that the second letter acceded to his request, and I think it was probably written the same day the draft was sent. It is a common way of remitting without a letter; we constantly get remittances without letters from agents. I think my letter to him may have gone in another envelope. I think he is right, and that there were two—the first acknowledging the receipt of the memorial, the second probably acceding to it. There is no doubt the man got the money from me. I think too there was another man whose name I cannot call to mind got £12 or £15. My recollection is, that it was a man named Henderson—that is my recollection, perhaps I am wrong—that is my recollection. I put down the cases of Neilan, Flynn, Rooney, Leger and Jenkins at the total of £53. There may be another which I acceded to, but I am not quite certain.

6822. Do you say with some trifling exceptions you only spent that £53 in that way?—Certainly, I think it is my positive belief, not another shilling except what is in that return.

6823. Do you intend to compensate the M'Mullens?—Well, I do not know as to the M'Mullens, I hardly think I am called on to do that. But there are some of my supporters whose houses were smashed and furniture ruined, and I think it is probable I shall compensate every one who suffered injury by supporting me.

6824. We were lately told that the M'Mullens went away for seven months?—I do not know much about them.

6825. Do you not believe they went away or were brought away by Stokes?—Well, he may have done so, but I think he injured me, and they injured me, for I looked on them as supporters especially the younger man, I knew his wife was very anxious to support me.

6826. Did you make any effort to have these men examined at Carrick?—I knew very little of these things, but Mr. Macdonogh's opinion to have everybody there, and——

6827. You said you consulted Mr. Macdonogh, and he told you to have produced every witness within your power and procurement?—Yes; I believe I should add that I heard from Mr. Hignell immediately after the petition. They did not wish to tell me before that these men had a great objection to go to Sligo and Carrick, and after some consideration they did go away, but I have no doubt furthermore that Mr Hignell was aware of it.

6828. Have you any doubt that Mr. Hignell could have procured the attendance of those men at Carrick if there was an intimation to him on the subject?—I have not the slightest doubt that he could. I have not the slightest doubt of it.

6829. And that he knew they were at Clithero?—I have not the least doubt of it; and I believe it was at their own request. They did not wish to come. I believe they were in great fear, especially the old man, that he would be beaten.

6830. But they had no fear of coming to Carrick?—Well, I do not know. There ought not to be.

6831. Who else do you intend to compensate?—I have had no application whatever of any description—not for a farthing; but there are two or three cases I know, one man named Peter Harrison. He was dreadfully beaten. He never asked me for any compensation in the world; but if I could do it legally I certainly should compensate him. There was a man named Morrow who suffered very much. His whole trade was destroyed. I have given him the agency of the Irish Times as some little compensation, but he deserves something more; and I will put him in the position he was before he supported me; that would be just. There is a man named Gethins. He suffered very much. I do not know whether he voted for me or abstained. I think he was afraid to vote. He did not vote.

6832. Is that Michael Gethins?—Edward Gethins.

6833. Do you think there are any others who have a claim; not a legal claim, but a claim in justice and honour?—I know there is a man that suffered much. There is one man, I forget his name. I am not aware of any at this moment particularly; but if any of them show me they suffered by supporting me, I should really feel bound to place them in the position they would be in if they had not supported me.

6834. If so, why should you not think it right to pay the M'Mullens when they called on you in Dublin?—The first thing I asked M'Mullen when he called—I forgot his name—was what was his name. Then I asked him if he had voted for me. He first of all said, "I could not go back to Sligo. I am afraid of my life." "Did you vote for me?" "No," said he. "Then what have I to do with you?" and I sent him away. "Did you vote for me?" "No." "Then what have I to do with you?" and the man walked away.

6835. He did not tell you he was stopping at M'Dowell's?—No. I only said two or three words to him. I was very busy at the time. I saw him once afterwards, and merely told him I did not know anything about him. In fact, my impression was it was a trap, like Sheils' man, and I am not quite clear it was not now.

6836. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—With regard to the money spent for building purposes, could you not give us more particularly how that money was spent?—Well, there were two houses in particular nearly fit to be pulled down; they were in a very bad state; had to be roofed, and all that sort of thing. There were several other items for repairs.

6837. Were the persons who were moved into these two houses persons who had been in houses of an inferior description before?—Well, I think one man, for instance, moved into a house who had a vote, but the moving in enabled him to put two sons on for the larger valuation.

6838. By the larger valuation?—Yes; his two sons got votes as well as himself. The other house is not occupied. There were some houses in another street—three of them—and these all made new votes.

6839. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—I do not know whether you were asked yesterday, but there was a man called Leonard examined—did you hear him make a statement that you had given £5 to him for his brother-in-law, an elector?—Yes, I heard him.

6840. Was that true?—The man was a messenger, and he and four others met me at the railway when I came down. They attended there, and watched at night, and he gave me their names, and I gave £1 a piece to the five. There was proof, indeed, of it being fabrication, because it was proved at Carrick that the man did not give the money to his brother-in-law, but went to the pawn-office with it to release some clothes of his own.

6841. You did not give him £5 for his brother-in-law?—Certainly not; I did not know he had a brother-in-law at all.

6842. You stated that Mrs. Lyons wrote to Mr. Hignell with respect to that man M'Mullen?—Yes.

6843. Did you give her name—is she the wife of Mr. Henry Lyons?—No; she is the widow of a deceased brother of his, at the opposite side of the street—Mrs. John Lyons.

6844. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—I asked you yesterday whether you had any lists of voters—have you?—I don't think I have any lists. I had lists; but a great quantity of things were taken from my lodgings at Leech's, where I was staying at the time, and I think the lists amongst others. Everything was mislaid. I had to leave from danger to my life, and I left them. I had lists regularly made out, showing those likely to support me—those likely to vote for Captain Flanagan, and those who were doubtful. I had lists regularly made out.

6845. Were not some of those lists forthcoming at Carrick?—No; I stated they could not be found.

6846. Did you make search?—No; I knew I had not them. I had a marked copy of the register merely—that is the only thing. I think I have that; but the lists analysing the constituency, I have not got them.

6847. Have you the register in town?—No, in Dublin; Mr. Wilson has a copy of it.

6848. When did you get the marked register first?—I got it first in October, '68, a few days after the revision. It was printed as quickly as possible; I got it some time in October, three weeks before I came down.

6849. Could you procure that register for us?—I think I can; I am sure—I am almost sure I can.

6850. I would be glad if you could?—I will do my best. If not, Mr. Wilson will give you an exact copy of it.

6851. We would like to have your one?—I will do my best. If I find it ——

6852. The Chief Commissioner.—Did you ever hear anything about the matters disclosed here to-day, as to the money being paid after the election by either the successful or the defeated candidate?—No; I did not hear it.

6853. I do not mean the particulars?—No; but I heard a kind of rumour—I heard that more than once—but without being able to say I know anything about it; there were all kinds of rumours ——

6854. That money was paid after the election?—After the election? Yes; some time after. I understood that was the rumour; but I had no means of knowing it as a fact.

6855. Had you heard the rumour from electors?—I heard it from one elector particularly.

6856. Who is that?—I do not remember his name.

6857. Was he a gentleman of the influential class?—No, a poor man rather, for he said he did not get as much as he ought to have got.

6858. After whose election?—After Mr. Macdonogh's last election.

6859. That he did not get as much as he ought?—He said he was badly treated. I had some gentlemen with me. I forget his name, but he said something of that kind.

6860. He said that while you were canvassing?—Well, I was canvassing.

6861. You do not remember his name?—I forget his name. If I saw the man I would know his face. I have a recollection of one man asking me for money. I had forgotten it till this morning. His name was not mentioned—Gillan. He wrote to me a very disgraceful letter—Michael Gillan, I think, of High-street. He wrote to me a few days before the election, saying if I gave him a certain sum, about £40, his vote was at my service, but the money must be paid down—that kind of letter. Of course I took no notice of it.

6862. Did he refer to any previous payment?—Not exactly, but that was the drift of his letter, and it occurred to me that he was a man who regularly sold his vote.

6863. Did he use the phrase, "Your honour won't be worse than the rest?"—Something of that kind—but he would give trust no longer—something of that sort.

6864. Did he use the expression that he wanted the money down?—Something of that kind—exactly.

6865. Was his letter that he wanted the money down because he did not get the whole of his price before?—Something of that kind.

6866. Do you remember any other?—No. There were some others whose names I do not know, but a good many came to me where I lived, and some by letters, and some personally asked money. I could hardly say they asked—indeed, except this man I think none asked—but some of them hinted they expected it, and I immediately got rid of them.

6867. Did they use the expression would they be safe in voting, or anything to that effect, or "would your honour tell us to go and vote?"—Something of that kind, I believe. The parties appeared to carry on a regular trade in that way.

6868. You have heard and read the evidence given at this inquiry. Is there anything else you wish to state in reference to it?—I think not. Nothing that I am aware of. I don't think there is anything. I think I mentioned everything I know.

6869. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Is there anything you wish to state with respect to such violence interfering with freedom of election?—Nothing further than that the mob violence was excessive to a degree. On the polling day and the day after it was something incredible. I never saw anything to equal it. For instance, during the day I went to see some supporters of mine who had taken refuge in a house and could not vote. They could not dare come out, and they did not vote.

6870. Do you refer to violence on the polling day exclusively?—On the polling day, and from the nomination day, I never saw such violence. There was a determination about it that I never saw before, particularly on the polling day. I could not move any where myself without enormous bodies of police in attendance—fifty police and a Sub-Inspector with fixed bayonets, and I had to leave the town escorted by a large body of mounted police on each side. Certainly I never saw anything to equal it.

6871. The Chief Commissioner.—Were stones thrown at yourself?—Constantly, wherever I went. I have kept some as curiosities—enormous stones.

FIFTH DAY.
October 9.
Major Knox.

6872. How many electors can you say, from information or belief, were prevented from polling for you from apprehension—well-grounded apprehension?—I have no doubt there were twenty.

6873. From well-grounded apprehension of violence?—Yes. One man barricaded himself in the hotel, and Sir Robert Gore Booth and I went to ask him to vote—he was a supporter of mine—he had so barricaded the door, that we could not get into the room.

6874. Was there any part of the day at which you could not poll your men without an escort?—Oh, the greater part of the day dragoons had to go, and infantry and police, to bring the men up at all.

6875. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—I wish to call your attention to what you said about Rooney. I think you said, yesterday, that at one time you believed Rooney was a voter, and afterwards you said something about not knowing it till that morning. I think you must be under some mistake as to that?—My belief was, until yesterday, I knew a Rooney to be a voter. I had reason to know; for I canvassed, and asked a friend who had influence, to see him for me. He saw another Rooney. The mistake was, I thought, until yesterday, that man was not a voter. I never remember to have canvassed him. I find he was a voter.

6876. You were under the impression that the Rooney who wrote to you was not the man you canvassed?—Perfectly—that he was a different man.

6877. Was it before you canvassed Rooney, or at your canvass you received the letter from this man?—Oh, long before. It was a year and a half before—two years.

6878. It was in February, 1868, you received the letter and he got the £12—it could not be a year and a half?—Well, I am wrong. It was in September of the same year I canvassed.

(The witness then withdrew.)

Mr. William Ormsby.

Mr. William Ormsby sworn and examined.

6879. The Chief Commissioner.—Mr. Ormsby, your name was mentioned yesterday as having got a cheque from Major Knox?—So I heard.

6880. What was the amount?—Two hundred pounds.

6881. Where did you cash that cheque?—I think I cashed it at the Ulster Bank, where I keep an account. I am sure it was.

6882. Which was Major Knox's bank—was it the Ulster Bank also?—Well, I think it was the Ulster Bank; I won't say positively.

6883. No matter; you cashed it in your own bank?—I cashed it at the Ulster; and I think it was on the Ulster Bank in Dublin that the cheque was drawn. I kept an account there.

6884. How did you dispose of that £200?—Major Knox got back nearly the half of it. I will tell you exactly. He was going away some place—I think to Mayo—and asked me if I would make some payments for him, saying, "You are going to stay in town for two or three days." I said I would, with pleasure. "Well," said he, "I will give you a cheque for £200." There was £30 of that to go to Phillips. I thought it was £50, but he said £30 to-day. He said he sent me an account. If he did, I have it in Dublin.

6885. Was the cheque drawn in Sligo?—Oh, yes, given here. I paid for a tax-cart. Major Knox said £30, but I think only £20.

6886. To whom?—To a man in Sligo; Grey, I think, was his name.

6887. James Grey?—I could not tell you, indeed.

6888. Is he one of the electors?—He is, I believe; I don't know; I could not tell you where he lives. I know nothing of it save that Major Knox told me to pay it to him for a new tax-cart that he built.

6889. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Thirty pounds?—I think £20. He said £30. If I had known of this I could have found it exactly. I gave to Mrs. L. for the hire of her house I think £10, and I gave Mrs. Michael Gethin £15 or £20 for the hire of her house. I did not give a shilling to a voter who had voted, or to vote for Major Knox in any way.

6890. But Mrs. Michael Gethin was the wife of Michael Gethin, a voter?—He was dead.

6891. What were the houses for?—I was told to retain them for him.

6892. For tally-rooms?—I suppose so.

6893. This was shortly before the election?—It must have been; it was before the election at all events.

6894. Anything else?—I did not keep the account, not thinking of it. I could find everything down to the halfpenny. The Major will admit he got back the money himself.

6895. About how much?—He says he thinks about £80 or £75. I thought it was a little more, but I did not keep the memorandum.

6896. Did you spend then £110 or £120?—Yes, about that.

6897. Do you remember anybody else that you gave any money to?—I think that was all the money.

6898. Is that all the money that went through your hands at the last election?—At any election. I never paid a voter in my life, nor ever asked a man to vote for money; nor I never even knew of the money spent at any of them until I heard it to-day. I never interfered nor asked any man in my life for his vote.

6899. Did you give any money to a man for not registering his vote?—No; I gave money—part of the money which I got—to a man that did not register at all.

6900. Who was that man?—His name is Creighton; he lives quite close to the court-house.

6901. What occurred about giving him £10 for not putting his name on the registry?—I never had a word with him at all, but I heard it was for that. I never made any bargain with him, good, bad, or indifferent.

6902. Who told you to give him the money?—Well, I won't be positive, but I think it was Mr. Stokes.

6903. Stokes, the saddler?—I think so, but I won't be positive.

6904. Did Stokes give you any directions about the rest of the money?—No; he wanted to get money from me, but I would not give it to him. I said I would have nothing to say to him, and went away.

6905. Did Creighton call on you for the £10?—I forget the sum; I can't recollect.

6906. Who told you the precise sum to give him?—I think it was Stokes. It was either £10 or £20; I cannot recollect really what the sum was.

6907. Did you give it to more than one person who had not registered?—No; he was the only man I gave it to; nor did I think it was the slightest harm when I gave it.

6908. I am not saying that there is. Major Knox said, "I think there was £30 given by me to Mr. William Ormsby?"—Ah, he is mistaken; he gave me £200. Maybe he thought there was £30 of it——

6909. Spent in that way?—He may have thought it was spent in that way.

6910. As you recollect, it was only £20?—It may be only £10 or £20; I am not sure exactly; but the man was not on the registry, and I was told that it was for that purpose he got the money.

6911. To keep off the registry?—He did not come forward at all to get his name on. He never was a juror.

(The witness withdrew.)

Patrick Neilan sworn and examined.

6912. The Chief Commissioner.—You are an elector?—I was; I am not at present.

6913. Did you vote at the last election for Captain Flanagan?—I did.

6914. Did you get any money at all?—No.

6915. From anybody?—I did.

6916. Whom did you get money from?—From Major Knox.

6917. How much money did you get?—Twenty pounds.

6918. Who gave it to you?—Mr. Pollock.

6919. When was it given to you?—I think in February, 1868.

6920. Did you write for the money?—I did.

6921. What did you write in your letter?—The substance of it, as I wrote at the instance of a friend——

6922. Who was the friend?—Thomas Brien.

6923. Go on now?—I wrote a simple request, at the instance of Brien, stating that I was a little in difficulties, and saying that if he could oblige me with some money to assist me, at a future day I would manifest my gratitude to him—something to that effect, as well as I remember.

6924. Did you get an answer to your letter?—I did.

6925. Have you got that letter?—I think I gave it to Mr. Moloney—to some of the agents.

6926. Did you afterwards call at Mr. Pollock's office?—Not on the receipt of that letter.

6927. At all events did you get a letter from Mr. Pollock?—I got a second letter and on receipt of that I went to Mr. Pollock.

6928. Now, what occurred between you and Mr. Pollock?—I went in to him and told him I had some commands for him from Major Knox. He said, "Have you any line or letter?" I showed him the letter I had received, and he called me in and said—"I can give you £12 or £14." "Then," said he, "I will make it £14." I said that would not do—that it would not be sufficient for my necessities, and pay my rent and taxes. "Well," said he, "see your friend about it again; and in the mean time call in in the course of next week." So I did see Mr. Brien. Then I wrote in the course of a week or ten days, and Mr. Brien had no communication in the mean time from Major Knox; and I wrote myself and received a letter from Major Knox, saying to call in and see Mr. Pollock, that he was professionally engaged, and to see him on the subject. I did so, and he handed me £20, and I passed an I. O. U. forit.

6929. Now, did you speak to Mr. Pollock about the election?—No.

6930. Had you spoken to Mr. Brien about the election before you got the £20, or had you spoken to him about your vote?—I did.

6931. What did you say to Mr. Brien?—I said I would vote for Major Knox.

6932. Was that when you were trying to get the money?—At that time or before it.

6933. Did you promise Brien to vote for the Major?—I said I would vote for him.

6934. Did you promise him?—I did not make a promise.

6935. Or did you say you would?—But I said in the course of conversation that I certainly would.

6936. At that time did you intend to vote for him?—I did intend to vote even by not getting it.

6937. Even by not getting it?—I did; I never thought that the getting this money—the asking for it at the time—I said I would vote for him six months or three months before.

6938. At that time did you approve of the Major as a candidate for the borough?—I did.

6939. And intended to vote for him?—I certainly did.

6940. Now what made you change after you got the £20, and after you made that promise?—Well, at the time that the election took place, in November afterwards, I found that I could not conscientiously vote for him.

6941. Did you ever get any promise for voting for the other side?—Never on that occasion.

6942. Did you on previous occasions?—Yes.

6943. Whom did you vote for at the election before?—I voted for Sergeant Armstrong.

6944. Did you get anything for your vote?—I did, about nine months after.

6945. How much?—Forty pounds.

6946. Who paid you that £40?—Mr. Michael Foley.

6947. Were you ever paid for your vote before that?—Never. I voted all my life, I might say, for the Liberal party, and I never got anything, or sought it.

6948. Did you vote at Sadlier's election?—At Townley's and Sadlier's.

6949. Did you vote for Sadlier?—No.

6950. Did you vote for Townley?—I did.

6951. Did you get anything after that election?—Never.

6952. Were you examined at the trial of the petition?—I was.

6953. In Mr. Townley's case?—Oh, no.

6954. Did you vote at Sadlier's election?—I did.

6955. Whom did you vote for?—I voted for Mr. Sadlier.

6956. Was any money going after that election?—I heard there was a great deal.

6957. Did you get, on your oath, any of the money?—On my oath I did not get a penny.

6958. Did you try to get it?—Never, nor thought of it, nor would not accept it.

6959. Was it your difficulties that drove you to getting this £20 this time?—Certainly.

6960. And taking the £40 before?—Exactly.

6961. Were you independent a long time ago?—I was.

6962. Have you been unfortunate in business?—Yes.

6963. When you voted at Sergeant Armstrong's election who asked you to vote, I mean who canvassed you?—Sergeant Armstrong canvassed me, and he was accompanied by Mr. M'Niffe, and a great many.

6964. Did Mr. Michael Foley canvass you?—Well, he came to the house afterwards; I don't think he was any party in the canvass.

6965. How did you know you were to get the £40?—Why, Mr. Foley told me after the election that I would get it.

6966. At the time you voted for Sergeant Armstrong did you expect to be paid?—Certainly I did.

6967. From what did you expect that—what made you expect that?—I expected it from Mr. Foley's word.

6968. What did he say to you?—He said I would get £50. He did not mention the word forty; he said fifty.

6969. He said you would get £50?—Yes; he said perhaps if he could, £60.

6970. That was before you voted?—No, after I voted; it was indeed.

6971. At the time you voted had you any word about being paid—did you expect to be paid?—I did.

6972. What led you to the expectation of being paid?—Well, I had no expectation from any source save my own family; my stepmother and sisters said that I would be remembered, or something to that effect.

6973. They told you that you would be remembered?—Yes, and told me to vote. It was my intention.

6974. You were voting according to your principles?—I was.

6975. But you expected to be paid for it?—Well, if it was going, I expected a portion of it.

6976. Did your mother and sisters tell you that anyone had been calling on you, or calling on them?—They did.

6977. Who?—They said Mr. Foley.

6978. And that Mr. Foley gave them the word—is that the meaning of it?—That's the meaning of it.

6979. Gave them the "hard word," is that the meaning of it?—Well, I took it to be that.

FIFTH DAY.
October 9.
Patrick Neilan.

6980. Now, do you say you never were paid before you got that £40 after Sergeant Armstrong's election?—Never.

6981. You were on the Liberal side in Somers' time?—I was.

6982. Do you know anything about the way in which these mobs are got up in the town?—No.

6983. What business were you in?—I was in the butter and egg trade, and grocery, and bakery.

6984. Do you know anything about "orders" going?—No.

6985. Did you hear of "orders" going?—Never; of course I read of them in the papers, and heard some cursory observations made.

6986. When did you first make up your mind to vote for Captain Flanagan?—Well, sometime within a few months of the election; I suppose something about August or September.

6987. Who canvassed you?—I was not within at the time of the canvass; I was not in the house—I was not in the premises at the time the canvass was made.

6988. Did you never see anybody who canvassed—of course they canvassed you more than once?—What, Captain Flanagan?

6989. Captain Flanagan?—No, sir; he never canvassed me.

6990. Did you never promise your vote before you voted?—I don't remember that I did.

6991. Try and remember?—I don't remember; Captain Flanagan was on his canvass, and I was not at home at the time. He was on two occasions, I think, at the door—I was not there at the time.

6992. Did you ever promise your vote to Captain Flanagan?—I did not.

6993. Never?—Never, to my recollection; nor never spoke to the gentleman at all.

6994. Did you ever promise your vote to any friend of his?—Well, I did; I remember I did.

6995. Who was that?—I said that I would vote—I told his lordship Dr. Gillooly.

6996. The lord bishop?—Yes.

6997. Tell us what took place at that—did the bishop send for you?—No; I went myself.

6998. Well?—And I told him that I had received £20 from Major Knox, and he said that I should not have taken it, emphatically; and that's all that occurred.

6999. Did he ask you then to vote for Captain Flanagan?—He said, I think, something—I don't exactly remember the words; I think he said something that——

7000. You must tell us?—I told him, sir, I would vote for Captain Flanagan.—I said I would vote for Captain Flanagan; I remember I said so.

7001. Did the bishop say anything would be done to you if you did not vote for Captain Flanagan?—No, he did not, indeed.

7002. Were you offered any money to vote for Mr. Macdonogh at Sergeant Armstrong's election?—No.

7003. Can you account for your getting such a large sum as £40 when all the others only got £20?—Well, I don't know how to account for it, beyond simply that parties knew I was in little difficulties.

7004. At what time of the day did you vote for Sergeant Armstrong?—I think it was about two o'clock in the day; I know it was late in the day.

7005. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—You say that on two occasions gentlemen came to your house to canvass for Captain Flanagan?—Yes.

7006. You were out on both these occasions?—I was.

7007. Were any members of your family in the house—stepmother and sisters?—Yes.

7008. Did they tell you who called?—They did.

7009. Who were they?—Captain Flanagan, Mr. M'Niffe, the Rev. Father Morris, and I think several others—a man named Mathew Feeny.

7010. Were you told they came to the house in a body to canvass?—Yes.

7011. Besides these were there any other of Captain Flanagan's supporters that came to the house to see whether you would vote?—Is it afterwards, or at that time, or previously.

7012. At any time?—No, I don't remember.

7013. Try now?—Yes, Michael Foley, but I did not see him.

7014. But did any members of your family tell you that Michael Foley had come to see whether you would vote for Captain Flanagan?—I believe so, on the morning of the polling.

7015. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Did you ever speak to Father Morris about voting for Captain Flanagan?—I did.

7016. What did he say to you?—I remember that I went and told him I think about the £20. I made some remark or observation about it. That's what brought me to him; and then he said only just a few words—he said, "I would recommend you to do now as you have always done."

7017. Did he say nothing more than that?—Nothing more.

7018. Did you expect to get any money for voting for Captain Flanagan?—Well, I could not swear; I could not certainly say I could expect; I had no——

7019. No promise?—No promise; nothing to draw any expectation on.

7020. But did you not think that money would come?—Well, in case he was returned, I certainly would expect that there might be something done—the like that was done in Sergeant Armstrong's time. People might some way be complimented after a certain time with a trifle.

7021. Did your neighbours expect the same?—I cannot say. Oh, I suppose they did.

7022. Did you never talk to any of them about something going after the election?—No, never.

7023. Do you swear that?—I do, indeed.

7024. Did none of them ever talk to you about that?—Never in my recollection. I don't remember that I could tax my memory clearly with it.

7025. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Did your stepmother or sisters say anything to you of what Michael Foley had said?—They said that Michael Foley was there, and asked was I in.

7026. Tell us, now, everything?—I will certainly. I will conceal nothing. They told him I was out and so I was. They said that he expressed a little surprise that I would be out so early—it was about seven o'clock in the morning. Then he told them that when I would return he would come back—for me to remain in the house and he would call again. He did not call. I remained there then till about two o'clock in the day. Several parties came in to ask me to go out and vote. I said I was waiting.

7027. Did Foley come to you?—No.

7028. Did you get any message from him?—Yes, but I could not say it came from him directly, although he said it came from him—he had his authority in coming.

7029. Now was it after that message that you went up to vote?—I went with the same person to vote but not immediately. A couple of hours from that I went to vote with the same person.

7030. The messenger that came from Foley?—Yes, Mr. Phillips went up.

7031. Now, do you remember anything that was said to you that day by Phillips?—Not a word, but he asked——

7032. Did he say anything about your vote—what did he say to you?—He said nothing but to come along with him down to the poll. I said I was waiting for Foley, and certainly he would not disappoint me; that the moment he came I would go along with him. He said, "Will you take me for him?"

7033. And that you should be quite safe?—Well, he said nothing of that sort. I went down along with him.

7034. What he said was, would you take him for Foley?—"Won't you do that?" said he.

7035. "Won't you do that?"—Yes.

(The Witness was allowed to withdraw.)

Michael Foley sworn and examined.

7036. The Chief Commissioner.—Mr. Foley, you are in business in Sligo?—Yes.

7037. What is your business?—I am in the butter trade.

7038. Have you been an elector for some time?—Yes.

7039. For how many years?—For twenty years.

7040. Do you remember the first election you voted at?—Well, I do.

7041. Was it between Wynne and Somers?—Somers? Yes. I voted for Somers.

7042. Did you give £40 to the last witness?—I did.

7043. How much money did you get for distribution at that time amongst the electors?—£180.

7044. Had you a list?—I had.

7045. Just read out the list of the electors you paid and the sums you paid them?—Patrick Neilan, £40; George Blair, £15; Michael Currid, £15; Owen Bruen, £20; Edward Gethins, £15; M'Getrick, £15; Patrick Leonard, £15: Martin Jordan, £15; Francis Tracy, £15; the widow Cleary, £15; it was not I but a clerk that gave it to her; her husband died after the election; he voted for the Sergeant.

7046. Now, how did you make out that list and know you were to pay these men?—When I heard after the election, some six or nine months, that Mr. Byrne was to come to town to give some compensation to distressed people I went and claimed something for those that I canvassed if it was going, and if not, of course, they did not expect it.

7047. Then, had you canvassed all these ten men?—I did.

7048. And from your position in the town, I presume, influenced them?—Well, they had confidence like in me. I never promised anything.

7049. But they had confidence?—If anything in the way of money was going—compensation to give out after that.

7050. That you would get it?—That I would get it for them.

7051. Did you tell them to go and vote?—Some I did and some I did not. I was not present at the voting of any of them, except one man—Blair.

7052. Had all these men belonged to the Liberal party?—All.

7053. Had you anything to do with the consultation after the election as to whether it was right that the money should be paid or not, or did you only hear that Mr. Byrne and Mr Tracy had come with the money?—That's what I heard.

7054. And you had nothing to do with the previous consultation?—No.

7055. Had you ever any money to divide before that?—Never.

7056. Or since?—Or since.

7057. Did you canvass the same men for Captain Flanagan?—Some I did and some I did not.

7058. The majority of these ten men did you?—I canvassed some of them.

7059. And they voted for the Captain?—They did.

7060. Most of them?—Most of them.

7061. I believe nearly all?—I dare say the whole of them did; at least that is my recollection.

7062. I am applying to you that knew the town before this—did the whole vote for the Captain?—They were of that opinion.

7063. Now, at Captain Flanagan's election had these men the same confidence in you, to use your own phrase, that if any money was going you would get it for them?—Well, there was nothing at all about it. They did not consider him so independent a man as the Sergeant, or had confidence that they would get money, as far as I could hear. It was not calculated amongst them.

7064. Was the hard word amongst them at the previous election?—Well, some of them thought they would.

7065. How do you know they thought they would?—Some of the electors I heard saying that they thought they would get something if any was going in that way; but, of course, they were not sure of it.

7066. Who told you they thought they would get something if anything was going?—Well, I heard a report through the town,—not merely through the electors that I asked, but, I remember, through the town, that Mr. Byrne was coming to town, and very likely would give some compensation.

7067. Had Mr. Byrne been down at the election?—Oh, yes.

7068. I mean at the time of the polling?—Yes.

7069. Where was it you gave in your list of the men to be paid?—In the hotel.

7070. To whom?—To Mr. Phillips, Mr. Conry, Mr. Keighron, and Mr. Campbell.

7071. Were these sums that you have given evidence of as having been paid the sums that you demanded?—These were the very sums I demanded.

7072. I suppose you put down fairly what you thought the men were entitled to?—Well, I thought so.

7073. Now, you were on the Liberal side again at this last election?—Yes.

7074. You saw the mobs?—I did.

7075. Do you know anything about the management of those mobs?—Nothing.

7076. Don't you know very well that those mobs would not go into the street without being paid for it?—Well, indeed, curiosity led many people to go into that mob.

7077. Didn't you see many of them drunk?—Well, I did.

7078. Do you imagine they paid for the liquor themselves—is that your experience of elections?—I cannot say. It is likely that they got some money to drink, but I cannot say; I never classed with them.

7079. Do you know the houses where the orders were given? Can you give us any information about that?—No, I know nothing at all about it.

7080. Are you telling us the truth?—Not a hap'orth about it do I know.

7081. Did you see mobs drinking in any particular places or public houses?—No.

7082. Or getting a treat there?—No; I am a teetotaller myself, and I don't look after the like.

7083. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Did you hear of any public house where they did drink?—No. There used to be crowds through the streets, and I did not know whether they used to be drinking in those houses or not.

7084. How was it that Neilan got £40, and all the others less?—Being the poorest man, and in distress.

7085. That was the only reason?—That was the reason.

7086. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Do you remember canvassing him before the last election for Captain Flanagan?—I do.

7087. And talking to his stepmother and sisters?—Yes.

7088. Did they talk about his poverty?—Yes, they did.

7089. Both the women and Neilan himself?—Oh, yes, I knew his poverty before myself.

7090. They referred to his poverty when you were talking about the election?—Yes.

7091. Did you give them to understand that if there was anything going he would come in for a share, after the last election?—Well, I did. I thought that if there was anything going he was the poorest man, and I thought he would get something.

7092. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Did not the men you canvassed at the last election believe they would?—At the last election?

7093. Yes?—No; nor did they believe at the first election of Sergeant Armstrong that they would get money either, if was not forthcoming.

7094. Did they not believe it would be forthcoming?—No, they did not.

FIFTH DAY.
October 9.
Michael Foley.

7095. Did they think it?—They might have thought it; but as to craving or insisting on it to me they never did.

7096. At Captain Flanagan's election did they believe they would not get money?—Well, I did not hear anything of it amongst them.

7097. No talk at all about it?—Nothing; they had no hopes of it.

7098. But did they think they would not get it?—They thought the man had not means enough.

7099. Had not means to pay anything?—Well, so they thought.

(The witness withdrew.)

Stephen Hughes was called.

The Chief Commissioner.—I may mention, in reference to Mr. Stokes and Mr. Cherry, whose names have been called every day, and who are residents of Sligo, that if this inquiry shall have to be adjourned for month after month, it shall last until they have been examined.

Stephen Hughes.

Stephen Hughes sworn and examined.

7100. The Chief Commissioner.—Were you examined at Carrick?—No; I was not.

7101. You are an elector?—I am.

7102. Whom did you vote for at the last election?—Captain Flanagan.

7103. Were you paid any money at the last election or after it?—No.

7104. Did you receive any money after Sergeant Armstrong's election?—I did.

7105. How much?—Twenty pounds.

7106. Who paid you?—I don't know who gave it to me. I got it in Bryan Chrystal's house, and signed an I. O. U. as a receipt for it. I could not say who gave it to me.

7107. Who was it that canvassed you?—Captain Flanagan himself.

7108. I mean at the previous election?—Sergeant Armstrong and the gentlemen who accompanied him.

7109. Did you expect that any money would be going?—By no means.

7110. When did you first hear of any money going?—Oh, I heard it whispered about a few days, I think, before it was given.

7111. Who told you about it?—Well, when we would drop out of the house in the evening, and stand about the corner, and have a chat, one neighbour with the other, we had a talk about it.

7112. Whom did you apply to to get the money—how did you know that you were to go to Chrystal's?—I was told in the street to call over.

7113. Who told you?—To the best of my opinion, Mr. Geraghty told me; I am not quite sure. Mr. Geraghty, the son-in-law of Bryan Chrystal.

7114. He told you to go over, and that it would be all right?—No; he told me that if I would look over to Bryan Chrystal's in the evening, he would be glad to see me.

7115. Had you ever been there before?—Oh, I had, often.

7116. Where did Mr. Chrystal pay you?—I don't say that Mr. Chrystal paid me.

7117. Who paid you?—I don't know.

7118. You don't know?—No.

7119. Was it a man you never saw before?—It was some one of the two—either Jerry Geraghty or Bryan Chrystal—but on my solemn oath, I don't know which.

7120. Were they both present?—They were.

7121. And one of them gave you the money?—Some one of them gave it to me.

7122. And you gave an I. O. U. for it?—Yes.

7123. I suppose you were a supporter of the Liberal party?—Yes, on that occasion.

7124. Had you ever voted before?—I had.

7125. Whom did you vote for?—I think I voted for Captain Flanagan.

7126. That was afterwards?—I think I voted for Mr. Wynne.

7127. Did you look on him as a member of the Liberal party?—Oh, no; but he was a handle that we used to get rid of a man that was looked on as a nuisance here, namely Somers.

7128. Were you one of the thirty Liberals who voted against Somers at his last election?—Yes.

7129. You looked on him as a nuisance?—That was the general feeling of the Liberals.

7130. Was that on account of his not being able to pay you?—By no means. It was not.

7131. Well, what was it?—Well, he always—it was the belief that he always divided the Liberal party.

7132. Do you mean as regards the politics of the borough?—Yes.

7133. Very well. That was quite right; and you were one of the thirty or forty that finally got rid of him by voting against him?—Just so.

7134. At the previous election when Somers was unseated because of the poll-book having been tampered with, had you voted for him then?—No, I voted for Mr. Wynne on that occasion.

7135. On that occasion also?—Yes.

7136. Had you ever voted before that?—No.

7137. Now was any money going after Mr. Wynne's election?—Oh, certainly not.

7138. Certainly not?—To my knowledge.

7139. Had you ever got any money before Wynne's election?—Oh, never.

7140. Or had been promised any?—Before or after; unless the Sergeant's affair.

7141. Was that the only money you ever got to vote?—The only money I ever got or ever expected.

7142. Was "the word" going at the last election between Major Knox and Captain Flanagan, that there would be any money?—Ah, no, I think not. I believe the feel of the town was that they looked upon Captain Flanagan as a poor man, and that he was coming forward on the present occasion more to fight their battle than his own. I think it was about the notion of a great many that a very important question was about to be tried at that time.

7143. Do you say that you honestly voted for him and expected no money?—Oh, unquestionably.

7144. And never expected a shilling for voting for Captain Flanagan?—Never did, nor do not.

7145. What are you in business?—I am a provision dealer, and cattle feeder and dealer.

7146. Do you know anything about the organization of the mobs?—No.

7147. Did you see the mobs here?—Oh, I did.

7148. Did you see strangers in the town?—I saw some countrymen in town.

7149. You know that windows were broken?—I heard they were broken. I did not leave my own house that evening. A scandalous affair it was too.

7150. You use a very proper phrase—"scandalous affair?"—Very much so indeed.

7151. With respect to that violence that disgraced the town can you give the Court any information as to who got up those mobs?—Oh, by no means; I did not know the least about it.

7152. Don't you know that these men would not have gone through the streets unless they were paid for it?—I know no such thing.

7153. Can you give an opinion on the subject?—

Well, my opinion is that at the time they felt very strongly upon the Church question that was about to be brought forward—that the very humblest individual amongst them thought strongly upon that point.

7154. Do you mean the men from the county of Leitrim?—I do.

7155. That that brought them here?—I believe the very humblest individual had his own opinion on that point.

7156. Quite right. They had a perfect right to it. Did you attribute the violence of the mobs partly to that?—I did.

7157. Did you see many of the townspeople—I do not ask you for names, but did you see many of the townspeople in the mob, or men from the country?—I assure you I cannot tell you who was in it or who was not. I did not take any particular notice of it.

7158. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Before the last election were you canvassed by ——?—No, I was not. I never saw the man at all till the morning of the poll, when I saw him in the tally-room at the court-house.

7159. Before the Sergeant's election, were you canvassed by Bryan Chrystal?—No, never. I never saw the man during the whole election unless in the ordinary way in the streets. On the morning of the poll I saw him in the tally-room beyond.

7160. Was Geraghty to meet you before the Sergeant's election?—No, he was not; I never had a word with him.

7161. Was there any particular friend of Bryan Chrystal that canvassed you for the Sergeant?—No; the Sergeant canvassed me individually himself, at my own door, and I gave it to him then and there freely and without hesitation. I was listening to Barry yesterday giving his evidence. He stated that I told him I got money from Keighron. Well, Mr. Barry's memory is at fault.

7162. It was from Chrystal that you got the money?—Yes.

7163. You know Keighron was said to have been paid money at some time?—He said I told him I got money from Keighron. I never got any money from Keighron, nor never had a conversation with him on election matters. If all he said—if his whole statement was as true as that he will require to reconsider it.

7164. The Chief Commissioner.—Never mind that. Speak about yourself, and not other persons?—I never had the conversation with him. I never told him any such thing.

7165. Do you wish to say anything else?—No.

[The witness withdrew.]

Thomas Kavanagh re-examined.

7166. The Chief Commissioner.—Have you been thinking over the difference in recollection between you and Mr. James M'Dowell as to the letter for Clithero?—I have, and I have recollected that I did not write the letter, but I tell you what I did. I wrote a memorandum on a small sheet of paper, in my opinion, in a letter written by his wife to him at Clithero—I presume in what he calls a letter—but certainly and positively I never directed a letter to Mr. M'Dowell while he was there. I assure you that I was inclined to come up this morning, but I was not able to leave my bed, having been ill since Wednesday.

7167. I can well understand that. The object of the Court is to discover the truth?—I know that; but I felt it very much yesterday, for I have been before all the judges in the land, and they never censured me in their lives.

7168. He swore positively?—He did; but I think I told you I did not believe it.

7169. You wrote the memorandum?—I did.

7170. What was it?—I could not tell you a word in it, I pledge you my oath. Whatever was in it I presume he told you, and I believe it was so.

7171. Do you believe that?—I believe he would not tell an untruth.

7172. I presume you know M'Dowell a very long time?—I do, and I believe he would not tell an untruth.

7173. Did you speak to him since?—I did.

7174. You were trying to ascertain what was the fact?—I talked it over, and he told me that he received a letter, and I recollected it. That's last night. I recollected that I did.

7175. That's quite fair. Did you then write to him to Manchester, suggesting to him to go to Clithero?—I suppose that was the contents of it; I believe it was when he states so; but I pledge you my oath I could not tell you a word of it.

7176. You did not remember it?—I did not remember it.

7177. And I now accept your answer when you say that. Now I must ask you who told you to write to him to Manchester to tell him to go?—Well, if I was told by anybody it must have been Hignell, but I won't be positive.

7178. You believe now that it was?—I believe it was.

7179. That is from your recollection, putting the different matters together, and conversing with Mr. M'Dowell?—Exactly.

7180. What did Mr. Hignell, according to your recollection, say to you?—I could not tell you, I assure you; if I could I would willingly tell it to you.

7181. Do you remember why Hignell said you were to go to Clithero?—I could not say; I suppose you will have him here, and he will tell you himself.

7182. Did you know at that time that the trial of the petition was coming on?—I did.

7183. And I presume you talked with Hignell about it?—Well, I don't know that I did, but I did know it was coming on.

7184. Did you know, from your knowledge of law, that these men were to be examined at the petition?—Of course I should have known it, for they were subpœnaed.

7185. Did Hignell then tell you in plain language that these men were to be kept out of the way?—He did not.

7186. Did you understand that that was the object of what you were doing?—Well, I believe it was.

7187. You know, now, that you and Hignell were then engaged in trying to prevent these men from appearing in court?—Well, I don't know that; I don't say I was endeavouring to keep them from the court; I presume that's the way to look at it; but if I thought I was doing the slightest thing wrong I would not have done it.

7188. Very well; that is a fair answer. I tell you now that you ought to have known that you were doing a wrong thing?—I presume, now, that you tell me I do believe so.

7189. In trying to keep any witness from a court of justice?—And I tell you I will not do it again. All I got is trouble and annoyance by it up to the present.

7190. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—As you have been considering the matter last night, may I ask you when the M'Mullens came to your house first had you had any previous communication from anyone?—I can swear positively that I had not—none.

7191. And having had no previous communication from anybody, do you still adhere to your answer, that they showed you no letter?—They did not; that I am positive on.

7192. You had no knowledge of them at all before?—None whatever; not the slightest. I never saw them until the day they came to my house.

7193. And you did not say to them, knowing nothing about what they said, "I know nothing about you, and you may go about your business?"—I did not.

FIFTH DAY. October 9.

Thomas Kavanagh.

7194. But you went down and got them a lodging at M'Dowell's?—I did.

7195. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Was a card shown to you?—No, nor anything in the world with writing or pencil on it, or anything else.

7196. Nothing in the world in the way of a scrap of paper?—Nothing in the world. I assure you I would tell it to you without hesitation if it were otherwise.

7197. The Chief Commissioner.—We recalled you to-day, Mr. Kavanagh, in order that you might have the earliest opportunity of reconsidering what occurred?—Well, I was determined to come back myself.

7198. We now see no reason to keep you here?—Thank you. I would have come into court this morning, but I was not able to leave my bed up to twelve o'clock to-day.

[The court was then adjourned to the following morning at ten o'clock.]

SIXTH DAY. October 11.

SIXTH DAY.

MONDAY, OCTOBER 11, 1869.

The Commissioners sat at ten o'clock.

Mr. Henry Lyons appeared on the witness table, and said—You wished me to produce my books?

Mr. Henry Lyons.

7199. The Chief Commissioner.—Yes, Mr. Lyons. I suppose it is so long ago, you do not care to look at your bank-books?—No, it was very fortunate I had these books. [Bill produced.] That is the bill I was speaking about—my memory is not so good now as it was—and I find the bill is for £20, and not £25 as I stated.

7200. This I will ask you about afterwards?—I went to the bank, and I found the bank-book corresponds with my book.

7201. Show me on what day the bill drawn by you on Moses Monds was put to your credit, and for what amount?—£800 was what I got; the bill is £500, and I drew my account over. Here is the bill, and the date of it.

7202. August 1, £493 11*s.* 3*d.*?—Exactly.

7203. That is the first entry of money connected with the election?—It is.

7204. On that day you discounted the £500 bill drawn by you on Moses Monds?—Exactly. You will see when that bill fell due.

7205. What is the next entry of money put to your credit in connexion with the election?—The next is that bill renewed. I said it was £800, but I find it was only £500.

7206. Was that all the money you received for the election?—That's all. I overdrew my account for the rest.

7207. Tell me in order the cheques you gave for the election?—Here they are: August 1, £250.

7208. To whom did you give that?—I don't know whether it was to myself or not I gave it. That's the first cheque. On the 6th, £250 more; on the 10th, £150—this cheque (pointing to another) doesn't belong to the election, it belongs to a house I have in Manchester; looking at the balance you will find my account was overdrawn at that time.

7209. Enumerate all the cheques?—On the 13th August, £150; and that's the whole of the £800.

7210. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—On the 10th, £150; and on the 13th, £150, also?—Exactly.

7211. The Chief Commissioner.—Had these cheques the effect of overdrawing your account at the bank?—Yes, I had to go to my private book. I generally have two bank-books—one for my trade, and one for my own private transactions.

7212. Looking at these books, and refreshing your memory by the aid of them, was it considered, originally, that £500 would be enough for the election?—It wasn't. £800 was considered necessary. Mr. Macdonogh knew that there was money raised for him; he seemed to convey to you that he didn't understand anything about it. That's not the fact; he did know about it.

7213. Do you say, as an accurate business man, that, looking at these books, and refreshing your memory by their aid, what you put down was an £800 bill?—It was. I thought it was but for £500, but I find, on looking at my books, it was for £800; so that I overdrew my account at the time. After coming from Dublin, I will show that I only lodged in bank the amount I had paid. I didn't lodge the £50, but only the £800. You seemed to think that I was governed by the opening of Parliament in the time I selected for going to Dublin, and getting the money from Mr. Macdonogh. You will see, I think, that Parliament was not opened at all at the time, and that I wasn't governed by the twenty-one days, or by anything of the sort.

7214. You are quite right, Mr. Lyons. I see that you lodged on the 25th January, 1861—cash, £800?—When I chequed over, I lodged in the very same way. I didn't lodge the £50—you see I didn't. You see I thought when giving my evidence the other day, that it was in February I lodged the £800. You now see that it is not so, and that it was in January I lodged it, so that I certainly was not governed by whether Parliament was opened or not at the time.

7215. It is perfectly plain, Mr. Lyons, that you were not?—There were one or two things mentioned on Saturday that I wish to explain.

7216. You had better explain now?—I mentioned in my evidence Mr. Williams's name as the person that got part of that money.

7217. Thomas Williams?—Yes; what was in my mind was that Mr. Charles Sedley had mentioned Mr. Williams's name as the person for whom he left a parcel in his parlour, which I thought went to Mr. Williams. It appears it didn't go to him, and I want to justify Mr. Williams.

7218. Quite right?—My first impression was that Mr. Williams was the man that got and distributed the money, but I understand it wasn't he that really distributed it. The matter was between him and Mr. Sedley. Mr. Williams, it seems, wouldn't take it; and he mentioned the name of a man named John Burke. What I want to say is, I hope I will not get the credit of casting any reflection on Mr. Williams, for I wouldn't do it to any man.

7219. I am perfectly sure you would not?—He sent for Burke, and I don't know what occurred afterwards.

7220. How was the £50 disposed of?—That was given in lieu of interest, and to pay incidental expenses. The interest should be about £26 for £800—the rate of interest was very high at the time, it was five or six per cent; and that was to come out of the £50. Mr. Rowlett stated that I gave him three £10 notes for distribution among electors. I don't know—I don't recollect whether I did or not. He said I did, and I suppose I did. I don't recollect it, but I have a bad memory.

7221. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Did anyone get three £10 notes from you for that purpose?—I don't remember.

7222. But if anyone did, it must have come out of the £50?—It must. The £20 is entirely a different thing that came afterwards. I had no anticipation of that.

7223. The Chief Commissioner.—At all events, not a penny of that money you kept yourself?—Not a sixpence of it, I always looked on it as a loan to Mr. Macdonogh, for which I would have interest

7224. Is there anything else you wish to say?—I think not. If Mr. Macdonogh wanted to convey to you that he knew nothing of the raising of that money, I don't agree with that. He did know of it, and if he said he didn't, he shouldn't have said it—honesty is always the best policy.

7225. It is due to yourself to explain the entire matter, as Mr. Macdonogh stated in his evidence to us that he neither knew of the raising of the money, or what it was for?—I thought he seemed to say he didn't know—he seemed to convey that.

7226. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Mr. Macdonogh conveyed that he did not know that the money was raised to distribute it among the voters?—Nor did I know it. I am sure he knew of the money being got for him.

7227. The Chief Commissioner.—Had you any conversation with Mr. Macdonogh about the £800 before you advanced it?—Yes. As far as my recollection serves me, what he said was—he said he was in a fix, he didn't seem to have brought down with him sufficient money from Dublin. He said he had no money except as much as would pay his personal expenses, and that he would have to go to Dublin for it. He said he could have his cheques paid here, but that he didn't like to draw on the branch bank in Sligo, lest any observations should be made about it.

7228. What I want to know is, do you remember telling Mr. Macdonogh that the money was to be given to voters—can you give us any information as to whether he knew that the money was to be given to voters?—I wouldn't take it on myself to say that. I don't know what he would expect it to be given for else.

7229. How did you fix on £800?—There was no fixing on it.

7230. Can you now say to whom you gave the money?—I gave away three parcels of it, but I couldn't remember exactly the particular persons to whom I gave them. I know Moses Monds got one parcel.

7231. That is £250?—I can't say exactly.

7232. Was it money or cheques you gave?—I think I gave the money, and not cheques.

7233. Had you cheques at the time?—No, I had the blocks.

7234. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—You stated the last day that you gave the money to "Moses Monds, Mr. Sedley, my brother (who is now dead), and to Thomas Williams;" is that so?—I was wrong there. I didn't give any to Thomas Williams. I sent money to Mr. Sedley's house, which I thought was for Williams, but I now understand it was not for him.

7235. It would be very desirable if you could try and recollect whether you gave money to four persons?—No, I gave it to only three.

7236. There were four cheques?—I recollect that two of them were given to my brother—two cheques for £150 each.

7237. That accounts for it—Mr. Monds got one for £250, Mr. Sedley got another for the same amount; and your brother got two of £150 each—which makes up the £800?—That's it, as well as I can recollect. If there is any discrepancy in anything that happened here after I left on Saturday, I will give you any explanation you may require.

7238. The Chief Commissioner.—I will ask you to tell what happened at the contested election between Sergeant Armstrong and Mr. Macdonogh—Mr. Sedley stated that you were the person that got the £490 from Mr. Shekleton, and that you knew it was to be given in bribery?—That's not so. I wouldn't take the money, although some of the gentlemen pressed me to take it. The word "bribery" wasn't used at all.

7239. You know that during a contested election you do not use the word "bribery" at all?—I wouldn't take it at all—I got £30, part of it, for money I paid.

7240. Didn't you know that the money was for the purpose of bribing the electors of Sligo?—I knew it was to be distributed after the election.

7241. Do you believe that any portion of it was paid before the election?—I don't believe that a shilling of it was paid before the election.

7242. Did not you believe that it was ultimately to be given for bribery?—I did believe it.

7243. Was there a list of the electors submitted to the gentlemen present when Mr. Shekleton gave the £490?—I think not. I heard Mr. Sedley state that there was, but I don't remember it.

7244. And that you and Mr. Williams went through the town that night, to tell the electors that money was going?—That's a matter I don't believe.

7245. Did you or Mr. Williams leave that room on that night to give the hard word to the electors?—I don't believe I did—it might have come out afterwards that Mr. Sedley had the money; but I don't believe that either Williams or I went through the town before the election, to tell them that the money was there.

7246. Not to tell them the money was there, but to tell them to go and vote?—I didn't. I went straight home.

7247. Did you go to, that night, or call on any of the electors?—Decidedly not. I think I went straight home that night.

7248. Did you think that £500 would carry the election?—I don't think I thought whether it would or not.

7249. Mr. Stokes did not vote for Mr. Macdonogh at that election?—I heard him say so. I think he didn't. I have no recollection whether he did or not.

7250. Was there any promise of money made at that election?—I think not.

7251. If there was no promise why did you afterwards take £30 for the money you paid—wasn't that part of the money that was going?—It was. They all believed they would get money, but they said nothing about it. There were some who didn't expect any money, and did get it—they made no particular inquiry about it.

7252. We have it in evidence that money was going and was distributed among three different sets of people—was the £800 you first distributed given to electors—every shilling of it?—I think so.

7253. That was one occasion—then there was £490 on the second occasion that Mr. Macdonogh was a candidate?—Yes.

7254. Then there was a sum of £1,480 distributed among voters after Sergeant Armstrong's election?—I know nothing of that.

7255. Do you remember what the polling day was on the election of 1860?—I don't remember—it may be the 12th or the 13th, or the 10th. I don't know what time it was.

7256. Do you believe that that money was paid at once after they voted on the day of the election—are you chequed before the 14th?—I am. I don't believe that the money was paid away for a long time after the election.

7257. Was the plan then to give the money to the gentlemen you named as trustees for the electors?—I think so—that's my recollection.

7258. I suppose the electors will trust gentlemen in town, that they know?—They knew nothing whatever of trustees in the matter; they didn't know a ha'porth about it before the election.

7259. Was there, in your opinion, any occasion to bribe at that election?—I don't know. I believe that, whether they were to get money or not, the masses would have voted as they did vote.

7260. That is, they voted according to their principles—but the money kept them up to their colours—in fact they required to be strengthened?—Yes.

7261. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Do you remember whether Mr. Macdonogh was in the room when Mr. Shekleton came in?—I can't say. I know he was there at some time, but I can't say at what time it was—he was in and out of the room, I know.

7262. With regard to the first election I believe you said you gave Mr. Macdonogh to understand that the £800 was to be given among the voters?—I believe he was aware that the money was received for him.

SIXTH DAY.
October 11.
Mr. Henry Lyons.

7263. Did you mention to him the names of the persons to whom it was to be given as trustees?—No, I think not. I don't think I did.

7264. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—You said that the £800 was given to certain persons as trustees for the electors—that was the phrase, I believe, you used—what I want to know is, did these persons require the money to be given before they used their influence in asking the electors to vote?—I don't know—they were the judges of that themselves, they didn't use any expressions of the kind to me. I believe they would rather have it before, than wait for it until the election was over.

7265. Did these persons come to you to ask for the money or the cheques, or did you take the money round to them and volunteer it to them?—It was understood that the money was to be got, and there was no way of getting it except by discounting a bill.

7266. That is, it was understood that the £800 was to be got. What I want to know is, if the money that you took and distributed away in the four packages was not to be paid before the election?—It wasn't to be paid before the election. I didn't want to keep it; if these persons would rather have it I had no objection.

7267. Did they rather have it?—I can't say.

7268. What do you believe?—It's very likely they would rather have it.

7269. You know they were dealing immediately with the voters among whom the money was to be distributed?—Yes.

7270. You stated that you didn't believe that on the night before the election of 1865 it was mentioned to the electors that £500 was to be distributed among them?—I know I didn't mention it myself.

7271. To no one?—Not to a single one of them, to the best of my belief.

7272. Mr. Sedley produced a list here which he said was made up that evening, a list of voters to whom money was to be given?—The list was made up when he paid the people. In general, there is a list gone through before the election—a list of the electors, for the purpose of classifying them into Conservatives and Liberals.

7273. That was not the character of the list Mr. Sedley spoke of?—I can't charge my memory with any other list.

[Original list referred to by Mr. Sedley handed to Witness.]

7274. The Chief Commissioner.—Mr. Sedley stated that the names were first taken down there that evening, and that the sums were actually filled in afterwards?—It may be so; I don't know; I have no recollection of it. Mr. Sedley may be correct; he may be more accurate than I am, as he had charge of the matter.

7275. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—You say you never saw that list before?—I don't know that I ever saw it in my life. I may have seen it.

7276. Did you ever read it before?—I don't know that I ever read it in my life. It is all in one handwriting.

7277. Yes, it is in Mr. Sedley's handwriting; he handed it in himself. That meeting, I believe, was called for the purpose of discussing and considering the prospects of Mr. Macdonogh's election?—I think so; I don't know.

7278. When you say you think so, have you a doubt of the object of it?—My friends met three or four times on election business.

7279. But at this particular meeting when Mr. Macdonogh was present, and when he retired to rest and said he would not pay any money, were you not discussing the prospects of the election?—I can't say what occurred; we were talking, I suppose, of the prospects of the election, and, probably, going over the list of voters.

7280. At that meeting was not it discussed, or, at all events, mentioned, that a great number of voters who were Conservatives wanted strengthening, so to speak?—It may be so; I couldn't swear to it.

7281. What do you believe?—I must believe that it was the case from the circumstances.

7282. You recollect money being produced by Mr. Shekleton at that meeting?—I do.

7283. And you do not recollect it was stated that it was for the purpose of strengthening doubtful voters on the Conservative side?—That's admitted.

7284. Do you believe that the voters would be best strengthened by being told nothing at all about that money?—I don't know; I am not aware that I mentioned to a single soul that there was money for them.

7285. Do you believe that the £490 was distributed among the persons who proposed to canvass the electors again?—No. I don't believe it was. I believe that Mr. Sedley got the money.

7286. The Chief Commissioner.—He swore he got the £490 as trustee, in the same way as you gave the £800 to others as trustees for the electors at the previous election?—Yes.

7287. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Do you really believe that the people were not told that money was going?—I know I didn't tell them. I went home straight.

7288. Do you swear you did not go to any of the electors that night?—I swore it two or three times already. I didn't go to any of the electors that night. I went home straight.

7289. You know you told us that you gave £30 to Stokes?—No, it was to Wallace I gave it.

7290. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Did you the next morning give the hard word to the electors that money was going?—I don't remember that I gave it to any one at all.

7291. But you are not sure whether you did or not?—I can't charge my memory with it. They might be told that they would get it in the proper time if there was any money going, or something like that.

7292. Had you any conversation with Mr. Stokes on the subject?—I don't remember that I had.

7293. The Chief Commissioner.—When did you see Mr. Stokes last?—I am not sure. I don't think I saw him for a month or so. I am only after coming from Belfast, and I didn't see him for some time.

7294. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Have you any notion where he is?—Not the least in the world.

7295. Or where Mr. Cherry is?—No.

7296. The Chief Commissioner. I want to have it clear about these bills—you drew the £500 bill on August 1st?—Yes.

7297. That was due on the 3rd November, it being a three months' bill?—Yes.

7298. You renewed that bill on the 5th November?—Yes.

7299. And it became due on the 8th February, 1861?—Exactly. That was charged to my account, and is the end of that transaction.

7300. Was there a bill of yours drawn on James Johnson?—It is not mine.

7301. Why was that transaction delayed until the 24th May, 1861?—It wasn't delayed at all—that was an additional thing he was getting.

7302. That bill was for his accommodation?—It was. He was making noise about getting more money; he thought that Williams had money and annoyed him very badly. Williams complained of it, and my brother who lived opposite, in order to quiet him, cashed the bill for him. When the bill was due, my brother took it up and said I should pay it. I didn't know how much James Johnson got.

7303. He got £20?—I didn't pay it to him. This was a copy of the bank-book, and is in pencil.

Mr. James Kidd sworn and examined.

7304. The Chief Commissioner.—You were a supporter of Sergeant Armstrong at his election?—I was.

7305. And you voted for him?—I did.

7306. I do not know whether you proposed or seconded him at the nomination?—I did neither. Mr. O'Connell proposed, and Mr. Campbell seconded him.

7307. Previous to the election, was there any discussion as to the necessity of strengthening the voters on his side by money?—No, not a syllable.

7308. You were not present at any meeting where that was discussed?—No.

7309. Did you hear that it was discussed?—No.

7310. How soon after the election did the £1,480 come to be considered, as far as you know?—As far as I know, three gentlemen came down from Dublin—Mr. Tracy, Mr. Byrne, and Mr. Harkin.

7311. Is that Mr. Harkin, the member of the bar?—Yes, I think so. They were to have arrived here on Good Friday, but the train didn't run on that as on ordinary days, and they didn't until Saturday. On Saturday evening they asked some supporters of Sergeant Armstrong to attend a meeting at the Imperial hotel. It was an inconvenient day for a meeting, and in consequence there was some difficulty in getting persons to attend. It was then mentioned that the object of the visit was that they got applications from some parties in Sligo, and that they had come to inquire about them.

7312. Up to that time had not you heard of applications for money having been sent to Dublin from persons in Sligo?—I had, cursorily, but I didn't interfere with the applications for money.

7313. From whom did you hear the applications had come?—I understood the applications came from Mr. Phillips and Mr. Petrie.

7314. Did the meeting come off on Easter Saturday?—Yes, that evening.

7315. What occurred at the meeting—were there lists produced?—Several parties, I think, made out a list at the meeting; there wasn't any list produced, I think.

7316. How then were the ninety-seven names arrived at?—Everyone at the meeting stated that there was a certain number of voters who said that if there was anything going he should get it. Each one was asked to furnish the names of these parties, and we did so.

7317. Was it at that meeting that the ninety-seven names and the £1,480 were arrived at?—It was.

7318. Did Mr. Tracy and Mr. Byrne arrange that the money should be procured?—They mentioned the object of their visit; they said you had better look into the matter yourselves, we will now leave you, and when you are ready you can call us back.

7319. Was there any other meeting?—No.

7320. Who were present at that meeting as having authority to discuss—there was yourself and Mr. Phillips?—I think Patrick Keighron, Mr. Conry, and Harper, Campbell, and Mr. Petrie.

7321. Anyone else?—I forget if there were any others.

7322. Did you afterwards consent to have anything to say to the distribution of the money?—I did.

7323. How much did you distribute?—£90, to five voters.

7324. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Did you say Mr. Petrie was present at that meeting?—Yes.

7325. And Mr. Phillips?—Yes. I don't mean to speak with precision of those present at the meeting, I give only my recollection. Possibly Mr. Petrie wasn't there.

7326. The Chief Commissioner.—To whom did you give the £90?—I gave Richard Hanna £20; John Brady, £20; James O'Brien, £20; Charles Gillen, £15, and Edward Crummy, £15.

7327. How did it happen that you were selected as agent to distribute money among these men?—It happened that I knew something of them.

7328. Had you canvassed them?—I don't think I had canvassed them.

7329. Were any of them in your own employment?—No; Gillen had, he was then in Ballyderb.

7330. Had you written for him to come over to the election?—I had.

7331. That was canvassing Gillen?—Yes.

7332. You used your influence as an old friend?—I did. It was understood that he was to come. I don't think, therefore, that I canvassed him.

7333. How did you know the others?—They lived in the neighbourhood.

7334. Did you ever on any other occasion distribute money?—Never.

7335. Or can give us any information as to money having been distributed as on this occasion?—I don't know anything of it; this was the first occasion I was mixed up in the matter.

7336. Did you know anything of money going at the last election?—I did not.

7337. You voted, I believe, for Captain Flanagan?—Yes.

7338. Can you give us any information about the mobs that were in the town on the day of polling, and how they were procured?—I believe the statements about the mobs are grossly exaggerated. What I thought a very extraordinary thing was that the night before the polling all the local constabulary were sent away from town by railway, and strangers were brought in who didn't know the people. I don't know with what object or from what motive that was done. I only state the facts.

7339. What reason was there for the withdrawal of the local constabulary?—I don't know; they were sent away from the town at the time of the election by railway, and they were recalled the day of the polling. There wasn't a local officer of constabulary within the courthouse, or in the neighbourhood of it; nor was there anyone to know anything of the transactions that occurred on the occasion of the unhappy transaction that led to the death of Captain King. There were no police there that could know the parties, or know anything of them. I was at the inquest, and they proved that they did not know who they were; there wasn't a single policeman that could identify any of the persons in the crowd that day.

7340. Was there any reason assigned, that you heard, for the withdrawal of the local constabulary?—I heard none. I can't say with what object, or from what motive they were withdrawn; I only mention the facts.

7341. What is the usual staff of the constabulary in Sligo?—About thirty, I think.

7342. They are resident in the town, and know everyone in it, I suppose?—I am sure there isn't a man in the town they don't know.

7343. Where were they sent to?—I don't know.

7344. When was it known that the local constabulary left the town?—I think it must have been before the nomination.

7345. Was it known, and was it the talk of the town that they were sent away?—It was.

7346. And discussed by yourself and your brother magistrates, that it was not a proper thing to do?—I was not at any meeting of the magistrates, but I expressed my opinion decidedly and openly.

7347. When did the local constabulary return?—I believe they returned the same day they went away.

7348. Were they here on the day of polling?—They were.

7349. Then they were here for the preservation of order on that day?—They were, but not in the neighbourhood of the court-house.

7350. Where were they located?—I fancy they were kept in other parts of the town; I believe they were in the streets. I can't tell exactly where they were.

7351. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—I believe there was a large force of police in the town during the election?—Yes.

SIXTH DAY.
October 11.
Mr. James Kidd.

7352. And there were military and all the local force of constabulary besides?—Yes.

7353. It was sworn here that there was a mob of 3,000 people in one street, do you know anything about that?—I never saw it. I came to the poll at ten minutes past eight o'clock. I walked from my house to the court-house; and I was neither addressed by, nor did I speak to, any person until I came to Captain Flanagan's tally-room; it was then I was told of Captain King's death. When I was told of it I said it was impossible that he was killed. I then went up to the Victoria hotel, and I was told that his body was there dead.

7354. Was there a large crowd in the streets at that time?—There wasn't a very large crowd; there was a considerable crowd at the tally-room of Captain Flanagan. There was a posse of police at different corners; but there wasn't a very large crowd except what may be assembled on an occasion of the kind, extending a quarter or half of the way down the street from the tally-room door.

7355. The Chief Commissioner.—We know that there was disgraceful rioting, stone-throwing, and house-wrecking?—There was, perhaps, rioting, but I saw no stone-throwing or houses wrecked.

7356. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—But you know, as a matter of fact, that there was stone-throwing on the day of the polling?—Yes, I heard there was.

7357. Do you believe that there was stone-throwing in the street when Captain King met his death?—I believe that that was entirely an accident caused by a revolver held by his friend, Mr. Webber, on whose arm he was leaning at the time. He went about the street with the revolver, and presented it to the crowd. I believe a grasp was made at it when he so held it pointed at the crowd as he went along.

7358. A great many stated that they didn't vote, because they were afraid of the consequences, do you believe that?—I don't believe it.

7359. Did you take any part in the elections of 1857 and 1859, at which Mr. Somers and Mr. Wynne were candidates?—No.

7360. Did you vote at either of these elections?—I didn't. I went to Newry, and recorded my vote there.

7361. In Newry?—Yes. Mr. Ball was here at the time, a candidate on the Liberal side, and I was anxious for his success.

7362. At Newry?—No, at Sligo. From some cause, Mr. Ball determined to retire. He called at my house before he left town, and told me one or some of the reasons which induced him to retire.

7363. We need not go into that matter?—For one reason I think I might. Hunt made several statements here in reference to his not looking for or taking any money, but he was one of those whose name was on a list demanding an amount of money from Mr. Ball to which he wouldn't accede. That was the election between Mr. Somers and Mr. Wynne.

7364. The Chief Commissioner.—How much was the sum demanded from Mr. Ball?—£800, I understood.

7365. Can you tell the names of the others that were on the list?—There were the two Hunts and Magrath.

7366. Who else?—I can't recollect the others.

7367. Was Michael Hunt one of the men?—Yes.

7368. Was the other Hunt named Dominick?—Yes.

7369. Was John Magrath on it?—He was.

7370. Was John Hunt?—I can't recollect.

7371. Was James Burke?—I can't recollect.

7372. Was Thady Kilgallon?—I can't tell. It is quite possible he may have been. I don't know that he was. At that time I hadn't much local knowledge.

7373. Did Mr. Ball tell you of any other sums being demanded from him by voters on the other side—these persons were on the Liberal side?—I don't know that he did. His reason for telling me about the matter at all was because I remonstrated with him about his retiring. I was sorry he retired, and he gave that as a reason why he wouldn't attempt the election.

7374. Do you remember if he told you that any further sums were demanded from Mr. Ball by voters on the Liberal side?—I don't know that he did.

7375. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Was Mr. Ball a candidate for this borough more than once?—He was afterwards a candidate for the county. That was 1857. It was a general election. When I found that he wasn't a candidate here I went to Newry for the purpose of supporting my friend Mr. Kirk.

7376. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Did you agree with Mr. Ball that there was no chance of his election?—I expressed no opinion about it.

7377. Previous to Sergeant Armstrong's election, do you remember canvassing Richard Hannah?—I don't think I did.

7378. Do you know the man I mean?—I do.

7379. What is he?—He is a roper.

7380. Is he a tenant of yours?—He had been a tenant of mine; he occupied a house of mine.

7381. Are you quite sure he was not a tenant of yours up to the time of the election?—He wasn't. I gave up these premises.

7382. And having been a tenant of yours, try and remember if you canvassed him?—Never. I knew he would vote for Sergeant Armstrong without my canvassing him.

7383. Did you canvass a man named John Breen?—I never did.

7384. What is he?—He was a cooper and publican.

7385. Was he in your employment?—He never was.

7386. Did you ever give him business?—I had business transactions with him.

7387. In what capacity?—As a publican.

7388. You say you never canvassed him?—I never did.

7389. The Chief Commissioner.—Do you export butter?—I do.

7390. Had you anything to say to Breen in his capacity as cooper?—I had not.

7391. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Did you canvass James O'Brien?—I suppose I did.

7392. What was he?—He was a baker.

7393. Had you any connexion with him in business?—I had, in buying flour.

7394. Are you a general merchant in butter and corn?—Yes.

7395. Have you a mill?—No, I didn't keep a mill for several years; I deal in flour.

7396. Do you export?—I do; I am also an agent.

7397. Did you canvass Edward Crummy?—I think not.

7398. What is he?—A plumber.

7399. Had you any business connexion with him?—Yes.

7400. In the way of business?—Yes; I employed him as a brassfounder, and for the purposes of the mill.

7401. Was he a tenant of yours?—He was not.

7402. Try and remember if you did not canvass him previous to Sergeant Armstrong's election?—I can't charge my memory with having canvassed him. It is quite possible I may have said "Crummy, I suppose you will vote for the Sergeant."

7403. Did you hear of any discussion, previous to the election, about the distributing of money?—I did not.

7404. Did you hear any persons say that the Sergeant had no more chance of the election than Mr. Ball, unless money was forthcoming?—I don't know that I did.

7405. Was it generally understood among the Liberal party that no Liberal candidate would have any chance, unless money was forthcoming?—There was a general idea that it was to be given.

7406. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Was that at the election in 1865, or at any previous election?—I never interfered previously in an election, except giving my vote; I never canvassed anyone.

7407. I am speaking of what you heard?—There was a general idea that money was necessary on both sides, that there was a great deal of activity on the other side, and that there were means taken to induce the electors to vote.

7408. The Chief Commissioner.—And that it had to be counteracted?—So far as any influence could be brought to bear on it by careful watching.

7409. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—And by hints, I suppose, that money would be forthcoming?—I never gave a hint that money would be forthcoming.

7410. But you stated that there were expectations that money would be forthcoming?—There was a general idea prevalent that money would be expected.

7411. Would be expected?—Yes; sometime or other.

7412. Was that idea prevalent among the canvassers?—I don't know; it was more a general belief than anything else.

7413. A general belief of what?—That money would have to be paid on both sides.

7414. That is different from money being expected?—I mean only the one thing.

7415. Was there a general belief among the voters that money would be forthcoming after the election, was that the belief you speak of?—I think there was; I declare I don't know.

7416. Was there any belief among yourselves—I mean those persons who were taking an active part in the return of Sergeant Armstrong—that that idea was prevalent among the voters?—I really don't know.

7417. Well, as to yourself, was that your belief?—Among the voters?

7418. Yes. Did you believe at the time of Sergeant Armstrong's election that the voters thought money would be forthcoming?—No; I did not.

7419. When did you first believe it?—After the election.

7420. How long after the election?—A long time.

7421. Was it long before Mr. Tracy and Mr. Byrne came down from Dublin?—I think it was some time during the winter.

7422. Do you know who first communicated that belief to Sergeant Armstrong?—I don't know.

7423. You could not form an opinion even?—I couldn't.

7424. It was not you communicated it to him?—No. I never exchanged a word with him on the subject.

7425. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—In the course of the following winter, after the election, was there an understanding among Sergeant Armstrong's supporters that he could not hold the borough in the event of a future contest, unless money was forthcoming?—I am not aware of that—at least I never heard it mentioned.

7426. In the discussions that took place when Mr. Tracy and Mr. Byrne came down, was there, that you remember, any reference to a future contest?—Not a word that I heard.

7427. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—At the meeting about the distribution of the money, did any one of those present express surprise that the voters expected money?—Yes.

7428. Who expressed their surprise at it?—I expressed surprise myself.

7429. Who else did?—I don't know of anyone else having done so.

7430. Do you believe that anyone else did?—I can't tell that.

7431. Whether was it surprise at money being expected, or disapprobation that such large sums were expected?—I was surprised at such large sums being expected, and at so many names on the list.

7432. How did you know how many names there were?—It was ascertained after totting them up.

7433. The names were ascertained, I suppose, by each of the gentlemen saying that such and such persons should get money?—Yes; I think so.

7434. What is the ground of your thinking that that was the way the names were made out?—It was ascertained that parties expected to get money, and when there was a knowledge of money being forthcoming, they gave in their names. I was surprised both at the names and at the amounts.

7435. A list of names was then made up at that meeting?—It was.

7436. Was it composed of the names of persons, who, the makers-up of the list thought or knew, expected money?—Yes.

7437. Did you hand in the names of Richard Hanna, John Brady, James O'Brien, Charles Gillen, and Edward Crummy?—I did.

7438. Did you know that these five men expected money?—I did.

7439. Had they communicated with you before the meeting?—Some had, and some had not.

7440. Who had communicated with you before the meeting?—Hanna did.

7441. Had Brady?—I think not.

7442. Which of the others had communicated with you?—O'Brien did.

7443. Had Gillen?—Gillen and Crummy said if there was any money they would expect their share.

7444. When did they say that?—Some time previously.

7445. Within what time was it, do you remember?—Within a couple of months, I suppose.

7446. It was before Mr. Tracy and Mr. Byrne came down from Dublin?—It was.

7447. Was it before there was any word of money going?—It was not before there was any word of money going.

7448. Then was there talk of money going?—There was a kind of general rumour, and that people expected money.

7449. Was that before it was known that money was coming down?—It was.

7450. How did you know that Brady expected money—I suppose you heard it through a third party?—I think I did.

7451. Do you recollect what was his name?—I don't recollect.

7452. How did these people come specially to you?—What people?

7453. Whose names you gave in?—I was dealing with Brady.

7454. Did you speak to him about it?—I didn't; I never exchanged a single word with him about it. Some one suggested that I should put his name on the list, and I did so.

7455. When did Hanna, O'Brien, Gillen, and Crummy come to you?—I was in the habit of seeing Hanna every day. He was a very queer fellow, and he used talk a good deal one way or the other. I heard him talk about money, but I thought it was chaff.

7456. The Chief Commissioner.—Was Hanna a Newry or a Sligo man?—I think he was a Sligo man. He came from America, and he has gone to America. He was very poor before the election, and that was the reason I consented to have him put on the list.

7457. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Did you give no further reason for putting these five on the list?—No, I didn't.

7458. How did you come to put Gillen and Crummy on the list?—Gillen and Crummy had confidence in me.

7459. Did you ever canvass them?—I didn't. I may have said, "I suppose you'll vote for the Sergeant," or something like that. They knew I was anxious for the Sergeant's return, and that they would support me in it, as well as carry out their own views.

7460. You may have spoken on the subject of voting in that way to every one of these five persons?—I dare say.

7461. The Chief Commissioner.—When you voted in Newry, I find that Major Waring was a candidate against Mr. Kirk in 1857; Mr. Kirk was returned and Major Waring was defeated; in 1849 Mr. Kirk didn't stand?—I don't know anything of that; I wasn't there. I was at two elections of Mr. Kirk's—in 1857 and 1852, I think.

7462. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Was Mr. Somers

Sixth Day. October 11.

Mr. James Kidd.

returned at the election when you went to Newry?—That was in 1857.

7463. The Chief Commissioner.—He was returned in 1857—that was the year when the poll-books were tampered with?—I wasn't here at that time. Mr. Ball called on me before he left town on Sunday by the three o'clock train, and I went away on the Monday following.

7464. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—When these five men gave you to understand that they expected money, did any of them refer to his having received money at any previous election?—No.

7465. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Did you vote in 1859?—Who were the candidates then?

7466. Mr. Wynne, who was elected; Mr. John Patrick Somers, and Mr. Lucas E. Treston?—I did not vote at that election.

7467. Did you hear a report of any money going in Sligo at that election, either on Mr. Somer's or Mr. Treston's side?—I know nothing of it.

7468. Was it a general election?—I wasn't present at it; I can't say.

7469. Do you recollect the election at which Mr. Macdonogh was returned in 1860?—I do.

7470. Do you recollect who were the candidates at that election?—Colonel Tennison, Mr. Somers, and Mr. Macdonogh.

7471. Did you hear on that occasion of any money being had or wanted?—I didn't hear anything about money being wanted on that occasion.

7472. Either before or since?—I didn't hear or know of money being wanted by voters on that occasion.

7473. Did you hear of money being offered at that election?—I did not.

7474. I am not speaking now of money from Mr. Macdonogh?—I don't know anything of it. When Mr. Tennison retired, I left town and went to Newry.

7475. I am not speaking of money being offered on Mr. Macdonogh's, but on Mr. Tennison's side?—Not a farthing. I didn't hear anything of it.

7476. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Did you hear that there was no money forthcoming on Colonel Tennison's behalf?—I never heard of money being paid on his account, nor did I hear anything about it.

7477. Did you hear of money forthcoming from Colonel Tennison's side for votes, or anything of that sort?—I heard nothing about it.

7478. Did you hear after that election that Colonel Tennison lost his chance of being returned by not coming down with the money?—No; I heard he lost owing to Mr. Somers not withdrawing from the contest. His only chance was if Mr. Somers withdrew. Mr. Somers persevered in his election, and Colonel Tennison then withdrew. I knew Somers had no chance.

7479. Do you mean to say that you heard nothing at all to the effect that Colonel Tennison would have a better chance if he spent more?—I never heard or knew anything about it, except what I told you.

7480. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—You stated you knew Mr. Somers had no chance at that election?—I believed he had not the shadow of a chance.

7481. Why did you believe that?—I believed the other party was too strong—I believed so; I was told so, and I thought so.

7482. You didn't vote at that election?—I didn't; I wasn't present at it. I know nothing of it.

7483. Did you believe that Somers had no chance because he was not spending money?—I knew nothing whatever about it except what was told me—that the Conservative party was too strong.

7484. You didn't hear he had no chance because there was no money going?—Mr. Ball told me of the large sum that was demanded of him, and said he would leave £100 to Mr. Somers, and wish him success at the election.

7485. Did you vote at the last election?—I did. That was the third time I voted in Sligo.

7486. Did you canvass anyone at the last election?—I didn't canvass any person but one. He was from the neighbourhood of Drumrody.

7487. For whom did he vote subsequently?—He didn't vote at all. At the very outset he said he wouldn't vote at that election, and he adhered to that.

7488. Had he voted for Sergeant Armstrong at the previous election?—He had.

7489. When did you canvass him?—On the day of the polling.

7490. Was that the first time you canvassed him?—It wasn't; I canvassed him in company with Captain Flanagan.

7491. When was that?—On some former day—about a fortnight or three weeks previously.

7492. And from the first he said he wouldn't vote at all?—Yes.

7493. He said he wouldn't vote at the election?—He did.

7494. Did he give any reason for not voting?—He gave no reason; he only said he wouldn't vote at all at that election.

7495. Did he get money at Sergeant Armstrong's election?—Not a rap. He is a very respectable man.

7496. Was there talk about money?—There was.

7497. Did you speak to him about money?—Not a syllable.

7498. How did you find him out?—I discovered by accident that he was a Liberal, and I thought he had a claim on him in that respect.

7499. The Chief Commissioner.—You discovered his politics accordingly?

The witness retired, but after an interval returned and said—will you allow me to state about John Brady, that he was in gaol at the time this money was distributed, and had been there some time previously. Being poor and in gaol—I don't know by whom it was suggested to put his name on the list—I did put it on the list. He was in gaol under the suspension of the Habeas Corpus Act.

Mr. James Lynch Byrne.

Mr. James Lynch Byrne sworn and examined.

7500. The Chief Commissioner.—Were you in Sligo when Sergeant Armstrong was returned member for the borough?—I was.

7501. How long before the polling did you come down from Dublin?—A couple of days.

7502. Had you known Sligo previously?—No. I was only once here before that.

7503. Were you acquainted with the town?—I was not.

7504. How long did you stay in Sligo on that occasion?—The evening of the declaration of the poll I went away.

7505. Did you come down from Dublin with any person?—No. I was alone.

7506. You came down, I suppose, as a friend of the Sergeant's?—I did.

7507. Were you staying in the same house with the Sergeant?—I stopped in the same house with him.

7508. Who was the Sergeant's expense agent on that occasion?—I was.

7509. Did you, as expense agent, return the amount of the Sergeant's expenses?—I did, to the mayor.

7510. The mayor then, I believe, was Mr. William Abbott Woods?—Yes.

7511. Have you any copy of that return?—I have not.

7512. Do you remember what the amount of it was?—I can't say.

7513. Did all the money go through your hands?—It did. I paid it.

7514. Who gave the money to you?—I paid it out of my own pocket; it was afterwards refunded to me by the Sergeant.

7515. How much was it?—Two hundred and eighty pounds.

7516. Did you get any of that from Mr. Tracy?—Not a penny of it.

7517. Did you ever give any of it to Mr. Tracy?—Never.

7518. You paid that money yourself?—I did. I paid it after the election by cheque from Dublin, in accordance with the statutory caution.

7519. Who assisted you in making up the accounts?—Mr. Tracy, in fact it was, he made it up.

7520. Were there other bills before you at the time you made it up?—I kept the accounts as I got them. I submitted them to him.

7521. Were all of these paid?—Some of them were, and some were not.

7522. What were these that were not paid?—These that Mr. Tracy said were illegal.

7523. To what amount were they?—I can't exactly say; it may be about £70 or £80.

7524. Were any of them what are called "orders?"—I never heard of the term until now. I was never at an election before or since.

7525. Have you any of the bills that Mr. Tracy said were illegal?—I have not.

7526. Do you remember what they were for?—I don't exactly remember. I think there was one bill for £30 for car-hire.

7527. Was that from a voter?—Yes, I think so. I can't recollect it just now. Mr. Tracy threw one of them into the fire.

7528. In addition to the £280 which you returned to the Mayor, did you pay other bills that you did not insert in the expense agents' account?—I think not.

7529. Did Mr. Tracy, to your knowledge?—He used tell me when I showed him one of these bills that he would settle it himself, or that he would see about it.

7530. Then there were some bills that you did not pay yourself?—There were certainly a few.

7531. What was the entire amount of such bills?—I suppose they amounted to about £70 or £80, as well as my memory serves me.

7532. You have mentioned a claim for £30 for car-hire?—Yes.

7533. Did you discuss with Mr. Tracy whether the man making the claim was a voter or not?—I can't remember it now.

7534. Was it a man named M'Goldrick, do you remember, that sent in that claim?—I recollect the name, but whether it was he furnished the bill or not I can't say. I don't know whether it was he supplied the cars or not.

7535. Can you fix the latest date at which you paid the election account?—I cannot. There was a prescribed time under the Act, when it should be sent in to the Mayor, and I had great difficulty in getting Mr. Tracy to settle it. But whenever the Act of Parliament prescribed I sent it in the day before that. I remember that there was little time to be lost in the matter.

7536. How long was that before you got the £1,480?—I can't say.

7537. Had you any conversation with Mr. Tracy on the subject?—I had many conversations with Mr. Tracy. I got a letter from Mr. Conry, or I met him in Dublin, and he asked me to come down here.

7538. For what purpose did he ask you to come down?—He told me that there were some accounts to be settled in Sligo.

7539. Did you understand that that was to go in payment of the electors?—I thought that there was some money to be distributed, for he said that there were cases of hardship and distress that would have to be seen to and relieved.

7540. When did you hear that there was money to be distributed?—I can't say.

7541. How long after the election was it, do you remember?—It was seven or eight months, I suppose.

7542. When did you come to Sligo?—I came down on a Saturday.

7543. Was that Easter Saturday, do you remember?—I think it was; it was about Easter at all events. When I came down I sent for a number of gentlemen who took an interest in the election. We met at the hotel. They said that there was a large sum of money required. I consulted with Mr. Tracy as I thought that the amount demanded was enormous. He said it could not be done for less, and eventually there was lists made out, in which the gentlemen present claimed so much for their friends. I didn't go into particulars. I was looking to the total which I considered very large.

7544. Did you give a cheque for £1,484 that night?—I did. I believe it was for that sum.

7545. When did you return to Dublin?—I returned to Dublin next night, and Sergeant Armstrong gave me his cheque for the amount.

7546. Have you the cheque for £1,480?—I have not.

7547. Do you know what became of it?—I don't know. I think it was either burned or destroyed in some other way.

7548. On what bank was the cheque?—On the Hibernian Bank. I had not that amount to my credit, but Sergeant Armstrong next morning took up that cheque by one of his own.

7549. To whom did you give that cheque?—To Mr. Harper Campbell.

7550. Was it payable to him?—I think it was. It came from the Ulster to the Hibernian Bank, and the Sergeant took it up with his own cheque. When I gave the cheque to Mr. Campbell I wanted to have an end to the matter. I wanted to get back to Dublin.

7551. Had you any conversation with Sergeant Armstrong as to the amount that was to be paid away to voters?—I hadn't, but I knew that whatever I paid would be refunded to me by him. He was on circuit at the time, as well as I remember, and he wrote to me to say, that if there were any bills to be settled in Sligo, I should consult with Mr. Tracy about them.

7552. Did you think the amount of the bills would be so large?—I had no idea what they would be, I thought they might perhaps be £200 or £300, or £400.

7553. You were acting under the advice of Mr. Tracy throughout?—I was; he told me to give the cheque, and I did so.

7554. You knew you had unlimited authority in the matter?—Yes, and I thought I was doing the best for the Sergeant.

7555. That evening did you understand that the whole of the £1,480 was to be given to the electors that voted for Sergeant Armstrong?—I thought that that was it, and there were perhaps mobs and things of that sort.

7556. We now know that the whole of that money was given to 97 voters who did no service whatever at the election, but voted?—I didn't know but that it was going for the payment of legal bills.

7557. How long did the interview last at the hotel?—About two hours. When we were discussing the matter at first, I retired, and Mr. Tracy and I chatted about it. We came back when the others had returned.

7558. What took place between you and Mr. Tracy while you were talking on the subject?—I said it was frightful that such a lot of money should be so spent. Mr. Tracy said there was nothing for it.

7559. Was it spoken of and perfectly understood that the money was to be paid?—It was mentioned that I should pay the money.

7560. Did the gentlemen present at that meeting convey to you that they had promised this money?—I can't say that; I couldn't fix on anyone that said it; but it was understood by those present that the money was to be paid.

7561. Did you know that this transaction was illegal, when it was explained to you?—I suppose it was, but the gentlemen who made the claims represented it in this way, that the persons for whom they claimed was very poor, that they had lost their situations by voting for Sergeant Armstrong, and were turned out of their houses.

SIXTH DAY. October 11. Mr. James Lynch Byrne.

7562. Didn't you believe it was an illegal transaction?—Yes, I suppose so.

7563. That is, you are perfectly certain it was?—Yes.

7564. It being an illegal transaction, what was represented to you to be the consequence—for instance, if the Sergeant said not a farthing was to be paid, suppose you said you wouldn't pay a farthing, what, do you think, would be the result?—The result, I suppose, would be that these people would be subjected to a great deal of annoyance.

7565. Why?—By the fact that they didn't get money.

7566. Why should they?—Because I suppose they expected money.

7567. That is what was represented to you?—There was no conversation with me on the subject—that was the impression I formed.

7568. You say you paid £280 and £1,480—was that all that passed through your hands?—That's all I had to do with the matter.

7569. Did you hear from Mr. Tracy that he got money from the Sergeant?—Yes, I heard from Mr. Tracy that he got £500 to cover all expenses. The Sergeant wrote a letter to Mr. Tracy, and at the foot of it he wrote the words "preserve this letter." That letter Mr. Tracy read for me. The Sergeant was anxious that all accounts between him and Mr. Tracy should be squared, and he got a letter from him to the effect that there was nothing between them.

7570. Did you apply to Mr. Tracy for money to pay the Sergeant's expenses?—I didn't apply for a penny.

7571. Was the letter of the Sergeant to Mr. Tracy read by you in Kernaghan and Saunders' office before you came down to Sligo?—It was.

7572. You knew that Mr. Tracy got £500 to cover the Sergeant's expenses?—I did.

7573. Did you pay any of the expenses of the Sergeant while you were down in Sligo besides what I returned to the Mayor?—Never, I never paid a farthing of them: there was no demand made on me for money for bills while I was down here. When I came back to Dublin, though I was intimately acquainted with Mr. Tracy, I never asked him for money; I knew it was useless to ask him for it, for I knew I wouldn't get it. I didn't like to bother the Sergeant about it—so I paid the bills myself.

7574. What became of the £500 Mr. Tracy got?—I don't know, I didn't ask him for any part of it.

7575. Mr. Tracy has now left the country, I believe?—I am not aware.

7576. When did you see him last?—I haven't seen him for some time.

7577. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—You are, I believe, brother-in-law to Sergeant Armstrong?—No.

7578. What relation are you of his?—I am married to his wife's sister.

7579. And of course there is a strong intimacy and friendship between you and him?—Yes.

7580. Before you came down to Sligo what conversation had you with the Sergeant?—I don't recollect that I had any. I think he wrote to me from circuit to say that if there were any accounts to be settled in Sligo, I could go with Mr. Tracy, and have them settled. I accordingly came down with Mr. Tracy.

7581. Did you see the Sergeant before you came down to Sligo?—I don't recollect whether I saw him or not. I recollect going straight to his house the Sunday evening I went up to Dublin.

7582. Was it on the letter he wrote to you from circuit, that you acted?—Yes. I acted under the advice of Mr. Tracy. The Sergeant always referred me to Mr. Tracy, as he knew that Mr. Tracy was well accustomed to those things.

7583. Had you any conversation with the Sergeant as to the amount you were to pay in Sligo?—I had not.

7584. When you came down to Sligo, did you consider that Sergeant Armstrong had so much confidence in you as to allow you to arrange money maters for him?—I did, taking his letter and the advice of Mr. Tracy jointly. I knew the Sergeant would pay me back what I paid for him.

7585. When you and Mr. Tracy sent for the supporters of Sergeant Armstrong to meet at the hotel, and when they came back, do you remember any of them saying that they were pledged to voters to give them money?—I can't say I do. It might have been said.

7586. Was the impression on your mind that they should get this money?—It was.

7587. And that they were bound to the voters to get it for them?—Yes. They had lists made out, but it was the total I was looking to.

7588. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Was the impression on your mind that the voters had voted for Sergeant Armstrong with the expectation of getting money?—They may have voted with that expectation.

7589. Did you believe that they had voted for money?—I don't know, I had nothing to do with the canvass; I only knew that they were to get that money.

7590. And that there was a certain amount of obligation on the part of the Sergeant's principal supporters to pay it?—A sort of understanding, but not with me.

7591. Was there any understanding with Mr. Tracy that they were to be paid?—Not that I am aware of.

7592. You had nothing to do with the canvass?—Nothing whatever. I believe I walked through the town with the Sergeant on the day before the election—that was all.

7593. You stated that you and Mr. Tracy made up the election accounts?—Yes.

7594. Was the amount of the different sums of money then due, £280?—It was about that. I can't exactly say how much it was.

7595. Did any of the £500 paid to Mr. Tracy get into that account?—Not a farthing. The election was all paid by me. As I said before, I didn't want to bother the Sergeant about it, and I had as much money as I paid.

7596. Did Mr. Tracy come down with you on that Easter Saturday?—He did.

7597. Had you any conversation with him as to the object of your coming down to Sligo?—Nothing, except as to the money being paid.

7598. Did he say there was money to be paid?—When it was arranged that we were to come down he knew that money was to be paid.

7599. Did he ever say to you that he always knew that money was to be paid?—He never gave me to understand that until coming down in the train, when he said that "We will have to pay some money."

7600. Did he ever tell you after the election that money would have to be paid?—Never.

7601. Did he ever tell you that "I knew very well we would have to stump up?"—He didn't. At the time of the election I used to talk about money matters, he said always "Don't use the word money," and I then dropped it.

7602. Did the people who came to the meeting come with the lists cut and dry?—I saw three or four lists there.

7603. Do you remember the number of the tot of the persons who were to get the money; Sergeant Armstrong said it was ninety-seven?—I haven't the slightest notion whether it was fifty-seven or ninety-seven.

7604. You said there was an interview of two hours?—Yes.

7605. Did Mr. Tracy or you make any opposition to the £1,480?—Yes, we wanted to reduce it.

7606. How did the interview begin?—When they all assembled they put down so much for each, and totted it up. There were some things knocked off, and the first tot made £100 or so more.

7607. Do you know that the £100 you succeeded in knocking off was made up of sums to be given to voters who afterwards got nothing, or by reducing the amount?—By reducing the amount.

7608. What did they say when you endeavoured to beat down the total?—They said it must be paid; there's nothing for it but to pay it.

7609. Was there any thing said to the effect, "There would be no use in the Sergeant coming back to Sligo, or showing his face there unless the money was paid?" —I never heard it.

7610. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Before you came down did you get a letter from Mr. Conry to say that there were accounts to be settled in Sligo?—I think so.

7611. And that some compensation was to be given to voters?—I think not.

7612. Was there any reference in the letter to cases of distress and hardship?—There might have been.

7613. What was the purport of the letter?—The purport of the letter was that I was wanted in Sligo.

7614. You knew well, I suppose, what you were wanted for?—I did.

7615. Did you communicate that letter to the Sergeant or Mr. Tracy?—I can't say I communicated it to the Sergeant, but I certainly communicated it to Mr. Tracy. I always communicated with Mr. Tracy the first thing. I didn't like to be bothering the Sergeant. Every letter I got I communicated to Mr. Tracy.

7616. Was that letter from Mr. Conry the first cause of your coming down to Sligo?—Yes, Mr. Tracy also got a letter.

(The witness withdrew.)

The Secretary (Mr. Greer), addressing the Commissioners, said—I understand that Mr. Kernaghan, who is in court, wishes to make an explanation with respect to the evidence of Mr. Macdonogh.

Mr. Baptist Kernaghan was then sworn.

Mr. Baptist Kernaghan.

He said—I wish, with respect to the statement of Mr. Macdonogh that in the year 1860 he retained me as his general solicitor, to advise him generally in Sligo, to say that I did act here for him; and it was under an arrangement I made that he happened to be selected as a candidate; but I was not aware until yesterday of any of the transactions connected with Mr. Lyons—I mean as regards the £850. Mr. Macdonogh never consulted about that, and I never heard of it before.

7617. The Chief Commissioner.—I presume you wished to give that explanation as your name was mentioned?—Merely as it might naturally be inferred that Mr. Macdonogh had consulted the person whom he selected to advise him.

(Mr. Kernaghan withdrew.)

Thomas Hignell, William Rowlett, Stephen Cherry, Utred Knox, Alec Shaw, Timothy Fallon, and James Leonard, who had been summoned, were called, but did not answer.

Thady Kilgallon sworn and examined.

Thady Kilgallon.

7618. The Chief Commissioner.—Are you an elector of this borough?—Yes.

7619. How long have you been an elector of the borough?—For a few years.

7620. When did you vote first?—I think at Townley's election.

7621. Then you are more than a few years an elector. For whom did you vote then?—I am not quite certain whether I voted at Townley's election.

7622. Did you vote for John Sadlier?—I did.

7623. For whom did you vote after he left?—I voted for Wynne one time, and for Somers all through.

7624. What do you mean by voting for Wynne one time and for Somers all through?—He was my landlord at the time.

7625. Who was?—Mr. Wynne.

7626. Did you vote for him all through against Somers?—No, I voted for him once only.

7627. Did you ever get any money after an election?—I got some money at Sadlier's election for leaving my place, that is all.

7628. How much?—Thirty pounds.

7629. Who gave you that?—I think John Magrath.

7630. Did you ever get any other money after an election?—No other money.

7631. Did you vote for Sergeant Armstrong?—I did.

7632. Did you get any money after his election?—No.

7633. Were you offered any money?—No, nor did I ask it.

7634. At Sergeant Armstrong's election was any money offered to you at either side?—No.

7635. Did you hear a sum of £300 mentioned during the progress of this inquiry?—Not until after the election.

7636. Tell the circumstances connected with that?—I think Magrath came to me one or two days before the election.

7637. What did he say?—He said it would be well done to get down some money for the election. I said I thought Sergeant Armstrong was too poor to give money; that is all. I heard no more about it until after the election.

7638. Then after the election what did you hear?—I heard them talking about the election.

7639. About the £300?—Well, I heard no certain sum.

7640. Who were they?—I did not know anything about the parties being in it. I was not in it.

7641. You have used the phrase "Not in it;" do you mean you were not in the bargain, whatever it was—is that it?—Yes.

7642. Was John Harte one of the parties?—I do not know. I was not in it at all at the time. I only heard it afterwards.

7643. What did you hear afterwards?—I heard he made a bargain with some of the parties.

7644. Who told you?—John Magrath told me. He told me he made it at Mr. Patrick Keighron's.

7645. For how much?—Well, he did not say the amount.

7646. For how many votes?—Five. I think five or six.

7647. Was John Harte one of them?—Yes, I believe so.

7648. James Moran?—Yes.

7649. Michael Hunt?—Yes.

7650. John Magrath?—Yes.

7651. Dominick Hunt?—Yes.

7652. Did he give you to understand you were one of the men he bargained for?—Well, he said he wanted to make a party; that was the cause of it.

7653. Did he speak to you to be one of the party?—He did.

7654. What did you say?—I did not say to or from it.

7655. Before the election did Magrath tell you that he spoke to Mr. Patrick Keighron?—No, he didn't. It was after the election.

7656. How much did you understand was to be given?—I could not say; I did not go into figures with him; I did not expect to get anything out of it, and I was quite heedless about it, only he asked me did I understand, and I did so——

SIXTH DAY.
October 11.
Thady Kilgallon

7657. Do you believe he spoke to you as one of the six?—I think so.

7658. And he spoke of you to Mr. Keighron as one of the six?—I do not know whether he spoke to Mr. Keighron or not of me; I was not present; I was not there that day.

7659. When had he that conversation with you?—I think in the market-house, to the best of my opinion.

7660. Did he seek for you?—No; we met accidentally.

7661. Did you afterwards hear that money was going?—At the election?

7662. No, but afterwards. Did you hear the money was to be paid the following April?—Yes.

7663. By Sergeant Armstrong?—Yes, I did.

7664. Did you try to get share of it?—I never asked to get his or any man's money.

7665. I do not mean did you ask ——?—Nor did I look for it.

7666. Nor look for it?—No.

7667. Did you expect it to come to you?—No.

7668. Why did you not?—Well, I was not very anxious for it. I did not want the man's money.

7669. But many a man unfortunately takes money that does not want it?—I would not take a small sum. If I got a few thousands, I would take it, no doubt of it.

7670. You think every man has his price—did you hear only £20 or £15 was going?—Well, I heard from £40 down to that.

7671. And you would not take that?—No; certainly not.

7672. Nor £50?—Nor £50.

7673. Did you yourself speak to Mr. Keighron on the subject?—Never.

7674. Did you speak to Magrath when you heard the money was going?—No.

7675. Had you no conversation with him afterwards?—I had no conversation with him afterwards until the money was paid—until Phillips proffered him some money.

7676. You knew Michael Hunt had refused?—Yes; I heard so.

7677. Refused the £20?—Yes.

7678. Did he refuse the £20 because it was too small?—Well, I could not say that.

7679. Well, but did you not understand from Magrath that it was because he was promised £50?—Most likely.

7680. Is it not what he told you?—I think Magrath told me he would not take £20.

7681. But he would take £50?—Most likely he would.

7682. You understood that?—I did.

7683. Did you understand, when the conversation was going on about the refusal of the £20, that there was to be £50 for each vote?—That was the word going; I could not say that there was any special bargain made.

7684. But it was something over £20?—Most likely it was.

7685. When you say "most likely," that is what you understood?—I understood it.

7686. How much beyond that was it?—It was something considerably over £20. It might be £50, or thereabouts.

7687. Did Mr. Keighron ever tell you that he made the arrangement with the party in Magrath's own place?—Yes.

7688. Magrath told you the names you have already given to us, and they are voters?—But he did not tell me before the polling.

7689. But after it?—After.

7690. Were all these men to get the same thing?—I suppose they were.

7691. You mean you understood they were?—I understood they were.

7692. Did you vote with those men on the polling day?—I did not.

7693. Did you see those men whose names you have mentioned vote?—No; they voted before I voted a long time.

7694. Did you vote late in the day?—I came up to vote about twelve or one o'clock.

7695. At the last election you voted for Captain Flanagan?—I did.

7696. Did you hear there was anything going for voting on that side?—No.

7697. Did you ever get any money, except on that one occasion, for compensation?—Never.

7698. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Who canvassed you for Captain Flanagan?—Himself.

7699. Did anyone else canvass you?—Well, there was a lot of people along with him.

7700. Did Mr. Keighron?—No; I did not see Mr. Keighron.

7701. Had you any conversation with Magrath?—No; not the slightest.

7702. Do you remember any voters you conversed with in relation to your voting at the last election?—I do not know. I used to vote at the Liberal side no matter who they were.

7703. Did you tell anyone before the last election that you were to vote for Captain Flanagan?—Most likely I did.

7704. Do you remember who they are?—Of course I told a whole lot of people I had promised Captain Flanagan I would vote for him in my own place of business. He canvassed me, and I said I would vote for him, and give him all my interest.

7705. Before he canvassed you, had anyone come to speak to you about your vote?—Not to my knowledge.

7706. Did any person acting for Captain Flanagan, who was not a voter, come to canvass you before you saw Captain Flanagan?—I think not.

7707. Do you remember seeing a gentleman named Lenahan?—No; I never saw the man.

7708. Nor any stranger?—No—oh, I saw some strangers, but I do not know who they were.

7709. Had you any conversation with any strangers acting for Captain Flanagan?—Not one.

7710. Had you any conversation with any of your own clergy as to whether you would vote for Captain Flanagan?—No. Only the day he was canvassing, Father Morris was in with him in my place.

7711. Did Father Morris speak to you about your vote?—He introduced Captain Flanagan, that is all.

7712. Did he speak to you on any occasion except the one when Captain Flanagan was in with you?—I think not.

7713. You think not?—To the best of my knowledge.

7714. Remember had you any conversation?—No. I think I had no conversation with Father Morris about it.

7715. Try and remember had Father Morris any conversation with you on any occasion except that one when he called with Captain Flanagan?—I think not.

7716. But you are not sure?—Well, I am not quite certain.

7717. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—You said Magrath told you, after the election, he made a bargain with Mr. Keighron?—Yes.

7718. Did you understand the bargain was made before the election?—No, I did not.

7719. What is the meaning of making a bargain?—I suppose he settled with him to give him so much for the party.

7720. In consideration of their voting?—Yes.

7721. Did you not understand from Magrath that he spoke to Mr. Keighron before the election?—No, I could not understand that he did.

7722. Do you believe he did?—I believe he did not up to the day of the polling.

7723. But do you believe he spoke to him on the day of the polling?—I could not say; I believe he did, but I was not by.

7724. Magrath told you he had included you in that bargain?—Yes.

7725. You did not tell Magrath then you would not take the money?—Well, I thought I would not get any money or any promise of money.

7726. Did you tell Magrath you would not take it if it was forthcoming?—Not at that time.

7727. Did you intend not to take it then?—I intended not to take it.

7728. But you did not tell him so?—No.

7729. Did you hear of any treating going on at the last election?—No.

7730. Or of any drink going?—No.

7731. Or anything else in that way?—Nothing in that way that I know of.

7732. Did you hear?—I did not hear of any drink or treating.

7733. I do not ask about regular treating—did you hear of any money being paid for drink for the mob?—I dare say I did.

7734. Tell us about that?—I heard it reported that they got a few pounds for the mob to drink.

7735. Did you hear where the money was spent?—In public-houses; of course I could not say, when I was not by.

7736. Could you tell the public-houses?—I could not tell you.

7737. Were there any public-houses known at the last election as Captain Flanagan's public-houses?—I am not aware.

7738. Could you not give the name of any public-house you think was Captain Flanagan's public-house?—I could not give you the names of the men that got drink, but I know the public-houses which were mentioned—Warren's, Jordan's, and Ward's.

7739. Name the houses and the streets?—Warren's in Pound-street, Jordan's in High-street, and Ward's in Radcliffe-street.

7740. Did you ever hear how that drink was paid for?—I never heard it.

7741. You never got drink there yourself?—No.

(The witness withdrew.)

Mr. Stephen M. Cherry sworn and examined.

Mr. Stephen M. Cherry.

7742. The Chief Commissioner.—How long have you been living in Sligo?—About sixteen years.

7743. During the whole of that time have you from your position been an elector?—For the last fourteen years—the first two years I had not a vote.

7744. What was the first election you voted at?—The first election was Mr. Wynne's, I think, in '57.

7745. In 1852 was there an election?—No, the year after I came; I had no vote.

7746. Mr. Wynne's first election was in 1857?—Yes, I think that is the first time I voted.

7747. He contested the election with Mr. Somers?—Yes.

7748. The election after that was when Mr. Wynne resigned and Mr. Macdonogh was elected?—Yes.

7749. I presume you were then a member of the Conservative party?—I was.

7750. And you were active for Mr. Macdonogh?—So far as my vote and any influence I had I gave it to Mr. Macdonogh.

7751. Were you at all engaged in the distribution of money at that election?—Not a penny.

7752. Do you know anything about this £850 that Mr. Lyons has deposed to?—Not a farthing.

7753. Did you know at the time the money was got?—I did not know. I did not know anything about the money whatever; I heard of it after the election. There was a rumour in town that there was money got and spent, but I knew nothing whatever about it.

7754. Had you anything at all to say at that election to any distribution of money?—Not a farthing.

7755. You remember the next election at which Mr. Macdonogh and Sergeant Armstrong were the candidates, and the Sergeant was returned?—I do.

7756. I presume at that election, as at the previous one, you voted for Mr. Macdonogh?—I voted for Mr. Macdonogh as the Conservative member—because he was a Conservative.

7757. Did you know anything at that election about the £490?—No, not a bit; not a penny of any money whatever.

7758. Nothing of the money which Mr. Sedley has declared in evidence was distributed?—No.

7759. Were you consulted about that?—I was not.

7760. Were you on the committee?—I do not know that there was a committee; at all events, I was not on it, if there was a committee. I went about with Mr. Macdonogh canvassing; that is all I did. I did not do anything else.

7761. We will now come to Major Knox's election—I presume you supported Major Knox?—Yes.

7762. As agreeing with your principles?—Yes, I did—although I did intend to take no active part in the election, for I was not satisfied with the way in which Mr. Macdonogh was treated. I thought he was badly treated at the previous election and I was disgusted, and, only it was Major Knox, I would not have interfered in the last, but I had a very great esteem for him. I expressed my opinion after Mr. Macdonogh's rejection that I would never take an active part in any election, for I was disgusted at that election; I thought his friends had sold him.

7763. Do you know Mr. Stokes?—I do.

7764. Were you on terms of intimacy with him before the election?—Yes.

7765. Long before it, and always?—I know Mr. Stokes as well as any man in town.

7766. Nothing better?—Only meeting him.

7767. Were you consulted about voters leaving town?—No.

7768. Did you know any voters were going to leave town?—I did not know any voters were going to leave town. I had no communication with any person about any voters whatever.

7769. About any voters leaving town?—No; nothing but one person that I knew of from himself.

7770. Who was he?—Sheils.

7771. What occurred about him?—Sheils was a customer of mine, and I had a decree against him, and I sent for him and asked him to leave town.

7772. How much had you the decree against him for?—Five pounds thirteen shillings—that was the balance of the decree. It was as high as £10, but he had paid it down by instalments weekly. It had been lying over four years.

7773. Did you ask him to leave town to avoid voting, I do not mean in words, but was that the object of it?—That was the object of it; that was just the object I had in view, certainly.

7774. You thought that he would vote for Captain Flanagan?—Yes.

7775. If left in town?—Yes; I thought he would be a supporter of his, therefore I wanted him to leave town that he would not vote for Flanagan, and I asked him to leave. I had been very friendly to him.

7776. Did you tell him where to go to?—I did not.

7777. Did you know where he was to go to?—He told me he would go to America. He came into the shop; we had three interviews. The first was on a Monday, and I talked to him about my account—that was the first occasion—about his not paying the account, and he told me he left money with his sister for me—that he thought it was being paid—and he promised to have it paid in future correctly, and then we talked about the election. In the course of the conversation I learned he was a voter, and I then asked him to oblige me by leaving town, and he said he could not do so without consulting his friends. I told him to make up his mind or not if he wished to go, as I thought his friends might object, if he spoke to them. He said he would give me word again whether he would go or not. There was no talk about money at that time. He came back a second time, and said he would go; but he would like to know what he would get if he would go, and he said he could get £20 from Flanagan's side. I told him I could not give him any money for voting or for going away—that I would not have anything to say to him about money, and he went away then. He came back to me on Saturday morning, about breakfast time—about ten o'clock—and he told me that he had made up his mind to go, and he was going to America. He said he wanted to buy some things, and he asked me would I give him some shirts, at least he wanted some shirts. I asked him the kind, and sold them to him.

7778. Sold them?—I showed them; he selected the shirts and I sold them, and entered them in the book.

7779. Do you mean it was a sale as to an ordinary customer, or did you merely supply from your establishment the things he wanted?—I mean to say I sold them to him—told him the price, and entered them in the book.

7780. Would you have given that man that credit except for the election, he not being able to pay you the £5 13*s.* balance of the decree?—No; I do not think I would at that time.

7781. That is a candid answer?—At the same time he told me he wanted them for travelling purposes, and he bought them.

7782. Go on with your statement?—He then asked me to give him £20 to enable him to go to America. I did not ask him to go to America; I never thought of such a thing. He asked me to give him the money to go to America, and at the time I thought—I really thought it was not illegal to give money to a person for that purpose.

7783. To enable him to go away?—No, to go to America; I thought I could do it legally at the time.

7784. Do you mean to say you thought it was legal to give money to a voter to induce him not to vote?—No; I thought that that was illegal, but I thought I might easily give money to a person to go away; that was my impression at the time. I was wrong in that. He asked me for £20 to enable him to go to America. I asked him and examined him about his intention of going to America.

7785. You did not believe he was going?—No, I did not. I wanted to find out surely before I would do anything in the matter, if he was really going to America. He told me he was going to America; he made an arrangement for the support of his family. He asked me to give them money.

7786. For the support of his family?—Yes.

7787. What family?—His sisters.

7788. Did you arrange to support them?—I arranged to give them £1 a week until he got into employment.

7789. For how long?—Until a certain amount of money would be expended.

7790. How much?—Up to £40.

7791. After giving him the £20 the sisters were to get £20 more?—No; I was to get credit for the decree and the goods I sold him, and I was to make up £40 altogether.

7792. You gave him a line of introduction to America?—Yes, I did; but then and there I did not exactly promise him whether I would give him the line or not, but asked him to come back again.

7793. But ultimately you gave him a letter of introduction?—Yes.

7794. And ultimately the whole value he was to get for going away, between decree, goods, and money, to the sisters, would be £40?—Yes.

7795. And you would be at the loss of that £40?—If I never was repaid it I would be at the loss.

7796. Did you know where he was to stop in Dublin?—No, I did not.

(Document handed to witness.)

7797. Was that the first document that passed between you and him?—No, it was not.

7798. What was it?—The first document was a letter to Mr. Logan to America.

7799. The Chief Commissioner.—(Reading)—

"Sligo, November 14th, 1868.

"Dear Mr. Logan,—The bearer John Sheils is a very old customer of mine; a man whom you doubtless remember. If you can do anything by way of getting him a situation, I will feel greatly obliged. I should have replied to your last much sooner. You have got your elections over, and Grant returned—the right man, I say. We are on the eve of our elections here. Next week they begin. Do anything you can for the bearer. All well here.

"Yours sincerely,

"S. M. Cherry."

Was that the first document you gave him?—I will explain about that. About ten o'clock at night, as the shop was shutting, he asked me for a loan of £1. At first I did not like to give him the £1, because I thought—I did not wish to leave myself in his power; at last I gave the £1.

7800. Do you mean in his power by giving him anything that could be shown—money?—I did not wish to give him anything; I thought if he went away he might come back, you know, and disclose it. I wished to be as cautious as possible, but I gave him the £1. I believed he was sincere up to this. He said, "You have a decree against me, will you give it to me?" I said I would not give him the decree. He asked me to give him a receipt for the decree, so I gave him this receipt:—(Reads)—

"Mr. John Sheils,

To Stephen M. Cherry, Dr.

To balance	£5	16	8
	£7	6	2
Cash,	1	0	0
£20	0	0

Stamp."

That's the balance of the decree; £5 16*s.* 8*d.*, and £1 9*s.* 4*d.*, that is the goods he got; and cash £1, which I handed him; and then there was £20 in cash which I was to give his family, less the amount of the decree ——

7801. Less the amount of the decree?—Yes.

7802. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—What is the date of that receipt?—It is dated 14th of November.

7803. The Chief Commissioner.—Do you know Coster, Brodie, and Company?—Yes.

7804. Were you a customer of theirs in the way of business?—Yes; I am a customer of theirs for printing and paper.

7805. Do you know that they are in the wholesale paper trade, and are manufacturers?—Yes; they print circulars, and make bags and boxes, and so on.

7806. Did you know that they supplied paper to the Irish Times?—No. I was perfectly ignorant of their connexion till you mentioned it.

7807. Did you then get the cash order on the Provincial Bank for £24 5*s.* 3*d.*?—I did. After he left me in the morning, I thought how I would send him the £20, and I was sending money to pay these parties. I owed them £4 5*s.* 3*d.*, so I got a bank order for £24 5*s.* 3*d.*

7808. How much of that was Sheils to get in Dublin?—He was to get £20. The balance was to go to pay their account.

7809. You sent that up in a letter to Coster, Brodie, and Company?—Yes.

7810. Did you tell Sheils he was to call there to get the £20?—Yes.

7811. What was the date of the cash order on the Provincial Bank?—It was the 14th of November. I got it after he left the shop.

7812. When did you post the letter to Coster, Brodie, and Company?—I do not think I posted it until Monday morning.

7813. Was it on Saturday you got the order?—Yes; I left it in my pocket until Monday evening.

7814. Did you ever get back the letter you wrote to Coster, Brodie, and Company?—I did.

7815. Have you got it?—No.

7816. What did you do with it?—I tore it.

7817. Did you get back the cash order?—I got back the £20.

7818. Did you write to them for that balance?—Yes, I wrote to them after Sheils came back to send me the letter and the balance after paying their own account.

7819. Did you know how Sheils was to leave Sligo?—Yes.

7820. Did you consult about that?—I arranged with him in the first instance how he was to go. He said he would go on Saturday night, first of all; then he came back on Saturday night, and said he would not go till Sunday morning, and I arranged to have a car ready for him at a certain place on Sunday morning.

7821. Where did you arrange to have the car?—Out about the asylum, there.

7822. Who ordered the car?—I went out to engage the car, and in passing Mr. Stokes' shop at the corner, I went in. It was then about ten o'clock. The shutters were up, but the shop was not shut. Usually he shuts at that hour. I told Mr. Stokes I was going to order a car for Sheils. I think I told him what it was for. "Oh," he says, "Mrs. Buchanan and her driver are here; if you wish I will order the car for you." I said, "Very well," and I told him where to have the car and where to leave Sheils—that he was to stop at the Black Lion. Mr. Stokes said, "It is better for you to send him on to Enniskillen at once," and I agreed to do so. "Well," says I, "I told him to stop at the Black Lion, and I will have to write to tell him to go on." I wrote on a little bit of paper, asking him to go from the Black Lion and to stop at Enniskillen. Mr. Sheils ordered the car. I did not order it, but I told him what to do, and I told Sheils how he was to distinguish the car.

7823. How was that?—He was to ask for "The Golden Roffers," and the driver was to say, "Jump up;" something like that.

7824. It was a pass-word?—A pass-word, that he would know the car.

7825. Go on?—Well, Mr. Stokes ordered the car, and I do not know anything at all about it more than that. I came home, and that is all I know about it.

7826. When did you hear that Sheils had returned?—I heard it on the Tuesday morning.

7827. Did you then write the letter to Coster, Brodie, and Company?—I wrote, I think, on Wednesday or Thursday this letter. (Reads):—

"GENTLEMEN,—You will please send me, per return, the twenty pounds which I sent you, as the person is not now going to America, as I understood he was. You will also enclose my letter of instructions, as I want to have it in my possession. Please excuse the trouble. Should I have the opportunity of serving you, you may command me.

"Very truly yours,

"S. M. CHERRY.

"Messrs. Coster, Brodie, and Company."

7828. Did you want to get back the letter of instructions to destroy it?—Yes.

7829. Was it not because you knew it was an illegal transaction you were engaged in, and you wanted to destroy the evidence of it?—Certainly; yes.

7830. And you did destroy the letter?—I did.

7831. Of course Coster, Brodie, and Company sent you back your own letter?—They did.

(Small document handed to witness.)

7832. In whose handwriting is "John Sheils" in that document?—I do not know.

7833. Did you ever see that before the trial at Carrick?—Oh, it is my memorandum.

7834. Who wrote "John Sheils" here?—I do not know.

7835. What is that memorandum?—This memorandum, I believe—I do not understand what this means. It was arranged that a card I gave to Sheils he was to present to Coster, Brodie, and Company.

7836. Was it a card of your own?—Yes. My name was printed on it. It was a regular visiting card with my name, Stephen M. Cherry, upon it. There was nothing written on it. It was put into an envelope.

7837. This is the document you wrote for Sheils—(Reads.)

"Go on to Enniskillen without stopping. The driver will tell you where to stop there. Pay for your bed, &c. It will be settled in Dublin. This was arranged since I saw you?"

It was arranged just as I told you.

7838. Was this conversation you had with Mr. Stokes when Mrs. Buchanan was there, the first time you spoke to him about Sheils?—Well, I could not say; but that was the only time I had any arrangement with him. I may have mentioned it ——

7839. Did you mention to him that you were trying to get a hold of Sheils?—I do not remember ever mentioning it to him.

7840. Were you not constantly speaking to him about the election?—No, I was not constantly speaking to him at all. I spoke very little to Mr. Stokes about the election.

7841. Did you give Sheils any more money than what you have mentioned?—I did.

7842. When?—On that Saturday night.

7843. How much more?—Thirty shillings.

7844. Did you give any of his family any money?—I did, on Monday morning.

7845. How much?—One pound; that is all he got, £3 10*s.*

7846. Upon your oath, Mr. Cherry, who was to repay you that £40?—Well, I expected to be repaid by Major Knox or his friends.

7847. Did you hear about other electors leaving town?—I heard some report.

7848. A report?—That was all. I was not consulted about it whatever.

7849. Had you ever before this been engaged in a similar transaction?—Never.

7850. Of course, now that it is all over, as a man of the world, you know perfectly well that was bribery?—Well, I assure you I thought it quite legal, giving him money to go away.

7851. That is, you could evade the law?—Yes, exactly; that it was not illegal, that the law did not forbid me giving money to a man going to America.

7852. Did you give that money and make that promise to that man Sheils in order to induce him to avoid voting at the election—give me the answer you gave the judge at Carrick?—I gave it for the purpose of having him off the road.

7853. Of preventing him from voting at the election?—Yes. I had that object.

7854. Were you at Haggerty's house?—I was.

7855. How often were you there?—I was not there often. I was once or twice.

7856. Whom did you see there?—I saw on one occasion Mr. Grubb and another gentleman, and I saw Mr. Balfour. I did not see any other.

7857. Do you know Mr. Hignell?—I do.

7858. Did you know him before the election?—I did—not before the election, I knew him about the election. He was down in Sligo. I never knew him till the election.

7859. Do you know Mr. William Hughes of 25 Queen-street, or 23?—No; I do not know him.

7860. You never saw him?—I never saw him.

7861. Did you see Mr. Hignell at the time of the election?—Yes; I saw him in Sligo.

7862. Did you tell him about your having secured Sheils—you may as well tell, for Mr. Hignell will be examined?—Well I do not exactly remember, I may have.

7863 Do you not think it very probable?—I think it is very likely.

7864. Do you not think it most likely?—I do.

7865. Are you not perfectly sure of it?—I am not perfectly sure—it is likely I did. I did not take any

SIXTH DAY.
October 11.
Mr. Stephen M. Cherry.

note of it, or anything of that sort. I saw a great many people on that occasion.

7866. You told Stokes you had got Sheils?—I told him I wanted the car.

7867. He knew Sheils was not gone at that time?—Not at the time he ordered the car to go.

7868. But he knew you had got him to go away out of town?—I do not remember letting Stokes know anything at all about it.

7869. Did you know he (Sheils) had left town that morning?—I did not.

7870. You did not know he was gone?—No. I went to bed as usual. I did not know, nor did I ask whether he had gone or not.

7871. How much are you at a loss in this transaction between Sheils and you?—Well, I am at a loss of £3 10*s.* by the election, that is all.

7872. And the decree?—Well the decree, that was a business transaction of my own.

7873. Of course you have never been repaid what you have been at a loss?—No.

7874. Did any money come to you after the election?—No; not a penny.

7875. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—You have told us you heard a report of other voters being sent away besides Sheils?—Yes; after they had gone.

7876. Whom did you hear were sent away?—I heard about the M'Mullens—the two M'Mullens.

7877. At the time?—Yes.

7878. Anyone else?—No. I don't remember any person else. They were greatly talked about—the M'Mullens—through the town.

7879. Try and remember any other?—Well, I don't remember any. There were none else talked about, at least that I heard.

7880. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Did you ever hear of Gethin?—No. I am sure Gethin was not away all the time of the election.

7881. You said that after Armstrong's election?—Gethin—I beg your pardon. Gethin, I believe, went away after the election to avoid intimidation, or something of that sort; but he did not go away at the election.

7882. You said that after Sergeant Armstrong's election you were disgusted at the treatment Mr. Macdonogh received?—Yes.

7883. Now, what was it that produced that feeling in your mind?—Well, I heard that some of his friends that pretended to be working for him, were working against him. I don't know whether it was true or not, but I heard it, and it made me indignant.

7884. Who were those friends?—I heard Mr. Monds was one of them.

7885. Anyone else?—He was the principal.

7886. Do you remember any other names?—No, I could not. I don't remember. He was the person that I heard most of.

7887. Well, would you try and remember?—I could not remember any. I don't remember any. I do not really. I would tell you at once if I did. It is nothing to me.

7888. Did you hear any expressions of dissatisfaction at more money not going on Macdonogh's side?—I did. I often heard some voters saying something about that after it occurred—saying that some people got money that they did not expect; but I knew nothing at all more than what I heard from voters.

7889. Did you hear voters on Macdonogh's side, or on the Conservative side expressing dissatisfaction at not more money going on their side?—Well, I did. I heard them talking about it.

7890. Voters?—Yes.

7891. Would you try and remember?—I don't remember them at all, for I did not take any particular notice of it at the time—I did not really take any. I knew nothing at all about the money matters of the election. I was indignant as I said before that Mr. Macdonogh, whom I thought a good man, was not returned, and I expressed it at the time I remember to Mr. Stokes. He did not vote for Mr. Macdonogh on that occasion at all, and I was very angry with him and told him that he had sold the party by his keeping back, and that I never would interfere in any other election. I was very angry about it indeed—so much so that I said I never would take any part again.

7892. You say you were indignant at those friends of Mr. Macdonogh deserting him; were you indignant because that desertion was on the ground of there not being more money coming from Mr. Macdonogh?—Not at all; I knew nothing about money. It was on the ground of their not using their influence, and doing what they could for Mr. Macdonogh.

7893. Did you remonstrate with them about it?—I did not for it was all over. I did not know until the election was over, and then it was too late. I thought Mr. Macdonogh was certain—I told plenty of people he would have twenty of a majority, and I believed it; and I did not know he was sold till the election was over, and what was the use of remonstrating then?

7894. Did you complain?—I did not complain to any of them. I might have talked to friends, you know; just expressed my opinion—that was all. I did not go to complain to any man about his conduct.

7895. Did you canvass for Mr. Macdonogh?—I did. I went round along with him. Mr. Macdonogh asked me. I did not wish to go. He asked me to accompany him on his canvass to Leech's 7896. Was Mr. Macdonogh deserted by any voters who promised him their votes?—By thirty or forty.

7897. Who promised him their votes?—Yes. I heard them promise him myself, and saw them voting directly against him.

7898. How long before the poll were these promises given?—They promised, I suppose, about a month before the election. I accompanied Mr Macdonogh, Mr. Phibbs, and several others; and everyone up in Pound-street promised him that they would vote for him, and shook him by the hand, and all that, but the very same hands turned against him, and voted against him.

7899. They voted against him?—Yes.

7900. Thirty or forty?—I think so. I cannot say as to numbers, but I heard a whole lot of people just as I was canvassing. I did not know them very well because I am never up in Pound-street; but I saw people and heard them promising Mr. Macdonogh, and from what I saw I was sure he would be returned.

7901. Are you aware that several of those voters that promised him in Pound-street voted afterwards for Sergeant Armstrong?—Yes.

7902. The Chief Commissioner.—Could you name any of them?—I really could not.

7903. Look at the Registry?—For I did not know the names; I took no note of it; but I remember remarking afterwards when I saw that they voted against Macdonogh. I think Flynn was one.

7904. Pat Flynn?—He is a saddler (List shown to witness).

7905. Find out Flynn's name?—I don't know whether this is the same Pat Flynn or not. There may be two, I mean the man that lived at that time in Jail-street.

7906. What is his Christian name?—I think Patrick.

7907. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Are there two Patrick Flynns there?—There is only one here on the present Registry.

7908. The Chief Commissioner.—That is the Registry for the election of 1865.

7909. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Just look it over at your leisure, Mr. Cherry, and see what voters on that list promised Mr. Macdonogh, and afterwards voted for the Sergeant?—(Looks at list)—Well, I am afraid I could not give you any particular information because I took no note of it. I really don't know these people. I could not distinguish them; but I heard a great number promise him. Mr. Macdonogh, I think, could tell you all about them, for he was misled in the same way.

7910. Look over the Registry?—I will look over it, but I am afraid I cannot.

7911. Take plenty of time; you cannot have looked over the half of it. Go over all?—[Witness looks]—Here's Devanny. I don't know anything at all about them. I see the name "Devanny" in Pound-street; but as I don't know the people I could not mention them by name. I saw them, and I heard them; but as I did not know the people I would not mention any particular person.

7912. Were you present when Devanny was canvassed?—No; I don't know Devanny. I am just giving that instance; I don't know the man.

7913. Did anyone tell you that Devanny promised Mr. Macdonogh?—No, not one. I should not mention Devanny's name; I have no reason for doing so. I just give you that instance. There he is in Pound-street, and I don't know the man.

7914. I do not mean you to swear as to this person; I merely want the impression on your mind as to the persons who promised Mr. Macdonogh and afterwards voted for the Sergeant?—Well, it is such a long time ago, and I really did not know the people and took no note of it whatever; and it would be very wrong of me to mention people that I don't know. I know Flynn, and I heard him promising, and he did not vote, I know. There was another place we went to, and I saw a woman—a very fat woman, and she and her husband both promised; and I understood that these did not vote for Macdonogh afterwards. In fact there was not one of them that voted.

7915. What ground have you for saying that thirty or forty persons promised?—Just that was the impression created on my mind after the election was over—these persons that were to vote and that were down by Mr. Macdonogh as promised, and all that, making up his list showing a majority.

7916. What list?—The list he had with a mark opposite their names—of those that were to vote for him. Going over this list along with others it showed that he had a large majority supposing those people voted. It turned out that they did not vote.

7917. When you examined that list, did you find amongst those who promised to vote for Mr. Macdonogh some thirty, or any number about that, who voted for Sergeant Armstrong?—Yes, I did; but I have not that list. I did not keep it at all. It was only other people's list.

7918. And you are not able to give us any clue to the names?—No, I could not, really. I have no desire to give names.

7919. It was by referring to the poll-books afterwards that you saw they had voted for Sergeant Armstrong?—Yes, and I think the names were published in the local papers the next Saturday, giving the names of those who voted for Sergeant Armstrong, and of those who voted for Mr. Macdonogh, and I noticed then that those persons had voted, but I could not tell you them now.

7920. Therefore you must have known the names of those persons then?—Yes, I did; I knew them then. For the first time I knew them, but I did not take any notice of them then, and I have no recollection now to guide me.

7921. I am not satisfied that you have sufficiently tried to refresh your memory, Mr. Cherry?—Well, I will look over it every bit, but it is not a bit of use, for I don't know the names of the people here. I don't know them.

7922. Were they principally in the Pound district?—They were—yes. People in Pound-street.

7923. Were they all Pound-street people?—No, there was this man here that I knew.

7924. The Chief Commissioner.—Tell me, Mr. Cherry, you have said you expected that the £40 was to be repaid by Major Knox or his friends—why did you expect it to be repaid?—Well, I expected it to be repaid because Major Knox was an honourable man.

7925. Did you intend then, supposing you had got the voter away and paid the £40, did you intend to apply to him?—I did after the election was all over.

7926. You intended to apply to him personally?—No, not personally, perhaps; to his agent, or somebody else.

7927. Do you mean his conducting agent, Mr. Lawder?—Perhaps so.

7928. I want to know?—Well, really, I have not made up my mind.

7929. I want you to tell us through what channel did you expect to be repaid, and why?—Well, I expected to be repaid by Major Knox, and I did not know the channel.

7930. Did you know Captain Knox that was down here?—Not personally. I saw him down here.

7931. Do you know Mr. Sloane?—No, I don't know Mr. Sloane.

7932. Were you, Mr. Cherry, in town at the opening of the Commission?—No, sir.

7933. Were you away on business?—I was. I was in London, Manchester, and Glasgow, and I came back the moment I got a telegram that I was wanted.

7934. Do you know where Mr. Stokes is?—No, I don't.

7935. When did you last see him?—I saw him about three weeks ago.

7936. Had you any conversation then with him—was that after the advertisement about the Royal Commission?—No, I did not see him after the advertisement.

7937. Did you canvass with Major Knox?—No, I never canvassed with Major Knox.

7938. Did you canvass with any of his supporters?—No, I did not canvass at all for Major Knox. The canvassing was done for Major Knox I suppose six weeks before the election; he was down here very often.

7939. You know Mrs. Hall's here?—Yes, I do.

7940. Were you ever there?—Yes, often, before and after the election.

7941. I mean while the voters were there?—I was.

7942. What did you go there for?—I went there without any business more than I remember going in with Mr. Mosson, a lodger in the house. I visited there regularly.

7943. Did you go there to assist in keeping voters together?—No, not at all.

7944. How many times were you there from the Monday before the polling? Were you there every day?—From the Monday before the polling.

7945. Was it on the Monday before the polling I mean that you began to go in?—No, I was not there at all, I think, on the Monday before the polling. I don't recollect. I was there about the time the election was going on—the day before it perhaps. I was not in there after the nomination. I think it was the first time.

7946. Do you know Leonard?—I do.

7947. Who is he?—He is a car-driver. That's the way I know him.

7948. Do you know the man's name that said you offered him money?—No, I don't know him at all.

7949. Did you ever offer him any money?—Not a farthing. I did not know the man, good or bad. When I saw his name opposite to mine at the Carrick trial I commenced to ask who he was.

7950. Then you never offered anybody else money at the last election?—No, I did not.

7951. How did it happen that you fixed on Shiels as the only man?—Because he was indebted to me in money, and I thought I had a claim on him.

7952. Was Shiels' name given to you in any list?—No, I got no list.

7953. Did you give Shiels' name to Mr. Hignell?—No.

7954. Was not Hignell making out a list of the persons who either would vote or would go away?—I don't recollect giving it to him. He may have——

7955. I ask you, first of all, was not Hignell making out a list of the men who would vote for the Major, or who were going away?—I don't know what Hignell was doing.

SIXTH DAY.
October 11.
Mr. Stephen M. Cherry.

7956. Did you tell Hignell about Shiels?—I may have.

7957. Do you swear you did not?—No, I do not, because I don't recollect anything about it.

7958. Was it you brought the ladder to Mrs. Hall's?—Where did you get it?—I got it in the yard.

7959. Why did you put it up against the wall?—I put it up for some voters who lived in a yard adjoining, and who requested me to do so, in order that they might get across without being beaten by the mob.

7960. Was it to let voters into Mrs. Hall's house?—Yes.

7961. Who were those voters?—There were John M'Guirk and Charles Clancy. Their yards adjoined.

7962. You knew these men were coming to Mrs. Hall's?—They asked me. They called me and asked me to get the ladder arranged. I was walking up opposite.

7963. Who asked you to get the ladder?—Mr. Chism asked Mr. M'Guirk.

7964. How did it happen that you were aware the ladder was wanted?—By mere accident, because I was going up the road.

7965. I suppose you were not in the habit of carrying a ladder?—I did not carry the ladder at all.

7966. Who carried the ladder?—It was Burrows, I think, the court-keeper.

7967. Did you place the ladder?—I directed him how to do it.

7968. Where was the ladder got?—It was got in the yard just where we were. It was a small ladder put up against the wall.

7969. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Did the trial in Carrick on this inquiry in any way influence you not to ask the repayment of what you spent from Captain Knox?—Well, I think it did. I would very likely have asked him before now if this were not going on.

7970. The Chief Commissioner.—Did you expect to be repaid honestly every farthing you spent?—I did, every farthing.

7971. And you do now; you do still?—I hope so, at any rate.

7972. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Had you any conversation with Shiels after he came back?—No, I never spoke to him since, nor would not speak to him at all for I got enough of that gentleman.

7973. The Chief Commissioner.—You got into trouble by meddling with such matters, Mr. Cherry?—Yes, I am very sorry I had anything to say to it.

(The witness withdrew.)

Timothy Fallon.

Timothy Fallon sworn and examined.

7974. The Chief Commissioner.—You are an elector?—Yes.

7975. How long have you been an elector?—I never had a vote before this. This is the first time I ever had in this country.

7976. Whom did you vote for?—Major Knox.

7977. When did you promise the Major?—About two years ago, I think.

7978. Where was it you promised him?—In my own yard.

7979. Did you ever get any money?—Never.

7980. What is your business?—I am a horse-trainer.

7981. Do you know Tom Brennan?—I do.

7982. Did he ever give you any money?—Never.

7983. Were you ever promised any money?—Never promised any money from any of the Major's men.

7984. Did anybody else ever promise you money?—Nothing for the election—never.

7985. Oh, no; but did they promise you any money?—Never for the election, or for anything belonging to it.

7986. I don't mean connected with the election; did anyone say you were to get anything?—No, I can solemnly swear I never was promised a shilling of money, nor never got it.

7987. To be bribed?—I got money after, but never for the election. Any man that employed me, I received his money from him, but never for the election.

7988. Did you get anything more than usual at that time?—I can say that I never got a farthing but what I earned hard with the sweat of my brow.

7989. Have you been here during the trial?—The trial?

7990. Yes, this trial; have you been in court?—Well, I was here on Saturday, part of the day on Saturday.

7991. You are a Roman Catholic, I suppose?—Yes.

7992. And you went to Mrs. Hall's?—I did.

7993. Who got you to go there?—Well, no one enticed me to go into it. I heard that they were going there, and that Mrs. Hall was receiving them. I was glad to get an opportunity of going into it, and I went in. I was afraid.

7994. How long have you been living in the town?—I think about eight years; I think in October last, eight years.

7995. Did you before this election belong to the Liberal party—I don't mean with regard to your vote—but to the Liberal party?—Well, I am a Catholic born and reared.

7996. What made you vote for the Major?—Well, I will tell you the reason, he was the first man that axed me for a vote.

7997. Had you a vote at the time that he asked you?—Well, I had.

7998. Had you been put on the registry?—Who put me on it? Oh, yes, I was on it for years.

7999. Years before he asked you?—I think so.

8000. Do you mean to tell me that you promised to vote for the Major because he was the first man that asked you?—I mean that I promised him I would vote, and I did.

8001. You said you voted for him because he was the first man that asked you?—He was the first man, I meant, of the Liberals or Conservatives—he was the first gentleman of either Liberals or Conservatives that asked me, and I promised him that I would.

8002. Irrespective of politics?—Not indeed for any certain thing in the world. I had no interest in one party more than the other, any more than that he was the first that asked me, and I promised him I would and I did.

8003. How much did you pay Mrs. Hall?—Well, I think I had to give ten shillings.

8004. How long were you there?—I think I was two nights in it, about. I was a second day—just two nights.

8005. Were any threats made use of to you?—Indeed there was not much; nothing of any account.

8006. Were you afraid of your life when you went into Mrs. Hall's?—Well, I was afraid to go to vote. I was not much acquainted with the town, and I was certainly afraid, though there was no violence used to me of any account.

8007. Was your house injured?—Well, it was; there were some windows broken in it.

8008. Did you get any compensation from the county?—I never put in for it at all.

8009. Did anybody else give you compensation?—Not a fraction. There were only about nine or ten panes broken altogether—small ones.

8010. Do you expect the expenses you were at to be repaid to you by anyone?—I paid it myself.

8011. Do you expect to be repaid now?—On my oath I never expect to get a farthing of it.

8012. Did anyone molest you after the election on account of your vote?—No, I never got a stroke.

8013. You would not mind a few hard words, or the like of that?—I got many a one of them, but I had to pass them by. We must not mind all we hear that way, sometimes.

8014. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—You said you got no money but what you earned hard?—Sir?

8015. You said you got no money but what you earned hard; are you referring to any money that you got from Major Knox?—I got no money from Major Knox or from any of his friends.

8016. Were you paid anything by Major Knox or any of his friends, for any work you did for him?—Not as much as a farthing.

8017. What are you by trade?—A horse-trainer.

8018. Were you employed in training horses in the way of your trade by any of Major Knox's friends?—Well, I train for the gentlemen of the county of Sligo. Whether they may be his friends or his foes I could not say. Any man that employs me I train for.

8019. Are your customers among the gentry?—Well, generally poor and rich employ me.

8020. Who told you that Mrs. Hall would receive you?—Well, I could not exactly say that, sir; I could not exactly tell you. I forget whom I heard it passing between; some person that I heard say that Mrs. Hall would receive such voters if they would come into the place, and I went in myself.

8021. That is, would receive voters that offered to stop at the house?—Yes.

8022. Was it Stokes told you that?—No; I never heard Stokes mention a word about it.

8023. Had you any conversation with Stokes before the election?—What about, sir?

8024. Had you any conversation at all with him in reference to how you would vote?—I never told a sinner the way I would vote or the way I would not, nor no one knew the way I would vote or would not, except the imagination of Major Knox himself, and Mr. Phibbs along with him, and Mr. Wynne.

8025. Had Stokes any chat as to how you would vote?—Well, I don't think he had. He might have had a chat with me, but I forget what it might be; indeed I could not tell you whether he had or not this moment.

8026. Did he tell you that the Major would stand to you if you would vote for him?—He never mentioned the like to me, nor did I want to hear such a conversation from anyone. I did not resort among those persons that had such talk. I always minded my business.

8027. But did you ever hear that money had been going at former elections?—Oh, I did, but I did not know from whom. I had not much acquaintance with anything. I never saw any election here before but one, and I had nothing in the world to do with it.

8028. No, you were not a voter; but did anybody tell you that Mr. Macdonogh's people had got money?—Well, I might have heard it, but I passed no mind on it. I took no interest in such things at all.

8029. Did you ever think there might be money going after this last election?—Well, I might think of it, but if I did——

8030. Ah, but did you?—Did I think there would?

8031. Did you think about it?—Well, it was everyone's opinion that there would be some money going at some time or other.

8032. The Chief Commissioner.—Was it the opinion that there would be money going for those who voted for Major Knox, or for those who voted for Captain Flanagan?—Well, I think I could not say; I dare say they all expected money, but I only know for myself.

8033. Did you expect it?—I did not.

8034. You thought you might get it?—If I got it I would take it.

8035. You heard that people had got it before?—Who?

8036. You heard that people had got it before; I do not ask you about names, but you heard that money had been given before?—On former elections?

8037. On former elections?—I don't think I could mention the name of anyone I heard of as having got it, but I heard of the like being passed some day or other.

8038. Can you tell us any of the electors you talked on the subject with,—I am sure you talked about it?—About which?

8039. Oh, about the election generally, and the money that had gone before, and would be again,—come now?—Well, I would be glad to tell you if I had anything to say about it.

8040. I am sure you talked with someone about it,—some of the other voters,—some of your friends?—No, sir, I live more by hard work than I live by talking.

8041. Do you mean to swear to me that you did not talk with your neighbours about the election?—Well, I might.

8042. Do you mean to swear that you did not talk to your neighbours—talk with your neighbours about the money that might be going now; do you mean to swear that you did not?—Well, I don't think I ever mentioned it to my neighbours or myself; I had a very good reason why I did not.

8043. Did you ever do so to anybody that was not your neighbour?—I don't think anything of the kind.

8044. Do you know Mr. Harloe Phibbs?—I do.

8045. Did you ever talk to him about the election?—Well, I think not.

8046. Do you swear you did not?—Oh, I won't swear I did not, because he was along with Major Knox the day I promised him.

8047. Well, but upon no other occasion did you ever do so?—Not that I mind.

8048. Did you ever say to Mr. Harloe Phibbs, "Will Major Knox's people get money"—something of that kind?—I don't think I ever mentioned the like to him at all.

8049. You do not think you did?—No.

8050. Are you sure you did not?—Well, I think I could swear I did not.

8051. Can you swear you did not?—I don't think I ever did.

8052. The Chief Commissioner.—Did you train horses for Phibbs?—I did, but it was a long time ago.

8053. How long ago,—two years ago?—Oh, I think it is six years and more.

8054. Do you know Captain Knox?—Well, I know him, but I did not see him this long time; I just know him by sight.

8055. You saw him down at the time of the election, he was here in town?—I would hardly know the man if I saw him; I saw him once or twice; he is a fair-haired man.

8056. Did you ever train a horse for him?—No.

8057. Did you ever train a horse for the Major?—No.

8058. Do you know Mr. Hignell?—I do.

8059. Who introduced you to him?—Well, I saw him in town before the election.

8060. Did you ever speak to him?—I did.

8061. What did you say to him?—I might have bid him the time of day, or something like that.

8062. How did you bid him the time of day if you had not been introduced to him?—Well, I don't think—I forget who did introduce me to him.

8063. You forget?—Wait till I think a moment.

8064. You remember the first time you saw Mr. Hignell—don't you?—The first time, I think, I saw him was at the hotel beyond.

8065. Who brought you there?—I don't know but I might have come there myself, perhaps.

8066. To see Hignell? He is not a Sligo man—is he?—Oh, he is a Dublin man, I believe.

8067. How did you know he was there?—Well, I think I was posting a letter in the post office which is convenient to the hotel, and I saw him standing in the gateway.

8068. Well, you went up to him—what did you say to Hignell?—Well, I could not tell you.

8069. Did you say the times were bad?—No; I had no reason to say that.

8070. What did you go to speak to Hignell for, sir?—Well, I could not tell you, but I think I spoke to him.

8071. Did you tell him who you were—did you say you were Tim Fallon, and that you were going to vote for Knox?—I might have mentioned my name.

8072. When you say "might" are not you perfectly

Sixth Day. October 11. Timothy Fallon.

certain you did?—Mention my name? Well, I would tell you if I was.

8073. He did not know you before?—He did not, to my knowledge. Some one pointed him out to me that day—I could not tell who it was—that that was Mr. Hignell; and I just spoke to him going by.

8074. What did you say to him?—I might have bid him the time of day, and passed by.

8075. Did you not say "Good morning, Mr. Hignell," and did he not say "Good morning, Tim"—was not that what occurred?—I could not tell you, but I might have bid him the time of day. I might have said "Good morning, Mr. Hignell." It is likely that is what I did say because it is the most——

8076. Natural thing?—Natural thing.

8077. How did he know you?—I might have told him my name.

8078. Told him your name?—It is likely I did—very likely.

8079. What did you tell him with your name?—I suppose it should be to make myself known to him.

8080. Was not it to put your name down in the little book, on your oath?—Well, on my oath, I never saw him produce a book to enter my name since I first saw him up to this.

8081. What did you tell him your name for—did you tell him you were a voter?—I don't think I did.

8082. You don't think you did, don't you?—At this occasion I don't think I ever mentioned a word to him, but bid him the time of day as I was going by.

8083. On this occasion—you spoke to him afterwards?—Of course I did.

8084. Often?—No, indeed, not very often.

8085. Where?—While I was in Dublin with horses at one time—going over and advertising them.

8086. You were in Dublin with horses?—Yes.

8087. Go on?—I went to advertise them in Major Knox's office, and I just met him in the office when I was going to put in the advertisement.

8088. How long was this before the election?—Oh, it was since the election.

8089. And you advertised the horses?—I did.

8090. Did you ever pay for that advertisement?—Of course I did—a shilling.

8091. What did you say to Hignell then?—I had not much conversation with him. I might have bid him the time of day, the same as I would to any other man.

8092. How long was it after the election that you called in at the Irish Times office to give him your custom?—I could not tell you. It was after the election, at all events.

8093. Well, to go back to the time when you first saw Hignell and bid him the time of day—did you go upstairs at any time with him?—I did not.

8094. Where was it you saw him—was it on the ground floor in the hotel?—I don't think I ever saw him in the hotel inside to my knowledge.

8095. Were you ever in a room with him?—I might, if I can just call to mind; I don't think I was.

8096. Were you ever in a room with him?—Well, I think I was.

8097. Where?—In the hotel, now that I recollect.

8098. Now that you call it to mind?—Just so; if I think of a thing I will tell it.

8099. Which hotel—don't be protesting, but answer me?—Miss Allingham's.

8100. Where—what room?—The front room.

8101. Were you there by yourself?—Indeed I was not.

8102. Who was there with you?—There was no one there but a whole lot of people—I don't know who they were the half of them—in the parlour.

8103. What were you doing there—had you any drink?—No; I don't drink very hard.

8104. How long were you there?—I just walked in and delayed about ten minutes, and walked away.

8105. Were you speaking to Hignell?—No.

8106. Were the rest of the men that were there voters?—They were.

8107. Who were they?—Oh, this was the day that I mean when I——

8108. Never mind what day it was; go on and repeat their names?—I could not tell the half of them.

8109. Well, tell the half of them?—It was the day all those men were gathered to see Mr. Abbott proposed for this town.

8110. Was this after the election?—Oh, it was; it is not very long ago.

8111. I am talking about the election between Major Knox and Captain Flanagan, and you are beginning to tell me some story of something else?—Well, you asked me was I ever in a room there, and that was the only room I ever was in to my knowledge.

8112. Then Hignell was down for Mr. Abbott?—It is my belief he was. I think he was there that night.

8113. How long ago is this?—I suppose about two or three months ago. I have not a very good recollection.

8114. Did Hignell send you a circular to go to that meeting?—I don't think he did.

8115. Who gave you the word to go to that meeting?—Well, I think I got a circular from some one; I don't know.

8116. Are not you perfectly certain you got it?—Perhaps I did, from Mr. Wilson.

8117. Whom did you get the circular from?—I think from Mr. Wilson.

8118. Go back now to the election?—When I asked you about the election, you first spoke about bringing horses to Dublin, and then about Mr. Abbott's meeting. I am asking you about the election between Major Knox and Captain Flanagan. Don't be trifling any longer?—Well, I will answer the questions you ask me.

8119. You swear you saw Hignell in Miss Allingham's hotel at Major Knox's election—what room did you see him in?—I never saw him in that room to my knowledge but what I tell you.

8120. Very well. Only once you saw him in a room there. Mr. Hignell will be examined here. Do you swear you saw him once at Major Knox's election?—Oh, indeed, I saw him often enough.

8121. Where?—I saw him standing by the door, about the hotel.

8122. Were you speaking to him?—No, I was not speaking to him.

8123. Did you only speak to him once?—I did, in Dublin.

8124. In Dublin?—I have told you all I have to say.

8125. On your oath do you believe I am asking you what you said to him in Dublin?—I did not say much to him whatever it was. I didn't think much about it. I bid him the time of day. I don't think of anything else that I said to him.

8126. Are you a married man?—I am.

8127. Was Mr. Hignell ever in your house?—Not to my knowledge.

8128. Did anyone come to your house canvassing for the Major?—Oh no, they had no occasion, I told them that I would keep my word.

8129. Did anyone canvass you on Captain Flanagan's side?—There did; but I was not there the day they came.

8130. Did you ever tell them you would not vote for them on Flanagan's side?—Of course, anyone that ever asked me. I don't know who asked me about it. A neighbour might say "whom would you vote for" or the like of that.

8131. If you get £50 will you take it?—Will I take it?

8132. Yes?—I think I will get no one to give it to me.

8133. Will you take it if you get it, sir—if you get £50 now, will you take it?—Well if I earned it honestly I would be glad to get it.

8134. You would take money if you got it—you would take £20?—I did not say I would take £20.

8135. No, but how much?—Any amount of money that I honestly earned I would take.

8136. Do you mean to say that you would not take any money in consequence of having voted—do you mean to swear that?—Well I suppose they would treat me the same as they would treat any other man—that's all I have to say about it.

8137. Did you expect that money would be going the last time?—I might expect it, but if I did what's my expectation? I was never tempted with the like.

8138. Answer me frankly?—I will.

8139. Did you hear any word that money was going?—No.

8140. Did you hear while you were at Mrs. Hall's that money might be going?—No.

8141. Had you any particular friend of yours that was stopping there—a voter like yourself?—There were indeed a good many in it.

8142. Were you talking about the election while you were there?—Well, I don't think I was.

8143. At what hour of the day did you vote?—I could not say. I think it was rather in the evening I voted. I am not sure. I could not exactly say the hour. I voted at all events.

8144. Who were the gentlemen you were training horses for at the time of the last election—name them?—I had a horse belonging to some one from Manorhamilton—a country farmer, I don't recollect his name. I had a horse belonging to Mr. Wynne, and I think that's all.

8145. Or any time before that?—I might have had them before.

8146. I do not want all. I mean about three or four months before the election. Who were you training for? You have mentioned Mr. Wynne and the farmer from Manorhamilton?—Well I could not tell you. I can't call them to mind. If I knew I would be happy to tell.

8147. Do you recollect the man from whom you got the horse that you brought up to Dublin and called at the Irish Times office to advertise?—Oh, I had a horse of my own and two ponies. They were my own at all events.

8148. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Did Mr. Rowlett speak to you about your vote?—Oh, never.

8149. Did anyone from Mr. Wynne's office speak to you about your vote?—No.

8150. Are you quite sure?—I am. I am, on my oath to declare the truth.

8151. Whose tenant are you?—Mr. Fayley's.

8152. Did he vote at the last election?—He is not living in Sligo. I think he is manager of the Ulster Bank in Waterford.

8153. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Did you think there might be money going whichever side you were?—Oh, sir, I might think of it, and what if I would?

8154. I am asking you what you did think?—If I thought of it what good is it to me to think of it? I might have my thoughts in my own mind.

8155. Listen to this question?—I will answer you.

8156. Did you think that there would be money going whichever side you were at?—Well, that's a question I won't answer, because I can't answer it straightforwardly.

8157. You must answer it, sir; if you don't I will commit you?—You may put me where you like.

8158. Did you think that there was money going on both sides?—Sure if I would think of it a thousand times what's that to me?

8159. Did you, sir, did you think that there would be money going whatever side you were at?—I will give you a candid answer: I expected no money from any person; but, about thinking, I might think that the world might fall on me if I would not be out of the way.

8160. You expected no money; did you think that there would be money going after the election?—Don't ask me that question, sir, because I might commit myself. I am sworn to every word I say. I might think a hundred things. Anything that I know I will declare to you if you ask me the question, without injuring my soul or myself.

(The witness was allowed to withdraw.)

Mr. Harper Campbell sworn and examined.

Mr. Harper Campbell.

8161. The Chief Commissioner.—You live in Sligo?—Yes.

8162. What is your business?—A general merchant, principally in provisions. Curing provisions is my principal trade.

8163. I suppose you export?—Yes.

8164. You have been mentioned by Mr. Byrne as having got a cheque for £1,480?—As regards that Mr. Byrne is under a slight mistake. It is immaterial, but the way was this, that at that meeting to which reference was made, when the £1,480 was made up to be handed to various voters there was a difficulty as to how the money should be handed over to the gentlemen to distribute. Some parties requested that they should have individual letters of credit sent or given to them. Mr. Byrne objected, and said that would occasion great inconvenience and trouble, and that he would rather give the money all in one sum. There was a few minutes' discussion about the matter, and, in order to get over the difficulty, I proposed, if the gentlemen were willing, that the money should be lodged in my name in the Ulster Bank in Dublin. Mr. Byrne had no money with him at the time, and after some talk, that was agreed to be done. The money was lodged to my credit in the Ulster Bank in Dublin, on, I think, the 2nd of April—the £1,483.

8165. Did you draw a cheque on that?—Yes, that was advised to Sligo in the usual course. I distributed that money in accordance with the list that was made up on the Saturday evening to the various gentlemen.

8166. Have you now for our information the list of names to whom you gave money by those cheques?—Yes, I think I can give you them all. (Reads from list.) There were Morris, Conry, Martin, Phillips.

8167. Just mention the amounts given to each?—I can't tell you that.

8168. Was it by cheques you gave it?—There were some by cheques and more by cash. It was within two or three days probably. I gave some on Monday, some on Tuesday and Wednesday and up to Thursday, and received vouchers from each gentleman, which I enclosed in a letter to Mr. Byrne, requesting him to acknowledge the receipt of them, and saying that I hoped he would find all in accordance with the money that had been lodged. I had an acknowledgment of that letter, but that I cannot find.

8169. Well, go on with the names?—Dan M'Gill, James Kidd—I know he got £90, because that was entered paid to him in a cheque which I see entered in my hand-book; William Petrie, Patrick Keighron, and a gentleman who is since dead, and I would rather not have to introduce his name.

8170. Oh, we must have it; you must tell. Who was that gentleman?—Mr. Poe; I think his name was Robert Poe; and then Michael Foley, and I distributed £100 myself.

8171. To voters?—To voters.

8172. To what voters did you give the £100?—George Campbell of Wine-street got £40; Pat Hennessy, £20; James Gallanagh, £20; and Bernard Healy, £20.

8173. Now, what business or occupation was George Campbell in, or why did he get £40? Campbell was a cabinet-maker, and the way was this: I think on the day before the day of nomination, or the day after it, I can't say which, I was passing by his place in Wine-street. I had not canvassed for Sergeant Armstrong or interfered in the election at the time; and I think he was standing at his door and came out to me, and asked what about the election. "What are you going to do?" I said, "I am going to vote for Armstrong; I hope you'll do the same." He said something about obliging me, but that money was going on the other side. I think he said, "I can get £50." I said, "If you can get that I would recommend you to take it," and left him, and walked on. I think I was hurrying to the Bank at the time. I can't recollect whether I told him at that time to go and see my clerk, John Kenny, or whether I subsequently asked Kenny to see him; but, at all events, on the day before the poll, on going into my office, George Campbell was there with my clerk, and Mr. Kenny said to me, "I am glad to tell you that Mr. Campbell is likely to vote with you;" and I said I was very glad to hear it. Campbell then said I was always a good friend to him, and hoped I would continue so. I said, as a matter of course, that I would be glad to do so. I did not know what sum he expected; but I know he expected money.

8174. Of course I would infer that?—There was no doubt about it at all. He then spoke to me about losing business by voting as he was doing, and said he would not like to go up to poll by himself; "Well," I said, "if you are about the polling booth to-morrow, when I am going I will take you up." He was there, and I took him up, and he voted.

8175. Now from what passed between you and George Campbell and your clerk on that day, you came to the conclusion that he wanted money?—Yes.

8176. And did you then lead him to infer it would be "all right" on your side?—I should say that from my words and manner, he might rely upon my getting him money, but I don't recollect that the sum was named, and certainly not by me.

8177. He inferred it would be "all right?"—Yes, he did; at least that is my belief, and I am almost certain that his was the same.

8178. Now explain why the other three men got the £20 each, what they were, and who canvassed them?—James Gallanagh was a butcher—a victualler I should say, a man disposing of beef and mutton. Pat Hennessy had been so, and was in very reduced circumstances, and at that time was merely a helper in his brother's place. With none of those men had I the slightest conversation, or did I know anything about them; but afterwards it was conveyed to me these men were in very indigent circumstances indeed, and that it would be a charity to endeavour to get them some money. I think some time previously to the money being distributed, two of them had applied to me. One of them got £5 on an I. O. U. I think that another party altogether came for him begging that I would give him something, and saying that he was in distress, and had been turned out by his brother, and if he did not get something, he should go to the poorhouse, or words to that effect.

8179. Did you give him £5?—He got £5 in my office.

8180. How long before the distribution of the large sums?—I really cannot say.

8181. And ultimately he only got £15?—He got £15; It was my clerk paid them at the time of the distribution. I did not pay directly myself. They were paid at all events out of my office; I was accountable, at least, it was on my representation the money was got for them.

8182. Will you state what occurred before the £1,480 was arranged upon as the sum—what occurred between you and the other leading supporters of the party—first of all, you knew Mr. Phillips was writing to Dublin?—I did, for he and Mr. Petrie called to my office, and asked me were any parties giving me trouble about the election, or expecting money, and I think I said that one or two were asking for money. They said they would wish very much that I would write to Sergeant Armstrong, and endeavour to get him to try and settle up as it were, or try to meet the requirements of these voters. I did not know what voters they were.

8183. Did Phillips or Petrie show you any of the letters they were writing to Dublin?—No; they did not, nor did I know what their contents were.

8184. But did you understand the purport of these letters to be, that promises had been made, and must be kept in some way?—Well I don't think there was any mention made of promises.

8185. As far as you know?—As far as I know, I should mention also that Campbell had applied to me very shortly after the election, and I was most unwilling to have anything to say to him at the time, but he declared that he was in very distressed circumstances, or something of the sort, and that he must have some money, and a cash order, I think, was prepared on the bank, or on me, I don't know which now, for £40 or £41, which I ordered to be taken up.

8186. On what bank?—I really can't say how it came, but I know one of my clerks I understand paid the amount; but where it came from I do not now recollect.

8187. Just describe the whole of that transaction. Where was it from?—Really I don't recollect.

8188. Did Campbell send meat away?—He was a cabinet-maker. He had been in very difficult circumstances.

8189. When did you pay that £41?—I think probably a month or two after the election.

8190. Very well—you paid that £40?—I paid that myself.

8191. Ultimately on that transactiou you were £1 out of pocket?—It was not worth talking of. I may mention that I had an account for many years with this man Campbell, and I had often advanced him money when he was in difficulties. I relieved him, I think, more than once of the Sheriff's officers, both before—I am not sure about before—but certainly long subsequent to the election, and after the £41.

8192. Was it because you paid the £41 for him that ultimately his figure was put down at £40?—Yes, I think so.

8193. You paid him £41 and £5. Did you pay in advance any of the other sums before Mr. Byrne arranged with you about the entire?—No.

8194. Do you know of any other gentleman in town having paid it?—I do not.

8195. Then you had no communication with Campbell about the matter after paying him the £41?—None whatever, save that I think at the time the money was distributed, I can't call to recollection whether my clerk got a receipt from him for the £40, to send up with the vouchers which were sent to Mr. Byrne or not.

8196. Campbell you say was in distress for years?—Yes.

8197. Did he owe you any money at the time of the election?—I don't think he did. I can't say, but I could easily find out from my books.

8198. But at all events there was nothing serious?—No, there was not. I think when the £40 which was got from Mr. Byrne was placed to his credit, the account was balanced to a very few shillings as it stood in my books.

8199. Do you know anything about the distribution of any other sums of money in connexion with the Sligo elections?—No; I never had anything to do with an election before or since.

8200. Did you vote at the last election?—I did.

8201. Whom did you vote for?—Major Knox.

8202. But Major Knox apparently belonged to the Conservative party?—He did; and although I voted for Sergeant Armstrong at that time as a supporter of Lord Palmerston's Government, I certainly would not have voted for him if he had held the same opinions as regarded Church matters as Captain Flanagan did.

8203. What was the state of the town during the last election?—Well, except on the day of polling, I know very little. Unfortunately I got into a riotous mob, and got hurt on that occasion.

8204. On the polling day what state was the town in?—When I went up on the morning of the polling day there was a very large crowd indeed immediately opposite the tally-room of Captain Flanagan. I was following the three gentlemen—Captain Jones, Captain King, and Mr. Webber. The mob was formed in the shape of a V in the street, and I think I was about five or seven yards behind these three gentlemen when they were going up the street. Captain King and Mr. Webber turned over to the police, who were then at Hagarty's house, on the side path. Captain Jones walked forward to the court, and some one in the crowd called out "to come on—no one would injure them." He passed forward, and I followed him; and immediately Captain King and Mr. Webber were following me at a few yards behind, when immediately sticks got up, and when I looked round Captain King was being beaten on the head very unmercifully. I got at the same time a push and a knock myself, which cut my hat and my head. I was pushed forward, and was driven up as far as the door of the hotel. The crowd was in a great state of excitement; and when I looked around again Captain King was lying on the flags on one knee, with his arms up, sheltering himself from the sticks that were falling on him, and in the scuffle the pistol went off. I did not remark it immediately—the report was a slight one; but very soon after, when standing at the post office, I was told that Captain King was shot. I saw him standing in the arms of two men at the door of the hotel, and he fell as it were backwards into the hotel door. The streets were instantly cleared by the cavalry, or whatever body was here at the time—the hussars, I think they were, or lancers, I could not say which.

8205. Was there any other scene of riot that you saw?—No. Unfortunately after voting I had to go home and get my head dressed.

8206. Were you much injured?—No, it was merely a scalp wound, and did not signify.

8207. Was it by a stone or a stick?—I should say a stick from the way the hat was cut on my head. I know very little of what occurred, for the same evening my place was burned, and I was in a great state of excitement, and that drove everything else out of my head.

8208. Did you apply for compensation?—No, although there were some suspicious circumstances connected with the case; I could not.

8209. That's what I want to know, did you apply?—No, I did not.

8210. Can you give any further information to the Court about the alleged corrupt practices at the last three elections for the borough of Sligo?—I know nothing whatever but what I tell you now; but I believe there is a general impression that there is money expected after an election.

8211. You say that from your knowledge of the town and communication with the voters themselves?—No, I cannot say from any communication with the voters, but I think there is a general feeling that there is a desire to get money.

8212. Is that, as far as you can ascertain, a feeling that the successful candidate is the man to pay the money, or is it expected from both?—I think it is expected from both if they have it.

8213. Did you ever hear before it was disclosed in evidence to-day about the £850 transactions at Mr. Macdonogh's first election?—No, never. I did not vote for Mr. Macdonogh. I had no vote at the first election of Mr. Macdonogh, and at the subsequent election it was given to Sergeant Armstrong.

8214. Was it in consequence of that general expectation of getting money that you knew to prevail among the poorer class of electors that you and the other gentlemen recommended that distribution of money by Sergeant Armstrong?—Well, so far as regards myself, I thought there were some. I knew there were some persons in distress, and I recommended that money to be given, and it was on my representation I believe these three parties I have named got it.

8215. Did you believe at the time that these parties—Hennessy, Gallanagh, and Healey—had voted under the expectation that they would be paid?—I believe they voted perfectly pure and clear.

8216. These three men?—These three men. I believe the victuallers in Sligo as a class are as pure and uncorrupted as any body of men in the town, from my knowledge of them.

8217. But you were sure that Campbell voted in the expectation of money?—No doubt of it.

8218 Although the sum was not mentioned?—I did not mention the sum.

8219. And you paid the £41 to him because you believed it would be ultimately recouped to you?—I never thought at that time about its being recouped or not, but I paid it to him because I believed there was a tacit understanding that he should get the money, and that I was bound to redeem, not the promise, but whatever it was.

8220. The tacit agreement?—The tacit agreement.

8221. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—In reference to your means of forming a belief as to the general expectations of money existing among voters, may I ask how long have you been an elector of the borough?—The first time, I think, I had the right to vote was at the election of Mr. Sadlier and Mr. Somers. I did not vote at that election, but I think that was the first time I had the right to vote. I voted for Mr. Wynne against Somers. I think I voted four times in Sligo since I came to it in 1843.

8222. The Chief Commissioner.—Forty-three?—Yes. I came here in 1843 first, but I was not permanently resident here till '45.

8223. So that your attention was directed all that time to the state of feeling ——?—No, I never interfered about political matters in scarcely any way. I did not belong to any of the societies or clubs or registration societies, or anything of the sort. I studiously avoided all these.

8224. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—But when you aided with regard to the distribution of that money on behalf of Sergeant Armstrong, did you at that time act under the belief that money was generally expected by voters when they voted?—No. I knew nothing about what was expected, or what was to be given, or anything else. The gentlemen came there. Each had their own list, and it was certainly a very formidable affair; and I think Mr. Petrie, Mr. Kidd, and many of the others, were thunderstruck at what was required and what was expected; but, at the same time, they thought it was right the men should get some money.

8225. Why was it thought right that the men should get something, if they did not expect it at the time they voted?—I don't know, except the general expectation that money would probably come to them afterwards. I don't know what was in other persons' minds. I know that, as far as regards myself and these three men, the application had been made to me to get them something. Whether they expected it or not I don't know, but I don't think they did at the time they voted.

8226. But you know you have just said there was an expectation?—There is a sort of general expectation, I may say.

8227. On recommending that that application should be made to Sergeant Armstrong for that enormous sum of money, did you then believe that there was a general expectation among voters who were to get money, that money, that they should get some money?—Yes.

8228. I mean at the time they voted?—No. I can't say that I did think so, nor did I know. I can't form an opinion now as to that.

8229. But if you thought there was no such expectation, why did you recommend the demand being made, or acquiesce in its being made?—Well, I suppose the other gentlemen were something in the same way as myself. Applications may have been made to them the same as to me; and I recommended these three men to get the money, knowing their circumstances.

8230. Did you look upon it then, generally, as an affair of charity?—With some, no. I think there were many people got money then that was no charity.

Sixth Day. October 11. Mr. Harper Campbell.

8231. Do you agree with Sergeant Armstrong, who told us that he believed that ninety-seven men got money on that occasion?—I really cannot tell you the number, but whatever it was, the lists were handed to Mr. Byrne, and he took them up, and, I suppose, submitted them to Sergeant Armstrong; and I assume that what the Sergeant says is quite correct.

8232. But at any rate they were a numerous body?—They were very numerous.

8233. Do you believe the majority of these men were objects of charity?—No. I think a great many were not.

8234. Do you think the majority were not objects of charity?—I do not think they were. There was a man examined here the other day named Neilan—I think he was an object of charity. I understood he was. There was a man named Blair who got money, and I don't think it was any charity to give him money. He applied to me himself, and I turned him out of my office.

8235. If you did not think the majority were objects of charity, why did you recommend or acquiesce in the money of Sergeant Armstrong being applied in that way, if you thought there was no implied contract at the time the men voted that they should be paid—I mean by an implied contract, an expectation on their part at the time of the election that they would be paid, and no attempt made to undeceive them?—I really don't know. I left it to the gentlemen themselves to recommend them or not as they thought best. I took no part in that. So far as the money was concerned that I asked for, it was given on my responsibility; and I suppose the others got it in the same way.

8236. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—When you met Mr. Byrne and Mr. Tracy on that Easter Saturday, did you hear any of the Sergeant's friends say there were voters to whom they had promised money?—No, I did not; nor I don't think that anyone knew I had a promise or any engagement with Campbell. I am not aware that they knew anything about it.

8237. You did not tell that?—No—at least, I think I did not.

8238. And you do not remember any of the others saying it?—Certainly not.

8239. The Chief Commissioner.—In concurring with the Sergeant's friends about the propriety of paying that sum, had you in your own mind any regard to securing the borough for the Sergeant at a future election?—I never thought of such a thing; there was nothing spoken on the subject at all.

8240. How did that sum of £1,480 come to be settled on?—Really, I can't tell. Hearing the evidence here, I think, on Thursday last, and seeing it was likely these things would come up, I wrote to Mr. Byrne, if possible, to send down the vouchers, so that I might see how the money went; but I believe he was in Ballinasloe at the time, and he did not get that note.

8241. Is there anything now you would wish to say to the Commissioners in consequence of the evidence you saw in the newspapers about this inquiry?—I saw very little indeed; but if there should be anything worthy of remark I will take the opportunity of speaking to you.

8242. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Had Campbell, the cabinet-maker, voted for Mr. Macdonogh before?—I really do not know for whom he voted. I had taken no part in election matters until that occasion.

8243. You took no part in Major Knox's election?—None whatever except voting. I voted for him of course.

(The witness withdrew.)

Mr. John Magrath.

John Magrath sworn and examined.

8244. The Chief Commissioner.—Mr. Magrath you are an elector of Sligo?—Yes.

8245. How long have you been an elector?—I suppose for twelve years.

8246. What was the first election you voted at?—'Pon my word I can't tell.

8247. Did you vote for Somers or Wynne?—I voted for Somers, I recollect, upon one occasion.

8248. You remember when Mr. Wynne retired, and when Mr. Macdonogh was the candidate against Colonel Tennison?—I remember Mr. Macdonogh being returned here.

8249. Did you vote for Mr. Macdonogh?—No.

8250. Did you vote at all at that election?—I can't say whether I had a vote then or not.

8251. You remember the election between Mr. Macdonogh and Sergeant Armstrong?—I do.

8252. Did you vote at that election?—Yes.

8253. Whom did you vote for?—Sergeant Armstrong.

8254. On that election were you offered any money by the Macdonogh party?—No.

8255. Were you in court to-day?—A short time.

8256. Do you know Thady Kilgallon?—Yes.

8257. Did you hear his evidence?—No.

8258. Well, I may inform you that he said you told him you were offered a sum of money for yourself and either five or six others—large sums?—Not one farthing.

8259. Did you ever tell Kilgallon that?—Not a word about it. I say there was never any money offered.

8260. Not any money offered?—No.

8261. Was there any talk about it?—There was nothing except that Keighron called up there when five or six persons——

8262. I am coming to that. That was on Sergeant Armstrong's side?—Sergeant Armstrong's side I mean. There was no money directly or indirectly offered.

8263. What did Keighron say to you?—He only asked us would we record our votes. There were five or six of us sitting down chatting respecting the election.

8264. Was John Harte there?—Yes.

8265. And James Moran?—Yes.

8266. And Michael Hunt?—Yes.

8267. And Dominick Hunt?—Yes.

8268. And yourself, John Magrath?—Yes. We were in Michael Hunt's house, and in my own house.

8269. Were you resolved to vote?—We all intended to vote together.

8270. And you had not made up your minds what way to vote. Is not that the fact?—We had made up our minds to vote for Sergeant Armstrong.

8271. That is, ultimately?—Yes.

8272. But before that had not the five of you resolved to go together?—We resolved to go together.

8273. But you had not made up your minds before that which way you would vote?—That is quite a mistake.

8274. Were you always pledged to the Sergeant?—I was for the Sergeant, and I think the rest were too.

8275. Why were the five of you gathered together?—Why were the five of us?

8276. Yes, that is a very singular thing, you know?—Well, at the time of an election, you know, there is little or no business of any importance doing on one side or the other; and they sat down together, I suppose, to take half glasses of brandy.

8277. At what time of the day did you vote?—The Sergeant himself came up to Hunt's house, where two or three of them had been sitting. I think I was about Hunt's door when he was passing, and he asked us would we go down with him, and we said "Yes." We went with him and recorded our votes; and it appears that it occasioned—I am not going to say that it occasioned—five or six more to vote also, which returned the Sergeant. There were five or six that could not be got to go one side or the other; and when we five or six went in and recorded our votes for him they recorded their votes also.

8278. Then they knew the Sergeant would be in a majority—was that what you inferred?—I am not going to say that. What has not been told to me I cannot tell.

8279. As an old elector don't you think that if the five of you—— ?—Well, I am not an old elector. I don't think I recorded a vote beyond three times.

8280. As an elector do not you think that you five voting in that way carried the election ?—These four or five and the others that had been there carried it.

8281. But these four or five would not have voted only that you voted ?—Which five ?

8282. The second five ?—They had been in the Court-house.

8283. And they were induced ?—They were in the Court-house, outside in the hall.

8284. And were induced ?—I cannot say. At all events they did not vote till then.

8285. Till you voted ?—I say they did not vote till then, and they voted when we did.

8286. But the election was carried ?—And it was then in favour of Sergeant Armstrong. There were several voters in my house during the day, and it was out through my gateway that the Sergeant went and those voters along with him, to the Court-house here to record their votes.

8287. Mr Commissioner Byrne.—What were the names of the five or six ?—You have got them a second since.

8288. The Chief Commissioner.—John Hart, James Moran, Michael Hunt, John M'Grath, and Dominick Hunt ?—Yes.

8289. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—I mean the five or six others who followed their example ?—I can't say.

8290. The Chief Commissioner.—You know Michael Hunt ?—Yes.

8291. Did you say to him that £50 a-piece was little enough to offer ?—Never a word, nor to any other man.

8292. Did you hear him swear that ?—I did not. I was not here at all at his evidence. I have not heard the evidence of any man since the Commission commenced but that of Campbell, and a portion of Cherry's.

8293. Do you know James Moran ?—Yes.

8294. Did you know of anyone writing on your behalf to the Sergeant after the election ?—I don't recollect anything of the kind.

8295. Will you swear it did not occur ?—I don't recollect—I won't swear it.

8296. Will you swear it did not occur ?—I won't be positive.

8297. Did you ever hear of writing up to the Sergeant's friends in Dublin, that your five men were to get £50 a-piece ?—No, there was never anything of the kind named.

8298. Named ?—No, there never was anything of the kind named, but it was said that if we went down and recorded our votes for the Sergeant he would bear us in mind as friends.

8299. That is to give you money ?—I am not going to say money.

8300. But what do you mean by bearing you in mind as friends ?—I can't answer that question further.

8301. Who said that he would bear you in mind as friends ?—I told you, sir, distinctly a few minutes ago that Keighron called up to see would we record our votes for Sergeant Armstrong, and that we said it was quite time enough, that he was certain of us. "If you go down," said he, "the election will soon be over; you may rest satisfied that the Sergeant will bear you all in his mind." That is all I have to say about it.

8302. Will bear you all in mind as friends ?—Will bear us all in mind as friends.

8303. Did Mr. Keighron say that to you ?—Yes—to us all. Sergeant Armstrong then came up to us and we went down along with him, and I positively say that Sergeant Armstrong never made use of a word in reference to money nor I to him. I believe we were in the act of taking a half glass of brandy or whisky at the time, and the Sergeant was asked to do the same and he did so.

8304. Keighron said the Sergeant would bear you in mind as friends. Now, on your oath what did you understand by that ?—I am on my oath since I sat here. I understood that the Sergeant would become a friend to me on all occasions at a future date.

8305. Do you mean to say that observation had no reference to money ?—I say I never spoke to him about money.

8306. Did you understand what Keighron meant when he said that to you ?—I just gave it to you as it occurred.

8307. What did you understand by it ?—I understood that the Sergeant would become or might become a friend on any other occasions.

8308. That he would befriend you ?—That was all, simply.

8309. How befriend you ?—Why there are many ways a member of Parliament might become a friend. For instance, if I wanted a situation for a friend.

8310. I am not talking about that ?—Well, that is one way in which I considered that the Sergeant might become a friend.

8311. Why did you not vote before Keighron spoke to you ?—We didn't vote when Keighron did speak to us either. I did think if we voted in the early part of the day the Sergeant would not have got the election; and that is one reason for you.

8312. Attend to me again. Were you offered £20 by Mr. Phillips ?—Twenty pounds ?

8313. Were you offered £20 by Phillips ?—I will explain that.

8314. Answer first of all, were you ?—If this be an offer I will explain it to you. Phillips lived next door to me, and the one gateway gave ingress and egress to both of us; and he met me in the gate and he said, "I was looking for you yesterday." "Well, here I am," said I, or words to that effect. "Well, I have £20 inside for you." "For what ?" said I. "For the election," said he, "but I suppose you won't take it." "Indeed I won't," said I, "nor £500 from you."

8315. Do you mean because you would not take the money ?—I mean to say I would not take it.

8316. Would you have taken £50 ?—I would not, nor £100. I would not stick myself in anything of the kind.

8317. Were you one of the party mentioned in the evidence as requiring £800 from Colonel Tennison ?—You will have to explain that before I can answer the question. I told you I was not here, and that I heard no evidence but that of two persons. Tell me what election was it and then I will know.

8318. Do you remember Colonel Tennison being a candidate here ?—Well, yes, I think so.

8319. Did he canvass you ?—I think he did.

8320. Have you a doubt on your mind ?—No, I recollect he canvassed me.

8321. And why did you say "I think"—have you a doubt about it ?—Well, really I did not take the dates of these things at the time.

8322. I do not mean the date. I ask you do you recollect the time of Colonel Tennison being a candidate for the borough of Sligo ?—I recollect Colonel Tennison being in Sligo, but I don't think he ever offered. He might have come round to canvass, but to the best of my knowledge and belief he never did offer for Sligo as a candidate.

8323. Did he canvass you ?—I cannot say. As well as my memory serves me he did not offer for Sligo.

8324. Well, I tell you he did. Were you one of the party ?—I don't know that he ever polled a vote in Sligo.

8325. Is that your point ?—I don't recollect.

8326. You know perfectly well he did not poll a vote ?—Sure that's what I think.

8327. But I tell you he was a candidate for the borough and retired ?—Well, he was. I recollect that.

8328. At the time Mr. Macdonogh was returned; now, I ask you did Colonel Tennison canvass you ?—Well, I think he did.

Sixth Day. October 11. John Magrath.

8329. Have you a doubt on the subject?—I am not certain, and I won't swear it.

8330. Were you one of the party that demanded from him the £800?—Never.

8331. Did you ever hear about that before?—Never.

8332. Before I had mentioned it to you to-day?—No, sir; I never heard a word about it till awhile ago. There was £800 demanded, not from Colonel Tennison but from——

8333. Ball?—Ball.

8334. Were you one of that party?—No.

8335. Who demanded that from Colonel Tennison?—I don't know no more than you.

8336. You never heard that?—I heard it outside the Court after you retired.

8337. Did Ball canvass you?—Yes.

8338. Did you promise to vote for him?—No.

8339. Did you refuse to vote for him?—I did distinctly.

8340. Did you know Mr. O'Donnell who was here for Colonel Tennison?—Mr. O'Donnell. No, I don't know him.

8341. Do you remember Mr. Charles O'Donnell?—I don't know; I don't recollect.

8342. Had you five who were identified at Sergeant Armstrong's election—were you going together to vote for the same man on the occasion Colonel Tennison was a candidate?—I don't well understand you.

8343. Were the five of you agreed to vote together at the previous election—that is you, the two Hunts, Moran, and Hart?—That is to vote for Sergeant Armstrong?

8344. No; I mean at the election before Sergeant Armstrong's, had the five of you agreed to vote together?—At the previous election.

8345. Yes?—Oh, of that I know nothing, I don't recollect it.

8346. Did Mr. Phillips tell you that £20 had been got for Hart?—I won't say. I don't know.

8347. Or for Moran?—I won't say it; I don't know.

8348. Or for Moran?—He just told me as I told you.

8349. Did you ever get money after an election?—I never got a shilling in my life for election business.

8350. Had you ever heard you were to get money before Phillips offered it to you?—Had I heard?

8351. Yes?—No. I heard there was money given out to those friends of Sergeant Armstrong—to each and every one of them.

8352. Did Phillips tell you the money was coming for you?—Sure I told you what Phillips did tell me.

8353. Was that the first you heard of money for yourself?—Yes.

8354. Did you know your name was on the list?—I don't know.

8355. You don't know?—It might have been.

8356. Did you know your name was on the list before Phillips told you to come up to get the money?—In my own yard Phillips told me he had £20 inside for me.

8357. Before that did you know your name was on the list?—It might have been for all I knew.

8358. Did you know it?—I did not know whether it was on or not. I have told you all I know of the case up to the present.

8359. Did you object to your name being on the list for money?—Faith, I could not object to what I did not know.

8360. Did you know that Hart, Moran, or Hunt were making any application for money?—I don't know that they made application for money.

8361. Did they tell you they did?—I don't think they did.

8362. What do you mean by "you don't think?" I don't think they made any application for money.

8363. Can you give any further explanation—had Phillips anything to say to your voting?—Certainly not; not that I know.

8364. Did he ever ask you to vote?—Not that I know.

8365. Did he ever ask you to vote?—On some part of the day of polling he came to my door, and asked me would I not go down and record my vote for the Sergeant. I said I would go down in due time.

8366. In due time?—I said, "I will go down in due time, in the course of the day;" that it was quite time enough then.

8367. Were you holding back then?—What's that?

8368. Were you holding back?—No, I was not holding back. What do you mean by holding back?

8369. Reluctant to vote—unwilling to vote?—No.

8370. You were determined all along, you say, to vote for the Sergeant?—Yes.

8371. Did you know a named Lenehan?—Lenehan—well, I think I did.

8372. What is his Christian name?—I don't know.

8373. Was he here at the last election?—I think there is a car-driver in Pound-street named Lenehan.

8374. Do you know a man from Geeva named Lenehan?—No.

8375. Were you complaining that you had not got your promise of money to Sergeant Armstrong?—No, that is not the statement of the matter.

8376. Put it your own way then?—With regard to a complaint, I could have no complaint as to Sergeant Armstrong.

8377. Never mind about that?—As to Sergeant Armstrong?

8378. Of course not. What were you complaining about—you were one of the aggrieved party?—I called in to the Sergeant in his own study in Dublin, and said I heard there was money given to several parties in Sligo, and I told him I had got none of it, nor did the others, nor never did from that day to this.

8379. When did you complain to the Sergeant that you got no money?—I suppose it was six or twelve months afterwards; I was up on business.

8380. Did you mention John Hart's name?—I cannot say.

8381. Will you swear you did not?—I won't swear that I did or did not; the date is so far back that I don't recollect.

8382. Did you mention James Moran's name?—I won't say.

8383. I will ask you about John Hart first?—I say I won't say whether I did or not.

8384. Did you mention James Moran's name?—James Moran and I happened to be together in Dublin, and we called to see him about it.

8385. Did you mention Michael Hunt's name?—I don't know.

8386. Did you mention Dominick Hunt's name?—I won't say whether I did or not.

8387. Did you complain that other people had got money and that you had got none?—We just told the Sergeant——

8388. Did you complain that other people had got money, and that you had got none?—We told the Sergeant that we heard money had been given to almost all his friends in Sligo, and that it had been understood that the Sergeant himself said he would bear in mind the parties who assisted him in seconding his election. I said to him that other parties had been befriended by him in the way of money. "Well, I thought I sent," said he, "what did the whole of them." "I have only to tell you," said I, "that we never got a penny."

8389. You will tell me a little more before you are done. Attend to me. When you went to Sergeant Armstrong's house in Dublin, did you want to get money from him?—No; we told Sergeant Armstrong as I told you. I asked no money from him. He is not far away from me yet.

8390. When the two of you went to Sergeant Armstrong's house in Dublin, did you want to get money?—We told the Sergeant——

8391. First of all did you wish to get money?—The Sergeant gave us no money, and we asked none of him.

8392. Did you wish to get money?—We asked for no money.

8393. What did you go for; what was your object in going?—Why, we went in to see the Sergeant, and told him that we heard other parties got money in Sligo.

8394. Why did you mention to the Sergeant that other parties had got money in Sligo?—I told him because several parties had been paid money, as I had been told.

8395. Did you tell him that by way of news? Why did you tell him that other parties got money—that other voters had got money for their votes?—Why, if he paid parties, of course if he paid us, then I suppose we might take it.

8396. And you would have taken it?—I would take it from no other hand. If he complimented me with a loan, or other thing of that sort I would do it.

8397. You say you would take it from no other hand?—Certainly not.

8398. You refused £20?—I refused £20, and would not have taken £20, nor £500 from the man who offered it to me.

8399. When you went in that way, telling the Sergeant that other people had been paid, I will just ask you in plain language what figure had you in your own mind—was it not £50?—Nothing at all.

8400. What?—No figure at all.

8401. How much would you have taken?—No figure at all.

8402. How much would you have taken—you would not have taken a shilling like a beggar-man?—I suppose not, nor £1.

8403. I know that very well—how much?—I would have taken a good sum if I got it, but I would not have taken a paltry sum for my vote. I never looked for a thing of the kind, nor I would not ask it either.

8404. You would not have taken a paltry sum for your vote. How much less would you have taken less than £50?—I would take nothing at all after it was over.

8405. Had you and the other man, James Moran, who was with you, any connexion in business in town?—We had several business people to attend. I can't really recollect. I could not undertake to say I had any particular business.

8406. Had you and Moran any other business in Dublin except to call on Sergeant Armstrong?—I can't say.

8407. You will not swear you had?—No, it is too far back.

8408. How long did you remain in Dublin?—I might be there one or two or three days. I can't recollect. I can't tell what length of time I would be in Dublin, or Liverpool, or Glasgow. I have no note of these things.

8409. Now, listen. On the day of the polling you say you were drinking brandy or something together, the five of you, at Hunt's?—Yes.

8410. Did you hear it said then that Mr. Lyons had offered £300 for six votes?—Never a word if it.

8411. Do you swear that did not occur?—Not that I recollect or ever heard. It never came to my ears, to my knowledge or recollection, either from Mr. Lyons or from any other person.

8412. Repeat the whole of what you said to Sergeant Armstrong, in Dublin, again—you and Moran?—Well, I don't well recollect what I said to him.

8413. You have repeated it once. I want you now to repeat it again; say all that was said?—I told him that I heard there was money paid to all his friends in Sligo.

8414. To all?—Yes.

8415. Had you heard that money was paid to all?—I could not say to all.

8416. Was that true then?—I may make a mistake in saying the word "all," but to his friends in Sligo.

8417. What did the Sergeant say?—He said he did send money down that he thought everyone had a right to; he said what would compliment every person.

8418. What did you say?—I said, as I before told you, that——

8419. Did not you convey to the Sergeant that you and Moran had not got a penny of what was sent down?—Yes, I did.

8420. You said you had got none of it?—Yes.

8421. What did the Sergeant say to that?—Sergeant Armstrong might consider, perhaps, that I got part of that money, and I considered it right to tell him I had not.

8422. And that was your object in going to Dublin?—No, I did not say that it was my object in going to Dublin.

8423. Was that your object on calling on the Sergeant?—Decidedly.

8424. You said you got none of it?—I did.

8425. What did he say to that?—And I say now that I did not get it. He said he had sent money to all his friends. I think that's the word; I won't be positive.

8426. How did that interview conclude—how long were you there?—Not many minutes.

8427. Did he turn you out?—No.

8428. Did you go away satisfied or dissatisfied?—I went away with a shake hands from him, and passed on.

8429. Did you go away satisfied in your own mind or dissatisfied?—I was no way dissatisfied.

8430. Had you accomplished the object of your visit?—Yes.

8431. Successfully, had you?—I accomplished the object of my visit—to give an explanation of the case, as I before told you, and I did not delay many minutes. I bade him good-by and went away.

8432. Do you know Mr. Randall Peyton?—The Clerk of the Peace, is it?

8433. Yes?—I know him by seeing him.

8434. Did you know him to be an agent of Colonel Tennison?—Not in my life.

8435. Not in your life?—No, not that I recollect.

8436. Do you remember the election when Colonel Tennison was in the field?—I don't recollect to have known Peyton by seeing him alone until about a year ago here, since he got the situation. Before then I don't recollect that I saw him. I might have met him, but I don't know him. I did not know Mr. Peyton till he got the situation.

8437. When Colonel Tennison was in the field, did you and four or five others say they should get £800, or some very large sum of money, or you would not support him?—No, not a word from me or anyone else that I know.

8438. Did you say anything to that effect on the occasion when Mr. Ball was a candidate?—Decidedly not; I told him, when he came into my shop, that I would not vote for him.

8439. Was Mr. Ball the Liberal candidate?—I believe so.

8440. He stood on the Liberal side?—Yes.

8441. What are you in politics?—I am a Catholic.

8442. And a Liberal? Why did you refuse your vote to Mr. Ball?—Why did I refuse my vote? I told him in plain terms that he had been in Sligo before, and that he was turned out by the people, and that I would not record a vote for him. I say it was from no bad feeling, directly or indirectly, that I had against the man.

8443. Now, in reference to the time Colonel Tennison was a candidate, do you positively say you never gave Mr. Peyton, or Mr. O'Donnell to understand that you expected a large sum of money, and that if you did not get it you would not vote for him?—I positively tell you I never made use of that language to one or the other, or to any man.

8444. Did you give either of them to understand that unless you got something from Colonel Tennison, you would not support him?—Mr. Tennison?

8445. Yes?—I never made use of a remark of the kind to Mr. Tennison.

8446. To Mr. Tennison?—Never.

8447. Did you make use of a remark of the kind to Mr. Peyton or Mr. O'Donnell?—I did not know Mr. O'Donnell at all.

SIXTH DAY.
October 11.
John Magrath.

8448. Did you say it to any friend of Colonel Tennison's?—Not a being, sir. I now recollect that Colonel Tennison was in my shop, but what I said to him I cannot recollect.

8449. Was any agent or canvasser for Colonel Tennison in your shop on any other occasion?—Not on any occasion that I recollect. Mr. Magill, of Pound-street, had been with him, and one day he was in my house, and, to the best of my opinion, I think I told Colonel Tennison I would vote for him. Positively, I think, to the best of my opinion—I won't swear to it—but I think it likely I did.

8450. Did you tell Mr. Magill on that occasion how you would vote?—Not that I mind. I don't know that I had any conversation with Mr. Magill after that; I only saw he was in with Colonel Tennison.

8451. Had you any conversation with Mr. Magill except in the presence of Colonel Tennison?—Not a word, nor had no necessity for conversation with him.

8452. Were you aware of there having been a party of some four or five voters that held out for money—that would not support Colonel Tennison unless they got money?—I am not; I know nothing about it.

8453. You know nothing about it?—No.

8454. Whom did you vote for at the last election?—Which election?

8455. This election, when Major Knox was a candidate?—I did not vote at all.

8456. Were you canvassed by anyone?—I was.

8457. Who canvassed you?—Major Knox canvassed me at an early date, and I promised him.

8458. Did anyone else call upon you beside Major Knox?—Captain Flanagan I was told was at my house a couple of times, but I did not see him.

8459. Was Mr. Stokes with you?—No.

8460. Or Mr. Lyons?—No.

8461. Was any other supporter of Major Knox that you remember talking to you about your vote?—Not that I know.

8462. Did Thomas Brennan speak to you about your vote?—No.

8463. Were you in town on the polling day?—I was.

8464. Where were you on the polling day?—In my own house.

8465. And did you never stir out of it?—I could not stir out of it. My premises were broken into at the rere of the concern by hundreds of men looking for me; and the police or soldiers, I don't know which, were obliged to be left at the front and rere to guard the place from the number of persons that came in after me.

8466. Did you get any employment from Major Knox before the election?—No employment, or anything.

8467. Did you handle any money of his?—Never a shilling, nor any person for me.

8468. How was it that you came to promise him?—How did I come to promise him?

8469. Yes?—The day he solicited me.

8470. Why did you change, you were for Sergeant Armstrong?—Sergeant Armstrong did not come forward again.

8471. Was that the only reason?—Sergeant Armstrong did not come forward. Major Knox came in and solicited my vote, and I asked him his principles. He said he was for tenant-right, and I said that any man that was for tenant-right I would vote for; and I considered Major Knox was a good man, and the right man in the right place, and the man that was required to represent the people of Sligo in Parliament; and I say the same now; and when Sergeant Armstrong was in, he was the same honest-hearted man.

8472. Did you get any loan of money at the time of the last election from Major Knox or anybody else?—Not a shilling, or from any other.

8473. Did you get any land from Major Knox?—I have a field, but I pay for it.

8474. When did you get it?—I have only the grass of it.

8475. When did you get the grass of it?—I got it here I think in the end of July, and I paid £10 for it. It was set to me by Mr. Phibbs.

8476. The Chief Commissioner.—In July last?—Yes.

8477. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Have you paid any rent for it?—I have paid no rent yet for it; he did not ask me for the money.

8478. Was there any written agreement between you?—Decidedly.

8479. Have you that agreement?—I have not. Mr. Phibbs has it.

8480. The Chief Commissioner.—When you went into the study of Sergeant Armstrong—I am now referring to the Sergeant's evidence in court—did you say, "are you going to settle with us?"—I won't say.

8481. What?—I don't know what I did; I don't recollect.

8482. These are the words Sergeant Armstrong used in court—"Are you going to settle with us?"—I say I don't recollect it.

8483. Will you swear you did not say that?—I will not.

8484. You will not?—No, sir.

8485. Did you say that rather roughly?—No, I don't think it.

8486. Wasn't that before the money was offered to you by Phillips. Now I have refreshed your memory about it?—Yes, possibly it might.

8487. Don't use the words "possibly it might." Don't you now remember that that was before the money was offered by Phillips?—Well, according to my recollection, upon my word I can't tell you whether it was before or after. I won't be positive.

8488. Did the Sergeant say anything about his friends being down in Sligo settling accounts?—No, I should think what the Sergeant said was that he sent down a certain sum that would be given to all parties.

8489. How much?—He did not name it as well as I recollect. He promised nothing.

8490. Did that satisfy you, and did you go away expecting to get some of it?—No, I knew well I would get nothing at all then.

8491. After your interview with the Sergeant?—I knew I would get none at all.

8492. When did you know that. You knew you were offered £20?—Sure of course when I refused it, I knew I would get none.

8493. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Would you have voted for Major Knox if it had not been for the intimidation?—I would.

8494. And you were prevented by the violence of these people?—Yes.

8495 Whereabouts is this field you hold from Major Knox?—It's a little below the town here.

8496. One of the town parks?—Yes.

8497. How large is it?—I suppose it is about two acres, or thereabouts.

8498. What is the rent you pay for it?—Ten pounds a year for the crops. It is not for the year; it is only——

8499. For the summer's crop?—Yes.

8500. Now, I want to know if anybody swore that after the election you told him that it would be well to get money—I mean after Sergeant Armstrong's election—would that be false?—If anybody said what?

8501. If anybody swore that after Sergeant Armstrong's election you told him that it would be well to get money?—I don't recollect that I said anything of the kind.

8502. Would it be false to say that you had said it?—I don't think I said it. I don't know that I did.

8503. But you can't contradict it on your oath; you merely say that you don't recollect?—What I have no recollection of I won't contradict, nor will I give proof only of what I know.

(The witness withdrew.)

Patrick Keighron sworn and examined.

8504. The Chief Commissioner.—I believe you are a merchant in Sligo?—Yes.

8505. Do you remember canvassing the five men whose names have been mentioned on the day of polling at Sergeant Armstrong's election?—I do not.

8506. Did you go to speak to them?—No.

8507. At all?—There are more than five names on the list that I gave.

8508. I have not come to the payment of the money yet, Mr. Keighron; I am only now asking you about the men I call the five men we have been asking so much about; namely, Hart, Moran, Hunt, Magrath, and Dominic Hunt?—Oh, yes.

8509. Do you remember on the day of the polling going to speak to those five men?—I do.

8510. Where were they?—In Mr. Magrath's house.

8511. In Magrath's house?—I think so.

8512. Had you information at that time that those men were hanging back?—I had.

8513. From whom?—Oh, generally amongst ourselves at the court-house, amongst the supporters of Sergeant Armstrong, that they were holding back.

8514. Holding back for money?—Well, I suppose so; I only suppose it.

8515. That's what you supposed and believed at that time, and what you believe now, Mr. Keighron?—Well, I believe that was the fact.

8516. Now, can you remember what hour of the day that was?—I think it was between two and three o'clock in the day.

8517. I believe from the evidence we have already, we may assume that Sergeant Armstrong and Mr. Macdonogh were nearly neck and neck?—They were about that I think.

8518. Now, do you remember exactly who brought you word that these men were holding back?—I couldn't say.

8519. I presume from the position you held in conducting the election, it must have been from some influential person?—I dare say it was.

8520. Some person in your own rank?—I think so.

8521. Now, after that did you then say you would do your best?—Oh, I think I was asked to go once and speak to them; someone asked me in the court-house to go over and speak to them.

8522. And you then went?—I went up and spoke to them.

8523. Will you just, first of all, tell us what exactly occurred between you and the five men?—Well, it was Magrath I met.

8524. The last witness?—The last witness. After some conversation about the election I asked him to come down and vote, and that likely he might as well do so, as the Sergeant would surely win. Some words passed between us then, and he would not come. He then, I think, said that they had offers from others.

8525. Magrath said?—Yes, that they had offers from others, and that large sums were offered. and that he would rather have a lesser sum from his own side. So I said, "Magrath, if you imagine that I have come here to offer you money, or to treat with you about money, you are much mistaken; I would be sorry to do a thing of the sort; you know what the consequences would be; I have not come here to do a thing of the kind; good-by to you." I left the place when I found that he began to speak about money.

8526. Has Magrath left court now?—He has.

8527. There is no doubt the man spoke to you about money?—Not a doubt of it in the world. He said he would rather take a lesser thing from his own side.

8528. Did he mention how much he had been offered?—He did.

8529. How much?—Well, he said that one of the gentlemen on the Conservative side had offered them £80 each, and that he would rather have half that from his own side.

8530. That is, £80 each for Hart, Moran, Hunt, Magrath, and Dominic Hunt?—I think five of them.

8531. Did he name the gentleman on the Conservative side?—He did.

8532. Well we must have his name too—who was the gentleman?—Well I could not——

8533. Was it Lyons?—It was not. I am not quite positive about it, and I would rather not mention any persons.

8534. You know this is only what was said to you; there may not be a word of truth in it, and it does nobody any harm to tell it?—Well, I think, if my memory serves me right, he said Williams.

8535. That is, Thomas Williams?—Yes.

8536. Were the other men in the same room with you when this conversation occurred?—We did not go into a room at all.

8537. Did he come out?—It was I think in the hall of his house.

8538. They came out as a sort of scout, and left the four men?—Yes, some of the other men were loitering about the place.

8539. Did you then come away?—Oh, I came away at once. I came back and said it was no use to talk to those persons, and I would not have any more to do with them.

8540. Now was any other ambassador sent to them besides yourself?—Not that I am aware of. I found afterwards that the Sergeant himself went up and brought them down.

8541. Then you saw these men coming up afterwards?—I saw them coming to the poll.

8542. It really did, to a certain extent, as we have evidence in the history of the election, decide the election?—Well I believe it did.

8543. Mr. Keighron, did you afterwards consider that these men had some sort of claim?—Oh, they had no claim on me in any shape or form. I don't know what claim they might have had.

8544. You said very properly that you refused to have anything to do with it; did you afterwards consider that those men had some sort of claim?—I did not consider that they had a claim at all.

8545. You afterwards made out a list?—I did.

8546. Did you put these men's names down in your list?—I did not.

8547. On whose list were these men's names down?—Mr. Phillips's, I believe.

8548. How did they happen to come on Phillips's list?—I cannot say, I think he called on them after I was there.

8549. That is, Mr. Phillips went as an ambassador from the Liberal side?—I suppose so.

8550. There is no doubt about it; you heard he did afterwards. We have it in evidence. I don't know whether it is the fact or not till you tell me so, but did you assist in the distribution of a portion of the money?—Oh, I did.

8551. Give the names of the electors you paid, and the sums?—I will. [Produces papers]. These are the receipts that I got for the money.

8552. Read them out?—"Michael Rooney, £20; John Jennings, £20; James Devanny, £20; Laurence Burke, £20; Edward M'Ilvenny, £20; Stephen Hughes, £20; John Creighton, £20; Patrick Maclean, £20; John Gallagher, £20."

8553. You paid them?—I did.

8554. How did it happen that you were selected either by yourself, or by any other members of what I may call the sub-committee, to pay these men; tell me why each of those men got £20; had you canvassed them?—No, I did not canvass any of them.

8555. Were any of them in your own employment?—No, I had spoken to Mick Rooney and to John Jennings; I met them during the day of the election, and had been speaking to them about it; and to James Devanny and John Gallagher who was near my own place. These four men I had spoken to; the other five I never spoke to at all about the election.

8556. Do you believe the first four men whom you spoke to, voted from having confidence in you?—The first four men I have named.

8557. The first four men,—did they vote having confidence in you?—Well, I believe they did, but I held out no promise whatever to them.

8558. But they had confidence in you, that if there was any money going you would get it for them?—I dare say they had.

8559. And was that the reason you put them down on your list?—Yes.

8560. Then the others that you had not spoken to—why did you put them down?—Well, Chrystal paid out all this money for me; and when it was known that the money was coming down, or about the day that it did come down, he was telling me that I should not forget these poor men. He suggested the names of the other five to me, and that is how I got those names.

8561. Do you know what claim they had beyond having voted?—No claim that I know, except that they voted.

8562. When you and the Sergeant's friends met, did you not consider £1,483 a very large sum to spend in that way?—It was large.

8563. Had the expenditure of that money, or your advice, anything to say to future elections—to keeping them in good humour?—Well, I don't think it had as far as I believe.

8564. You know the borough very well I am informed?—I do, pretty well.

8565. Do you consider for example, that supposing those ninty-seven men had not been paid, they would have been inclined to go against the Sergeant at a furure election?—Well, I don't know.

8566. Any number of them?—I could not say.

8567. Would they complain of being "badly treated," to use their own phrase?—They did not complain to me.

8568. Oh no; but from what you know of the borough, do you suppose that if these ninety-seven men had not been paid, at a future election they would go against the Sergeant?—I don't know that they would all go against the Sergeant if they were not individually paid; I rather think not. Some of them might complain; many of them might complain, sir.

8569. Did you ever know of any money going in a similar way at previous elections?—No.

8570. Or hear of it?—No.

8571. Why then, was it started for the first time, this time?—It was the first time that I took any active part in an election.

8572. In an election?—Yes, the first time.

8573. Then you would not have been in the secret at the previous election?—No; I had nothing in the world to do with the election previous to that, in the way of anything at all going on money matters. I don't know what they were at all.

8574. Had you heard that Mr. Macdonogh paid his men at the previous election?—Oh, there were general rumours; we could not but hear it; every man in town must have heard it I suppose.

8575. I believe you voted for Flanagan at the last election?—I did.

8576. And were a supporter of his?—I was.

8577. Did you know anything about these mobs that came to town?—No.

8578. You can give us no information as to who employed them?—I don't know.

8579. Or who paid them, or whether they got drink?—I don't know at all.

8580. You saw, I suppose, some of them intoxicated?—Indeed I think they were not so very disorderly as that; of course they were intoxicated, some of them—but I often, I think, saw worse mobs in Sligo.

8581. Had you anything to say to the distribution of money at an election before or since?—Never before or since.

8582. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Did you canvass for Captain Flanagan?—I accompanied him on a canvass.

8583. Was there any reference made during that canvass, or during the election, to any of the money paid by Sergeant Armstrong?—No.

8584. Are you quite certain of that?—To the electors.

8585. Did any of the voters you canvassed, say anything about former sums that they had got?—No; not a word.

8586. There was no pains taken to tell them that they would not get money in a similar way the next time?—I think it was generally understood that they would not get money—that they would not have it again.

8587. What reason have you for that belief?—Well, it was thought that Captain Flanagan would not spend it, that he hadn't it; and besides that, I believe the people were under the impression, I think, that the clergy here had put there faces against anything of the kind. They heard at least, that they interfered and hoped that there would not be anything of the kind going on; and it was thought because the clergy had something to say to it, that there was no expectation of any money at all.

8588. Because it was the Church question?—Because it was the Church question, and the clergy here were in favour of Captain Flanagan, and they would not, of course, be identified with anything of this sort, and the people felt in their minds and, I think, were saying that there would be no money at all to be had at this time.

8589. Do you recollect anybody who said it?—Oh, I think it was generally remarked through the whole town.

8590. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Are you aware of the bishop having expressed his disapprobation of money being spent amongst the electors?—Oh, yes.

8591. At the time Sergeant Armstrong was elected?—Oh, yes, of course, he did.

8592. Of course he did; that was quite well known in the town?—It was.

8593. Quite well; and did others of the Catholic clergy also express their disapproval of any money being spent?—I believe so, at all times.

8594. At all times?—I believe so.

8595. Then there was nothing unusual in their expressing the same disapprobation at Captain Flanagan's election?—Well, there was nothing unusual in it, to be sure; but inasmuch as they were the means of bringing Captain Flanagan here, it was, perhaps, more remarkable that they took care that nothing of the kind should occur.

8596. Hadn't Sergeant Armstrong the cordial support of the Catholic clergy?—He had.

8597. Now tell me—it was amongst nine persons that you distributed £180?—It was.

8598. Did you canvass any of those persons for Captain Flanagan?—No, not one.

8599. At the last election?—Oh, I was with him on a canvass, but I did not canvass them particularly.

8600. Were you with him on a canvass when he canvassed any of those nine persons amongst whom you spent that £180?—I beg pardon.

8601. You distributed £180 amongst nine persons?—Yes.

8602. And I understand you to say that, along with Captain Flanagan, you canvassed those same nine persons—isn't that your evidence?—Yes; I was along with him when he met them, perhaps. I was on the general canvass, and he may have met those persons on the canvass during the time.

8603. When they were canvassed for Captain Flanagan you were present?—I may have been with him—I may have been present; I don't know it particularly of each and every one of them; but I think I was present when he canvassed some of them.

8604. Do you remember talking to any of them when Captain Flanagan was not present?—No.

8605. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Do you recollect saying anything to Magrath about Sergeant Armstrong polling those five men?—I never said a word of it.

8606. You are quite sure of that?—I am quite sure of it.

John Magrath recalled by order of the Chief Commissioner.

8607. Repeat now what he said to you about Mr. Williams, as you recollect, having offered him money?—Mr. Magrath, after some conversation about the propriety of his coming down to vote for Sergeant Armstrong, said there was money offering on the other side—that there was £80 each offered on the other side; and that he would rather have half the money from his own side. I said to him then, "Mr. Magrath, I have not come here for that purpose at all—to offer you money or anything of the sort; I cannot talk to you of money, I am not such a fool," or something to that effect.

John Magrath re-examined. John Magrath.

8608. The Chief Commissioner.—Attend to me now, and take care of yourself. Did you hear what Mr. Keighron has said?—Yes.

8609. On your oath, do you venture to deny it?—On my oath, I had not a conversation with Mr. Williams, good, bad, or indifferent on the matter.

8610. That's not the question, sir—on your oath, did you tell Mr. Keighron you were offered £80, as he has now sworn—I suppose you know him for a great many years?—I do. No; I did not tell him a word, to my knowledge and belief.

8611. To your knowledge?—To my recollection I did not tell him a word as to being offered anything.

8612. Do you deny what he has said?—I don't deny it, but I don't recollect to have ever said a thing of the kind.

8613. You do not deny it?—I don't recollect to have said it.

8614. Do you deny it—do you deny it on your oath?—I deny to have ever said it to him that I know.

8615. That you know?—Yes.

8616. That you now recollect?—I mean to my recollection I never said it to him—to my knowledge.

8617. To your knowledge?—Yes.

8618. On your oath do you deny that you spoke to him about having been offered money by the Conservatives?—I do.

8619. You do?—I do; I never told it.

8620. Do you mean the word "Conservative"—is that what you pin on?—What we call, I suppose, the "other side." There were two parties.

8621. On your oath, do you deny that you told him you were offered money by the other side?—I do; I never recollect saying a word to him about it, nor we had no remark that I recollect as to money.

[Witness withdrew.]

Examination of Patrick Keighron resumed. Patrick Keighron.

8622. Did the mob in town appear to you to be strangers—some of them?—Well, there were strangers amongst them.

8623. About how many of the mob do you say were strangers?—The only strangers I saw in town were, on the day Captain Flanagan came to town, a large number of people from the country, and they were men, women, and children, a large number of them. They did not seem to be mobs. I don't think they were.

8624. Were they making a sort of procession?—They wanted to give the Captain a good reception coming in, and I think the people came in from the country for that purpose.

8625. Were they from his own side?—Well, I dare say they were from the neighbourhood of the town altogether—round about the town.

8626. Some of the witnesses mentioned that they were county of Leitrim men?—Well, I believe they were.

8627. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Were there more townsmen in the mob?—Oh, I dare say. The people of the town were all out on that day, I think.

[The witnest withdrew.]

Mrs. Mary M'Dowell sworn and examined. Mrs. Mary M'Dowell.

8628. The Chief Commissioner.—You are the wife of James M'Dowell who has been examined?—I am, sir.

8629. Do you remember the M'Mullen's coming to your house?—I do.

8630. An old man and a young man—how soon after they arrived did you know them to be Sligo voters?—I knew they were Sligo men, but I did not know whether they were voters or not, for I did not understand the subject, but I knew they were from Sligo during the week after they arrived. I did not see them for the next few days, for I was confined to my own room with sickness at the time Kavanagh brought them.

8631. Had you known Kavanagh?—He is a very old friend of my husband's—an old acquaintance, I should say.

8632. Did you believe them to be away in connexion with the election?—After I became acquainted with the men I understood from old M'Mullen that he was afraid to remain there in consequence of the mob.

8633. On account of the mob?—Yes.

8634. And did they then tell you they were voters?—They never told me anything of the kind, whether they were voters or not. They never entered into anything of the sort, so far, in conversation with me.

8635. Do you remember your husband going away with the two men?—I do.

8636. Did you know why he went away?—I did not know why, but I knew he received an anonymous note with a small sum of money in it.

8637. Nine pounds?—About £9, I believe, to take them away.

8638. Can you give the Court information as to who gave that £9?—I cannot. I saw the man before my husband saw him—a small man. He inquired for my husband. I told him he was out. He said he would call again, and did twice before he was in. The third time he was in and he handed him the note, and went away and I never saw him since.

8639. Mrs. M'Dowell, you would know him if you saw him again?—I dare say he would. I had so little to say to him that I would be afraid to venture to say that I would.

8640. Your husband, a respectable man, had never gone away, I dare say, on such an expedition before with two men?—Never.

8641. Did you know he was bringing the men away to take charge of them?—I knew he was going away in company with them, but I did not know for what. I thought it was merely to accompany them.

8642. You did not know he was going to stay away so long?—I did not, indeed.

8643. Then you were not told. Did you know that the trial of the Sligo election petition was coming on then?—I saw it in the papers afterwards, but I was not aware of it at that time.

Sixth Day. October 11. Mrs. Mary M'Dowell.

8644. While your husband was away did Kavanagh call to know where he was?—He did.

8645. Did you tell him?—At first I did not know till I received letters from my husband saying that he was in Manchester, and I told Kavanagh then each time that he called.

8646. How often did he call?—I could not say; but very often, because he was in the habit of passing my house going to his own business; and being an old friend, he was——

8647. When your husband went away with the two men did you know then that they were Sligo voters?—I did not. I knew that they were Sligo men, or from Sligo, and that they came away from fear of the mob, as they represented.

8648. Did you get no explanation from your husband or Kavanagh why your husband went away with the two men?—I did not, only that they were afraid. They were constantly in the shop, standing at the door, without any fear at all, going in and out every day. Perhaps out of three or four hours, during the time they came in, they would stand at the shop door, to my great annoyance.

8649. I suppose you thought they were great nuisances?—I did so. Sometimes they came in saying they had seen parties from Sligo whom they were afraid of, and would go upstairs to dine in the coffee room.

8650. You thought these two Sligo men a great nuisance in your house?—I consider my house as respectable as Kavanagh's, though he said he did not consider them fit men for his house.

8651. Do you remember Kavanagh writing something in your shop to your husband?—He did not write it in my shop, but wrote a letter to my husband, and enclosed a note from me in it.

8652. Wrote a letter?—He did.

8653. Where did he write it?—He wrote it, for he told me he was going to send it, and I gave him a note to put in.

8654. You gave him a note from yourself to your husband?—It was put in the one envelope—his note and mine—because I was in the habit of writing to him every day; and this was Saturday, and I had not time to write except only two or three words, saying all were well at home; and that was enclosed in Mr. Kavanagh's letter to him.

8655. Who directed the envelope to your husband in which your letter went?—Kavanagh, as I suppose. I did not see the envelope directed. It was put into an empty envelope when I gave him the note, and he took it away.

8656. He had then the letter written to your husband?—He told me he was going to write to him that day, but I did not see it. I gave him my note to enclose, and it was put into an empty envelope; and it was also an undirected envelope.

8657. When did you expect that your husband would come home and be done with these two men?—I did not know when.

8658. You must have thought the M'Mullens like the old man in "Sinbad the Sailor," hanging on him?—I was very glad when it was over.

8659. What money altogether, Mrs. M'Dowell, have you been paid for the maintenance of these two men?—I received £19 from Kavanagh, and my husband received £15. I took the money in small sums at different times—£2 at one time, and less at another, and so on till it amounted to £19. He gave my husband £15 on another occasion; that, I think, was £34 altogether.

8660. What is your claim still for the maintenance of those men? Did you lump their board and lodging?—They were with me at £2 a week.

8661. How much is due to you since?—I could not be positive. I did not bring the number of weeks they were with me, though I have it, so that I could not tell you positively.

8662. Did you ever know, during the whole of this time, that Major Knox had anything to say to these people?—I did not; I never knew Major Knox at all.

8663. I mean that it was about his election?—I knew it while I was there that Major Knox was putting up for the town of Sligo.

8664. Did you know they were away on account of the election?—I did not. That it was something in connexion with it of course I knew, but I did not know what the real reason was.

8665. Did your husband tell you he would make a claim for his loss of time in being away?—We intended to claim from Kavanagh for their support, but we never had any conversation about his election until after he came home, and then he did not know whom to claim it from. I hold Kavanagh responsible to pay the whole of the money for their support, as he brought them to us, and guaranteed that they should be paid for.

8666. Did he guarantee?—He told us repeatedly that he would see us paid for their support; that he must pay it himself if it was not paid in any other quarter.

8667. I suppose you were rather complaining about these men?—Frequently. I have frequently gone to ask him for money, for it was not pleasant to support the two men without being paid for it.

8668. You were not anxious for those men to be in your house at all?—Indeed I was not. I was very glad when they left it.

8669. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Do you know Mr. Hignell?—No, unless by name. I saw him once or twice while I was in the Irish Times office for letters—for answers to advertisements.

8670. Did he ever come to your shop while the M'Mullens were there?—No, sir; I don't know him personally.

8671. Had you any conversation with him in the Irish Times office in reference to the M'Mullens?—No; the only time I went there was to inquire for letters in answer to advertisements that I put in for servants on my own business.

8672. Did Kavanagh ever mention to you his name?—I don't remember his having mentioned it, as it was entirely on his own affair.

8673. The Chief Commissioner.—Do you know anyone else connected with the Irish Times—do you know Captain Knox?—No; never saw him to my knowledge.

8674. And was the only message brought by a stranger that of the man that brought the £9?—None but him.

8675. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Did Mr. Kavanagh tell you that other voters were up in Dublin under similar circumstances with the M'Mullens?—No; I don't remember his telling me anything about that. He would not say anything to me on the subject, I suppose. I don't remember it all; but I heard the M'Mullens say there were other men in town.

8676. You heard the M'Mullens say that other men were up?—That other men were in town; and on one occasion I saw a man speaking to the son—on one or two occasions at the door of my shop. He told me his name was Brennan.

8677. Did he say Thomas Brennan?—Brennan was the only name.

8678. Was Brennan in your house more than once with these men?—I think he was at the door two or three times. I told my servant if ever he came to inquire for them not to allow him in, as I did not like his face.

8679. Why not let him in?—Because I did not like his face, because I thought he had rather a villanous expression.

8680. Did any other man come inquiring after them?—No, sir; no inquiry whatever.

8681. When did you first know that this matter was connected with the Sligo election—with Major Knox, the member for Sligo?—I was not aware of it at all.

8682. You don't remember reading in the papers, at the trial of the petition, that these M'Mullens were inquired after; that there was a petition tried before Judge Keogh at Carrick ?—Yes ; I remember reading it, but I don't remember seeing that there was an inquiry after them.

8683. And that the M'Mullens were named ?—I did not read the whole of it, for I had not time to do so. I used to read portions of it, but the time I had to give to it was not much.

8684. You were very much annoyed at having the M'Mullens in your house—had you any conversation with your husband about wishing to get rid of them ? —I frequently told him that I was very glad when they left, for I had more respectable people that I could have in my house—commercial travellers—and that class of persons we generally were in the habit of taking.

8685. Clerks ?—English excursionists and commercial travellers from England.

8686. When you complained of having the M'Mullens in your house what did your husband say to you ?—I don't remember anything particular ; something to this effect, that when they were here we must make the best of it ; that now that they are staying we must make the best of it until we get paid for them.

8687. Did he say that he expected any large sum of money ?—Indeed he did not ; he never expected it. He expected to be paid for their support and for his own loss of time, which he has not.

(The witness withdrew.)

The inquiry was then adjourned to the following morning.

Sixth Day.
October 11.
Mrs. Mary M'Dowell.

SEVENTH DAY.

Seventh Day.
October 12.

Tuesday, October 12, 1869.

The Commissioner sat at ten o'clock.

Thomas B. Hignell sworn and examined.

Thomas B. Hignell.

8688. The Chief Commissioner.—What position do you hold in the Irish Times office ?—I am general superintendent of the whole establishment.

8689. How long have you been in that position ?—Over ten years, I think—about ten and a half, I think.

8690. Did you send any money to Sligo for voters at any time ?—Never.

8691. Yes, you did. Mr. Greer (the Secretary), hand me that docket you have ?—I remember sending some money to a man named Rooney.

8692. He is a voter, you know ?—I didn't know whether he was or not when I sent him the money.

8693. That is the first thing I am going to inquire about ?—I did send that money, but it's a long time ago.

8694. We have here the day, the date, and your signature to the docket ?—Yes.

8695. The date is the 12th February, 1868. Is that your handwriting—(Docket handed to witness) ?—Yes, that's my handwriting.

8696. And is for £12 ?—Yes.

8697. You see it is not so long ago after all ?—It's nearly two years ago.

8698. Who told you to send that money to Rooney ? —I can't say. I think it was Major Knox.

8699. When you say you think, have you the least doubt that it was he told you to send the money ?—I don't think I have.

8700. What did Major Knox say to you when he told you to send it ?—I am sure I couldn't tell you. He told me to send it, and I sent a bank order.

8701. Just try and recollect what he said to you ? —I couldn't. I did send it from whatever he said to me. It's so long ago I can't recollect what he said exactly, and I never paid attention to it since.

8702. I suppose you hardly remembered it when I asked you about it ?—I didn't until I was told of it.

8703. Do you know the M'Mullens ?—I do now.

8704. You'll never forget them, I suppose ?—I wouldn't know one of them if I met them in the street.

8705. Did you give them any money ?—His son, the younger M'Mullen—I don't know whether he is his son or not. I gave him £2 to bring him down to Sligo.

8706. What made you give him £2 ?—I had a letter sent up to me by a lady in Sligo, asking me if I knew where M'Mullen was, and if I did to send him to Sligo at once, as this man's wife was dying and he would hardly see her alive. She subsequently died.

8707. Who was the lady that wrote to you ?—Mrs. Lyons.

8708. Is that Mrs. John Lyons ?—I am not sure.

8709. What did she say in the letter ?—She said that this man's wife wasn't expected to live many hours, and that it would be a charity to send him down. I did know where he was at the time, and I gave him the £2 to come down to Sligo. I did it entirely on my own responsibility. I afterwards told Major Knox of what I did, and he approved of it.

8710. You knew where the M'Mullens were at the time ?—I did.

8711. I suppose you know it casually, by accident ? —Yes, I knew it from the person with whom they were stopping.

8712. Who was that person?—A man named M'Dowell.

8713. Was that the first you heard of where they were stopping ?—The first I heard of where they lived.

8714. Was M'Dowell the first that told you of their being in Dublin ?—Yes.

8715. Was it not Kavanagh that first told you ?— I think it was. He told me that two men went to him for a lodging. That was shortly after the election.

8716. Mr. Hignell, recollect that you are in rather a serious position about this abduction of voters. I now tell you that if you tell the whole truth about the matter you will get a certificate from us, absolving you from all the consequences ; but if you do not, it will be our duty to withhold the certificate, and give orders to the Attorney-General to issue a prosecution —so now you had better begin and tell us all about them ?—I know nothing more about them. Kavanagh was the first that told me they were in Dublin. I knew nothing of them before that.

8717. Did you read Kavanagh's evidence—the evidence he gave here ?—Yes. I saw it in the papers.

8718. Do you know how he mentioned your name ? —Yes.

8719. Is what he said about you true ?—It is.

8720. Is it true that you told them to be brought to Clitheroe ?—He came and asked me about it. I gave no directions to them to go there. I was asked if I knew any persons in England outside Manchester. I said I knew a person in Clitheroe. I was then asked if I could give the address of the person, and I said I could, and I gave it. That's all I know about it.

8721. Was it by accident he came and asked you for the address ?—It was. When he came he asked me for it, and I gave it.

8722. Why give him the address ?—Because he asked me for it, and I knew persons there. I knew the Messrs. Mitchell and Sons, paper manufacturers.

8723. How many other people do you know ?—Is it in Lancashire ?

8724. Yes ?—I know the Messrs. Mitchell.

8725. Was that the address you gave Kavanagh ?— Yes.

8726. Why did you give Kavanagh Messrs. Mitchell's address ?—Because he asked me for the address of some person I knew there.

8727. For what did he want it ?—To remove to it.

8728. Were you at Carrick during the trial of the election petition ?—I was.

SEVENTH DAY.
October 12.
Thomas B. Hignell.

8729. Were you examined there?—No; they called my name, but did not examine me.

8730. Did you tell Mr. Lawder that the M'Mullens were at Clitheroe?—I didn't; he never spoke to me about it.

8731. Did you know at the time of the trial that they were in England?—I did.

8732. When did you tell Major Knox that they were there?—I didn't tell him until after the election petition was over.

8733. How many days were you at Carrick?—I went down the first day, and remained until it was finished—I suppose I was there four or five days.

8734. Did you tell anyone in Mr. Lawder's office where the M'Mullens were?—I never was in his office in my life.

8735. Did you tell any of his managers or assistants of it?—No.

8736. Did you ever send money to M'Dowell?—Never.

8737. Or to Kavanagh?—Never. Although my name has been mentioned so often during the progress of this inquiry, I never had anything to do with the election at all.

8738. Did you send £9 to M'Dowell?—Never.

8739. Do you know who sent it?—I do not.

8740. Did you pay M'Dowell any money?—I did not. Never.

8741. When you paid £2 to M'Mullen to go and see his wife, did you make an entry of the payment in any book?—I did not.

8742. Had you kept any book of election expenses?—None whatever, nor did I require to do so; and I made that payment entirely on my own responsibility, knowing that Major Knox would approve of it when told, and I would have done it under any circumstances out of my own pocket. I never laid out sixpence on the election. I had nothing whatever to do with money matters.

8743. How long were you down here about the election?—I came down two or three days before the nomination, and I went away the day after the declaration of the poll.

8744. Did you come down to Sligo after that?—I did not, until about a month or two ago.

8745. When you then came down, was it to get up evidence for this trial?—It was not.

8746. Was your visit connected with election purposes?—It was.

8747. Where did you reside when you came down?—I didn't reside anywhere until I went to Major Knox.

8748. How did you find out M'Mullen to give him the £2?—I am not sure how I found him out, or who went with it. I think it was Tom Brennan.

8749. When you say you think, you mean you are certain of it?—Well, I am almost certain of it; but I couldn't positively say it was.

8750. When did you last see Brennan?—I think about three weeks or a month ago.

8751. Where is he now?—I can't tell you where he is.

8752. Where did you see him?—I saw him in Dublin.

8753. Has he been occasionally with you at the Irish Times office since the election?—I didn't see him on business.

8754. What do you mean by saying you did not see him on business?—I don't think he is doing business anywhere. He is walking about the town.

8755. Idle?—Yes. I think he is idle.

8756. Did Brennan ever get any money from you?—Never.

8757. Did you know of any other voters who were away, like the M'Mullens?—I didn't.

8758. Did you see the M'Mullens while you were in Sligo?—I didn't. I thought the M'Mullens were in town at they election, and that they voted for Major Knox. I was told they did.

8759. If you thought so, why did you suppose they left Sligo?—I supposed they left Sligo on account of mob violence.

8760. Do you know William Hughes?—I know him.

8761. Is he employed in the Irish Times office?—He is employed occasionally.

8762. In what capacity?—As legal canvasser. He is only partly engaged on that; he is, I believe, in some other business also in Dame-street.

8763. Did Captain Ethelred Knox give you any money for the election?—Never.

8764. You know Captain Ethelred Knox?—I do.

8765. What was your business precisely at the election?—I came down to assist Major Knox in everything he might want me to do. I wrote some letters and sent telegrams for him.

8766. Major Knox graphically expressed it when he said "Mr. Hignell was my man?"—In doing that, nothing more.

8767. Were you in Sligo at any time before the election?—I was in Sligo several times before.

8768. Had you paid any money to Kavanagh?—I did not. He never asked me for money in reference to the election.

8769. Do you know of any voters being in Hughes's in Queen-street?—I heard that a man named Henderson or Harrison was there.

8770. Who told you of it?—Hughes told me of it. He said he had had the man there for two or three days. He then went back to Sligo.

8771. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Did you say Henderson?—Harrison I think was the name.

8772. The Chief Commissioner.—Used Brennan be much in the Irish Times office?—He used not. He came there occasionally.

8773. When he came there, whom did he see?—Nobody in particular.

8774. Did you speak to him when he came to the office?—I did.

8775. Did anyone else in the office speak to him when he came there?—I can't say.

8776. I suppose he was well known to the men in the office?—He was, I should say.

8777. You would not have an idea as to whether he talked to the men in the office or not?—No.

8778. Did you see him very often?—I didn't.

8779. Did he ever ask you for any money?—He never did.

8780. Did you assist in making up the election account?—Never. I never saw a line or a figure of it.

8781. You had little to do with the election, then?—I declare I never had anything with it, or with anyone connected with it.

8782. What were you doing while you were in Sligo?—I was doing almost nothing.

8783. You walked about doing nothing?—I walked about doing very little.

8784. Do you know a man named Fallon, a horse trainer?—I often saw him.

8785. Did you know him to be a voter?—I didn't know he was a voter until he had voted.

8786. How did you know he was a voter then?—I knew he was by looking at the list.

8787. How did you see the list? how did you get to look at it?—I saw it somewhere.

8788. Are you sure he voted?—I am not sure whether he voted or not.

8789. Had you a list of the electors of the borough?—I hadn't at the time of the election.

8790. When was it you saw a list of the electors?—I think it was at the time of the petition.

8791. Did you know before he voted that he was a voter?—Never.

8792. Were you charged by those conducting the petition with having bribed anyone?—I never was told by anyone that I was.

8793. Were you examined at the trial of the petition?—I wasn't. I was in court, but I was never called.

8794. When you gave the name of Mitchell and Sons to Kavanagh, did you yourself write to Messrs. Mitchell?—I did.

8795. What did you write?—I only wrote to say that if two men called on him, he would have the goodness to direct them where they would get lodgings, or remain comfortably while in Clitheroe. Nothing more.

8796. You did not mention the purpose of their going to Clitheroe, or say that they were Sligo voters, and that they were engaged in a conspiracy to defeat justice?—No. Nothing more.

8797. Did you write any similar letters about Sligo voters or witnesses to anyone besides Mr. Mitchell?—Not a word.

8798. Did you telegraph to anyone about them?—No.

8799. Did you know of any other persons besides Mr. Mitchell, M'Dowell, and Mr. Hughes, who had living with them any of the voters?—No.

8800. Or that you heard of?—No.

8801. Did you know that Mr. Stokes was engaged in the business of trying to get voters away?—I didn't.

8802. Have you any list, or did you see any list of the voters who went away?—Never.

8803. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Do you know a man named Gethins?—I do.

8804. Were you aware of his being in Dublin while the M'Mullens were there?—I didn't know he was in Dublin until after the election.

8805. Was he there when the M'Mullens were in Dublin?—I think he must have been. I should say I never saw them there.

8806. Was Gethins in Dublin during the election?—No. Gethins was in Sligo during the election. I saw him myself.

8807. Did he vote?—He didn't vote; he was one of those who were afraid to vote after Captain King was shot, and wouldn't go to vote. After the election I saw him in Dublin.

8808. What business had he in Dublin after the election; what brought him there?—I heard that his house was wrecked, and his things taken away, and everything belonging to him thrown into the street. He was afraid of the mob to remain here.

8809. Did you see him at the Irish Times office?—I didn't.

8810. Where did you see him in Dublin?—I think I met him in the street.

8811. Were you aware of his making any application for money to Major Knox?—I wasn't. I hadn't the least idea of it.

8812. Do you know of his having got any from him?—No; I don't think he ever applied for it.

8813. Do you know a man named Clancy?—I know two men named Clancy down here—father and son.

8814. Do you know Charles Clancy?—I know Clancy the barber.

8815. Did you ever see him in Dublin?—Never.

8816. Were you aware of his being there?—I wasn't.

8817. Did he vote at the last election?—I don't think either of them voted—neither father nor son. I can't positively say, but I don't think they did. I now remember that the elder Clancy voted for Major Knox. The other didn't vote at either side.

8818. Do you know anything, or have you heard anything—you are here to give us all the information you can—do you know anything of Charles Clancy, as to his voting or abstaining from voting?—I do not.

8819. When did you first see the list of voters?—Do you mean of the men who voted?

8820. When did you first see any list, either of those who actually voted, or of those who were entitled to vote?—I never saw a list before the election.

8821. Were you in Sligo previous to the election?—I was.

8822. Are you sure you didn't see a list of the electors while you were here previous to the election?—I am. I had nothing to do with the list. I had no interest in the election that I should see the list, and I never had anything to do with it.

8823. Did it ever occur to you to look over the list while you were here?—Never.

8824. Do you swear you never saw that list until after the election?—I do. I had no means of getting it before the election.

8825. Will you try and recollect everything Major Knox may have said to you when he directed you to send the money to Rooney, and all that occurred on that occasion?—Nothing did occur but what I told you.

8826. Did Major Knox make any observation at all in reference to your sending it?—No.

8827. Do you mean to say that the Major only instructed you to send down the cheque, and said nothing more?—That's all.

8828. Did he tell any of his reasons for giving you your instructions then?—He didn't tell me any of his reasons.

8829. Do you know Rooney?—I never saw him in my life. I wouldn't know him if I saw him now.

8830. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Did you send the cheque in a blank envelope—it was stated here that it was enclosed in a blank envelope?—I am not sure about that—very likely it was.

8831. Try and recollect?—I can't. I never paid attention to it.

8832. Is it a usual thing for you to send a bank order without its being accompanied with a letter of some sort?—That's the only one I ever sent. I have nothing whatever to do with money matters at all in the office. I am not in the habit of sending money. I have my own work to do.

8833. When Major Knox asked you to send the bank order to Rooney did not he give you any further instructions than merely to send it on? Did he not say something, or assign a reason why you should send the money?—He didn't. He merely asked me to send it, and I did so.

8834. Did not he give you any reason for applying to you to send it? You are not the cashier; and I suppose money orders are sent from time to time from the office in the way of business, and I suppose there is a person who sends them regularly?—There is.

8835. Do you recollect is there nothing that occurred that would enable you to give any explanation why you were asked to do such an unusual thing?—He gave me no instructions. He merely asked me to send the money, and I did so.

8836. Shortly after you came from the election you said that Kavanagh came and told you that two voters were stopping with him?—Yes, some days after I came from the election.

8837. Where was it that the interview between you and Kavanagh took place?—I met him in the street, which I often do.

8838. What did he say to you?—He told me that two men came to him from Sligo for a lodging.

8839. Try and recollect the exact words Kavanagh made use of on that occasion?—I couldn't recollect any more than what I told you.

8840. Repeat it?—He told me that two men from Sligo went to him for a lodging.

8841. Did he say they were Sligo men?—I don't recollect that he did. He said two men called on him.

8842. From Sligo?—Yes.

8843. Well, what more?—But he said as they were not a class of men that would suit him he took them to a friend's.

8844. Did he tell you anything more?—He told me that there was some lord stopping at his house at the time.

8845. Did he tell you that he had got no place for them?—He did.

8846. Did he mention M'Dowell's name?—He did.

8847. Do you know M'Dowell?—I do now.

8848. Did you not know him at the time of the election?—I never knew or spoke to him until two or three months ago.

8849. You didn't know him at the time Kavanagh spoke to him about these two men being in Dublin?—I didn't.

SEVENTH DAY. October 12. Thomas B. Hignell.

8850. Did you mention the man's name?—No, I didn't.

8851. Did he?—He did not.

8852. Did not you believe at the time that these men were persons who had left Sligo on account of the election—to avoid voting at it?—I did not form any opinion of them. I thought they might be some of those men whose houses were wrecked, and had to leave Sligo for having voted at the election. I didn't interfere further in the matter.

8853. Did you take no trouble about them?—No. I didn't make myself responsible for any of these men.

8854. You took care not to make yourself responsible for them; but did you believe that they were persons who left Sligo in consequence of election business?—Yes.

8855. What was the next time Kavanagh saw you with regard to these men?—Very likely I saw him the next day, or perhaps the same day. I very often see him in the street.

8856. Did he then speak to you about these men?—I can't recollect.

8857. When next did he see you?—A considerable time after; a couple of months.

8858. Had he any interview with you with regard to these men before he spoke to you about giving him the address in Clitheroe?—Never.

8859. It was the second time that their name was mentioned?—Yes.

8860. Can you fix the time of the conversation between Kavanagh and you?—I can't.

8861. Did he then tell you that the M'Mullens had gone to England?—He told me that they were in England.

8862. Had you any idea previously that they were in England?—I had not.

8863. Or that there was any intention to take them to England?—None whatever.

8864. Had he not asked you for the address of somebody in Clitheroe?—Not Clitheroe in particular, but for the address of some person anywhere from Manchester.

8865. Did he give any reason for the necessity of their living away from Manchester?—He did not.

8866. And you did not ask him?—I didn't.

8867. That conversation must have been immediately or very shortly before the election petition?—I expect it was.

8868. Can you now fix the date of it?—I can't fix any date or the week.

8869. Did not you then form the opinion in your own mind that the M'Mullens were in England to avoid the election petition?—I didn't.

8870. Did not you believe that they were there for that purpose?—I didn't.

8871. Did you form any opinion as to why they were in England?—Not the slightest.

8872. That is very strange?—Strange as it may appear I formed no opinion of it. I had nothing to do with it.

8873. Then all you did was, as you stated, to give the address of Mr. Mitchell?—That's all.

8874. You were at the trial of the election petition at Cashel?—I was.

8875. Were you summoned as a witness?—I was, but they didn't call me. I was constantly in court during the trial.

8876. Did they know you were there?—They did. I was pointed out to Judge Keogh by one of the witnesses.

8877. Were you in court constantly during the trial?—I was.

8878. And you heard the M'Mullens' name mentioned several times during it?—Yes.

8879. As persons who were spirited away?—Not spirited away, but as driven away, and forced to leave Sligo. I heard them mentioned as supporters of Major Knox.

8880. You did not hear they were spirited away?—No; I heard that they had to leave Sligo.

8881. Did you hear of the evidence that was given before the judge, that Mr. Stokes had ordered a car for them to be taken away?—I did.

8882. Did you hear Judge Keogh's charge?—I did.

8883. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Did you hear Judge Keogh's judgment on the petition—were you in court during it?—I was there only for a part of it.

8884. What part was it you heard?—The latter part of it, I think it was. I forget which part it was.

8885. Were you in court when Judge Keogh began his charge?—I was not. I heard the M'Mullens' name mentioned by the judge in his judgment.

8886. Did not you know that there was inquiry made about them at the time?—I didn't.

8887. You did not know that the M'Mullens' were wanted for the purpose of the petition?—I didn't.

8888. Do you swear that?—No; I didn't know it.

8889. Did you tell anybody during the progress of the trial of the petition that you knew where the M'Mullens' were?—I didn't.

8890. How soon after the trial did you tell Major Knox where the M'Mullens were?—I am not sure how long after it was.

8891. And how long was it?—It may be a day or two.

8892. Did you tell Major Knox during the trial of the petition that the M'Mullens were in England?—I didn't.

8893. Do you think it was a natural thing to wait until everything was over, before you told him that they were in England?—I do.

8894. It was not to keep as a secret where they were sent to?—No, it wasn't.

8895. The Chief Commissioner.—Were you present when the leading counsel for Major Knox—when Mr. Macdonogh told Major Knox and Mr. Lauder that all the persons whose names were mentioned should be procured and produced as witnesses?—I did not. I heard him state that he advised Major Knox to bring forward everyone who could throw any light on the matter. Brennan was brought forward in consequence.

8896. Did you hear that it was publicly stated in court?—Yes.

8897. Did you hear that it was stated both privately and publicly?—I did.

8898. When you heard that, why did not you tell where the M'Mullens were?—I didn't know whether they were wanted or not.

8899. Did you hear Mr. Stokes examined—were you in court when he was giving his evidence?—I was only a short time in court when he was giving his evidence.

8900. Do you know what he swore?—I don't know.

8901. Mr. Stokes was examined and cross-examined about where the M'Mullens were, you know?—I was out of court at the time, and I didn't know what he swore.

8902. Do you know that he swore that he did not know where the M'Mullens were?—I don't.

8903. Do you know a voter named James Devanny?—I think I do.

8904. Did you see him in Dublin?—I saw him in Dublin.

8905. Did he call on you at the Irish Times office?—He didn't.

8906. Where did you see him?—I saw him somewhere in the street.

8907. Did not you know he was in Dublin?—I did.

8908. When did he come up to Dublin?—He came up after the election. I know he was here at the election.

8909. How long was he in Dublin?—I couldn't say.

8910. Do you know where he was staying in Dublin?—I don't.

8911. Did you ever hear where he was staying?—No.

8912. When you met him, as you say, in the street in Dublin, what did he speak to you about?—I don't know.

8913. Your mind apparently is altogether a blank about the election?—No; I had no information about it.

8914. Did any voter ask you about money?—No.

8915. Or give you any hint about it?—No.

8916. Were you ever in Mr. Stokes's house?—I was only once in Mr. Stokes's, when I met him with a friend standing at the door.

8917. A friend of the cause, I suppose. Did you see any other voter in Dublin?—I saw a man named M'Morrow.

8918 What conversation had you with M'Morrow?—I had only a passing conversation of the day.

8919. Where did he call on you?—He didn't call on me; I met him in the street.

8920. How often did you meet him—when did you meet him?—I met him hundreds of times. He was always walking up and down Sackville-street, between the pillar and Carlisle-bridge.

8921. Did any of these men, when they were in Dublin, ever get refreshments in the Irish Times office?—Never. There's no way of getting it up in the Irish Times office.

8922. But you could send out for it?—We didn't.

8923. What was M'Morrow doing, walking up and down Sackville street?—I see him doing nothing.

8924. What made him leave Sligo?—I heard he was in Dublin; that he had to leave or run away from Sligo; that his house was wrecked and his things taken away.

8925. Did you hear about Captain Knox sending money to Sligo?—Never.

8926. Did you hear that he sent any money for the election?—Never.

8927. Who did you suppose was to pay for all these things for the M'Mullens?—They will have to pay for them themselves, I suppose.

8928. Do you think Major Knox will pay for them?—I don't think he will; he never made an engagement to do so. The only chance M'Dowell has of getting his money is to look to the M'Mullens for it.

8929. Are you serious in saying that—do you believe it?—I am quite serious.

8930. Do you think he will get paid by the M'Mullens?—That's for him to look to.

8931. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Have you got the letter Mrs. Lyons sent you?—I haven't.

8932. The Chief Commissioner.—You met her during the election, I suppose?—Never; she only wrote to me.

8933. Did you ever see or speak to her?—Never.

8934. A lady you never saw or spoke to—why did she write to you?—I don't know; the man's wife was a servant of Mrs. Lyons.

8935. And she did die?—Yes.

8936. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—What did she write to you of, do you know?—She wrote to say that if I knew where M'Mullen was to send him down, that he would hardly find his wife alive. I gave him the money, and Major Knox gave it to me afterwards.

Mr. Robert Stokes sworn and examined.

Mr. Robert Stokes.

8937. The Chief Commissioner.—Do you know these two M'Mullens?—I do.

8938. You see we now know that you got a car for them to go away?—I did.

8939. What conversation had you with them previously?—I met M'Mullen, the old man, one day in the street. I got an intimation that he wanted to speak to me.

8940. From whom did you get the intimation?—I couldn't say from whom I got it.

8941. Who were giving you the word about these men?—As well as my memory serves me it was his daughter-in-law.

8942. Is she dead or alive?—She is dead.

8943. What did she tell you?—She said the old man was anxious to speak to me. I met the old man one day in the street. I said I heard he wanted to speak to me. He said, "I do, but don't let the people see you speaking to me. I will call on you in the evening."

8944. Did he call on you in the evening?—He did.

8945. What did he say to you when he called?—He said he and his son wished to go away, but they hadn't the means of going. I said I would get a car to meet them and take them as far as Bundoran, and they might then go to Dublin.

8946. Did you give them any money?—Not exactly to them, but to the woman that's dead.

8947. How much did you give her?—I gave her £2—that is, £1 for herself and £1 for her husband.

8948. What did you give that money for?—I gave it as a loan.

8949. You swore at Carrick that you gave them no money?—I did.

8950. Why did you say at Carrick that you gave them no money?—I must say I was greatly disappointed with my evidence I gave at Carrick. I didn't know it until afterwards.

8951. What do you mean by that?—Every charge that was made against me was fairly answered by a brief which I prepared, and which Mr. Macdonogh got. Mr. Macdonogh said, I understood that the brief should not be shown, and that Mr. Stokes should stand on his own responsibility. I didn't know what position I was in until Mr. Macdonogh had addressed the Judge, and said he had nothing at all to do with me. I never felt being in such a position before. I was cross-examined by Mr. Palles and by the Judge. I was terribly confused and agitated, and couldn't account for it.

8952. Do you admit that you gave an untrue answer to the Judge?—Well, under the circumstances I did.

8953. Well, Mr. Stokes, I now tell you and repeat the caution that the Judge gave you at the trial. The Judge refused you a certificate. We have now exactly the same power to refuse it which he had. If you tell the truth frankly and honestly we will give you a certificate absolving you from all consequences?—That's what brought me here.

9954. Very well, you have now an opportunity of clearing your character in your own town, so tell all you know. You need not tell me that you didn't promise the M'Mullens' people the £2?—There was an arrangement or understanding with the woman that is dead.

8955. That they were to get £50 a piece?—Exactly.

8956. When did you make that arrangement with her—take your time and tell all about it—you certainly did place yourself in a very awkward position in Carrick. You have now an opportunity in your town of discharging yourself from anything that tended to injure your character?—I think it was the evening she called on me and told me that the old man wanted to speak to me.

8957. The arrangement was that they were to get £50 a piece?—Yes.

8958. How did you know Kavanagh that you sent the M'Mullens to him?—I never knew him, I didn't know him or where he lived.

8959. And how did you write that address for them, how did you get it?—I never got it. I never gave it to them.

8960. Who gave it to them, how did they get it?—I don't know. I know I didn't give it to them. It was Mr. Hignell gave it to them as far as my memory serves me.

8961. Was it Mr. Hignell then that wrote out the address of Kavanagh for them?—I believe it was as far as my memory serves me, but I can't be positive.

SEVENTH DAY.
October 12.
Mr. Robert Stokes.

8962. I will tell you, Mr. Stokes, how the matter stands—it was mentioned at Carrick that it was you wrote Kavanagh's address?—I never wrote it.

8963. You never wrote it?—Never.

8964. What circumstances led you to infer that it was Mr. Hignell wrote the address—did you see him about these men?—He was in my house at the time.

8965. Did you tell him that the M'Mullens were to be "got at"—they use some such expression at elections?—I did.

8966. What phrase exactly did you use when speaking to Mr. Hignell—did you tell him that the M'Mullens came?—Yes, something to that effect, I can't tell the words I used, exactly.

8967. Did Mr. Hignell see the M'Mullens then?—I can't say positively that he saw them. There was very little difference between us at the time—he was quite near me.

8968. And you say he wrote the address?—He did, I think.

8969. Where did he write it?—In my office. He wrote the direction there.

[Mr. Hignell was here recalled].

8970. The Chief Commissioner.—In consequence of Mr. Stokes's evidence, Mr. Hignell, I directed you to be sent for; you had better hear it now. (To Mr. Stokes.) You have told us now, Mr Stokes, in a very frank manner about the commencement of the arrangement with the M'Mullens, and you stated that you made a brief, which I assume was a note of your evidence?—It was it. It was a brief of rebutting evidence put in the form of a brief.

8971. You must tell the Court what was in what you call a brief?—It was an answer to each of the charges made against me—how the M'Mullens came to me, how they asked me about going away, and what I did.

8972. Do you mean to say that in that brief you had the evidence you intended to give?—Yes.

8973. Was it the truth?—Solemnly the truth to every charge against me.

8974. You had down in the brief the evidence you now gave—that the promise to the M'Mullens was that they were to get two £50?—It was, and it was I intended to give.

8975. It was the truth as you now told it?—It was.

8976. Who wrote the brief?—I wrote it.

8977. And it was the truth, you swear?—It was. The leading counsel for Major Knox told me I should rest on my own responsibility, and I am inclined to think that it was through a nasty feeling of spite that he insisted on it. From the evidence of Mr. Macdonogh the other day, from the manner he pointed to me—I was not present when he gave his evidence—I am sure he was influenced by a feeling of spite towards me. I would ask anyone to read the evidence of Mr. Macdonogh and Mr. Sedley, and he would see how they contradicted themselves.

8978. Now, begin and tell us all you know—first, as regards the M'Mullens and the other cases of bribery you were charged with; and then tell us what you wrote down as your evidence in the brief, if the truth?—You impose a terrible job on me; if you would kindly lead me to it I will do so.

8979. Very well, I will. First, you got a car for the M'Mullens to go away?—I did.

8980. You gave £2 in the manner you described?—I did.

8981. You made a bargain that they were to get £50 a piece?—I did.

8982. Did you tell Mr. Hignell that you made the bargain for the £50?—I couldn't say I did. I believe I told him that it was arranged that they were to go away.

8983. Did he, then, write Kavanagh's address?—I think he did.

8984. Which of you handed the address of Kavanagh to the M'Mullens?—It wasn't I. I am not right sharp who handed it to them. I believe it was Mr. Hignell handed it, but I am not certain. I did not write the address, nor do I know Kavanagh nor the street he lives in.

8985. Do you remember any other voter you were charged with having bribed?—Yes.

8986. Who was it?—I was charged with having bribed Charley Tighe—that is, with treating him.

8987. What occurred between you and him?—He sent two messengers for me. I called at the yard where he worked, and he said he was going to Liverpool. He said, "If you give me a consideration I will stay away from the election."

8988. What did you say to that?—I said I had no money to give him. He said, "There's something going." I then drew some strokes, and asked him to count them. I stopped at the thirty-fifth stroke, and asked him if that would do. He said it would.

8989. How much was the figure?—Thirty or thirty-five. He then went away to consult his son, and came back saying that his son would not allow him to take it. We parted. I said, "You are perfectly right;" and I expressed a hope that we would not be worse friends. I was standing at my own door that night; he came up with a crowd; he came over to where I was, and put his shoulder to the door. A flash just crossed my mind that there was something in his coming to me again the same day. I asked him did he want to speak to me. He said yes. I said, "Don't speak here; come into the parlour." Mrs. Stokes was in the parlour at the time, but she went out as we entered. I asked him, "What is it you want to say to me?" He said, "What we were speaking of to-day. It was all humbug about the strokes. I want to know how much money you will give me if I remain away until after the election?' "You are greatly mistaken if you think I will give you £1 to stay away from voting; but," I said, "if you go away we will be very much obliged to you." "If that be the way," said he, "good night," and we never spoke on the subject again.

8990. How much were you prepared to give him when he went away?—I believe he'd get £30 or £35.

8991. What reason had you for supposing he'd get £35?—I believe he'd get it.

8992. Tell me why you were selected for this department?—I think the money would have been put in my way.

8993. I haven't the slightest doubt how it was to be managed; but I want you to tell us all about it and make a clean breast of it. How did you expect to get the money?—I thought it should come by some means or other from Major Knox or the family.

8994. How did you get the hard word about it?—Through Captain Ethelred Knox.

8995. Had you any conversation with Captain Knox on the subject?—I had.

8996. Tell, now, about this; when had you the conversation with Captain Knox? Did you speak several times with him on the subject?—Yes.

8997. Was it in your own house?—Sometimes in my house, and sometimes in the street.

8998. Did you speak to no one but Captain Knox on the subject?—Generally speaking, I spoke to him.

8999. How much was mentioned in your conversations with Captain Knox, as necessary?—Well, I reported progress from day to day as I went on; I reported to him what each one was to get according as I succeeded in securing him.

9000. How much did you consider necessary yourself?—According as I succeeded in securing the voters I told him how much they were to get.

9001. You told it to Captain Knox?—Yes.

9002. How many people, ultimately, did you suppose you secured?—I suppose about eight or ten.

9003. Take time now and give their names. There were the two M'Mullens?—Yes.

9004. Who else?—The two Youngs, the four Ryans, Watt Henderson, and Pat Gallagher.

9005. Have you told now everything you recollect at present about the M'Mullens?—I have.

9006. Who were the two Youngs?—Father and son; they are shoemakers in the town.

9007. Tell the whole transaction—how did you arrange with the Youngs?—They got £20 a piece; I left it for them.

9008. Who gave you the money for them?—Captain Knox gave it to me.

9009. Did the two Youngs vote for Captain Knox?—I believe they did.

9010. Where did you give them the money?—I think it was left in an envelope for them.

9011. Where was it left for them?—In Mr. Galbraith's.

9012. What is Mr. Galbraith's Christian name?—He is the draper.

9013. Who gave the Youngs the word that they were to call for it at Galbraith's?—I think I did.

9014. Did they come to you, or how did you arrange with them, as we know that voters are always shy?—There wasn't much bashfulness about them. I met them at Galbraith's.

9015. When you met them, what did they say—did they ask you how much was going?—I couldn't say what they said; there was a sort of mumbling.

9016. Which of them was it that spoke?—It was the son.

9017. What did he say, or convey to you?—He intimated to me that the two of them were to be had at £40.

9018. I suppose you thought that very cheap?—I wasn't very particular.

9019. Did you tell Captain Knox that they were to be had for £40?—I think I did.

9020. Did Captain Knox then give you the £40 for them?—He did.

9021. Where was it he gave it to you?—In Mr. Leech's.

9022. Was it the house in which Major Knox was living?—It was in Captain Knox's own room he gave it to me.

9023. Had Captain Knox a separate room for the Major?—Yes; he had.

9024. Was it on a different story, or was it on the same floor?—I can't say. Captain Knox always invited to his own room.

9025. You used the graphic phrase "I reported progress from day to day;" did you speak to anyone, or did you report progress to anybody but Captain Knox?—I don't think I did.

9026. Did you report to Mr. Hignell?—I did not.

9027. Did Mr. Hignell know the Ryans, or Watt Henderson, or Pat Gallagher got money?—No.

9028. Or the Youngs?—No.

9029. Who were the four Ryans you got at in a batch?—Fathers and sons; the fathers and sons of each house.

9030. Were they the joint proprietors of two houses?—They were.

9031. What are they?—Whitesmiths.

9032. Did the Ryans vote for Major Knox?—They did.

9033. How much did the Ryans get?—Not any money yet, but a mere trifle.

9034. How much did you purpose to give them?—I purposed giving them £20; they left it all to myself.

9035. Did they vote on your recommendation?—They did.

9036. When you recommended them to vote, did you say to them "go and vote?"—I did.

9037. And is that perfectly understood among voters?—Yes; it is understood with some, I believe.

9038. Did you report about the four Ryans to Captain Knox?—I think I did.

9039. How long before the election were the two Youngs and the four Ryans secured?—Some days.

9040. Why did the Youngs get the money down, and were the Ryans content with a promise?—The Youngs merely knew where we were to leave it. The Ryans had every confidence in me—what I bid them do they would do.

9041. When did you secure Henderson?—He was the son-in-law of Young.

9042. How much was Henderson to get?—He was to get £20.

9043. Has he got anything yet?—Yes.

9044. How much?—Twenty pounds.

9045. Who gave you the money for Henderson?—Captain Knox.

9046. What business is Henderson in?—He is a farmer.

9047. Were the Youngs and Henderson secured at the same time?—Yes, all together.

9048. About Pat Gallagher, how much did he get?—He is to get £50.

9049. How did he happen to be so valuable?—The others were all Protestants and Conservatives themselves, this man is not.

9050. He is a Roman Catholic, I suppose?—He is.

9051. At the last election did any other Catholic get £50?—The M'Mullens were to get it.

9052. How did you arrange with Gallagher—is he married?—He is.

9053. Was it through his wife you arranged with him?—No.

9054. How did you arrange with him?—I arranged that the money should be left in safe hands for him.

9055. Did you tell that to Captain Knox?—I did.

9056. What did he say—was the money left in safe hands for Gallagher?—It was.

9057. In whose hands was it left?—It was deposited for him with Mr. Frank Barber.

9058. When was the money deposited?—Before the election.

9059. How long before the election was it deposited with Frank Barber?—It might be a couple of days.

9060. Did Captain Knox give you that £50 as well as the other sums?—Yes.

9061. Did the Ryans get any of the money that was promised to them?—Yes; they got some small sum.

9062. How much did they get?—Fifteen pounds.

9063. Was that to strengthen them?—No; one of the family got into a row, got into some great disturbance. They came to me and told me that they were in a bad way. I gave them the money myself, as a loan on a bill, until the Commission was over.

9064. It was a loan on a bill?—It was, till the Commission was over.

9065. Do you mean this Commission?—Yes.

9066. But it was understood to be a portion of what they were to get?—Yes.

9067. Did you give that £15 out of your own money?—No, I didn't.

9068. Who gave you the £15?—Captain Knox.

9069. When did he give it to you—was it after the election?—No; it was before it.

9070. How much money altogether did Captain Knox give you already?—Two hundred and seventy-five pounds.

9071. How did he give you that money—did he give it to you all in notes, or was it in gold?—He didn't exactly hand it to me; it was left where I might take it.

9072. Was it all in one lump sum?—It wasn't; he gave it to me at various intervals.

9073. Where was it left?—Some of it was left in my own office.

9074. And some, where?—I think some in his own room made up in an envelope.

9075. How did you know that some of it was to be left in his own room made up in an envelope?—Well, you know it is easy getting a wink when people wish it.

9076. I see, and you got the wink from Captain Knox?—I did.

SEVENTH DAY.
October 12.
Mr. Robert Stokes.

9077. And you took up the envelope?—Yes.

9078. And what was in it?—Yes.

9079. Did anyone else get money from Captain Knox but you?—I don't know.

9080. But you might hear—did anyone get it according to the word that was going?—I couldn't tell.

9081. Whenever you were engaged in this transaction of getting money for these people, were you always alone with Captain Knox?—I was.

9082. You have mentioned ten voters that you bribed—the two M'Mullens, the two Youngs, the four Ryans, Watt Henderson, and Pat Gallagher—with all these you were successful?—I was.

9083. And you succeeded in getting them to either vote for Major Knox or to abstain from voting altogether?—Yes.

9084. Now, tell me, did you offer any other money?—Well, I did.

9085. To whom?—I offered to cash a bill for two other men named Kearns and Barry for £50 each.

9086. Though you offered it in that way, was it not offered as a bribe for voting—that is the plain English of it?—No, it was offered to them to go away.

9087. Were they Catholic electors?—They were.

9088. Did you give the hard word among the poorer classes of electors that any Catholic electors that would go away were to get £50?—Oh, no; they were more anxious to learn that than I was to tell it; I didn't speak about it much at all.

9089. In reference to the men who voted, did you pay them on the polling day after voting?—No.

9090. When did you pay them?—Some of them are not paid all that was promised to them.

9091. Did you pay Watt Henderson and the Youngs after they had voted?—They were paid before they voted. They were Conservatives, and I trusted them as their principles were the same as my own.

9092. Do you know a man named Bryan M'Morrow?—I do.

9093. Did you make any offer of money to him?—I made no offer of money to him, but what wouldn't be construed into an offer. He was coming about the door constantly.

9094. To what party did he belong?—To the Roman Catholic party.

9095. Did you mention anything about £50 to him?—Never.

9096. Do you know a man named John Tighe?—I do.

9097. Did you ever mention to him anything about £50?—Never. Tighe came one night to my place, forcing himself in. He asked me how much money was going. I told him I would give him a pound.

9098. Do you mean to say you didn't give him any money?—Not a penny. I would be very sorry to give him any money.

9099. Why would you be sorry to give it to him?—Because I couldn't depend on him. I doubted him in everything I would have to say to him.

9100. Can you give us any information about any other persons who were engaged in practices similar to those you have told the truth about?—No; I can't.

9101. Do you know anything of the transactions in which Mr. Cherry was engaged?—Nothing more than what the public know, that I supplied the car just as he has stated.

9102. Did you know that Shiels was got at?—I did.

9103. Did you know what his figure was?—I didn't. Mr. Cherry didn't give me any reason to know what it was.

9104. Did you tell Mr. Cherry that Captain Knox had charge of the money department?—I am not positive about that? I can't say that I did.

9105. Did you in the course of business?—It was kept as a business matter that it should not be talked about. We were not anxious to know how it was.

9106. One other matter—I believe there were some voters whom you couldn't get at by money, but who should be got at through their employers?—I know nothing of that.

9107. Do you suppose there was occasion for more than one person to have charge of money matters?—I couldn't say.

9108. How long before the election was it that you had the conversation with Captain Knox about these money matters?—I think it was about a couple of days.

9109. When you were canvassing, did you offer to any of these men, or did you make any arrangement with them, before you spoke to Captain Knox—I mean these sums you were promising would be very large, you know, for yourself to be out of pocket?—I wouldn't like to be out of pocket.

9110. I mean to say when you were offering these sums was it because you had the authority of Captain Knox?—No, it was more on hope.

9111. But in every case didn't you tell Captain Knox?—Principally, I did 9112. And in every case didn't you get the money down when it was wanted?—I did.

9113. And you told him the necessity there was for giving it?—I did.

9114. Are you sure that nobody was present but Captain Knox at any of these conversations about money with him?—I am quite sure there wasn't.

9115. You are under some pardonable agitation about this brief. Now I want to know, I want you to tell what occurred about it between the professional men and yourself at Carrick, about your evidence; for it is a more serious matter than you may think. I don't mean serious to you. You wrote down truly what you told us to-day about the eight or ten men you bribed, as well as your memory served you?—I did, substantially.

9116. You wrote all down?—Not all, exactly. I did, substantially. There was no need of telling them all I told you. I only told them what I was charged with. I hadn't been charged with what I told you now. I was charged falsely. In every case in which I was charged it was colourably false.

9117. What do you mean by that?—As you heard Tighe swear the other day, you saw yourself that what he swore was not true.

9118. Don't mind giving an opinion on that?—That's what I call a colourable statement.

9119. You saw the bill of particulars, I suppose?—I did.

9120. In it you saw the names of those bribed opposite your own name?—Yes.

9121. At all events you put down the truth about the matters you were charged with?—Well, I did as well as I could.

9122. And was that evidence taken from you by Mr. Palmer the solicitor?— I think so.

9123. Do you remember reading the brief of it when it was copied out in proper form?—Yes.

9124. Now state what was said to you by any person about that brief, before you were examined in court; because the result was, that at Carrick you didn't tell the truth?—No.

9125. Now state what was said about that matter, there is no privilege about this matter?—I heard that it was Mr. Macdonogh's opinion, that when the brief was shown to him, it could not be produced, that I should stand on my own responsibility and answer to everything there. I knew nothing of that until I was going up to the witness-box, and I was very much annoyed when I heard it.

9126. Who told you Mr. Macdonogh's opinion?—I can't really call to mind now, there was such a number about me.

9127. Were you in a room at the time?—No. I was in the hall or courtway.

9128. Now, whatever expressions were used to you and which you don't remember—you were in such a state of excitement or nervousness at the time—you were afraid your evidence would lose the seat for Major Knox?—Yes.

9129. Was it whatever was said then made you not tell the truth?—No, not that; but I was surprised when I heard Mr. Macdonogh address the judge, and blacken me to him, and leave me to myself; and saw Mr. Robinson sitting down without making any effort to clear matters up. It was the first time I was in such a predicament.

9130. You used the word "cross-examined," you said you were cross-examined by the judge?—Yes.

9131. At all events you succeeded in baffling Judge Keogh?—I can't say I baffled him.

9132. You denied that you offered the M'Mullens any inducement to go away?—I can't say what it was I said.

9133. I will tell you. Judge Keogh said,—"Will you now tell me what was the inducement that was held out to these men, and by whom, to get them to leave the place?—Indeed I could not. And you swear you cannot?—I swear, positively." I must have this sifted. Did anyone, high or low, no matter who he was, give you any hint to deny any knowledge of the transaction with the M'Mullens?—No one did.

9134. And what do you mean by saying that you got word that Mr. Macdonogh said the brief of your evidence could not be produced—the meaning I take out of that is that the evidence which was in the brief could not be given in court?—I don't know what the meaning of it is. I thought the evidence was very fair—but Mr. Macdonogh is counsel, and should know better. He said I should stand on my own responsibility, and take all the blame. I thought it was his venomous nature that made him do that through spite.

9135. Had you ever been concerned in money matters in any previous election?—Nothing more than that Mr. Sedley brought me £35 for two men.

9136. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Did you vote at the last election?—I did not.

9137. Did you vote at the election at which Sergeant Armstrong was a candidate?—I did.

9138. The Chief Commissioner.—For the present direct your attention from the last election between Mr. Macdonogh and Sergeant Armstrong, and tell me did you know that voters at the last election were going to Mrs. Hall's?—Is it Major Knox's election you mean?

9139. Yes?—I knew that some of them were at Mrs. Hall's.

9140. Did you tell any of the voters to go there?—I told Gallagher that he ought to go there.

9141. The man who was to get the £50?—Yes.

9142. Who has got it?—No one, I believe.

9143. Why did Galbraith keep it?—I think that Gallagher won't get it until the Commission is over.

9144. Was the £50 lodged with Barber before Gallagher went to Mrs. Hall's?—It was.

9145. I suppose he would not go there only that it was lodged?—I can't tell you—that's for himself.

9146. Did anyone else of the voters that went to Mrs. Hall's get £50, or a promise of £50 for not voting, that you heard of?—I don't know how many were there.

9147. There were from nineteen to twenty-one—I will read them for you—Michael Dogherty?—I know nothing of him.

9148. John Reid?—I know nothing of him.

9149. John M'Guirk?—I know nothing of him.

9150. Pat Clancy?—I know nothing of him.

9151. Timothy Fallon?—Perhaps I told him to go and vote. I am not sure whether I did or not; but I was not to give him any money.

9152. Did you make any promise of money to him?—No.

9153. The two M'Goldricks?—I had nothing to do with them.

9154. Pat O'Brien?—I had nothing to do with him.

9155. George Beatty?—I had nothing to do with him.

9156. Edward Ferguson?—I had nothing to do with him.

9157. John Gray?—I had nothing to do with him.

9158. James Gray?—I had nothing to do with him.

9159. Robert Lindsay?—I had nothing to do with him.

9160. Andrew O'Beirne?—I had nothing to do with him.

9161. Pat Gallagher?—I had nothing to do with him.

9162. I now go back to the election at which Mr. Macdonogh and Sergeant Armstrong were candidates—did you vote at that election?—I didn't.

9163. Had you anything to say to money at that election?—Nothing more than that Mr. Sedley brought me £55 for two men—£30 for one, and £25 for the other.

9164. Who were the two men?—A man named Buchanan, who is now dead, and one of the Ryans.

9165. Why did Mr. Sedley bring you money for these men?—The reason was that in the early part of the time they said they would do whatever I asked them to do. When Mr. Macdonogh found that I had refused him and promised Mr. Kincaid, Lord Palmerston's agent, to vote for Sergeant Armstrong, Mr. Sedley and he came to my place in a very great passion to know why I shouldn't vote for Mr. Macdonogh.

9166. Whom did you vote for at that election?—I voted for Sergeant Armstrong.

9167. Were you not always identified with the Conservative interest?—Well, I was.

9168. And you were canvassed by Mr. Macdonogh?—I was.

9169. How was it then that you voted for Sergeant Armstrong?—Well, I will tell you. Mr. Kincaid brought me a message from Lord Palmerston, saying that I shouldn't vote against the Sergeant, and I didn't vote against him. When Mr. Sedley and Mr. Macdonogh came to my place, Mr. Sedley asked why didn't I go with the Conservative candidate, as, he said, Mr. Macdonogh told him that I would vote for him. I told him that I never promised Mr. Macdonogh to vote for him, that Mr. Macdonogh was then present, and that I would ask him if I didn't tell him I would not vote for him—that I would forfeit everything if I voted for him. Mr. Macdonogh said that what I stated was fair, and approved of my reason for not voting for him at the time. Mr. Sedley apologised, and yet he had the hardihood to say what he said here the other day.

9170. Mr. Macdonogh said you appeared on that occasion as if you wanted money?—I believe it was his evil disposition that thought of it.

9171. Did you want money?—Never in my life.

9172. He said you appeared as if you were hanging back to get money?—I wasn't hanging back. I never got money in my life at any election. When Mr. Lyons, Mr. Dobbyn, and other gentlemen came to me canvassing for Mr. Macdonogh, I told them I couldn't vote for him, that I would vote for the candidate whom Lord Palmerston asked me to vote for, as I was under a compliment to his Lordship. I had purchased the premises I hold from him, and had expended £300 on them in improvements; yet he didn't increase the rent; he gave me a renewal of the old rent.

9173. You had a lease at the time?—I had written a letter to Lord Palmerston for it, and Mr. Kincaid had a letter from his Lordship on the subject. I had an old lease of the place, and wanted a renewal of it. It was in consequence of the way I improved the property that the new lease was given to me.

1974. You say it was on account of a favour you received from his Lordship that you voted for the Sergeant?—Yes. Gratitude bound me to do so. Mr. Kincaid told me his Lordship would be displeased if I voted against him. He said it was too bad that those for whom he was always doing favours would not grant him a favour in return, when they had it in their power to grant it. I thought I was bound to favour his Lordship, and to vote any way Lord Palmerston asked me. If I didn't vote I would have remained silent.

SEVENTH DAY.
October 12.
Mr. Robert Stokes.

9175. Was that your only reason for voting for the Sergeant?—That was my only reason.

9176. Did anyone offer you any money to vote?—Not one ever yet attempted it since I commenced to vote at elections.

9177. Did you know anything of money going on either side at that election?—Nothing more than what I have told you. When Mr. Sedley was vexed, he and those with him got quite irritated, and they exonerated those who promised me to vote for Mr. Macdonogh. They said they wouldn't hold themselves accountable for any promises they had made to me, and that those who made the promises may vote as they like.

9178. Who were the persons that had made promises?—Ryan and Buchanan. They got sorry for their rash act afterwards.

9179. Was Mr. Macdonogh with Mr. Sedley on that occasion?—I am not sure that he was, but there was some one with him.

9180. Why do you say that they were sorry for what they did?—Because people wouldn't vote for them again unless I asked them.

9181. At the election previous to that when Mr. Macdonogh was returned, £850 was given to electors at the time of the election—do you know anything of that money?—Not the least.

9182. At any other election did money for bribery pass through your hands?—I believe I was never more than asked to vote at any other election.

9183. Were you never let into the secret?—Never. And I wish it were so since.

9184. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Do you know a man named Armstrong?—I know many men of that name.

9185. Do you know George Armstrong?—I do.

9186. Did you ever send him with a message on any occasion for a man named John Tighe?—Never.

9187. Did you see Tighe in your own house?—I did.

9188. When was that?—I don't recollect exactly. The night he called on me I saw him.

9189. Did you make any reference to him about £50, £30, or any other money in any way?—I did not; but I might say "We will be thankful to you for your vote." I wouldn't offer him money, because I couldn't have any confidence in anything I would speak to him about.

9190. But you talk in a joking way to him, and say you would be thankful for his vote?—There weren't a dozen words altogether between us. There were some people inside in the parlour at tea, at the time he called. I was at tea also, and I got up from it. I went out to speak to him.

9191. Was that before the election?—It was. I didn't like to have anthing to say to him, as I knew I couldn't have any confidence in him.

9192. Could you remember the dozen words you said to him on that occasion?—Not exactly; the effect of what I said was that I wouldn't give him £1 for voting for Major Knox; but that I would be thankful if he went down and voted for him.

9193. Did you recommend or advise him to go and vote?—I don't recollect that I did.

9194. Did you give him to understand that if he voted for Major Knox, you would treat him like the others?—I didn't.

9195. Were there any of those persons among whom you distributed the £270, any tenants of yours?—No; there weren't.

9196. Have you any tenants who were voters?—I have.

9197. What are their names?—Michael Burke, James Kenny, J. Kerr, Thomas Scanlan, Peter Henderson, Michael Foley.

9198. Any body else?—I think that's all.

9199. Did you canvass any of those for Major Knox?—Burke told me that he promised Major Knox to vote for him on my account.

9200. When did he tell you that?—He told me it all along. He was a poor man, and hadn't voted previously; he had no vote previously.

9201. Did you give him to understand that he would get any money?—I understood that at the revision he got something. I was told at the revision that anything done at it was legal. He said he would rather have a few pounds than get his vote. He could get a vote without his presenting himself at all.

9202. Did he get anything?—Not from me.

9203. At the revision you gave him to understand that he would get something if he voted for Major Knox?—No; but if he didn't register his vote.

9204. How much was he to get for not registering his vote?—£10.

9205. Did you make a similar promise to your other tenants?—No; he was the only one—he was very poor; and wished to remain at home, and I wished to do good for him.

9206. As to your other tenants whom you canvassed, what were their names?—I don't think I canvassed any others.

9207. Neither Peter Henderson, nor Kenny, nor Scanlan?—No; I did not ask them how they voted.

9208. How did you think they'd vote?—I thought that they'd vote as they liked.

9209. They were all Roman Catholics, were they?—No; Kerr was a Protestant.

9210. For whom did he vote?—He voted for Major Knox.

9211. Did you make no application to the Catholics for their votes for Major Knox?—No; Foley didn't vote.

9212. Do you remember at Carrick stating that you had influence with your tenants, and that you would use it morally?—Yes; I do, but it was in reference to the revision.

9213. Were you afraid to give any intimation to the Roman Catholic electors, or give them to understand that they would get something, if they voted for Major Knox?—Most of them are independent, and don't require money.

9214. You mentioned to us that applications for money were made by electors to Captain Ethelred Knox at the last election?—Most of them did so.

9215. Can you mention the names of any of them?—I can't mention them exactly at present.

9216. Were there a good many of them?—I can't say that there were a great many.

9217. Were there a dozen or a couple of a dozen?—There weren't, I think.

9218. Did any of these Catholic electors that were speaking to you speak about money for their votes?—It might be said in a joking way, but no more.

9219. Did they say that they would get money from Captain Flanagan's side?—They always said that there was money going on the other side.

9220. That was with the view, probably, to get an offer from you?—I don't know.

9221. As a man of the world, what do you think?—It might be said as an inducement.

9222. Don't you believe it was?—I believe that they were getting it, too, or a promise of it. It was a habitual thing to get it.

9223. Are you a native of the borough?—I am not.

9224. How long are you residing here?—I am living here for the last twenty or twenty-one years.

9225. How long are you an elector?—Since I came to Sligo, in '48 or '49.

9226. Have you taken an active part in elections since you came to Sligo?—I was recognised as a Conservative voter. I always voted on the Conservative side.

9227. From your knowledge of the elections here, do you say that it was a habitual thing for a certain class of voters to get money?—I believe so. I couldn't say it only for the discovery I made.

9228. Previous to this inquiry, was it a common opinion that there was a considerable number of voters in the borough who expected or who would take money?—It was.

9229. Did you know of any money going at the last election but what has been mentioned?—I have no knowledge of it, but there was an impression that there was money going on Captain Flanagan's side.

9230. What grounds have you for saying that—did you hear any person say it?—I have no grounds, except what are common on such occasions.

9231. At the election when Sergeant Armstrong was returned, you said you sent in an application for the renewal of your lease to Lord Palmerston?—It was before the election a good length of time.

9232. How long before the election was it?—I can't say. I know Mr. Fox, a surveyor, called, valued the premises, and made a return of the expenditure, to lay before Lord Palmerston, in order to show that I was worthy of the lease.

9233. How long before the election did Mr. Fox call?—I can't say.

9234. How long are you in possession of the place?—I am only four years in it.

9235. How long were you in it when you applied for it?—I could hardly tell you.

9236. About what time before the election of Sergeant Armstrong was it that Mr. Fox came to view the place?—I think it was about nine months. He came often down from the head office.

9237. Did Mr. Fox call again before the election?—He officially reported what improvements were made on the premises, and what it cost me. to entitle me to the lease. He told me he would send it up to Dublin. He did so, and I got my lease.

9238. The application for the lease was previous to Sergeant Armstrong's election?—It was.

9239. And the renewal, when did it come down?—The renewal came down after Sergeant Armstrong's return.

9240. At the time of the election your gratitude was a sense of favours to come?—It was as much a sense of favours past.

9241. Also as much a sense of favours to come?—You can judge of that.

9242. Are you aware of Mr. Sedley, on your refusing to vote for Mr. Macdonogh, telling the voters among whom you are influential, not to vote?—I wasn't personally by at the time, but I was told of it.

9243. Who told you of it?—A man named John Ryan told me.

9244. Is he one of your tenants?—He is not.

9245. You are not aware that Mr. Macdonogh called to tell him not to vote?—I am not positive whether it was Mr. Macdonogh or Mr. Lyons. I know both went.

9246. You said there was an impression that money was going on Captain Flanagan's side. What grounds have you for saying that? Did you hear of anyone in particular having it?—Nothing but what is very general on such occasions.

9247. You are referring merely to the habit of the town?—As far as Captain Flanagan is concerned.

9248. Did you witness any of the mob violence in the town at the last election?—I did.

9249. Was there much violence?—There was some.

9250. Was that violence directed against the voters who were suspected of having been bribed?—It was directed against voters that wouldn't go with their own people or party. I am living in a most public place, and it was known that I took an active part in the election, but I didn't get a pane of glass cracked or a stone thrown at me or a groan or a shout. There was one evening, certainly, I was attacked with Major Knox. I took shelter. I got a warrant for the arrest of the party, but I didn't prosecute.

9251. Was there any violence offered to any Protestant voters who were looked on as having voted according to their principles?—There were. Mr. Woods's place was broken; Mr. Leech's was broken; Mr. Gilmor's was broken—a great many suffered.

9252. Were any of these gentlemen suspected by the other side of tampering with the voters?—I can't say.

9253. What do you believe?—I think it was in the violence of passion. Mr. Woods and his son were coming down the street, and I saw them attacked, and though Mr. Woods's house was quite close by I asked them into my house, for I thought at the time that they might be injured.

9254. Do you know anything of the election at which Mr. Wynne and Mr. Somers were candidates, when Mr. Wynne was returned by a large majority?—I do.

9255. Are you aware of any money going at that election, or after it?—I believe that there never was so pure an election in Ireland as that. I believe that was a pure election.

9256. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Why was Mr. Wynne's last election a pure one?—Because the contingencies of party spirit led to it. When I say party spirit, I mean political party spirit amongst the fighting parties; besides Mr. Wynne had great influence, and was highly esteemed by what had been called "The Old Ireland party" on the Roman Catholic side——

9257. And all the Conservatives, I suppose?—And all the Conservatives were along with him; they respected him. Mr. Wynne was a gentleman that lived in the esteem and respect of everyone.

9258. We have been told that about forty Liberals voted for Mr. Wynne en masse?—I should not wonder.

9259. Do you think or believe that such a large number voting was prompted by any dislike to Mr. Somers?—It was pure love of Mr. Wynne and esteeming his principles.

9260. He was of Conservative principles?—He was a Conservative.

9261. Then it was that they did not hate Mr. Somers, but they loved Mr. Wynne more?—Mr. Wynne stood on a different footing with Mr. Somers. Mr. Somers had no landed property—had no influence here. Mr. Wynne was not so; he was a gentleman of extensive influence.

9262. You recollect, of course, Mr. Macdonogh's first election, when he was returned?—Very well.

9263. Was not Mr. Tennison a candidate at that time?—No, we first selected Major Folliott.

9264. Was not Mr. Tennison a candidate at that election?—I believe he was; he withdrew.

9265. He addressed the electors?—He did.

9266. Do you recollect how long before the election he withdrew?—On the evening prior to or the morning of the election.

9267. He was nominated, I think?—He was.

9268. Was there any report in town of the reason of Mr. Tennison's withdrawal?—I could not say there was any exact report.

9269. Was it said he withdrew because he would not bribe, and the people would not vote for him unless he gave money?—I do not think that was the reason.

9270. Did you ever hear it said that that was the reason?—No, I never heard that.

9271. What was the reason?—Well, I think he heard Mr. Somers was weakly—his own side—and that as both would be putting together, there was no chance.

9272. Were the M'Mullens believed to be supporters of Major Knox?—They said they would vote for Major Knox.

9273. When they came to you, and there was the interview about their going away, did you believe they would vote for Major Knox?—I did believe they would vote, but I believed they were afraid. I actually thought it was a story they made up to go away. Major Knox did not want them; the Major got in with a large majority.

9274. Was the reason you offered them the £50 to go away because you were afraid of their being tampered with and voting for Captain Flanagan?—There was a diversity of reasons—one that they might be tampered with and forced to vote; the next was that they might be injured, and the third was that I did not think the Major stood in need of them, and on the whole, it was better they would go.

SEVENTH DAY.
October 12.
Mr. Robert Stokes.

9275. I want you to be a little more precise than you were as to Hignell. You said, "Hignell, I think, gave the address." Could you not be more positive than that?—Indeed I could not.

9276. Did you see anybody else but Hignell at that time with respect to the M'Mullens?—I cannot call to mind that I did. I am telling the truth simply as best I can.

9277. Did you tell us that Captain Ethelred Knox was aware of the transaction?—He was not present.

9278. I am not saying he was present. Was he aware of the transaction at the time?—I think he was.

9279. Was anybody else besides Mr. Hignell and Captain Ethelred Knox aware of the transaction at the time?—Myself and the M'Mullens.

9280. Of course you and they were, but anybody else?—Not that I know of.

9281. Is your recollection fresh with regard to that transaction?—Well, I said before we agreed to keep all these things as quiet as we could.

9282. Could Captain Knox have given the address of Kavanagh in Dublin?—He did not.

9283. Are you positive about that?—I am quite positive.

9284. Is there anybody else, to your knowledge, who could possibly give the address for M'Mullens, except Hignell?—Indeed no. Indeed I neither knew where they were going, nor had I anything more to do with them than sending them to Bundoran, and to go from that to Dublin, but then and there I lost sight of them. I had no more communication with them or correspondence with them.

9285. When did you first hear Kavanagh's name mentioned?—I thought it was at the petition—either there or here.

9286. Where did you first hear mention of the petition?—I did not hear it at the petition; I did not hear it until this.

9287. Did you hear at the petition that the M'Mullens were at Clitheroe?—No, I did not.

9288. You did not know they were in England then?—I did not.

9289. When you told Charles Tighe you would not give him any money to vote, what did you mean?—I meant that I did not wish to have anything to do with him.

9290. Was Charles Tighe a supporter of the other side?—He was. He was a Catholic, and not the most agreeable man to have to do with.

9291. Still you told us you offered him thirty-five strokes?—It was as much to get out of him, as anything else.

9292. But you intended he should understand it?—He understood it, that he would be honestly dealt with, I believe.

9293. You were cautious with him?—I think I was.

9294. You did not like to commit yourself?—I did not.

9295. Had you at that time an idea that you could legally give a man money to go away, although it would be bribery to give him money to vote?—I believe it was quite within my province to send any man away I liked.

9296. When the money was left in the envelope at Galbraith's for the two Youngs, how long before the election was it?—If I do not mistake, they got half the night before the election, and the other half the night after it.

9297. But I suppose the half notes were left at Galbraith's?—I think they were.

9298. How long before?—Perhaps two days.

9299. Two days?—It might be. I cannot be exactly certain of the time.

9300. With whom did you leave them in Magrath's establishment?—I think I threw them on the floor or the counter, or something that way.

9301. Do you mean in the shop?—No, I think it was in the wareroom.

9302. Upstairs?—Yes.

9303. Were the Youngs there then?—I think the youngest of the Youngs were.

9304. When you threw it on the floor, it was for them to take it up at once?—They might.

9305. What I want to know, is it so?—I believe so.

9306. Have you any doubt of it?—I think they did. I believe they did.

9307. And that is what you call leaving money in an envelope at Galbraith's?—Yes.

9308. You threw it on the floor and they at once picked it up?—I don't think—— I walked out—— and I presume he picked it up.

9309. You intended him to do so?—I did.

9310. Who was in the room at that time besides yourself and the youngest Young?—I do not doubt but Mr. Galbraith was.

9311. You think he saw what was going on?—I believe he did.

9312. I suppose there is only one Mr. Galbraith in town?—That is all.

9313. What is his name?—John.

9314. In how many different sums did Captain Knox give you the £275?—I think about five.

9315. Give the times and the amounts of the payments?—I could not.

9316. Can you give some idea?—I think he gave me £100 at one time.

9317. Was that in your own place or in his room?—I think it was in his room.

9318. In his room?—Yes.

9319. Was that £100 lying on the table in an envelope, and did he give you a wink?—It was understood where I was to get something that would suit.

9320. Was it Captain Knox showed it to you?—Yes.

9321. He said, "You will find it there?"—Yes.

9322. Pointing to the table where the envelope was?—Yes.

9323. Was it in bank notes?—It was.

9324. One or two notes?—One or more, I do not know which.

9325. When did you get the second payment—Youngs'?—I think the very day the Youngs consented to take the money.

9326. That was a couple of days before the election?—Yes.

9327. How much did you get at that time?—I dare say £40 or £60; I could not tell.

9328. When did you pay the Ryans?—They are not paid yet.

9329. I thought you told me you paid them?—Only a little; they got £15.

9330. Fifteen pounds a piece?—No; £15 between them.

9331. How much of that £275 do you now hold in your hands?—About one hundred and odd pounds.

9332. You gave the M'Mullens nothing except a couple of pounds?—No.

9333. You gave the two Youngs £40?—Yes.

9334. Did they get the second notes after the polling?—They did.

9335. How long after was it?—A day or two, I suppose. I could not exactly say.

9336. Then you gave the four Ryans £15—was that before the election?—No; it was since.

9337. How long after?—It was only the other day that some of it was given.

9338. Then you gave Mr. Barber for Pat Gallagher £50—does Mr. Barber still hold that?—I believe he does.

9339. You gave Henderson £20?—Yes.

9340. Was that before the election?—It was.

9341. That makes £125—that was all the money you paid?—I could not give all the little items exactly.

9342. That is all the money you have told us about—was the £50 given to Mr. Barber before the election?—It was.

9343. Have you got this brief?—I have not.

9344. Do you know where it is?—I do not. I never saw it after I wrote it.

9345. You wrote it in Mr. Palmer's office?—No; in Carrick-on-Shannon.

9346. You said the charges made against you at the hearing of the election petition were colourably false. What do you mean by that?—Just as I told you.

9347. Do you mean that they were completely false?—I could not say completely false. When the men came and I chatted with them at all, there was a certain truth in it.

9348. Do you refer to such cases as Kearns's?—Kearns, Barry, or Tighe saying that I sent for them.

9349. Do you recollect a man named Dominick Oates?—I do.

9350. Do you recollect him coming to you?—I do.

9351. Did you offer him any money to go to Dublin?—No.

9352. Are you positive about that?—I offered him "thanks"—that he would get so many "thanks."

9353. Did you not mean money when you said "thanks?"—Well I hoped he would understand it.

9354. And if he had gone to Dublin you would have given him 30 "thanks," whatever they were?—Oh, yes—he would have got it.

9355. Where is the £15 you got from Mr. Sedley, did you return it or give it to voters?—I had it not ten minutes.

9356. Whom did you hand it to?—Ryan—they left it on my parlour table, and he came in, and I said "What you get on the table take."

9357. Then the money was given to Ryan and Buchanan?—Yes.

9358. I thought you held it for them?—No.

9359. Was it before the election?—After he voted.

9360. Can you give me any idea of how many Catholic voters got money at the election on your side?—I could not tell.

9361. Were there ten?—I could not tell.

9362. Were there five—surely you can give some idea—I do not want to pin you to any particular number?—I could not tell.

9363. Were there many—was it a common thing?—I could only tell of those I had to do with.

9364. How many had you to do with?—I told you I had to do with very few.

9365. Did Pat Gallagher tell you money was going on the other side?—He did. I am not sure. I am not positive of the conversation. I think the principal thing was what he would get himself.

9366. What other Roman Catholics were you tampering with, or trying to get to vote for Major Knox?—Oates was one.

9367. Did he tell you he was offered money by the other side?—I think he would rather have gone for half the money to the other side, or something that way.

9368. But did he say anything about money going?—I am not positive about that. I cannot say.

9369. What other Catholic had you to do with—Kilcullen?—No.

9370. What other Catholic were you trying to get to vote for Major Knox?—Burke said he could get it. Burke said that Mr. Thomas O'Donavan was getting him money and offered him money.

9371. Did he say Mr. O'Donavan offered him money to vote for Captain Flanagan?—That he got it for him.

9372. Did he mention the sum?—No. I cannot say.

9373. When did that take place?—When we were speaking. That conversation was I think the Sunday night before the election. Burke came to me and wanted me to have money. I told him I would not have money—that I could not have for him any money at all. He said he could get—that Mr. O'Donavan offered him money.

9374. Is Mr. O'Donavan a voter?—He is.

9375. You spoke of violence and attacks on voters. In your opinion was that violence intended to intimidate them and prevent them voting against their own side?—Oh, most assuredly.

9376. How many voters, in your opinion were there, who were considered to be voting or influenced to go vote against their own side?—Not answered.

9377. Think a moment?—Do you mean from common report——

9378. From common report; but give it to us also as far as your own personal knowledge extends?—I cannot give my own personal knowledge, but the common report was that Major Knox would have fifty Roman Catholic voters.

9379. Fifty?—Between forty and fifty.

9380. Was it the common report that all these men were voting for money, or with the expectation of getting money?—Well, the most of them liked Major Knox. He is a great favourite—he professed high liberalism in every respect except as to disestablishment, and perhaps if it was put to the poll this moment he would be elected above any.

9381. Evidence has been given that all these voters did not vote for Major Knox for monetary reasons, or intend to vote for him, but what I want to know is, what was the report on the subject?—Well, the report, and I think the common belief, is just what I repeated to you.

9382. That it was for money, or was not?—What do you want me to tell?

9383. What I want to know is, was it the common report that these fifty voters who were expected to vote for Major Knox were operated on, or were to get money after the election?—Oh, I could not say that. All I say is what I believe, that Major Knox is a very general favourite with everyone.

9384. That is no answer, Mr. Stokes. I want to know what the report was, and surely you can tell me?—The reports were as various as anything.

9385. Give them all?—One was that he bribed everyone that voted, another that he did not bribe any—there was hardly a third person that had not a different story.

9386. The Chief Commissioner.—Tell, me, Mr. Stokes, what made a respectable man like you, carrying on business here, and having property, engage in this bribery for the first time in your life at Major Knox's election?—Major Knox did me a favour that I felt bound for, and then I was brought from one thing to another.

9387. Brought into it?—Brought into it.

9388. Who was the first voter you bribed?—The first thing—the first instance of it was when Mr. Sedley handed me the money for Mr. Macdonogh's case.

9389. I mean the men you mentioned at the last election?—Mr. William Ormsby called on me and asked me to use my influence, saying that he was prepared to discharge something. I did use a little influence, and one person refrained from having a vote. He was not discharging the promise, and I pressed him to it, and he afterwards did.

9390. Mr. Ormsby?—Mr. Ormsby.

9391. How did he discharge the promise?—He paid the money.

9392. How much?—I think £15.

9393. When was that?—At the revision.

9394. Who was that £15 given to?—John Creighton.

9395. For what purpose?—Not to have a vote. Not to register.

9396. How many men altogether got money not to register, to your knowledge?—Only that one.

9397. Was it Mr. Ormsby that mentioned that matter to you first?—I think it was.

9398. Did you hear of any other man getting money not to register?—I did not. Burke promised to do it, and I think would have been glad to get out of registering, only his vote was registered for him in his absence.

9399. Now, of the men bribed at the election—I mean Ryan, Henderson, Gallagher, Young, and the M'Mullens—which was the man that you bribed first, and which set of them had you the first interview with?—I think the first that I succeeded with were the M'Mullens, as well as I recollect. I did not bribe; they did not get the money yet.

9400. I know they did not. Before you bribed the M'Mullens, had you got any money from Captain Knox?— think I did. I saw it either two or three days before.

SEVENTH DAY.

October 12.

Mr. Robert Stokes.

9401. Then I presume the first thing you got from Captain Knox was the £100?—I believe it was—I think it was that.

9402. Then before you succeeded in bribing any voter, had you got the £100 from the Captain?—I had.

9403. Did he tell you what it was for?—No, he left me to myself.

9404. Was it perfectly well understood between you and the Captain that you were to use it at your own discretion?—It was.

9405. And, if necessary, in bribing?—It was.

9406. Did you show that money to the M'Mullens to show that you had it?—No. And Captain Knox since told me that I had not to pay the M'Mullens; that they were taken off my hands.

9407. And put into whose hands?—I could not say that. He did not tell me that, but that I had not anything more to do with them.

9408. When was this?—I think it was since the election.

9409. Oh, yes, I know, since the election. Was it in Dublin?—No, it was in Sligo.

9410. Did he intimate to you who was to pay them?—He did not.

9411. Was that before the petition or afterwards?—I think it was before the petition, but I am not positive.

9412. Had Captain Knox any little book, or memorandum book, in which he put down these things?—Not that I saw.

9413. Was any list of the electors in his room?—Not that I saw.

9414. Now, do you know Michael Brennan who did not register, or who was to get money for not registering?—I don't know.

9415. Do you know anything about that transaction?—No. I don't know where he lives. I don't know any such person.

9416. Did you hear of a man writing to the Chairman at Quarter Sessions not to put his name on the registry? Did you hear that story?—There were a number of them.

9417. Who wrote to the Chairman?—Who was it said wrote?

9418. M'Mullen was annoying you some time recently, I believe, Mr. Stokes?—He was drunk, and he made some noise outside the door one night.

9419. He said he had a conversation with you some three weeks ago, but could not be precise as to the time. But when it was known that the Royal Commission was coming down here did you mention to him then anything about Kingstown?—He came into my shop about three weeks ago, or so. He was under the influence of whiskey, and asked me was I getting any jobs done, or had I any work. "I have not," said I, "at present anything to get done. I would give it to you as soon as ever I did in my life if I had, but I have not anything to get done at present." "Trade is very bad," he said. "I am sorry for it," said I. "I am about leaving town," he said. "Are you?" said I. "Where to go to?" "Oh, I will go to some good town," he said. "Where," said I. "I have a notion of Kingstown," he said. "Well, if you go there," I said, "anything in the world that I can do for you I will. I have some friends, and I will give you an introduction in the way of work."

9420. At that time did you know the Commission was to come down here?—Well, we expected the Commission a good while.

9421. Was the son to go for work to Kingstown too?—I don't know.

9422. You don't know?—No, it was only the master just. He was wickedly under the influence of whiskey, and it was to try to get rid of him. I cut out of the shop.

9423. Whom did you intend to introduce him to at Kingstown?—Two or three tenants of mine.

9424. Well, you must name them?—Mr. Barker Primrose.

9425. Did you give him a letter?—Nothing more in the world than that if they wanted a coat cleaned, or anything of the sort, they would patronize him; but there was no other intention under the sun.

9426. Was that to get him out of the way of being examined as a witness at Carrick?—It was not, indeed. It was nothing more than an introduction to a friend in case they had any work to give him; and if not, to let it alone.

9427. I must just ask you this. You were away from town some time?—I was.

9428. How long were you away?—About ten days. I was promising this length of time to go and see a nephew of mine who is in the Church, and to hear him; I saw no prospect of being able to go if the winter came on; and I thought I would be back to answer any questions that you might ask me.

9429. Where did you go to, exactly, Mr. Stokes, on this visit?—I went to Newry.

9430. Then you were there?—I was.

9431. And you read every day's newspapers, I suppose?—Not every day's.

9432. You read the accounts of the Commission?—I read some days.

9433. Did you not see that you were one of the first witnesses that were called?—I did.

9434. Did you see that your name was called four or five times?—Well, it was, I believe.

9435. Was it when you read Macdonogh's evidence that you determined to come back?—It was not.

9436. When did you make the determination to come back?—I made it when I was spending a day with a doctor outside of Newry—an acquaintance of my friend's, where I was. I determined that I would come home and answer anything that I could answer.

9437. Yes,—that was after you read Macdonogh's evidence?—It was not.

9438. On what day did you get the subpœna that was left at your house?—For the Commission?

9439. Yes?—I never saw it yet.

9440. You never saw it yet?—Never did. I thought to be home by the two o'clock train yesterday and report myself to the Court.

Mr. Thomas B. Hignell.

Mr. Thomas B. Hignell re-examined.

9441. The Chief Commissioner.—Did you write the direction—Mr. Kavanagh's name and address—for the two M'Mullens?—No, sir.

9442. You swear you did not?—I do, positively.

9443. Most positively?—I do.

9444. You heard Mr. Stokes's recollection on the subject?—I did.

9445. Were you in the office when the two men were there?—Never. I never saw the men in Sligo in my life.

9446. Never saw the M'Mullens?—Never.

Mr. Robert Stokes re-examined.

Mr. Robert Stokes.

9447. The Chief Commissioner.—Was Mr. Hignell present on any occasion when you and the M'Mullens were together?—The only chance was the time that I tell you. They went next day.

9448. I know they did. Did Mr. Hignell in your presence see the two M'Mullens?—Well, there was very little space between us.

9449. Was there as much as there is between you and me?—There was not.

9450. Where was it?—I think it was in my shop—between the shop and the little room off it.

9451. How long had Hignell been in your house before the M'Mullens came?—I could not exactly say—half an hour, or ten or fifteen minutes or an hour, something that way.

9452. Did you speak to Mr. Hignell about the M'Mullens?—I am not positive about that; it is possible I did.

9453. What leads your recollection now to the statement that Mr. Hignell, as you believe, wrote the address?—The only statement is, that I don't recollect of any other person being by, and I never wrote the letter myself.

9454. Was it a letter or a mere address?—I don't know what. I did no such thing; although M'Mullen swore he got it, I did no such thing in the world.

9455. Was it on an envelope it was written?—I don't know.

9456. Have you now present to your mind a recollection that you saw Mr. Hignell write it?—I have not.

9457. You have not?—Oh, I have not—no.

9458. Did Mr. Hignell speak to the M'Mullens in your presence?—I could not say that, indeed.

9459. How long were the four of you—the two M'Mullens and Hignell and you—in the same room, or in the same passage?—Oh, perhaps between a quarter and half an hour; I could not say exactly. It was not long.

9460. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Mr. Stokes, had you any conversation with Mr. Waugh or Mr. Doherty about the M'Mullens?—No.

9461. Is there anybody connected with the Irish Times office that you are aware of, in Sligo, except Mr. Waugh and Mr. Doherty, besides Mr. Hignell?—There is not, that I am aware of.

9462. I heard that Mr. Gilmore's young man, Mr. Malley, was the reporter and private correspondent?—Oh no, it is the Daily Express he is connected with. I don't know of anyone.

9463. Are you quite sure, now, that neither Mr. Waugh nor Mr. Doherty spoke to you about the M'Mullens?—Quite positive.

9464. Are you sure that any address was written at all?—I am not. All I am sure of is, that I never handed the paper that M'Mullen swore to.

Mr. Hignell re-examined.

Mr. Hignell.

9465. The Chief Commissioner.—Mr. Hignell, did you ever mention Kavanagh's name in Sligo?—Never; never mentioned it nor——

9466. Then you did not know where the men were to be sent to, Mr. Hignell, did you?—No, sir; I never knew they were to go. I never saw the men nor heard of them before the election in Sligo. I never saw them in Mr. Stokes's house; that I swear most positively. He never spoke to me about those men, and I know nothing about them.

9467. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Had you ever spoken to Major Knox of Kavanagh as having a house where electors would be received?—No.

9468. Did you ever speak to Major Knox about Kavanagh at all?—No.

9469. Or to Captain Knox?—Or to Captain Knox.

9470. The Chief Commissioner.—You see the result is that we now don't know who wrote the address?—I think you could know, sir. I swear positively. He does not swear it, nor does not recollect these things. You know he does not recollect ever seeing a letter or paper.

9471. We are now trying to find out the truth?—I know that.

9472. You see, Mr. Hignell, Mr. Stokes says he did not know Kavanagh?—I don't know whether he did or not.

9473. And where could the M'Mullens have got Kavanagh's address?—I don't know.

9474. I am now trying to find that out?—Yes.

9475. You say now that you did not write it, and that you did not mention the name in Sligo?—Certainly not.

9476. There must now be some one else in it whom we have not discovered, and whom we shall subpœna if we do discover.

9477. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Have you any suspicion in your mind, Mr. Hignell, as to who gave that address?—I have not.

9478. The Chief Commissioner.—When you did not give it, and did not mention Kavanagh's name to Stokes, some one else on Major Knox's side must have given that address to Stokes to give to the M'Mullens?—I cannot say anything about that, nor I have no suspicion of anyone doing so.

9479. Is it not perfectly plain that some one else must have done so—you did not?—One would suppose that somebody must have done it.

9480. The M'Mullens could not have gone to Kavanagh by intuition?—No, I should say not.

9481. They did not know Kavanagh—did not hear of him at all; they were men in a different rank of life. Can you suggest to us, now that it is all over, the way you fancy they were enabled to use that address?—I cannot say.

9482. Who gave it?—I cannot say, indeed. I had no transactions of the sort with any man in Sligo, and therefore I had no suspicion of any man doing this.

9483. Oh, it was not a Sligo man that was doing it; the Sligo people did not know Kavanagh at all; it was a Dublin man that did it?—I could not say.

9484. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Is Captain Knox connected with the Irish Times?—Ethelred; yes, he was manager of the place for a long time.

9485. The Chief Commissioner.—And cashier?—Cashier.

9486. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Is he a Dublin man?—No, he has not, nor has not been for some time.

9487. Was he living in Dublin at the time of the election?—He was.

9488. Then he was down at the time of the election, of course?—He came down, I think, two or three days before it.

9489. Had he any knowledge of Kavanagh?—I don't think he had. I don't think he ever knew Mr. Kavanagh.

9490. Where is Captain Knox now?—I could not say.

9491. Of course you could not say exactly; but is he in Ireland?—I don't know; he might be at his own place, perhaps, near Ballina.

9492. Then he resides with Utred Knox?—No; Utred Knox resides in Ballina.

9493. In Ballina, too?—Somewhere near it. I saw Mr. Utred Knox yesterday, and I think he is here now, or will be here to-day.

9494. Do I understand you to say that you wrote out a brief?—Me, sir?

9495. Yes, the brief containing your evidence?—No, never.

9496. Well how was it taken down?—My evidence? There was no evidence.

9497. I mean the evidence you proposed to give?—Oh, I beg your pardon, it was Mr. Stokes.

SEVENTH DAY.

October 12.

Mr. Robert Stokes.

Mr. Robert Stokes re-examined.

9498. Mr. Commissioner Bruce. — Mr. Stokes, did you yourself write down what evidence you proposed to give at the petition?—I did.

9499. And sent it to Mr. Palmer?—Yes.

(The witness withdrew.)

Mr. Arthur W. Malley.

Mr. Arthur W. Malley sworn and examined.

9500. The Chief Commissioner.—What statement do you wish to make in reference to what Mr. Stokes said?—He was asked the question whether he knew anyone else connected with the Irish Times, and he said he heard that Mr. Malley, a young man connected with Mr. Gilmore's paper, used to report for it. I used to do so, but I had nothing whatever to do with the election.

9501. You are now sworn; can you give the Commissioners any information about these corrupt practices?—Not the slightest. Major Knox's word to me was, that if he did not carry his election pure, he would not carry it at all.

9502. I thought you had nothing to say to the election?—Except in casual conversation. I was up in Dublin often, and would go to see Major Knox to settle an account for correspondence, or something that way, and we might talk that way. He always said that if he did not carry his election by fair means, he would not resort to bribery. But I can give you something of the intimidation here, for I had to take notes of it.

9503. Give us any evidence you have on the subject?—Anything to exceed the violence of the mob on the polling day—and I am not very squeamish, for I have been at other places where elections were—anything to exceed the violence of the mob in Sligo I never saw. I had no vote; but being connected with a Conservative paper, I often had to get into a doorway meeting a mob; and I was nearly being mobbed myself on the day of the polling, although I had nothing whatever to do with the election, except in the way of my business.

9504. Do you know Captain Knox?—Except to settle an account with him I do not know him.

(The witness withdrew.)

Moses Monds.

Moses Monds sworn and examined.

9505. The Chief Commissioner.—Mr. Monds, your name has been mentioned by Mr. Lyons as having got money at Mr. Macdonogh's first election; how much money did you get?—I cannot state the exact amount.

9506. Did you get £200?—It was about £200.

9507. How long before the polling day did you get it?—I cannot tell.

9508. Was it before the polling day?—Oh, I am certain it was.

9509. To what electors did you give that money?—I gave £40 to James M'Kim; I allowed in a rent account £40 to Thomas M'Kim; and I gave James Wallace £40. I gave no other money to electors to my recollection.

9510. What did you do with the balance?—There was about £30 that I think I expended in travelling expenses.

9511. Travelling expenses of your own, do you mean?—No; sending for voters. You must recollect it is about ten years ago, and I dismissed the matter entirely from my mind; after two other elections since that I was very well out of it. I paid the amount of a decree—it was either £38, or £48, or £43, I cannot recollect which—to Mr. William Taylor, that he had against a man named Atkinson, whom I brought from Manchester to vote, and whom Mr. Taylor told me he would have arrested if the decree was not settled; and I promised to settle it, and did.

9512. Now what bargain did you make with the three men whom you have mentioned for their votes before the election?—I made no bargain whatever with the M'Kims.

9513. What influence had you over them?—Well, I was a personal friend of one of the M'Kims, and the other was a tenant of mine. I made no bargain either with James Wallace; but he did ask me in my own office whom I would recommend him to vote for, and I said to him, "I am voting for Macdonogh."

9514. When he said, "Whom do you recommend me to vote for," you understood the meaning of the word "recommend"?—I understood it in the ordinary sense; no other meaning.

9515. That is, in the ordinary sense it bears in Sligo?—No, the ordinary sense in the English language—for whom I would recommend him to vote.

9516. The word "recommend" had no reference then to any money dealings?—I cannot say that.

9517. That is what I ask you?—Ah, but I cannot look into his mind; I can only speak for myself.

9518. You did not intend to pay him anything?—I did if he voted for Macdonogh.

9519. And he perfectly well understood that from your manner?—How can I tell that?

9520. How much did you intend to give him?—Well, I had no exact sum in my mind. I just intended to give him according to circumstances. If there were a great many claims on me it would make the sums small; if there were a few claims on me it would make them large. All I wanted was to get rid of what I had possession of.

9521. Did you tell anyone you had got this money?—I did not.

9522. Did you pay any of those people until they had voted?—Certainly not.

9523. You paid them then on the polling day after they had voted?—Oh no, nor for months afterwards, I think it was. I cannot recollect. You know the thing is in fact nearly out of my memory. I am quite sure it was at least six months, or three months, or four months. I am sure I would not pay a penny until after the time for petitioning was past, in any case—that I am sure of.

9524. Are you too old a hand for that?—Well, I was concerned with a good many elections, but I never had a penny in my hand before or since.

9525. Now, which of the M'Kims was it that owed rent?—Thomas.

9526. Was it a year's rent?—Oh, I think he owed two, or two and a half year's rent. My recollection is that it was about £40.

9527. It was due to you?—To myself—yes.

9528. And this M'Kim, when he owed two and a half years' rent was not able to pay a farthing?—Well, indeed I think he was poor.

9529. He was not able to pay?—I will not go that length. He had an establishment and business.

9530. He owed two and a half years' rent?—I think it was about two a half years.

9531. You say that you paid two and a half years for him, paying your own rent to yourself?—No doubt of it; and he told me so at first.

9532. About the decree that Mr. Taylor had against Atkinson—was Taylor a friend of yours?—He was.

9533. An intimate friend?—Yes.

9534. And before you brought Atkinson over from Manchester, did Mr. Taylor tell you that if you did bring him over he would have him arrested?—He did not, nor I would not have brought him if I had known he had the decree.

9535. Mr. Taylor being a friend of yours, did you bring Atkinson over in order that Taylor might get his money out of Macdonogh's money?—No. I believe the intention was to give Atkinson money himself; but this decree being in the way, it was thought that Taylor had a right to it.

9536. Then Taylor was the only man that got any benefit by the transaction?—The only man. I think Atkinson got something. I don't recollect clearly.

9537. Atkinson got something?—Yes, it is likely he did. I think the messenger that went for him got £10 or £20. He was his brother-in-law; I forget his name.

9538. That is, got £20 for bringing over the voter?—For his loss of time.

9539. Well, that's a delicate way of expressing it?—Well, I am expressing it properly.

9540. How long was he away?—I don't recollect.

9541. Then the £30 travelling expenses that you mentioned included Atkinson's travelling expenses?—Well, it did not.

9542. That is a large item for travelling expenses—I want to know what voters got it?—I think I did not say £30 for travelling expenses; I said for that and paying money to messengers, and things of that sort; there were a variety of small incidental expenses that I could not——

9543. But travelling expenses are very often a form of bribery, and that's the reason I ask you?—Well, I believe the law is more stringent now than before. At that time we did not think it was.

9544. What I mean by a form of bribery is giving an extraordinary sum to a man for his travelling expenses. I must therefore ask you to what voters did you pay money for travelling expenses, and how much?—I don't think I paid money to any voters. I don't think these men were voters at all.

9545. Were they going for voters?—Going for voters, and doing little things. I have not a single document in connexion with it. After that election was over I thought I was free of it, and I discharged everything from my recollection.

9546. According to the law, after the time for petitioning was over you thought you were free of it?—I thought I was.

9547. Did you get the receipts of all these men?—No, indeed, I never got a receipt from one.

9548. Now, did you look on this transaction at that time as bribery?—Well, I was not quite sure. I made no promise, you understand. I had the money, and I determined to give it to the men that voted right; but whether that's bribery or not I must leave the Court to determine.

9549. Were these men Conservatives or Liberals?—Oh, Conservatives. I never spoke to a Liberal for a vote, nor would offer him a shilling. Those men, I believe, at that election—every man on both sides—would have voted the same way if there was not a single shilling produced.

9550. That was the election at which Colonel Tennison withdrew?—The election at which Colonel Tennison withdrew.

9551. Did you hear any rumour going through the town that he withdrew because a number of his Liberal supporters demanded a large sum of money from him?—No, I heard a contrary rumour.

9552. What was it?—The rumour I heard was that he would not accede to Mr. Somers's demand. Mr. Somers wanted a sum of money, and he would not give it.

9553. How much did Mr. Somers want?—I heard he wanted £3,000, and that he was offered only £1,000.

9554. To withdraw, and give his interest in favour of Tennison?—Oh, of course; then the voters that supported Somers would vote for Tennison.

9555. Now, do you know anything about the corrupt practices that have been stated to have taken place since that election?—I do not. I determined that I never would have anything to say to an election afterwards, and I never had.

9556. Can you give us the names of any other electors who at that election were bribed in a similar way?—I could not; I just kept my mind to myself, and interfered with no other person.

9557. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Whom did you vote for at Armstrong's election?—For Macdonogh.

9558. Before that election did you canvass any of those that you have just now mentioned—the M'Kims or Wallace?—I don't think I did. I made up my mind that I would take no part in elections afterwards.

9559. Had Mr. Lyons before that told you that there was no money forthcoming on Macdonogh's side?—Well, I can't recollect that, except from having heard Mr. Lyons state it so. I have no recollection about the matter. I merely recollect accepting a bill and getting some money. I heard Mr. Lyons state it so, and I am sure he stated what was correct.

9560. I am now asking you in reference to Sergeant Armstrong's election. Before that election did Mr. Lyons say there was no money forthcoming from Mr. Macdonogh?—He did not; I heard nothing at all from him about it. I know nothing about it, nor about the last election.

9561. Had you no conversation about Sergeant Armstrong's election with Mr. Lyons or Mr. Stokes?—I had none that I recollect. I dare say I had hundreds of conversations in the ordinary way—words going into one ear and out at the other; and I did not fix any of them in my memory.

9562. It was a strong fact, you know, the first time when Mr. Macdonogh was elected, that money was being given for distribution amongst the voters. Well, now, did it not occur to you at Sergeant Armstrong's election to inquire whether there was any money similarly to be given?—If I had determined to have taken any part in the election it would have occurred to me, and if I had gone into it at all I would have gone into it pretty actively; but as I had made up my mind to have nothing more to say to elections, I did not trouble myself about it. It is ten years since I was concerned in Mr. Macdonogh's election. I voted in every election since the Reform Bill.

9563. But at the election of 1865 do you mean to say that you did not converse with any voters as to whether money was going or not?—I did not say that I did not converse with any voters.

9564. Well, do you remember any conversations?—But I am quite certain I did not speak about money to any man; that I am quite certain of; I determined that I would not.

9565. Did Mr. Macdonogh canvass you?—I don't know whether he canvassed me or not. It was not necessary. He knew right well I would vote for him. There was no doubt about my vote. I always voted the one way.

9566. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—I think Mr. Lyons said that you spoke to him first about the raising of this money?—I heard so.

9567. Do you recollect whether that is so?—I do not; I think it is unlikely, but I would not contradict him. The reason I think it unlikely is this, that I had no communication with Mr. Macdonogh about money, and I don't think it likely that I would propose drawiug bills; but as Mr. Lyons has said it I assume it is true.

9568. Assuming that to be true, do you recollect the state of Mr. Macdonogh's prospects at that time?—Oh, I think if there had not been a single shilling at all Mr. Macdonogh was certain of being returned. He had a clear majority on the poll-books.

9569. Why, then, was the money spent? Surely there must have been some apprehension?—Well, I gave you all the explanation I can give you about my part of it. I got a certain sum of money and I disposed of it.

9570. But you have no recollection as to that?—I have not, indeed. You know that this is about ten years ago, and there are matters that people like to get out of their minds as quickly as they can.

9571. Sometimes they stick there?—They do in spite of them.

9572. But you got no more than £200, you are positive about that?—I am not positive. I saw Mr.

SEVENTH DAY. October 12.

Moses Monds.

Lyons's evidence. He said £180 or £200, and he went up as far as £250 afterwards. Really I cannot tell what I got.

9573. I think you have accounted for more?—It would not be surprising if I spent hundreds of my own at elections.

9574. The Chief Commissioner.—Hundreds in parliamentary elections?—In matters connected with the elections.

9575. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Was any money spent in Mr. Wynne's election?—Not a shilling was spent in Mr. Wynne's election on either side. I know it. I was on his committee. There was not a penny spent.

9576. Can you account at all for this sudden corruption that appears to have sprung up, if Mr. Wynne's election was so pure?—I cannot give any explanation of it. I think there was this feeling abroad. The Conservatives had supported Mr. Somers through a great many elections, and they never got a penny for supporting him I need not tell you. Then they supported Mr. Wynne purely as a matter of principle. I induced him to come forward, and proposed him at a private meeting. So far from getting anything for that they lost heavily, for they had to raise a subscription among themselves to pay the expenses of Mr. Wynne's election. He did not wish to come forward. There was then, I think, a general feeling amongst the leading Conservatives that if there was really a rich candidate in the field on their side, those poor fellows that had always stuck to their colours should get something if it was possible.

9577. Could you tell us anything more about those sums that were subscribed to assist Mr. Wynne?—I could not, we all subscribed as far as we were able to pay Mr. Wynne's expenses—his legal expenses.

9578. What amount was subscribed?—I think there was £200 subscribed at the last, and we subscribed about £200 before that to prosecute the petition against Sadlier. I was the person who went to prosecute it, and I lost about £100 of my own. I proved three undoubted cases of bribery, yet the House of Commons, that is now so pure, passed it over as of no consequence, and would not even print the evidence, though a special report was made by the committee that three cases of bribery had been proved, but not agency.

9579. The Chief Commissioner.—Is that what you referred to when you said you spent hundreds of your own?—It was.

9580. You did not mean that you spent it on voters?—Oh, no; I never gave a voter a penny before nor since, I assure you, nor never will again.

9581. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Before Mr. Macdonogh's first election had you any conversation with Mr. Lyons to the effect that poor voters on your side should get some money?—Oh, I had not to my recollection. I think it was exceedingly probable that the matter was talked over, but I have not the slightest recollection of it. I have told you everything I know.

9582. But there was that feeling at the time Mr. Macdonogh came into the field?—I think there was. It was my own feeling, I know decidedly. Whether others felt it I cannot tell, but I thought that those people deserved something.

9583. You heard the same feeling expressed by other Conservatives?—Well, I cannot recall to my recollection. I am just telling you as I think myself.

9584. Was that feeling communicated to Mr. Macdonogh to your knowledge?—Not by me, nor never to my knowledge. Mr. Macdonogh was determined to be exceedingly pure.

(The witness withdrew.)

Hugh Conellan sworn and examined.

Hugh Conellan.

9585. The Chief Commissioner.—You are an elector?—Oh, yes, for many years.

9586. On what side have you been?—Always the Liberal. Before you proceed further about my examination, be so kind as to allow me to refer to a matter respecting which I, on Thursday morning last, claimed to be examined.

9587. Certainly?—Michael Hunt, if I have been correctly informed, stated to you that he heard and believed that I received money for my vote at Sergeant Armstrong's election. I beg to say that I never directly or indirectly received a penny, or any consideration whatsoever for my vote. I have always taken a lively interest in the Liberal cause, having always conscientiously professed it.

9588. Did you know anything at Sergeant Armstrong's election about the distribution of this money?—No, not until after the election that I heard; the electors spoke to me about it. I must say, if you will allow me to explain, that I had no idea of Sergeant Armstrong's return until the day of nomination. In point of fact, I had thought the chances were dead against him, but the magnificent speech he made on that occasion, his frankness and candour, and his exposition of Macdonogh's political inconsistency created such an enthusiastic feeling in his favour, that from that moment we almost looked on his election as certain. And there was another matter amongst my co-religionists, freely spoken of through the town, that tended strongly to injure Mr. Macdonogh's prospects, as far as the Conservatives were concerned, and that was the alteration of Mr. Macdonogh's religious belief.

9589. I am asking you about corrupt practices at elections, and you had better answer questions. I cannot allow further statements. Do you know anything about the distribution of money after Sergeant Armstrong's election?—I only heard of it.

9590. Did you take any part in it yourself?—I did not.

9591. Did people apply to you to get paid?—I was one evening coming up opposite to the post office when a mail guard named Dugdale spoke to me in the street, and said, "When are we going to get settled," or "arranged with?" Of course, I believed at once he alluded to the election, and I told him I had nothing at all to do with such matters. On another occasion I was passing on the old bridge——

9592. Mention the names of how many voters applied to you about money after the election?—They only asked me for information evidently about it. There were three altogether—there may have been more, but I only recollect three that alluded to money matters—Dugdale was one. On another occasion I was passing over the old bridge, and an elector named Stephen Hughes said he had heard that Michael Gethin, solicitor, since dead, had been appointed to arrange matters and deal with such electors. I said I had nothing to do with such matters, and made use of the remark at the time that it was no wonder for the country to be unfortunate when such matters were sought for. The third was one Doran, whose name I have mentioned to you. In my shop he said to me that he and eleven others had offered to leave town for Mr. Macdonogh for £40 a man, but that Mr. Harloe Phibbs and Mr. Sedley advised Mr. Macdonogh not to trust them, and that they would not go without the money, and that of course the matter then dropped.

9593. Whom were they offered the money by?—He did not say. He said they offered to leave town. He did not name any of Mr. Macdonogh's friends as having offered it; but I understood him to convey that they made the representation to Mr. Macdonogh's friends, and that Mr. Sedley and Mr. Harloe Phibbs advised Mr. Macdonogh not to trust them.

9594. Now do you know anything about money being paid at any of the last three elections?—Only from hearsay; and with your permission I will come to Sergeant Armstrong's election.

9595. I cannot allow you to be making speeches at all. What information can you give even by hearsay about money paid at the last three elections?—Oh, I heard there was a great murmuring through the town after a lapse of some months; that parties were expecting money for their votes, and that some of them alleged they had suffered very much.

9596. Which election was that?—Sergeant Armstrong's.

9597. Is that all you heard about that election?—That's all I can at present charge my memory with.

9598. Do you know anything about the mobs in town at the last election?—Yes; I was very much through the streets; and I don't think I went to bed either the night before Sergeant Armstrong's return, or that before the polling at Captain Flanagan's election. I was through the streets with some friends looking about to see that our opponents were not interfering with parties we might have a doubt about. Of course wherever we went we endeavoured to keep peace and order, but at the last election every friend and lover of order must condemn the violence that was resorted to on the night of the day of the election. But there were two circumstances to which I would call your attention ——

9599. Now I ask you, first of all, do you know anything about the mob?—Yes, I endeavoured to save Larry Burke's premises.

9600. That was after the election?—The night of the day of the election.

9601. I want to know were they strange people?—On the day of Captain Flanagan's election there were strangers in town.

9602. On his side?—Yes, I saw a number of men come into town carrying green boughs. I did not know them. I did not see sticks or other sort of injurious weapons.

9603. Where were these men fed and supported during the election?—I do not know. I heard some of them were completely starved. They were the whole day without getting a morsel of food.

9604. They were not in town the whole day without getting bit or sup?—Of course some of them may have got some nourishment.

9605. Can you give any information as to where these men were fed and supported?—I cannot; only they may have frequented the houses of those that supported Flanagan, for all I know. I don't know by what means they got support.

9606. Did you see them in the public-houses?—No, I did not go into the public-houses.

9607. Did you see a crowd in the public-houses of these country fellows?—I saw a crowd round several of the houses.

9608. Apparently getting drink there?—Oh, I could not know what was going on inside.

9609. Whose houses did you see those country fellows round?—I saw a number of fellows at the corner of Knox-street, near Tom Ward's. I don't think I was up Pound-street side that day to my recollection. I should say there must have been some of them up there, for it is a favourite side with that class of people.

9610. I only want the names of the public-houses you saw them about?—I cannot charge my memory with having seen them about any other houses on that day. It is a prominent corner of Knox-street.

9611. He is a supporter of Captain Flanagan?—He was. He always supported the Liberal side.

9612. Do you know anything about any orders being given for refreshments to those country people?—I never heard of them at that election. I heard of orders at Townley's election, but not at Captain Flanagan's.

9613. You know very well the meaning of the phrase "orders?"—I do; to give so much refreshment, or something like that.

9614. "Give bearer £2 worth;" and the publican gives that in drink to the person?—Oh I understand well what you mean.

9615. And at Townley's election there were orders going?—I believe there were.

9616. To about what amount?—I heard the mob cost Townley £1,400. I don't know if it be true.

9617. From your experience of the election how many were in the mob on Captain Flanagan's side?—Oh, the mob were scattered through the town.

9618. I know they were?—I dare say on the day of the election several hundred people. They came from all the rural districts about, and I was going to give an explanation of that when you interrupted me.

9619. Well, go on then—give the explanation?—Of two causes which, I believe, very much added to the excitement.

9620. I do not mean the causes that led to the excitement,—I do not mean the political causes?—I don't mean the political causes.

9621. Were they local causes?—I mean acts of violence by the opposing party.

9622. Well, you may go into that if you like?—About three weeks or so previous to the election on a Saturday evening a man named Leonard, whose name has already figured before you—I think he is on Major Knox's list as a manager—with three or four others came down Market-street shouting out, "Knox for ever." I was about the counter in my shop; and in a few minutes afterwards I heard women roar out—"Oh, they have a bar of iron and they will murder some person." I went down about the street opposite to the Independent office, and immediately there was a row. The butchers are generally a very patriotic class of men.

9623. Yes, on the right side?—Their anger I daresay, was excited by the demeanour of the other men. So the police came and got the parties separated. They went up the street shouting, "Knox for ever," and immediately there I saw the Rev. Father Morris who had previously heard of the circumstance. I gave him a description of the men, for at the time I did not know Leonard by name. He followed them up the street, and immediately afterwards it was rumoured that one of them had attempted to strike him; and that in my opinion caused a very angry feeling in the town and the rural districts, that Knox's men were going to strike a Roman Catholic clergyman.

9624. A priest, of course?—Yes. Well, on the morning of the polling some of Captain Knox's friends and some of our gentry about here brought in a hundred or more, I should say, of the sons of Conservative farmers; and it went through the town that a number of country Orangemen had come in with a determination—to use plain words—to slate the town fellows; and before the place opened a lot of these were brought across the street from the house opposite to the door leading into Mrs. Hall's, evidently wanting to get into the Court-house. A row then commenced immediately before the Court-house opened to receive votes; and the upshot was, that the men from the rural districts were defeated and had to retreat.

9625. And then reinforcements came in?—Then during the day; and when Larry Burke's house was attacked I lived nearly opposite.

9626. You mean on the night of the polling day?—On that night. I think it right to explain the matter, for I believe every well-wisher of Captain Flanagan was pained at those acts of violence.

9627. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—State the facts as shortly as you can?—I was in my father-in-law's house, when I heard the crash of glass. He got to the door before I did and looked out. The night was very dark; and the moment he did so two stones were flung at us. Of course we had to retire. I again went out the same night and heard the breaking of panes, but it was so dark that I could not see anyone. They broke the panes again. We did everything we possibly could to dissuade the people from violence. There is another matter that I wish to refer to—I feel bound to do it.

9628. Never mind what you feel?—It strikes at the very root of the corruption.

SEVENTH DAY.
October 12.

Hugh Conellan.

9629. The Chief Commissioner.—We don't want your belief about the corruption.

9630. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Can you tell us any fact?—I heard that Major Knox's friends, or some parties on his behalf, lent money to electors months before the election. I heard of one instance of an account of £30.

9631. The Chief Commissioner.—Who did you hear lent money?—I heard that an account owed by a man named Andrew O'Beirne, of Market-street, to Dowd, Crowe, and Wilson of Dublin, was settled by Major Knox or his friends. There was a rumour several months before the election; and this was one of the men that voted for the Major.

9632. Had he belonged to the Liberal party before, or to the Conservative?—I am not sure how he voted on former occasions. I know he is a Roman Catholic.

9633. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Have you heard of many voters being intimidated on account of the violence at the last election?—I heard some express themselves as being frightened and intimidated.

9634. Do you believe them?—I do.

9635. Do you believe that the mob violence was for the purpose of intimidation?—No; when I say that, I don't believe there was an organized system of mob violence, but that it was just all done in the heat of excitement.

9636. But do you believe it was for the purpose of intimidating voters?—The chief excitement was after—the chief violence, rather, was after the poll.

9637. But there was intimidation before that; people were intimidated by acts and threats?—I am not aware of the threats.

9638. I mean, they have been sworn to?—Oh, well, I am not aware of them.

9639. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Do you believe the mob violence prevented electors from voting?—I think every elector could have voted, for there was plenty of military in town to bring them up. The town was full of military; but, of course, the chief efforts of the populace were directed against their co-religionists, who, they thought, were going against principle.

9640. Did you hear of any elector who was prevented from voting in consequence of the mob violence?—I heard of Mark Antony Macdonogh having refused to vote after he heard of Captain King's death.

9641. Did you hear of anyone else?—I heard here in court about Edward Gethin.

9642. Any other?—Yes, I think I heard of John M'Guirk.

9643. Any other besides him?—Not that I can recollect.

9644. These three, at all events, you heard, were prevented from voting by the violence?—No; but I heard they were afraid to come up.

(The witness withdrew.)

Thomas Ward sworn and examined.

Thomas Ward.

9645. The Chief Commissioner.—What are you?—A publican and grocer.

9646. You are an elector?—I am.

9647. You voted for Captain Flanagan at the last election?—I did.

9648. During the election were there any people getting refreshments in your house, as is usual at election times?—Nothing unless what they paid for.

9649. I am sure you were paid for?—That is, people came in and got it the same as at any other ordinary time.

9650. Did you see strangers in town forming part of the mob?—Well, I saw the whole people—the whole gathering.

9651. I mean country people?—I did.

9652. A great many country people?—I did.

9653. Some of them had green boughs?—Well, I did not take notice; they might have.

9654. And some of them had sticks?—There might be some sticks with the countrymen coming to town.

9655. Do you think that the countrymen coming into town on the polling day might have sticks?—A countryman at all times coming into town mostly has a stick.

9656. A blackthorn?—Well, any sort of a one.

9657. On the polling day, on the day before the polling day, I suppose, a good deal of custom was going in your house?—Well, there was—people coming in and out drinking.

9658. About how much did you get on the polling day?—Really I could not say.

9659. Did you get £20?—I did not, nor £10.

9660. Did any person give you any orders to give drink?—No; I got no orders nor money for drink.

9661. You tell me that truly?—I do.

9662. That you got no orders nor money?—I got no orders.

9663. Do you know of any orders or money going?—No.

9664. Did you give any drink for nothing that day?—Well, I might have treated some of my acquaintances.

9665. I don't mind that—to any respectable man?—No, sir; I gave no drink.

9666. I mean to any country person that came in?—No; no more than that if a countryman that I might be acquainted with came in, I might give him a glass.

9667. Did you give much that way during the polling day?—Well, I don't think I did; I did not give 10*s.* worth of drink.

9668. Did you ever hear of any orders going at former elections—you have been a long while in the town?—I am—I did hear of orders.

9669. At whose election?—I heard of orders at Mr. Townley's election.

9670. Did you get a share of them yourself?—I did.

9671. How much?—I think I got something about £30 worth.

9672. Now, from that time out, did you get no more orders?—No.

9673. Is the word "orders" well understood at times of election—you know well what I mean?—Oh no; the word "orders" does not—unless there comes an order from some person to supply—a written order—unless that a gentleman sends an order to give so much on it.

9674. And did you get no orders since Townley's election?—I did not.

9675. Did you get any orders at Sadlier's election?—No.

9676. On which side were you then?—I was on Sadlier's.

9677. Now, do you know anything about money going after Sergeant Armstrong's election?—I know nothing about the money, but that I was told that there was £20 sent to me. I was in prison at the time, and I was told that there was a present of £20 sent to me.

9678. Did your wife get that?—Well, I believe she did.

9679. Did you get any money at any previous election?—No.

9680. Except the £30 you have mentioned?—And £10 I got at Sadlier's election afterwards.

9681. Ten pounds?—Yes, some time afterwards; some months, I think—some time afterwards.

9682. Was the £30, and the £10, and the £20 all you got in reference to any election?—That's to the best of my knowledge.

9683. To the best of your knowledge, did you ever get any money for voting for Mr. Somers?—No.

9684. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Was the £10 you got after Sadlier's election promised to you before the election?—No; no money was promised.

Thomas Ward.

9685. Was the money you got at Townley's election promised to you before the election?—I did not vote for Townley at the time.

9686. Did you vote?—Not at that time.

9687. You were not a voter at the time of Townley's elections?—Not at his first election.

9688. On the polling day of the last election did you see any of the crowd gathering round any of the bakers' shops?—I did not.

9689. As if wanting to get refreshments?—I did not.

9690. Or round any of the shops?—I heard them shouting through the streets back and forward in all quarters, but I did not see them gathering round any particular shop.

9691. Did any of the mob appear to be country people?—Well, there was a fair share of them.

9692. Are you not aware of some of these country people having got refreshments in the town, at some of the places of refreshment here?—No, not that I could swear; I saw none of them getting it.

9693. Not that you could swear; but did you hear of their getting refreshments at any of those places?—No.

9694. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Did you expect to get any money for voting for Captain Townley?—I did not; nor was not promised any, nor did not ask any.

9695. I dare say you got some after Armstrong's election?—I did.

9696. Were you promised any then?—No.

9697. Did you ask for any then?—No.

9698. You did not expect any for voting for Captain Flanagan?—I did not.

9699. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Are you aware that about the time of Sergeant Armstrong's election the Catholic clergy had set their faces against giving money to voters?—I cannot say. The Catholic clergy, I believe, did not wish to encourage any money in any way.

(The witness withdrew.)

John Creighton sworn and examined.

John Creighton.

9700. The Chief Commissioner.—I believe you are not on the list?—I believe not.

9701. Did you ever get any money in order not to register your vote?—I did.

9702. How much?—Fifteen pounds.

9703. Who paid it to you?—Mr. William Ormsby.

9704. What bargain was made before you managed not to be put on the list?—There was no bargain.

9705. Did you want to be on the list?—I did not. There was no bargain with him. There were only a few words between him and me.

9706. What were the words?—He called me across or at least sent Michael Doherty. I live opposite to the hotel. He was standing at the hotel door and beckoned me across. I went into the coffee-room, and he pointed to three notes on the table. "I won't tell you," he said, "what that's for." That's all.

9707. Did you know what it was for?—Well, indeed I did.

9708. How did you know what it was for?—From the message I received.

9709. What was the message from Doherty?—That Mr. Ormsby wanted me.

9710. Wanted you about what?—About not getting on the registry.

9711. Did Doherty tell you nothing about some money being given to you if you would not go on the registry?—I don't think he did.

9712. What did he tell you?—He told me Mr. Ormsby wanted me.

9713. From all that was going on you knew what it was for?—Yes.

9714. Had you signed a notice of claim?—No.

9715. Were you going to be registered on the Liberal side?—I think so.

9716. And would you have voted for the Liberal candidate?—I don't know that I would vote at all.

9717. Had you ever a vote in the borough?—Never.

9718. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Had you anything to do with mobs. No, nothing whatever.

9719. Did you ever get a shilling at all except that £15?—Never a shilling.

(The witness withdrew.)

Michael Gillan, sworn and examined.

Michael Gillan.

9720. The Chief Commissioner.—How long have you been an elector?—Well I voted in 1837, and I always supported the Liberal cause.

9721. From first to last?—From first to last.

9722. Did you vote at Sergeant Armstrong's election?—I did.

9723. Did you get any money after that?—Well, some time afterwards Mr. Phillips sent for me and I took what he gave me.

9724. Twenty pounds you got?—£20.

9725. Now, had Mr. Phillips canvassed you before that?—No, Sergeant Armstrong canvassed me himself. I would have voted for him if I never got a penny.

9726. Did you ever get money after any other election?—No. I supported Captain Flanagan at the last one.

9727. You have voted since 1837?—I did.

9728. You remember a great many elections?—I do. I was some time that I had not a vote on account of a change of houses.

9729. Did you vote for Sadlier?—I did.

9730. You heard Ward say he got £10 after that?—Yes.

9731. Did you get anything after that?—Yes.

9732. How much?—I got £10. That's all the money ever I got at an election.

9733. In Townley's time whom did you vote for?—I voted for Townley, but I got no money.

9734. And you voted for Somers?—I voted against him.

9735. Were you one of the thirty or forty Liberals that voted against him the last time?—Yes.

9736. Why did you do that?—We voted for Townley.

9737. For Wynne?—For Townley against Somers, and we voted for Sadlier against Somers. That's what I allude to.

9738. I come down to more recent times when the Right Hon. John Wynne was contesting the borough with Somers; whom did you vote for at this second election?—I voted for Wynne at one time just merely to get rid of Somers. That was the object of it.

9739. What was the object of getting rid of Somers?—Oh, he was dividing the parties here and creating bad feeling amongst the people. Indeed I might say that to him should be traced all the misfortunes of the borough.

9740. Do you mean in the way of corruption?—Well, I do.

9741. How do you explain that?—Well, every candidate coming in had to make fresh grants to fresh people.

9742. That is, to buy the people?—Well, I could not go that length myself from my knowledge. I did not take part in the matter.

9743. But when you say to break fresh ground?—When I say so I only infer.

9744. That's your opinion?—That's only my own private opinion.

9745. You have heard about the evidence about the distribution of money after Macdonogh's first

SEVENTH DAY. October 12.

Michael Gillan.

election and after Sergeant Armstrong's election; you shared in that yourself?—Yes.

9746. I want to know what you allude to by saying that Somers was the cause of corruption by breaking fresh ground?—Because if two candidates came here surely he was a third one, and he would divide the parties and throw division into the matter, and lead people into squabbles and things that would be foreign to the borough otherwise. That's the object I have in telling you.

9747. Do you know anything about orders going?—Oh no, I know nothing at all about them. I never minded them. I used to be always in the shop and never left it.

9748. Minding your own business?—Yes; I did not pay any attention.

9749. At the last election you voted for Captain Flanagan?—I voted for Captain Flanagan.

9750. When you voted for him, did you expect that you would get anything?—No; I never got a penny.

9751. Did you expect that any money would be going?—Oh no, no; I did not think there would be; but if there was, and if I got it, I would take it, and if not I would do without it. That's the way.

9752. Why should a respectable man like you take money after an election?—Well, I am not able to form an opinion of that, I only just merely speak for myself. I would say this much, that if people get it, they take it, and if not, they do without it. That's my own impression.

9753. And do you think it no harm to take money after an election, for having voted?—Well, sir, I don't know. I could not give an opinion. It may be wrong, or it may be right. I do not know.

9754. But at all events you did it before, and you would do it again?—Well, I don't know. If I got it well and good, and if not I would do without it.

9755. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—You said that the new candidates having to pay the same party for themselves, led to corruption?—Oh no; I don't mean in the way of corruption. I do not know what may be between the candidates and the electors. I cannot say. That's a general question I am not able to answer; but I should think it—only my own opinion.

9756. Your opinion is that that led to corruption?—Well, I would not go that length. A great many people could not be corrupted.

9757. Well, I mean, led to people expecting money?—Well, we all know there are people expecting money, and that would take it if they got it, and if they did not get it, they would do without it. I will not speak of others. I do not know.

9758. But the new candidate coming into the field, led to the expectation of money?—Well, I should think that should be the feeling.

9759. Now tell me—you took money after Sadlier's election?—I was sent for.

9760. You were sent for?—I was sent for.

9761. Was any promise made to you before?—Certainly not.

9762. Nothing of the sort?—No.

9763. But you were not surprised when it was sent?—Well, I was not. I was tendered the money, and I took it. If I did not get it I would do without it.

9764. Just so; but you were not at all surprised at its being sent to you?—Well, no; I don't know now, it is such a long time ago.

9765. Now let us come to Sergeant Armstrong's election?—Yes.

9766. After that election you took money?—Yes, sir; I think it was eight or nine months after, as well as I can recollect. I was sent for, and I just took it.—I was offered it.

9767. Had not there been rather a murmuring amongst some classes?—Oh there is always that.

9768. That money was not forthcoming?—There is always, generally speaking, that after the excitement of an election. You know there is, generally speaking, an expectation amongst people. I don't know.

9769. Now, was not there a general expectation among people that money would be coming from Sergeant Armstrong before it actually was sent?—Well, I could not tell you. I don't know.

9770. Had not you yourself an expectation that some money would come?—Well, I had and I had not. Perhaps I thought that they would get nothing.

9771. You were not quite sure?—No.

9772. Was not there an expectation—a vague expectation that some money would come?—Well, there may have been a feeling to that effect, but I don't know whether it was general or not. I did not mix much in those matters.

9773. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—If Sergeant Armstrong had sent no money, do you think he would have shown his face in the borough again?—Well, I do believe he would be supported against Macdonogh.

9774. Oh, against Macdonogh?—I do believe he would.

9775. But as against another candidate?—I do believe if any other man was to come in against Macdonogh, I do believe——

9776. I am not asking you that question. I want to know this: do you think if Sergeant Armstrong had not sent that £1,500, or whatever it was,——?—I don't know what he sent.

9777. I want you to tell me, if he had not sent that money would he have been supported if he had come down again?—I would vote for him for one. I only answer for myself. I will vote for him to-morrow again if he comes down.

(The witness withdrew.)

James M'Mullen.

James M'Mullen recalled.

9778. The Chief Commissioner.—You are already sworn; do you remember the night you were in Mr. Stokes's?—I do.

9779. And when you got that direction where to go to in Dublin?—There was only an agreement there.

9780. Do you remember where you got Mr. Kavanagh's name of Dominick-street?—I do. My wife got it and brought it down to me. I was outside of the house at that time.

9781. Do you know Mr. Hignell?—I do.

9782. Did you see Mr. Hignell in Sligo before you left for Dublin?—Not to my knowledge.

9783. Just try and recollect whether you did or not?—Not to my knowledge, because I never spoke to him until I spoke to him in Dublin.

9784. How did you know Hignell—was it that you were to go to him in Dublin to get the £2?—Thomas Brennan told me.

9785. When you were in Stokes's office that night?—It was in the back parlour.

9786. Was anyone present but Stokes?—There was another man.

9787. Who was the other man?—I don't know. He was a stranger to me.

9788. You now know Mr. Hignell?—Yes; I would know him if I saw him.

9789. Was that other man Mr. Hignell?—Well, I cannot tell.

9790. You do not remember Mr. Hignell very well?—No, I do not.

9791. Was he an old man or a young man—the man you saw with Stokes?—Well he was not a young man.

9792. A middle-aged man?—A middle-aged man.

9793. Was he a gentleman?—He was.

9794. And he was not any gentleman that you had known before?—I don't know. I never saw that gentleman before.

9795. You are positive it was your wife that brought you the direction where you were to go in Dublin?—Yes, I was outside of Mr. Stokes's, and she brought me the letter. Said I, "You may keep that until we go down to the house." So we went down to the house and she gave me the note. I could not say whether it was sealed or not; but she gave me the note, and she gave my father one pound and gave me the other.

9796. Was it a letter?—It was a letter. There was a note inside.

9797. That's what I mean; and what did you finally do with that document?—I kept it until I went to Mr. Kavanagh's. I gave it to Mr. Kavanagh and he opened it.

9798. Did he read it?—He did, but not openly. He read it to himself.

9799. Were you present when he opened it and read it?—I was.

9800. Had you any idea whom it was from?—The letter?

9801. Yes?—Yes.

9802. Who?—From Mr. Stokes—so my wife told me.

9803. What did your wife tell you about how she got it from Mr. Stokes?—Well, you know there was an agreement with Mr. Stokes before I came away that I was to send her up again. So I sent her, and he told me the letter would be for me in the morning.

9804. And you sent your wife up?—Yes.

9805. At what hour did you send her up?—About eight o'clock.

9806. How long was your wife away getting the message?—About a little better than ten minutes. You know I was with her.

9807. You waited outside?—I waited outside.

9808. And she went in?—Yes.

9809. Did you on that occasion see the strange gentleman whom you saw before?—No, I did not see him, because I was not in at the time.

9810. When Mr. Kavanagh read the letter did he keep it?—He did.

9811. And have you ever seen it since?—No, never saw the letter since.

9812. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Do you know Captain Ethelred Knox?—No, sir, I do not.

9813. Do you know Mr. Waugh by sight?—Not by name. I might know him.

9814. What sort of man was it that was in Stokes's back parlour—was he tall or short—He was not a very tall man. He was a stoutish man, of a middling pale face.

9815. What aged man would you take him to be?—Well, I would take him to be a little better than forty, from his appearance, to the best of my knowledge.

9816. Did you ever see him before?—Not to my knowledge.

9817. Did you ever see him since?—No, not to my knowledge.

9818. Was your father with you when you were in the back parlour of Stokes's house?—I was in first, and then in about two or three minutes afterwards he came in.

(Mr. Hignell was here called to the table.)

9819. Witness, do you know this gentleman?—(After hesitation.)—Oh yes, this is Mr. Hignell. This is the gentleman that lent me the two pounds.

9820. Was he the gentleman you saw in the back parlour that evening?—Well, I could not swear that.

9821. Could you swear whether he was or not?—Well, I don't know indeed. I cannot swear whether this was the man that was in with Mr. Stokes at the time the bargain was made or not.

(The witness withdrew.)

Peter Talant sworn and examined.

Peter Talant.

9822. The Chief Commissioner.—You are an elector of the borough?—I am.

9823. How long?—I suppose fourteen or fifteen years.

9824. Did you vote at Sergeant Armstrong's election?—I did.

9825. Did you vote for Sergeant Armstrong?—I did.

9826. After the election did you receive any money?—I did.

9827. How much?—Fifteen pounds. I did not receive the fifteen pounds, but I received it as an instalment of rent due to the agent that was then acting for the property that I lived upon.

9828. Just explain what you mean by "instalment" of rent?—Half a year's rent—I think it was four pounds. I am not sure if the poor rates were out of it, or anything else; but I received the balance of it.

9829. How much did you receive?—I received, I believe, four pounds. I don't know whether there was any of the poor rate out of it or not.

9830. Who got the money?—I can't say who got the money, but Mr. Poe allowed me in the rent.

9831. Who canvassed you for the Sergeant?—I think it was himself, and some other gentlemen with him at the time.

9832. Did Mr. Poe canvass you?—No, he did not.

9833. Who paid you the money?—Mr. Poe.

9834. Who paid you that four pounds?—It was Mr. Poe. He allowed half a year's rent to me, and I got the balance, four pounds.

9835. Had you been a supporter of the Liberal party?—Always.

9836. Did you ever receive any money after voting at any other election?—Never.

9837. Who told you that the money would be going after the Sergeant's election?—No one told me; but two days previous to my going to pay the rent Mr. Poe came to say there was £15 for me.

9838. The rent you were going to pay was the November rent?—I don't know indeed whether it was the November or the March rent. I can't say which it was.

9839. Did you ever get any money since that time?—Never.

9840. Did you think it any harm to take the money?—Not the slightest. I thought that when it was going I might as well have it as another. But there was no promise whatever.

9841. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Who is your landlord?—Colonel Tennyson.

9842. Are you aware whether the other tenants of Colonel Tennyson, who are voters, and who supported Sergeant Armstrong, got £15 each?—I believe they did. I am not aware of it.

9843. How many of them are there?—I can't say.

9844. About how many?—Why I suppose there were five or six of them at any rate.

9845. Could you give me their names?—I will give you their names with the greatest pleasure. One I believe was Willy Ward, another was Peter Harte, another was Devine. I don't know his Christian name.

9846. Anyone else?—Well, I have no one else.

9847. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—These are all Colonel Tennison's tenants?—They are all; it's only from hearsay I have that. I have no personal knowledge that they received anything; but that's what I heard.

9848. Did you expect any money the last time?—No, none.

9849. You voted for Captain Flanagan?—I did.

9850. And I suppose if money were going you would take it again?—No, I don't think I would. I might take it if it were going in the ordinary course.

9851. But you did not expect it?—Never; nor never expected money at any election.

9852. The witness was permitted to withdraw, and was moving off the table when he turned about and said—But I tell you now plainly before I go down, I was offered £100 if I would vote for Major Knox. That's just the best way of telling you, sir.

SEVENTH DAY. October 12.

Peter Talant.

9853. Who offered you that £100?—Mr. Robert Stokes.

9854. Where did he offer it to you?—Either the morning before the election, or the second morning before the polling day.

9855. Where did he offer it to you?—He offered it to me in my own shop.

9856. Came in to you while at business?—No, he came in early in the morning and offered me the money.

9857. He had no other business in your shop?—Not the slightest whatever.

9858. At what hour was it?—I suppose between six and seven in the morning. He offered me the £100 if I would vote.

9859. Between six and seven—then your shuts were on still?—No, I think they were down, for I generally take them down when I get up. He came in and asked me was my house taken. I said the house was not taken for the election. "Well," said he, "I will take it for the county election in case your son and yourself vote." "Well," said I, "I tell you what it is"—I asked him after he said was the house taken—"No," said I, "the house is not taken." "Well," said he, "I will give you £100, or engage to get it for you"—I don't know which he said. "Well," said I, "what's the terms?" "That your son and yourself vote." Well, I don't know whether it was the Provincial Bank or the Bank of Ireland I named, but I said that what money was in it would not purchase me to vote for them.

9860. Then you refused?—I did, decidedly—repudiated it on the spot.

9861. Did he mention when the money would be ready for you?—Oh, he did not. You know we did not come to a close agreement, for I said to him at the time, "What's the terms?" and when he told me the terms I don't know whether it was the Provincial Bank or the Bank of Ireland I said, but I told him whatever money is there would not purchase my vote for him.

9862. How long was he with you?—I suppose about five minutes.

9863. I presume you and your son are Roman Catholics?—We are.

9864. Did he tell you that any other Roman Catholic voters were going with him?—He did not, but my son might give you some information as to what passed between them. I cannot.

9865. There was a conversation with your son also?—I think there was. I heard so from my son. I can't say personally from my own knowledge.

9866. The Chief Commissioner.—You have sworn to tell the whole truth and you have acted very properly. Send your son up.

(The witness withdrew.)

Francis Dunleavy.

Francis Dunleavy sworn and examined.

9867. The Chief Commissioner.—You are an elector?—Yes.

9868. How long have you been an elector?—I think about twenty years.

9869. What party do you belong to in Sligo?—The Liberal.

9870. What business have you been in?—Shopkeeper.

9871. You voted for Sergeant Armstrong, I presume?—I did.

9872. Was there any money going after that?—I heard there was. I received a subpœna the other day to be examined after it was stated that I got Sergeant Armstrong's money.

9873. That is the reason why you are examined?—Yes. Well, I solemnly swear that I never got it, nor never thought of it, nor never asked money. I was offered money.

9874. We come to that now, who offered you money?—It is a long time ago—seventeen years ago.

9875. Who offered it to you?—The man is dead that offered it to me.

9876. To vote for whom?—I voted for the person for whom I intended to vote.

9877. According to your principles. How much was offered to you?—I think it was £35.

9878. Was that one of Somers' elections?—It was.

9879. To vote for Somers?—To vote for Sadlier. I will tell you the conversation. Michael Gethin who is dead was a great friend of mine, and said to me one day in the street, "I think you could make some money at this election." "How so?" I said. "I could give you £35," I think that was the sum he mentioned. Said I, "I could not think of taking it." Said he, "Nobody will know it." "But would not you know it," said I—"say no more about it."

9880. You refused it?—I refused it.

9881. And voted according to your conscience?—According to my conscience, and I think I have a person in court that could prove that Gethin told him the same story.

9882. Do you know anything about any money going at the last election?—No, only that I heard there was any amount of money on Knox's side. There was a gentleman in my shop to-day.

9883. What is his name?—His name is Perkins. I am going to state to you a thing that I thought at the time was only a jest, but from what I hear of the fabulous amounts of money paid latterly, I think it must have been in earnest. He told me I could get £50 at this election. Said I to him, "You could get two or three votes for that." "We don't want that," said he, "we want to break in upon a party like you." I regarded it still as a joke, but he came back to me the same evening, and told me he was authorized to say £75.

9884. Who is Mr. Perkins?—A commercial traveller.

9885. Is he for any paper house?—No, he travels for Brown and M'Conkey of Dublin. Up to this day when I heard stories about money I always regarded it as a jest.

9886. Do you know Mr. Perkins' Christian name?—I do not.

9887. Had you known him before?—Oh, for a long time.

9888. Knew him as travelling in the west of Ireland for Browne and M'Conkey?—Yes.

9889. That is the house in Dame-street?—Yes.

9890. Is he still in their employment—I mean has he been travelling for them since the election?—I think so. I am sorry to mention his name, but I am bound to do it.

9891. A great number of names have been mentioned here, and every one engaged in these practices must be detected and exposed?—Would you allow me to refer to evidence that I heard given here last week, and that I think is not correct?

9892. Certainly; anything affecting yourself?—No.

9893. Or affecting the borough?—I heard James Devanny examined. My recollection is that he stated he abstained from voting for no consideration of a pecuniary character. That is not the fact. The current report is, that Major Knox was to get him a situation in Guinness's brewery; and that that is the reason for his declining to support his own party.

9894. When this Mr. Perkins came back, and said he was authorized to give you £75, did he give any hint to you—I don't mean by name—as to who was the party authorizing him to offer you that bribe?—No, not the slightest, because I cut the thing short. I did not want to hear anything more about it, because no money could make me vote against Captain Flanagan.

9895. What did you say to him—did you toss it off as a jest?—As a jest.

9896. Or resent it as an insult?—No; I thought it was a jest at that time.

9897. Do you remember the words he said—"We want to break in upon a party like you"?—Just so.

9898. And I presume you now suppose that to refer to your well-known politics in the town?—Decidedly so; and I must tell you that I could very well afford to allow Hunt's observations in reference to me to pass by, as far as I am concerned, only I know they would be seen in the papers.

9899. You were perfectly right in coming forward when you saw in evidence the observations affecting yourself.

9900. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—You have spoken of fabulous amounts of money going at the last election; are there any facts or rumours warranting you in making that observation?—Nothing more than this—hearing that Pat Gallagher got £50 for voting. I think that's an extraordinary amount of money for a man like that.

9901. Do you know of any other instance of money going?—Only what I have heard here.

9902. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Were you examined before Judge Keogh?—No. Would you allow me to refer to a matter of landlord persecution that occurred since the last election?

9903. The Chief Commissioner.—First of all, was it to an elector?—It was.

9904. Tell it?—Peter Hennessy holds land from Mr. Wynne; and previous to the last election he was sought to vote for Major Knox. The man conscientiously declined to do so. After the election he was dispossessed of the land, and it was given to others in a bona fide way, and he was allowed to go on as a grazing tenant under them, and they are preparing three votes in the three that they have put in his place. That is what I have heard. Another case: there are two men named Sherry and Chrystal who live at a place called Hudson's-bridge. They each had small houses, rated at £4 10*s.* each, and wanted to qualify for the franchise. At the previous revision they came up—they did not at the last—and their case would have been established as voters, but a man named West, a bailiff on the property, came up and produced documents which proved that he had possession of a certain portion of their land during sometime in July last. That was the ruling of the Court here last winter.

(The witness withdrew.)

Mr. William Middleton sworn and examined.

Mr. William Middleton.

9905. The Chief Commissioner.—You do business in Sligo?—Yes; I am in business here.

9906. In reference to what evidence do you wish to make a statement?—The evidence of a person named Dominic Kilcullen, who stated that Thomas Brennan told him he would give an order on me for £75. I wish to state that I never authorized any such orders. I have no funds to pay such orders, nor no directions; nor have I accepted any engagement to be mixed up at all in money matters or any other matters with regard to either the last or the previous election, although I seconded Major Knox at his nomination. That's the only interference I had in it.

9907. You are quite right to come forward?—That's what I think, as my name was mentioned.

9908. You are aware that it is impossible to prevent people on oath from making statements about everyone, from the highest to the lowest?—As I thought I saw my name mentioned, and being so much concerned in the trade of the place, I felt that I should not allow the statement to go to the public without a contradiction, and without saying that there was no foundation, so far as I was concerned, for paying orders, or authorizing orders to be paid. If there be any question you think proper to ask me I shall be very happy to answer it.

9909. I am quite certain of that. Mr. Middleton, did you, until it was disclosed in court to-day, hear anything about Captain Knox having money down here?—No. I have not heard the evidence of to-day.

9910. Well, Mr. Stokes has proved that he got £275 from Captain Knox, and also this: that as fast as he had secured any voters either to go away or to vote, the Conservative party getting about £20 a-piece, and the Liberal party getting about £50 a-piece, he communicated that to Captain Knox, who had a room to himself. I want to know whether you, as his seconder, knew anything of that?—I never heard any particulars such as you mention. In fact, anything that I heard was mere flying reports, without any sum being mentioned, or anything of that kind—mere general rumours; something about money and so on; but I know nothing about Mr. Utred Knox except what I read in the papers.

9911. It is Captain Ethelred Knox that is referred to?—I never attended any meeting of Conservatives with regard to the election, nor made myself busy at all; and I came forward, I should say, rather unwillingly to second Major Knox.

9912. I mean to say had you, as an influential supporter, any idea that Captain Ethelred Knox was a person authorized to employ people like Stokes in reference to these money influences on the electors?—I never heard of it till now, that Utred Knox—except what I read in the papers at Carrick——

9913. It is Captain Ethelred Knox that I mean?—I don't know the gentleman at all.

9914. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—You say you were in no way mixed up with orders?—None whatever.

9915. Did you hear of any orders being given on other persons on Major Knox's side?—I don't remember any such thing; I am not aware of it. There were rumours that certain gentlemen in town, who have given evidence themselves here, were interested about the election in some way; but I have no means of judging, for I had no particular knowledge, nor any direct contact with them; nor did I go to any voters or speak to any voters, or influence them to vote, or mix myself up in any way whatever with the election except, as I have mentioned, by seconding Major Knox. I refused at first, but afterwards was prevailed upon that it was my duty to come forward, which I did.

9916. Did you hear of any tradespeople in town getting orders?—No; I don't remember that I was told anything special of the kind with regard to the last election. They were more general rumours than anything particular that I could fasten on, so as to say that I was told anything special.

9917. Do you remember any of the names that were mixed up in these rumours?—It was mentioned, I think, that Stokes, Cherry, and some other gentlemen were trying to influence voters to vote for Major Knox. That's about the general purport of what I heard. Then, on the other side, I heard that there were several gentlemen, of course, using their influence to get voters for Captain Flanagan.

9918. Do you mean in the way that Stokes said?—Well, I don't know; I have not had particulars of the way. The fact was, just that certain people were busy about the election, and money was talked of generally; but any special instance of it I was not aware of.

9919. But did you hear the names of any person on Captain Flanagan's side who was to distribute money?—Well, there was, I think, a Michael Foley some way mixed up about it; but that is just the same as others—more a general report than otherwise.

9920. Was there a general report about anyone else on Captain Flanagan's side?—There were several.

9921. Would you give us their names?—There were Keighron, Conry, Phillips, and different people,

SEVENTH DAY. October 12.

Mr. William Middleton.

but it is mere rumour that I can't vouch for with accuracy. But these people were talked about as being very active with regard to influencing people to vote for Captain Flanagan. That's all; I can't say anything specially about money at all.

(The witness withdrew.)

Michael O'Beirne.

Michael O'Beirne sworn and examined.

9922. The Chief Commissioner. — Are you an elector?—I am, and have been for fourteen or sixteen years.

9923. To what party do you belong?—The Liberal party.

9924. Were you paid anything after Sergeant Armstrong's election?—I was.

9925. How much?—Ten pounds.

9926. How did it happen that you only got £10?—I never expected money at all, at all the elections that ever I voted at, nor never expected, on my solemn oath, and I was offered it at one time.

9927. Who offered it at one time?—It came through Mr. Lyons.

9928. Which Mr. Lyons?—Mr. Henry Lyons.

9929. What did he offer to you?—He sent word to me by a man named Tom Hennessy that I would get £40 if I would leave town.

9930. At whose election was that?—I think it was Mr. Wynne's. I disclaimed it. I said that no money would induce me.

9931. At Wynne's?—I think so.

9932. Was that the election at which Mr. Wynne was returned?—No, it was a very hardly contested election.

9933. That is, the election at which Mr. Wynne was beaten at first?—I think so.

9934. And afterwards got in on a petition?—I cannot say.

9935. The election at which the "Right Honorable" was beaten at first, and afterwards got in on a petition?—I should say so.

9936. Where were you offered that £40?—Tom Hennessy and I were standing at Madden's house, at the foot of Market-street, when Mr. Lyons was coming down the street; he came back to me and said, "I have a message for you." Hennessy asked him what it was, and then told me that if I would leave town I would get a £40 note. "What did you tell him?" I said to Hennessy. "I told him you would not," said he. "Well, you told him the truth, Tom," said I.

9937. You say you staid for the election and accepted no money?—Not a cent.

9938. Who paid you the other money?—Mr. Phillips. I never knew it till the day he called me in the street. I thought it was about some work, and never knew of, nor expected a penny.

9939. At the last election you voted for Captain Flanagan?—I did, and was canvassed by Major Knox some six months, I think, before Captain Flanagan canvassed me. He himself and Mr. Phibbs came to my house; I met them coming from the house as I was going to dinner at three o'clock. Mr. Phibbs introduced me to Major Knox. "I expect your vote," said he to me, "and your interest." "Well, you will get neither the one nor the other," said I. "Why," said he, "am I not liberal enough for you?" "I never go from my party," said I. "Oh, that's enough" said Mr. Phibbs. I did not see Captain Flanagan till a few days previous to the election. I got unwell, and after I was able to go out he met me in Market-street and said he was happy to see me out. "I am happy," said I, "to be able to vote for you."

9940. Supposing a £10 note was to be offered to you now because you had voted for Captain Flanagan would you take it?—I swear before God I would not.

9941. But you took the £10 when it was offered to you at the former election?—"Well," he said to me, "you may as well take it; other people got money and you may as well take it."

9942. You knew it was for your vote?—I did.

(The witness withdrew.)

Peter Davy

Peter Davy sworn and examined.

9943. The Chief Commissioner. — You are an elector?—Yes.

9944. How long have you been an elector?—Well, I suppose it is thirty years, off and on.

9945. Did you get any money after voting for Sergeant Armstrong?—I did.

9946. How much?—£15.

9947. Who paid you?—Bryan Chrystal.

9948. On whose recommendation did you vote for the Sergeant?—On his own. He met me in the street here and he asked me to vote for him, and I looked at the gentleman, and I said I would, for I thought he had too honest a face to refuse him.

9949. Before that had you been canvassed?—No, I had not.

9950. You knew, of course, that he was on your side in politics?—Certainly, that.

9951. When you voted for him did you expect any money?—No, I did not.

9952. Did you ever get money before at elections?—Never, a single penny from any person.

9953. Did you vote for John Sadleir?—No.

9954. Or Townley?—No; I had not a vote then. I was in a situation, and had not possession of a house.

9955. At the last election I suppose you voted for Captain Flanagan?—I did.

9956. Did any one offer you money on either side at the last election?—Not a single person.

9957. On either side?—On either side.

9958. Mr. Commissioner Byrne. — Who is your landlord?—Myself.

9959. Who gave you the £15?—Bryan Chrystal. Though it was sworn here I told Michael Hunt I got £20 from Conroy, I never spoke a word to Hunt about the election, for he is a man I did not like much.

(The witness withdrew.)

John Hagarty.

John Hagarty sworn and examined.

9960. The Chief Commissioner. — You are an elector?—Yes.

9961. Was your house used at all at the last election?—No.

9962. I had left it a few days before—my time was up. I had a lease for ten years, and on the expiration of the lease I left, having paid Major Knox his rent.

9963. And who then got the empty house?—Major Knox.

9964. Then you were not in it?—Oh no. That is the reason I was very anxious to get up, for my name has been mentioned frequently in connexion with the house, and I have been identified more or less with a party I do not like.

9965. Your house has been mentioned, and up to this moment I did not know the circumstance of your leaving it?—Oh, yes. I left probably a week before the election.

9966. Then the party had it?—Yes. It was Major Knox's house, and it was a tally-room or rendezvous for the other party. My name has been mixed up with it, as it was called Hagarty's house. I laughed at it as a mistake, but it was supposed by persons at a distance that I was identified with the party who had it.

9967. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—You voted for Captain Flanagan?—Oh, yes.

9968. The Chief Commissioner.—You know nothing about what occurred after you left the house?—Nothing in the world.

9969. And you would not let the party into it before?—Not I, they would scarcely ask to come into it. At the same time I should say I was always happy to meet Major Knox as he was a perfect gentleman. He and I parted on the best terms and I would have voted for him but for the Church Bill. I believe him to be a good man, a good landlord, and a gentleman.

9970. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Did you take an active part for Captain Flanagan?—Nothing more than to give my vote.

9971. You had nothing to do with canvassing?—Nothing.

9972. And you knew nothing about the reports that were going about money?—I heard a great many ridiculous reports; but the reports that are going—half of them are just as true as what the man Hunt said when he mentioned my name in connexion with a bribe. They were just canards that were talked of.

9973. The Chief Commissioner.—We had not the information of your having left the house a week before the election and therefore you were summoned?—Just that—from the remarks about the house, and Hunt's remarks—I wished to be examined.

9974. Do you wish to make any other statement now?—Not the least—only that there is not the slightest foundation about these reports. I gave my vote, and I never mixed myself up in the election, of course, I was anxious to see the Liberal party succeed and nothing more.

Mr. Hugh M'Tiernan sworn and examined.

Mr. Hugh M'Tiernan.

9975. The Chief Commissioner.—In reference to the mob of strangers who were in the town it was mentioned in evidence that some of them appeared to know you, as if they came from your property or the adjacent property—do you know anything about them?—On my oath I know nothing about the mob being in Sligo. There were plenty of people in it, but I don't know where they came from. No person came from my property or the neighbourhood, nor do I know of any organization of a mob in Sligo.

9976. At all events you say no person came from your property?—No person came from my property. It lies mostly in the county Leitrim, and a very small portion in this county, most of it being in my own hands, as I am myself the tenant of the lands. No person came from my property, nor I believe ten persons from my neighbourhood to the election.

9977. It has been mentioned here that persons came from Leitrim, and that in connexion with your name?—I swear that not a tenant of mine from the county of Leitrim was at the Borough election, most positively, nor was I aware that there was any organization of mobs coming from the country to the election, nor do I believe there was any organization of mobs. If you would allow me to make a statement.

9978. Certainly if it be in reference to anything given in evidence, or any information you can give us about the election?—It is in reference to a letter I got from the stipendiary magistrate here in town. Major Knox mentioned my name——

We will not go into this.

9979. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Of course when you say no tenants of yours were there, you mean that you did not see any?—No tenants that I saw, nor did I believe, nor did I hear of any.

9980. The Chief Commissioner.—Did you, as far as you could, do your best to keep the peace?—I did all in my power, to the best of my ability, and if you allow me to read this letter——

9981. Oh, no. It is a letter from the resident magistrate stating you did your best to make them keep order?—Of course, being a Roman Catholic and a Liberal, and living all my life in the county, and known by every man, I believe I am rather popular, and when I came out in the street, of course the people cheered me. That was the only connexion I had with the mob. I never lost an opportunity of restraining the mob in every way in my power.

9982. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Did you take an active interest for Captain Flanagan?—I did, a most active interest. He was a neighbour of mine and a great friend.

9983. Were any men paid for mobs at the last election?—None whatever. I had nothing to do with any money.

9984. I am quite sure of that, Mr. M'Tiernan. I merely ask you as to your knowledge?—I believe there was money paid to them.

9985. You believe there was?—But I am not aware of it; that is my belief. I could not tell how or when I arrive at the conclusion.

9986. To Captain Flanagan's mobs?—I speak of mere suspicion on my part.

9987. Are you aware of their getting any refreshment or drink in town on the polling day?—I am not. I know nothing about it.

9988. Did you hear that they got refreshment?—Well, I did not.

9989. The Chief Commissioner.—Through whose hands was it likely the money would be paid from what you know of the men who were managers of the election on Captain Flanagan's side?—I know nothing whatever about any money.

9990. I mean even by suspicion you may give us the names of those whom we may summon, and examine as to whether it be the fact or not, because it is the employment of mobs in this way that leads to outrages and loss of life, and the employment of mobs must be put down?—Well, I suppose by Captain Flanagan's agent. I don't know anything about it.

9991. Give us the names of the gentlemen?—Mr. Molony was an agent of his, Mr. M'Dermott was—I don't know whether Mr. Molony was conducting for him or not, but I know nothing about the payment of money—that is, if money was paid I know nothing about it. I swear most positively that I had nothing to do with mobs; that I knew nothing of any organization for mobs, and that no mob came from my property in the county of Leitrim, nor from near my property.

9992. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Who, do you think, could assist us in giving information as to the giving of money to mobs on Captain Flanagan's side?—I know nothing about money, nor did I see it given.

9993. I am quite aware of that—you misunderstand—but what I ask is, as you are here to give us information, whether you could suggest the names of those persons on Captain Flanagan's side who would give us information in reference to those mobs?—Well, I really could not positively. I suppose his agents could.

9994. Could you mention any particular agent or supporter of his who could throw some light on the mobs at the last election?—Well, unless Mr. Molony or Mr. M'Dermott could these are the only persons I know.

SEVENTH DAY
October 12.
Mr. Hugh M'Tiernan.

9995. Are you aware of Mr. Lenehan having acted for Captain Flanagan?—No.

9996. The Chief Commissioner.—Mr. Lenehan, from Geeva, was mentioned?—No; I don't even know a man named Lenehan. Unless Mr. Molony or Mr. M'Dermott I don't know. I don't know who it was, or whether any men were paid or not.

(The witness withdrew.)

Mr. Utred Augustus Knox.

Mr. Utred Augustus Knox sworn and examined.

9997. The Chief Commissioner.—Are you any relative of Captain Ethelred Knox?—I am. He is my brother.

9998. Where is he now?—I can't possibly tell you, sir.

9999. You cannot possibly tell?—I can't possibly tell you. I have not seen him for more than two months. I have not the least way of knowing where he is.

10000. Where does he reside—what is his residence?—He has been staying at various places during the summer time—part of the time at the Marine Hotel, Kingstown. He generally lives in lodgings during the winter portion of the year, and generally goes to some hotel or watering place for the summer months.

10001. Have you received no letter from him within the last two months?—No. The last letter I had from him was from London, and it's about the time I speak of since I received it.

10002. Have you that last letter he wrote to you?—I have not.

10003. Did he give you an address?—None.

10004. I do not mean the address where he was going to live, but the address where a letter would find him?—None.

10005. Did that letter give you any information as to where he was going?—Not the smallest.

10006. Where was he staying then in London, at what hotel?—I forget this moment the name of the hotel, but it was a hotel. It was addressed from a hotel in London, but I cannot remember or call to mind what hotel it was.

10007. Did you keep that letter?—No.

10008. Did you destroy it?—I did.

10009. Immediately on getting it?—Immediately afterwards.

10010. Immediately after?—Immediately after.

10011. Why did you destroy it?—For no special reason. There was no object in keeping it. It was not a letter on business, or important one way or the other as I considered, and I destroyed it as I do very many letters that I receive of that character.

10012. Had it any reference to the Sligo election?—None.

10013. Then, was it merely a letter such as would pass between two brothers or friends?—Nothing more; entirely of a private character.

10014. Then I do not ask you anything more about it. Have you any reason to suppose your brother will soon return?—I have not.

10015. Has he ever been away this way before?—He has been away on more than one occasion. He was away last year for a time, and, I think, he was away the year before as well as I remember; but I know he was last year. He generally goes from home in the summer and autumn months.

10016. Does he travel on the Continent?—Yes; last year he was off on the Continent.

10017. You were in Sligo at the last election?—I was.

10018. And Captain Ethelred Knox had a room, I forget in whose house?—I know he was staying part of the time with me, while he was in Sligo, in my house, or the house of which I was part owner, at least.

10019. Did you know the room he had in Mr. Leech's house?—No.

10020. Were you ever in it?—I have been in Mr. Leech's house, but I don't think I ever was in the room he had there; certainly not to know it as his.

10021. Did you know Mr. Robert Stokes?—I did.

10022. Did you hear his evidence to-day?—No.

10023. Have you been informed of it?—I was not in court.

10024. Have you been informed about it?—No; I heard something about it.

10025. I am merely going to tell you what it was. He swore that your brother gave him £275, which was to be expended in bribery. Are you aware of what sum of money Captain Ethelred Knox brought to Sligo immediately before the election?—No.

10026. Did you give him any money?—No.

10027. Were you aware during the election—I mean by that, on the polling day—or, if not, before the polling day, that he had money in Sligo?—Except the money that I used to see in his pocket from time to time, when he used to take out his purse, I am not.

10028. Did you yourself bring any money to Sligo?—Did I bring any money to Sligo? I was living in Sligo at the time.

10029. What I mean is, was any money brought by you to Sligo a week before the election?—No.

10030. Had you any sum in your possession then, in Sligo, outside your ordinary affairs?—No.

10031. Had you any sum—I don't refer to your ordinary private affairs, Mr. Knox, at all—but had you any sum in your possession then in Sligo?—No.

10032. Which is your bank in Sligo?—The Provincial.

10033. Had your brother, Captain Ethelred Knox, any account opened for him at any bank?—I know not.

10034. Did you hear he had?—I did not.

10035. Did you transfer, before that time, to him, in any bank, any sum of money?—No.

10036. Or did you hear of any sum having been transferred to him?—No.

10037. What relative are you to Major Knox?—He is my cousin.

10038. First cousin?—No, second cousin.

10039. Did you hear at that time that Stokes was engaged in managing any voters?—No; other than that I heard Stokes, along with other people in Sligo, was one of those interested in the return of Major Knox.

10040. You have since heard in the evidence about the M'Mullens?—As I read it in the papers.

10041. That's what I mean. Stokes swore to-day that he made a bargain with these men to give them £50 a piece if they went away, and that £50 was the price of a Roman Catholic voter who would either go away or vote for Major Knox, and that £20 was the price of a Protestant voter, as far as he was manager. Now, at the time of the election, did you hear anything about that?—Nothing whatever.

10042. From any person?—Not from a soul.

10043. Did you see the M'Mullens at the election?—I would not know them.

10044. Did you see them?—I might have seen them.

10045. I don't mean in the streets. What I mean by seeing a voter just before polling is seeing and knowing him to give a vote at your side?—I would not know the individuals. I think I would know old M'Mullen, having seen him occasionally standing at the door when going home to my house, at the Mall, in Sligo. Beyond that I would not know the man. If I had not cast my eyes on him for a week I would not recognise him in the street. The son I never saw to my knowledge.

10046. Were you ever in Stokes's back parlour or office, or that passage between them, when two voters were there who you understood to be the M'Mullens?—No.

10047. Do you know Mr. Kavanagh?—No.

10048. You do not know him at all?—Don't know him at all. Don't believe he is a Sligo man.

10049. He is not?—Well, I don't know him.

10050. Mr. Kavanagh of Dominick-street?—I don't know him.

10051. Then if you do not know the person at all, of course it could not have been you who gave the slip of paper to the M'Mullens to go to Kavanagh?—Certainly not.

10052. Did you hear the M'Mullens were away?—Not till I saw it in the papers the other day. I heard it at Carrick at the trial of the petition for the first time, and I saw it again in the reports of this Commission in the papers the other day.

10053. Now, as we know from the evidence at Carrick you lent some money to voters?—I did lend money to men who were voters—yes.

10054. Now, first of all as regards Tiernan, did you lend money to him?—I did.

10055. How much?—I think it was about £10.

10056. Was the money lent to him before he was canvassed?—Long before there was any talk of canvassing.

10057. Before Major Knox intended to stand for the borough?—Yes.

10058. I must just ask you did you lend him your own money?—I did.

10059. You never have been repaid that?—I never yet asked for it. I presume it will be when I do.

10060. Samuel Gilmor?—Yes; I think I lent him some also.

10061. How long before the election?—The exact time I cannot say, but I should say it must be pretty nearly a year.

10062. How much did you lend him?—It was a small sum—a few pounds.

10063. Five pounds was what was stated?—It might be about that—in or about that. I know it was a small sum; that was all he asked me for.

10064. Do you know James Doolan?—I do.

10065. You lent him money on two occasions?—I did.

10066. About how much altogether?—The first was a broken sum to meet the amount of a decree, as he explained to me, that was against him, for which his goods were to be sold. As he expressed it to me, he would be left abroad on the street if he did not get the money to pay before sunset. I put my hand in my pocket and lent him this sum, between £5 or £6, or something like that. The second sum I lent him was, as well as I remember, after that. I won't say for certain which of the two sums I lent him first, the larger or the smaller; but the other sum was smaller. It might be about £5. I remember he said it was for a bill that he had in the bank, or something of the kind, I lent it to him. Both of these transactions were long anterior to the period at which Major Knox was seeking for the suffrages of the electors of Sligo; nor had it anything to do with these men in the slightest degree with reference to who might be the candidate, or who might be the member, or how they would vote, or whether they would vote at all or not.

10067. To what other persons whom you ascertained to be electors did you lend money?—I don't know of other parties.

10068. You know of no one else. You said before you lent money to four or five?—Small sums at various times. I know I lent money to a woman in Bridge-street. One time I sent her down a pound note. I don't consider that a loan, for I received no legal security for it. That I regarded as charity. I make a distinction between what I give to a man for his necessities, and that for which he gives me a legal security recoverable at law—the former being what I should give to a person as mere charity. I consider alms-giving totally distinct from charity. I consider anything you do to relieve the distress or necessities of a fellow-creature is charity in the true sense of the word. Anything you may give as alms is quite a different thing.

10069. But did you give much in charity this way to electors?—No; I don't think much beyond what I told you. I never asked whether they were electors or not, as well as I can call to mind. Some of those at the time, to whom I gave money, may not have been electors at all. I doubt very much if Tiernan, from the poor mouth he made to me, could have been in the position to be an elector or to be on the registry, as he disclosed his circumstances to me there must have been abject wretchedness. I saw by passing the man's door that every one was in a very poor way. I had known him to be a hardworking, industrious man, and the late inspector of the gaol, Captain Fawcett, told me that he was a hardworking, industrious man. He told me at that time that his necessities were most pressing; I gave him the money as a loan, and received, as I still believe, good security, and any time I choose to ask for the money it is perfectly recoverable.

10070. You were at the trial at Carrick?—Yes.

10071. Was Captain Knox, your brother, there?—He was.

10072. Was he there to be examined?—I can't say.

10073. Did you know the M'Mullen's were in Clithero?—I did not.

10074. Had you anything to say to the M'Mullens being sent to Clithero?—Not the slightest.

10075. We have it in evidence that the sum of £9 was brought to M'Dowell, the confectioner and lodging-house keeper, in a letter, that he should go to England with these men. Did you ever hear that before?—No.

10076. You know nothing about that £9?—Nothing whatever.

10077. Did you pay any money at all during the election?—No.

10078. I mean for election expenses or anything?—Not a farthing, nor connected myself in any one way with it. From the moment Major Knox became the declared candidate for the borough of Sligo there is not a man in the borough of Sligo can say I said a word to them relative to the election, one way or the other. I never asked an elector of Sligo to vote for him, or in any one single way did I identify myself with the election of Sligo, save that I recorded my vote on the polling day.

10079. Have you any expectation of Captain Knox returning to the country?—That is more than I can say.

10080. At all?—Oh, at all; he might return some day or other.

10081. There is nothing to oblige him to return?—Nothing whatever. He is his own master and may go where he thinks proper.

10082. Do you mean to say there is nothing to oblige him to return to Ireland in the way of business or occupation?—I am not aware that there is.

10083. And he may never return to Ireland?—It might be so.

10084. Have you heard the matter discussed?—Never.

10085. Did you ever speak to Major Knox on the subject?—No.

10086. Nor he to you?—No.

10087. How long is your brother away?—It's very close on two months, if not fully two months, as well as my recollection serves me, since I received the letter he wrote me from London, and I know nothing of his movements from that time forth; nor did I know he was going there or anything about it till I got the letter from him. I knew he intended to make a tour on the Continent, as he did the year before and for the last two years; but when he was to go, or where to, I did not know.

10088. How long did he remain away last year?—I think he remained away a couple of months.

10089. And he came back, I suppose, when the weather broke in autumn?—Yes. It was after autumn when he came back—between autumn and winter.

SEVENTH DAY.

October 12.

Mr. Utred Augustus Knox.

10090. Although you did not canvass the electors for the Major, did you introduce the Major to the electors?—I did, I think, on more than one occasion, but that was before Major Knox commenced his canvass. I never introduced him to an elector after he commenced his canvass as a candidate for the borough.

10091. But you introduced the Major for example to Tiernan?—Yes.

10092. And you introduced him to Doolan?—No.

10093. Or Gillmor?—No.

10094. Can you name any other elector besides these three to whom you lent money?—No.

10095. Did you introduce him to some fifteen or twenty voters?—Never after he commenced his canvass as the declared candidate.

10096. Did you do so before it?—When he first came to Sligo I may have met parties in the street to whom I may have introduced him. I don't now remember it, but it is a likely thing. For example, if I met a party that I knew to be resident in Sligo, I might introduce him to them. It is a likely thing that if he were walking alongside me, and if I met any person—suppose you, if you were in Sligo—I would introduce you.

10097. Now, do you know anything about the previous election?—No, nothing whatever about it.

10098. Can you give us any information?—I was not resident in Sligo at the time.

10099. When did you come to live here?—In '64.

10100. You were here then at the election between Sergeant Armstrong and Mr. Macdonogh—how did you vote then?—I had no vote then.

10101. And you say you did not interfere much then?—Not at all; I had nothing whatever to say to it, either pro or con.

10102. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Did you ever hear the name of Mr. Kavanagh, of Dominick-street, mentioned or referred to before it transpired in this inquiry?—I think not; I can't call to my recollection that I did.

10103. You are not sure?—No; I would almost say I did not; I have no recollection that I did.

10104. Had you any conversation about the time of the election as to any voters being brought away from the town?—No.

10105. Did you hear of Sheil's case, for instance?—Never till I heard it at Carrick.

10106. Nor the M'Mullen's?—The same answer to that. I never heard it spoken of till at Carrick.

10107. Was it the July before the last election that Major Knox formally declared himself a candidate for the borough?—The precise date I can't tell you.

10108. Had he consulted you before he formally declared himself a candidate?—He had.

10109. In reference to his standing for the borough?—He had.

10110. How long ago?—After his first visit here. I think his first visit here was in '67, as well as I can remember. It was immediately after that.

10111. And what advice did you give him?—I told him not on any account to present himself as a candidate for the borough of Sligo.

10112. You interested yourself for him then?—So far as that.

10113. Did you consult, for instance, with Captain Fawcett and some of the other leading Conservatives?—I did not. Captain Fawcett and other gentlemen were part of a body of Conservative electors, as they were called, who wished Major Knox to come and stand for the borough of Sligo; and he asked me, as well as I now remember, shortly after, what my advice would be, and I said not on any account to think of it.

10114. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Why did you give him that advice?—Because, sir, I was under the impression that the borough of Sligo was not in a position, as regards its Conservative tendencies, to return any man as a Conservative member, and besides I believed that Major Knox was very sanguine, and that he would be sadly disappointed.

10115. Was your advice then with reference to his ever presenting himself as a candidate, or that it was too soon?—With reference to his ever presenting himself as a candidate.

10116. Then you disapproved of his presenting himself as a candidate always?—I did, sir, and I remember instancing the fate of his predecessor—not his immediate predecessor—but Mr. Macdonogh, who represented Sligo before; and I told him he would be treated precisely as he was treated.

10117. Did you tell Major Knox it would be necessary to expend large sums of money upon the borough?—Not particularly. I told him that I heard from hearsay that Mr. Macdonogh had expended money, and I thought that it was likely Sligo had not improved in that respect since.

10118. Had you at that time as a matter of fact heard that money had been distributed on Mr. Macdonogh's behalf among voters?—I had.

10119. You mentioned that to Major Knox?—I did.

10120. It was in February '67, I believe—in fact Major Knox told us so—that he first came to the borough?—I should say about that. I know it was the commencement of '67.

10121. And all these sums that we heard of that you lent and got I. O. U.'s for were in '67 and '68?—I think so; as well as I can now remember. I have not got the documents here. I was in Dublin when I heard the summons had been sent to my residence, Mount Falcon, Ballina, and I thought it better to come down here and be examined; but if the Court thinks it desirable I will get the documents here for you. I produced them at Carrick, and I have preserved them carefully.

10122. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Before '67 did you ever lend any sums for which you took I. O. U.'s to electors in Sligo?—I never did. The first money I ever lent as well as I remember was Doolan's. I only came to Sligo in the latter end of '64.

10123. I think you mentioned three applications;—How many were made to you for money as loans with which you complied?—I only complied with the number I have mentioned, as well as I now remember, namely three. I never lent money to any man that I did not get a legal document from him, to enable me to recover it when I thought proper.

10124. But you never did lend money before '67, to any person in Sligo?—No.

10125. Does your brother, Captain Ethelred Knox keep permanent lodgings anywhere?—No.

10126. You have told us he had lodgings in winter?—Yes.

10127. Are these lodgings generally in the same place, in Dublin or London?—They are not all necessarily so, but he has, for the last two years, been lodging in the one place in Pembroke-street, in Dublin.

10128. Give us the number?—No. 6.

10129. I suppose if you wished to write a letter to your brother you would direct it there?—Certainly not. He has not been there for, I think, the last six months, not since last April.

10130. Have you any reason to believe he would not leave his address there?—I know he did not because he cleared everything out of that as he does every season. He changes about as he finds it to suit his conveniences. During the last winter months and before that he lodged there.

10131. Does he belong to any club?—Not that I know of.

10132. And you have no idea, if you wanted to communicate with him, where to write?—No more than the man in the moon.

10133. The Chief Commissioner.—Did you tell Major Knox where you had the conversation with him about the chances of his standing for Sligo and of his success, how much it was understood Mr. Macdonogh spent in bribery?—I did not.

10134. Did you know then how much it was suspected he had spent?—I did not.

10135. Did you hear it was about £1,000?—I did not hear anything at all about it. I only heard the people saying that Macdonogh was deucedly well plucked, and was very badly treated; and I was most anxious that Major Knox, my near relative, should not be similarly treated, and that is what, exactly, I told him.

Mr. Utred Augustus Knox.

10136. You told him that he had been well plucked?—I told him that was the report I had heard.

10137. Did your brother keep an account at any bank?—I don't know, sir.

10138. You never saw a cheque book with him?—Never.

10139. Never; and you can't give the court any information as to what bank he would have drawn cheques on?—I do not know.

10140. I should say that is a thing you might easily remember—its generally well known in a family?—I had no reason for knowing from him. He has been generally living in Dublin for some years past, and I have been living in the country; and I had no direct dealings with him, one way or the other.

10141. Is he a member of any club in Dublin or London?—Not that I know of.

10142. I need scarcely ask you Mr. Knox are you a party to keeping him away from giving evidence here?—Not the smallest.

10143. As far as you are concerned there is no reason you know of why he should not be here on the table to-day?—Not the least.

10144. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—You never had any communication with your brother with regard to any money expended by him at the election?—Never, sir, never.

10145. The Chief Commissioner.—Did you expect him to be examined as a witness at Carrick—I mean did your brother inform you that he had been subpœnaed by the other side?—Upon my word, sir, I can't answer that question at once. I know he was there, but whether he was there expecting to be examined, or merely as an interested spectator I can't tell you.

10146. Do you mean, of course, interested in whatever evidence would be given about the election?—Yes.

10147. You have not, as I understand, been much in Dublin of late?—Occasionally now, and again.

10148. I mean you reside in the country—at your country house?—I do.

10149. Have you any reason to suppose that after the election your brother got any sum of money?—No, sir.

10150. Did you ever hear he got £1,000 to recoup him, or anything of that sort?—I know nothing about it.

10151. Did you hear anything about that?—Not anything of the kind.

10152. Have you any reason to believe or suspect that your brother was paid a sum of money after the election?—I don't believe he was.

10153. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Did you ever hear he spent money during the election?—I did not.

10154. The Chief Commissioner.—Is he a younger brother of yours?—He is a younger brother of mine.

10155. Had he been in the army—he is called Captain?—He is in the Sligo militia.

10156. Now, Mr. Stokes has sworn that he got £275 from him; until your brother is examined we must assume that to be correct. Was that a usual sum for him to have about him, having regard to his income?—Well, sir, I cannot really answer you that. I can't answer you that question. I have no possible way of knowing it.

10157. He swore he got that sum from him in notes, and although he cannot tell the exact amount he got at a time, he says he got this £275 in five different sums, the first of which was a sum of £100. I just ask you now, having regard to what you know of your brother's income, was that a usual sum for him to have, or an unusual one?—I don't think it was by no means an unusual sum.

10158. To have in cash about him?—Not at all. I should say not.

10159. Having regard to his own private means?—Yes.

10160. It is not an unusual sum?—No.

10161. That will do. We will not require those I. O. U.'s which you produced at the Carrick petition trial.

10162. Witness.—Do you require my further attendance?

10163. The Chief Commissioner.—We do not at present, but we will have to inquire about your brother, where he is?—Well, sir, I can't give you the slightest information.

10164. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—I think it is only right to say, Mr. Knox, that the statement made by Mr. Stokes certainly implicates your brother very seriously, and I think his family ought to take every means in their power to inform him of the state of the case, and of the wishes of the Commissioners?—Well, sir, if I knew his address I would write to him and tell him so, but I have not the slightest idea where he is.

10165. I presume that means will be taken by his family to make him aware of it. I don't mean for a moment to say that you know where he is. All I say is that you have a better opportunity, from knowing his associates and something about him, of finding him out than we have.

10166. The Chief Commissioner.—Suppose now he got a legacy of £5,000, do you think you would be able to find him?—Possibly I might, sir.

10167. Well, suppose he did, what steps would you take to find him?—Well, I should make inquiry as to whom he was last with, and where he was last seen, from those who would know more about him than I do.

10168. Do you think you would be able to tell us now the London hotel he wrote his last letter from?—I could not think of it.

10169. What has been the usual hotel he stops in when he goes to London?—The Charing Cross he generally stops at.

10170. Was that the hotel he wrote from?—No.

10171. But he stops there whenever he goes to the Continent?—He might or might not.

10172. Would that be the hotel he would stop at if he were only going through London?—Well, it's difficult to say. There are a great many hotels, and a man might stop at any one he liked.

10173. Have you any means of refreshing your memory as to the address?—I have not, sir. I destroyed the letter five minutes after I read it, because there was nothing important in it. It was a mere private letter from him to me.

10174. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Does he spend much time in London?—No.

10175. The Chief Commissioner.—According to his usual habits of life, will he be back in Dublin in November to spend the winter?—I cannot really say about that.

10176. He was back here last year?—He was, last year. He might be inclined to stay longer, or he might be home before that, for aught I know.

10177. He usually spent the winters in Dublin?—He used.

10178. At No. 6, Pembroke-street?—The last winter he spent there.

10179. And the winter before that?—I think so.

10180. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Is there any friend or relative of his that, in your opinion, would be likely to know where he is?—No, sir.

10181. Do you think he left the country for the purpose of not giving evidence at this inquiry?—I do not.

10182. The Chief Commissioner.—Then, in the ordinary course of things, he will be back in November?—It is very probable he might.

10183. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Where should we address a letter to you in case anything should turn up that would require your attendance?—Mount Falcon, Ballina.

(The witness withdrew.)

SEVENTH DAY

October 12.

John O'Beirne.

John O'Beirne sworn and examined.

10184. The Chief Commissioner.—You are an elector?—Yes.

10185. How long have you been an elector?—I suppose for about eighteen years.

10186. To what party do you belong?—The Liberal party.

10187. Did you vote for Sergeant Armstrong?—I did.

10188. Were you paid any money after the election?—I was.

10189. How much?—Fifteen pounds.

10190. By whom?—By Mr. Poe.

10191. Who had canvassed you to vote for the Sergeant?—He himself.

10192. When you promised to vote for him did you expect to get money?—I did not.

10193. Did you think it a right thing to take money for your vote?—Well, I would not think it a right thing to take it.

10194. If it was going would you take it?—I took it from Mr. Poe when he gave it to me nine months after the election; but I never asked for money.

10195. I ask you now, do you think it a right thing to take money for your vote?—I would not make a bargain about money.

10196. But you would take it after an election?—I took it after that election.

10197. In the same way, I suppose, you voted for Captain Flanagan?—I got no promise of money from Captain Flanagan.

10198. But if anyone offered you £15 now would you take it?—Now, after the election?

10199. After the election?—I would.

10200. And all your neighbours who are voters, I suppose, would do the same thing?—I suppose they would. I don't know what my neighbours would do.

10201. Did you ever get any money before or after an election?—Never.

10202. Was that the first you got?—The first. I never got a glass of beer for any election but that.

10203. Were there any offers made to you on the other side at the last election?—No.

10204. Did anyone tempt you to vote for Major Knox?—No.

10205. You never got money before that?—Never.

10206. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Had Mr. Poe canvassed you for Sergeant Armstrong?—No, he did not.

10207. Had you any chat with him before the election at all?—No, I had not.

10208. Had he any business connexion with you?—He was my agent.

10209. Your agent?—He was the agent of my house.

10210. Who is your landlord?—He is a gentleman named Barrington. He lives in the county Donegal. I never saw him.

10211. And Mr. Poe is his agent?—Mr. Poe received the rent.

10212. Did he canvass you for Captain Flanagan?—No, he did not.

10213. Did he go round with Captain Flanagan when he was canvassing?—I do not know whether he did or not.

10214. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—If you voted for a man and did not get any money, at the next election would you be inclined to vote for him again?—I would.

10215. Just as much as if you got the money?—I would vote for the Sergeant now if he was in the field.

10216. Yes, but you got the money from him?—I did.

10217. Suppose you had not—come, now?—I never was disposed to look for money at elections. I never asked for a shilling in my life at elections.

10218. But you took it, you know?—I did.

10219. What did you take it to be for?—Mr. Poe came to me and handed me £15, and I did not refuse to take it.

10220. And you would not refuse it again if it were offered to you?—I suppose I would not.

10221. If there were two men in the field on the same side, and of the same principles, and you thought you would get £15 for voting for one, and nothing for voting for the other, on which side would you vote?—Well, I suppose I would take the £15.

The witness withdrew, and the Court adjourned till the following morning at nine o'clock.

EIGHTH DAY.

October 13.

EIGHTH DAY.

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 13, 1869.

The Commissioners sat at nine o'clock.

Mr. Robert William Shekleton.

Mr. Robert William Shekleton, sworn and examined.

10222. The Chief Commissioner.—You were here, I believe, at the election between Sergeant Armstrong and Mr. Macdonogh, in '65?—I was. Perhaps you will allow me to state a matter, as I have to go back a little before the year '65, the previous election. I saw a report of the evidence in the papers, and I wish to rectify it. In '60, at the election when Mr. Macdonogh was first returned, I was down here. I was then concerned for the county; and Mr. Macdonogh apprised me that he heard it would be requisite for him to have money, that he had not got money, that he couldn't get it, and couldn't draw on his account. I said, "If you want money, I can manage it for you. I will send up a cheque to a friend in town, and get the money." I did so, and I got £400 down for Mr. Macdonogh in '60. There was no contest at that election, and he didn't take the money. Shortly before the election of '65, he either wrote to or requested me to call on him. I met him in the Library of the Four Courts, and he said to me, "I want to know could you assist me as you did on the former election," that is by getting some money for him. "I should have asked you whether you lost by selling out then. Of course, if you did," said he, "I should make good any loss you have incurred by selling out." It's too late to speak of that now," said I, "the time should be long since. If you recollect, it was when you were in the drawing-room at Leech's that I wrote the cheque, and sent it off to the bank in Dublin. Therefore there was no selling out." "How much could you let me have?" said he. "I dare say you can let me have the same amount as in '60." I said, "I can't tell you without looking at my bank account." I was coming down to Sligo at the time, for I was then concerned for Sir Robert Gore Booth and Colonel Cowper at the election for '65, and I was coming down to attend a meeting of country gentlemen. I said to Mr. Macdonogh, "there's no use in getting money now, for I will be up to Dublin again." Mr. Macdonogh came down to Sligo in the mean time, he said to me, "I find it necessary for me to have the money here at once," and added what a fix he would be in without it. I said, "if you like I will go up to Dublin." "If you do," said he, "any expense you will be at I will pay." Accordingly I came up to Dublin. The nomination was on a Wednesday, I left Sligo on Sunday afternoon, and went up to Dublin. On Monday morning I got £400, I brought it down with me on Tuesday—that was the Tuesday before the election. Mr. Macdonogh positively swore that I brought down the money. I say I did so at his express request, and it was given on the understanding that I was to be repaid the expenses I was at. I went up, and came down here again on Tuesday, when Mr. Macdonogh and I had a conversation about the matter. After the nomination on Wednesday—it was in the interval between the nomination and polling. We were talking on Thursday about what took place. Mr. Sedley had been obliged to go out of town, and there seemed to be great uneasiness amongst Mr Macdonogh's supporters, in consequence of his absence. I think it was Alderman Lyons and Mr. Sedley said that they wouldn't take a single step unless they had a guarantee that they had entered into some arrangement, as I understood, for the hiring of people to cheer Mr. Macdonogh at his previous election, and were to a certain extent let in for it. They so put that case, and said they wouldn't take a single step unless they had a guarantee. I then told them I brought down with me money, and that anything they required should be handed over immediately to them. On Thursday, Mr. Sedley having gone away to Ballysodare, there was a meeting at Mr. Macdonogh's house, and he was very uneasy. Mr. Macdonogh said he really thought he had been sold. The gentlemen who were there left the room. I said to him, "This is a matter you can't possibly interfere in; you will leave the matter in my hands with respect to the money; you had better not bring yourself in connexion with money in any way; I will act for you as I would for myself." He said, "I am not satisfied with that." Mr. Sedley had not returned until late in the afternoon, and Mr. Macdonogh said, "I will spend no money; don't on any account spend money." There was a meeting at his house. Mr. Sedley and Alderman Lyons were there. Mr. Sedley mentioned what brought him away from town at the time. Mr. Macdonogh seemed determined at that time not to spend any money. I was dining in town with a friend. I heard nothing whatever, nor was I at any meeting, nor did I know anything about the parties. A little before ten o'clock at night I was sent for to where I was dining, and was told that I was required at Mr. Macdonogh's. I came to Mr. Macdonogh's, and found in his room Mr. Sedley, Alderman Lyons, and one or two other gentlemen—at all events Mr. Sedley and Alderman Lyons were there, and they said they were determined to go on and fight. Mr. Sedley intimated to me that they were speaking to Mr. Macdonogh before I came in, and that when they mentioned the matter of money he said, "I can't interfere," and that he was leaving the room when Mr. Sedley said to him, "Have you any objection to our seeing Mr. Shekleton?" "As to that," said Mr. Macdonogh, "you may do so, I can't have anything to say to money." Mr. Sedley told me they were determined to go on. I asked "Is there any use in spending money?" They said "they must get it, we can't get on without it." "I have," said I, "£400, and if that isn't enough, I dare say I can get £100 more from a friend," which I did, and that made £500. Mr. Sedley said, "We must have that money." I handed Mr. Sedley £495. I had paid £5 previously for Mr. Macdonogh, and Mr. Sedley went away. I asked Mr. Macdonogh's servant could I see him, and he told me that Mr. Macdonogh had gone to his bedroom, and said that I was the only person he was to be called for. I went to his room and spoke to Mr. Macdonogh about the matter. He said, "I am sorry you did so, I didn't want to spend any money." I said, "If you like, of course, I can go after Mr. Sedley, he probably hasn't left the house yet." "No," said he, "as you paid it, let it be; I am sorry you did it." I didn't go among the electors, nor did I in any way interfere or inquire how the money was spent, nor did I know anything about it, except that a portion of it was for a mob to applaud Mr. Macdonogh.

10223. You knew, I suppose, that portion of it would be used to influence voters?—I understood that a certain portion would be used to pay voters. I had nothing to do with, nor had I any conversation with regard to the disposition of that money with Mr. Sedley nor Mr. Macdonogh, until Saturday morning. On that morning Mr. Macdonogh and I went to Dublin by the six o'clock train; Mr. Sedley came with us as far as Carrick, as he was going on business connected with the Leitrim election. Mr. Macdonogh impressed on me most strenuously that I should tell Mr. Sedley that on no account should he make any payment whatever to Roman Catholic electors. He guarded us all through against that. He mentioned some persons he wished to have paid. I really can't recollect their precise names, but I am positive about the Roman Catholic electors, and impressed that on us every place we went to—in the train to Carrick, again on the platform at the Cavan Junction, and thirdly, at the Broadstone; at each of these places he spoke of it, and asked me to mention it to Mr. Sedley; that was the direction he gave me. I was coming down on Saturday evening—I was concerned, as I told you, for Sir Robert Gore Booth and Colonel Cooper. I was going to Sharkree on Monday. When I came to Sligo I saw Mr. Sedley. He showed me a list of the men among whom he proposed to allocate the money, which amounted to considerably over £495. I said to Mr. Sedley, "I will not advance a single farthing more; I am sorry I had anything to say to the transaction, as I am not satisfied with the way Mr. Macdonogh has acted. I can't give any more money; you are not to expect anything more, nor will I be responsible for it." Mr. Sedley then made some alterations in the list, and he gave it to me. I went up to town on Thursday; as well as I recollect, I saw Mr. Macdonogh on Friday. I showed the list to him, and his sole anxiety was to try and cut down the expenses as much as he possibly could. He said, "It's very hard on me that I should have to give money;" that I acted injudiciously in giving the money, as he was thereby deprived of any ground of petition for the bribery that was alleged to be practised on the other side. Mr. Macdonogh never repudiated his liability to pay the money, he only said he couldn't make any payment on account of it until after twelve months, in order to protect himself from the consequences connected with it. I said he should have borne that in mind before he asked me to place myself in that situation for him. I certainly would never have given a farthing of my money unless I was satisfied that as a gentleman he would have repaid it me on the spot. I had known from friends that all the liabilities of that kind he incurred at Carrickfergus, when he had been a candidate, were paid by him immediately, and I wouldn't bring sixpence down unless I was certain that I would be repaid. I told him that it was money that didn't belong to myself, but that it was rent I got for different persons, among them my father—and that it was a great inconvenience for me to have to replace it. He said he couldn't help it, that he wouldn't pay the money until the twelve months had gone over. Mr. Macdonogh never repudiated the liability, and it's untrue—I say most positively what I saw in the newspapers—that it was at the solicitation of a friend that he had paid it. It was not. The only question was whether he should give any security for its repayment. A friend mentioned by him, whose name he should never have introduced at all events, was the means of getting him to undertake to give some security that he was to repay it to me. Mr. Macdonogh wrote to me and said he would give me promissory notes for the amount. I then went over to his house, and on my way I got two bill stamps. He refused even to take the stamps. He said he shouldn't allow anyone to interfere—that he could recognise no one in the transaction, and that he would fill the stamps himself. He refused afterwards to give the promissory notes, and gave me three I. O. U.'s—one for £95, payable in September, '66, one for £200, payable in October, '66, and a third for £200, payable in November, '66. When I was down here at the election with him, he had asked me to act as his counsel; and when he demurred making any payment on account of £495, I said, "At all events you could have no objection to paying me my statutory fee for acting as your counsel, and let that go against the £495," he took no notice whatever of it. I forwarded my claim to Mr. Davis, his agent for election expenses; and Mr. Davis refused point blank to pay it. I never have been paid it, nor did Mr. Macdonogh ever pay me one farthing of my expenses for going up to Dublin to get the money down. In August, '66, I was going to Harrogate, and shortly before I wrote to him. The I. O. U. for £95 was dated not payable the 2nd September, '66, the second for £200 was dated the 2nd October, '66, and the third for £200 was dated the 2nd November, '66. I wrote to him, asking him to let me have the amount of the first I. O. U. as I was going to Harrogate. He gave it to me some days before the time it fell due, I passing my receipt for it. About November 1 asked him about the second I. O. U., he said he couldn't possibly pay it, as he hadn't money at the time—that the rents of the property his wife had settled on him at his second marriage hadn't been paid; that there were very large arrears, and when he would get them he would pay me. He asked me to look after the payment of them. He paid me the amount of that I. O. U. in January, '67, and the third I. O. U. he paid some time afterwards—I can't tell you the date, I could tell you if I knew I was coming down here, for I kept a little diary in which I kept these things, but it is unfortunately at Bray where I am staying at present. I could tell you at once the precise dates on which he paid me this money.

10224. At the first election of 1860, you say you came down with £400?—Yes.

10225. Had you actually got that sum?—I had. I got it from Dublin. I wrote to a friend in Dublin asking him to send it to me, sending my cheque on the Bank of Ireland where I had them banked, and I asked him to send down the money without apprising him of why I got it. I got down the money.

10226. How long was that money in Sligo?—I got it down on a Tuesday morning. I forget when the election was at that time. I brought down the money. Mr. Macdonogh refused to take it from me, and I brought it back to Dublin.

10227. Did Mr. Macdonogh know that the £400 was to be brought down for the purposes of bribery?—Perfectly, for he stated to me he heard there was no chance of carrying the first election without paying money.

10228. To voters?—To voters.

10229. For their votes?—Unquestionably. He said he couldn't draw on his own account; if he did, it would be discovered. Then he asked me if I could possibly manage it. I said if he was in great want of money I had money lying by and I would give it to him, I said; but I then said I couldn't tell how much until I looked over my bank-book. I went over to the hotel. I got my cheque-book, and saw on the reverse of the last block the amount to my credit.

10230. On that occasion were you informed by Mr. Lyons, or anyone else, of the £850 arrangement that is now disclosed?—I had no communication with Mr. Lyons or anyone else on that occasion. I was merely down as a friend, as auditor, as an assessor for the county on that occasion.

10232. We had it here stated that the whole of the £850 was raised before the election, and we have it that was raised by a £500 bill between Mr. Lyons and a man named Monds, and for the other £300, Mr. Lyons overdrew his account; and that sum of £850 was given to persons who held it as trustees for the electors, and was paid to them after the election of 1860?—I know nothing whatever of the election of 1860.

10234. How long before the election of 1865 was it that you had any conversation with Mr. Macdonogh about the bringing down of the money for that election?—I can't exactly fix the date. I should say three weeks or a month; it wasn't so long as that, it must be a very short time. The election was in the early part of July, just as term was over, and the circuits were beginning to go out.

10235. Did Mr. Macdonogh inform you that he was in communication with parties in Sligo who told how much would be necessary for bribery?—No.

10236. I don't mean of course, in these words?—He never mentioned it; but simply asked me could I assist him in the same way as in 1860. I said, of course, if he wanted it; but I couldn't decidedly tell what amount I could give him until I looked over my bank accounts to see how I stood. Mr. Macdonogh was always aware that I had a large amount of money passing through my hands.

10237. How often did Mr. Macdonogh speak to you on the subject before you went down to the election?—As well as I recollect, that was the only occasion he spoke to me about getting the money; it must be closer than I said to the election, as I told Mr. Macdonogh I was going to a preliminary meeting of county gentlemen, which was in connexion with the county election, and it would be too soon to bring it down then, so that it must be a short time before the election.

10238. Was it perfectly understood between you and Mr. Macdonogh before the election of 1865 that that £500, or whatever it was, was to be applied for bribery?—There was no understanding whatever in any way. Mr. Macdonogh only asked me would I oblige him in the same way as in 1860—that is, give him money. I believed there wasn't the slightest intention of doing anything of the kind, but it having been mentioned, I gave it to him. I didn't inquire what it was allocated or employed for—whether it was for the purposes of bribery, or whether for anything of that kind, I don't know.

10239. You have stated "in the same way as in 1860;" did you understand by that that the money was for bribery?—There was no understanding on the subject; there was nothing said as to what he wanted it for. Mr. Macdonogh told me he wanted the money; he didn't use the words "for bribery."

10240. That is never said, you know—that word is never used?—Nothing was said but that he wanted the money; he didn't say what he wanted it for, but of course I suspected that he wanted it for bribery, if bribery were necessary.

10241. Mr. Macdonogh appears to have forgotten all about these preliminary conversations before the election. He said the £500 came on him by surprise. That is the result of his evidence?—So I saw by the papers.

10242. Do you say that at that interview, when Mr. Sedley and Mr. Lyons were present, you brought the £500 with you?—I had the £500 in the hotel. I went to the hotel, got the money, and brought it back to them.

10243. In what notes had you it?—In five and ten pound notes; there was some gold also.

10244. Was there any list of names produced in your presence that evening?—No list whatever—in fact it was utterly impossible.

10245. Mr. Sedley said he couldn't recollect, that it was not clear whether you were present or not, but he was distinct about the list he produced, and which is here?—There couldn't be any list; it was the month of July, and there was no light in the room. That is the reason why I couldn't be positive as to whom I saw in the room precisely besides Alderman Lyons and Mr. Sedley. I was in front. The gas had not been lighted. The gas was lighted in Mr. Macdonogh's large room, but it wasn't in the small room.

10246. At what hour did you go into Mr. Macdonogh's bed-room?—It was a little after ten.

10247. Of course there would not be the slightest difficulty in getting the money back from Mr. Sedley?—Not the slightest. Mr. Sedley couldn't have been more than a hundred yards from the house when I told Mr. Macdonogh of what I did.

10248. And the money was not to be given until after the polling—that we all know. It was only to be given to parties as trustees, who would give it then?—Precisely, and I knew from Alderman Lyons that he wouldn't take a single step or make an engagement unless the money was in his hands.

10249. When you say "engagement," you mean with voters about their votes?—Yes.

10250. And hiring mobs?—I understood that they had hired a number of men to applaud Mr. Macdonogh when he was speaking in the court-house on the day of nomination, and that this money was to be applied to pay these men a certain sum, and that they wouldn't take a single step unless they were indemnified.

10251. Mr. Sedley said he expected a small sum—£20; I presume that money went that way?—I cannot tell. I know Mr. Sedley showed me that list.

10252. When you went to Mr. Macdonogh and told him you had given the money did you distinctly apprise him that you could get it back from Mr. Sedley at the moment?—I told him that distinctly. I said, "If that be the case I will go after Mr. Sedley and get it back. I doubt if he has left the house yet. I can go after it and get it back." He said, "It is no use; as you have given it let it be."

10253. Mr. Sedley in his evidence stated that he distinctly understood from Mr. Macdonogh's manner that, though he verbally forbade, he really sanctioned, the money being spent in bribery?—I can't tell you what took place at that interview, for, as I told you, I was dining out and I couldn't say what took place. Mr. Sedley mentioned to me what I told you—that they were talking about Mr. Macdonogh's not wishing money to be spent, and his saying, "Act as you think fit, I can't interfere in money matters," that was really on the assumption that Mr. Macdonogh, to a certain extent, had thereby revoked the former direction he gave to me, that I would give the money, and also acting on the authority, in the first instance, to act for him as for myself.

10254. When you gave the money to Mr. Sedley and authorized him to spend it in that way, did you believe you had Mr. Macdonogh's full sanction?—I did, his perfect sanction to it, and what struck me as rather strange was, that Rooney, Mr. Macdonogh's servant, when I asked could I see Mr. Macdonogh, said, "Yes, you can. I was told not to allow anyone up to him but you." It wasn't very likely that Mr. Macdonogh, with whom I generally dined every day, and who must have known I was dining out that night, would expect that I would call to his house at the late hour when I'd be leaving my friends.

10255. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Was there a list given to you by Mr. Sedley?—There was.

10256. The Chief Commissioner.—Why were the Roman Catholic electors not to be paid?—I don't know. Mr. Macdonogh did not mention why they weren't to be paid; but simply that was the direction he gave me—that they weren't to be paid at all. That was a matter he was impressing on me the entire time going up—at Carrick, Cavan Junction, and in Dublin.

10257. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Was there a list given to you by Mr. Sedley?—Yes, on Monday.

10258. Does that list remain with you?—It does. I have it in my possession this moment. It happened to be in Dublin, and I brought it down with me.

The list was as follows:—

20	20	James Hall.
20	20	James M'Kerin.
20	15	Thomas M'Kerin.
20	20	Robert Lindsay.
20	20	James Burns.
20	20	Samuel Gilmour.
30	30	——— Buchanan.
25	25	John Ryan.
20	15	——— Phair.
15	10	Richard Pallen.
20	15	——— Crozier.
30	10	Pat Devaney.
Mallen,	10	John Lynch.
20	20	James Everatt.
20	20	R. Henderson.
5	5	Pat Jinkens.
—	5	John Henderson.
20	20	James Cummagh.
25	20	Samuel Williams.
20	30	James Wallace.
20	10	Thomas Graham.
20	15	John Burns.
20	15	Mr. Smith.
20	15	James Crompton.
20	20	Robert Macredy.
—	20	John Burns.
—	10	G. Wilson.
—	20	Thomas.
—	20	Gunning.
—	20	Mallum.

10259. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Is this a copy of another list?—It is not?—It is the list that Mr. Sedley handed to me on Monday.

10260. Mr Commissioner Byrne.—Does it represent here the figures 20 and 15?—You will see two sets of figures. The first was what were put in when Mr. Sedley gave it to me—showed it to me in the first instance. Then the other figures were added when I was talking with him. Just let me look at the list for a moment. (Witness looks at the list.) I think that some of these figures are in my handwriting. This inside row is in my handwriting, the outside ones are his. The inside ones are those he mentioned he would give afterwards. I wanted it then for the purpose of showing it to Mr. Macdonogh, and I got it for that purpose.

10261. But Mr. Sedley said he paid these sums that are marked on the inside?—No, not paid; he was to pay them. These were the sums that were promised, as well as I understood him.

10262. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Did I understand you to say that these were sums actually promised?—They were not promised, but it was the understanding that these were the amounts they were to get.

10263. I see a mark here, does it recall anything to your mind?—It doesn't.

10264. As a matter of fact, it is in evidence that these two sums were actually paid by Mr. Sedley through separate persons to hold as trustees for these people?—It may be so—I can't tell you—they were bracketted together.

10265. It is very likely that he put the mark here to tell you what he had paid?—No. I don't think he paid a farthing.

10266. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Did you show that list to Mr. Macdonogh?—I did.

10267. When did you show it to him?—It was either on the Thursday or the Friday after the election—I am not sure which.

10268. But it was after the election?—After the election. I went to town, the next day I went to Mr. Macdonogh's house at Rutland-square. I hadn't the list until the Monday after the election, so that I could not have shown it to Mr. Macdonogh until after that.

10269. Do you remember what observation Mr. Macdonogh made when you showed the list to him?—He objected very strongly to some of the payments, and said they were a great deal too large—in fact, he almost in plain terms, imputed to these gentlemen, Mr. Sedley and Alderman Lyons, that they were arranging among themselves to keep portions of the money for themselves—that he didn't believe, he said, that these sums had been promised or would be paid, and in fact, that these gentlemen were keeping a portion of the money for themselves.

10270. Then his objection was only to the sums—as to the amounts, Burke said he was sorry that any money whatever was given?—Unquestionably, as it deprived him of his chance of succeeding by petition.

10271. Was that list ever after the subject of conversation between you and Mr. Macdonogh?—Never. When I found the way he was inclined to act, as I told you, I rather avoided Mr. Macdonogh's society for the future. Though I had been on very intimate terms with him, I never was inside of his door except professionally since, for I thought he acted very badly by me—he kept me out of my money for nearly two years; he never paid my expenses to Dublin when I went for the money; he never paid my fee as his counsel, nor sixpence for interest.

10272. The Chief Commissioner.—Before this you were personal friends?—Yes. I knew him from my childhood. There never was a man under deeper obligations, not only to myself but to every member of my family.

10273. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Did I understand you to say that, when you gave the sum of £495 to Mr. Sedley, you didn't know for what purpose it was except that it was generally for the election?—It was generally for the election, of course; but I had a shrewd idea that a portion of it was to be spent in buying electors, but there never was a word to that effect, for, as I said before, I carefully kept myself away from that. I didn't interfere in it, for, as I tell you, I was concerned for the county members, and I didn't wish to mix myself up in the borough.

10274. The Chief Commissioner.—In reference to the evidence you read in the papers, I presume you read fully Mr. Macdonogh's evidence there?—I read it in a hurry on Monday morning. I have been very busy professionally for the last few days, and I read it very hurriedly.

10275. Do you wish to say anything now in respect to any statement that appeared in that evidence, or can you give us any further information?—I couldn't tell you. I read it very hurriedly on Monday morning. That was the first intimation I got that he mentioned my name at all.

10276. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Are you quite positive that no list could be made up by Mr. Lyons or Mr. Sedley before they left Mr. Macdonogh's that night, assuming that it was not made before you came there?—Oh, there was no list made out or produced in my presence, only the list before you that I handed up, and which I didn't get until Monday. I never saw any list except that.

10277. Was the room you were in not lighted?—It was not lighted—it was the small room. They were standing out in the hall between the two rooms, in the passage, when I went up to Mr. Macdonogh.

10278. Mr. Sedley stated that a list, which I fancy was a duplicate of the one you had, was made up that night?—I can't tell you. I know nothing whatever about it; but it was utterly impossible to do so when I was there, as there was no light in the room they were in.

10279. Had they any opportunity of going into a lighted room and making up a list before they left Mr. Macdonogh's, and after you had gone up stairs; was the passage you speak of used as a passage? If it was I suppose it was lighted in some way?—I could not tell you what occurred after I went upstairs to Mr. Macdonogh.

10280. Were you given to understand by Mr. Sedley when he met you in that way that the list had been made up previously to the election?—No. Mr. Sedley told me that he and Alderman Lyons had gone over it, and that they had some dispute with regard to the amount to be paid to one particular man; there was a large sum put down to some one man, and they had some objection or dispute with respect to it.

10281. That was probably the man who was to get £40?—I think so.

10282. Mr. Lyons told us about that; he said he paid £40, and only got £30 for it?—It may be this man James Wallace. I think there is £30 down to him.

10283. The Chief Commissioner.—Mr. Lyons said he paid him £40?—I recollect Mr. Sedley mentioned that there was some dispute between him and Alderman Lyons with respect to the sum to be paid to some one man.

10284. Mr. Lyons is still out of that £10?—I know nothing of that. I see that Mr. Sedley stated, with respect to asking an account of the money, that I avoided him. I did not avoid him; I considered that the money was paid to Mr. Macdonogh, and that Mr. Sedley should account, not to me, but to him. I never looked on it, after I gave it, as my own money—it was Mr. Macdonogh's money. I treated it as payment to Mr. Macdonogh, and I looked on it as a debt of honour due by Mr. Macdonogh to me, and that I had no right to ask Mr. Sedley for an account, and I never did.

10285. In order to have it clear on the notes, you stated that you had only £400 when you came down from Dublin, and that you said you could get an additional £100 from a friend?—Yes.

10286. You said you got £495?—Yes; I got an additional £100 from a friend here. I only brought down £400 on Tuesday morning, and I got another £100 here from a friend, and then I paid a £5 note out of that, I forget now to whom it was; and I paid another £5 also. I gave £505 altogether, and Mr. Macdonogh gave me £10 back.

10287. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—You had better read over the whole of Mr. Macdonogh's evidence, and see whether there is anything you wish to make any explanation to the Court about?—I will; if there is anything in it requiring explanation I will give it, and attend here at any inconvenience. I have told you everything connected with the transaction; of course I could by looking at my books, give the precise dates of the payments. That's the only further thing I could add to the evidence which I have given, for my memory—I have a very accurate memory, and I am perfectly distinct about everything that occurred.

10288. The Chief Commissioner.—I am afraid Mr. Macdonogh will be examined again?—I can produce the cheques.

10289. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—I only make the observation for your own sake—if you didn't do so you may regret it afterwards?—Unfortunately I am staying at Bray at present, and all my books and papers are there; but I purpose moving from Bray, on Tuesday next.

10290. The witness withdrew, but at a later period of the day returned into court, and said, there is one matter that occurred to me since I was here. When I told Mr. Macdonogh the amount I gave Mr. Sedley, when I was speaking to him about it; I can't tell whether it was in his own room that night, or in his own house in Dublin. He said, "I thought you had only £400, I understood that that was all you had." I said, "Yes, that's all I brought down from Dublin, but I got £100 from a friend in Sligo; so that he then specified the sum I told him I would bring down."

James Leonard sworn and examined. James Leonard.

10290. The Chief Commissioner.—Are you an elector?—I am.

10291. Whom did you vote for at the last election?—For Captain Flanagan.

10292. Whom did you vote for at the previous election?—For Sergeant Armstrong.

10293. Did you get any money after Sergeant Armstrong's election?—I did.

10294. How much?—Fifteen Pounds.

10295. From whom did you get the £15?—From Martin Phillips.

10296. Did you ever get any money at any previous election?—No; that was the first time I voted.

10297. Was there any offer of money made to you at that election by anyone on the other side?—No; I was always a Liberal; I wouldn't vote at the other side.

10298. Did anyone offer you money at the last election?—No, not a shilling.

10299. On whose recommendation did you vote for Sergeant Armstrong?—He canvassed me, he was a Liberal, and we thought to put him in on that account.

10300. Were you offered or promised any money to vote for the Sergeant?—Never. I voted freely for him. I didn't ask a shilling.

10301. Who gave you the hard word about the money you got?—Kearns and Barry told me of it. Kearns and I went up together. Mr. Phillips had three £10 notes. He handed one £10 note to Kearns, and another to me; he then gave me a second one, and said he had no change—"Change it and give £5 to Kearns."

10302. When you voted at the last election did you expect to be paid as you were after Sergeant Armstrong's election?—I did not. I didn't expect a shilling.

10303. Did Mr. Phillips canvass you?—He didn't, but I met Captain Flanagan in the street—Father Quinn was with him at the time—he asked me would I vote for him, and I said I would.

10304. What trade or business are you?—I am a farmer.

10305. Do you know anything of the mobs that were going about at the last election?—Not a ha'porth.

10306. Did you get any treat or refreshment in a public-house on the day of polling?—I didn't get a single glass of whiskey. I kept in the tally-room the whole day after I voted.

10307. What were you doing there?—I was erasing the names.

10308. According as each man voted?—Yes.

10309. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Did you get anything for erasing the names in the tally-room?—Not a penny. I asked Mr. Molony was I to get anything, and he said there was no money going.

10310. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—What made you think there was no money going on Captain Flanagan's side at the last election?—They never mentioned that Captain Flanagan was giving money.

10311. They thought he was poor, was that it?—Yes.

10312. Why did you vote for him?—Because we knew he was a good member, and that he would vote for good measures—for tenant-right and the like.

10313. Was it understood that he had no money to give?—It was, and even if he had itself, we wouldn't ask it from him.

John Burke sworn and examined. John Burke.

10314. The Chief Commissioner.—Are you an elector?—I am.

10315. And you have been an elector for some time, I suppose?—Forty years, I suppose.

10316. Did you ever get money to distribute at any election?—I did.

10317. At whose election did you first get money for distribution?—At Mr. Macdonogh's.

10318. At his first election in 1860, was it?—At his first election.

10319. Who gave you the money on that occasion?—As Mr. Sedley stated here,—I was sent for to my own house to go to Mr. Sedley's office, that there was a message for me. When I went to the office there was a parcel delivered to me by the hand of a strange man who told me to take it home. James Sedley said "Them are old musty documents, consult them." I did take it home, and found that instead of being old documents they were parcels of money with slips of paper having the names of certain voters in Sligo on them.

10320. How much money was there in the parcel?—Three hundred pounds. Mr. Sedley said it was £200, but it was £300.

10321. To whom did you give it?—Will I tell the names?

10322. Yes, tell all out?—I certainly will; I will answer. There was Samuel Williamson.

10323. How much did he get?—Twenty-five pounds; Richard Robb, £35; Robert Shaw—am I to continue the names?

10324. Yes, certainly—how much did Robert Shaw get?—Thirty-five pounds; James Grevett, £25. I should remark that he didn't get the whole amount of £25; there was an account due by him to a draper in town, for which I was responsible; the amount of the debt was deducted, and I gave him the balance.

10325. Who was the draper?—His name was Davidson.

10326. What is his Christian name?—William. Their accounts will show that the debt was paid.

10327. What was the amount of the stock supplied?—I think it was £13. The balance was handed over to Grevett.

10328. Who were the others to whom you gave money?—Robert Henderson, £30; but in that case I should state that I was responsible for a sum of money to a man named Collins, who keeps a loan office, for £5. I stopped that sum, and paid Collins out of the £30.

10329. Who else was paid money by you?—George Williamson, £30. Did I say William Smith?

10330. No?—William Smith, £20; and my own name was down for a similar sum.

10331. Twenty pounds?—No; £30. I wish to remark that I suffered a severe and permanent loss by that election. I was the tenant to Colonel Tennison, who was the opposite man to Mr. Macdonogh; and I was deriving a benefit, a profit, out of the holding I had from him—the entire earnings of my life were expended on it. I thought that Mr. Macdonogh would give me some guarantee in case Mr. Tennison would take steps to dispossess me as tenant-at-will. Mr. Macdonogh evaded it, but pledged himself that Mr. Tennison was too good a gentleman to do anything of the kind to me if I voted for him. Under the pressure of his solicitation, and of other friends, I consented and gave Mr. Macdonogh my vote, and a dear vote it was to me; for I was put out of the place—it was the place of my birth, and was in my family's possession for more than a hundred years. That's what I gained by my vote at that election.

10332. In what year were you evicted?—The year after '61. I made every effort, I offered double rent for it. I wanted Mr. Tennison to give me some compensation for the loss I sustained as the property was greatly enhanced and greatly improved by my outlay on the ground. I had planted a beautiful orchard and built four or five nice little houses. I hoped at the close of my life to finish my career.

10333. Go on with the list of those who were bribed?—How many have I given you?

10334. Nine?—That's all; that's the number.

10335. Were not there more than nine on the list?—I don't believe there was.

10336. In whose handwriting was the list, do you know?—I don't know.

10337. Previous to Mr. Macdonogh's time had you voted for the Liberal party?—No, I voted for Mr. Wynne on the two occasions he stood for the borough.

10338. Before that had you voted for Sadlier?—No. I refused a large offer made to me on that occasion. I sympathized with Mr. Somers, for he was borne down, and I gave him my vote.

10339. How much were you offered for your vote for Mr. Sadlier?—There was a man named Hanly with Mr. Sadlier and wanted me to propose or second Hanly. I refused to do both.

10340. As a candidate?—Yes. This person came in late one evening into my shop, laid down a slip of paper with £150 marked on it, and said I would get that sum if I did propose or second his nomination. I refused to do so.

10341. What was Hanly's Christian name?—John Hanly.

10342. Was he Sadlier's managing man?—He was Sadlier's particular friend.

10343. Was it supposed that he had put down money for Sadlier?—No, it is unlikely that they would trust him with money.

10344. Had he put down the £150 on the slip of paper?—No, he didn't.

10345. Do you know who did?—I don't. I was afterwards sent for by Mr. Allen. He asked me did I turn madman to refuse such a sum.

10346. At Townley's election for whom did you vote?—For Mr. Townley.

10347. Was any promise of money made for your vote on that occasion?—No, but there was for my active services during the election. For a fortnight I assisted in having Mr. Townley returned, and I got £20 after the election.

10348. Who paid you that £20?—I am not sure whether it was Mr. Stoner, the relative or friend of Mr. Townley in this town at the time.

10349. Do you remember Mr. Stoner's Christian name?—I don't.

10350. Did you know him previous to that time?—He was here twice. He was here at Sadlier's election.

10351. Do you know his Christian name?—I don't.

10352. Since that election of Mr. Macdonogh's in 1860, did you vote at Mr. Macdonogh's second election?—I did.

10353. For whom did you vote?—For Mr. Macdonogh.

10354. On that occasion did you get any money?—I did. You have a docket there, and Mr. Sedley stated that he went round, and gave certain men certain sums of money. I was among that number.

10355. How much did you get?—I got £20.

10356. I suppose you remember that election very well?—I do.

10357. Do you know Mr. Lyons?—Is it Mr. Henry Lyons?

10358. Yes?—I do.

10359. Do you know Mr. Sedley?—I do.

10360. Do you remember the night before the poll anyone coming to you and telling you that Mr. Sedley had money?—I had a message from Mr. Williams of High-street, for me to call at Mr. Sedley's office—that there was a message for me.

10361. Was that the night before the poll?—I think it was. I am not quite sure.

10362. Was it before you voted?—It was.

10363. That is enough—what was the message?—For me to go to Mr. Sedley's office.

10364. Did you go?—I did.

10365. What occurred when you went there?—At one of the entrances to the office—I believe there is but one entrance to the office, off the hall—I met a man there——

10366. Was he a voter?—I never saw him before or since—he was a stranger to me. He was dressed in the garb of a porter.

10367. Was he a Sligo man, do you think?—I couldn't tell whether he was or not. From his attire I considered that he belonged to a low class. When he presented me with a parcel, Mr. James Sedley said, "them are old documents, when you go home peruse them."

10368. That is the same thing that you stated already?—I was but one time at it. I am only repeating what I have stated already.

10369. What I want to refer you to is—the election at which you distributed the £300 was when Colonel Tennison was a candidate against Mr. Macdonogh?—Yes, that was the only one at which I distributed money.

10370. That is the election you are referring to about the old documents?—Yes.

10371. I want to bring your mind to the election between Mr. Macdonogh and Sergeant Armstrong when you got £20 yourself—did you hear of any persons getting any money, or getting a tip about it, until after you voted?—Not a word—were it not for straitened circumstances I wouldn't take it from him.

10372. Did you know of any other men that were to get money?—No.

10373. At this last election between Major Knox and Captain Flanagan, for whom did you vote?—I voted for Major Knox.

10374. Was anything said about money at the last election?—Not to me.

10375. Was anything said about it to any member of your family?—No.

10376. Did you promise Major Knox when he canvassed you?—I did.

10377. Did you expect any money for your vote at your last election?—No, indeed.

10378. Did you intimate to anyone that you might wish for some money?—I haven't the slightest recollection that I did, so as to derive anything from the election.

10379. Did you get any money at the revision?—No.

10380. You were not engaged at the revision?—No.

10381. Do you know Captain Ethelred Knox?—I do.

10382. Did you know the room he had when he was at the election?—Is it at the Mall, where he lived?

10383. No, but Mr. Leech's house, where Captain Knox had rooms?—Do you mean the Clerk of the Peace?

10384. No; I mean Captain Knox?—I don't know him at all; I never saw him.

10385. Do you know Mr. Hignell?—For the first time I saw him yesterday.

10386. Did you know of the existence of any committee-rooms at the time of Major Knox's election?—I once asked if they had a committee or committee-rooms, and they said they hadn't.

10387. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Who canvassed you at the last election?—Major Knox did, and Mr. Phibbs, Mr. Pollock, and some other gentlemen that were with him.

10388. Did Mr. Stokes speak to you about your vote at the last election?—Never.

10389. Did you see any of the mobs that were in town on the polling day?—I did.

10390. Did you see any of them get any refreshments in the streets on that day?—I didn't. I was very little in the streets that day. I voted early in the morning. I went home, and after Captain King was shot I didn't wish to be out in the streets much.

10391. Had you yourself any difficulty in getting from your own house to the court-house to vote on that day?—I hadn't. I went to the court-house very early, as I knew that was the best time to go.

10392. On your way to the court-house did you meet with any obstruction?—There wasn't a word said to me from the moment I left my house until I returned. I saw mobs of people at a distance, but their attention was turned in another direction, and I got up clear.

10393. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—You told us you got £300 for distribution at the election when Mr. Macdonogh and Mr. Tennison were candidates?—Yes.

10394. What did you do with the balance of that sum, because the sums you say you distributed only amount to £230?—There should be more.

10395. As far as I see, after adding them up, that is all?—The names I gave are the only names I recollect. I am sure there is a balance in my hands since.

10396. You say there is a balance lying by?—There must be. I know there were some trifling things laid out by me. I gave a trifle sometimes to silence an angry man in a mob, and to keep him a little quiet.

10397. Did you keep any account of the expenses?—Not of the small sums I expended.

10398. Did you of the large sums—did you get receipts for these sums?—I didn't. The list of names I got in the parcel didn't instruct me to get receipts.

10399. Have you that list of names still?—I haven't. After the election I called on Mr. Charles Sedley to look at the names and the sums distributed. He asked me if they were all paid. I said, and I referred him to the parties themselves, that I may stand clear.

10400. At the time that you were evicted, was it said that it was on account of your having voted for Mr. Macdonogh that you were evicted?—It was.

10401. By whom was that stated?—By Mr. Robert Poe, the under agent.

10402. Did Mr. Poe say you must leave the farm because you voted for Mr. Macdonogh?—He did, and Coloned Tennison told me so also.

10403. Where did Colonel Tennison tell you so?—He was stopping at the hotel. I waited on him there. I told him the circumstances, and begged of him to allow me to remain on the farm, if not, to give me some compensation for the loss I sustained. He said if threepence were to enrich you I wouldn't give it to you. He very courteously opened the door and let me out.

10404. You told us of a message brought by Thomas Williams for you to go to Mr. Sedley's office—was that at the 1860 election?—It was.

10405. Had you received a similar or any message on the second election?—I had not.

10406. On the election between Sergeant Armstrong and Mr. Macdonogh, did you hear any talk of money being wanted by Mr. Macdonogh's friends?—When you say "friends," do you mean voters?

10407. I mean voters?—I heard nothing particular about it.

10408. Did not you know there were some voters hanging back on that occasion?—That is generally the case, and I suppose that election was not an exception.

10409. Was there any talk about money going at the last election for men who voted for Major Knox?—There was plenty of talk, if it was of any use.

10410. Among the voters?—Yes.

10411. Did you hear many complain that they expected money, but did not get it?—I heard a good many complain that they expected something, and that they didn't get it.

10412. Was that after the last election?—I can't say that. I don't wish to commit myself to anything I am not positive of.

10413. Do you recollect anyone who complained of not having received money?—I don't remember the names of any. I was so engaged with another person in business, who was a friend of Captain Flanagan, and I was very cautious of keeping out of everyone's way as much as possible.

10414. But you heard persons complaining?—I did.

10415. Was it a general complaint?—I can't give you a distinct answer to that.

10416. Did you hear twenty complain?—I can't say I did. I could give you a definite answer.

10417. You are quite sure you cannot remember any of the names?—I am.

10418. Do you think if you thought over the matter for one or two days you could remember and gives us the names?—I don't know. I will think over it.

10419. Did you hear anyone on Captain Flanagan's side complain that there was no money going there either?—I mixed myself up very little there. I kept myself very clear of the matter. I can't say that I did hear anyone complain.

10420. But you may have heard such a complaint?—I may.

10421. Did you hear anyone who voted for Captain Flanagan say it was a hard thing that there was no money going?—I heard it generally. You heard it stated that there was a deep impression produced on the minds of the voters for Captain Flanagan by the question raised between the parties—the question between Church and State—and that Captain Flanagan's friends gave their votes for him on that account.

10422. The Chief Commissioner.—Did you make any demand on Colonel Tennison at the time you waited on him at the hotel, which annoyed him?—Nothing but what he told you.

10423. Were you under notice to quit when you called at the hotel?—I was.

10424. The ejectment hadn't come on for hearing?—No.

10425. Did you defend the ejectment?—I didn't. I knew it was no use.

10426. Did you ever make any demand on Mr. Macdonogh afterwards, in consequence?—Never.

10427. What rent were you paying?—I was paying but £8 a year. It was a field containing one acre one rood. I commenced planting an orchard—it being my birthplace. I was very much attached to it. I improved it and it is a very handsome place. I expended a good deal of money on it. I built three or four cottages on it, they cost me a good bit of money; I built one of them particularly snugly, that I might close my life there.

10428. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—When was the notice to quit served on you?—I can't tell you.

10429. You were evicted in 1861?—I was.

James Gallanagh sworn and examined.

James Gallanagh.

10430. The Chief Commissioner.—Are you an elector?—I am.

10431. Whom did you vote for at the last election?—For Captain Flanagan.

10432. Whom did you vote at the previous election?—For Sergeant Armstrong.

10433. Did you ever get any money after Sergeant Armstrong's election?—I did.

10434. How much did you get?—£20.

10435. Who paid it to you?—Mr. Kenny.

10436. Was there any other man paid along with you?—There wasn't.

10437. What is Kenny's Christian name?—I don't know.

10438. Is he in Sligo still, do you know?—He is, I think.

10439. Is he a clerk to Mr. Harper Campbell?—He is.

10440. Had any promise been made to you of money, before you voted?—No; I hadn't.

10441. On whose recommendation did you vote on that occasion?—Sergeant Armstrong's.

10442. What employment are you in?—I am a butcher.

10443. Have you any guild or society of victuallers in Sligo?—No.

10444. Had you ever got money previously for voting?—No.

EIGHTH DAY.
October 13.
James Gallanagh.

10445. Was any promise made to you at Sergeant Armstrong's election, on the other side?—No.

10446. I suppose they thought it was no use to do so?—I don't know, for Mr. Macdonogh said to me after voting for Sergeant Armstrong, "Mr. Gallanagh, I didn't think you would do that to me."

10447. Had you ever voted before that election?—I had.

10448. For whom had you voted at previous elections?—I voted for Mr. Somers, for Mr. Townley for Mr. Ball (I believe), and for Mr. Sadlier.

10449. Were you promised anything at Sadlier's election?—Not a halfpenny.

10450. Did you get anything after that election?—I got nothing after it.

10451. You voted for Captain Flanagan, in accordance with your principles?—I did.

10452. Did the victuallers in Sligo go mostly for Captain Flanagan?—They did.

10453. Have you any place in Sligo where the victuallers met before the election?—No, each man walked out of his own house to vote.

10454. How many voters are there among the victuallers, do you know?—I don't exactly know—there are seven, or eight, or ten, I suppose. I am not sure how many there are. I didn't calculate them.

10455. Do they generally go together to vote?—They do.

10456. You told me that there is no society among yourselves in connexion with voting?—No, there isn't.

10457. Did you expect any money for voting at the last election?—There was no money for themselves, let alone to expect it for us.

10458. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Were you with any of the mobs at the last election?—No; I wasn't.

10459. Did you see any of the country fellows among the mobs getting any refreshments on the polling day?—I didn't. I don't think they got any, unless they drank it out of their own pocket—they couldn't get it any other way that I knew of. I suppose they didn't come into town with an empty hand.

10460. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Did you expect there would be money going at the last election?—I couldn't expect it, for I heard the gentlemen hadn't it themselves.

10461. When you heard the gentlemen had not got money themselves, was it at any conversation you were asking whether money was going?—What was the use of asking it, when I knew it was not there. It was the common report before they came to town at all that they had got no money.

Daniel M'Gill

Daniel M'Gill sworn and examined.

10462. The Chief Commissioner.—Were you a supporter of Sergeant Armstrong at his election?—I was.

10463. Did you, after his election, distribute any money?—I did.

10464. Give the names of the men to whom you distributed money?—Pat Gunning, £30; John Gallagher, £20; Thomas Brennan, £15.

10465. Was that all the money you distributed?—That was all.

10466. Had these men made any application to you for money before you put their names on your list?—Never.

10467. Were these men in your employment when you put down their names?—The man who got the £30 was a poor man and had a long family; the others were also poor.

10468. What were they?—Gunning was a carpenter, Gallagher is a small farmer, and Brennan is also a small farmer.

10469. You had nothing to say to them in the way of business, or of employing them?—Never.

10470. How did it happen that they were selected by you to receive money?—They lived in my neighbourhood.

10471. You had canvassed them?—Never.

10472. When first were you consulted about the necessity of giving money to voters?—When Mr. Tracy came to town, I was sent for to the hotel.

10473. Did you know that either Mr. Tracy, or anyone else was bringing down money?—I knew nothing of it until I went to the hotel. I was then asked if there were any poor parties, or if I knew any of them in my neighbourhood.

10474. What was the object of giving the money to them?—To assist them in their necessities, I suppose.

10475. Was it then given out of charity?—It was to a certain extent.

10476. And the other extent was for having voted for the Sergeant?—I dare say.

10477. Did you consider this to be bribery?—I never thought of it at all—whether it was or not.

10478. Do not you know now it was bribery to give money to voters in that way?—I wasn't aware of it then.

10479. But you know it now?—I know it now.

10480. Do you know the names of all who distributed money on that occasion?—I don't.

10481. Do you know anyone who had the names of those who distributed the money?—I don't.

10482. Do you remember those who attended at the hotel with yourself?—There were—Mr. Kidd, Mr. Campbell, Mr. Petrie, Mr. Conry, Mr. Keighron, Mr. Phillips, and myself.

10483. Had you written to the Sergeant, or interfered, or witnessed negotiations with other men about the necessity of money coming down?—Never.

10484. Was that the only money you knew to be spent in that way at elections?—At Sadlier's election I was sent for to his lodging. I went there, and I was told that there was a man, a friend who would vote for him, but wouldn't unless he got money. I said I would not have anything to do with that man. They asked me to go to him, and I said I wouldn't. After Sadlier's election, the man's wife got £36. He is now dead.

10485. What was his name?—Rooney.

10486. Who gave his wife the £36?—I did.

10487. Was that the only money you handed to voters during that election?—It was.

10488. Who asked you to give the money to the wife?—Mr. Kennedy, solicitor in Dublin; and Mr. Walker, the solicitor for Sadlier.

10489. Were there many electors got money at that election?—I don't know.

10490. Did you know of any other money expected at this election?—Never, except that I never handled a shilling from any candidate.

10491. Who gave you the £36 to give to Rooney's wife?—Either Mr. Kennedy or Mr. Walker—they were both present.

10492. You are a long time in Sligo?—I am.

10493. From your experience of elections, is it your opinion that the poorer classes expect to be paid after elections?—It is not. If they liked a candidate they would vote for him—if Sergeant Armstrong came again I believe they'd vote for him without a pennypiece. They like a popular candidate, and one who avows his principles openly as Sergeant Armstrong did.

10494. We have now three instances of the distribution of money, and we have the case as to Captain Knox giving money to Mr. Stokes for distribution—these are four cases—you know these cases to be proved; do you consider that the poorer or what are called the corrupt classes, expect to be paid after elections?—I don't know. I think the middle classes are worse, and are more greedy for money.

10495. You mean the respectable shopkeepers and artisans in town?—Yes; I believe they get money from time to time.

10496. In fact you consider that that class expects to be paid?—In fact I don't know what they expect, but I know they have got money.

10497. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—This money that was distributed among the supporters of Sergeant Armstrong, did it go among the respectable classes of voters?—Some artisans and shopkeepers got it, they were poor generally.

10498. Was it distributed among the respectable classes more than the poorer?—The poor got it.

10499. You stated that it was among the respectable classes it went?—Both classes took it; small shopkeepers took it.

10500. Do you think they would refuse it?—I can't say. When Mr. Townley came here, and was unseated in '48, he sent £10 to all poor voters.

10501. How much did he send in that way?—I am not aware.

10502. It was over £1,000, I suppose?—I dare say it was. On that account I thought it was no crime to take Sergeant Armstrong's money.

10503. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—How much did you get from Mr. Tracy altogether?—Sixty-five pounds.

10504. No more?—Not a penny more; and if I was as wise as I am now, I wouldn't take a shilling.

10505. The Chief Commissioner.—Was the money which Mr. Townley sent, sent after he was unseated?—Yes, a good while.

10506. Who was his agent at the time?—Mr. Stoner. His name was mentioned at the trial of the petition.

10507. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—I suppose you know the town very well?—I know almost everyone in it.

10508. Could you divide the voters into any classes; is there, for instance, a class you consider very well off, and would you divide that again into classes of shopkeepers and artisans; and is there a class lower than that—a class of persons of very small means?—I know there is a class of men of one creed, the Roman Catholics, they have invariably condemned bribery; and on the other side there were equally honest-minded Conservatives, and they had the same views.

10509. The Chief Commissioner.—And they wish to get rid of the system?—They do.

10510. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—I want to know, with regard to circumstances, whether the voters can be divided into classes—the very rich, the very poor, and the medium classes?—There is a class of men that are well off now, but who may be very poor next year, and these may be tempted.

10511. Whose circumstances are fluctuating—is there a class that is constantly poor?—There is.

10512. Could you give any idea as to the relative number of these classes?—I couldn't.

10513. I thought you said you knew everyone in town—you know more or less of their circumstances?—But I can't tell how much may be in each one's pocket.

10514. You could from the way he lives; could not you give us any assistance in that respect?—I couldn't.

10515. Could you do so after consideration?—It would hardly be fair, I think, to impose on me that trouble.

10516. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—When you met Mr. Tracy and Mr. Byrne, do you remember any conversation about the voters?—There was a conversation, a talking about the poor voters, and what they should get.

10517. Was there any talk about the class of voters that expected money?—There was talk of poor men that wanted assistance.

10518. Could you remember how the subject was presented to Mr. Tracy or Mr. Byrne?—I can only account for myself. I represented that there were very poor men in my neighbourhood. I mentioned three, and I could have mentioned more.

10519. What was said at that meeting, do you recollect?—Each one was asked if he had a very poor man to recommend, and Mr. Tracy said he had plenty of money.

10520. Were the gentlemen who met Mr. Tracy and Mr. Byrne on that occasion asked whether there were any voters to whom they had made promises, or held out expectations?—Not a word was said about it.

10521. Could you try and remember what was said in reference to the voters?—I don't know that. The meeting was on a Saturday—Easter Saturday, which is generally a busy day, and we were all very impatient to get away to our business. I was annoyed that I had to go there at all. I stopped but a very short time there.

10522. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Who told you to go to the meeting?—I was sent for to my own house by Mr. Tracy.

10523. Had you the list prepared when you went to it?—I had these three men in my head, and when I was asked had I any poor men to recommend I said I had three men.

10524. When you went down to the meeting, did you know that it was to distribute money you were sent for?—I didn't know a word about it.

10525. When you were asked if you knew any poor men, you knew of course that it was poor voters was meant?—I presume I did.

10526. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Were there large mobs at Sadlier's election?—There were.

10527. Did you know they were paid?—I suppose they were. They wouldn't go into the street without being paid—everyone knew that.

10528. Mobs cannot be got up without being paid?—Never; they never were as far as I know.

The Secretary announced that the Commission stood adjourned until Friday, the 15th October, at half-past two o'clock.

NINTH DAY.

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 15, 1869.

The Commissioners sat at ten o'clock.

John Jennings sworn and examined. John Jennings.

10529. The Chief Commissioner.—Are you an elector?—I am.

10530. Did you vote at the last election?—I did.

10531. For whom did you vote?—For Captain Flanagan.

10532. How did you vote at the previous election?—I voted for Sergeant Armstrong.

10533. Did you get any money after that election?—I did.

10534. How much did you get?—I got, to the best of my opinion, between £12 and £13.

10535. Were you paid the whole of that?—No, there was a balance of money that I passed my word to Mr. Keighron, and I told Mr. Chrystal of it.

10536. Who paid you?—Bryan Chrystal.

10537. Did you get any money for voting previously?—All I ever got was £5 and £20, for the last twenty years.

10538. Who gave you the £5?—At the election of Mr. Somers I got it.

10539. For whom did you vote at that election?—I voted for Mr. Somers.

10540. When did you get the £10?—I got it at Sadlier's election.

10541. On whose side did you vote at Sadlier's election?—I voted for Sadlier.

10542. Did you get the £5 after you voted for Somers?—I can't say.

NINTH DAY.
October 15.
John Jennings.

10543. How long after the election was it that you got it?—I can't say.

10544. Who gave it to you, do you remember?—It was a voter.

10545. What is his name?—To the best of my opinion it was Tom Ward.

10546. The publican?—Yes.

10547. Did he pay any other men along with you?—Yes, three more.

10548. Who were they?—One was a man named Kilmartin.

10549. What is his Christian name?—Another was Thady Boyle.

10550. Who was the third?—Bryan M'Keon.

10551. Who was the fourth?—I don't remember.

10552. Were they active voters?—They were.

10553. Where did Tom Ward pay you the £5?—At the rere of Gethin's place.

10554. What Gethin is that?—Mr. Somers's attorney.

10555. Was he Somers's attorney?—I can't say. I think Mr. Tracy was one of his attorneys.

10556. Which Mr. Tracy is that; is he the Dublin or the Sligo Mr. Tracy?—He was the counsel or attorney that conducted the election here. I don't know whether he was the counsel or attorney.

10557. How did you know that Ward was to pay the five of you the money; who told you?—I heard it passing.

10558. That he had the money?—Yes.

10559. Had he money for more than the five of you?—Not to my knowledge. There were only four of us.

10560. Were you one of the four?—I was.

10561. What was the Christian name of Kilmartin?—Pat.

10562. Is he here still?—He is.

10563. Did you vote at any other election?—I did, but I didn't get a shilling. I voted for Mr. Wynne at his election.

10564. Did you get any money for that?—No, that's all I ever got in my life.

10565. I want to know who told you that Ward had the money for you?—I asked him the question myself in person, and he said I would get so and so.

10566. How much did he say you were to get?—Ten pounds.

10567. How much did he give you?—He gave me £5 of it.

10568. Was it after you polled that you got the £5?—I can't say that. It was on the polling day I got it.

10569. That is all, you say, you got for voting at elections?—Yes.

10570. Who gave you the money in Sadlier's time?—Pat Walls.

10571. Is he any relative of Tom Ward?—He is not.

10572. Is he here still?—He is.

10573. What is he?—He was foreman shopkeeper to Martin and James Madden and Company.

10574. I am now coming to the last election. Do you know Tom Brennan?—I do well.

10575. Did he ever offer you any money?—He did.

10576. How much did he offer you?—Fifty pounds.

10577. Where did he offer it to you?—He sent a boy named Gray for me on the 8th.

10578. Which of the Grays is that?—I don't know his name, but he is the youngest of the two.

10579. When did he send Gray to you?—On the 8th November he sent him, and awakened me out of bed. I was after coming from first prayers at the time, and he told me that Brennan wanted me. I went over to see him.

10580. Where did you go to?—To Colonel Barrett's fort.

10581. When you went there what did Brennan say?—He was in company with Dominick Kilcullen. He told me that he would give me the £50 if I would go away. I told him I wouldn't go away.

10582. Did Brennan on any occasion mention the names of any other people that were to go away with you?—Yes.

10583. Whose names did he mention?—He mentioned the Grays of the River-side; Pat Gallagher, from the Riverside; Mark Anthony M'Donagh. He mentioned ten or twelve that were to go away. He mentioned persons living in Market-street.

10584. Tell me what are the names of these persons?—He mentioned Michael Hunt, John M'Grath, Matt Feeney, John Reid.

10585. Mention the names of all that were either to vote for Major Knox or go away?—He mentioned about twenty-four or twenty-five altogether.

10586. How many of them were to vote?—Half of them, and half to go away.

10587. Were these all Roman Catholics or Protestants?—Roman Catholics.

10588. Do you remember any more names; these are only eight names you mentioned?—He mentioned Pat O'Brien, Gethins.

10589. What is Gethins' Christian name—is it Edward or Michael?—He is a shopkeeper. I think Edward is his name.

10590. Did anybody else offer you money at the last election—tell it all now?—No. Brennan told me to call after the 10th. A person asked me had I my mind made up to vote for Captain Flanagan.

10591. Who asked you that?—Michael Doherty.

10592. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Did he ask you had you any land on Colonel Tennison's property?—He did. He said he was agent to Colonel Tennison, and if I had any land he would give me a spot that would suit me, and not pay a high rent. He said he had land that was purchased by Major Knox.

10593. Did Doherty offer you land on the property which he said Major Knox purchased?—He did. He said he would give me a piece of land on that property, and would give me £50 if I went away. I said I had no land on Colonel Tennison's property, it was on Colonel Knox's property.

10594. Did you ever consent to go to Dublin?—Never, whatever I might do to Easky.

10595. Who canvassed you for Captain Flanagan?—Himself. On the first occasion I told him that I was undetermined to vote at either side.

10596. Was there anyone present but Captain Flanagan when he canvassed you?—There was a clergyman with him—I think it was Father Morris—but he never spoke to me.

10597. The first time Captain Flanagan canvassed you, did you promise him?—I didn't.

10598. Who made you promise your vote to Captain Flanagan?—On the second occasion that he called on me, I told him that I would vote for him.

10599. On that occasion who was it canvassed you?—There was Father Morris and a few other gentlemen on a car—they were going up to Mr. Petrie's. They asked me had I my mind made up. I said I had my mind made up to vote for Captain Flanagan, for I was after speaking to my landlord, and my landlord said he would leave me to my own free-will. That was the reason I didn't give a decided answer at first when Captain Flanagan canvassed me. I wanted to speak to my landlord about it.

10600. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Who canvassed you for Sergeant Armstrong, do you recollect?—It was the Sergeant himself.

10601. Anyone else?—There were several gentlemen with him.

10602. Did Mr. Chrystal canvass you?—No; he was with Sergeant Armstrong.

10603. Did Mr. Harper Campbell canvass you?—Never. I never spoke to him.

10604. Did not any person but the Sergeant canvass you?—Not to my knowledge. There were plenty of persons with him at the time.

10605. Did you promise to vote for the Sergeant immediately?—Not the first time he canvassed me, I did not.

10606. When did you promise him first?—The second time he came round.

10607. I am speaking of Sergeant Armstrong?—I know—the second time he came round I promised him.

10608. How long before the election was that?—I can't say.

10609. Was it the day before?—It was a couple of days before the election.

10610. Did anyone offer you any money on the other side to vote for Mr. Macdonogh?—I was told I could get it, but I never looked after it.

10611. Who told you?—A man named Kearns.

10612. What Kearns is that—is it John Kearns or Pat Kearns?—Pat Kearns.

10613. Where does he live?—He lived at that time in Pound-street.

10614. Is he here now?—I don't think he is.

10615. When did you see him last?—I didn't see him, I think, for the last twelve months.

10616. Did you tell anyone before you voted that you were offered money by or for Mr. Macdonogh?—I might.

10617. Could you recollect whom you told it to?—I couldn't.

10618. Try and recollect?—I can't.

10619. Didn't you tell it to Mr. Phillips?—I might. I can't recollect that I did.

10620. But you might have done so?—I might.

10621. Was it the first time that Mr. Somers, that you got the £5?—No, it was on the second occasion.

10622. For whom did you vote on the first occasion?—I voted for Mr. Wynne.

10623. Do you recollect did Mr. Somers win that time?—I don't recollect.

10624. I will tell you—he was beaten?—He got in the first occasion.

10625. He did on the second occasion, too, by a petition. On which of these occasions was it that you got the £5 from Mr. Somers?—It was the second time.

10626. What was Boyle's Christian name—I mean one of the men who got money from Ward?—Thady.

10627. Is he in Sligo now?—He is.

10628. How long before the election was it that you promised Captain Flanagan to vote for him?—I promised him, to the best of my opinion, two days before the election.

10629. How long before the election was it that he asked you the first time to vote for him?—It might be a fortnight.

10630. Had you ever intended to vote for Major Knox?—Well, my heart was never with him.

10631. But you were thinking of the £50?—I didn't covet it.

10632. You were hesitating, you know?—I never coveted or took the money either.

10633. Did anyone threaten you for voting for Major Knox?—Everyone belonging to me was pleased with me to vote for him.

10634. Did anyone outside your own family threaten you that if you voted for Major Knox you would catch it, or that you would be beaten, or that your house would be smashed?—No one separately ever told me that.

10635. You say no one "separately" told you; did any persons altogether?—Never; no person ever told me.

10636. Did a mob tell you?—No.

10637. Did you ever hear it in any way?—I never heard it from anybody, except my own people.

10638. Did you hear it from any people besides your own people?—No, I didn't.

Michael O'Hara sworn and examined.

10639. The Chief Commissioner.—You are a victualler, I believe?—I am.

10640. Are you an elector?—I am.

10641. Whom did you vote for at the last election?—I voted for Captain Flanagan.

10642. Did you vote at Sergeant Armstrong's election?—No, I had no vote then.

10643. Was the last election the first time you ever voted?—It was.

10644. What is the rating of your house?—It was only £4 10*s.* at first.

10645. Were you examined at the trial of the petition at Carrick?—I was.

10646. Do you know Mr. Stokes?—I do.

10647. Do you know Mr. Petrie?—I do.

10648. Did you ever get any offer of money from anyone about not registering your vote?—Never from anyone except Mr. Petrie.

10649. How long was that before the revision?—It was a long time before the revision.

10650. What did Mr. Petrie say to you?—He came to me several times and asked me whom I would vote for. I said I would vote for the side I always voted for, meaning the Liberal side. "Will you come along with me?" said I, "you are on the Liberal side; you were always with us." "There's no money going," he said, "I'll not be with you this time, I'll be against you." "Why not be with us now, as you were when Sergeant Armstrong was a candidate?" I said. He said, "They treated me not too well, and I took a notion." I said, "You'll take another notion before long." "Come on," said he. "I won't," said I.

10651. Did he mention anything about money to you?—He did.

10652. What did he say about it?—He said, "Come with me and I will get you £25." "Well, now, Mr. Petrie," said I, "I would do a great deal for you, but if you gave me £500 I would not go with you, or vote against my principles. I always voted for a Liberal, and that's the way I will go all through."

10653. What was the £25 for, did he tell you?—To go away and not register. He told me that Captain Flanagan wouldn't stand the ground, and that there were four, or five, or six butchers who would go away; and that I may as well have £25 as nothing.

10654. How are you circumstanced in the way of business as regards Mr. Petrie?—I suppose I bought a couple of thousand pounds worth of cattle from him. He gave them to me off and on, and when I hadn't money he gave them to me as well as when I had.

10655. On what terms are you since the election with him?—He never spoke to me since that, and he withdrew his custom also.

10656. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—How long before the revision was that conversation between you and Mr. Petrie?—About a fortnight or a month.

10657. Where did it take place?—In my own house. He used generally come to my house at that time, and talk with me.

10658. In your shop, was it?—Yes.

10659. Was there anyone by?—Yes. My son and daughter were there, so that if he wanted any proof, he was listened to. He told me when I said if he gave me £500 I wouldn't vote for Major Knox, "I don't want you to vote for Major Knox at all, I want you only to go away."

10660. After that conversation did he speak to you again on the subject?—After that until the revision came on he didn't speak to me. During the revision I stopped two days in the court-house, thinking that my name would be called. I stopped there Wednesday and Thursday, and when my name wasn't called I said I wouldn't come into the court-house.

10661. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Did you ever say to Mr. Petrie that you thought it would be better to go away and not register your vote?—I never said a word about it.

10662. You are positive of that?—I am.

10663. Did Mr. Petrie state to you that it would not be forgotten for you?—He said that I got money at Sergeant Armstrong's election. I didn't get money then, I had no vote at his election.

NINTH DAY. October 15.

Michael O'Hara.

10664. Did you ever vote for anyone before Captain Flanagan's election? did you vote at Sergeant Armstrong's election?—I didn't. I had no vote. I would have voted for Sergeant Armstrong if I had a vote.

10665. Did you vote for Mr. Somers?—I didn't.

10666. What do you mean then by saying that you always voted for the Liberals?—I always went with them. I voted for them.

10667. When did you vote for them?—I voted at Townley's election.

10668. When else?—I hadn't voted except then.

10669. The Chief Commissioner.—Did you state, at the trial at Carrick, that no one was present when Mr. Petrie made the promise of money to you?—Not a word; I wasn't well in Carrick—I was sick for three days there; they had no business of me there.

10670. Did you ever receive any money for your vote?—Never; I never received a shilling or a halfpenny for it.

James Wallace.

James Wallace sworn and examined.

10680. How much did you get from Mr. Macdonogh?—Nothing.

10683. When you say you think, you mean you have not the slightest doubt that you got it?—I did get it.

10684. Who gave you the £40?—I got it from Mr. Lyons.

10685. Where did he give it to you?—He sent for me, and I went up. The money was left for me in the inside office on the counter. Mr. Lyons desired me to take it up. I did so, and walked out.

10686. At the election between Sergeant Armstrong and Mr. Macdonogh did you get any money?—I don't recollect getting any.

10688. How long after it?—I can't say.

10708. You voted for Mr. Townley?—I did.

10709. And you got £10 after the election?—I did.

10710. How long after the election did you get it?—It was about eight or ten days after the election.

10711. Had you, then, a promise of the £10 when you voted?—No; I promised him I would vote for them.

10713. How often did Major Knox come to you more than once about your vote?—He came to me several times.

10714. Do you know Captain Ethelred Knox?—I don't. I might have seen him, but not to know him.

10715. Do you know Timothy Fallon, a horse-trainer?—I know him to see him passing—that's all.

10716. Do you know Mr. Hignell?—No. I never saw him to know him.

10717. What is your business?—A shopkeeper, oil and colour, window glass, and the like.

10718. After the petition, and after this Commission was known to have been issued, did you attend any meeting at which Mr. Abbot was?—I did.

10719. Was Fallon at it?—I don't know. There were fifty or sixty electors there.

10720. You have not been paid anything for the last election?—No.

10721. Did you go voluntarily to that meeting?—

10722. How long ago is it since that meeting was held?—I don't exactly know.

10737. Do you remember what signature there was to the notice?—I can't say who signed it.

10738. Don't you know that a great number of Major Knox's supporters had been paid nothing?—I don't know. I heard them say they got nothing.

10739. But did they expect it?—They didn't say that.

10740. Who said they got nothing?—Several; James Compton said he got nothing.

10741. Who else said it?—A man named Macklin, a superannuated gauger, in John-street; I had very little conversation with any of them.

10742. Do you know any more that said they got nothing?—I don't; they are in the habit of coming into my shop, and said they got nothing.

10743. And that others did get something?—Yes.

10744. Did you hear who got the something?—I can't exactly say.

10745. Were there not complaints, that some of them kept the money that should have been given to the voters?—I didn't scrutinise the matter, and I was careless about it.

10746. Just as careless, I suppose, as you would be to take the money, if it was going?—Just so.

10747. Do you remember any others who said they got nothing?—I don't.

10748. How long were you at the meeting?—Not very long—about an hour.

10749. Did you hear that Mr. Abbott had bought some of the houses in the town?—I heard a passing thing that he did.

10750. A passing remark?—Yes; that's all.

10751. And that he bought the houses from Major Knox—I don't know that.

10752. Did Mr. Abbott address the meeting as a candidate for the borough?—Yes; as an intended canditate.

10753. You do not know Mr. Hignell?—No.

10754. Was there any list of electors produced at that meeting?—I didn't mind it.

10755. You say there were forty or fifty electors at it?—Yes, I think so. I can't exactly recollect, it's so long ago—it is six months ago now.

10756. You mentioned only Mr. Cherry as being present at the meeting?—I don't exactly know whether he was there or not.

10757. Do you know Tom Brennan?—I do.

10758. Had you any talk with him before the election?—I had not. I didn't see him at all during the election, except going up to vote.

10759. Was Mr. William Ormsby at that meeting?—He was.

10760. You know the gentleman I mean?—I do. I know him very well.

10761. Did Mr. Ormsby speak to the meeting?—I think he did. I am not positively sure. I didn't mind.

10767. You had no doubt that you went up the street to the meeting?—I did go up the street, I think.

10768. What do you mean by "I think?"—I am doubtful of it.

10769. I must ask you to tell me some more names of those who were at the meeting?—I can't exactly say who were there.

10770. Who do you think were there?—I can't say exactly.

10771. Are you a member of the Conservative party?—I am a Conservative. I never took——

10772. What do you mean by "took." You took money, you know?—That I was no committee man.

10773. There was no committee at the last election. Tell me who were at the meeting?—I can't mention them.

10774. Not even one?—I might mention one, but I might make a mistake.

10775. You say there were forty or fifty at the meeting. You would save yourself a great deal of trouble if you give me six names?—I can't say positively. I saw James Burrowes, he was there.

10776. Would you like to see the registry of voters to refresh your memory?—No.

10777. Do you remember if any of the Armstrongs or the Allens were there?—I can't exactly say, for fear I make a mistake. I can't say.

10778. There is no apprehension about making a mistake, the only object is to summon the parties here to give us information. You do not blame or censure any one by saying who were there?—I can't say who were there.

10779. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—It was some time after Mr. Macdonogh's first election you got the £40?—It was after that.

10784. Was there any reference to the fact that he was a rich man?—I didn't mind.

10785. You didn't mind?—It might have happened; I can't exactly say.

10786. Are you quite sure that there was no reference to it?—There might be, but I can't say. He said he was a Conservative in principle; he said he was a moderate Conservative.

10787. I am not talking of what Mr. Abbott said, but what Mr. Macklin or Mr. Crompton said. Did they say that Mr. Abbott was a rich man?—I don't mind what they said.

10788. Was it said at that meeting that you wouldn't suffer for having voted for Major Knox?—They broke a good deal of my house.

10789. Did anyone mention that you would be compensated?—I did put in a claim, but it was badly filled.

10790. But did anyone mention that the loss would be made good by Major Knox or Mr. Abbott?—No; I had no claim on Mr. Abbott.

10791. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Do you know a man named Ryan?—I know two Ryans.

10792. Did you ever hear that they got money for voting for Major Knox?—Nothing more than what I read in the papers.

10793. You never heard it before?—Never.

10794. These were not the names mentioned by Mr. Crompton or Mr. Macklin?—No.

10795. Did you ever hear from them that Gallagher got money?—Never.

10796. Did you hear that the Youngs got money?—Never until I saw it in the papers.

10797. Or that Watt Henderson got money?—No.

10798. Who was it you heard got money?—No one except what I read in the papers.

(The witness withdrew.)

NINTH DAY.
October 15.
Patrick Pyne.

Patrick Pyne sworn and examined.

10799. The Chief Commissioner.—You are an elector?—Yes.

10800. How long have you been an elector?—Thirty-five years, I suppose.

10801. Whom did you vote for at the last election?—For Captain Flanagan.

10802 Whom did you vote for at the previous election?—Sergeant Armstrong.

10803. Was any money offered or given to you at either of those elections?—Neither directly nor indirectly.

10804. Your name was mentioned?—It was, by Michael Hunt.

10805. That's the reason why you are called as a witness?—Nor anyone belonging to me. My son is not here now. He was mentioned also. I could vouch for him as well as for myself. We are independent Liberals, and never either the Conservative side or any side would imagine that we would take it. I was canvassed by Major Knox, who left his card; and also Mr. Chambers, Lord Erne's agent, canvassed me for Major Knox on account of Lord Erne. I told them I was bound to go with the Liberals; and I just had no more interest than that I took a great interest in Sergeant Armstrong and Captain Flanagan afterwards, knowing that they were good members of the Liberal party.

10806. Have you always supported the Liberal side?—Always. I may remark to you that I carried a great number of my countrymen out to America, and they went out with a very bad feeling—hundreds—and that is what strengthened me to be so strong a Liberal.

10807. Can you give any information about the mob at the last election?—Well, I heard a great deal of mobbing through the press—the Conservative press talking. I accompanied Captain Flanagan from the time he came to canvass me at the house. I went out and said that the electors—the Liberal electors should accompany him, if they did right, to show that Captain Flanagan was their choice.

10808. The choice of the people?—Of the people. I went out and walked with them from my own house in John-street, up Church-lane, up the hill and back again, and round—I can't say whether we went down Church-lane—and up Market-street. We had a number of people, and there were a number of magistrates with Captain Flanagan at that time. At every house they went to they got a promise of a vote, and the parties cheered, but there was no such thing as a mob.

10809. What I refer to is, on the polling day was there rioting?—Oh, on the polling day and on the night.

10810. Before and after?—I voted for Captain Flanagan, and in ten minutes——

10811. You were on the popular side, and got no obstruction?—No. I walked up immediately after Captain King was shot, and the whole street was open, or at least the middle of the street, all on the right side; the pathway and the middle of the street were quite clear.

10812. That is after the shot was fired?—Immediately. I think it would be five, or eight, or ten minutes, to the best of my opinion. I went into Captain Flanagan's tally-room. There was a large gathering of people about there, but not noisy at this time; and I was in some minutes in the tally-room when I heard that Captain King was shot.

10813. Tell me now, I want to know this—do you know anything about any people having been brought in from the country, or who brought them in?—No, I do not.

10814. Because we have it in evidence that a number of strangers were in Sligo that day—the day of polling?—Yes.

10815. I suppose you saw the men and recognised them by their frieze to be strangers?—I saw strangers from different parts of the country round, but not to know them. I knew them to be from all sides round.

10816. Can you give any information as to how these men were brought in?—I cannot give the least.

10817. To your knowledge did they get any money or drink in the town?—Not to my knowledge. I have not the least idea. I was nothing interested. As being a Liberal I was not mixed up in anything to know.

10818. Can you give any information about money going previous to the election?—I could not give any.

10819. Were you on the Committee that distributed the money?—Never in my lifetime. I heard the Hunts' "Cave" talked about; they always held back; and indeed they held back in the Sergeant's election till the last moment, I think three o'clock; and it was necessary to have them; and finally he went himself and brought them down.

10820. Do you remember that occurrence—of five men holding back at the Sergeant's election?—I do.

10821. Did you go to canvass them?—I think I was asked, but I had not influence with them; and he is a man I did not like, although I knew him.

10822. This Michael Hunt?—He was rather a strange character.

10823. That was in 1865; we now have the word "Cave," although you had not it then?—No; I heard it in court.

10824. What were they called then; had they any name those who used to be hanging back?—No; they knew that the two sides, namely, the "Tory" formerly—Conservative now; and the Liberals at the revision were generally nearly equal, and that they were always able—these five or six men—to turn the scale, and they were anxious to get the money and they held out. They would sooner take it from their own party if they could get it; if not, they looked out to get so much more from the others.

10825. Do you remember on the polling day, when you were in a state of anxiety about your own party who went to them first—went to the people whom we now call the "Cave"?—Well, no. There was a talk I cannot recollect.

10826. Do you remember when Phillips went to them; he was the last man that went to them before the Sergeant went?—Well, I don't know. I do not know if it was Conry or Phillips who went; but it was rumoured that we would go up, we were all so anxious.

10827. Keighron says he went?—I think he did, but I did not go until I saw the Sergeant coming down.

10828. Keighron told us he went, and that when the man who spoke on behalf of them mentioned money; he most distinctly and most properly said that he would have nothing to do with it?—I don't recollect what passed from the anxiety of getting them down.

10829. Do you remember when the other leading Liberals were working and trying to do their best the word coming that these men were hanging back for money?—I do; I heard that.

10830. That day, during the election?—I think it was the general belief of every one that they were waiting to get the—— 10831. Money?—Or bribe, or whatever it was.

10832. They would take less from their own side?—I think so.

10833. You know these men—Harte, Moran, Hunt, Magrath, Dominic Hunt?—I know.

10834. It was said in the progress of this inquiry that a man named Lenihan, described as Lenihan of Geeva, came in at the last election and made them all vote for Captain Flanagan; do you know such a man?—I don't know him good or bad. I never heard of him to my knowledge unless here in court.

10835. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—You spoke of mobs: are you not aware of so many houses having been wrecked?—I am, on the night of the polling.

10836. And of a great deal of mischief having been done?—Well a great deal more than was actually done.

10837. Well, but you are aware at all events that houses were wrecked?—I am.

10838. Were there any voters kept back from recording their votes at the election by the violence of the mob?—I don't think there was, as far as my belief would go.

10839. As far as your knowledge goes?—As far as my knowledge would go. In short my knowledge leads me to believe that if it were not through bribery or the like, the Conservative party would not get one. That's all I know. I cannot speak of anyone. They never troubled me indeed, all my lifetime for a vote, except that Mr. Macdonogh canvassed me and my son at my own door one time. He thought he had me I was so kind with him and his friend Mr. Phibbs; and when he asked me for my interest I just turned round and said, "Ask your friend Mr. Phibbs." He laughed as he went away and said "How is it that you are such good friends with Mr. Phibbs?" "Oh," said I, "I know what it is to be a gentleman too well to fall out with my opponents."

(The witness withdrew.)

George Blair sworn and examined.

George Blair.

10840. The Chief Commissioner.—Do you carry on business in Sligo?—I do.

10841. What is your business?—I am in the general provision way—meal and flour.

10842. Have you been an elector for a considerable time?—Thirty-four years.

10843. What party do you belong to?—Well, I am not concerned in any party. I never meet in any lodges or night meetings.

10844. I do not mean "lodges" at all, I mean the Conservative or Liberal party, which anyone may belong to. I am not asking you about lodges at all—it is not my inquiry. However, you are right to say that you don't belong to any party?—I don't.

10845. Now, whom did you vote for at the last election?—For Captain Flanagan.

10846. And at the election before?—For Sergeant Armstrong.

10847. After that did you get any money?—I did.

10848. How much?—In the year 1866 an attorney named Foley handed me £15, which I am very sorry for. He had my name on his list.

10849. You took the money?—I did.

10850. Why did a man, apparently respectable, like you, take that money?—Well, I am sorry for it, and I would not wish for three times the sum that I took it.

10851. That is a very small amount indeed to be wishing. Why did you take the money?—I did take it.

10852. Why did you take it?—He handed it to me and I took it.

10853. Do you know why he had you down on the list?—I don't know.

10854. You do not know?—I did not know why he had me on his list.

10855. Can you give no information as to why he put you down on his list without previous engagement or promise, or expression on your part of dissatisfaction—did you ever say you expected to get something?—I did not.

10856. Were you ever offered any money before?—I was offered £100 in Sadlier's election by himself and Counsellor Jones. I despised it and would not take it. I had means then, plenty of means, and I voted for Somers and that without a shilling; and I solemnly declare before God I never got anything—and I have a county vote also—except that £15, and they may contradict me if they can.

10857. Were you ever offered any money on any other occasion?—Never for county election or borough election. I voted for Cooper and Swift in the county. He was member at the time, and was returned.

10858. That was Sheriff Swift?—I think so.

10859. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Did Foley canvass you?—He was with Sergeant Armstrong at the time he canvassed me.

10860. Were you ever offered anything to vote for Flanagan?—No.

10861. Did you hear of any money going?—Oh, I don't know.

10862. Did you hear of any?—I did not. I did not hear of any money going in Captain Flanagan's time. I never inquired anything about it.

10863. Did you vote for Somers in 1859?—I did, I think, three or four times. I voted for Somers in Sadlier's election—the last election, when I said I could have got £100 from Sadlier.

10864. And the last time, when he was beaten by Mr. Wynne by such a majority?—I voted for Wynne, I think, twice.

10865. Did you hear of any money going for Somers at that time?—I don't know, I never got a shilling.

10866. I am not saying you did. Did you hear of any going?—I don't know. I could not say. However I gave Somers money myself. At that time I had means; and the time of the petition against Townley I think I gave him £2.

10867. The Chief Commissioner.—Was there a general subscription at that time?—There was. They held a meeting over in the brewery.

10868. At that time you tried to keep the town pure?—Well, I don't know.

10869. You don't know?—It is a good while ago since that election.

10870. But did you believe that any money was given for bribery by Somers or people for him?—I did not hear it.

10871. You never heard a report?—I never heard a report that he gave money to anyone.

10872. Or anybody for him?—Or anyone for him. I did not hear it. I hear now that a man got £5, but I never heard of it before. I think the man had no money to give anyone.

(The witness withdrew.)

Thomas Graham sworn and examined.

Thomas Graham.

10873. The Chief Commissioner.—You are an elector?—Yes.

10874. Whom did you vote for at the last election?—Major Knox.

10875. How long had you promised the Major before that election?—Some short time previous to it.

10876. Was the last election the first time you had a vote?—No.

10877. Whom did you vote for before?—Mr. Wynne.

10878. Did you vote in the election between Sergeant Armstrong and Mr. Macdonogh?—I did.

10879. Whom did you vote for?—For Mr. Macdonogh.

10880. Did you vote for him twice?—Once.

10881. Did you get any money after that election or at it?—No.

10882. Did you ever get any money for voting for Macdonogh?—Never in my life.

10883. Were you ever promised any?—I was in a certain way.

10884. Tell the way it was?—I was in the habit of going in and out of Lyons's shop, and one day, as I was chatting to him, and canvassing about the election, he said to me, "I am just after coming up a while ago, and I have got your name on the office books as a sort of agent, and you will be paid."

NINTH DAY. October 15. Thomas Graham.

10885. How much?—He spoke something, the day after that, I think, about £30, as well as I can recollect—I am not certain.

10886. At which of the elections was that—was it the one between Armstrong and Macdonogh?—Yes, the second election between Armstrong and Macdonogh.

10887. Was that before the polling?—It was.

10888. Did you understand, of course, when you were to get that £30, that you were to vote for Macdonogh?—Oh, he knew that previous to it, but he did not ask me any questions, indeed, about it one way or another; but what he said to me was this—"Now, I am well aware that you are intimate with a good many of the voters, and if you choose you can do a good deal of service." So then, I think, I told him I would not go out in that way. "Well," said he, "when you accidentally meet them, you can keep matters up as well as you can, and do your best." So I just made no reply.

10889. Did you do anything?—Oh, nothing.

10890. I suppose there was nothing to be done, in fact?—I had no opportunity.

10891. Did you ever ask for money?—I did not.

10892. What did Mr. Lyons say?—I met him in Knox-street one day, and spoke to him, saying—"What about what you told me about putting my name on the book." "Oh," he said, "I have no money for you."

10893. Did you know that Mr. Sedley got money to divide?—I did.

10894. Who told you?—No, I did not. I heard it afterwards. At the time I did not know anything of it.

10895. When did you hear that Mr. Charles Sedley had the money—was it at the time of the polling?—Oh no, I did not hear anything about money at that time.

10896. Then did you vote without having any word about money, except what Mr. Lyons gave you?—Just voted without a word more.

10897. Did you ever know that Mr. Sedley had the money before it was distributed?—No.

10898. We now know that a sum of £420 was actually distributed by Mr. Sedley—did you know about that money being there for the voters before it was given to them?—Oh, not till long after the election I heard some rumours, but that's all.

10899. Did you try to get a share of it then?—I think I spoke to Mr. Sedley. I just told him as I told here—something similar to that.

10900. What did he say?—"Oh," said he, "sure you never spoke about money," or something like that. I just walked away. I told him just as I have told here.

10901. Now, at this last election you say you made up your mind to vote for Knox about a month before the election—is that it?—When I was canvassed by him, I told him I would vote.

10902. How long was that before the election?—Well, I can't exactly say now.

10903. Did you expect that any money would be going?—I did not.

10904. Did you know Thomas Brennan?—I did.

10905. Did he canvass you?—No; I was not canvassed by any man but himself.

10906. The Major?—Yes.

10907. Do you know Captain Ethelred Knox?—I don't know him.

10908. Do you know Mr. Hignell?—Not till I saw him here in the chair. I never saw him before.

10909. Then you say you have not been paid anything?—No.

10910. Do you expect it?—I do not expect anything.

10911. Were you at the meeting at which Mr. Abbott was introduced as a candidate?—I was, I may say. I will just describe to you.

10912. Do?—I went in when the meeting was nearly over, and stood at the door outside.

10913. You were not sure whether you would go in or not?—I did not go in.

10914. You were there to know what was going on—were you not?—I did not hear what was going on at all.

10915. Did you know that Mr. Abbott was a candidate?—I heard him talked of.

10916. By whom?—By several of the electors. I don't recollect now. There was just a rumour going.

10917. Did you see the gentleman?—I saw him once.

10918. Where was that?—At that meeting, I saw him coming out.

10919. Who were at that meeting; you know the people of the town, and can tell us?—Indeed I do, well; but I was not inside to see them.

10920. Whom did you see coming out—did you see Major Knox?—Yes, he was there, I think.

10921. Have you any doubt on the subject?—I have not the slightest.

10922. I know you have not, but the words "I think," in Sligo, mean "I am perfectly certain;" go on?—Mr. William Ormsby was there; if there were any others I could not say.

10923. Did you not see plenty of electors there?—I did not go inside the room where they were.

10924. But, did you not see them coming out?—Well, I think I was one of the first that came out myself.

10925. From the room?—Oh, no; from the lobby where I stood outside. I don't think I was more than two minutes there that day.

10926. What is your business?—I am a gaol official.

10927. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Are you aware of any other voters, besides yourself, applying to Mr. Sedley?—Not till I heard them read out here. I did not trouble myself much about it.

10928. Did you hear anybody complaining of money not being distributed?—No, I didn't.

10929. Try now and remember?—Well, I cannot recollect that I did. I took no notice of it, indeed.

10930. Was there dissatisfaction to your knowledge, on the part of Mr. Macdonogh's supporters, that money was not going after the election?—Well, I have no recollection. I did not trouble myself much about it.

10931. They would have taken the money from Sedley?—Under that form I would. I would not like to take it in the form of a bribe.

10932. If money were offered to you after Major Knox's election for having supported him, I suppose you would have no objection to take it?—I don't know that I would take it now.

10933. You are not sure?—I would not like to take it.

10934. On your oath, would you not have taken it if it were offered to you; answer candidly, you are on your oath; have you any doubt on your mind that you would have taken the money, if it had been offered to you?—I know I did not expect it.

10935. But if it had been offered to you, would you have taken it?—I would not like to take it under that name.

10936. You would not like to take it?—I would not.

10937. But you would?—I can scarcely give you an answer.

10938. The Chief Commissioner.—Did you ever get any money yet?—No; not a shilling.

10939. Did you ever get any from Mr. Rowlett?—No; nor from any other man.

10940. Do you know Mr. Rowlett?—I do well.

10941. The man in the rent house?—Yes.

10942. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—What was it Mr. Sedley said to you, when you asked him about the money?—I think what he said was—"Oh, sure you would not want the like."

10943. What did you say to that; did you get ashamed then?—Well, I did not. I told him that from the form it was offered in, it was through that that I spoke about it, as well as I recollect.

10944. That is all that passed?—That's all that passed at the time.

(The witness withdrew.)

John Galbraith sworn and examined.

10945. The Chief Commissioner.—Do you know voters of the name of Young?—Yes.

10946. You heard about Mr. Stokes's evidence here?—I did.

10947. And that these men were bribed?—I did.

10948. Were they in your house on that occasion?—They were.

10949. Did you see them get the money?—I did.

10950. Had you sent for them?—Yes; I did.

10951. State what occurred between you and them, and how you knew they were going to be bribed?—Well, I will tell you the whole thing. The elder Young came to me, and told me that his son was tampered with, and that he had no control over him; and he said that he was badly treated by the other party—by his own party, at the last election, and that he certainly would vote against them.

10952. By his own party, you mean the Conservatives?—I do. I had no interference with the thing at all; but I know Major Knox, and I certainly would wish to see him returned. I went down to him, and told him about the Youngs, and the Major did not say anything to me that I remember, but introduced a Mr. Lawder, and told Mr. Lawder. Mr. Lawder said, "Does the man want money?" I said "I did not know; I did not ask that, nor did they mention anything to me about money."

10953. They had only said to you that they were badly treated?—They did; that is, the father did. I told Mr. Lawder about them, and gave him no answer no more than that I said I did not know, and came away. Shortly after that Mr. Stokes came up to my place and we sent for the Youngs. They came in; and the elder, the father, said he did not want to have anything to do with money, and that what was to be given might be given to his son. Mr. Stokes then threw down half notes on the ground, and one half the younger Young took up, and I took the other half, and kept it until after the Carrick petition. That's exactly the whole thing so far as I know about it.

10954. Were you examined before Judge Keogh in Carrick; you had the half notes in your possession?—I had.

10955. And gave them, after the report of the judge was in, to the Youngs?—Gave them to the son.

10956. Forty pounds?—Forty pounds.

10957. I presume you have been some time in Sligo?—Some sixteen years.

10958. And know the town well and the electors well?—Yes, I do, tolerably well.

10959. When the Youngs, or one of them, said to you that they had been badly treated by their party at a former election, did you not know that that meant that they had not been paid?—Well, I did not know, but I believe there was something of the sort.

10960. That is, as a man of the world you understood them to mean that?—I did.

10961. And that either they or one of them wanted money for his vote on the present occasion?—I did. I believe that to be what they intended.

10962 You believe that to be what they represented to you?—I did, distinctly.

10963. You went, zealous for your party, as every man has a right to be, and told Major Knox that they said they were badly treated?—I did.

10964. Did you mean to convey that these men were mercenary voters.—Well, I did.

10965. And did you believe that the Major so understood you?—Well, I could not say that.

10966. I am obliged in this inquiry to ask the witness's belief as to what the parties he spoke to understood from him—did you intend to convey that the Youngs wanted to be bribed?—Well, I think so. It is my opinion that I did, decidedly.

10967. And you did that in the clear and intelligible language in which you are now expressing yourself to me?—I did.

10968. Because I understood you to say that was it. You intended, then, to convey that these men wanted to be bribed?—I did, distinctly.

10969. How long before the election was that interview with Major Knox?—Well, it was a very short time.

10970. It was in the week before the polling?—It was a week.

10971. "Within a week before it"—that was the phrase I used?—I believe it was.

10972. How long were you with the Major before Mr. Lawder was sent for?—Not more than about three minutes.

10973. Did you say the same things in the same language in Mr. Lawder's presence that you did in the Major's?—I did—yes.

10974. Do you believe that you conveyed to Mr. Lawder what you have now informed us, that these men wanted to be bribed?—Well, I could not say.

10975. Oh, the word "bribe" is never used?—I used the very same, as far as expression went. I meant the same thing.

10976. Meant that the men wanted to be bribed?—Well, I meant that they wanted to get money.

10977. Do you believe that Mr. Lawder so understood you?—I do.

10978. When you went away from the interview between the Major and Mr. Lawder and you, did you understand that you were to go anywhere or to do anything?—No.

10979. Where did you go to?—Came straight to my own place.

10980. And how soon after that, then, did Mr. Stokes come up to you?—I should say not more than an hour.

10981. What did he say to you? did he say he had any communication with anyone?—Mr. Stokes?

10982. Yes?—Well, I don't remember that he did.

10983. I will try to refresh your memory; did he say he had seen the Captain?—No; I don't think he did.

10984. You know whom I mean by that?—Captain Ethelred Knox, I presume.

10985. Was his name mentioned at all?—No; it was not.

10986. Do you know the Captain?—I know him to see him.

10987. Had you not spoken to him during the election?—Oh, yes, I did.

10988. Can you now give the Court information, on your oath, how Mr. Stokes knew he was in some way to speak to you about the Youngs?—Mr. Stokes was at Major Knox's during the time I was there.

10989. You did not mention that before?—Well, it is the fact.

10990. He was there?—He came in during the time I was there.

10991. Did he hear the conversation about the Youngs having been badly treated?—Well, I don't know that he heard that, but he heard about my coming about the Youngs, and knew what it was for.

10992. Knew perfectly well what it was for?—I believe he did.

10993. Was he there before Mr. Lawder came in, or was it subsequently?—I rather think not. I rather think it was after Mr. Lawder that he came came in.

10994. Did Major Knox in any way repudiate any overtures being made to these two voters?—Not that I know of.

10995. Or Mr. Lawder, his conducting agent?—Not that I know of.

10996. Not in your presence at all events?—Not in my presence; certainly not.

10997. Did they understand that you, as it were, brought the message from the Youngs—I don't mean in an offensive sense that you bought people at elections, but did you, and did they understand that you brought a message from the Youngs?—Well, I don't know that they did, because I did not tell the Youngs that I made mention of anything about it.

NINTH DAY. October 15. John Galbraith.

10998. Did you tell the Youngs you would communicate with anyone?—I did not.

10999. You were only acting as zealously as you could?—Nothing more.

11000. Had you and Stokes before you finally arranged with the Youngs, any conversation yourself as to the amount the Youngs were to get—I mean, who made the bargain about the half notes, and you being the trustee of the other half?—Mr. Stokes.

11001. With the Youngs?—With the Youngs.

11002. In your presence?—In my presence.

11003. I will ask you about other matters afterwards in reference to which you are to be examined; can you give me any information about any other voter that was bribed?—None, sir.

11004. Did any other voters ask you for money?—Not one.

11005. Or give any intimation that they were to get it?—Not one. I never had anything to do with a voter in my life before, and I never will again.

11006. Mrs. Dunleavy was examined, and you heard about her evidence?—I did.

11007. You are examined to contradict her evidence; did you ever offer her any money?—Never.

11008. What she swore about you, I won't repeat it all now, was it untrue?—Perfectly untrue, with the exception of sending for her to write the letter.

11009. I mean about the money; just tell all that occurred, in your own way, about that letter, between you and Mrs. Dunleavy; you knew her husband was away?—No, I did not know it at that time. Mr. Woods came to me——

11010. Just tell all that occurred shortly; it is better to have it cleared up?—Mr. Woods came to my place on the Saturday before the election, and asked me would I send for Mrs. Dunleavy. I said I would. I was in a hurry and I did not think of anything. He said when I sent for her, to send for him when she would come. I did so, and she came. Mr. Joseph Woods, son to Mr. Woods, came up. We went up stairs into the paper wareroom, and I asked her would she write a letter to her husband to come and vote for Major Knox, as she had previously told me on several occasions that her husband would vote for Major Knox, and had determined to do so, without my asking her at all, or wanting to have anything whatever to do with her, nor did I wish to have anything to do with her. I then got a pen and paper, and she wrote the letter. Mr. Woods was present, and Mr. Joseph Woods. Mr. Joseph Woods took the letter away, and I knew nothing of it until I heard of it in Carrick. That's all I know about it.

11011. I suppose Mr. Woods, senior, was, of course, trying if possible—I put it now by fair means—to keep Dunleavy away, or to get him to vote for the Major?—I presume so. He did not vote for the Major.

11012. Your idea was that the letter was to make him come and vote for him?—It was.

11013. Here is the letter:—

"DEAR FRANCIS.—I have arranged matters with ——— in Sligo, and am quite satisfied you should go, after you get this letter, with the party who brings it to you. Dear Francis you may be quite satisfied I have all things made right to your satisfaction, so don't come home."

Mr. Woods, junior, said, when I said to write the letter for her husband to come and vote for Major Knox, that he would get a party to vote for him, and that he was to go with this party. I did not get the letter into my possession at all; I never had it in my hand.

11014. Did you not read that letter?—No, sir; never.

11015. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Was the letter written by the woman herself?—It was.

11016. Was it read out in your presence—did you hear her say, "Don't come home?"—It was read by young Mr. Woods. I don't remember it. I was not paying attention, for I went over to the window. This was in the centre of the room. I went over and was looking out of the window during the time she was writing the letter and he was reading it.

11017. You were looking out at the window when the letter was being written?—Yes, I was.

11018. By Woods?—No, the letter was written by Mrs. Dunleavy.

11019. Was Mr. Woods near her when she was writing the letter?—No, he was standing at the other window. There were two windows, and he was at one and I was at the other, and we were both looking out during the time she was writing the letter.

11020. Had Mrs. Dunleavy been in Mr. Woods' house before you came there?—It was in my own house.

11021. What conversation had you with her before that letter was given by her?—I asked her would she write the letter for her husband to come and vote for Major Knox, as she had previously informed me she would. She frequently came bothering me about the place to say that she wanted him to vote for Major Knox, and that her husband was determined to do it, and would do it if he was quartered.

11022. Were you aware of her having made any arrangement in reference to her husband's vote?—Not any.

11023. Did you hear of any arrangement having been made with reference to her husband's vote?—Never.

11024. Did this expression at all surprise you—"Dear Francis,—I have arranged matters with a friend in Sligo;" did you pay any attention to the letter as it was read?—I did not.

11025. Do you believe she had arranged to get money for her husband?—I really could not say.

11026. If he stayed away—you could not say what your belief is on the subject?—Well, I really could not answer.

11027. I only ask you to the best of your belief—do you believe that it was so arranged?—I have no belief on it, for I know nothing whatever about it.

11028. Now, would you tell me, on the occasion of that interview with Major Knox and Mr. Lawder, did Mr. Stokes come into the room after Mr. Lawder had been there?—I believe it was after Mr. Lawder—I believe it was.

11029. Had he been sent for?—Not that I know of.

11030. He might have been sent for without your knowing it?—Oh, decidedly.

11031. Was there any expression used, after Mr. Stokes came in, to lead you to the belief that he had come into the room, having been sent for either by Major Knox or Mr. Lawder?—None that I know of.

11032. But it was after your conversation about the Youngs that he came into the room?—It was.

11033. You had fully discussed the matter before he came into the room, had you?—Well, yes; we spoke about it. I mentioned the case to them.

11034. And when Mr. Stokes came into the room, was the matter mentioned again in your presence?—I really don't remember.

11035. You do not remember?—I do not remember.

11036. But it had been fully discussed before he came?—It had.

11037. Did Mrs. Dunleavy owe you any money at the time this transaction took place?—She did.

11038. Had you been pressing her for payment?—Yes, I did; and sent for her. I did not press her; I sent for it frequently.

11039. Did you tell me you had a doubt on your mind with regard to what Mrs. Dunleavy expected as a return for writing that letter?—I know nothing at all about it.

11040. I don't ask you what you know—I want to know had you a doubt on your mind that she was to be paid?—I do not know.

11041. Now that is not the question I asked you. I am asking you have you a doubt on your mind now, reviewing that transaction, that she was to be paid, or that her husband was to be paid?—Not that I know of or could answer.

11042. Mr. Galbraith, you must answer my question; I am not asking you about what you know; I am asking you have you any doubt upon your mind?—I really could not answer. I don't know anything about it.

11043. You can answer whether you have a doubt or not?—Really I cannot answer that.

11044. You must answer it; you can tell whether you have a doubt or whether you have a belief?—Well, I have no reason to believe it.

11045. I do not want to know what your reason is; I want to know what your belief is from your knowledge of the woman and of the town, and of the whole circumstances?—My reason for sending for the woman was simply——

11046. Look here. I do not want to know your reason for sending for her; I want to know what your belief is as to whether she was or was not to get money?—I really have no belief in the matter.

11047. No belief in the matter?—No, none.

11048. And you had no belief in the matter at the time?—Certainly not.

11049. What did you mean by saying to Mr. Lawder that you did not know whether the man wanted money or not?—Oh, these are the Youngs.

11050. I am coming to their transaction now; what did you mean by saying to Mr. Lawder that you did not know whether they wanted money or not?—Well, the Youngs never mentioned anything about money to me.

11051. But you had a belief there?—I had.

11052. And you did not mention that belief to Mr. Lawder?—I did not.

11053. Why did you not mention that belief to Mr. Lawder?—He did not ask me.

11054. Did you not believe that he wanted information as to what the Youngs wanted?—I did.

11055. Why did you not tell him what your belief was?—Well, I really don't know. I can't answer that.

11056. You cannot answer that question now?—No, I cannot.

11057. You have told us that old Young told you his son had been tampered with?—I did.

11058. Did you understand him to mean that he had been tampered with by the Liberals?—I did.

11059. Did he mention who had been tampering with him?—He did not.

11060. At any time, either then or afterwards?—He did not.

11061. Had you any idea who had been tampering with him?—Not the slightest.

11062. When you went to Major Knox's whom did you first see?—Really I can't say, but I know that Major Knox himself came in very shortly afterwards.

11063. Yes, but who went in and called him?—I think the servant was the first I saw.

11064. Was there any person in the room when you came in?—No, not one. I was shown into a room, but there was no one in it.

11065. Try and recollect who came in first?—I believe it was Major Knox that came in first.

11066. Was he alone?—He was.

11067. Then just repeat again, if you please, what you said to him, and as nearly as possible following the words?—I said that Mr. Young called on me, and said that his son was tampered with, and that he had no control over him; that for himself he wanted nothing, and that anything that was given might be given to his son.

11068. This is rather important; do you swear you said that to Major Knox?—Well, I meant to convey it. I really do not swear that I said it, but I meant to convey it.

11069. This is a different account of the transaction from what you gave us five minutes ago?—No. I think it is the same.

(By order of the Court the short-hand writer read a previous part of the evidence of the witness.)

11070. Then it is not accurate what you told me a moment ago, that you told Major Knox that the older Young wanted the £40 to be given to his son?—No, I did not say that to Major Knox; or if I said it, it was an error.

11071. Would you be so kind as to repeat again to me the words that you used to Major Knox?—I really could not.

11072. I think you purported to give them before; at any rate give them as nearly as you can?—I told him about Young coming to me, and that Young told me that he had no control over his son, and that for himself he wanted nothing.

11073. You are positive you told that to Major Knox?—Well, now, I think I am confusing it. I think it was to Mr. Stokes that I told that.

11074. Try and recollect yourself, because you have given two different accounts in a very few minutes?—I know I spoke to Major Knox, and I really cannot say what exactly I said to him about the Youngs.

11075. Try and recollect?—It is a good while ago.

11076. This is a very important thing?—Yes, but I really cannot recollect exactly what I said. I know the purport of it was—I went to them about the Youngs, and I spoke to them, and told them exactly what the father said to me.

11077. That is to say, you communicated to Major Knox the purport of your conversation with the Youngs?—I did.

11078. Did you communicate to Major Knox the impression you received from that conversation?—I did.

11079. Did you tell Major Knox that you did not know whether they wanted money or not?—I believe I did.

11080. Did you communicate to Mr. Lawder your impression as to whether they wanted money or not?—I made the same statement to him as I did to Major Knox.

11081. You made the statement at different times?—Oh, yes. Major Knox was by himself, and then Mr. Lawder came in.

11082. Then did Major Knox leave the room when Mr. Lawder came in?—I really forgot that. I rather think he did not.

11083. You think they both remained?—I believe they both remained.

11084. Try and recollect what Major Knox said to Mr. Lawder when he came in; not the very words, though if you can recollect the words give them to us?—I do not indeed.

11085. Try and recollect?—Well I know he introduced me to him, and told him who I was, and Mr. Lawder I think, said, "what does the man want," and I said I did not know. He said he would see about it, or something like that. So I left and went away. It did not last, I think it was not three minutes.

11086. Had Stokes come in before you left the room?—He had.

11087. Can you tell us whether he heard any conversation; I wish you would think?—I don't think he did. I don't think he did during the time I was in it.

11088. You told us a little while ago that Stokes knew why you were there; how do you know he knew why you were there?—Not to my knowledge I never mentioned anything to him of the sort.

11089. You say now, at any rate, that you do not know whether Mr. Stokes knew why you were there or not?—I beg your pardon.

11090. You said I thought, a little while ago, that Mr. Stokes knew why you were at Major Knox's, that is, the reason why you went there?—No, I don't know that.

11091. Then you did not?—No; simply I told you everything I know about it.

11092. Did you ever hear about the four Ryans having got money?—No. I did not know anything about any one.

NINTH DAY.
October 15.
John Galbraith.

11093. You are an intimate friend of Mr. Stokes?—I am.

11094. Had you never a conversation about this transaction afterwards?—About which transaction?

11095. About the transaction with the Youngs?—No, never till I saw him at Carrick.

11096. What did you say in Carrick?—I really could not say—ordinary conversation about them.

11097. Did you talk about the Youngs?—No, not in particular.

11098. Did you talk about them in general?—Well I don't remember.

11099. But this affair of the Youngs was rather a remarkable transaction?—I don't remember ever mentioning anything about the Youngs in Carrick.

11100. You knew that the inquiry was into bribery and you knew that you had bribed, or had joined Stokes in bribery?—I did not know that I had bribed.

11101. You knew that you were privy to bribery?—Yes, I did.

11102. You had the money as trustee?—I had.

11103. You knew that you had it in your pocket?—Not in my pocket.

11104. Well, that you had it in your hands?—Yes.

11105. And that Stokes was the man who paid this money?—I knew that.

11106. To pay for the voting for Knox?—I did. I believe it was. Yes.

11107. Had you any doubt about it?—Yes.

11108. Had you a doubt about it?—I had not.

11109. Can you not recollect whether you had any conversation with Mr. Stokes with regard to that money at the time of the petition, where you both were?—I don't believe we had, for he stopped in a different place altogether from me, and I scarcely met him.

11110. Why did you not tell the judge about this?—I was not asked.

11111. You knew what the object of the inquiry was, of course, before Judge Keogh?—(Answer inaudible, if any.)

11112. Where did Mr. Stokes get the £40?—I don't know exactly.

11113. "Exactly;" but you can guess where he got it—Well, I believed it——

11114. Yes?—I have no knowledge of it.

11115. Where did he get the money?—I have no knowledge of it.

11116. You used the word "exactly." Give the name now that was in your head when you say you did not know where he got it exactly. Tell me the name in your head?—I really don't know.

11117. What do you mean by "not exactly?"—Well, I do not know exactly where he got it.

11118. Where did he get it *in*exactly?—I don't know, any more than that I had a belief that he got it through Major Knox or some of his friends. That was my idea, but Mr. Stokes never told me.

11119. Which of his friends?—I could not say.

11120. Which of them was in your head when you said "not exactly," because I don't believe the Major himself gave the money?—Well, I don't know.

11121. Which of his friends did you mean when you said "not exactly?"—I could not say.

11122. Which amongst the three names—the three of them that were all there, and Sligo men?—I don't know.

11123. Did you believe that Mr. Lawder gave the money?—I could not say.

11124. Do you mean to say that you did not form a belief on that subject?—I did not—I really did not; that's honest and true.

11125. You thought it was from Major Knox or some of his friends?—He never mentioned it to me. That was only my idea.

11126. Did you give your evidence to any solicitor for the Carrick petition?—No, I gave it to some barrister; I think he is some small-sized gentleman; I don't know his name.

11127. To a barrister?—I really could not say what he is. He was in Major Knox's interest.

11128. Was it taken down in writing?—It was.

11129. Were you asked about the Youngs?—No.

11130. Was your evidence about the Youngs taken down?—No.

11131. Did you tell anyone in Carrick that you had the money—the half notes?—No, I did not.

11132. Did you ever tell Mr. Lawder that you had them?—I did not.

11133. After you got the £40 that night before the polling, or some days before the polling, whichever it was——?—It must have been some days before it.

11134. Some days before it. Did you tell anyone you had them?—Not one.

11135. If you had been asked in Carrick about the £40 half notes, would you have told the whole truth?—I would.

11136. If you had been asked had you got any money directly or indirectly, would you have told?—I would.

11137. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Was it into your shop Mrs. Dunleavy walked?—It was.

11138. Was she wanting to buy anything?—No.

11139. Young Mr. Woods came into the shop afterwards?—He did.

11140. Did you go upstairs?—Yes.

11141. The three of you?—Yes.

11142. Did Mr. Woods say on that occasion that the place was too much exposed—the place where they generally buy fancy things?—Not that I have any knowledge of whatever.

11143. Why did you all three go upstairs?—Because we thought it better to go out of the public shop, and we went up to the paper wareroom.

11144. What was the business you were about to discuss and arrange?—To get her to write the letter to her husband at Roscrea.

11145. To get her?—Yes.

11146. What inducement did you hold out to get her to write that letter?—None.

11147. None?—None.

11148. What did you say to her about writing the letter?—I asked her would she write the letter to her husband at Roscrea, as she had previously promised me, and she said she would do anything I wished.

11149. When did she previously promise you?—Oh, she had been coming several times—both she and her husband about an account that they owed me, and she used to introduce the subject.

11150. How did you get her to make the promise?—Never said anything more than asked her, and she did it.

11151. Did it for you without your saying anything?—Yes, decidedly.

11152. Were there many people in the shop when she came into the shop?—There was not.

11153. Was there anybody in the shop except herself and Mr. Woods?—Oh yes, there was.

11154. Did you produce any notes on that occasion, or roll of notes?—Not one.

11155. Did you produce any money, and keep it—not handing it to her, but merely showing it?—I had not a pound on my person in the world at that time, nor I never carry notes about me. I had not a single pound.

11156. Now do you remember what conversation passed between you before you got her to write that letter?—I do not, no more than just what I have stated.

11157. Did she write the letter all at once without discussion, or think over the matter?—She did. There was not the space of five minutes, and Mr. Woods hurried away and took the letter with him, and I never saw or heard of it till I heard it in Carrick, nor knew what was done with it.

11158. But the letter was read out to you?—It was.

11159. Did you make any observation on it, or say anything on it in court?—I did not. I made no observation on it. Mr. Woods said he thought that would do, and that he would take it, and have it taken by a party.

11160. You said she owed you money for rent?—No; the house in Sligo is the one I live in.

11161. Did not you say something about her owing you some money?—Oh, I did, about her owing me money for shop goods sold.

11162. You referred to a previous promise. At the time she made that previous promise was there any reference to the debt she owed you for shop goods?—No, not a word about it.

11163. The Chief Commissioner.—Tell me, now—I shall just ask you in conclusion—when you engaged in the transaction of bribing the Youngs, did you believe that you had Major Knox's sanction?—I had no knowledge. I had no communication with Major Knox about it whatever.

11164. Did you believe that you had Mr. Lawder's sanction?—Well, I was under that impression; he did not tell me so, but I was under that impression, and you know it was Stokes—I should correct myself there—I did not—it was Stokes that came——

11165. Stokes came, but you consented to be a trustee; and I tell you that in that you were as much engaged in bribery as Stokes—every bit, in point of law and fact, although you did not consider yourself so at the time?—I did not. I knew nothing at all about it.

11166. Why were you under the impression that you had Mr. Lawder's sanction?—Nothing more than having mentioned it to him.

11167. What did you mention to him?—I mentioned the case of the Youngs.

11168. Tell all the words that you mentioned to Lawder?—Really I could not.

11169. No more than what you have already told?—Not a single word.

11170. But you did believe you had Mr. Lawder's sanction?—Well, he did not say anything; he said he would see about it.

11171. Yes, you remember his distinctly saying, "I will see about it?"—I do.

11172. Of course that only meant money for the Youngs?—No. I had no knowledge about it at the time. I did not know a single thing about it till Mr. Stokes came up with the money, and the Youngs were in my place, and Mr. Stokes threw a half note down on the ground and one on the table. I took up the one on the table, and Young took up the other, and I kept it for him until after the petition.

11173. Why was it kept from them till after the petition? who told you to do that? someone must have told you to do that?—I think it was Stokes. I could not say that he told me to keep it till after the petition; but he told me to keep it.

11174. That is what I want to know. I want to know why did you keep it back; for if you told the judge that you had £40 in half notes, he would have directed you at once to bring it into court, in order that the person might never have got it. I want to know why did you keep it till after the petition—who told you to do that?—I don't know that anyone told me, indeed.

11175. You said a short time ago that you thought it was Mr. Stokes?—He told me to keep the money certainly, and I kept the half note.

11176. Till when?—I don't think he mentioned any time.

11177. They were of no use to you?—At the time that I had them—oh no, certainly not; nor I did not want to make any use of them in the world.

11178. I understand that perfectly well. I want to know why did you keep them till after the trial of the petition? Did the Youngs ask you for them?—No, not till afterwards. Afterwards he did—the younger Young asked me.

11179. Were the Youngs at Carrick?—I believe they were.

11180. Subpœnaed as witnesses?—No. I don't know that; I don't think they were.

11181. What brought them there?—I don't know.

11182. Did you see them there?—I did.

11183. Where did you see them?—I saw them in the street.

11184. You did not see them in court?—No; I did not.

11185. Where were they in the street?—Going up towards the court-house.

11186. Did you see them in court?—No; I don't remember seeing them in court to my knowledge.

11187. You saw them in the street—who were they with?—Well, the father and son were walking together when I saw them. There was no one with them that I know.

11188. Now, were you at the meeting when Mr. Abbott was here?—I was.

11189. Tell—you appear to be an accurate man—who else were there?—I really could not say; the room was crowded with——

11190. Electors?—Electors; yes. I believed them to be electors.

11191. What was the object of the meeting?—I think to introduce Mr. Abbott. That was the only object I know of.

11192. As the Conservative candidate?—Yes.

11193. Was it understood amongst you, that Major Knox could not stand at the next election?—I had no conversation with them. I just merely went; I got a notice from Mr. Roger Robinson, I think, to attend.

11194. That is a circular?—A circular, I should have said—yes. I had no conversation with anyone in it till I left. I heard Mr. Abbott addressing the people; and I think they had Mr. Lestrange as chairman, as well as I remember.

11195. Have any of the men been complaining to you, that since the election they have not been paid?—Not one. I had no connexion, nor never mixed up with elections in my life, until this, nor had anything to do with them.

11196. About what particulars was your evidence taken down at Carrick for the trial—I mean in reference to what cases?—Oh, Mrs. Dunleavy's only.

11197. Was it taken down at Sligo, or at Carrick?—In Carrick.

11198. You have told us you do not know who took it down?—He was a small, dark gentleman; I don't know his name. I know he was in Major Knox's interest.

11199. Was there a clerk there for him to write down?—No; it was the same man himself.

11200. Did you hear Mr. Stokes's evidence at Carrick?—No, I did not. I read it; but I did not hear it. I was not in court at the time.

11201. Were you examined before or after Mr. Stokes?—I think it was after him.

11202. After Mr. Stokes?—I think it was.

11203. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—When old Young told you that he was badly treated by the Conservatives, and would vote against them, what did you say then?—I don't remember making any reply.

11204. That is not likely. You were active and anxious for the success of the Conservative candidate?—Well, I was not very anxious indeed.

11205. You have told us, that you immediately went and comunicated with Major Knox, and Mr. Lawder; so that I presume, you took some interest in the matter?—Well, that's the only interest I took in it.

11206. I ask you again, what took place after that with the Youngs?—I went down, as I told you before, to Major Knox's lodgings, and I told him about it.

11207. You are positive that no further conversation took place between Young and you?—I am.

11208. Then you now have no doubt about it, that after Young told you he was badly treated by the Conservatives, and would vote against them, you said nothing?—Well, I don't remember saying anything, except it might be a casual expression, that I was sorry for it, or something of that sort. I had nothing to do with it.

11209. The son was not there on that occasion?—He was not.

NINTH DAY.
October 15.
John Galbraith.

11210. And you did not tell Young to come back again?—I did not.

(The witness was told that he might withdraw for the present.)

11211. The Chief Commissioner.—If Mr. Stokes be recalled, you ought to be in court and to attend to his evidence.

11212. Witness.—Very well.

11213. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—You will certainly have to be examined again, and I think you had better be in court when Mr. Lawder is being examined.

(The witness withdrew.)

William Petrie.

William Petrie sworn and examined.

11214. The Chief Commissioner.—Whom did you vote for at the last election?—Major Knox.

11215. And for whom at the previous election?—Sergeant Armstrong.

11216. Were you one of those who distributed the money for the Sergeant?—I was.

11217. Had you made out a list as the other gentlemen did?—No, I had no list, I had only a few parties, I can tell you their names. I received £130, and I gave £30 to Atkinson, £30 to Jackson—Alexander Jackson, I think, £40 to James Burns, and £30 to one Wilson.

11218. Is that all?—That's all.

11219. Why did you give these different sums of money to these men, and why did you think they were entitled to them?—Well, they complained that they lost their business and trade from it, and were injured by the election.

11220. Had you canvassed them?—I did.

11221. Describe what each of these men is by trade and occupation?—Well, Jackson keeps a small nursery outside the town.

11222. Had you any connexion with him in business?—To no extent at all; perhaps only buying some small things not worth speaking about.

11223. Did any of these people owe you any money at the time of the election?—No, not a penny.

11224. How did you arrange; did you bring that list to a meeting?—When we had the meeting in the Imperial hotel, I said what each of them should get.

11225. And what you said was agreed to?—Exactly.

11226. Had you ever distributed money before in this way?—Never in my life.

11227. Why did you begin to do it in that way?—Well, I was very anxious for the return of the Sergeant, I suppose that's how I got involved in it.

11228. At that time you were anxious for the return of the Sergeant, was there any word given to those men that a trifle might be going after the election?—Oh, no; I suppose they understood that they might be considered afterwards if anything was going, but there was no real bargain.

11229. Oh, there never is a real bargain; but didn't you know when you canvassed them that they perfectly well understood that if any money was going after the election, you would get their share of it for them?—Well, I believe some of them did think that.

11230. Which in particular. Well I believe Jackson and Atkinson, and Wilson too, might have understood it that way.

11231. When you say "might," you mean that they did understand that you would do your best for them?—Oh exactly,—that I would get a share for them.

11232. How did you imagine at the time of the election that any money might be going?—I heard no mention at all about it.

11233. Of course not; but you never had been engaged in anything of the kind before?—No, never.

11234. And these men, as far as you were concerned at the beginning of the matter, you were perfectly innocent before that?—It was my first start.

11235. How did you imagine that at the Sergeant's election money would be going or might be going?—Indeed I don't say I did. I did not imagine anything at all about it.

11236. Did you write up to the Sergeant at all?—Well Mr. Phillips wrote, and I signed the letter. I put my name to it.

11237. The Sergeant here said he understood from the letters Mr. Phillips wrote to him, and that you wrote to him, that promises had been made in Sligo by his friends and supporters; did you mean to convey that in your letter?—No.

11238. That is what the Sergeant understood?—That's not what I understood to convey or that I put my name to. That they were expecting it, that was it; something to that effect, at least to my understanding.

11239. That the voters were expecting it?—Yes.

11240. And that they would be badly treated if they did not get it; do you know that phrase here "badly treated?"—Well I am perfectly satisfied that was not in the letter. I don't think it was.

11241. Before you wrote the letter saying that money was expected, had some of the men been asking you?—No, not a penny

11242. Then you put down these men's names on the list that the Sergeant was to get without their having asked you for a penny from the day of polling?—They complained that they lost their business by it, and I think Jackson said his landlord had ill-used him, or taken land from him, or something. The others complained that they lost their business greatly by it.

11243. Was not that with the object of getting you to give them some money?—I have no doubt of it.

11244. Now you voted for the Major this time?—I did.

11245. Was that because you agreed with his opinions and principles?—Oh indeed no, for I don't bother myself about politics at all.

11246. About politics at all?—No. I may say I was decided not to interfere at all until the very last.

11247. Do you know Mr. Stokes?—Perfectly well.

11248. Did you know anything about this bribery business until Mr. Stokes was examined in court?—No; I never heard a word about it.

11249. Can you give the Court no information about anything at the last election?—Nothing whatever.

11250. You have nothing whatever to say to it?—Nothing whatever to do with it.

11251. Directly or indirectly?—Directly or indirectly.

11252. Did you hear that anything of the kind was going on; did you attend at any meeting?—I was at, I think, two or three meetings in what was called Hagarty's house.

11253. Because he was not there at all?—Well, his name was above it as the last party that occupied it I suppose.

11254. Were you present when any lists were gone over?—No, never.

11255. Did you know when the Youngs were asked?—I never knew the Youngs at all. I would not know them if they were standing there.

11256. Or the four Ryans?—I did not know them at all. I know one Ryan a blacksmith here.

11257. Do you know Captain Ethelred Knox?—I know Mr. Utred Knox; I don't know whether he is a captain or not.

11258. Do you know his brother, Mr. Utred Knox, who was clerk of the peace here?—I know him very well.

11259. Do you know his brother, Captain Ethelred?—I know another Mr. Knox that lives at Mount Falcon. I had some fishing, and I saw him when I was there out fishing, but I don't know his name.

11260. This gentleman is a captain in the Sligo regiment?—Well, I would not know them by name at all unless I saw them. I know the one that lives at Mount Falcon, by being up that way.

11261. I must ask you about Mr. O'Hara's case—did you ever promise him £25 not to register his vote?—No, not I.

11262. Had you anything to say to such transactions at all?—No, never—nothing but what I mentioned to you during the Sergeant's election.

11263. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Do you know a man named Michael M'Goldrick?—I know the two M'Goldricks—father and son.

11264. Did you ever give any money to either of the M'Goldricks?—Oh, never; nor never mentioned the subject to them. They were pledged to Major Knox months before I knew anything at all about it.

11265. You had nothing to say to it?—Nothing whatever.

11266. How much did you get to distribute after Sergeant Armstrong's election?—A hundred and thirty pounds. I took the receipts and sent them up the next day to Dublin.

11267. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—That was paid a long time after the election?—Twelve months I think.

11268. Could you give us the Christian names of the men?—Well, I think they are Alexander Jackson and James Burns.

11269. What is Wilson's Christian name?—I think Thomas.

11270. What is Atkinson's Christian name?—Well I don't know, but he is in Market-street here and cannot be far away at all; it will be easy to find him.

11271. Is it John?—Well I think it is John.

11272. Did you never hear of money going before that election?—I never mixed in elections before.

11273. Did you hear of it?—Oh, I never heard of anything at all about it?

11274. Because it was rather queer, that expectation that the Sergeant was to pay people if they never got any money before?—At former elections I voted several times. I think I voted before the Sergeant's election, for Macdonogh. I have been here sixteen or seventeen years altogether; and I think I voted also once or twice for Mr. Wynne—or once for him.

11275. You told us that you were not induced to vote till the very day of Major Knox's election?—Not to vote for him. I did not intend to vote at all.

11276. Were you threatened or assaulted?—Oh, when I was walking up the streets I was sometimes interrupted.

11277. Was any damage done to your house?—Yes; in my own house two miles out of town the windows were broken. My son's house was assailed the week before the election, and the windows were broken there also.

11278. Was an attack ever made on you—I do not mean jostling, but an attack?—Oh, well I can't say that any serious attack was made on me. I had to take shelter several times coming along the street. One time I went in to Stokes's; another time into Brien's 11279. Just describe what it was; perhaps you think it a more trifling thing than I should; were there sticks used?—No.

11280. Or stones thrown?—No, there were no stones thrown there; they just got round about me—that was all.

11281. Was it these transactions that decided you to vote for Major Knox—were you resolved that you would not be bullied?—Well, it helped it a good deal.

11282. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—What decided you to vote for Major Knox?—Well, really I could not exactly say, for I did not intend, till almost within a few days of the election, to vote at all. That was the truth of the matter.

11283. Who persuaded you to vote?—Nobody persuaded me. I never would be persuaded by anybody. I would exercise my own mind upon it.

11284. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—On which side do you believe was the mob that smashed your windows?—Well there was no mob on the Major's side that I observed. I think they were all on Captain Flanagan's side. I think there was a feeling against me from my not going with them as I did formerly.

11285. The attempts, in fact, to intimidate you did not succeed—but did you believe that that was the object with which those things were done?—Well, it might have been. I understood that coming on a few days before it.

11286. The Chief Commissioner.—Did you go to the meeting at the Victoria hotel to meet Mr. Abbott?—No, nor do I know anything at all about that.

11287. Did Major Knox ever oblige you in any way before you voted for him?—Well, about a year or two years before it he, I think, gave some assistance in getting the Sligo fishery opened earlier. I also applied to the Sergeant about that. Our fishing was not getting fair play with other fishings. When I promised to vote for Mr. Macdonogh first, I asked him, if a fishing bill should be brought into the House of Commons, to give all the assistance he could to pass it.

11288. That is, to have the season opened earlier?—I am also largely connected with the salmon fishing in many parts of Ireland. So many changes were going on in the country, that I said I did not care how he voted, or what his politics were, provided that if a fishing bill were brought into the House, he would give me assistance to pass it.

11289. Provided your rivers were well looked after?—The fishing interests, exactly; that was it. I suppose that was why I did not vote for him the second time, because he did not do it, though he promised it. I went to his house in Dublin, with Mr. Sedley, when the bill was passing, and I showed him the clauses that interfered with the fishing, and he promised to go to London, but he did not do it. As far as I was concerned, I might as well have been without a representative for Sligo; and so, may be, that was what made me take such an interest in the Sergeant. I thought he would be better—at least, he did what he said.

(The witness withdrew).

William Young sworn and examined.

11290. The Chief Commissioner.—You are an elector?—Yes.

11291. How long have you been an elector?—I voted for Somers against Townley.

11292. We have it in evidence that you and your son got half notes for £40 from Mr. Stokes before the last election?—I believe my son got the money, but I got none.

11293. Do you know Mr. Galbraith?—I do.

11294. Had you any conversation with him about voting a week before the election?—Well, I think not. That is, for myself I never interfered.

11295. I do not mean for yourself—did you tell him about your son?—Oh, no; I told him nothing. What I said to him was this, that I would vote for the Major myself, but that I had no influence over any other man living but myself.

11296. That you had no influence over your son?—Yes; I had no influence over my son.

11297. Did you intimate that your son wanted to get something—come, out with it?—Well, I think not; I think I did not.

11298. Did you think your son would not take it?—I don't say he would not take it; I say he would take it.

11299. Don't you know he did take it?—Yes, I do now; but I did not know it at that time.

11300. You did not know he would take it at that time?—You know I did not know it at that time, nor till it was done. I had no conversation with the other man, Stokes.

11301. No, you had no conversation with him at all; but you told Mr. Galbraith that you had no influence over your son?—Yes; none whatsoever over my son, or over any other man living.

NINTH DAY.
October 15.
William Young.

11302. At that time you were afraid that your son would go and vote against his party?—Well, I was.

11303. You and your son belong to the Conservative party here?—Yes.

11304. And you told this to Mr. Galbraith in order that your son might in some way——?—I just did not tell him that; I told him what I told you at first.

11305. Tell it again now?—We were chatting, you know, according as the election was coming on—everyone was talking about it. I said to him that we had two votes, but only one that I was sure of, for that I could influence no other man than myself. That's all I said to him.

11306. Now, were you present at any conversation between your son and Stokes?—No, never; nor did Stokes give me any money.

11307. The money was all for your son?—Yes.

11308. Did the son ever give you a bit of the money?—No, never.

11309. Then he got the whole £40?—Yes.

11310. You voted for the Major?—I voted for the Major.

11311. When did you know that your son had got £40 in half notes?—Some time; I could not exactly say.

11312. Did you know before the polling day?—I think he did not get the whole of it until after.

11313. He did not get half notes before it?—I believe now he did; but at the time I did not know.

11314. Do you mean to say your son never told you that he got £40 in half notes?—He did not for some time—he did not do it at that time; but I would have known by his appearance, and by his gesture and his looks, that he had got it

11315. Although he did not say he had got the money, you knew, by his appearance, his gesture, and his looks, that he had it?—Yes.

11316. How much did you know by his appearance that he had?—I suspected that he had got the full £40; that was the money they were saying they were giving everyone.

11317. Who were saying?—Oh, I could not say who it was; my memory does not serve me. There were a thousand things talked about the election.

11318. We will try and refresh your memory. I use your own expression—"You knew by his appearance, looks and gestures, that he had got £40?"—Yes.

11319. Whom did you hear talking about the £40?—We did not hear them talking about it. I heard no person talking about his having got the money, but after the thing occurred I knew he had got the £40 then. I did not know it at the time. I now positively swear that I never got a penny, or a shilling, or a sixpence.

11320. You would not take it?—Well, I don't say that.

11321. Will you describe how you knew by his looks and gestures?—I could not say another word to you about it.

11322. Did you ever get any money before?—At the time Counsellor Jones came in to me—I did not go to him—on the occasion of Sadlier's election he gave me £20, and in an hour or an hour and a half afterwards I sent for him and gave it back to him; and since the hour I was born I never handled a penny.

11323. Why did you give it back to him?—Because I did not think it right to keep it.

11324. Was it because it was not enough?—No; because I would not take it at all. I did not keep it; I did not think it was right to keep it at all; and I now swear positively here—and there are a great many men round me—that a single penny of election money I never got since.

11325. There were a great number of men giving out money at this last election?—So I hear.

11326. Who did you hear were giving out money at this last election?—I did not hear it until now. I could not believe it. I can't believe it after having heard it.

11327. Tell me, now, who you heard was giving out money?—Well, Stokes, I hear by his own evidence, was giving it to others.

11328. Go on now?—I cannot tell you.

11329. Stokes, I knew myself was?—I can tell you nothing except what I saw in the papers since the trial began. I can tell you nothing before that.

11330. Is your son in court?—He is.

(The witness was directed to leave the table.)

John Young

John Young sworn and examined.

11331. The Chief Commissioner.—Had you any conversation with your father about voting?—I used to hear him saying that he never got any money, and that he would vote for Major Knox without money; and I used to be greatly ashamed when I heard him making those avowals.

11332. Why were you ashamed?—That he would be so coarse in the breed as not to get money. I thought he ought to be brighter than that.

11333. Did you reproach him then, for not being willing to take money?—No; I told him he was quite right to do as he had always done, and to let me vote the way I liked.

11334. Did you mean by that, that you would take money?—I did not mean that exactly, because I told him one day that they treated him very shabbily before, at other elections; that out of election business he always lost by them, while others gained.

11335. In plain language, you wanted to get £40 for yourself?—My whole mind was centred on getting the most money I could.

11336. Did you convey that to your father?—I did not. No; it was no use.

11337. Did you tell anyone that you wanted to get £40?—I looked about me, to see could I see anyone that would be giving out money. I saw Mr. Stokes going about the houses—getting into voters' houses, and that he had a very benevolent smile on his features; and I thought that if any plot was going on he was captain-general, or something. One day coming up Market-street, I caught his eye as he was passing. I don't know did I say that I wanted to speak to him; but he beckoned me to follow him, and we went into Mr. Galbraith's. I told him then, that if he treated me honorably, I would vote for the Conservatives, and that if he did not, I would vote——

11338. Was Mr Galbraith by at that time?—He was.

11339. Go on now; what occurred?—Stokes walked up and down the room, and said a whole lot of things that I don't mind—all nonsense, that I could not remember about; but at the same time he began saying to me, "mind, there is no talk about money now." He said to me first, "how much did I expect?" said I, "I think £20 would be a fair sum." "Well," said he, "that's £20 for you, and £20 for your father, making £40." "Yes;" said I to him—"that's just it." He walked up and down the room for a long time, and said, "mind, there is no talk about money now; it is about forty engravings that we are talking." I was going to say to him, "for God's sake, Mr. Stokes, don't be mocking the law." So I remained silent, and he did all the talking; and the end of it was, that he left half notes on the table behind him. He and Mr. Galbraith had their backs turned, and I did not know which of them left the money there. I told him that I would leave the other half notes with Mr. Galbraith—that I had confidence in Mr. Galbraith, but that I would have none in them. The other half notes was then left with Mr. Galbraith till after the election. Mr. Galbraith said he would pay it in the March after the election.

11340. You got half notes for £40?—I did.

11341. And you were paid by Mr. Galbraith?—No, not by Mr. Galbraith, but by a shop-assistant of his named Noble.

11342. After the petition?—Yes.

11343. Were you in Carrick at the time of the petition?—I was.

11344. Who brought you there?—I got the money from Willy Ward.

11345. How much?—I think 6*s.* 6*d.*

11346. Was Willy Ward serving the summonses?—Yes.

11347. Then you went to Carrick?—I did.

11348. Did anyone take down your evidence in Carrick?—I was not examined at all, nor did anyone take down my evidence.

11349. Did anyone come to you on the Liberal side to give information?—No one.

11350. Did you get any money while you were in Carrick?—I did not.

11351. You got no money for your support?—I stopped in a house there, and I believe the Conservatives paid the bill.

11352. That is what I want to know. You were in the Conservative house?—I was.

11353. Were there any other electors there with you?—A man named Petit, and a man named Hicks or Hickson, I don't know which. They were all in it.

11354. What was the name of the house?—Dunne's, I think.

11355. A publican?—I don't know what it was; the door was shut.

11356. How many of you were staying there during the petition?—I don't recollect. There might be eight, or nine, or ten.

11357. Did you get any money while you were there—any pocket-money from the Conservative side?—I did not get any at all. I thought I had got enough of money, and I did not look for any more.

11358. Did you ever ask for the other half notes before the petition came on?—I asked for the half notes the morning after the election. Mr. Galbraith said he would give them the morning after the election. He said, "I did not say it at all; Mr. Stokes said it." I said to him, "When you were present and allowed Mr. Stokes to say it you said it by your acquiescence." He said, "Not at all; I did not say it myself, but you will get it; you need not be in a hurry; you need not run at me for the balance."

11359. You gave none of the money to your father?—I never gave him a penny of it.

11360. Did you ever see a gentleman they call Captain Knox?—I saw him at the Carrick petition when I was in the Court-house, but I never saw him before that.

11361. Who pointed him out to you?—I saw him along with the Major. I don't recollect.

11362. Was any other elector paid the way you were paid, in half notes?—I don't know of any other elector.

11363. I don't mean that you were by at it; but was there any other man that you heard of as having got half notes?—I did not hear of anybody but myself being paid.

11364. In half notes?—No, nor in any other way.

11365. Did you insist on getting the money?—I insisted on getting the money.

11366. If you had not got the half notes how would you have voted?—I would not have voted at all.

11367. Did you demand from Mr. Stokes to get the money lodged for you?—I demanded of him to give me money. He said it would not be a fit way to give half notes; that they were half "engravings," and that he would leave the other half with Mr. Galbraith.

11368. You had confidence in Mr. Galbraith's word of honour?—That he would return the half notes.

11369. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Did your father know that the £40 was to be given for his vote and yours?—He did not know anything about it at all. I never told him a word about it, but remained silent. I know he suspected I got the money.

11370. You did not tell him anything at all about the money before you got it?—I never told him until after the election that I got the money. I was afraid to tell him for fear of the election petition, lest he would give evidence, or something of the sort, if he were summoned, and betray the person that gave the money sooner than perjure himself; so I told him nothing.

11371. The Chief Commissioner.—When you went to the Carrick petition, if you had been called as a witness, would you have told the truth?—I would not.

11372. Why would you not have told the truth?—Because, as I told young Mr. Woods, the sin of perjury was a very awful sin, and the sin of betraying one's friend was also an awful sin; but there was an infinite difference in magnitude between the two.

11373. You told that to young Mr. Woods?—I did.

11374. When did you tell him that?—When the petition was coming on.

11375. What is young Mr. Woods' Christian name?—Joseph.

11376. Did he know that you got money?—I don't know. What he said to me was—"I want to know what evidence you have against Major Knox?"

11377. Just so—go on?—I told him I had no evidence to give against Major Knox; that I got no money, and that I did not think that anybody had a right to betray either a friend or an enemy.

11378. How long was that before the petition?—I don't know.

11379. Was it after you were served with a subpœna?—It was.

11380. I suppose there were a number of other names in the subpœna that you were served with along with your own?—I did not read any but my own.

11381. Were there a number of other names in it?—I don't recollect. I only minded my own name in the subpœna.

11382. Did you tell Mr. Woods that you considered it a greater crime to betray your friend than to commit perjury?—I did.

11383. Did you leave him under the impression that you would commit perjury rather than betray a friend?—I just told him. I don't know under what impression I left him.

11384. Did you give him any information?—I did not tell him I got any money at all, so he did not know. What I told him was that if I had it to do, I thought it was a great deal an awfuller sin to betray one's friends—to swear on them; that though my heart might be bursting with the idea of committing perjury, the other was an awfuller sin, and that I would not swear on the person at all that trusted me.

11385. You told him that?—I did.

11386. That you would not swear on any person that trusted you?—Yes.

11387. What did Mr. Woods say?—He said nothing at all, but went away.

11388. Did he take any note of what you said?—He took no note; he had neither pen nor pencil in his hand.

11389. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Did you never ask Galbraith for the money but once?—I asked him that once, and then I asked him again; and shortly afterwards Mr. Noble told me, one night, that he would change the half notes, and brought me in, and took the half notes, and gave me the whole ones instead of them.

11390. That was after the petition?—After the petition.

11391. You never asked him between the election and the petition about the notes?—I may have asked him more than once, but I don't recollect. I was often talking to him.

11392. Do not you believe you asked him more than once?—I believe now, when you put me in mind of it, that I may have asked him twice about it. I do not remember.

NINTH DAY.
October 15.
John Young.

11393. What did he tell you the second time?—Something like this, that he would surely give them—did I think he was going to keep them.

11394. Did he give any reason for not giving them?—No, no reason whatever; only, "did I think he was going to keep them."

11395. Were you subpœnaed on the Liberal side at the Carrick petition?—Ward gave me the subpœna; I suppose he is for the Liberals.

11396. You were not examined?—No.

11397. Did you give your evidence to anybody?—I did not; I gave no evidence to anybody.

11398. Did nobody ask you what evidence you could give?—Nobody but young Mr. Woods, who asked what I was going to swear against Captain Knox.

11399. The Chief Commissioner.—Did you leave Sligo at all?—I never left Sligo at all.

11400. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Was your father not in the house when Mr. Stokes brought you in with Mr. Galbraith?—I think he was behind the counter and I was standing at the door when I met Stokes, and I went in to Galbraith's.

11401. He was behind the counter?—In his own shop.

11402. Is your shop next to Galbraith's?—Yes.

11403. Where were you standing?—At the door of my father's shop.

11404. Then Stokes beckoned you on to Galbraith's?—Yes.

11405. And did your father follow you in?—No, he did not.

11406. Did your father ever tell you he had any conversation with Galbraith?—He did not.

11407. Did Galbraith say anything about your father having been speaking to him, or Stokes?—I don't think he did. I don't recollect anything. I was so occupied about getting the money from Stokes that I did not mind anything else.

11408. Who took you to the Conservative house at Carrick?—A man named Petit showed me the house, and said I might go into it. I met him at the door of the hotel where a whole lot of people were in Carrick for Captain Knox.

11409. Did he tell you to pay nothing?—He did not tell me anything, only I went in and stopped at the house; I got no bill; and when I went away I paid nothing.

11410. You paid nothing?—No, beyond a shilling to the servant.

11411. You were asked for nothing?—I was not asked for anything.

11412. Did you expect to pay nothing?—I did not expect to pay anything.

11413. Who gave you the by-word that you had to pay nothing when you went to that hotel in the strange place?—I think there was a report that none of the Conservative witnesses would have to pay anything at the petition.

11414. You were not a Conservative witness, you know?—Well, none of the Conservatives that were summoned by the Liberal party.

11415. The Chief Commissioner.—Was it Joseph Woods that made the remark about your evidence?—Yes.

11416. Is he the gentleman that is now away?—Yes.

11417. Where did you hear he was?—I heard he was in San Francisco.

11418. When did you see him last?—I don't recollect. It is a long time ago.

(The witness was ordered to stand down.)

William Young.

William Young re-examined.

11419. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Do you swear positively that you did not tell Mr. Galbraith that you had been badly treated by the Conservatives, and would vote against them?—Well, I might have said that to more than him.

11420. But did you say it to him?—I might have said it to him. I said it to many a man.

11421. Did you intend to vote against them?—No, I did not. I never voted against them.

11422. I know you never did?—I might have said to him, on my oath now, that they treated me badly, and that I would not vote for them again; but I did not speak the language at the time that I meant.

11423. Why did you not speak the language you meant?—I'll just tell you the case, now, simply. I was a poor man in the borough, and I heard that they were giving money to the party, and they never gave me a penny, and I was angry with them.

11424. You wanted your son to get some?—If I got some money I would have taken it—I don't deny that; but I did not get it, nor I never asked a penny, nor they never gave me any. I never asked them at all.

11425. If you had got money you would have taken it?—I might have taken it after all was over.

11426. You did not try to get it?—No, I never asked it.

11427. You were content to know that your son got it?—In this last case I knew nothing about it, no more than you did, till it was over.

11428. You told us, you know, about your son's appearance?—Yes, after he got it.

11429. Was that after he had got the half notes?—I knew nothing at all about it until he had got the money in full.

11430. Did not you believe before the election that your son had got money?—I did believe that he got it, but I could not say it. I believe many a thing that I can't say.

11431. I only want to know what your belief was?—I believe he got the money, but I could not say how he got it. I could not say positively.

11432. Did you intend him to get the money?—No, I did not. I did not care whether he got it or not.

11433. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—You know the £40 was given for the two votes?—Oh, I did not know what it was given for. He got the money and I got none of it, nor I did not want any of it, nor I did not ask it. You know the man has a place of his own.

(The witness withdrew.)

11434. John Young.—I wish to explain the statement as to my being badly treated. There was a report at Macdonogh's election that Mr. John Lyons had got £250 or something, and that out of this identical money he offered our landlord £100 for a lease of one house, out of which we were to be put; and the landlord wrote to us saying, although we promised never to put you out while you paid the rent, you must give us £50 fine. That is what I meant by being badly treated.

11435. William Young.—And I paid the £50, and John Lyons, who is now in his grave, offered the £100 for the house over my head after I had voted for the Conservatives; and when I was angry I said they treated me badly.

(The witnesses withdrew.)

Patrick O'Brien sworn and examined.

Patrick O'Brien.

11436. The Chief Commissioner.—Whom did you vote for at the last election?—Major Knox.

11437. Whom did you vote for at the previous election?—I had no vote at that time.

11438. Where were you on the day of polling?—In Mr. Hall's.

11439. On your oath were you promised anything?—On my oath I was not. I would go to Dundalk to vote against the Liberal party for they killed my family at the "Right Honorable's" election.

11440. Do you mean the election at which the Right Hon. Mr. Wynne was returned, or that which he was beaten at?—The last election.

11441. How did you vote then?—I voted for the "Right Honorable."

11442. Did you get anything then?—No, not a sixpence. A mob came in and dragged me out, and after I got on the hustings, I was knocked down and stabbed in the thigh, and had to go to the hospital.

11443. Was this at the "Right Honorable's" election?—Yes. My house was torn to the ground. I had to put my wife into an asylum for ten or twelve months, and to pay fifteen shillings or ten shillings a week for her. My child died alongside her mother. I was not there you know, but she was brought in my absence; and it is well known to the whole town that I have a child a cripple, whose back was broken by it.

11444. Whom?—A daughter whom I can produce here if your honour wishes. They pulled me to the hustings, and asked me whom I would vote for. I said for the "Right Honorable." Then I was knocked down and beaten; and then I had it on my mind, when I would have to vote again, never to vote for the Liberal party, for what they did to me. I had a claim for £200 then, but the creditors got the money. Mr. Sedley was the solicitor.

11445. You got £200 off the county?—Off the borough. I had to sell two houses for £120 to pay the creditors a fourth; and I am living now in a house of the Right Hon. John Wynne's, at £17 a year.

11446. What business are you in?—A furniture broker.

11447. You are living in the town?—Yes.

11448. Carrying on business?—Yes.

11449. What made you go to Mrs. Hall's?—Because I got enough of elections before; for protection. I settled with her and paid her.

11450. Do you swear that that was your sole reason?—I swear on my solemn oath that that was my sole reason. I would not venture to go to the poll after the treatment I got at the election before.

11451. How did you ascertain that Mrs. Hall's house was open to Major Knox's voters?—I stopped at it at the time of the "Right Honorable's" election, and for a fortnight after I could not make my appearance.

11452. In consequence of the violence of the mob?—Yes.

11453. You are a Catholic?—I am.

11454. And you know somethiug about these elections?—I have a good right to know.

11455. Can you give the Court any information as to how these mobs were got up?—I could not tell you how they were got up.

11456. Are they townspeople, or people from the country?—Country people; country and town.

11457. Did you see them during the election; did they get drink?—I could not say. I never saw anything of their getting drink, for I would not go next to any of them.

11458. Do you know any of the public-houses?—I did not know any of the public-houses to give drink.

11459. Nor never heard tell of it?—Never heard tell of their getting drink. I don't trouble my head about them.

11460. You know some of these people, you know these people who beat you at the Right Honorable's election?—Beat me?

11461. Do you remember the people that did so?—Why they were like a shower of bees about me. I could not remember for I was excited.

11462. Did you see in that mob, for example, strangers and townspeople?—There were strangers and townspeople. I called on Mr. M'Gowan, the mayor, for protection, and he told me to protect myself.

11463. That was at the "Right Honorable's" election?—Yes.

11464. You came in to Mrs. Hall's?—I did.

11465. Do you say how you paid for what you got there out of your own earnings?—I did out of my own hard earnings.

11466. And you do not expect to be repaid by anyone?—I never expect a shilling from any man.

11467. Did you ever get any money for voting at any election?—I never got a shilling from any man.

11468. Have you heard of the quantity of money that has been going at these elections, I mean in the evidence?—I did.

11469. Had you a vote at Macdonogh's first election?—I had.

11470. Whom did you promise to support then?—Mr. Macdonogh.

11471. Did you vote for him?—I did.

11472. Did you know anything about the £150 that was going?—I did not know anything about it. I never saw sixpence of it.

11473. Is there another man named Patrick O'Brien?—He is dead.

11474. There was a man of your name mentioned as having got £10?—I don't know what he got. The poor man is dead.

11475. You are not the man that got the money?—I am not the man. I never got a shilling from them. I would go to Belfast——

11476. Do you expect to be paid?—I don't expect a shilling.

11477. Did you go to Mr. Abbott's meeting?—I did.

11478. Who asked you to go there?—I saw voters going there.

11479. Conservatives?—Conservatives and Liberals, and I dropped in.

11480. Were both sides going?—Both sides were going to hear the speeches.

11481. And to see the new candidate?—Yes.

11482. Did you know on which side he was to be candidate?—I knew well he was brought by Captain Knox; I heard several say he was going to stand for the borough.

11483. If any money is going now on the Conservative side will you take it?—I don't want it.

11484. Will you take it?—I would not take it on my solemn oath. I would not handle a shilling of it. I got enough of them; and I will produce the child here that got her back broken if required, and the mother dying in an asylum. I would go to New York at my own expense, your honour, to vote against them after what they did to me.

11485. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Did you vote at Sergeant Armstrong's election?—I had no vote then.

(The witness withdrew.)

John Galbraith re-examined.

John Galbraith.

11486. Mr. John Galbraith.—There is another person whom I forgot to tell you of, Walter Henderson, who was not mentioned, and whose name had escaped my mind altogether.

11487. The Chief Commissioner.—Another case of what we call here "bribery"?—Yes.

11488. What is he?—He is a shoemaker.

11489. How much money did he get?—Twenty pounds.

11490. Did he come to you?—No, Stokes engaged with him to give it and left the money with me.

11491. Was it in half notes?—It was. No,—one £20 note; it was cut in two.

NINTH DAY. October 15.

John Galbraith.

11492. You got the whole of it?—I did.

11493. When was that?—I think the same day as the Youngs.

11494. Did you see Walter Henderson himself on the subject?—I did.

11495. I want to know how did you pick out Henderson, or he picked out you?—I was in Stokes's and Henderson came in there, and Stokes arranged with me before this, to give him £20, and Stokes then put the £20 in my pocket to give to him. I kept the £20 and have not given it to him up to the present.

11496. Have you got the £20 note?—I have not.

11497. I suppose you changed it?—I did.

11498. What bank was it on?—The Bank of Ireland.

11499. Was it a new note?—Tolerably new.

11500. Did you, as a man of business, note the number of it in your memorandum book?—I did not indeed.

11501. Then you can't tell what it was?—No, I could not.

11502. Or give any clue to find when that note was issued?—No, not the slightest.

11503. Were the other half notes that you heard of Bank of Ireland notes—the £40 notes?—They were, I believe.

11504. Describe how they were,—were they small notes or twenties?—Two £20 notes.

11505. Of the Bank of Ireland?—The Bank of Ireland as well as I remember.

11506. Did you make no note about them?—Not the slightest.

11507. Was Henderson long in the shop before Stokes, until you and he had made the bargain with him?—I don't know, I happened to be passing and I went in and he was there.

11508. Did you ever mention that to Mr. Lawder?—No, I did not.

11509. Or to anyone concerned for the Mayor?—No, except Stokes.

11510. Was this done in the open shop or upstairs?—In Stokes's open shop.

11511. Had you any connexion in business with Henderson or did he know you merely as a townsman?—Not the slightest connexion in the world, no more than that he knew me, and he said, as well as I remember, that he had confidence in me that anything that was given to me for him I would give to him.

11512. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—I want to ask you was it by himself that the younger Young came in, after the interview you had with his father?—No, he was sent for.

11513. By whom?—By me.

11514. You were not in court when he gave his evidence a few minutes ago?—No, I was not.

11515. Because he told us that he saw Stokes at the door and followed him into the shop?—Well, as well as I remember, I sent for him to come in.

11516. Do you recollect whom you sent?—I do not. It might have been one of the young men in the shop.

11517. Have you got that young man in your shop?—No, I have not, I have some of them,—really I don't know which of them I sent.

11518. How many young men have you in your shop?—Seven.

11519. How many of those seven were in your family at that time?—Two of them are away. I think there are five that were in it.

11520. Was the old man present at the interview at which the son got the notes?—I don't think he was—no.

11521. Do you recollect was anything said to the young man about the former interview you had with his father?—None whatever that I have any recollection of.

11522. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Did you give the £40 for the two votes?—Yes, it was given to the younger.

11523. For the two votes?—Well I could not say. The father before that said he did not want to have anything to do with it, or that anything that was to be given might be given to his son. He said he would not have anything to do with it, that he did not want it, and never took it in his life.

11524. Did you intend it as compensation for the two votes?—Well I could not say that.

11525. Did you intend it as compensation for the two votes?—Well I did.

(The witness withdrew.)

Dominick Hunt.

Dominick Hunt sworn and examined.

11526. The Chief Commissioner.—You are a relative or connexion of Michael Hunt's?—Yes.

11527. What are you to him?—Brother-in-law.

11528. Have you a vote?—Yes.

11529. Had you at Sergeant Armstrong's election?—Yes.

11530. Were you wanting to get any money for your vote?—No, but I was in Michael Hunt's house, and I saw a man named John Magrath, another brother-in-law of mine, and I think James Moran and some few others, electors, including, I think, John Harte; and from what transpired, I could understand that Hunt was making terms between the Conservative party and Sergeant Armstrong's friends to sell all of us for £300.

11531. Who was making that bargain?—Hunt.

11532. Michael Hunt?—Michael Hunt.

11533. To sell all of you?—To any party—the highest bidder.

11534. Did Michael Hunt tell you that?—I heard him say it. I heard him speak about it with parties coming in and out, saying that he would make terms—£1,000 or that he would take £500, and then the parties would go to the door; one of the party, Maurice M'Nulty, would come in and say half a loaf was better than no bread. I wanted to go out when I saw the disgraceful conduct of them. He was supplying us with drink, brandy and all to that, and I wanted to go out as I got disgusted.

11535. However you were there; do you remember Mr. Keighron coming to you—this was the polling day?—Yes, the polling day.

11536. Do you remember Patrick Keighron coming in to you?—I saw him there, but I have no recollection of any conversation.

11537. Do you remember Phillips coming there?—I saw him at the door too.

11538. Do you remember anything that was said between him and anyone?—I heard some altercation and Hunt ordered him away and would not allow Phillips near the door. He made out that he was dragged out from the little room, and Phillips hastily retreated.

11539. You finally voted for Sergeant Armstrong?—Yes.

11540. And you voted with the party of five or six that went up?—That's true.

11541. What made you all go, finally?—Well, really I think it was the consideration on their part of the money. I wanted to pull out of getting the money, as for my part, at the time I did not much need it; because the only thing I ever placed myself in communication to ask any favour about was this:—I had a brother-in-law in the Customs in England, and I wished to get his promotion, and the Sergeant was the member of Parliament to do it; and I thought the sum of £20 was paltry when I never took a farthing for a vote. I received £20 from Mr. Phillips some time after the election, but I returned it back again.

11542. When the five or six of you went to vote that way, who did you understand had promised you any money?—There was no promise made distinctly to myself.

11543. Whom did you understand the promise was made to?—To Michael Hunt.

11544. By whom?—Well I think it came through M'Nulty or messengers came in and out.

11545. Who is he?—Maurice M'Nulty, a brother-in-law, or some friend of Keighron.

11546. Did you understand that word came that money would be given—£50 a piece?—I did.

11547. So you heard through M'Nulty?—Yes; but I heard expressions between them.

11548. What expressions?—That half a loaf was better than no bread.

11549. M'Nulty said?—M'Nulty said. James Moran jumped up, and said he would go over to Mr. Lyons and get £1,000; they held him. Then when I saw the disgraceful treatment of them, half whiskified, and though I had taken a little myself—a little brandy and porter; with that, they held Moran, and in came M'Nulty, and those expressions dropped from him that half a loaf was better than no bread, and to have patience or be quiet, or that they would do what they would be very sorry for doing.

11550. And then they went?—They went; immediately afterwards Sergeant Armstrong came in, and we were there drinking, and they asked him to take a glass of brandy, and I think he cordially took it with them. "You are all right," was the word the Sergeant said; I can't be very minute; but they all walked off, and the Sergeant led and took Hunt on his arm.

11551. Michael Hunt?—Yes; he wanted to be commander or general of all.

NINTH DAY.
October 15.
Dominick Hunt

11552. Why did you refuse the £20?—Well, sir, I'll tell you the reason; I was in communication with the Sergeant about a brother-in-law of mine; and when I brought the money to my wife after some deliberation she said it was better to return it—she said to hold it, and I said not. "Well," said I, "I may get an advance for Murray, the brother-in-law in the Customs; and it would be better to serve him than to take the £20, which I never got before, and never will have the name of again; they are a low, mean pack, and the Sergeant is an honourable man, and would do credit to Sligo, and I believe to any constituency."

11553. And that is the reason why you would not take the £20?—That's the reason.

11554. Were you ever paid before or since?—Never paid a farthing.

11555. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Who is Mr. M'Nulty—what is his Christian name?—Maurice.

11556. What was he to Keighron?—A distant relative.

11557. Did you vote for Captain Flanagan?—Well, I had no vote then.

(The witness withdrew.)

The Court was then adjourned to Saturday morning, the 16th October, at ten o'clock.

TENTH DAY.

TENTH DAY.
October 16.

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 16, 1869.

The Commissioners sat at ten o'clock.

James M'Kim sworn and examined.

James M'Kim

11558. The Chief Commissioner.—Whom did you vote for at the last election?—For Major Knox.

11559. Did you get any money after that election?—No.

11560. Are you James M'Kim?—I am.

11561. Did you get any money at any previous election?—I did.

11562. When was that?—After one election, Mr. Sedley sent for me. He told me——

11563. Was that after Mr. Macdonogh's election?—I believe so.

11564. What did he say?—He said he wished to see me at the office. I went down.

11565. Did you know what he wanted you for?—I didn't. When I went to the office he gave me a paper to sign. I hesitated as I didn't know what it was for. He said he'd like to serve me. I was then under pecuniary difficulties. I hesitated. I thought it was a loan. He said I would never be called on for payment.

11566. How much was the amount?—Twenty pounds.

11567. How long after the election?—About eight or nine months. I can't exactly say.

11568. You voted for Mr. Macdonogh?—I did. I promised him that I'd vote for him.

11569. Did you ever promise any other person?—Never.

11570. Did you know what Mr. Sedley wanted you for when he sent for you?—Not until I went down to his office. I believed it was in consequence of my voting for Mr. Macdonogh that he sent for me.

11571. Did you give him an I.O.U. for the money?—I did, or a promissory note—it was something of that kind.

11572. Do you know or hear of anybody else getting money after that election?—I didn't.

11573. You understood from Mr. Sedley that the £20 was given to you for having voted?—Just so.

11574. Did you think it wrong to take the money?—I didn't. I didn't look on it as a bribe, as it didn't influence my vote.

11575. Were you engaged in any way about the election?—I was engaged in some one way or other about it.

11576. What had you done at the election—for very little is to be done in a small constituency like Sligo in the way of writing in books—were you so engaged?—No.

11577. Every elector in the borough, I suppose, is known?—Of course they are.

11578. Did you ever get any other money at any election?—I did.

11579. From whom?—From Mr. Monds.

11580. How much did you get from him?—Thirty pounds in the same way.

11581. Whom did you vote for when you got the £30?—I can't say; I voted for the Conservative candidate, whoever he was.

11582. Was that at Mr. Macdonogh's first election, do you remember?—I rather think it was, but I can't swear positively to it.

11583. Do you remember, when you got the money from Mr. Sedley, was that the time Mr. Macdonogh was defeated?—It was the last time he was a candidate.

11584. Mr. Monds, you say, gave you £30?—Yes, he did.

11585. Did you get any word about it before you got the money?—Not the least.

11586. But you knew it was in consequence of your having voted, that you got it?—I did.

11587. If you got money now, I suppose you would take it too?—I would not.

11588. Why not you know you took it from Mr. Sedley and Mr. Monds?—Circumstances alter cases. I was in pecuniary circumstances that were not favourable when I took it; but I wouldn't take it now, nor would I have taken it before but for the circumstances in which I was placed.

11589. Do you know of anyone else having been paid at the time that you were paid, by Monds?—No.

11590. Had you a long conversation with Monds when he paid you the £30?—There weren't three words about it.

11591. That was when you voted for Mr. Macdonogh the second time?—Yes; the last time.

TENTH DAY.
October 16.
James M'Kim

11592. Do you remember hearing about the day before the poll, that money was going?—No; I was away working with a man at that time—it gave me more consideration and trouble.

11593. But were not you in town at night?—I was.

11594. And was there no message came to you?—There wasn't.

11595. Are you sure of that?—I am.

11596. Did anyone hold out any inducement to you to vote at this last election?—No.

11597. Were you not asked for your vote?—I wasn't.

11598. Did you attend the meeting at which Mr. Abbott was here?—I didn't.

11599. You are, I believe, petty sesions clerk here?—I am.

11600. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—How long have you been petty sessions clerk?—I think about three years, the 20th of last April.

11601. You were not petty sessions clerk when you got the money of which you spoke?—I wasn't; if I were I wouldn't want it, and I would not take it.

11602. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Who canvassed you the first time Mr. Macdonogh stood as a candidate?—I was canvassed by Mr. Macdonogh himself.

11603. Did Mr. Sedley not canvass you?—I know he called on me the day of the election.

11604. Did Mr. Monds canvass you?—I can't say that he did. We had talked with each other; we had a conversation.

11605. Was it about voting?—It was not.

11606. Did he give you any intimation that you would be compensated for your vote?—He didn't; not the slightest.

11607. Were you in debt to Mr. Monds?—I was.

11608. How much?—Twenty pounds.

11609. Did he stop the £20 out of the £30 you were to get for voting?—He did; he only gave me £10.

11610. Did Mr. Sedley canvass you before Mr. Macdonogh's second election?—Never.

11611. Was any of the £20 stopped?—No.

11612. Were you in debt, or under any obligation to Mr. Sedley?—I wasn't in debt to him, but I owed him some kindness. As I told you, I was in some difficulties, he was the professional man engaged for me and he did me considerable service, as I believe. I would be anxious to serve him in any way I could, and would yet.

11613. The Chief Commissioner.—Were you the person about whose appointment to the office of petty sessions clerk, there was some contest?—Precisely, I didn't get in then.

11614. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Did you vote at the previous election?—I did; I voted at every election since Sadlier's.

11615. Did you vote at Sadlier's election?—I did.

11616. Did you hear of money going at that election?—I did not; I took no part in elections then. I had plenty to do to keep myself in any position.

11617. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—For whom did you vote at Sadlier's election?—I voted for Mr. Somers. I was offered £20 to go to the country for three hours by Sadlier's agent.

11618. What was the agent's name?—He is not in the country now; he is, I believe, dead.

11619. For whom did you vote in 1859, when Mr. Wynne and Mr. Sadlier were candidates?—I voted for Mr. Wynne.

11620. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Were you asked to vote for Captain Flanagan at the last election?—I was not.

11621. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Were you aware of money going at the 1859 election?—I wasn't.

11622. Did you hear that there was money going at either side at that election?—No, I didn't; but I heard that Mr. Wynne said he would not lose sixpence by it.

John Gallagher.

John Gallagher sworn and examined.

11623. The Chief Commissioner.—You voted at the last election?—I did.

11624. For whom did you vote?—I voted for Captain Flanagan.

11625. Whom did you vote for at the previous election?—For Sergeant Armstrong.

11626. Did you get any money after that election?—I did.

11627. How much did you get?—Twenty pounds.

11628. From whom did you get it?—From Dan Gill.

11629. Who had canvassed you at that election?—Sergeant Armstrong himself.

11630. Did Gill canvass you?—He did not.

11631. Who was with the Sergeant when he canvassed you?—I can't well recollect. I think it was Mr. Michael Gallagher and Mr. Conry that were with him.

11632. Did you make any complaint that you had not got any money?—I don't recollect.

11633. Did you think you were badly treated as you did not get money?—I didn't expect it. I took it because I got it.

11634. Did you get money at Sadlier's election?—I did.

11635. How much did you get?—Ten pounds.

11636. Who gave it to you?—He is dead who gave it to me.

11637. What is the name of the person who gave it to you?—Mr. Henry Owen O'Connor gave it to me. I didn't expect it. I didn't look for it.

11638. Were you offered any money at the last election between Major Knox and Captain Flanagan?—I wasn't.

11639. Did anyone give you a hint about it?—No one.

11640. What are you?—I hold a bit of land, and I keep a shop.

11641. Did you expect that any money would be going at the last election?—I didn't.

11642. But you took money twice?—I did, but I didn't look for it. I didn't expect it at all.

11643. You would take it if you were offered money?—I would, if I didn't think it was a crime. I wouldn't solicit it.

11644. Do you know anything about the mobs that were going about the town at the last election?—I don't.

11645. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Did you vote at the election in 1859?—I did.

11646. Whom did you vote for?—For Mr. Somers.

11647. Did you get any money at that election?—I didn't.

Thomas Perkins.

Thomas Perkins sworn and examined.

11648. The Chief Commissioner.—Do you travel for Brown, M'Conkey, and Co., of Dublin?—I do through the west.

11649. Is that your district?—Mostly through the west, and a bit of the south.

11650. How long have you been doing the west?—Nearly two years.

11651. Did you see your name mentioned in the papers?—I did. I saw it in the Irish Times.

11652. Mentioned by Mr. Dunleavy?—Yes.

11653. Were you in town at the time of the election?—I can scarcely tell you now?—I would be able, by looking at my diary, to tell you, but not now.

11654. Were you interested on any side in the result of the election?—Not a particle.

11655. Mr. Dunleavy said that you informed him that you could get money for him if he voted for Major Knox?—I saw the statement made by him in the Irish Times, but it is not true—there is not a word of truth in it.

11656. Do you swear that you did not offer him any money?—I swear I didn't offer any money directly or indirectly for his vote, nor do I know he had such a thing as a vote.

11657. Do you know the person I mean?—I do.

11658. And do you swear that you did not offer him any money?—I do positively.

11660. Dunleavy stated here that you first made him an offer, came back, and increased the offer?—There isn't a particle of truth in it. I had no interest in the matter one way or the other, and I had no intention to do anything of the kind stated by him. When I read the statement in the Irish Times I wrote to him to know if I was the party referred to by him in his evidence, and said I wanted his reply. There was no name mentioned in the Irish Times. I understood I was the person he alluded to. I did not hear from him.

11661. You wrote a letter to him about the statement?—I did. I saw that the person was described as the representative of Brown, M'Conkey, and Co., and I wrote to know if I was the person he referred to.

11662. Are you the only representative of Brown, M'Conkey, and Co. in the west?—I am, for nearly two years.

11663. What are your own politics, may I ask?—I have hardly any politics, going so much through the country as I do. It would not suit me to have them, but if I had any politics I would rather have Major Knox, and would assist him if I could. I have heard a great deal of politics, but it doesn't suit me to take any part in them.

11664. Is it possible that the statement of Dunleavy is without foundation?—I have told you what occurred. I never spoke in my life to Major Knox. I had no interest in the election, and I never offered money to anyone for his vote. To the best of my recollection I did offer £50 or £75 to Mr. Dunleavy.

11665. You say you can ascertain whether you were here at the time of the election or not?—I can.

11666. The witness left court to consult his diary, and on returning said—What time was the election?

11667. The Chief Commissioner.—The 19th November was the day of polling?—I have not a diary of it. It is only a diary of this year I have.

Mr. Dunleavy was here recalled.

11668. The Chief Commissioner.—Respecting what Mr. Perkins said when he called on you, as you stated, Mr. Dunleavy, state exactly what he said?—He said to me he was authorized to offer me £50 for my vote. I didn't entertain the matter, and I turned it off as a joke. On the same evening he called again, and said he would make the £50 twenty-five more—that is £75 altogether. I said, "You could get three or four votes for that amount of money." He said, "We want to break into the class of voters and politicians like you.

11669. That is, on Roman Catholic voters?—Yes.

11670. You looked on it all as a joke, you say?—Yes; I turned it off as a joke.

11671. Do you swear that Mr. Perkins said these words to you?—I do, beyond all doubt.

11672. What hour was it that the first conversation took place?—It was about the afternoon—about two o'clock, I suppose; or it may be between one and two o'clock. I don't exactly recollect the time.

11673. How long before the election was it?—I think it was before the revision.

11674. That must be in October?—If you recollect, I said I looked on it as not a very serious matter.

Mr. Perkins.—If you give me two or three minutes, I will try and give you all the information I can on the subject. I swear most positively that not a word of that conversation took place; to the best of my recollection, I never made any such offer.

Mr. Dunleavy.—John Bruen was present at the conversation.

The Chief Commissioner.—Very well, we will examine him.

John Bruen sworn and examined.

11675. The Chief Commissioner.—Do you know Mr. Dunleavy?—I do.

11676. Were you in his employment?—I am.

11677. What were you in his employment?—The foreman conducting his business.

11678. How long are you in his employment?—I was in it twelve or thirteen years. I am not in it now.

11679. In whose employment are you now?—In Mr. Molony's.

11680. Do you know Mr. Perkins?—I do.

11681. Do you know him as the traveller for Brown, M'Conkey, and Co., of Dublin?—Yes.

11682. Were you present at any conversation between him and Mr. Dunleavy?—I was.

11683. State now what it was?—It is so long ago, I can't exactly call to mind the time it took place; but Mr. Perkins was on business canvassing for orders. He called on Mr. Dunleavy, and asked him if he got £50 to vote for Major Knox, would he take it, and he said he was authorized to make the offer. I looked on it as a joke, and more as a "feeler."

11684. Where was it the conversation took place?—In Mr. Dunleavy's shop.

11685. At what hour of the day was it?—It was between one and two, as well as I can fix the time—it was in the early part of the day.

11686. What did Mr. Dunleavy say?—He wanted to show Mr. Perkins that he couldn't vote for Major Knox in the way of principle.

11687. Did any further conversation occur then, did you hear a second conversation?—I heard Mr. Perkins speak of £75 on the same day.

11688. What did he say?—I won't swear that he said he was authorised to go to £75, but he spoke of £75, leading me to infer that he could give £75 for the vote.

11689. Was anything further said—did Mr. Perkins say anything of what Mr. Dunleavy stated about "breaking in on the party?"—I think he did, but I have no recollection of what he said about it.

11690. You have no doubt that what you stated did occur?—No doubt.

11691. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—When there was talk of the £75 did you regard it as serious?—I didn't. I thought it was more as a "feeler," to know if Mr. Dunleavy would take it—knowing that Mr. Perkins was married in Sligo, and that perhaps he might have some authority for making the offer.

11692. Was he married in Sligo?—He was.

11693. To whom?—To a Miss Clarke.

11694. Was Miss Clarke connected with any of the Conservative party—with Mr. Stokes or Mr. Cherry?—Not that I heard of.

11695. Was she connected by family with any of them?—Not that I heard of 11696. Was she a relative of any friend of Major Knox, or of anyone that took an active part in the election on behalf of Major Knox?—I know of no friend of hers that took an active part for Major Knox in the election.

11697. At the time of the second offer—that of the £75—you didn't then regard it as a joke. I thought it was more a "feeler."

11698. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Are you positive that Mr. Perkins said to Mr. Dunleavy that he was authorised to offer the £50?—I am not positive at all. It is so long since, and I didn't take notice of it at the time.

11699. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Mr. Perkins, you spoke of your recollection when you were examined by Mr. Heron—you said to the best of your recollection you never offered £50 to Mr. Dunleavy—does this evidence refresh your memory; you seemed not to be sure whether you offered it or not?—It confirms me in my opinion that I had nothing to do with it.

11700. The Chief Commissioner.—How does it confirm you in your opinion?—What had I to do with it, I had no interest in the election.

11701. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—You stated that if you could you would assist Major Knox's election?—I mean to say that, if there were two men possessing equal advantages or equal talents, and a person asked me which would I prefer, I would say "Major Knox." I don't know Major Knox personally, nor anyone engaged in the election. I had no interest in it.

11702. Is your father-in-law a voter for Sligo?—I believe he is.

11703. Does he live in the town?—He is not living in Sligo, he is living about a mile and a half from it.

11704. Have you any connexion or relative who is a voter in Sligo?—Not that I know of.

11705. Did you see a list of the voters for the borough of Sligo?—Never in my life. I don't know who had or who hadn't votes. Yet I am dragged here. I don't see why I should be dragged here from my business.

11706. The Chief Commissioner.—You are not dragged here, Mr. Perkins, you have been summoned here because two witnesses swore that you gave a bribe. I ask you can you give us any information as to this matter, and as to whether you were in Sligo at the time in question?—No, except by looking at the dates. If you allow me I will do it in ten minutes, if I can do it at all.

Mr. Perkins left court, and after an interval returned with his diary for the year 1868.

11707. The Chief Commissioner.—When were you in Sligo in the summer and autumn of 1868.

Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—You may commence, Mr. Perkins, with September or August of that year.

Witness.—(Looking at diary.)—I was not in Sligo in August nor in September, 1868. I was in Sligo on the 10th October.

11708. The Chief Commissioner.—For how long were you in Sligo on that occasion?—I suppose about two or three or four hours on Sunday. I left by the early car on Monday morning.

11709. What is the date of that?—The 11th October. I left on the 12th.

11710. When after that were you in Sligo?—I have no record of being in Sligo that year again.

11711. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Turn to that 11th October. Show me the diary for a moment (hands in diary.) I find an entry, "In Sligo on Saturday?"—Yes, on Saturday night.

11712. Can you tell us what time exactly you arrived in Sligo on Saturday?—I cannot positively. I didn't come into town early, as Saturday is market day, and I would have no business here on that account.

11713. The Chief Commissioner.—"Saturday, Sligo," that means that you came to Sligo on that day?—I can't positively say that it does.

11714. Where did you come from?—You will see the previous entry.

11715. "Tuesday, 6th, Gort." There is no entry to show where you were before that. I see an entry before it "Ennis"?—Yes. The way I generally come, is from Ennis to Gort, from Gort to Athlone, from Athlone across to Strokestown, Elphin, Carrick, Ballinamona, Manorhamilton, and by car to Sligo.

11716. You spent Sunday in Sligo?—On Sundays I generally go to my father-in-law's place.

11717. "Tuesday, Longford and Sligo." Does that mean that you were back on Tuesday to Sligo?—Yes.

11718. "Fourteenth, Strokestown and Sligo?"—I suppose I came back by the night train, and went away by the morning train.

11719. "Fifteenth, Elphin and Sligo." That means that you were back on the 15th I suppose?—Yes.

11720. "Saturday, 17th Sligo" again, "Manorhamilton?"—That week my wife was at her father's place, and I went away in the morning, and came back in the evening.

11721. "Sunday, 18th, Monday, 19th," from the 10th to the 19th, in fact, you were here?—Every night it should be. As my wife was at her father's that week, I went up by the quarter after six o'clock in the morning, and got back by the quarter past ten train at night. Although Sligo is marked there for those days, I used not be in Sligo, but in small towns some distance away.

11722. As to that, I see "Sunday, 18th, Sligo; Monday, 19th, Sligo," that is the only entry, there is no business entry of any other place?—That's only a portion of the day.

11723. Do you mean to tell me that it was essential for you to be in Sligo from the 10th to the 19th for the transaction of your business?—I don't mean to say any such thing. I explained the reason why I was here at these dates. My wife was staying at her father's for a week, and as I don't be often at home to enjoy her society, I used return every night by the quarter past ten train, and leave again by the quarter past six train in the morning to transact my business in the neighbouring small towns. I went to several towns in the neighbourhood during that time from Sligo, and came back to Sligo at night. That was how Sligo came to be marked in the book.

11724. You seem to have made your entries in this book as regularly as ever I saw a book kept, but you have five days here with no entries but "Sligo;" had you any vacation at that time?—I had not. October is the heading where September comes in, and September is the heading where October comes in, that confused me for the moment.

11725. Look at the 10th?—Yes, Saturday night, the 10th.

11726. Why say Saturday "night?"—Because I know I wasn't here in the day on Saturday, for, as I said before, I'd have no business here, it being market day.

11727. When did you make that entry?—When it occurred.

11728. You put down no entry for three or four days before the 10th?—For two days before.

11729. Though you were on business?—I may tell you I didn't keep this thing regularly; it was solely for my own gratification. If you look at the book for this year you will find the same errors in it. I want to show you that the same errors occur in it.

11730. Go on and look at each of these days yourself?—We will commence with Saturday, the 10th October. I was here on Saturday night shortly after ten o'clock.

11731. Turn over and look at the entries without saying anything until you get down to the 20th; count the number of days on which the entry "Sligo" only is?—There are only three entries here on which "Sligo" is.

11732. There are five?—Yes, I see there are.

11733. Does not that mean that you were in Sligo on these five days?—What it means is that I was in Sligo on the evening of some of them. I came here on Saturday night. I went to my father-in-law's and remained there on Sunday. I came into Sligo on Monday, the 19th, and did business here. On Tuesday I went by the six o'clock train, and did my business through Boyle and the neighbouring towns, and came back to Sligo by the quarter-past ten train. On Wednesday I went to Tubbercurry. Friday and Saturday no entry; no entries after that for some time.

11734. Do you see Monday, the 12th, Sligo?—Yes.

11735. Were you in Sligo that day?—I think I was there the whole of that day.

11736. Do you see Monday, the 19th, Sligo?—I do.

11737. Were you in Sligo that day?—I was not.

11738. Why did you put down Sligo if you were not here on that day?—When I am out at my father-in-law's—it is only about a mile or so from Sligo—I may write down Sligo.

11739. Do you mean that you were there for a holiday?—I do.

11740. Will you show me any previous visits?—You must bear in mind that my wife was at the time on a visit to my father-in-law. I see no record of Sligo here. I don't think there was any record for Sligo.

11741. For 1868?—I can't find it; there is none that I can see.

11742. Did you ever meet a man named Kavanagh that was examined here?—I didn't.

11743. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Is your father-in-law a tenant farmer?—I think he is.

11744. Who is his landlord?—I believe it is Mr. Wynne. I know nothing of it.

11745. Does he hold any other land besides what he holds under Mr. Wynne?—I think not.

11746. Is he in Mr. Wynne's office?—He is not; he is an old man.

11747. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Did you hear any talk while you were in Sligo that there was money going for votes?—You could not come into Sligo without hearing people talk of it. I heard everywhere talk about Sligo.

John Bruen.

John Ryan sworn and examined.

John Ryan.

11748. The Chief Commissioner.—Did you vote at the last election?—I did.

11749. For whom did you vote?—For Major Knox.

11750. Did you get any money?—No.

11751. Did you get any promise?—No.

11752. You got no promise?—No promise.

11753. Has your son a vote?—He has.

11754. What's his name?—James.

11755. Has he got any money?—I believe it was alluded to here. I will explain that.

11756. First, has he got any money?—He got a loan of money.

11757. From whom?—From Mr. Stokes.

11758. How much was the loan?—Two pounds at one time, and three pounds at another.

11759. When did he get it?—He was sent for the loan of it by me to Mr. Stokes, at the excited time of the election.

11760. How much did you send him for?—I sent him at one time for £2.

11761. And you got it?—I got it.

11762. You sent him at another time for £3?—Yes.

11763. And you got it?—I got it.

11764. How long before the polling day was that?—The £2 was before the polling day—it was on the day of the nomination.

11765. You thought, I suppose, that Mr. Stokes would be benevolent on that day?—I wanted it particularly for the use of my house.

11766. When did you get the £3?—I got it at the time of the county election; while it was going on.

11767. Had Mr. Stokes canvassed you?—He didn't. He might have asked me who I'd vote for, or something like that; but he never canvassed me.

11768. Did he ever lend you any money previously?—Several times whenever I wanted money. There is an account always running between us for work. I worked a good deal in my trade for him.

11769. Do you owe Mr. Stokes that £5 still?—Not all of it. I owe him some of it.

11770. Do you mean to say that you have repaid him?—He is partly paid, not in money but in work.

11771. How much have you paid back?—I don't know what the account between us is. I have an account against him for work, in my book.

11772. Did you ever pay Mr. Stokes a single shilling of that £5?—Not a shilling.

11773. Do you intend to pay him the £5 back?—Yes; certainly.

11774. When?—At any time he sends for it. To show you that I do, I made two gates for him. He was passing by one day, and he came in to pay me for the making of them; I said there was no use in paying me as I owed him £5, and to leave it go into the book in payment of the £5.

11775. Did you ever ask Mr. Stokes for the loan of any other money?—I did.

11776. For how much?—For £1.

11777. When was that?—At a former election.

11778. Did he lend it to you?—He didn't. He told me to go into the parlour, and take what I would get there.

11779. When you went in what did you find there?—Twenty-five pounds.

11780. Your story is that you asked Mr. Stokes for the loan of £1, and that you got £25?—He told me to go into the parlour and take what I'd get there.

11781. Was that £25 a loan?—It wasn't.

11782. Was it a bribe?—It wasn't. I considered it was due to me.

11783. For what?—For former transactions, at former elections.

11784. What were they?—I was asked to do some things that probably others would not take on themselves to do. I went to Blair's, in Knox-street, where he was guarded by a party of butchers; and at great risk I got him out, and beat the butchers that were guarding him.

11785. And polled him?—I did not; I spoke to him or to his wife, or to some one inside, I think it was his wife.

11786. Was it for the Conservative party you did that?—Yes.

11787. Whose man were you then?—Major Knox's.

11788. At Tennison's election?—No; I was Mr. Macdonogh's friend then.

11789. Was it on the polling day you got Blair out from the butchers?—I don't know that. It was at all events the day when Mr. Tennison resigned and went away.

11790. Did you get anything for doing it at the time—were you, in fact, paid at Mr. Macdonogh's election?—No, not a penny since I was born, except what I told you.

11791. How long was it after the election that you got the £25?—It was the day of the polling.

11792. After you voted?—Yes.

11793. For Mr. Macdonogh?—Yes; after voting and for voting for Mr. Macdonogh.

11794. Who told you that you were to get the £25—No one; until I was told by Mr. Stokes to go into the parlour, and take what I'd get there.

11795. When did you ask Mr. Stokes for the loan of the £1?—About five minutes before I got the £25.

11796. Had you voted at the time?—I was after voting at the time.

11797. Did you walk straight from the court-house after voting, to Mr. Stokes and ask him for it?—No; I first went to my own house, and I found a great many of Mr. Macdonogh's friends there. I was out of cash at the time, and I was annoyed that I couldn't treat them.

TENTH DAY. October 16. John Ryan.

11798. Did you want to treat them?—I did, and I did treat them.

11799. You wanted to send out for drink, and, having no cash as you say, you asked Mr. Stokes for the loan of the £1?—Yes.

11800. You had no idea that you were to get the £25?—I had no idea of it in the world.

11801. Did you ever get any other money?—I never got another shilling in my life.

11802. Do you swear that Mr. Stokes gave you the money because you voted for Mr. Macdonogh?—I didn't know that that was the reason he gave it to me.

11803. Was there anybody in the parlour when you went in and took the £25?—There was no one there at the time.

11804. Did you expect any money for voting the last time?—I didn't.

11805. Do you swear that?—I do.

11806. From Mr. Stokes or anybody else?—I didn't expect it from anyone.

11807. Were you at the meeting at which Mr. Abbott was, after the last election?—I was.

11808. Did you get a circular to attend it?—I did.

11809. Did you intend to vote for Mr. Abbott, in case he became a candidate for the borough?—If he was here in the field a Conservative against a Liberal, I would vote for him.

11810. Was Mr. Abbott introduced as the Conservative candidate at the next election?—Partly. I think he wasn't going to be an out-and-out Conservative. He expressed himself more liberal than a great deal that, he said, called themselves Liberals.

11811. Did you think he was a gentleman of great fortune and wealth?—I heard he was.

11812. Did you hear that he had purchased houses in the town?—I never knew of it.

11813. Did you hear it?—I heard a rumour that Major Knox's houses were to be purchased by him.

11814. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Did your son get any money at Sergeant Armstrong's election?—He didn't; he had no vote then.

11815. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—I suppose you know Mr. Stokes very well?—Perfectly.

11816. And I suppose he is a man you'd trust?—I never dealt with a more honourable man than Mr. Stokes.

11817. Did he give you to understand that money was going, and that he would look after your interest, and that you would be satisfied?—I would take Mr. Stokes' word for any amount. If he had any money in his possession to distribute, I am sure I would neither be the last nor the least.

11818. That is, you would get your share of it?—Yes.

11819. Mr. Stokes says that you voted on his recommendation—we all know what that means—that's what he swore; is that so?—He would be very apt to correct that—no one could recommend me to vote against a Conservative.

11820. He swore he intended that you would get £20?—I can't contradict that. If he had any money in his possession I am sure I would get it. It is probable he might think he'd have it.

11821. You got money from Mr. Macdonogh after Sergeant Armstrong's election?—Yes.

11822. And you thought it possible, I suppose, that there would be money going after Major Knox's election?—I thought it very possible.

11823. You say it was the day of the polling you got the £25?—Yes.

11824. What election was it that you succeeded in getting Blair out?—It was at Tennison's, when he was a candidate, and went away. I succeeded so far that I got Blair up to my house. I then went away, and when I came back after a couple of hours I heard that Mr. Tennison had gone away.

11825. Did you see Blair afterwards?—I didn't.

11826. Did anyone speak to you of getting any money afterwards until you voted for Mr. Macdonogh?—Not one.

11827. Did you get any money after the election of 1860?—To make a long story short, I never got a penny from any election except what I told you.

11828. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Did you ever vote for the Liberal candidate?—I did, for Mr. Somers, in preference to Mr. Townley.

11829. When Sadlier was a candidate did you vote for Sadlier?—I didn't. I never voted for the Liberal candidate except Mr. Somers; but it was a Liberal was against him, and I voted for him.

James Ryan.

James Ryan sworn and examined.

11830. The Chief Commissioner.—What is your father's name?—John Ryan.

11831. Is that the witness that is after being examined?—Yes.

11832. Did you vote at the last election?—I did.

11833. For whom?—For Major Knox.

11834. Had you ever voted previously?—Never. I never had a vote before.

11835. Do you know Mr. Stokes?—I do.

11836. Had you any word about money at the last election?—No.

11837. Have you heard his evidence?—I have read it.

11838. Is what he stated true?—He seemed to state that four Ryans got money. If they did, I am not one of them.

11839. You have not got it yet, but perhaps you are promised it?—I am not.

11840. Did you go on a message to Mr. Stokes for your father at any time?—I did.

11841. You heard your father state that he asked Mr. Stokes for the loan of a pound at Mr. Macdonogh's election?—I did.

11842. And that he got £25?—Yes. I heard him say before that that he got it.

11843. Did you know he got it before Major Knox's election?—I did.

11844. Did you hear it before the day of polling?—I dare say I did.

11845. The family all knew it, I suppose?—I dare say they did.

11846. Are you rated as joint occupier with your father, or as occupier of your own house?—No. I have no house of my own.

11847. Have you any land?—I have, from Mr. Alford, agent to Mr. Wynne.

11848. How long have you it?—I have it about three years.

11849. Had your getting the land anything to do with your getting a vote for the last election?—It hadn't. I had the land before there was a thought of the election.

11850. Did you bring a message for the loan your father mentioned to Mr. Stokes?—I did.

11851. Had your father told you that he had succeeded at Mr. Macdonogh's election, and had asked for the loan of a pound from Mr. Stokes?—I heard it.

11852. Were you in the habit of going for the loan of money for your father to Mr. Stokes?—I was.

11853. State exactly what you said to Mr. Stokes when you asked for the £2?—I went down to him, he was standing in his shop, and I said my father would be obliged to him if he would be kind enough to lend my father £2. Mr. Stokes then gave it to me.

11854. Why did your father send you for £2; do you live in your father's house?—I do.

11855. Has he any land?—He had the land I have; he gave it up, and I got it.

11856. Was it for the purpose of getting a vote that you got it?—Yes.

11857. How old are you?—I am in my twenty-third year.

11858. Then you got the land before you were of age?—Yes.

11859. Was it for the purpose of creating a vote that you got the land?—I dare say it was.

11860. What was your father's view on the subject?—I can't say what his view was.

11861. You got £3 afterwards from Mr. Stokes—on what day did you get it?—It was between the borough and county election. There were some voters sent into my father's. He was short of money, and he told me to go down and ask Mr. Stokes for the loan of £3. Mr. Stokes went into the office, and gave it to me.

11862. How many voters had your father in his house on that occasion?—I dare say fourteen or fifteen.

11863. Did they sleep in your father's house?—They did, for about a week, about the time of the election.

11864. Were they borough or county voters?—They were county voters; some of them less, and some more.

11865. How much were you paid for it?—I can't exactly tell you.

11866. Was there £20 paid?—More.

11867. £40?—I think so.

11868. £100?—I don't think my father was paid so much.

11869. How much was paid?—I can't say. I was paid nothing.

11870. But your father was—how much was he paid?—I don't know exactly.

11871. Over £50, at all events?—I can't tell now. I think he was paid six shillings a-day for what men he had.

11872. Do you mean to say that you did not expect any money from Mr. Stokes?—I didn't.

11873. You know what Mr. Stokes's evidence was?—If he has any money, I am sure he will give it to me.

11874. Have not you heard it sworn that he has money?—I saw it in the papers.

11875. Do you believe he has money for you?—I do.

11876. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—If Mr. Stokes offered it to you, would you take it?—If I thought I wouldn't be prosecuted, I would.

11877. How much land have you?—Three acres.

11878. Are you a married man?—I am not.

11879. Does your father pay the labourers employed on the land?—He doesn't. I pay them.

11880. What do you do with the produce of the land?—I do what I like with it.

11881. Is your land in grass or tillage?—Some of it is in grass, and some in tillage.

11882. How much of it is in tillage?—About two acres is in tillage.

11883. Do you work the land yourself, or do you hire labourers?—I hire labourers.

11884. How do you pay them?—I pay them by the money I get off the crops of the land. I manage the land.

11885. When you sell the crop, do you apply the money to your own use?—Yes, what I want of it.

11886. Do you give none of it to your father?—If he wanted it, I'd give it to him, and if I wanted any money, he'd give it to me.

11887. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—When you went to Mr. Stokes and got but £2, were you not a little disappointed that you didn't get more?—I wasn't. I got what I was sent for.

11888. Had not you it in your mind that your father got £25 when he only asked for £1?—I hadn't thought of more. I was also present when my father was offered payment for some gates which he made for Mr. Stokes. My father told Mr. Stokes to let it go into the account, as he said he owed him £5. Mr. Stokes said not, that he would pay for the gates, and let the jobbing account go on.

11889. Were you present at Mr. Abbot's meeting?—I was.

11890. There was a report, I believe, that he was a rich English gentleman?—There was.

11891. Do you expect that there would be money going on his side whenever he was a candidate?—I don't.

Matthew Ryan sworn and examined.

Matthew Ryan.

11892. The Chief Commissioner.—You voted at the last election?—I did.

11893. For whom did you vote?—For Major Knox.

11894. Do you know Mr. Stokes?—I do.

11895. Did he canvass you?—He didn't. He had no call to canvass me. I had promised to Major Knox twelve months before.

11896. Had you any word that money was going?—I hadn't.

11897. Did Mr. Stokes say anything to you about money?—He didn't.

11898. Did he say anything to you?—He said he had a list of voters, and that he would put my name and my son's down.

11899. Do you positively swear that there wasn't a word, good or bad, about money, between you and Mr. Stokes?—I do.

11900. Did you get anything for the last election?—I never got a farthing for any election. If I got compensation it would be the first time in my life I got it.

11901. Did you say that to Mr. Stokes?—I did.

11902. Where did he tell you he had you on his list?—At my own door.

11903. Was it after you said if you got compensation it would be the first time in your life you got it?—It was on that moment.

11904. When did you speak of getting compensation?—When he spoke of having me on his list.

11905. How much did you expect?—There was no mention about the sum.

11906. How much do you expect?—I can't say.

11907. How much did you think at the election you would get—he wouldn't insult you by offering five shillings to you, did you expect you would get a £1?—I scarcely know.

11908. Did you expect £10?—I can't say.

11909. Did you expect £20?—I heard it mentioned in his evidence that he intended to give me £20.

11910. Didn't you think that that was the sum you were to get?—Yes.

11911. Was your son to get £20 also?—I dare say.

11912. Have you a doubt on the subject—that he was to get it?—I have no doubt at all.

11913. Had you and your son any talk about this before the poll?—Not a word—not a sentence.

11914. How did you know that your son was to get something?—I didn't know, but in consequence of compensation being mentioned, I know that something was to be got.

11915. How did you know that your son was to get something also?—When he could vote the same as myself I knew there was something about it.

11916. You would both go together?—Yes.

11917. How long before the polling day was this conversation?—It was a good while—it might be a week.

11918. Did you ever see Captain Ethelred Knox?—Never, I don't know him at all, good or bad.

11919. Have you got any money yet?—I did.

11920. How much did you get?—At the Assizes after the election, a son of mine was in difficulties, and I had no cash myself—so I went to Mr. Stokes and asked him for the loan of £5. He brought me to the house and got a promissory note. I signed it, and my son signed it too. That was all the money I ever got.

TENTH DAY.
October 16.
Matthew Ryan.

11921. At what date was the promissory note?—I can't say, but it was at the Assizes, the very day the judge came in after the election.

11922. Your son, you say, signed the promissory note as well as yourself?—He did.

11923. You then got the £5 from Mr. Stokes?—I did.

11924. Was that before the trial of the petition at Carrick?—I think it was after it.

11925. Were you at the trial of the petition at Carrick?—I wasn't.

11927. Nor your son?—No.

11928. Did you ever get get any other money?—Never in my life.

11929. Did you always vote on the Conservative side?—Always, except when Mr. Somers was here.

11930. Did you vote for Mr. Somers?—I did.

11931. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—What are you by trade or occupation?—A smith.

11932. Have you business to do with Mr. Stokes?—Not presently. I do nothing for him just now. I did formerly, but he fell in with my brother, and I have done nothing since for him.

11933. Do you hold any land about the town?—Not a foot.

11934. Have you been in the habit of borrowing money from Mr. Stokes?—I never before borrowed any money from him.

11935. How was it you came to vote for Mr. Somers?—I think I had some conversation with him, and I told him that if there was a Conservative in the field I wouldn't vote for himself, but, when there wasn't, and it was a person from his own side that opposed him, I'd vote for him.

11936. The Chief Commissioner.—You voted against Mr. Townley?—I did.

11937. Were you at the meeting Mr. Abbott had here?—I was.

11938. Did you hear that he was a rich English gentleman with plenty of money?—I didn't know whether he had plenty of money or not, but his ideas gave me to think that he mightn't come here without it.

11939. Was the word going among the electors at that meeting that he had plenty of money?—I didn't pay much attention to what was said at that meeting.

11940. You did not listen to the speeches about politics at all?—I didn't.

11941. Do you think these speeches have much influence on the electors?—I can't say that. I can't speak of anyone but myself.

11942. They did not influence you much. What led you to the opinion that Mr. Abbott need not come here without money?—It was always the case here—you are aware of that yourself.

11943. You were of that opinion when you went to the meeting?—I was.

11944. Did all the Conservatives go to that meeting?—Yes; all the Conservatives went, and met Mr. Abbott, on a circular.

11945. And, I suppose, recognised him as their future representative?—They did.

11946. Did you get a circular to attend the meeting?—I did.

11947. Have you got it?—No; I don't know where it is.

11948. Did you keep it?—I didn't. I read it, and threw it there.

11949. Do you remember what was in it?—The substance of it was to attend a meeting at the hotel—that Mr. Abbott was to be there. That was the substance of it.

11950. Did Mr. Abbott spend any money in Sligo to your knowledge?—Not that I know of.

11951. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Was there any talk among the electors after the last election, that it was hard on them not to get any money?—Nothing but rumour.

11952. What was the rumour?—That people got money.

11953. Do you know, or did you hear, who the people were that got money?—I don't know who they were.

11954. Was there any rumour that there were people who did not get any money?—There was a rumour that some were satisfied, and that some were not.

11955. Was there any talk among the electors about Major Knox introducing Mr. Abbott to them?—Not that I heard of. I didn't hear more than what was said at the meeting. They introduced themselves. I must tell you that I keep very close to my business, and I mind no one but myself.

11956. It was a remarkable thing, you know, Major Knox introducing Mr. Abbott to the electors?—He did so.

11957. Did you hear any people talking about it either before or after that meeting?—I can't recollect whether I did or not. I may or I may not hear it.

11958. Try and recollect whether you did or not?—I can't recollect it; it might be the case.

11959. Did you hear any voters say among themselves:—"Now that this rich gentleman is coming, we will get paid off old scores," or anything like that?—No, I never heard a word about it.

11960. Did you think it yourself?—I didn't.

11961. Did your son get any money at the time that you and he signed the promissory note?—He didn't.

11962. Where is that promissory note now?—Mr. Stokes has it.

11963. Did you ever pay Mr. Stokes back the amount of the promissory note?—Never.

11964. Do you ever intend to pay it?—I don't know that. Mr. Stokes must wait for it.

11965. The Chief Commissioner.—How much do you expect to be paid on the election account?—I don't know.

11966. How much do you expect if he keeps his word?—Nothing more than what he stated in his evidence.

11967. That is £20?—Yes.

11968. The £5 is to be stopped out of that?—I got £10 altogether from him.

11969. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—From the time you signed the promissory note?—I signed two promissory notes. At the first trial of my son the jury didn't agree, and it was put off to March. Mr. Stokes brought me in and gave me £5 to take me out of my difficulties.

11970. Did you sign a second promissory note?—I did.

James Ryan.

James Ryan sworn and examined.

11971. The Chief Commissioner.—You voted at the last election?—I did.

11972. You voted for Major Knox?—Yes.

11973. I suppose you never had voted previously?—Never.

11974. When were you put on the registry?—At the revision before the election.

11975. Was there any conversation with Mr. Stokes about your vote before the election?—Never; except that he asked me one day for whom I was to vote, and I said for Major Knox.

11976. Did you ever hear that you were on his list?—Never.

11977. Your brother did not tell you that you were?—Never.

11978. Did you always intend to vote for Major Knox?—I was always willing to vote for Major Knox from first to last.

James Ryan.

11979. Did you ever hear that your name was on Mr. Stokes's list?—Mr. Stokes told my father something about it once after the election.

11980. How long after the election was it that he told you of it?—Some months after it.

11981. Did you vote expecting to get no money?—I expected no money until Mr. Stokes told me of it.

11982. How much do you expect to get?—Ten pounds. Mr. Stokes told my father I was to get £10.

11983. Did you yourself ever get any money?—Never.

11984. Was the £10 paid to your father?—It was.

11985. Did you sign two promissory notes along with your father for that amount?—I did.

11986. How much do you expect to be paid?—Nothing.

11987. Will you take money if Mr. Stokes gives it to you?—I will. Mr. Stokes told my father that I was to get £10.

11988. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—How old are you?—I am twenty-three years old.

11989. Are you married?—No.

11990. Do you live with your father?—I do.

11991. Do you register out of the house in which you live?—Yes.

11992. Have you any share in the business with your father?—I do the principal business of the house, and my father looks after it.

11993. Your father has not given up the business to you?—He hasn't. I do the business and he looks after it.

11994. The Chief Commissioner.—I suppose you were bound to your father?—I served my time with him. I worked with him altogether.

Patrick Gallagher sworn and examined.

Patrick Gallagher

11995. The Chief Commissioner.—You are an elector?—Yes.

11996. How long have you been an elector?—The first time in my life.

11997. You voted for Major Knox at the last election?—I did.

11998. Do you know a gentleman named Barber?—I do.

11999. State what arrangement was made between you, Mr. Barber and Mr. Stokes, in reference to your vote?—I know nothing of any arrangement between Mr. Stokes and Mr. Barber, but I know what happened between myself and Mr. Barber.

12000. State what it was?—I am an ostler, and I keep livery stables. My principal supporters are the Conservative party, they stop mostly with me. Mr. Barber came to me one day, and in talking over election matters he asked me for whom I was going to vote. I said I hadn't my mind made up. He then said, "You ought to support us." He went away, and in a day or two after he came again. He asked me if I had my mind made up yet for whom I was going to vote. I said I expected some money for my vote. "How much," he said, "do you expect." I said, "As much as I can get." "What would satisfy you," he said. "Fifty pounds," I said. He said, "That's a great deal of money." He then told me to put his horse into the coach-house; he went away, and said, "I'll be back in a few minutes." He came back, and said, "It's all right." I said, "Very well."

12001. What did you understand by the words "All right?"—That I was to get the money.

12002. Did you know anything of the money being lodged anywhere?—No, nothing.

12003. At all events the upshot was that you agreed to vote if you got £50?—Yes.

12004. And you made that bargain with him?—I did.

12005. When did you know that he had the money for you?—I never knew it; he only said he would make me all right; that he was always a friend of mine, and would always be a friend to me.

12006. When first did you hear that he had the money for you?—I heard it was published in the papers.

12007. At this inquiry?—Yes.

12008. Did you never hear it until then?—Never.

12009. You are a Roman Catholic, I believe?—I am, but my whole living depends on the Conservative party.

12010. Did you hear of any other Roman Catholic besides yourself getting money for his vote at the last election?—I didn't.

12011. Did you apply to Mr. Barber for the money?—I didn't. There was an arrangement that I was not to get the money until everything was square.

12012. What do you mean by "everything?"—The election petition and all that.

12013. When did he make that arrangement with you?—About a week before the election, to the best of my opinion.

12014. Why did you anticipate that there would be a petition?—There was a rumour of it.

12015. Did you and Mr. Barber talk of the chances of a petition?—He said he thought there might be one.

12016. And you were not to get the money until the whole was over?—That was the understanding before I voted at all.

12017. Were you summoned to attend the trial of the petition at Carrick?—Yes, I was summoned by both parties.

12018. Did you give your evidence to anybody?—I wasn't called on at all.

12019. Before you went into Court did you tell anyone what you have told us now?—I never was examined.

12020. Would you, if you had been examined at Carrick, have told the truth as you are doing now?—Just the same. The truth can be blamed, but it can't be shamed.

12021. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Is Mr. Stokes a friend of yours?—He is nothing to me.

12022. But you know him?—I do; I am in the habit of going to his house with harness for people that stop in my place. I know him very well.

12023. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Have you any hopes of getting the £50?—Begorra, I have every hopes.

12024. Who do you hope will give it to you?—Mr. Barber, who made the contract. If he don't give it, we must do without it.

12025. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Did anyone offer you any money on the other side?—No one.

12026. Were you canvassed by Captain Flanagan or by anyone on his behalf, to vote for him?—I was canvassed, but I wasn't in the house at the different times Captain Flanagan came there.

12027. How often did Captain Flanagan call at your house?—He was there twice.

12028. The Chief Commissioner.—Were you one of the men that came to Mrs. Hall's?—I was.

12029. Who told you to go there?—I went there of myself.

12030. What reason had you for going there?—I went there for protection.

12031. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Did anyone threaten you for voting for Major Knox?—No. No one asked me where I was going or where I was.

12032. Were you afraid to stop in you own house?—I was.

12033. Was there any damage done to your house?—There were a few panes of glass broken, but I heard it was done by some little boys who were passing by. I am a poor man, and am living by the Conservative party; they were my principal support. No one, therefore, blamed me for voting with them.

12034. The Chief Commissioner.—Do you know Joseph Woods?—I don't.

12035. Did anybody call on you before you went to Carrick, for your evidence?—No.

12036. You never told about this £50 until now?—I never mentioned it to any man until it came out in the papers, nor woman either.

October 16.

Walter Henderson.

12037. The Chief Commissioner.—You voted at the last election for Major Knox?—I did.

12038. Had you ever a vote before?—No.

12039. What are you rated at?—Five pounds five.

12040. What are you by trade and occupation?—A shoemaker.

12041. Did you get any money?—No.

12042. Did anyone get any money for you?—Well, I believe there did.

12043. Who?—Mr. Galbraith.

12044. How much?—£20.

12045. When did you hear that the money was for you?—Well, I had a slight idea of it before this, but not to know it really, to be confident of it.

12046. I know. But you had every confidence in Mr. Galbraith that he would ultimately give you whatever he got for you?—Well, I had in fact.

12047. I want to know before the polling—before you voted for the Major—what idea had you in your head about the £20; who gave you the idea first of all?—Well, in fact it was John Young. He told me he had got half notes—I remember him telling me something about getting half notes.

12048. Go on; you thought you would like to get half notes?—Well, I thought I would like in fact to have something if it was going.

12049. Whom did you tell that to, to try and get you the money?—Well, unless I intimated it to him. I believe I intimated to him that if there was anything going I would like it.

12050. That is, to Young?—Yes.

12051. That you had no objection to his telling it to Galbraith?—No, I had not.

12052. You meant that he should tell that to Galbraith—didn't you?—Well, I meant that if he would convey it I would not be——

12053. Unwilling?—No.

12054. Had Young actually the half notes in his hand?—I did not see them.

12055. Did he tell you he had?—He did.

12056. Now go on; what occurred—did you speak to Galbraith about it?—I don't remember that I did.

12057. Just try; you know Galbraith was examined here yesterday?—I remember passing Mr. Stokes' shop and meeting Mr. Galbraith there.

12058. Go on; tell what occurred—we have it from Mr. Stokes, and we must have it from you?—It happened that Mr. Galbraith intimated to me that he had the money—in fact, slightly; I could not exactly be confident of it.

12059. No, but there was an intimation?—He intimated.

12060. That he had money. How much did you understand?—I did not understand then how much.

12061. What did you say when he intimated that he had money for you?—I don't remember that I said anything to him.

12062. Did you say that it was all right?—I don't believe I did.

12063. What did you say; did you intimate your assent to the bargain?—I assented, of course, but I don't remember that I spoke any word to him.

12064. But you may have nodded or winked that you understood what he meant; at all events you assented to the bargain?—I did.

12065. You meant to convey that to Mr. Galbraith?—Well, I did.

12066. Did you know that Stokes had given Galbraith the money for you?—I did not.

12067. Who, did you know, had given Galbraith the money?—I could not tell at that time.

12068. When did you ascertain it?—I could not really ascertain it until I heard something about Mr. Stokes' evidence, that it was to him he gave the money. I did not well know, up to that time, that he was paymaster. Not well; but I believed it was with him that Galbraith and Young had the dealing, but I did not know that he was really the paymaster then.

12069. Did you tell any other voter that Galbraith had the money for you—that somebody had the money for you before the polling?—I don't remember that I did. I am confident that I did not know that he had it. I might unconsciously, but not to remember it now.

12070. Was there any other voter that was going with you—that agreed to vote whatever way you voted, and you whatever way he voted; with whom you agreed to go together—do you understand the meaning of that?—Well, my mind was fully made up from the commencement of the revision to vote for Major Knox, and not to be taken from that opinion; and I had no notion whatever of voting for any other, nor I believe I would not.

12071. Was any offer made to you from the other side?—Well, I was canvassed on the other side.

12072. By whom?—A gentleman who gave his name as Mr. O'Loghlen—Captain Flanagan's friend.

12073. What did you tell them?—I told him that I was sorry I could not vote for Captain Flanagan on any account.

12074. Was any offer of money made to you at the side of Captain Flanagan?—Well, in fact, I could not say that an offer was made; but it was intimated to me that if I would stand back.

12075. You would get what?—I would get £50, or something thereabouts; but I could not say whether that was given as a humbug or not; I really could not say.

12076. Who intimated to you about the £50?—Well, he was a man of the name of Hart.

12077. What is his Christian name?—Dominic Hart. I believed at the time that he was only jesting me.

12078. Is he a voter?—Well, he had no vote for that election.

12079. He was a voter once?—I believe he never had a vote. His father had a vote.

12080. Where does he live?—He lives at Rusheen.

12081. Did any other person joke you in the same way?—There did; another man named Hugh Hart.

12082. Is he a relative of the first man?—I do not know.

12083. Where does Hugh Hart live?—I think at a place called Tubbernavan; but I cannot say that it was jesting; I think it was the other way, in fact.

12084. These jests are very common at the time of an election; did anybody else intimate anything to you?—I could not say that I met any other man that promised me or talked of giving anything but those.

12085. When the talk was about the £50 what did you say?—I said, I don't doubt that I helped up the joke well enough as far as that goes, and that I said I might stand back.

12086. You are now on your oath and serious?—Yes, I am serious.

12087. Would you have voted for Flanagan for the £50?—I would not.

12088. How much would have tempted you to vote for Flanagan?—I cannot say how far the strength of my mind would work on it; but I would not have voted for £50 for him, but I might have stood back for £50.

12089. Refrained from voting for £50?—Most likely I might.

12090. Was that the offer made to you?—That was the offer.

12091. Did you intimate that you would stay away from voting if you got £50—was that amount enough?—Well, it went as far as that—that that was as much as they could expect—that I should stand back.

12092. How many were present when this talk was going on?—I don't think anyone was present but ourselves at this time.

12093. That is Hugh Hart?—Dominic at one time and myself. We often talked of it. About the Sunday before the poll I remember him telling me there would be no money given, and I told him I did not care for that, I had given my promise to Major Knox before that.

12094. Who told you there would be no money given?—The very same man—Hart.

12095. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Did Hugh Hart mention £50?—He did not. He mentioned £20.

12096. Dominic Hart mentioned £50 first?—He said £40 or £50.

12097. Was it in Stokes's shop that you got the hint from Galbraith that he had money for you?—It was.

12098. Was Stokes there himself?—He was in the shop, I believe, himself.

12099. Do you think he heard what was going on?—I could not say, indeed.

12100. Which of the Harts was it that afterwards told you there was no money going?—Dominic.

12101. You never voted before this last election?—No.

12102. Did you know anything about what was going on at the election of 1865?—Nothing.

12103. Are you a Protestant or a Catholic?—I am a Protestant.

(The witness withdrew.)

Mr. William Lawder sworn and examined.

12104. The Chief Commissioner.—You were the conducting agent for Major Knox at the last election?—Yes.

12105. Have you the briefs of the petition?—When I got the subpœna from your secretary I immediately afterwards telegraphed to Dublin to send down all the papers in connexion with the borough election petition, and I have got a trunk full of them here; and from these I have got the evidence of Mr. Stokes that was particularly referred to in the subpœna. I got a telegram from my correspondent in Dublin to say, that he had sent all the papers but the briefs by this day's four o'clock train. I received it yesterday, I think, about half-past five; and I telegraphed to him that the briefs were the most particular things, and to send them in immediately. I got no answer to that; but I got a boxful of papers, which I have in Sligo.

12106. Then you have not the brief containing Mr. Stokes's evidence?—I don't think, as well as my memory serves me now, that the evidence taken in Carrick-on-Shannon was regularly briefed the time was so pressing. We took the evidence according as it was given and briefed it; and gave the evidence merely as it was given. In fact I have it here.

12107. But it is what was taken down as Mr. Stokes' evidence that we want in the first instance?—Well, I have that here; coming down in the train I opened the box, and got out all my papers.

12108. Mr. Palmer was assisting you?—Yes, he was.

12109. Mr. Stokes's statement was, that he wrote out his evidence, and gave it to Mr. Palmer?—So I saw by the newspapers.

12110. And that afterwards he read it as copied; have you got the original handwriting of Mr. Stokes?—I have got the evidence of Mr. Stokes compared with that of Mr. Stokes and Mr. Cherry, and indorsed by Mr. Palmer, in his own handwriting, at the Sligo petition.

12111. I presume you have still preserved among your papers the original statement of Mr. Stokes in his own handwriting?—I take it that that was taken down from the viva voce statement.

12112. What he said himself was, that he himself wrote out his evidence in his own handwriting. This, obviously, is what you say is taken down in the way that a professional man would do. Cast your eye over it (hands document to witness)?—It was Mr. Palmer that took down his evidence.

12113. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—It might have been taken down in a written statement and turned into a brief?—Whatever papers I have, sir, I have them here.

12114. Of course; we know that?—I have got two other statements of Mr. Robert Stokes's evidence. I assume that there were three—one for each counsel. There is another [hands document to Court]; and here is another of the evidence of Stokes and Cherry jointly.

12115. The Chief Commissioner.—Can you find the bill of particulars of the bribery that was served on you by the petitioner?—Well, I did not look for it.

12116. Could you find it now?—I should think it may be with the papers that I referred to.

12117. It is sure to be with the general brief for counsel?—Yes. Well, these general briefs I have not yet got. As I tell you, I telegraphed for them—that they were the most important things, and to send them by the mail last night.

12118. Now, Mr. Lawder, when you were conducting agent for Major Knox, had you had previous experience of contested elections?—Yes, I had.

12119. Had you ever been conducting agent at an election in Sligo?—No, not in Sligo before that.

12120. In Sligo borough or county?—Not before the last election, but I was in several other counties.

12121. Do you remember before the nomination getting any intimation that there were some voters that required money; I put it in a short way, of course, in order that you may understand me, but it was put in a more delicate way during the election?—Oh, I'll tell you exactly how it was put to me. The only way I understand to answer that question is, that when I first came to Sligo it was reported currently that it was a place where the voters were subject to influences of that nature.

12122. I presume, as conducting agent, you had a list of electors?—Yes; I had the printed Clerk of the Peace's borough list.

12123. Have you now the list which you used during the election of Major Knox?—I may have it, but I cannot say that I have or have not, because immediately when the petition was over I directed every paper I had to be put into a box or sack, and they were all sent to Dublin; and I never saw one of them till I opened them this morning.

12124. I will, first of all, ask for the original list which you used as conducting agent during the election?—Well, I have not got it here. If I have it you shall have it certainly.

12125. You did use the list from time to time, and put down on it, I presume, marks as to how the electors had made up their mind or were likely to vote?—Yes; what I call taking the strength of the borough—favourable, unfavourable, and doubtful.

12126. Did you also mark off for your own information the men that you were informed were open to the influences which you have mentioned?—No.

12127. Did you never make a list of those men?—Never.

12128. Did you know from the persons who were working the election that there were some men that you believed were open to corrupt influences?—I did not know the name of a single man who was open to corrupt influences, because I strictly from the beginning to the end said I would have nothing to do with malpractices.

12129. Do you know Captain Ethelred Knox?—Yes. I met him prior to the election, and at the election, and since it.

12130. You know the room that he had, which has been mentioned in evidence—that he had a separate room from Major Knox's room?—No; I don't know what room he had.

12131. Were you never in his private room?—I should not know his private room this moment.

12132. Were you never in the room which we know as his private room?—I don't remember ever having met him in Leech's—that was the house—except in the two drawing-rooms, as they were called, one of which was used as Major Knox's sitting-room, and the other as his dining-room.

12133. Do you know Mr. Galbraith?—I don't know him. I have heard the name.

12134. You don't know him personally?—No.

12135. Were you ever informed by Mr. Galbraith that any voter, in plain language, wanted money, of course he did not say that?—I don't think I was ever told so by anyone, because I studiously avoided having any conversation with him.

12136. I am sure you tried to do so as much as you could. Did you know two voters of the name of Young?—No, I did not.

12137. Have you heard what evidence Mr. Galbraith gave yesterday?—Except that while I was at the hotel, I met Mr. St. Ledger, the county surveyor, and he said, "I am told your name was mixed up a good deal yesterday by Mr. Galbraith."

12138. I am now going to tell you what Mr. Galbraith swore yesterday. He said there were two voters of the name of Young. These men have been examined. They were paid £20 a piece. Old Young first of all told Mr. Galbraith that he had been badly treated by the Conservatives, and that he would vote against them; then Mr. Galbraith came over to Leech and first of all saw Major Knox, and had a conversation with him; then you came in and were introduced to Mr. Galbraith, the same story was told, intimating plainly that the men wanted money, and you asked then did they want money, he said, "I do not know," and some further conversation ensued, and Mr. Galbraith went away, and shortly afterwards Mr. Stokes came and had the money, that is, £40 for the two Youngs; and that was then given in half notes—half to the Youngs, and half kept by Galbraith. And Mr. Galbraith told us yesterday, he distinctly believed that you sanctioned what he was doing, and must have known about it as a man of the world?—Not one word of that is true. It is all deliberate falsehood. I should not know Mr. Galbraith this moment. I never from the time I came to the Sligo election until this moment offered, or sanctioned, or knew of any sum of money being offered to any elector.

12139. Do you remember the occasion on which you and Mr. Galbraith and Mr. Stokes were in the drawing-room together, or in any dining-room?—No, I do not.

12140. You will not say you were not?—I should not know Mr. Galbraith this moment if I saw him.

12141. You knew Mr. Stokes very well?—Yes, I did.

12142. And you knew that he was an active supporter?—I knew that he was a busybody.

12143. Did you suspect at all, at the time of the election that he was engaged—I will not say with any voter by name, but engaged in practices which were improper?—I had no suspicion of the sort, until a Sunday when I was sitting in Allinghams hotel. Major Knox came in after church a good deal excited, and he told me, from rumours he had heard on his way from church, he was determined or inclined, I won't say which, to pitch up the whole thing, and that he would order his portmanteau to be packed and go away.

12144. Was that on the Sunday before the election?—Yes, I think it was, as well as I recollect. I think it was the Sunday before—or the Sunday week before it may have been; I am not certain. It was on a Sunday; but that was the first time that I heard of Mr. Stokes's interference. I asked him, "Whom did you hear that report from?" He said, "I heard it from Mr. Randle Peyton the attorney," and I think he said from Mr. Utred Knox, a relative of his. When he told me that he had given orders for his portmanteau to be packed up, as that he had made up his mind to leave the place altogether sooner than have anything to do with such work. I said, "I think you are taking an uncommonly hasty step to go away, acting upon the rumours of officious fellows like that," or words to that effect. It was with a good deal of persuasion then that I told Major Knox that he ought to continue, as, of course, if he had not employed Mr. Stokes he could not be held responsible for any such attempts on his part. That's all I know of Mr. Stokes.

12145. Did you see Mr. Stokes after that?—Oh, I saw him repeatedly.

12146. Did you give him any caution?—Yes, I did.

12147. You did?—I did. I pretty much told him what Major Knox was about to do, as well as I can now remember,—about his going away,—and said, "You had better be very cautious, because Major Knox will not do anything, or sanction anything that is illegal or improper."

12148. What did you mean by being "very cautious?"—Being very cautious not to interfere at all for Major Knox. I told Major Knox at that time to go and tell Mr. Stokes that he would not allow him or any man to take any liberties on his behalf.

12149. The meaning of "liberties" of course was——?—Improper acts.

12150. Promising money?—Promising money or any sort of promises.

12151. "Any sort of promises," of course, in plain language, means bribery?—That's of course the meaning,—bribery or promises of any nature.

12152. Where was it that you gave the caution to Mr. Stokes?—As well as I remember it was in the street.

12153. Did you see him after that Sunday?—I saw him every day.

12154. You saw him every day after that?—I think I saw him every day prior to, and until the election was over; but I did not speak to him.

12155. Have you now any other lists of electors besides the Clerk of the Peace's list made for the election?—No. I don't think I have any others; in fact, it was the ordinary printed list that I had ruled with red ink in four columns, and three columns.

12156. And you, of course, marked it from time to time, according to the information you got?—Of course, in my client's interest, trying to see who would vote for him, and who would vote against him.

12157. Were any other persons present when Major Knox said to you that he would pack up?—Mr. Randle Peyton, the solicitor, was present.

12158. Have you a list of the electors to whom Major Knox referred as occupying the houses he had purchased?—No, I have not, nor do I believe it was for a long time that I knew he had any houses at all in the borough.

12159. Had you any information at Carrick about the evidence Mr. Stokes was to give except this?—Except that, I had not.

12160. Mr. Stokes states he was informed by some one, or heard some one say he understood his evidence could not be produced in court—that is the phrase he used?—I saw a report of it in the newspaper, in which he said that Mr. Macdonogh said it could not be produced in court. I saw that in Dublin, and the moment I saw it, I wrote—I think it was on Wednesday or Tuesday last, just after it came out—to Mr. Macdonogh to say—I lost not a moment in intimating to him—that I thought he ought to take immediate steps to set himself right before the public; because I don't believe such a course ever was pursued either by Mr. Palmer or Mr. Macdonogh.

12161. That is a proper observation of your's, of course, but I have now heard the evidence given?—Well, sir, a thing of the kind never occurred to my knowledge. To my knowledge nothing of the sort ever occurred.

12162. He used a remarkable phrase, "That his evidence could not be produced in court"—of course the meaning of that was—it was written out by him, and briefed under your directions—that it would not be sworn to in court; did you so understand it?—Of course I did. It was Mr. Palmer who took down his evidence.

12163. I know; but you understood perfectly well what was meant by that when you read it?—Of course I did. It meant that when he told a story, some one suggested that it should be a made-up story for the Court, and not the true one. That is what I concluded.

12164. You know now, according to his statement, that he did swear falsely at Carrick?—He must have sworn falsely, either at Carrick or Sligo the other day.

12165. According to his statement he swore falsely at Carrick—he said that here?—Well, he must reconcile that for himself; I cannot do it. He certainly must have sworn falsely either at Carrick or here, according to the evidence that I read in the newspapers.

12166. I must ask you this question: you were conducting agent; directly or indirectly, had you anything to do with suggesting to him what his evidence should be at Carrick?—Never, sir, nor to anyone.

12167. To what does he allude when he says that Mr. Macdonogh said that the evidence could not be produced in court?—I can't fancy what he alluded to, because I believe it is an utter falsehood that any gentleman would do such an act—any professional man.

12168. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—I understand that to mean that Mr. Macdonogh considered his evidence would be fatal to ——?—Damaging to Major Knox—yes.

12169. I did not understand that to mean that Mr. Macdonogh had said that he did not believe that his statement was one that he could swear to, but simply that if he was obliged to swear what was stated in his instructions he believed it would prove bribery?—What I saw in the Daily Express, I well remember, was that he gave down his evidence to Mr. Palmer, and that after that it was shown to Mr. Macdonogh, and that then it was altered, or words to that effect.

12170. I do not think that was so?—At all events, I know nothing whatever of such an act.

12171. At all events that is the reason why I want to see into the matter; I am sure you will give every assistance?—Every assistance in my power.

12172. And in order to find out the truth of this business, I want to see the original statement in Mr. Stokes's handwriting?—If I have it, the Court shall have it with the greatest pleasure.

12173. Because this, you see, is apparently drawn by a professional man?—That is a copy by the clerks.

12174. But I mean the draft of it?—Yes; Mr. Palmer told me no later than the day before yesterday—he came up to me to ask for those papers the night before last, and said "I remember perfectly well having taken down Mr. Stokes's evidence;" and he urged on me the necessity, as he had already done, of sending for every document.

12175. The Chief Commissioner.—Why did you not keep any list of the men supposed to be open to corrupt influence on the other side, because that is a thing that has been done by conducting agents at elections?—I generally try to find out by fair means what the people are going to do—how they are going to vote, that's my plan. I never will be a party to bribery.

12176. Did you know anything about Brennan?—No; I saw him. I have not seen Brennan since the end of June, or the beginning of July.

12177. Did Brennan apply to you for money after the Carrick petition?—Never, either before or since.

12178. What did he call on you for?—He never called upon me.

12179. You saw him in July?—I saw him once in Sackville-street, near the Post Office, and I saw him a second time at the terminus of the railway station.

12180. That's here?—No, in Dublin—the Broadstone station.

12181. I thought you meant that you saw him in the way of business?—Oh no, never. I saw him near the Post Office in Sackville-street one day, and I saw him another day at the Broadstone station in Dublin, and the only conversation I had with him when he saluted me was, "Are you going to Sligo?" And he said no, he would be afraid, or something of that sort, and I passed on.

12182. Mr. Cherry's evidence was also briefed?—I have it here.

12183. Who took it down?—It is indorsed in the same way by Mr. Palmer. (Hands paper to Court.)

12184. And Mr. Galbraith's evidence?—I have not that here; I don't know.

12185. Is it in the box?—It may be; if it is I will look for it. If you will have the kindness to tell me any document that I have you shall have it with the greatest pleasure.

Mr. Galbraith was here called to the table.

12186. Do you know Mr. Galbraith now?—I remember his face.

12187. Did you know him to be a supporter of the Major's; do you remember him to have been one of his supporters?—Well, I really can't say whether he was or was not.

12188. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Are you positive that you never saw him at Leech's in company with Major Knox?—I never recollect having seen him in the place.

Mr. Galbraith re-examined.

12189. Mr. Galbraith, where you are will you repeat your evidence about the Youngs; first of all the conversation you had with the Youngs; then with the Major, and then in the presence of Mr. Lawder. Repeat now, that Mr. Lawder may hear what you said yesterday?—The elder Young came to me. He told me that his son was not satisfied, or something to that effect; that he was displeased with his party at the last election, and that for himself he wanted nothing, but that his son expected, or words to that effect. I don't know his exact words, I don't say I am accurate in his exact words, but that was the purport and meaning. I said nothing to Young, and he went away. I then went down and called to see Major Knox at Mr. Leech's. I did see him, and I told him similar.

12190. The Chief Commissioner.—Say what you said to the Major as well as you can recollect?—I told him about the Youngs just as I am after telling you, and the Major spoke to me for some time; I don't exactly know what he said; but I know he went in and he introduced Mr. Lawder. Mr. Lawder came out and spoke to me, and he said, as well as I can remember the words, it was to the effect—"Is it money they want?" He did not seem pleased. I said I did not know. I went away, and about an hour after that Mr. Stokes came up, and we sent for the younger Young, and he threw two £20 notes on the ground in an envelope or piece of paper, and Young took up one half and I took up the other.

12191. Did Mr. Stokes, before this, come into the Major's room?—He did, sir. Not before it; I think it was while I was there.

12192. But while Mr. Lawder was there?—Well, I can't say that he did. Mr. Lawder was in the house, but I don't know that Mr. Stokes was present with him. I am not sure of that.

12193. Which did you or Mr. Stokes leave the Major's room first?—I did.

12194. Was Mr. Stokes left behind with Mr. Lawder and the Major?—I think Mr. Stokes was by himself in the room, as well as I remember.

12195. In what room?—In the room in Mr. Leech's.

12196. Was that the drawing-room or the dining-room?—I believe it was the drawing-room.

12197. Which room was it that you had the conversation with Major Knox and Mr. Lawder in?—It was in a small room off that.

12198. Back or front?—Back.

12199. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—How did you see Mr. Stokes at all; did he come into the little room?—No, I went into the other room.

Tenth Day.
October 16.
Mr. Galbraith

12200. Who took you into that other room?—Well, I really don't know. I think Major Knox came in and brought me in there; either that or I met Mr. Stokes on the lobby or landing, I cannot say which, and we went in there.

12201. What took you into that room at all?—I really can't say at this moment.

12202. Was it to get a glass of wine?—No, I never got a drop of wine in it.

12203. What was the reason, because you had done your business? You had told, according to your account, Mr. Lawder and Major Knox about the Youngs. You would naturally leave the house then. What took you into the other room?—I really don't know. I know I went into the large room.

12204. How long did you stop there?—Not more, certainly, than three or five minutes.

12205. Did you talk to Mr. Stokes while you were there?—I did.

12206. Was it Major Knox that brought you into that small room?—I really can't remember. I don't remember now what brought me into that larger room.

12207. Did you speak to Mr. Stokes about the Youngs?—I did.

12208. Why did you not tell us that last night?—I was not asked.

12209. You told us last night you did not know whether Mr. Stokes knew about the Youngs?—I don't remember that.

12210. The Chief Commissioner.—What did Mr. Stokes say to you in that room?—Well, I really don't know what he said exactly; but I know there was some little conversation about them. I really don't know what it was.

12211. Do you now recollect whether you repeated to Mr. Stokes what you say you told Major Knox and Mr. Lawder?—No, I don't think I did go through it.

12212. Did you tell him the purport of it?—Well, I think so. As well as I remember I did.

12213. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—What brought you into that small room?—I went to tell Major Knox, you know, in the first instance, about the Youngs. That's what brought me there.

12214. Did you see Major Knox in the small room?—Yes; he came in after I was there about three minutes.

12215. Was Mr. Stokes present?—No, he was not.

12216. Did you speak to Major Knox then about the Youngs wanting money?—No; I did not mention a word about money.

12217. No; but did you give Major Knox to understand that they would not vote unless they got something?—Well, I did.

12218. On that occasion, in the small room?—Yes, that was the only occasion I ever spoke to him.

12219. Was Stokes by when you were speaking to him?—He was not.

12220. Was it after that that Stokes came into the small room?—Stokes did not come into the small room.

12221. Was it after that you saw Stokes in the house?—It was.

12222. And while Mr. Stokes was present was there any conversation about the Youngs wanting to get something?—Well, I think there was; I think I mentioned the case to him.

12223. In the presence of Stokes?—I think so.

12224. Did the Major make any observation at that time, do you remember?—Well, I do not remember, indeed. I know he left me, and went out to see some one—I think it was Mr. Lawder. He said that he would introduce Mr. Lawder.

12225. Did he make any observation to this effect, that if the Youngs wanted to get something he would not be a party to give them any, or anything to that effect?—I don't remember his ever saying that.

12226. Did he say anything at all conveying that he would not give money to the Youngs, or allow money to be given to the Youngs?—Not that I remember. There was no mention of money made during the time they were there that I can remember whatever.

12227. The Chief Commissioner.—Mr. Galbraith, can you fix how near to the nomination day or to the polling day this conversation was?—Well, I really do not know, but I think it was a short time before it.

12228. Do you remember the Sunday before the polling?—I do not indeed. Anything particular about it I do not.

12229. I want to know whether it was before or after that Sunday?—I know it was only a few days—I believe it was only a few days before the polling, as well as my memory serves, a few days before; perhaps it might be three or four; I believe it was not much more.

Mr. Lawder.

Examination of Mr. Lawder resumed.

12230. The Chief Commissioner.—Mr. Lawder, looking at Mr. Galbraith can you say he was not in the room with you and the Major—never mind now about the conversation?—Well, sir, I never remember to have seen him in Mr. Leech's house.

12231. You do not remember him now as one of the supporters of Major Knox?—I know his face. Beyond that I think I would not even know his name if I met him in the street.

12232. Is it possible that the Youngs were mentioned to you?—I don't remember hearing any such conversation; and, as I tell you, I don't believe I ever met that gentleman in Mr. Leech's house; and further than that, I will swear most positively that I never was in the third apartment in Mr. Leech's house.

12233. You were only——?—In the two rooms I have mentioned.

12234. You were in the two rooms?—Yes.

12235. And you were not in the room some of the witnesses called Captain Knox's room?—Yes; or the "little room," as this gentleman calls it.

12236. No, that is one of the two rooms?—The little room? Well, the rooms—the one as I described to you was a drawing-room, and the other Major Knox's sitting-room. They were both large rooms—very good sized rooms.

12237. I suppose one was a little larger than the other?—They appeared to me to be pretty much the same.

12238. Are they in the front of the house?—Yes, they are.

12239. Both?—Yes.

Mr. Galbraith.

Mr. Galbraith re-examined.

12240. Mr. Galbraith, was the room you call the little room in the front or the back?—It is more in the back, sir.

12241. Is there a window opening in front?—No, sir; I think not.

Examination of Mr. Lawder resumed.

12242. After that Sunday on which Major Knox was angry about the things that were going on did you see Mr. Stokes almost every day?—Yes, almost every day.

12243. Did you see him in Leech's house?—I don't remember having seen him after that in Leech's house. I may have, but I don't remember.

12244. You spoke to him about the election?—Yes, as I have told you.

12245. I mean, did you speak to him every day about the election?—No, I did not, because I avoided him after that.

12246. You avoided him after the time you gave him a caution?—I did.

12247. And you were perfectly sincere in giving him that?—Perfectly. I told him Major Knox told me that if £1 would return him he would go away and would not represent the place.

12248. There is no doubt now, that these Youngs got the money?—Well, I don't know whether they did or did not.

12249. I mean that there is no doubt at all about it?—I don't know. I don't know whether they did or did not.

12250. Well, I mean that the two men have been examined, and the two persons who bribed them have been examined?—Well, you must not ask me, sir, with great respect, to pass my judgment on their examination.

12251. I am not asking you?—But I don't know anything whatsoever of their having got £20 or 20*s*.

12252. You heard the M'Mullens' name mentioned at Carrick?—I did at the petition.

12253. When were you first informed where the M'Mullens were?—I don't think I ever heard of their names until I heard the evidence given of their having been sent away from Sligo. I might have seen them on the registry list, but to know where they lived, or where they were, or anything about them I did not.

12254. Do you remember looking once, when you were preparing the briefs, what Mr. Stokes stated in this document about the M'Mullens' case?—No, I don't think I looked at it till I heard him giving his evidence in the court. I had not to do everything. The room was full of clerks and full of people, and I told Mr. Palmer to undertake the taking down of the evidence.

12255. I know you had an immensity to do, and it is only the most difficult things that a professional man can do?—In fact I could not attempt to do one thing until I would be actually called on to do something else; so I intrusted the taking down of the evidence to Mr. Palmer and some others; and there in court, I heard the evidence given by Mr. Stokes and by some lady, some hotel-keeper, as to the M'Mullens having gone away to Ballyshannon, I think they said.

12256. It has already been stated in evidence that you and Mr. Macdonogh both publicly and privately, on Major Knox's side, gave instructions to produce every witness?—Yes.

12257. And these were Mr. Macdonogh's instructions to you and yours to everyone you had anything to do with?—Yes.

12258. But the M'Mullens and Mr. Hignell have been examined; and during the trial of the Carrick petition the M'Mullens were at Clithero in England?—Until I was at Carrick as I tell you, I did not know where they were.

12259. But at Carrick, or immediately afterwards, had you information as to where they were?—Beyond what I heard stated at Carrick I had not. I knew nothing whatever about them.

12260. When did you first hear they were at Clithero?—Well, until you recall the name to my recollection I don't remember having heard it until I heard it at Carrick-on-Shannon. I may have heard it. I never knew where they were.

12261. You may have heard it at Carrick?—Yes, because I heard everybody.

12262. From Hignell?—I think it was from Hignell.

12263. Did he tell the Major?—I don't know.

12264. Is your recollection now, Mr. Lawder, that he told you at Carrick?—No, he never told me, as I recollect; nor did I know where they were till I heard the examination at Carrick-on-Shannon on the petition. I knew nothing of them.

12265. But at Carrick you remember he did tell you?—I remember the subject of his evidence was that they were absent; but until you now mention Clithero I could not have remembered the name.

12266. Do you remember was Hignell charged in the bill of particulars as one of the bribing agents?—Well, I don't know. Of course I will be able to find the bill. He may have been. I don't know.

12267. Because, I presume, as is the usual way, everyone charged with bribing was down, so that Hignell's name would have been down?—Well, they put down no end of names, and they used to wind up with the usual phrase, "and several persons to us unknown."

12268. That is the common phrase?—That is the common phrase.

12269. That is to prevent an objection. Did you take down Hignell's evidence?—No, I don't remember that I did.

12270. I presume you have there the names of all the gentlemen charged with having bribed?—I have every person there that counsel directed me to have, and even some that I myself thought should be there, because Mr. Macdonogh's direction to me was, and my own determination was, not to withhold anything.

12271. Captain Ethelred Knox was there?—He was.

12272. Was his evidence taken down in the brief?—No, not that I know of.

12273. Or was he subpœnaed as a witness to your knowledge?—I subpœnaed him, and he told me he was subpœnaed by the other side.

12274. When you subpœnaed him why was not his evidence taken down?—Well, he told me, as well as I remember, I don't think it was thought important that he had anything to prove, because if I knew he had anything to prove I would have taken care to put him on the table; but he was in court every day, because he was subpœnaed by both sides.

12275. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—You said that before you came to Sligo you heard there were voters open to bribery; did you make any inquiries when you came to Sligo as to what the case was?—I think what I stated was, that when I came to Sligo I heard that it was so.

12276. Having heard that in Sligo, did it occur to you to make any inquiries as to who were corrupt and who were uncorrupt?—Certainly not; I would have nothing to do with such work as that.

12277. Then did you, as a sensible conducting agent, make up your mind that you would not be mixed up in malpractices of any such nature?—Decidedly.

12278. Were you aware of Captain Ethelred Knox having a large sum of money in his possession?—Not at all.

12279. Did you hear of his having hundreds of pounds?—I never heard it until I read the evidence in the newspapers the day before yesterday, or a day or two since it was given here.

12280. Now, before the Carrick trial did you read over the evidence that was briefed for your counsel?—Do you mean at Carrick?

12281. At Carrick?—No.

12282. I mean before the witnesses were produced did you read over the evidence?—Some I may have, and some I could not, because I had not time. They were made up as I tell you in that way; counsel got them; and in court, when counsel examined the witness, if there was a spare copy of course I read it over quickly as the witness was going on in some cases; and in some I was not there during the examination, and so on.

12283. Did you leave the taking down of the evidence to a great extent to Mr. Palmer?—Yes, and you will see his handwriting on the back of the briefs, which he will identify.

12284. Mr. Lawder, may I ask you, at the Sligo election or before it, were you intimidated or threatened to any extent?—Very much indeed.

12285. Will you state how you were?—In the streets here one evening I went once to see a gentleman on business, and coming back the mob shouted at the door I was at to have me thrown into the river, but a body of police came up and protected me to the hotel. Another day Major Knox and I, and I think a relative of mine, were coming in after canvassing one or two voters outside the town and we were pelted with stones.

12286. After Captain King met his death were you in any way threatened or intimidated?—As far as the throwing of stones and all that sort of thing, so much so that we could not go across from the hotel opposite to this house without protection.

12287. Did any of the mob threaten to treat you in the same way that Captain King was treated?—Yes, they called me some names and said I should be treated in the same way that Captain King was treated.

12288. And after that were you obliged to go about the town with an escort of police?—I never attempted to go any place without an escort of police or military; sometimes the carbineers, when they were there, and when I could not get them the police. I was on my way on Sunday to Major Knox's lodgings at Leech's, and we had to take refuge in several places, and the house was pelted with stones and the windows knocked to pieces. In fact the town appeared more like a town in a state of siege than a town in a country that ought to be peaceful.

12289. As the conducting agent of Major Knox, are you aware of any of the voters who promised to vote for him being deterred from giving their votes for him?—Oh, a great many of them were greatly frightened, and some of them I was told at the time were absent through intimidation.

12290. Were absent?—That they went away. I know one case of a little man, an elector, Mark Antony somebody,—I remember the name, which struck me as peculiar; the surname I can't remember at this moment,—but I know he had to come and take refuge in the hotel opposite, and no power would induce him to come and vote.

12291. He abstained from voting?—Yes, he said he dare not vote for his life he was so threatened. In fact I saw him as he came to the hotel and the mob got round him and caught him by the legs and arms and everything, and we had the greatest trouble to get the man in from the mob.

12292. You believe he abstained from voting in consequence of mob violence?—Yes, I positively believe it; in fact he told me so,—that his life would not be safe.

12293. Was there any other voter who had to abstain from voting in a similar way?—I can't state at present, but I saw by the newspapers that there were houses broken into, and all sorts of things done. It was most disgraceful the state of the town.

12294. Is there anything else that occurs to you to mention in reference to mob violence in town during the election?—I don't know whether it is essential or not, but I believe if we had not had the most ample protection we dare not even appear in the streets.

12295. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Did you remark whether there was any difference as to the voters against whom this violence was directed?—It appeared to me to be all directed against those in support of Major Knox.

12296. But was there no difference among his supporters,—I mean were Roman Catholics who were suspected of an intention to vote for Major Knox more assaulted than the others?—That I could not say, because I don't know the place sufficiently well to distinguish between the two parties; but if you ask me individually, I know that I was most particularly set upon—myself and my cousin—and we were over and over warned by our friends not to attempt to leave the hotel as we certainly would be murdered; and in this very Court-house I was told I should be treated as Captain King was treated.

12297. Were the mob generally armed with bludgeons?—They had bludgeons and stones. These were their general weapons, I think.

12298. Did you see any mobs assembled round any public-houses getting drink?—Yes, I did. The very hotel in which I was staying—the Victoria hotel—one evening was pelted. Another evening Major Knox's lodgings were assailed with stones, and he had to rush over and take refuge in the hotel and stay there for a night or two.

12299. At what public-houses did you see the mob?—Oh, I did not see public-houses. I saw the place in which I was staying, the Victoria hotel, and Mr. Leech's house.

12300. Did you see mobs getting drunk, or refreshment at any public-houses?—I did not see that. In fact I kept away from the mobs, because they were anything but desirable companions.

12301. From any information you then or subsequently got, have you any idea as to whether there were any public-houses in which the mobs were supplied with drink?—Supplied with drink?

12302. Yes?—No, I could not say personally that I know anything about it.

12303. I do not mean that you knew personally; I merely want to know can you give us any information?—As to particular houses?

12304. As to particular houses?—No.

12305. The Chief Commissioner.—To use the common phrase, were any houses open for the mob?—No, sir, not that I know of.

12306. You know what I mean by that?—Oh I do, perfectly.

12307. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Did you never hear of anybody who could give you information?—I repeatedly heard the mobs who were in a wild, savage state of drunkenness, and committing all sorts of things; and we had to make application to the Government repeatedly to get protection through the town and clear them.

12308. Yes, but you were Major Knox's conducting agent, you know?—Yes, I was.

12309. And, of course, I suppose you kept your attention directed towards what would invalidate his opponent's election, and cause his own to be successful?—My most strenuous efforts were directed towards preventing anything that would——

12310. Oh, of course; but you were, I presume, directing your attention likewise to bribery, and treating on the other side, so that, in case Captain Flanagan should be returned, you would have good grounds for a petition?—The only direction I gave was to have nothing at all to do with it.

12311. But had you no person keeping an eye out on the opposite side as to what is generally done at elections—had you no person watching the other side as to bribery, and treating, and mob influence?—Oh it was hopeless to watch the mob influence, it was so general.

12312. Now, can you tell us, according to your opinion, whether those mobs were organized?—Well, they seemed to be in very good order sometimes, and very disorderly at other times.

12313. That is not what I mean; I mean organized and under the control of persons?—I could not name any person under whose control they were.

12314. From your own observation did you form an opinion as to whether they were under the direction of any person or not?—I saw a gentleman who, I believe, has contradicted all knowledge of it; I saw him very much with the mobs at the time.

12315. I must ask you for his name?

12316. The Chief Commissioner.—You refer to Mr.

M'Ternan?—Yes. I saw him very much with the mobs. I saw Mr. O'Loghlen very much with them and some others.

12317. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Was this mob violence continued for a considerable time after the election?—It was. I left this as soon after the election as I could get away.

12318. I suppose you did; but you had to return?—I had to return for the county election.

12319. I mean after both the county and the borough election had you not to return for the purpose of getting up evidence for the petition?—No; I never had the honour of being in Sligo since; in fact I would not have undertaken to defend the petition at all if it were tried here.

12320. If it were tried here?—If it were tried here I should not have defended it.

12321. From an apprehension of personal violence?—Certainly, both of personal violence, and violence to Major Knox, and to anyone who dared to come here to give evidence on his behalf.

12322. Could you tell us, Mr. Lawder, who was it that told you about there being corrupt voters when you first came to Sligo?—I could not. It was just the current report before I came. I had heard of Sadlier and Ball and people who were here before. I had had nothing to do with an election before.

12323. The Chief Commissioner.—Do you know Mr. Abbott?—I know his appearence. I never spoke to him. I saw him one day in the railway carriage as far as from Mullingar to Cavan junction.

12324. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—You became Major Knox's conducting agent about August?—About the middle of August.

12325. Could you recollect what sum you received from the Major?—Perfectly. I received two cheques, one for £200 and another for £75.

12326. I do not ask you very particularly; but you can tell us what you did with the money?—I can tell you very nearly. I paid £75 to Mr. Tighe, who was then mayor, for which he gave me a sort of undertaking, or gave a receipt and undertaking to account for it when called upon, or something of the sort; and I paid Mr Robinson, the advising counsel, his statuteable fee, as everyone knows.

12327. And you paid yourself of course?—And for telegrams—I don't think the £275 would have done all that. However what I got I paid between counsel and telegrams and such things.

12328. All went in legitimate expenses?—Certainly.

12329. Everything you got?—Every halfpenny.

12330. Is there any person to whom you would attribute the violence of the mob as an exciting cause?—I really don't like—that would be a mere matter of opinion.

12331. Well, I ask you as a matter of opinion, and not as a matter within your own knowledge?—I could not name any one individual; but I attribute it entirely to those in the interests of Captain Flanagan.

12332. Could you mention any persons in particular?—No, I would prefer not to name any persons. Any papers you wish for——

12333. The Chief Commissioner.—Look for the lists of electors—any you have now?—I will this moment, and Mr. Galbraith's evidence?

12334. Yes?—That I am certain I have.

12335. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—You can arrange to forward to us one of the briefs?—Certainly. I hope they may be here by the mid-day train.

(The witness withdrew.)

Mr. Robert Stokes re-examined.

12336. The Chief Commissioner.—Do you remember the day the Youngs were paid?—I do, sir. I don't know the day of the week, but I recollect giving it.

12337. What I want to know is, how long before the nomination was it, or the polling—which?—I could not exactly say, but I think I told you it was some days.

12338. Can you recollect whether it was before or after the Sunday before the polling?—How long was Sunday, or what day was the polling?

12339. The polling was on Thursday, and that was Thursday the 19th of November?—I could not say whether it was before the Sunday or after it.

12340. Do you remember John Shiel going away?—Yes.

12341. Was it before or after that that you paid the money to the Youngs?—I could not say, indeed.

12342. Shiel went out of town on a Sunday morning?—He did.

12343. Do you remember whether it was before or after that?—Indeed I could not.

12344. Who was it that first spoke to you about the Youngs, was it themselves, or Mr. Galbraith, or who?—I was listening to Mr. Galbraith's evidence and I thought that Mr. Galbraith's memory was at fault a little on it. I went over to Major Knox's, I met a servant and I was sent up stairs, and I there met Mr. Galbraith in the back room that he described, alone. Mr. Galbraith told me something that he had got over about the others; that the Youngs were trying to do something. Mr. Galbraith intimated to me the manner in which the Youngs were going on, and I said to him, "Oh, man, make it a business matter; just go down to them and see what they want." I don't know whether he and I went together, or whether he went first and I followed; and I there met the younger Young in Mr. Galbraith's and arranged with him according as Young told you. He said twenty pounds. I said, "We shan't speak of pounds at all, say engravings or anything you like." I went back again and brought the money and gave it as described.

12345. Where did you go back to?—To Captain Ethelred Knox.

12346. Where was the Captain?—He was in what he told me was his own room.

12347. Where was that room—on the same floor with the Major's?—On the same floor.

12348. Were you in the room with the Major that evening?—That was, as far as my memory tells me, in the morning.

12349. In the morning?—In the morning.

12350. Were you there in the morning with the Major?—It was on my first going to the house to speak, I could not say about what, possibly about election matters.

12351. Did you see Mr. Lawder there?—No, no; the room was quite without anyone except Mr. Galbraith, when I went in. I cannot say whether anyone came in afterwards or not, while we were there; but the circumstance I relate to you is quite fresh in my mind.

12352. What did you tell Captain Ethelred Knox?—When I came back?

12353. Say everything that you said to him—just suppose that I was the Captain?—As far as I can recollect, I told hin that the Youngs were open to so much, and that the young fellow would not vote without it.

12354. Did you name a sum?—Twenty pounds each.

12355. I want you to speak; just supposing that I was the Captain, what did you say?—There were three, Walter Henderson and the two Young's, and they should get £20 a piece to vote, and that I would arrange it if he gave me the money, and that they would not take my word—they should have the half notes.

12356. The Captain was by then?—He was by himself.

12357. What sort of money did the Captain give you?—Bank of Ireland notes.

12358. What amount?—I think £20 notes.

12359. Where did he take the money from?—I

TENTH DAY.
October 16.
Mr. Robert Stokes.

don't doubt but it was out of his breast pocket, a pocket book, or something that way. I cannot be accurate exactly, but he had not to leave the house for it.

12360. That is what I want to know—had he the money about him?—He had.

12361. Were they new Bank of Ireland notes?—I think they were.

12362. Do you know what a book of notes is before they are divided?—Oh, it was not that.

12363. It was not out of a book?—No; you mean a book like a cheque-book?

12364. Like a cheque-book—yes?—It was not.

12365. At what hour was it that you got the money from the Captain?—It was between ten, and perhaps one—twelve and one—ten and twelve it might be.

12366. Was it late at night?—Oh, no, in the morning—that morning.

12367. Then had you been before that to see the Major?—Not that day.

12368. Did you see the Major that day?—The after part of the day, is it?

12369. Any part of that day?—Oh, I might; I don't know, indeed.

12370. Now, on the day of the election, did you see the Major?—It is very possible I did.

12371. Do you remember did you call at Leech's?—It is probable that I might, but I can't remember. I was in very frequently.

12372. Mr. Lawder told us about the Major, on the Sunday before the election, expressing indignation about you, and saying he would pack up his portmanteau, and leave town?—That was true as far as I can recollect. Yes.

12373. Did the Major so speak to you?—He did.

12374. What did he say to you, tell us the very words?—I could not tell the words; it was something the way Mr. Lawder described—that he had heard stories, and that he thought it better to resign and leave—that he had been warned something was going on that he did not like, and that he would——

12375. Who were present?—Well, I think the Major himself. I cannot say exactly who any other persons were. I know there were very few, if there were any. But he did tell me that.

12376. That made an impression on your mind—that conversation?—It did.

12377. Was it before or after that, that you bribed the Youngs and Henderson?—Oh, I think it was before that.

12378. That you bribed them?—I think it was; I am not sure.

12379. That is your recollection?—I am only speaking from belief, I cannot be positive about it.

12380. Was it before or after that, that you bargained with the Ryans?—If I am right, I told you that I had no bargain with the Ryans—that they had perfect confidence in me.

12381. Very well. Did you make any bargain after you got the caution, or any arrangement; what I want to know is this—after that conversation with Major Knox on the Sunday when he was going to resign, did you get any money from Captain Ethelred Knox?—I did.

12382. What did you get from him, and for whom was it?—I think it was to dispose of as I wished generally.

12383. How much?—It was between £60 and £100—I could not tell.

12384. In what form of notes was it given to you?—They were bank of Ireland notes.

12385. Were they twenties?—Principally twenties.

12386. After the election did you keep a bank account yourself?—I did.

12387. In what bank?—The Provincial.

12388. Have you now any of those notes?—I have not. I did not keep them. I circulated them according as they came to me.

12389. Did you make any lodgement of that money, in any sum, in your own bank?—I did not. I did not expect to have it. I kept it beside me to let out, and since that, according as I wanted money, I would not send to the bank, I let it out.

12390. Did you ever put any of those notes in a lodgement, making up a docket for lodgement in the ordinary way of business, as a merchant or tradesman does to meet a bill?—I might have paid a bill with some of them, but I am not certain.

12391. Do you remember lodging any of that money in the Provincial?—I could not say exactly. I never lodged it separately by itself, without its being mixed up with other notes or gold, according as it came to me. I never did, except I wanted to make up a sum.

12392. Did you speak to Captain Knox about Henderson at the same time that you spoke about the Youngs?—As well as my memory affords me, I did.

12393. You tell us that you got £60 from Captain Ethelred for these three men in one sum?—Yes.

12394. At that time had you any money that you had previously got from him unapplied?—I think I had.

12395. About how much?—I think I had some thirty or forty-five pounds; I can't be certain.

12396. In your presence did anything occur between Mr. Galbraith and the Major in reference to the Youngs?—My memory is quite at a loss for that, because Mr. Galbraith was alone when I was ushered into the room.

12397. Was he in Captain Ethelred's room?—No, he was in the room that Mr. Galbraith described—that was the back room off the lobby.

12398. That was not Captain Knox's room?—No.

12399. Was Captain Knox's room upstairs?—Yes.

12400. On a higher story?—No, on the same floor.

12401. Did you never see anyone in Captain Knox's room except Captain Knox—refresh your memory now?—The only person I ever recollect was his brother.

12402. What is his name?—I don't know his name.

12403. Is it Utred Knox, the Clerk of the Peace?—No.

12404. The officer?—Yes.

12405. Mr. Alberic Knox?—I don't know him.

12406. You say he was in the army?—He was, I believe, in the army.

12407. You saw him there with Captain Ethelred?—I did, at lunch time and dinner time—something that way.

12408. Now, used you to go every day to Captain Ethelred's room?—I used not, nor every second day. Just some days I might go twice; it was only according as circumstances drove me.

12409. Was he generally in that room?—He was.

12410. What was he doing there—waiting by himself in that room?—Well, I could not say that.

12411. What did he appear to be doing?—I saw a great many papers and a great many books.

12412. A great many papers?—A great many books.

12413. Did you see any lists or papers connected with the election?—No; I don't think I ever sat down in that room, nor I don't think I ever was perhaps fifteen minutes at once in it.

12414. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Had you been sent for to come to Major Knox?—I was not.

12415. You came up just as you were in the habit of coming up from time to time?—Exactly.

12416. Did you go up to Major Knox in reference to the Youngs—to have an arrangement in reference to anybody?—I went to Captain Ethelred, and after I was speaking to him the youngest of the Youngs and I arranged for the three. When I was here last I was in fault. I did not know Henderson and I said Henderson was a small farmer and son-in-law to Young. I was astray in that. I then thought he was; but it was not so, and I did not know the man.

12417. Then it was to get Captain Ethelred's sanction that you went up?—It was to get the money.

12418. Now, in your transactions with Captain Ethelred Knox, did he make any statement to you as to the Major's having sanctioned what he was doing or knowing he had the money?—He did not.

12419. Had you any reason to come to the conclusion that the Major was aware of Captain Ethelred Knox disbursing the money?—No reason except this, that as they were friends and relatives he might know what was doing; but no other reasons.

12420. The Chief Commissioner.—Did you ever yourself, Mr. Stokes, make any complaint or representation to Major Knox, the candidate, that there were men wanting money, and badly treated from the last election?—Not that I have any recollection o.

12421. Would you know how your evidence commenced if you looked at a copy of it?—I would not, for how I acted then I am a perfect stranger to.

12422. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Did you expect to find Mr. Galbraith in that little room?—I had not the slightest idea he would be there.

12423. That was the little room you were in the habit of going into?—No, it was the first time ever I was ushered into it.

12424. What took you there at all?—I was going to communicate something I happened to learn with Captain Ethelred Knox, or something—I can't exactly say.

12425. You were told to wait in the little room?—Yes.

12426. Do I understand you to say that you left the younger Young with Mr. Galbraith and went to get the money?—That's what I think. I don't know whether Mr. Galbraith and I left Leech's together or not; however, we met Young below in Mr. Galbraith's, and it is my impression that I came back to Captain Ethelred Knox, and went down again, and left the money as was pointed out to me.

12427. Do you know a man called Peter Tallon?—I do.

12428. Did you ever offer him any money?—I was speaking to him and I told him I thought I would get his house for the county election if he would go from home.

12429. Did you ever offer him £100 for himself and his son to vote for Knox?—That he was to give his house and premises during the election for that £100.

12430. For that £100?—Yes, that he might get that £100 for the use of his house and premises during the county election, if he himself and his son went from home.

12431. From home?—Or voted; he had his choice.

12432. Did you communicate with Captain Ethelred Knox about Patrick Barry?—I don't think I did. I am not rightly certain, for Barry did not close. He did not take my offer. He took the offer, but he would not do as I wanted him.

12433. Did you communicate with Captain Ethelred about Dominic Oates?—No.

12434. Did you about Charles Tighe?—No.

12435. Was that because you had not closed with those men?—Yes.

12436. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Can you recollect, Mr. Stokes, anything further about the application of the £270 that you told us you got from Captain Knox,—you know the sums you gave did not exceed the £270, or even go near it?—They did not, for I only spoke from memory.

12437. I know; but have you been thinking about it at all since? Can you say whether you paid any portion of that £270 to anybody except the two Youngs, the four Ryans, Henderson, and Gallagher?—At present that's all I can say till I have time to think of it.

12438. I wish you would think of it and come back to-day and tell us, because what you have already stated would leave you £80 still on hands. Is it your recollection that you have £80 still to account for?—I think I have.

12439. Was there nobody at the last election, Mr. Stokes, that you can think of getting money from Captain Knox, or do you think anybody else was?—I could not say.

12440. Have you no idea?—There was no person present but he and I at our transactions; and I presume it was so, if there was any other body, between them.

12441. You must have known a great deal about what was going on. Have you an idea that anybody else was paying voters?—I have not.

12442. Or promising voters?—I have not, I only did the best I could myself. I was anxious to do Major Knox all the good I could; and I did it in ignorance, which I am sorry for.

(The witness withdrew.)

Thomas H. Williams sworn and examined.

12443. The Chief Commissioner.—Mr. Williams, you are a magistrate of the borough?—Yes, sir.

12444. Now, did you vote for Major Knox at the last election?—I did.

12445. Did you know anything about Mr. Stokes's transactions at the last election?—No.

12446. Did you meet Mr. Stokes at all on election business?—I saw him once in his own shop.

12447. What was the election business upon which you met him?—Mr. Galbraith and myself went together into Stokes's shop, and Mr. Galbraith spoke to him about Walter Henderson. He went in as usual to have a talk, and Mr. Galbraith spoke to Mr. Stokes about Walter Henderson's vote. I will now tell you the unvarnished truth. Mr. Stokes took a £20 note, and turning round from us tore it in two, and put the half of it in my waistcoat pocket in less time than I spend in telling you. I said, "I will have nothing to do with this transaction." "What are you afraid of?" said he. "My mind is perfectly made up that I will have nothing to do with this transaction," I said. I went to the shop door and Mr. Galbraith said he would not take it back. "I will make him take it back," I said. I went back and told Stokes that he must take this back, and he said, "Very well," and took it. You have the entire of that affair.

12448. You have been a long time living in Sligo?—Nearly thirty years.

12449. You knew then that it was Stokes's intention to bribe Henderson?—I had reason to believe that Henderson would expect money.

12450. What reason had you to believe, independent of that, that Henderson would expect money?—I think Mr. Galbraith told me. If I remember rightly he sent a note to my shop saying he wanted to see me. I had asked Walter Henderson for his vote and he had refused.

12451. In a way you understood? Did you understand he wanted you to promise him money?—I could not say that. I waited upon him with Major Knox. I have a little country house, and I pass Walter Henderson's house on my way out. He said to me he lived in a lonely place and did not know whether he would vote or not, and further, that Major Knox had not canvassed him. I said, "A man like you ought not to be canvassed and ought to vote for his party." I took my car and drove Major Knox out the following day to ask him for his vote, and there the matter ended. I afterwards received a note from Mr. Galbraith asking me to call upon him, and he said he had arranged with Walter Henderson.

12452. Did you know the amount of the arrangement?—I understood since.

12453. Did you know then?—Well, I got the half of the £20 note, and I understood that that was the amount.

12454. You appear to have a correct recollection, and have given your testimony most clearly. Can

TENTH DAY.
October 16.
Thomas H. Williams.

you fix the date upon which the half note was offered to you for Henderson?—I believe ten days before the election at the least. I heard you ask the question from Mr. Stokes, and my memory is ten days before the election—at least that.

12455. Did you know anything about the complaint that Major Knox had made that some individual was to be bribed?—Yes, I spoke to Major Knox, I think, on the subject, and said I had heard a great many rumours and reports about, and I thought it would be very dangerous to his position. Major Knox said to me, "My dear friend, I have heard this day and yesterday about some indiscretion of Stokes, but I will send him word to come; in fact I made up my mind, and mean to leave the town." Mr. Lawder has stated what Major Knox said to me about that circumstance.

12456. Did you tell Major Knox about the £20 transaction?—I did not, sir, certainly not.

12457. That £20 transaction was a long time before the Sunday before the election?—I believe, as well as my memory goes, it was about ten days before the election, or about a fortnight.

12458. Now, was that the only transaction connected with money at the last election about which you, Mr. Williams, could give the Court information?—Well, I can give you further information, not from my own personal knowledge, but from what I have reason to believe.

12459. Quite enough?—In the case of Peter Harrison, I may mention that he is an old porter of mine and of my relative's, Mr. Anderson, for the last thirty years. Peter had told me after the October revision that the Liberals had tried to knock him off the revision. I said, "Well, Peter, I did not know you had a vote; as you have, what are you going to do with it." He said, "I shall vote for Major Knox, certainly." The matter rested there as far as I was concerned. I never spoke to Peter on the subject until the election was over. He was in the habit of going to my house two or three times every day in the week. My senior clerk has been with me twenty-eight years, and one day he said to me that Peter wanted to talk to me about the election. I am speaking now from memory. I said to my clerk, "He may save himself the trouble. I shall have nothing to say with him about the election." I went into the shop, and Mr. Atcheson told me one day he wished to go away as his life was in danger. I said "You can arrange that as you please; I do not want to know anything about it—you have your own friends, and you can arrange amongst yourselves in the office." On the day before the election Mr. Atcheson came to me, and asked me could he take my car to Coolanney, about six miles distance, and that Peter wanted to go with him; I gave him liberty to take the horse and car. I knew nothing about a money transaction until two or three days ago. I said to Mr. Atcheson, "You may as well tell me all," and he said, "Do you wish to know, sir?" and I said "Yes." He then said Peter had had goods and money from him to the extent of £18 or £20. I then said "You will have opportunity of stating it yourself.

12460. That is Mr George Atcheson?—Yes; my clerk.

12461. Is that the only case?—These are the only two cases. I have no information more. Since I have had Her Majesty's Commission of the peace I have kept myself aloof from anything that might cause a blush in my face.

12462. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Did you take such notice of the £20 note, as to enable you to tell us whether it was an old or a new one?—No; Mr. Stokes put it into my waistcoat pocket, and I said "You must take it back." He said "What are you afraid of?" There were several people in the shop at the time.

12463. As a magistrate, were you endeavouring to preserve the peace of the town as well as you could during the election?—No; my voice is bad. I have lost my voice, and in a street noise I should be quite unable to take any very active part, but the town was in a most uproarious and scandalous condition for weeks before the election, and during the election.

12464. If there was any instance of mob violence that struck you, I would be very glad to hear it?—I cannot charge my memory, but I know as a matter of prudence, I did not go out of my house at night for three weeks before the election.

12465. Was that because of mob violence?—Because there were mobs going through the streets, and when passing my house they would call "To hell with Knox," and sometimes "To hell with Williams."

12466. Did these mobs appear to be organized?—Yes.

12467. Could you give any description in what numbers they were?—From 60 to 200, and 300, and sometimes more.

12468. And were there several mobs ranging about the town?—Yes; a man named Devins, and a man named Kilcullen struck me as active and continuous workers-up of Flanagan's mob.

12469. The Chief Commissioner.—What is Devins' Christian name?—I do not know.

12470. (A person in court stated that it was Thomas.)

12471. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Is that the Kilcullen who was active on Major Knox's side?—No; he is a blacksmith in the town—Michael.

12472. Are you aware of these mobs having deterred any voters from recording their votes?—Yes.

12473. What voters were prevented?—Well, M'Guirk the hairdresser, told me the other day he would not go out because of the mob.

12474. Did he abstain from voting?—Yes.

12475. Is it your opinion he did so because of mob violence?—I am perfectly satisfied he would not go to the poll, because he could not do so with security.

12476. Did you hear of any other voters?—I heard of Mark Antony, but of course I am only speaking of my personal knowledge of the thing.

12477. How long have you been resident in Sligo?—I came to Sligo in January, 1841.

12478. Do you know anything of money going at previous elections—previous to Major Knox's?—Well as far back as Mr. Townley's election—I was connected with that—but since that I know nothing in the world.

12479. But with respect to Mr. Townley's election could you give us information as to the money going then?—Yes, I voted for Mr. Townley and supported Mr. Townley, and I believe there was money given at that election. I gave some myself.

12480. You gave some yourself for Mr. Townley?—Yes, on his account.

12481. That money had either been given before to you by Mr. Townley or afterwards?—I never got it from Mr. Townley. I got it from a friend of Mr. Townley's, and it was not given for three months after the election; or until the petition about Townley's return had been tried, and I can safely say on my oath I never promised a voter in my life even at that election one penny, or gave him any reason to believe he would get money for voting for Townley. I always felt it was a very serious matter to place myself in a position where I could not speak the truth on inquiry. A man would come to me and Mr. Atcheson would at my request come into the office and sit with me while that man talked to me. A man would ask me who would I advise him to vote for, or would he get any money for voting for Mr. Townley, and I would say to him, "If you come to talk to me about money you may go about your business, but if you ask me who will you vote for, I will say vote for Mr. Townley."

12482. Did many of the voters come to you on that occasion asking money?—I do not think they did, but some of them I am perfectly satisfied came with the idea that they would get money or a promise of money.

12483. How much did you give away after Townley's election?—I cannot say. I think about £170.

12484. And you gave it away four or five months after the election?—Yes.

12485. After the petition?—Yes, after the petition was over. I was thoroughly disgusted with the class of people it brought me in contact with at that time and I made up my mind at that time that I would never again have anything to do with such money affairs, and I have kept my purpose. I think at that time as well as I remember, I distributed about £100 or more to some voters who were in poor circumstances. It was about the year 1848, just immediately after the famine, and I know that a great many of them were in very necessitous circumstances, and I will say to the credit of Mr. Townley that there was a good deal of money distributed to the poor who had no votes, and could not possibly in any way influence the election.

12486. From your knowledge of the borough are you able to say whether there was not an expectation in the minds of a large body of the voters that they will get money some months after the election?—I believe there is a lamentable tendency in that direction.

12487. And that that is prevalent amongst a large class?—I do, sir.

12488. And has that been the state of things in the borough from Mr. Townley's election more or less?—I should say so. I have had no money transactions of any kind whatever at any election since Townley's and I was thoroughly disgusted then.

12489. That expectation exists at the Conservative side to a certain extent as well as at the Liberal side?—I believe it does at both sides.

12490. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Did I understand you to say your clerk told you Peter Harrison had things from him?—Yes.

12491. Was it things from your shop?—Yes, sir. He explained it. Harrison's house was sacked or broken into and his furniture destroyed the day after the election, and he wanted some things such as beds and bedding and things of that kind, and I saw him getting them in the shop though I had not the particulars of that at the time. I spoke to Mr. Atcheson this week about them, and I think he showed me a private memorandum which he had, and which he will produce if you ask him. I have no further particulars.

12492. But did Mr. Atcheson tell you that the accommodation of these goods was given to Harrison for having gone away?—Yes, I believe that Peter Harrison would have to get a consideration for going away—for that reason I did not wish to have anything to say to him. I do not wish to qualify the statement at all. I wish to make an observation, gentlemen, in reference to a statement made by Mr. Charles Sedley. I was present on Saturday morning last, when he said he met me at Macdonogh's rooms on the night previous to the election of 1865, and that a list was there and then made out of the names of voters who were to receive money after the election. I have to state in reply to that that Mr. Sedley's memory must have failed him in the matter. I never saw Mr. Sedley that day, I positively swear. I remember distinctly that it was a mystery of mysteries to Mr. Macdonogh's friends Mr. Sedley's absence from town on the day previous to the polling. I heard in my office that things were looking adverse to Mr. Macdonogh's election, and I went to his rooms. Mr. Macdonogh then was alone. He complained to me bitterly that he had been forsaken by some of his old supporters and friends and said he was disposed to give up the whole idea of going to the poll on the following day. I said "Do not do so, things will look dark sometimes and bright afterwards—keep up your spirits and do not be dejected or depressed." He made some remarks favourable to myself, and we continued together for an hour or so. He said to me, "I shall go to bed, but I will not allow myself to be dispirited in the morning." He wished me good night, and I turned in the dining-room and talked with some gentlemen, I do not know who and we stopped together for an hour. Whilst there Mr. Shekleton came into the room and said "Is Mr. Williams here?" I stepped forward and said "My name is Williams;" and he said "I want a word with you." He drew me over and said to me "I have a parcel from Mr. Sedley with instructions to hand it to you." I said "What does the parcel contain?" and Mr. Shekleton said "£400, and Mr. Sedley wishes me to say he will be very glad if you will dispose of it according as your judgment may think best." I said to Mr. Shekleton "You may say to Mr. Sedley I will neither handle, nor distribute, nor promise one penny of that money." And Mr. Shekleton said "Who will I give it to?" I said "There are plenty of gentlemen here whose word is worth ten times the amount, if they will take it." I think Alderman Lyons was in the room and my memory is that I spoke to Mr. Lyons about it, and his views were about the same as my own. I then went home. I positively state that I then left the room and did not return that evening. I neither saw Charles Sedley nor did I know until I heard it in the Court-house that Mr. Macdonogh had been wakened from his bed or had an interview with anybody. I never knew that the money was disposed of in the way stated by Mr. Sedley. I heard it stated that Mr. Macdonogh had not acted generously towards Mr. Shekleton as to the payment of it—but I do not know how it was disposed of.

12493. The Chief Commissioner.—It was rumoured that you and Mr. Lyons were canvassing here that night?—As far as I am concerned I positively swear I never spoke to a single voter that night. I went down to Mr. Robert Hunter with whom I was in the habit of speaking, and he said I was perfectly right, and wise to keep myself free in affairs of the kind.

12494. Your name has been mentioned once or twice. Have you any statement to make?—Keighron said a man of the name of M'Grath had told him I had offered several voters £80 each to vote at some election.

12495. The election between Armstrong and Macdonogh?—Yes. That is utterly false. I positively swear that from the time I knew M'Grath to the present, I never spoke to him about his vote; I never promised him money for his vote, and if holding up my finger would get him to vote I would not do so, from my knowledge of the party. Now, you have asked me about my knowledge of money or applications for money. Well, I feel bound to tell the facts of the case of William Young: about ten days before the election as I was passing his door he called me in and said, "Have you any news for me," I said, "No, there is plenty of news going, and I suppose you will vote for Major Knox." He said he did not know; I said "What is the use of talking in that way. You know very well you always vote for your Conservative friends, and Major Knox is a good fellow and you ought to support him." He said his two sons had votes also, and they worked very hard, and expected to get some money, and he could not blame them for expecting to get money. "Well," I said, "as far as I am concerned I have nothing to say to you about the matter. If you want money you must go somewhere else, but I wish you good morning," and I left him. There is another man named Atkinson, a shoemaker, who left word at my house that he wanted to see me. I told my clerk to bring him in and to sit by also, and after a good deal of humming and hawing he said he understood there was money going, and he expected to get it, and I said to him, "You are in the wrong box to talk to me about money. If you want money you must go elsewhere." I have no memorandum about any other case. I have told you all I know, and I will be glad to answer any questions you may be pleased to put to me.

12496. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Did Young tell you he himself would not take money or did he give you that idea?—No, he said whatever money he got he would give to his sons. He led me to believe he intended to get money.

12497. The Chief Commissioner.—I think we will not trouble you any further. Would it be convenient to send George Acheson here?—It is inconvenient owing to this being market day, but if it will suit the Commissioners he will attend on Monday.

12498. Certainly. That will do. He need not attend to-day.

12499. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Was it in ten pound notes that the £170 was given away?—Yes, that is my recollection, sir.

TENTH DAY.
October 16.
Thomas H. Williams.

The witness was allowed to withdraw but he returned and said:

12500. There is another circumstance in which my name is mentioned in connexion with money—the election of 1860, for Mr. Macdonogh. It was stated by Alderman Lyons that I got some money of the £850. He afterwards corrected that statement, and he did well in doing so, for I never got any portion of it in any shape or form. Mr. Charles Sedley who I see is present, waited upon me at my residence, and asked me to take that money, and I positively refused to have anything to do with it. He said, "Can you mention any person who could be safely taken in the matter?" "John Bourke," I said, "is a safe man," and John Bourke was sent for to Mr. Charles Sedley's house to get the money.

Mr. Lawder.

Mr. Lawder was recalled and further examined.

12501. The Chief Commissioner.—Here is a brief which I will have marked with the letter A. It is the evidence of Robert Stokes. Turn to the third page of it and you will see this passage, "As to No. 23, James M'Mullen, Bridge-street, never gave or offered any money or other consideration for voting. James M'Mullen left before the polling day by request of Stokes. Gave £—— travelling expenses for James and William M'Mullen to go to Dublin." I want to know was that brief used in court so far as you know?—I believe they were all used in court.

12502. In whose handwriting is this?—In the handwriting of Mr. Palmer who is in my office. I do not know who it is indorsed by.

12503. These are the duplicates of that? [Documents handed to witness.]—I suppose there was one made for each counsel.

12504. In whose handwriting are the duplicates?—That I do not know. If I were to offer an opinion I should say in the handwriting of a scrivener I had from Dublin, but of course I believe it was prepared there and in the presence of Mr. Palmer.

12505. In whose handwriting is the third?—That is in the scrivener's writing, I think; on looking at page 3 of this I cannot say in whose writing it is. The first sheet is in the scrivener's writing, and I do not know in whose the next is. I do not know whose that writing is. This last sheet but one is also in one of the scrivener's handwriting.

(The documents were marked A, 1, 2, and 3.)

12506. The witness continued.—The first sheet is the scrivener's writing. The second is Mr. Palmer's writing. The second and third are, but not the fourth. The fifth is——

12507. Now I will show you this one which is the evidence of Robert Stokes, and Stephen M. Cherry?—[Document handed to witness.] That is indorsed by Mr. Palmer.

12508. In whose handwriting is that do you think?—That appears to me to be in the handwriting of two scriveners.

12509. You see the brief is regularly made out and paged from beginning to end? Is it complete?—It is paged from one to ten.

12510. Consecutively?—Yes.

12511. I will mark them B 1 and 2. This [document handed to witness] is the duplicate of it—it appears to be also paged continuously?—That is also paged from one to ten.

12512. Now have you anything Mr. Lawder on your mind why the second—I will not say the second, but why five sets were made out?—I have not the least——

12513. How many counsel were there?—We had four counsel; we had Mr. Macdonogh, Mr. Robinson, Mr. Kaye, and Mr. Hartigan.

12514. Now, were all these, according to your recollection, used in court?—I cannot say that. I do not see what other motive they would be made out for. I was looking amongst my papers since you told me that Mr. Stokes, I think you said, stated he had made some evidence in writing. I do not know of this [document produced], but amongst the papers I find this, which I will hand in if you require it. [The document was handed in.] It is only a portion of some document, but it is indorsed, "Mr. Stokes' evidence;" but in whose handwriting it is I don't know. I do not know whether it is his writing, or whose it is. It is evidently only a portion.

12515. Yes, it is evidently only a portion. [The briefs marked B were handed to the witness.] I will tell you at once the reason why I ask you. In that brief marked B the evidence of Mr. Stokes about the M'Mullens is omitted. In the ones marked A it is inserted. I want you to give the court every information upon that subject?—I do not know one word about it.

12516. Look and see whether the evidence as to the M'Mullens is in Stokes' evidence there?—The best way to come at that would be to compare them.

12517. Well, I will repeat the passage. [Passage "As to No. 23" repeated.] Now, that passage I cannot find in the second set of briefs?—I have in my handwriting what is sworn on the table. I do not see that here. A remarkable phrase used by Mr. Stokes in his evidence before this court is, that the brief of his evidence could not be produced in court. Well, I will have the brief of his evidence, I expect. I expect to have the briefs from Dublin, as I telegraphed again for them, and I think I have notes of what he swore on the table. My memory is brought up by the fact of some woman being brought up from whom the car was got, and an entry was made as to the payment.

12518. Yes; but there are two sets of briefs with this irregularity which I have pointed out. Would you not know perfectly well that his providing the money to the M'Mullens, and their going away, would if told, unseat the sitting member?—Yes, I know that perfectly well. It would be nothing short, I should say, of bribery.

12519. Yes, giving one shilling to the voter if agency could be proved?—Yes, but I think if you refer to Mr. Stokes's evidence he said I had told him I would not allow one penny to be given for any improper act.

12520. Had Mr. Palmer the management of this?—Yes, he will be here upon subpœna. That is not Mr. Palmer's writing; I do not know whose it is.

12521. Now, I will read this passage from another paper you produce. "As to James M'Mullen and William M'Mullen, I admit having given them £2 each to enable them to go to Bundoran, but they went there of their own accord, and were anxious to go away"?—I never saw that document until after I went from this court to my knowledge, but I saw Mr. Stokes's name upon it, and therefore I brought it to you.

12522. [Document marked B 2 handed to witness.] Looking at B 2, would you not know it was obviously used in court?—I should say the marks on it are counsels' marks.

12523. There are no marks on any of the documents marked A, and looking at that as a solicitor of eminence, do not they appear not to have been used in court?—I see that they are quite fresh. These appear quite fresh, but I may add to that, that there were a great many documents prepared and read by counsel, and the substance of them was in his brief; but these [documents A] do not appear to me to contain observations on the notes of counsel.

12524. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Is there any of that evidence, do you think, contained in the large briefs?—Oh, no doubt there must be.

12525. Because that looks so like a supplementary brief?—Very likely it was evidence written too late to be included in the general brief. We were working up to three or four o'clock in the morning to the last day of the commission. You told me to look for any documents prepared with Mr. Galbraith's name. I find only a sort of extract [handed in], but I think I can satisfy you with the notes I took at the time when

Mr. Stokes clearly admitted having persuaded those people to go away.

12526. At Carrick?—Yes.

12527. I will refer you to his evidence. I have it here. I think he said they were going to Bundoran, and a car was to meet them about a mile out of the town. "Do you know who gave them the means of going away?—I do not. All I provided was the car for them." Judge Keogh says, "And you gave them no money?—No." According to the first set of his evidence he gave them "blank" pounds. I expect that you, a gentleman holding a very high position, will tell us all you know about the matter?—Anything I know you may know with great pleasure.

12528. I am sure you will give us any assistance in discovering why Stokes used perjury at Carrick. It is a serious matter, and if perjury is thus to be committed in an open court no man's life or property is safe?—That is the reason I refer to his evidence, in which he charged Major Knox with so many cases of payment to voters. He never said a word about it to my knowledge before, nor when Captain Knox was originally examined in Carrick.

[The document produced by the last witness, in which the name of Stokes appeared, was handed to Mr. Stokes.]

12529. The Chief Commissioner.—Is that in your handwriting?—It is not, sir.

12530. It is not?—No, sir.

12531. How many sheets of paper did you send in your statement on?—I think it was one like this. It was only one sheet.

12532. Where did you write it out?—In Carrick.

12533. The examination of Mr. Lawder was then resumed.

12534. The Chief Commissioner.—Do not you think it extraordinary, Mr. Lawder, that there should be that alteration in the brief of Stokes's evidence. As a solicitor of eminence, who has prepared a great number of briefs, do not you think it extraordinary?—I think that there is an omission, and the only way I can account for it is this. Sometimes at one, two or three o'clock in the morning people would rush in and say, "Let me look at my evidence," and cause confusion. In looking over the briefs in the train I saw some of them in irregular numbers.

12535. In the second set of briefs marked B, they are regularly paged from one to ten, including Stokes' and Cherry's evidence, and each page corresponds with a similar page in another brief?—I presume they do, but I was not present when Mr. Stokes' evidence was taken down at all.

12536. The rest of the evidence is similar in one brief to the other, and the fact of money having been given is omitted from one?—I cannot tell. I cannot account for the omission at all. It was Mr. Palmer who took down the evidence, and he, no doubt, will satisfy you on that point.

12537. Had Mr. Palmer or any person in your office communication with the counsel?—I think I was the person who alone attended consultations on behalf of Major Knox.

12538. Yes, but you said the briefs were read, or papers were read by counsel before the trial?—No, I say that the counsel had all the papers I could afford them at each consultation, and the very last night we were at Carrick taking down evidence. Some of the papers that were written were never used at all.

12539. [Robert Stokes stated that the statement in the paper produced was a correct statement, but he did not think it was in his handwriting.]

12540. Mr. Commissioner Bruce—(to the witness, Mr. Lawder)—Could directions have been given by Mr. Macdonogh, or any other counsel, to Mr. Palmer, or any other clerk in your office, to omit things from briefs that were in them?—I believe it is utterly impossible that he ever did such a thing.

12541. The Chief Commissioner.—Now, you do not remember having seen this before (document of Stokes' handed witness)?—No.

12542. I find here there is a general denial of all improper acts?—Yes, sir.

12543. And a number of names?—Yes.

12544. In these names, as originally written down with the expression, "I never spoke to them on the subject;" there are the names of Thomas and William M'Mullen, and these names are then scratched out. Do you know anything about that?—No, as I told you I never saw these names before (the document was marked C).

12545. In whose handwriting is the endorsement?—I do not know. It appears to me to be the same as the body. You told me to bring any papers I had with reference to John Galbraith, and this is the only thing I could find of him (a document handed in).

12546. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Will you hand in the bill of particulars?—I have not got the particulars with me, but this is a copy of it. [Document handed in.] The Chief Commissioner asked me if Hignell was not charged with some of the bribery, and I find his name is in the bill.

12547. Did Major Knox complain to you about his discovery of the improper practices of Stokes?—Just what I told you.

12548. Did he mention any particular case to you?—I think his words were, as well as I recollect, when he came into the hotel to me, "I have made up my mind to leave this place." I asked him why, and he said it was in consequence of the meddling and interference of Stokes, and he would not stay in the place any longer.

12549. But did he not specify anything?—I think he said, "That fellow Stokes has been taking liberties with me, and going about speaking to people in such a way that I have made up my mind to have nothing more to do with him. Mr. Randall Peyton was with me at the time, and I think his cousin, Mr. Utred Knox.

(The witness was permitted to withdraw).

Francis Barber sworn and examined.

12550. The Chief Commissioner.—Are you an elector?—I am for the county but not for the borough.

12551. Your name has been mentioned as having got money for voting during the last election. Did you get any money?—Yes, I did.

12552. From whom?—From Mr. Stokes.

12553. How much?—Fifty pounds.

12554. For what?—It was intended for Patrick Gallagher.

12555. Have you that money still?—No, I gave some to his wife.

12556. How much?—I dare say £15 or £20. I could not say.

12557. In what notes did you get that?—I think in one note, as far as I can recollect.

12558. One £50 note?—I think so; I am not sure now.

12559. How long before the election did you get it?—A few days.

12560. Had you made the bargain with Gallagher?—No.

12561. How did you happen to become the holder of the money?—I said to Gallagher he ought to stick to our friend Major Knox. He said he did not know yet. I said the Major was supported principally by a body of people who went from day to day to his house, and that he ought to act as a friend to his friends, and he said he would like to do anything I would think to be right, and that I was always a good friend of his.

12562. Well, how did you happen to get the money?—I went to Mr. Stokes and told him I thought Gallagher would have gone with us.

12563. How did you know you were to go to Stokes?—Well, I think Stokes told me to take him to the country out of the way. I think that was the first communication. Gallagher declined to go.

12564. But how did you know Stokes had the money?—I did not know indeed. I went to him and told him I thought Gallagher would go with us, that he said he would; that they were getting £40 or £50, and I went to Stokes and he gave me the money, and I think that is as much as I know of it.

12565. What bank was the note upon?—I cannot tell you that.

12566. When did you change the note?—I did not change it at all.

12567. Have you the note?—No, I lodged it to my credit in the bank when lodging other moneys.

12568. How soon did you lodge it afterwards?—I could not say exactly—perhaps nine or ten days.

12569. Into what bank did you put it?—The Ulster Bank.

12570. Could you fix that lodgment by looking at your bank-book?—I could not say particularly because I frequently draw and lodge.

12571. Do you think you could not by looking refresh your memory?—I could not to the best of my recollection.

12572. I think it should make an impression upon your lodging the election money in the bank?—No. I lodge different sums of money in various ways, and I never thought it would be brought to an inquiry.

12573. Did you get any other money to hold for voters besides that?—No.

12574. Was that the first transaction of the kind you were engaged in?—It was.

12575. Did you never hold money before?—No.

12576. Do you know of any other elector having got money?—No.

12577. And according to your statement there is about £35 due to Gallagher?—I could not say. I think I paid the wife about £15 or £20.

12578. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—There was a witness examined to-day of the name of Perkins. Do you know him?—I do not know any such person to my recollection.

12579. Do you know his father-in-law, Mr. Clarke?—No; I do not know the people at all. I might know them if I saw them, but I do not know them by name.

12580. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—What is your business?—I am a farmer and road contractor.

12581. Do you often make lodgments in bank?—Yes I do.

12582. Every week?—No not every week—but I do it very frequently.

12583. Of large sums?—Yes—sometimes large and sometimes small.

12584. Do you often make lodgments of £50?—Indeed I do and £100 and £200 and £500.

12585. Have you still got in your possession your bank-book for October or November of last year?—No; I think not.

12586. What has become of it?—Oh, when I had it filled and closed my account in the bank, I did not mind it. I got a new book.

12587. People do not generally destroy their bank books?—That would be my impression. When I closed my account I did not see the necessity of keeping it longer.

12588. Do you recollect destroying it?—No, I do not. But I generally do not make any use of them. I might have it, and I might not.

12589. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Are you a poor-rate collector?—No, sir.

12590. Are you a barony or other collector?—No, I collect rents for gentlemen.

12591. The Chief Commissioner.—You will have to search for your bank book because if you lodged this at the time of the election?—I could not say what time. I think I kept the money for some time after I got it, but I could not say how long.

12592. Could you not tell within a week?—Oh, a week or a fortnight.

12593. Did you lodge it within a month?—Yes.

12594. Did you take any note of the number?—No.

12595. Did you put any mark on it or put your name upon it?—No, I did not, sir. I hardly look at notes that way, unless I am suspicious about it—unless a note is strange or cut in two.

12596. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Will you be so kind as to search for that book and come on Monday. It will save us the trouble of getting your account out of the bank?—Yes.

12597. The Chief Commissioner.—We are not doubting in the slightest degree what you tell us, but it is our duty to find out and identify that note. If you cannot find your book, we will only have to ask the manager of the Ulster Bank to come here with the account?—Well, I do not know. Perhaps I got small notes for it. I cannot tell you one way or another.

12598. That is a singular answer after your evidence?—No, sir, it is not, because when I go about the matter that way I may change it. I might have lodged it to my account.

12599. Is your recollection now that you got 50 one pound notes?—No, my recollection is it was one note.

12600. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Are you aware of any other money going at that election, or at any previous election?—No, sir, I never had any other transactions either at that election or at any previous election.

Matthew Rowlett.

Matthew Rowlett sworn and examined.

12601. The Chief Commissioner.—Are you an elector?—I am, sir.

12602. Are you the Mr. Rowlett who has been mentioned as being in the office of Mr. Wynne's estate?—I am, sir.

12603. Who did you vote for at the last election?—I always vote with the Conservative party—I voted for Major Knox at the last election.

12604. Some money has been mentioned as having passed through your hands at a previous election. Give the Commissioners the particulars of that?—I will, sir. I happened to be in Mr. Lyons's office on one occasion after an election of Mr. Macdonogh. As far as I can recollect it was his first election. Mr Lyons said to me "By the way I have some money here for two or three of your people in Pound-street and I wish you to take it to them." One of these was named Mulligan—another was named M'Donald, and I cannot think who the third party was. To the best of my opinion his name was Mr. Macnamara. He gave me three £10 notes which I took up to them and handed them receipts for rent that was due—and which rents they handed to me on getting the money They lived in houses of Mr. Wynne's. The impression on my mind was that they were looking for this money from Mr. Lyons, as they were anxious to settle these accounts.

12605. You stopped the rents and gave them a balance?—They gave me what they wished to apply to the rents. I do not know that each of them gave me the rent. I know M'Donnell, a servant, directed me to apply a portion of it to the rent.

12606. Did you ever distribute money before that?—Never before or since.

12607. You have had nothing to say to anything of that nature since?—No, sir.

12608. Did any people ask you since to get money for them—any tenants of the Hazlewood estate?—Never.

12609. And you are positive you never distributed any money but that?—Never one shilling.

12610. Do you know of any money having been distributed?—No, sir. I am not mixed up with anything of that kind, and never was.

12611. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Who is M'Donnell's master?—About that time I think he served Mr. Duke of New Park, near Ballymote, about twenty miles from here.

12612. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Did you ever hear it stated that all the tenants on Mr. Wynne's estate who had voted for Mr. Macdonogh got £10 each?—I never heard of it.

12613. Of course then you do not know whether it is true or not?—I do not know anything about their negotiations for money or anything of the sort.

(The witness then withdrew.)

Matthew Rowlett.

Thomas M'Kim sworn and examined.

Thomas M'Kim.

12614. The Chief Commissioner.—Are you an elector of the borough?—Yes, sir.

12615. Who did you vote for at the last election?—Major Knox.

12616. Who did you vote for at the election between Sergeant Armstrong and Mr. Macdonogh—did you vote for Mr. Macdonogh?—I did, sir.

12617. Did you vote for Mr. Macdonogh at his first election?—I did.

12618. Did you get any money on these occasions?—I did get money I did not expect. It was long afterwards.

12619. Who gave you the money?—Mr. Monds gave me some money.

12620. How much?—I could not say. There was an account between Monds, and I heard he said he gave me £40, but I was under the impression it was not so much.

12621. But at all events you got some of that sum?—Yes.

12622. That was at Mr. Macdonogh's first election?—Yes, sir.

12623. How much were you due to Mr. Monds at the time?—I could not say.

12624. Were you due him £20 or £30?—I think it was something about that sum.

12625. Was it for rent?—It was, sir.

12626. Did you owe him two and a half year's rent?—I am not exactly sure.

12627. At that time how much was your rent?—£15 a year.

12628. Then you owed him £37 10*s.*?—Yes.

12629. You only got a trifle of money from Mr. Monds. How much did you get in cash?—I could not exactly say. I did not expect any money, nor had I any knowledge of it directly or indirectly. He brought me down to settle about rent, and he made a statement, and I signed a paper, not knowing what it was.

12630. Did you get any money after the election between Mr. Macdonogh and Sergeant Armstrong?—I never got money on any account unless on Mr. Macdonogh's election. I got from Mr. Sedley £15, but that was long after the election.

12631. I know it was. Did anyone give you the word that money was going?—Never; nor I never expected it, nor did not know what it was the day I signed and settled my account. Mr. Sedley came in and asked me to go down to his place, and handed me the money.

12632. This time, after voting for the Major, will you take any money that is going?—No, sir.

12633. If it is offered will you take it?—No, sir.

12634. Why?—Well, I do not know, sir.

12635. Were you at the meeting at Mr. Abbot's?—No, sir.

12636. Did you get a circular?—I did.

12637. Why did you not go?—I had my business to attend to.

12638. What business are you in?—I am a smith.

12639. Were you ever offered any money at this last election?—No, sir.

12640. On either side?—On any side. I never was canvassed in my life by a Liberal member.

12641. I suppose they thought it would be no use?—Just so.

12642. Would you take money to vote on the Liberal side?—I do not think I would, sir.

12643. You are not quite certain?—I do not know what effect people might have on me.

12644. Do you know any of your neighbours who expected money to be going at the time of the election?—No, sir.

12645. Do you know of anyone but yourself who would take money?—Well, I do not know, sir. I cannot tell what is their mind.

12646. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Are you quite sure £15 was all that Mr. Sedley gave you?—I am, sir.

(The witness then withdrew.)

Michael Bourke sworn and examined.

Michael Bourke.

12647. The Chief Commissioner.—Are you an elector?—I am, sir.

12648. Did you vote at the last election?—I did, sir.

12649. For whom?—For Captain Flanagan.

12650. Did you vote for Sergeant Armstrong?—No, I had no vote at the time.

12651. Did you ever vote before the last election?—I did, sir. In 1848 twice, and in 1853 I voted for Colonel Townley.

12652. Were you offered any money at the last election by anyone?—No, sir. I was not at the election, but at the revision I was promised £12 if I would not register.

12653. Who promised you the £12?—Mr. Stokes.

12654. What did he say to you?—He said if I would not go and register he would give me the price of a cow—£12.

12655. What did you say?—I did not go to the Court-house to register. I am a tenant of his.

12656. And did you keep away from the Court-house in consequence of that promise?—I did, sir.

12657. You are Michael Bourke of Ratcliffe-street?—Yes, sir.

12658. Did you ever ask him for any money?—No, sir.

12659. Did you ever ask him for any money at the time of the election?—No, sir.

12660. Did you expect to get the £12 he promised you?—I did, sir.

12661. And you were willing not to be registered?—I did, because he threatened to put me out of the house if I would go to vote.

12662. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Who was it induced you to vote for Mr. Flanagan?—Nothing induced me but my own principles. I always voted for the Liberal side.

12663. Were you canvassed for Captain Flanagan?—I was, sir.

12664. By whom?—By Captain Flanagan himself.

12665. Did anybody else canvass you?—No, except the people about the street. We always voted together. The butchers always vote together.

12666. How many vote together?—Perhaps ten or twelve, or fourteen. I am connected with the butchers.

12667. You are a butcher yourself?—I am, sir.

12668. Were you aware of money going amongst the butchers at Armstrong's election?—I heard of it. Some of them I heard got money about a year or so afterwards.

12669. Did you hear that the voters who voted for Sergeant Armstrong afterwards got money?—Some of TENTH DAY. October 16.

Michael Bourke.

them did not get money, as they say themselves, but most part of them got money.

12670. How much did they get?—Twenty pounds, I heard it said, each.

12671. And the butchers generally vote together?—They generally vote together, sir. They did at that election, and at the last election.

12672. Now, why is it they arrange amongst themselves generally to vote together?—Well, I think they are all upon the Liberal principle, and they would not stand back. They generally go together to have it to say they have a good band of voters going together.

12673. Mr. Commissioner Byrne. — How many butchers are there in the town?—There are about fourteen or fifteen voters amongst them.

12674. Could you give us the names of those fourteen or fifteen who were voters and butchers?—I think I could, sir.

12675. Well, tell us?—Pat Feeny, Hennessy, Pat Hughes, Thomas Cunlisk—his brother James has no vote. Bernard Healy is in the list of butchers too. He is a cattle dealer. Frank Feeny is in the list of butchers. John Nattan is in the list of voters and voted.

12676. All these voted on the Liberal side?—On the Liberal side.

12677. And did most of them get money?—I only remember two men saying that they were satisfied.

12678. And you heard some say they were not satisfied?—Yes.

12679. And I suppose they expect to be satisfied after this election too?—I am afraid not.

12680. And were they dissatisfied after this election?—I do not think they were.

12681. Did Mr. Stokes offer you any money to vote for Major Knox?—No; he offered me so far as if I went away the Sunday before the election he would give me forty thanks.

12682. You knew what that meant?—I knew well enough.

12683. And you would rather take £20 from Captain Flanagan than £40 from Major Knox?—Yes.

12684. Did you expect to get £20 when you refused the £40?—I did not expect one penny, for we understood there was no money at all.

12685. Did you sign any agreement to go away from the barrister's court?—I did.

Thomas Ward

Thomas Ward recalled.

12686. The Chief Commissioner.—You have been sworn already?—Yes, sir.

12687. Have you heard that it was sworn in court that you gave money to four men?—I did, sir; but I had no recollection of it at the time I was here before; nor had no recollection of it until such time as I met Jennings in the hall—the man who gave the evidence.

12688. Tell the Court now the truth about that?—I did get £25 from Mr. Somers to the best of my recollection. It was after Mr. Somers' election.

12689. At his last election?—Well, I really cannot say. It was at one of his elections.

12690. Who gave you the money?—I think it was Mr. Somers to the best of my recollection.

12691. Mr. Patrick Somers himself?—Yes, to the best of my recollection.

12692. Where did he give you the money?—I think he sent for me. It was in an hotel.

12693. In which hotel?—Miss Allingham's.

12694. What did he tell you?—He told me that there were a few men in Rosheen, and to see could I deal with them.

12695. What did you say?—Well, I said I would see if I could arrange. They wanted £10, and I had not it to give him. They wanted the money from me before they would vote, and I would not give the money, and one of the men, named Bryan M'Keown, said to me, "Tom, if you give the money I will manage it." I gave him the money, and he dealt with these men.

12696. You got five votes for the £25?—Yes.

12697. What are the names of the men?—M'Keown, Jennings, Ted Boyle, and a man of the name of Kilmartin, I think, but I do not remember the fifth man.

12698. Now, did you give any other money at that election?—Well, I did, sir. Mr. Somers and I went into Paddy O'Brien's, in Market-street.

12699. Is that a man who has been examined here?—Yes. We canvassed him to see if he would come and vote for Mr. Somers. Mr. Somers and myself were together, and he refused, and Mr. Somers and myself had some conversation. Said he, "Here Tom, work this." He gave me £10, and we went upstairs to have a conversation with Paddy O'Brien and his wife. On returning down I left the £10 note on the mantelpiece of the fireplace. They were down before me, and I left it there, and told O'Brien's wife to go up as there was something above for her—and she went up and then told O'Brien to go and vote for Somers.

12700. Was that on the day of the polling?—It was.

12701. Was O'Brien hanging back?—He was until the mistress told him to go out and vote for Mr. Somers. Whether the man knew she had the money or not I could not say.

12702. But the mistress gave him the word?—Yes, sir.

12703. Nobody else?—No, sir.

12704. Why did you not remember that when you were here before?—It was long gone by, and I forgot it.

12705. Did you give any money since?—No, sir; nothing to my recollection.

12706. That is a very vague phrase—to your recollection. Will you swear on your oath that you did not?—To the best of my opinion I did not.

12707. Is it a thing a man could forget giving money to an elector? You remember these two transactions at the end of ten years?—I did not remember of it until I met a man in the hall and asked him.

12708. Do you remember at which of Mr. Somers' elections that was? Was he beaten or did he get in, according to your recollection?—I think he was beaten according to the best of my opinion.

12709. Do you remember any talk that time about some of the Liberal party going against him? Do you remember thirty or forty Liberals going against him?—I could not say. Some of the Liberals did go against him.

12710. Perhaps, as your memory is refreshed, you could remember something about the mobs at the last election. Was any money going in your house for drink for the mobs?—No, sir. I got no money except what the people drunk and paid for.

12711. Had the country people plenty of money that day?—I do not know.

12712. How much did you take that day? Did you take £20?—No, nor £10, nor £5, to the best of my recollection.

12713. Mr. Commissioner Byrne. — Do you remember the first time Mr. Macdonogh stood as candidate?—I do, sir.

12714. Was it the election before that you gave away the £25?—I think it was at Wynne's election. I think it is about ten or twelve years ago since that election.

12715. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—It was at the election at which Pat O'Brien was so badly treated and beaten, and his wife was hurt?—No, sir; it was at the election before that.

12716. At whose election was Pat O'Brien beaten so badly?—I really cannot say.

12717. Was he the Pat O'Brien who got the money?—Yes, sir; he is the man who sells the furniture in the back streets.

12718. Now, did you give anyone else any money at any other time?—No, sir.

12719. Which Pat O'Brien was it you gave the money to?—It was on the chimney-place I left it.

12720. Was it Pat O'Brien, the furniture broker, whose wife is now dead?—Yes, sir, his wife is now dead.

(Witness then withdrew.)

William Beatty sworn and examined.

12721. The Chief Commissioner.—Do you hold any position in the Irish Times office?—I do, sir.

12722. What is it?—Clerk.

12723. Are you bookkeeper also?—No, sir, I am not.

12724. Where do you reside in Dublin?—At present I reside in Brunswick-street.

12725. You know, of course, Mr. Hignell, the manager?—I do.

12726. You know Captain Ethelred Knox?—Yes.

12727. Now, at the time of the election Captain Ethelred Knox was cashier in the Irish Times?—He is not cashier, he is manager.

12728. Who is cashier, or was at the time of the election?—We all are cashiers, and he accounts for the money. We all receive money at the counter.

12729. Who accounts for the money?—He does; but his position is manager, and not cashier.

12730. Ultimately did the money pass through his hands—who, for example, had the bank book?—He generally gave cheques.

12731. Was it he paid the cheques?—Yes, and he gave cheques occasionally.

12732. On what bank?—I could not say, I assure you.

12733. You do not know the bank?—I do not indeed.

12734. Were you here at the election?—No, I have never been in Sligo before.

12735. At the time of the election did you live in Brunswick-street, or in Amiens-street?—No, in Great Charles-street with my uncle.

12736. What is his name?—Mr. Armstrong.

12737. His Christian name?—William.

12738. Now, at the time of the election did you see any Sligo people in Dublin?—Yes, I saw Mr. M'Morrow.

12739. An elector?—I do not know what he was.

12740. In whose house was he?—In my uncle's.

12741. How long did he remain there?—I could not exactly say the length of time, but he was there for months.

12742. Was he there during the polling?—During the polling after the election?

12743. Yes. Give the date when he came up?—I could not say exactly the date.

12744. Was it in November?—As far as I recollect I think it was.

12745. I suppose M'Morrow had never been in your uncle's house before?—No, he had never been in it before.

12746. What introduction did he bring to the house?—I was spoken to by Mr. Hignell to get him lodgings as his life was in danger here in Sligo.

12747. When did Mr. Hignell speak to you?—Well, I did not put down a note at the time he spoke to me about him. He asked me could I get him lodgings in a respectable place, and I told him I could.

12748. Was that before the election?—No, sir; I think it was after the election.

12749. Had your uncle been in the habit of letting lodgings before?—Yes; and had a vacancy at that time.

12750. What position in life was M'Morrow in?—I could not say. I lived in the house while he was there, and his bill was paid by Major Knox, I think, to the amount of £15—£15 or £16, I cannot say which.

12751. Was it paid directly or through Hignell?—Oh no. Of course the bill was furnished, and it was paid directly afterwards.

12752. Up to what time did he stay there?—I do not know. I left Charles-street. I did not remain there very long; and I saw him several times afterwards, but I had no communication with him.

12753. You say he was there several months; what was the latest time he was there?—He was up to Christmas.

12754. Now, did you see any other Sligo people?—No; I was not acquainted with any person in Sligo.

12755. What exactly did Hignell say to you?—He told me M'Morrow had come to stop in the city for some time, as his life was in danger in Sligo on account of his voting for Major Knox, and asked me to get him the lodging; and I dare say if he was there now Major Knox would pay the same bill for him.

12756. Do you know Mr. Hughes of Queen-street?—No, I do not. I know a gentleman of that name in the Irish Times; but I do not know any other.

12757. He is the canvasser?—Yes, sir, of legal advertisements.

12758. Is he come down here?—No. I was taken by surprise in having to come here to-day, because I was ordered to appear here on Monday, and I was taken by surprise when I was told to come here to-day.

12759. I ask you did you see any other Sligo electors in Dublin?—No, not that I am aware of.

12760. Do you know Brennan?—Yes; Tom Brennan.

12761. Yes. Did he go to the office?—Yes; he used to come in for a paper.

12762. Do you mean to convey to the Court that he only came in to invest a penny in the paper?—Yes; he used to come in like any other man.

12763. Used he to be shown to Hignell?—No; I never saw him shown to Hignell.

12764. Used he to be shown upstairs?—No; I never saw him shown upstairs.

12765. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Was M'Morrow's bill furnished to Major Knox previously?—As far as I remember it was. I had nothing to do with it. It was my uncle's business to look after that. I do not know anything about it. I could not tell you when the bill was paid, for I took no note of it.

12766. Major Knox is, of course, aware of M'Morrow being with you?—Yes.

12767. You mentioned that Captain Ethelred Knox is the manager of the Irish Times?—Yes, he was, at least.

12768. When did he cease to be?—He has not been there since the latter end of August.

12769. Have you any reason for saying he has ceased to be except for his absence?—No. He has been ailing for the last eighteen months. He has been four or five times out of the Irish Times. Twice he has been away for two months.

12770. Is his brother, Captain Alberic Knox, acting for him at present?—Yes, taking his place until he comes back.

12771. The Chief Commissioner.—Did you hear of any other Sligo electors being in Dublin in the same way as M'Morrow?—No.

12772. Did you ever hear of the M'Mullens?—I heard of the M'Mullens.

12773. First of all you said you heard of no others, and now you say you heard of the M'Mullens?—I know it now that you have mentioned their name.

12774. Was it at Christmas you saw the M'Mullens?—I really cannot say.

12775. Who pointed M'Mullen out to you?—I think M'Morrow came in one day to the office for a paper, and he mentioned that that was a friend of his from Sligo. I think he was speaking to a friend from Sligo at the time. That is the only time I saw him, and I never spoke to him in my life.

12776. Did you see anybody else?—No; these are the only three I have seen—Brennan, M'Mullen, and M'Morrow. I saw no others.

12777. Did you know they were going away to England?—No.

Tenth Day.
October 16.
William Beatty.

12778. Did you ever hear that until the evidence was given here?—I never knew where they were or are at present. I saw M'Morrow when I was coming up here.

12779. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Do you know a man called Kavanagh, who lives in Dominick-street?—Yes; I think I do. I do not think I ever spoke to him.

(The witness then withdrew.)

The Court adjourned until ten o'clock on Monday morning.

Eleventh Day.
October 18.

ELEVENTH DAY.

Monday, October 18, 1869.

The Commissioners sat at ten o'clock.

12780. Michael M'Goldrick, who had been examined on a former day, appeared on the witness table, and said—I was the man that was examined here the other day, when I swore that I never got a shilling for my vote at the last election. I see my name put down for £20 in the papers.

12781. The Chief Commissioner.—Do you wish now to state that you never got a shilling for your vote at the last elections?—I swear positively I didn't. I never asked it. Mr. Keighron knows my principles as well as anyone, and he knows I didn't.

12782. You wish to tell me that you never got a shilling?—Yes.

12783. And you now make that statement on oath?—I do.

Alexander Jackson.

Alexander Jackson sworn and examined.

12784. The Chief Commissioner.—Are you an elector?—Not at present.

12785. When did you last vote?—At Sergeant Armstrong's election.

12786. Did you get any money after that election?—I did.

12787. How much did you get?—Thirty pounds.

12788. Who gave it to you?—Mr. Petrie.

12789. Did you ever get any money before?—Never.

12790. Did you ever get any money since?—Never—not a penny.

12791. Did you ever vote for anyone but Sergeant Armstrong?—I didn't.

12792. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Did Mr. Petrie canvass you to vote for Sergeant Armstrong?—He did.

12793. Was it Mr. Petrie you promised to vote for Sergeant Armstrong?—Yes. I promised both Mr. Petrie and Sergeant Armstrong.

12794. Did you promise Mr. Petrie first?—I can't say.

John M'Guirk.

John M'Guirk sworn and examined.

12795. The Chief Commissioner.—Are you an elector?—I am.

12796. Whom did you vote for at the last election?—I didn't record my vote at all.

12797. Why not? Were you one of the men that went to Mrs. Hall's?—I was. I went to Mrs. Hall's for safety, and I went there with the determination to vote for Major Knox, but when—I was in the act of going to vote out at the time—I heard of the death of Captain King, it intimidated me from voting.

12798. Did you get any promise of money to go to Mrs. Hall's?—I didn't.

12799. Did you vote for Mr. Macdonogh at the previous election?—I did.

12800. Did you get any money after that election?—I didn't.

12801. Did you vote twice for Mr. Macdonogh?—I didn't. His first election, Mr. Macdonogh had a walk over; he came on again and canvassed me. I promised to vote for him. I did vote for him.

12802. Did you ever get money before or since that election?—Never.

12803. What business are you?—A hairdresser.

12804. Did you get any annoyance after you voted?—I did. I felt I wasn't secure in my house. At the former election of Mr. Macdonogh's election I was very badly treated by the mob, but for the assistance of four or five gentlemen and Mr. Sedley who rescued and secured me. The mob tore my clothes.

12805. You are a Roman Catholic, I believe?—I am.

12806. Was anything said to you in your parish church about the election?—Well, it's rather a delicate question.

12807. You are bound to tell the whole truth?—Well, as it is a religious question, I'd feel delicate about bringing religion into this court.

12808. I will bring you to the matter at once. Were you in your parish church on Christmas Day?—Yes. I went to early mass. I am sorry to be obliged to say it; but I will tell you all about it. I went with Mrs. M'Guirk to seven o'clock mass in the morning. I laid down my donation, two and six pence, and went up to the gallery. I was five or six or eight minutes there, to the best of my recollection.

12809. With your wife?—Yes, when a boy came up and tapped me on the shoulder.

12810. Did you know who the boy was?—I didn't. He told me Father Morris wanted me. I took up my handkerchief from the ground where I was kneeling, and on doing so I came down. Father Morris had my money in his hand when I came down. He wasn't there when I went upstairs to the gallery. He asked me, "Did you hear mass?" I said I didn't. He said, "You'll have to kneel here," and he pointed me to the place.

12811. What place was it? Was it on the ground floor?—It was opposite the altar.

12812. What did you say when he did that?—I said I certainly will not kneel there, that I had done nothing disgraceful or dishonourable. He then handed me my money back, and out I went.

12813. Did you, in consequence of what Father Morris said, hear mass that morning?—I wouldn't return at all to the chapel after an act of the kind.

12814. Were not you at divine service that morning?—I wasn't. I am a decent man, and I never did anything which could bring disgrace or dishonour to my family or my character.

12815. Did anything else occur in the church that morning?—Not a ha'porth. I am sorry to be obliged to record even that.

12816. Do you know Laurence Burke?—I do.

12817. Did anything happen to him on that Christmas Day?—Nothing but what I tell you on my own part.

12818. Did Father Morris say why you would have to leave the gallery?—He didn't say a word, but what I have told you.

12819. Did you understand on what account that conduct was pursued towards you?—Well, I felt it was in consequence of voting for the Conservative member.

12820. Did you always vote for the Conservative candidates?—I always voted for them. I do a very large Conservative trade, and on that account I do support them on any coming election. I always stand to my friends and supporters in that way.

12821. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Did Father Morris canvass you?—He did.

12822. When did he canvass you?—Very early at the election. He canvassed me at Captain Flanagan's election.

12823. I am speaking of that election—how long before the polling day did he canvass you?—About three weeks, in or about that—it was a short time before the polling day.

12824. Tell us what took place when he canvassed you?—He came in as Captain Flanagan's friend, and introduced me to Captain Flanagan. There was a large mob outside the door; I wasn't long in the house, I was after coming from Mr. Cooper's house. Father Morris canvassed me very respectably and very quietly. He said, "Will you vote for Captain Flanagan?" "I will not," said I. I said I would vote for the Conservative member. He said he was sorry I would not vote for Captain Flanagan. I said I would not swap my friends and supporters for anyone.

12825. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Had you voted at any previous elections?—I did.

12826. Did you vote for Mr. Macdonogh at his first election?—I did not.

12827. Did you vote at Sadler's election?—I did.

12828. For whom did you vote then?—I voted for Sadler.

12829. Did you get any money at that election?—I did not.

12830. Who canvassed you for Sadler?—Attorney Gethins was then alive, and he canvassed me. I wasn't very experienced in politics; I had no Conservative trade at the time; I was a very humble person, and when I was canvassed, I hadn't a second thought about it—I said I would vote for Sadler.

12831. When you voted for Mr. Macdonogh, had you any reason to believe that you would lose your Conservative friends if you did not?—I swear I would. If I voted to-morrow against them, the Conservative friends and supporters I have would leave me.

12832. Are you aware now of there being exclusive dealing?—A great deal of exclusive dealing.

12833. In consequence of voting?—Oh, yes, wonderful. Tongue cannot describe the exclusive dealing.

12834. Is that exclusive dealing resorted to on the Conservative side more than on the Liberal side?—I think one is as bad as the other.

12835. And it was through apprehension of that system, that you voted?—Oh, certainly it was.

12836. You stated that your clothes were torn for voting for Mr. Macdonogh?—Yes. I left my house to vote for him, and on turning into Gaol-street, a lot of men gathered about me, and tore my clothes; and were it not for Mr. Sedley, and some other gentlemen, I would be severely hurt. I can't tell the number of weeks I was laid up—I think it was six weeks—in consequence of the crushing I got.

12837. You were confined to your bed for six weeks?—I was, off and on.

12838. Was your house wrecked?—Three or four panes of glass were smashed.

12839. Did Father Morris, or any Catholic clergyman, use any very strong language to you on the Christmas morning he sent for you to the gallery?—Nothing more than what I stated. I took the money back, and out I went. That is all that occurred.

12840. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—The place where Father Morris directed you to kneel, is that a place where people kneel as a penance?—I can't tell. I never heard of it before.

12841. Where exactly is it?—It is between the gallery and the stairs. It is a kind of place where people kneel who come in late.

12842. Is it a place where the respectable portion of the congregation kneel?—It is not.

12843. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Is the place for the better portion of Catholics to sit in, the gallery?—Yes. The humbler classes generally sit in one gallery, and the respectable shopkeepers in the other. One portion pays copper, and the other portion silver.

12844. What did you pay on Christmas morning?—I paid silver, half a crown. I am not a very big gun in this place, but I always kneel in the gallery.

12845. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Did Father Morris not give you any reason for this?—Nothing, but what I tell you—he told me to kneel in this place. It gives me great pain to mention it at all. Father Morris is a good and pious clergyman, he is a splendid, good, and charitable gentleman; I considered it very strange that I should be asked to kneel in this place.

12846. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Did Father Morris take any active part in the last election?—I don't know. I didn't mix myself up in it.

12847. Did you always vote for the Conservative candidates?—I did.

12848. You say you went to Mrs. Hall's for protection?—I did.

12849. How long did you remain there?—I remained there from Wednesday to Friday night.

12850. How much did she charge you for remaining there?—When I went there I asked her what she'd charge me for the time I'd remain with her. She said five shillings a day as long as I'd stop. A week after I made an application for her bill.

12851. The Chief Commissioner.—And you paid her?—I did.

12852. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Do you expect that money to be paid back to you?—Never.

12853. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Were there any threats used to you from the mobs?—No; I apprehended that if I remained in the house I would be threatened; and that, if I did go to record my vote, I was in as great danger on the last as I was on the former occasion.

Patrick Jenkins sworn and examined.

Patrick Jenkins.

12854. The Chief Commissioner.—Are you an elector?—I am not.

12855. Were you an elector for the borough?—Never.

12856. Were you never an elector?—Never.

12857. Did you get any money at the last election at which Sergeant Armstrong was elected?—I didn't.

12858. Did you get any money at any election?—I got money at Mr. Macdonogh's election, after it was over.

12859. How much did you get?—I got £3.

12860. For what did you get it?—I got it from Mr. Sedley, as a messenger.

12861. Who gave you the £3?—Mr. Charles Sedley.

12862. He gave it to you in your position as a messenger?—That's all.

12863. Have you any relative a voter?—No.

12864. Was £3 all the money you ever got at any election?—I did; I got money from Major Knox.

12865. How much did you get from the Major?—I got £8.

12866. What was that for?—It was for business I did at the revision.

12867. What business did you do?—I served 197 summonses.

ELEVENTH DAY.

October 18.

Patrick Jenkins.

12868. Who got you the £8?—It is a letter I wrote myself, saying that I exerted myself at the election; I got a few voters to sign it.

12869. Who were the voters you got to sign it?—I can't tell you.

12870. You could?—I can't indeed. That's the way I got the £8.

12871. You can remember whom you asked to sign the letter?—I got the letter wrote.

12872. Who wrote it?—I wrote it myself.

12873. Who signed it?—I think I got Mr. Burke to sign it.

12874. Is that Laurence Burke?—No; John Burke.

12875. Who else signed it?—I am sure Hillas Smith signed it. I think I got Mr. Grivett to sign it. I got as many as I could to sign it.

12876. How many altogether signed it?—I think about ten or twelve, I can't tell you exactly.

12877. Tell us the names of a few more that signed it?—A man named Doyle signed it.

12878. What is his Christian name?—Thomas Doyle.

12879. Who else signed it?—I can't tell you now, it is so long ago.

12880. How did you get the £8?—This is a memorial I wrote, and got it signed by those persons, saying that I exerted myself at the revision, and that I served 197 summonses.

12881. When did you get the £8?—It was some time after the revision, I got an envelope and cheque sent to me with £8.

12882. Whose name was signed to the cheque?—I can't tell you that.

12883. In what bank did you get the money?—I got it in the Ulster bank.

12884. But you cannot tell whose name was to the cheque?—I can't.

12885. You can read and write, and serve summonses; and as process server you are very sharp; try and tell us whose name was to the cheque—was it Knox?—I can't tell whether it was Major Knox's name was to it or not.

12886. But it was Knox that was to it?—It might be the Major's name that was to it; for along with the cheque there was a short letter telling me that he thanked me for my exertions at the revision.

12887. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Was this before the election?—It was at the last revision.

12888. Was it before the last election?—It was.

12889. Did you think you were paid for your exertions?—I don't think I was paid, for I served 197 summonses.

12890. You thought you might get half-a-crown a piece for serving them?—I ought to get more.

12891. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Do you know Tom Brennan?—I do.

12892. Did he employ you as one of the mob?—Never.

12893. Were you ill-treated by the mob?—Never.

12894. Were you ever in any mob?—Never.

Samuel Williams.

Samuel Williams sworn and examined.

12895. The Chief Commissioner.—Are you an elector?—I am.

12896. Whom did you vote for at the last election?—For Major Knox.

12897. What are you by business or occupation?—A shopkeeper.

12898. Whom did you vote for at the previous election?—I voted for Mr. Macdonogh.

12899. Did you get any money after any election?—After Mr. Macdonogh's election I did.

12900. How much did you get?—Twenty pounds, and five pounds.

12901. Who gave it to you?—John Burke gave me the £20. He said it came from Mr. Williams.

12902. Who gave you the £5?—Mr. Williams himself.

12903. What was said when you got the money?—It wasn't in cash he gave me the money, it was in drapery goods. There was £2 16*s.* 3*d.*, I was guarantee for Mrs. Irwin, my mother-in-law. When I saw that he sent me the £20, I went down to buy some things. I told him I was going to pay Mrs. Irwin's account. She ran a long account for £80. I paid him, and I got a coat. Her account came to £5.

12904. Did you process Williams for the money?—I did; for the £25 he had for me.

12905. You wanted, I believe, to get £50?—He told me there was £25 for me.

12906. Did you know anything of that before the election?—I didn't.

12907. Was it after you processed him that he gave you the money?—It was before it that he gave it to me.

12908. Why then did you process him for the £25?—It was in March he promised that to me.

12909. Another £25?—Yes.

12910. That was £50 altogether?—Yes.

12911. You expected to get £50?—I didn't expect a shilling.

12912. You thought you had a right to that money you processed Williams for?—I thought I had as good a right to it as he had to keep it. He said he had £25 more for me.

12913. Did he say who gave it to him?—He did not.

12914. After what election was this?—After the first election of Mr. Macdonogh.

12915. Were you paid any money after Mr. Macdonogh's second election by Mr. Sedley?—I was.

12916. How much?—£15.

12917. Go back now to the process—did you swear that Williams promised you £25?—I did.

12918. And that he said he had more for you?—Yes.

12919. Did Williams deny that?—He said he knew nothing about it in any shape or form.

12920. That was £25 you got at one election, and £15 at another?—Yes.

12921. Have you always voted for the Conservative candidate?—Yes, I always went with my landlord, Mr. Wynne.

12922. Did you ever get any money before the first election of Mr. Macdonogh?—Never.

12923. You knew you were getting these two sums of £25 and £15 because you voted for Mr. Macdonogh?—I never knew exactly what it was for. I suspected it was in compensation for my vote.

12924. Were you ever told what it was for?—Never.

12925. Do you remember the night before the polling-day of Mr. Macdonogh's election?—I do.

12926. What hour of the day was it that you voted at his second election?—It was about ten o'clock.

12927. Did you suspect that there would be money going at that election?—I never thought of it.

12928. Did you hear of money going?—I heard of Mr. Sedley having money, but I never knew of it for six or eight months after the election.

12929. Had you any promise of money at the last election?—I hadn't.

12930. Or a hint that it was going?—No.

12931. Did you go to Mr. Abbott's meeting?—I did—such are my principles.

12932. Would you vote for Mr. Abbott if he were a candidate?—I would go vote for him to-morrow.

12933. Was there any word going that he was a rich English gentleman?—I heard nothing of it at the meeting.

12934. Did you hear of it anywhere?—I heard of it. They are all very rich when they are coming, even if they were beggars. That's the way I expressed myself when I heard of it.

12935. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Did Mr. Williams

canvass you the first time you voted for Mr. Macdonogh?—He didn't come to my house.

12936. Did Mr. Sedley canvass you at his second election?—He didn't.

12937. Did you know there was money going at the time of the election?—I never knew there was a shilling going, directly or indirectly.

12938. If you were offered money for having voted for Major Knox would you have any objection to receive it?—I don't believe I'd be safe in taking it.

12939. What do you mean by "safe"?—I would be in dread of the law.

12940. Do you think you would take it if it were offered to you?—I don't think I would take it.

12941. You know you took money after two elections from Mr. Macdonogh—why would you refuse to take it for having voted for Major Knox?—I don't expect it will be offered to me.

12942. But if it were offered to you, and that you had no dread of the law, would you have any objection to take it?—I don't think I would. I heard no talk about it.

12943. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Did you hear any talk of it at Mr. Macdonogh's election?—Very little; there was some little rumour about it.

12944. That money was going?—There was a little rumour about it.

12945. And you expected money in consequence?—I didn't.

12946. Did you hear of anybody else that got money?—I didn't. It was said that we would have to go with the landlord, and that there wouldn't be any money going.

12947. You got money after Mr. Macdonogh's first election?—I did.

12948. Didn't you then expect it after his second election?—I didn't.

12949. Wasn't there a rumour that money was going after his second election?—There wasn't, until a man named Fair said he got £15. I then asked Mr. Sedley if he had any money for me, and he gave it to me.

12950. How long after Mr. Macdonogh's first election did you get the money from Burke?—If I knew what time the election was I could tell you—it was in March I think I got it.

12951. Did Burke send you to Williams?—Burke came to my house and gave me £20. He told me that Mr. Williams wanted me, and said the money was from Mr. Williams. I then went up to Mr. Williams.

12952. What did Mr. Williams say to you?—He asked me if Burke gave me £20. I said he did.

12953. He gave you £5 more in goods?—Yes. I was going to pay my mother-in-law's account, and he said, "don't mind it, I have more for you."

12954. What did you say to that?—I said I didn't expect it. I then paid my mother in-law's account, and the price of the coat.

12955. Had you a doubt on your mind that the £20 was for your vote?—I suspected that it was.

12956. Didn't you believe it was?—He didn't say what it was for.

12957. Didn't you believe it was for your vote?—I believe it was.

12958. Was it then Mr. Williams told you he got £25 more for you?—Yes.

12959. Have you heard of any other tenants of Mr. Wynne having got money for voting for Mr. Macdonogh?—Mr. Sedley read out the list for you.

12960. I am not speaking of anything Mr. Sedley mentioned in his evidence here. I am speaking of what you heard previous to this inquiry?—I heard nothing more than the list Mr. Sedley read out here.

12961. Had you heard of people on his list getting money for voting for Mr. Macdonogh before Mr. Sedley read them out here?—I heard of a few of them.

12962. Who did you hear got money for having voted for Mr. Macdonogh?—I heard that Joseph Fair got it.

12963. Where is he now?—He is out of the country.

12964. Anyone else?—I heard a man named M'Daniel got money.

12965. How much did he get?—I can't say.

12966. What is M'Daniel's Christian name?—Peter M'Daniel.

12967. Is he in town now?—No, he is in America, I hear.

12968. Who else of Mr. Wynne's tenants did you hear got money?—I heard that a man named Mulligan got it. I didn't pass much remark who got it.

12969. What is Mulligan's Christian name?—Henry.

12970. What other tenant got it, that you heard of?—I heard that a man named Graham got it.

12971. What Graham is that?—Robert Graham; he is dead.

12972. Did you hear him say that he got money?—I can't say that I did; but I'd expect by the way he voted at the election, that he did get money. I think I heard him say he got some money.

12973. Did he say from whom he got it?—He didn't.

12974. Name any other tenant you recollect hearing that he got money?—I don't know of any more but a a man named Crozier.

12975. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Were you canvassed by anybody on Sergeant Armstrong's side?—I was.

12976. Who canvassed you?—Sergeant Armstrong himself, and some other gentlemen. I don't recollect who they were.

12977. Was it after you were canvassed for the Sergeant that you promised your vote for Mr. Macdonogh?—It wasn't.

12978. Had you any conversation, before you promised your vote for Mr. Macdonogh, with Mr. Sedley?—Never.

12979. Having got money after Mr. Macdonogh's first election, did you expect to get money after his second election?—I didn't.

12980. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Did you vote for Mr. Wynne at his election?—I did.

12981. Did you vote for him at both of his elections?—I hadn't a vote at his first election, but I voted at his last election for him.

12982. Did you hear of any money going at that election?—I didn't.

Laurence Burke sworn and examined.

Laurence Burke.

12983. The Chief Commissioner.—What business are you in Sligo?—I am a hatter and draper.

12984. Were you in the parish church on Christmas Day after the last election?—I wouldn't like to answer you, if it was pleasing to you.

12985. You must tell what occurred—you must tell the truth?—Well I was.

12986. Are you married?—I am not.

12987. What mass did you go to on that day?—I went to first mass.

12988. What hour was that at?—I was there at seven o'clock.

12989. What part of the church are you in the habit of sitting in?—In the south gallery.

12990. Did you go to take your seat and hear mass that morning in the place you were in the habit of going to?—No. I was told to go to another place.

12991. Who told you to go to another place?—The man that attends the chapel. I was just going up to the gallery, I was on the stairs when he told me.

12992. Had you given any money as your donation at the time?—I had.

12993. State what occurred when you were going up stairs?—I was ordered to go to such a place.

ELEVENTH DAY.
October 18.

Laurence Burke.

12994. What is the name of the person who so ordered you?—John Smith.

12995. Who is he?—He constantly attends at the church. I was going up stairs to the gallery, and he told me I was ordered to go to a place under the stairs, on the ground floor. I said I shouldn't go there until I'd see the reverend gentleman. I came out to see Father Morris, he told me that I must see the bishop. I said I did nothing that I knew of. I turned in again to the church and knelt in the place pointed out to me.

12996. Did you kneel in the place pointed out to you, and hear mass there that morning?—Mass was going on at the time.

12997. Was any member of your family with you?—No.

12998. Did you yourself see any other of your clergymen on the subject but Father Morris?—I didn't.

12999. What did Father Morris say to you about the bishop?—That I would have to see the bishop—I am not certain whether he said that it was by the bishop's orders, or that I would have to see the bishop. I thought it was bad treatment, I said: but, not wishing to lose mass, I wouldn't go away without hearing it.

13000. Do you know of any other voters that were treated in a similar way?—No, not to my knowledge.

13001. How did you vote at the last election?—I didn't vote at all.

13002. Were you at any time in the parish church when the Bishop spoke of the election?—I wasn't.

13003. Did you hear Father Morris or any of the clergymen speak of the election?—Not to my knowledge.

13004. Did anything similar to what you have described occur to you either before or since?—Never.

13005. Since that Christmas Day have you attended your parish church on Sundays and holidays?—Sometimes I did; sometimes I went to the other chapel.

13006. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Father Morris said you should see the Bishop?—Something to that effect.

13007. What did you say to that?—I said I should hear mass; and I then came away.

13008. Did you afterwards see the Bishop?—I didn't.

13009. Did the Bishop make any observations to you for not having voted?—No; he never spoke to me at all about it.

13010. Did Father Morris say anything to you with regard to the election—did he canvass you before the election?—He didn't.

13011. Did you hear any observations made in your parish church by any of the clergymen in reference to the election, either in the parish church or in the Friary?—I didn't.

13012. Were you maltreated by the mob?—My property was, but not my person.

13013. Did you get any compensation?—I got £100 compensation.

13014. That was for damage done to your house?—To all—to house, goods, and all.

13015. Did your family receive any damage?—No.

13016. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Did Father Morris tell you why you were to go to this particular place in the chapel?—He didn't.

13017. Did you understand why you were to go there?—I thought it was for the election business.

13018. For not voting?—Yes.

13019. Who canvassed you for Captain Flanagan?—Himself in person, and some of the clergymen. I am not certain whether Father Morris was with him or not at the time.

13020. Did anyone canvass you for Major Knox?—No.

13021. Why did not you, then, vote for Captain Flanagan?—I was indifferent about voting for many years. I didn't care whether I voted or not.

13022. You had Conservative friends?—I hadn't.

13023. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Did you ever get any money for voting?—At Sergeant Armstrong's election there was £20 given to me.

13024. Were you apprehensive of losing customers if you voted for Captain Flanagan at the last election?—No; I never thought of it.

13025. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Why did not you vote the last time—were you waiting for money?—I wasn't. It was drink that suggested this question of money.

13026. Who made you drink?—I was sent for by another person, and we went to a house.

13027. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—What house was it you went to?—To Magrath's.

13028. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Were you drunk during the election?—Not to my knowledge.

13029. Why did not you vote, then?—I wouldn't come out at all; none of us three came out.

13030. Who were the others?—James Devanny and Michael Hunt.

13031. Did you vote with Devanny and Hunt at Sergeant Armstrong's election?—I voted with Devanny for the Sergeant.

13032. Did anyone canvass you on the day of polling?—No.

13033. The Chief Commissioner.—Do you expect any money for not having voted at the last election?—I don't.

William Hughes.

William Hughes sworn and examined.

13034. The Chief Commissioner.—Where do you reside?—At No. 23, Queen-street, Dublin.

13035. What is your occupation?—I am agent, canvasser, and assistant collector for the Irish Times.

13036. Did any Sligo people come to your house at the last election?—There was a man, whose name I afterwards learned was Peter Harrison, called at my house at a quarter after eight o'clock in the morning; he brought a memorandum on a piece of paper, in an envelope, directed to me. I was preparing for breakfast at the time, and my eldest daughter brought in the note to me, saying there was a man in the hall who wanted an answer. She said it was a countryman.

13037. What was the memorandum about? In whose handwriting was it?—I couldn't say in whose handwriting it was. It had no name to it; it was headed "Sligo." I am not certain whether it was dated or not; but the wording of it was to the effect—"Mr. Hughes.—You will much oblige friends here if you could get bearer comfortable lodging accommodation for one or two days."

13038. There was no name to it?—There wasn't, as well as I can recollect.

13039. Have you apartments in your house?—I have; but they were all let to permanent tenants. I don't let furnished lodgings. I went out to the hall and saw the man. He was a very old and respectable man; but he appeared rather nervous and excited. I asked him into the parlour. He said he came up from Sligo. I said, "I am very sorry I can't accommodate you, but I will go out and see if I can make out comfortable lodgings for you." He said, "I am sorry for giving you so much trouble; it is a particular friend that sent me up to you."

13040. Did you know he was a voter from Sligo—I didn't know it at the time; on the second day I think it was, he told me he was a voter from Sligo.

13041. What did you do?—He told me he was travelling all night, that he came up by the night train. I asked him to take breakfast with me. He took it, and I went out and looked for lodgings for him in the neighbourhood, in the most respectable places.

13042. Where did you get accommodation for him?—I made several applications for lodgings for him. Some of the parties I applied to said that they wouldn't set their apartments for less than a month, others said they wouldn't set them for less than a week. I said the person I want them for only would want them for a couple of days. Failing to get lodgings, I came back to my own house, and spoke to my wife. I asked him wouldn't it be better for him to go to a hotel. He said he had an objection to go to a hotel, that he was afraid of getting a damp bed; he gave some other excuse for not going to a hotel. My wife and I talked over the matter, and we did accommodate him under the impression that he would only remain a day or two with us.

13043. Did you believe he was a Sligo voter?—Not then. At the time I had not the most remote idea as to whether he was a voter or not. He told me himself of it afterwards.

13044. You knew of the election going on at the time?—I did.

13045. And I am sure you took an interest in Major Knox's candidature?—I did certainly.

13046. I am sure you were anxious for Major Knox's return?—I would be anxious certainly for his success and his return, because I believed him to be a good employer, and a man that would have given general satisfaction.

13047. Did not you know Harrison's name when he came to you?—I didn't until after breakfast.

13048. Had you not received any previous intimation about his coming to you?—I hadn't.

13049. Did you inform anybody at the Irish Times office that you had Harrison stopping with you?—Not one.

13050. Why did not you?—Because I didn't think it necessary.

13051. Did not you know who sent up the man to you?—I didn't.

13052. Do you know Mr. Hignell?—I do, well.

13053. Did you speak to him on the subject?—I didn't. I don't think he was in town at the time.

13054. Do you know M'Dowell the confectioner?—I don't.

12055. Do you know Kavanagh?—I know him by appearance for a number of years.

13056. Did you know of the M'Mullens being sent up to Kavanagh, to be out of the way of voting?—I didn't.

13057. Have you that piece of paper that Harrison brought you?—I have not.

13058. What did you do with it?—I left it in the back parlour of my house, and some of the children may have torn it up.

13059. Did you look for it?—I didn't. I am positive it was destroyed.

13060. How long was Harrison with you?—When I saw the voting at Sligo from the papers, he said he was afraid his place would be destroyed.

13061. How long was he with you?—Seven or eight days.

13062. Did you give him any money to go back to Sligo?—Not a penny.

13063. He gave you no money?—Not a sixpence, or a shilling, or a pound; nor would I take it from him.

13064. Did you never tell anyone in the Irish Times office that Harrison was in your house?—I never opened my lips about it. I never told anyone in Dublin of it.

13065. I suppose Harrison was in the kitchen the greater part of the day, while he was with you?—He wasn't. He had liberty to go into the parlour, into the kitchen, and anywhere he liked. I did my best to treat him as a friend.

13066. Did you write any letters to Sligo about him?—Never.

13067. Did you know of any other Sligo men being in Dublin about the same time?—I heard of them.

13068. Of their being in Dublin?—I don't know that. I thought you were alluding to men that were at the Carrick petition. Afterwards I met several persons who said they were in Dublin. Mr. Williams and several others told me that they were in Dublin.

13069. At the time of the election?—No.

15070. Do you know the M'Mullens by appearance?—I don't.

13071. You are constantly at the Irish Times office, I suppose?—I am not. I am out from ten to five in the day. I call at the office every morning before ten o'clock, and I then go out about my business, to the court and other places.

13072. Did you see Tom Brennan in Carrick?—I did.

13073. Did you see him in Dublin?—I did.

13074. When did you see him in Dublin?—Since I was examined at Carrick.

13075. Did you know him before the trial at Carrick?—I didn't.

13076. Did you ever hear of anyone calling at your house to see Harrison while he was there?—Never.

13077. Did your wife never tell you that anyone called to see him?—Never.

13078. Are you positive that no one ever did call to see him?—I am, for I would have heard of it if any one did call.

13079. While Harrison was in the house, was the matter kept quiet, as far as you know?—As far as I know, I never spoke to anyone about it.

13080. Used you caution the members of your family not to speak of it?—I used not.

13081. Did you know on the second day he was with you that he was a voter from Sligo?—He told me he was, that he never voted at either side, and that he wouldn't vote. He said the consequence of his leaving for Sligo, was that he was in dread of bad treatment. I thought it right therefore to protect the man as far as I could.

13082. Have you seen the evidence given here, that £9 was sent to M'Dowell?—I didn't read all the evidence.

13083. Do you know anything of the sending of money to M'Dowell?—I know nothing of it.

13084. You got no money from anyone to give him?—I didn't.

13085. Major Knox, or Captain Ethelred Knox, gave you no money to give him?—No. In fact, I wouldn't take the liberty of speaking to Major Knox, or to Captain Ethelred Knox, on the subject.

13086. Where is Captain Ethelred Knox now?—He has been off and on for the last year and a half in ill health, I regret to say.

13087. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—When did you last see Brennan?—About three weeks, or a month ago.

13088. Where did you then see him?—He was talking to some person in Sackville-street.

13089. Have you seen him often since the trial at Carrick?—I did.

13090. Is he in Dublin still?—I don't know.

13091. Did you miss him from Dublin the last three weeks or a month?—He didn't give me the slightest trouble.

13092. Did you see his handwriting since?—I never paid the slightest attention to his handwriting.

13093. Had you any conversation with Mr. Hignell about Harrison's coming up from Sligo?—I hadn't. Harrison came up to me by surprise. I didn't know he was coming.

13094. The Chief Commissioner.—Do you know people in Sligo?—I do, since I was a lad.

13095. Whom do you know here?—I know the Hynes's family. I know Mr. Kidd, and Mr. Clarke.

13096. Do you know Mr. Acheson?—I don't. I never saw him.

13097. Do you know Mr. Williams?—I only know the person I saw examined. The first time I saw him was at Carrick.

13098. How did they discover you to send Harrison to you?—That's the only way I can account for it—I don't know who sent him to me.

13099. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—What do you mean by saying "that's the only way"?—A solicitor, Mr. Bradshaw, of Morehampton-road, saw my name in the paper. I keep a registry office. He had one or two advertisements in the paper, and he asked my address. He registered with me.

ELEVENTH DAY.

William Hughes.

13100. He does not register with you according to the Directory?—By the files of the court he did; he may have registered since that was printed.

13101. Here it is—John Bradshaw, 50, Morehampton-road, Donnybrook?—Yes. He asked me if I would grant him a city address, and I did so.

13102. Is Mr. Bradshaw a Sligo gentleman?—He is not.

13103. How does that bring you in connexion with Sligo?—I don't know, I think he is a Dublin gentleman; he has property, I believe, in Carrick-on-Suir.

13104. But that is in Tipperary or Waterford?—Yes.

13105. How does that bring you in connexion with Sligo?—I am not sure that it does. There are a great many who know that I do business with the Irish Times office.

13106. Was Mr. Bradshaw connected with it?—He was not.

13107. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Do you mean to say you never asked who wrote the letter Harrison brought you?—I did not.

13108. Why did you not ask who wrote it?—It did not occur to me at the moment.

13109. What was your reason for not inquiring who wrote it?—I had no reason for not doing so.

13110. If a man from Cork came with a letter addressed to you, with no name to it, would you take him in for a week?—I have a brother in Cork.

13111. Suppose the man came from Limerick, is it your habit to take in a man who comes with a letter with no name to it, and not ask who the particular friend is who sent him to you—surely you don't expect us to believe that story?—He entered into conversation with me about the proceedings going on in Sligo. He told me how he had to leave for not voting, and said he always thought Major Knox to be a liberal and kind gentleman. I thought I was acting a friendly part in protecting him.

13112. Was this your reason—that, knowing that Major Knox was a candidate for the representation of the borough of Sligo, you thought it would be satisfactory to him for you to receive a voter, and protect him?—My only reason was to protect him, when I allowed him to remain in my house.

13113. A man whom you knew to be a Sligo voter?—I did not know it at the time.

13114. Whom you knew to leave Sligo to avoid voting?—I did not know it until the next day at dinner, that he was a voter.

13115. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Did you tell us that you had no conversation with anyone connected with the Irish Times office about this man Harrison, up to this moment?—I had, after the petition, with Mr. Hignell.

13116. What did you tell Mr. Hignell—what passed between you and him?—I told Mr. Hignell that I had a man up from Sligo, named Harrison, stopping with me.

13117. Had you any conversation with Major Knox on the subject, either before or after the petition?—I had no conversation with Major Knox about it until I was served with the subpœna. I asked his permission to come down here, and he said "certainly, by all means."

13118. Returning to the conversation you had with Mr. Hignell, state what passed between you?—I told him that Harrison was stopping with me. Mr. Hignell looked at me and laughed, and said, "Did he pay you for stopping." I was surprised and annoyed. I said, "No, he didn't; I didn't want payment."

13119. Was that conversation at the Carrick trial?—I am not sure whether it was before or after it.

13120. Had you any other conversation with Mr. Hignell on the subject, except that?—I had not.

13121. Do you say you had no previous intimation or knowledge that Harrison was coming to your place?—I hadn't.

13122. What did you say to Mr. Hignell when he asked you if you were paid any money by Harrison?—I was certainly annoyed and surprised at the question. I said he didn't pay me any money; in fact, the man hadn't any money with him, for he passed an apology when about leaving my house, that he couldn't make any of my children some present. I said it wasn't necessary to do so.

13123. Did you understand from Mr. Hignell's manner that you would be paid for accommodating Harrison in your place?—I didn't, on the contrary.

13124. What did Mr. Hignell say?—He asked me if Harrison paid me. I said no.

13125. What did Mr. Hignell then say?—He said nothing.

13126. Did you follow up the subject?—I didn't; I let it drop.

13127. Do you expect payment?—I don't, nor do I want it. I was acting in a friendly way as I thought. If an enemy sent up a friend of his in the same way, I would do the same; if I had accommodation I would give it to protect him from injury.

13128. The Chief Commissioner.—Where was it that Mr. Hignell asked you if Harrison paid you any money?—It was in the Irish Times office; it was convenient to one of the desks.

13129. Did he say it seriously, or was it said in a joking way?—I believed he was joking.

13130. And you felt annoyed at his question, because what you did for Harrison, you did from regard for Major Knox?—I did it from friendly motives. I got neither payment nor anything else; nor would I take it if it was offered to me. I was only sorry the man met with such annoyance.

Mr. Harper Campbell.

Mr. Harper Campbell re-examined.

13131. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—The persons you mentioned as having been paid money—the £1,480—have all been examined, except the man that is dead. Mr. Conroy swore he got £115; Mr. Phillips swore he got £180; Mr. Foley swore he got £180; Mr. Keighron swore he got £180; you yourself stated that you kept £100; Mr. Kidd swore he got £90; Mr. Petrie swore he got £130, and Mr. Magrath swore he got £65—that would make altogether but £1,040, which shows a considerable deficiency?—It does, it shows a considerable deficiency.

13132. It makes but £1,040, and shows a deficiency of £440?—I think so.

13134. Could it be that they got more than the sums mentioned?—I am sure Mr. Kidd got no more than £90, and that Mr. Magrath didn't get more than £65.

13135. Did you take receipts from the parties to whom you gave the several sums of money?—I can't be sure that I did from some of them. I had vouchers which I sent up to Mr. Byrne, and I asked him to see if they corresponded with the amount lodged. I mentioned the matter to Mr. Byrne in court the day he was examined, and he said he thought he handed them over to Sergeant Armstrong. On speaking with the Sergeant on the subject, he said he got the vouchers, and that all was right, and that he burned them afterwards.

13136. You did not give any money to Bryan Chrystal?—No; I didn't know him in the transaction one way or the other.

13137. Have you any recollection if Mr. Poe was paid by cheque?—He was not.

13138. How much money did he get?—I can't tell you. I have been trying to trace it out in every way, and couldn't. The deficiency was obvious, and I was anxious to clear it up, if I possibly could. I sent the vouchers to Mr. Byrne to see if they corresponded with the amount lodged, and he said he believed it was all correct. Sergeant Armstrong said it was correct to the sixpence.

13139. It is only with a desire to trace the money that I asked you the questions?—I perfectly understand the reason.

13140. The Chief Commissioner.—The number of electors returned as having got money, from those who distributed it, was stated to be 55 or 56—Sergeant Armstrong stated that there were 97 paid; would that account for the deficiency?—He said he looked over the list, and it struck him that it was a great number.

13141. We have got only 55 or 56 electors that were paid, can you assist us in supplementing that list?—I can't assist you in any way further.

13142. We have traced £1,040 to electors, we cannot find any others to whom any money was given—can you, for instance, tell us to who Mr. Poe gave money?—I cannot.

13143. If you looked at your bank account, do you think you could account for the deficiency?—I have done so. I have endeavoured to trace it, and couldn't.

13144. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Would your day book, do you think, show it?—The day-book only shows that £1,480 was lodged to my credit in Dublin, and that it was chequed out in large sums; one was for £175. It was all paid away in two or three days.

13145. Your day-book would not show to whom it was paid away?—It wouldn't. It wasn't entered to whom it was paid away.

13146. But you have not a doubt, I suppose, that the £1,480 was distributed among voters?—I had only to do with four voters. It must have been given to these persons one way or the other.

13147. Are you quite certain that it could not be given to anyone else?—I am not.

13148. The Chief Commissioner.—If on communication with Mr. Byrne or Sergeant Armstrong, anything turns up on the subject, will you give it to us?—Certainly.

13149. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Did you make a return to Sergeant Armstrong of the number of persons who got money?—I had nothing to do with that. The night Mr. Byrne and Mr. Tracy were here, the list was totted up. The way I had anything to do with the matter was to prevent Mr. Byrne from having any trouble about it.

13150. Did you give the money to the gentleman you mentioned, in a lump sum, or did you give it from time to time?—Some of them got it at separate times.

13151. Did Mr. Kidd get it more than once?—No; Mr. Kidd got it only once. Mr. Foley got it twice—£100 on one occasion, and the balance on another.

13152. Do you remember anyone getting it twice, but Mr. Foley?—I can't tell.

13153. Did Mr. Phillips get it twice?—I can't say.

13154. You are not sure of the total amount you gave to any of them, but Mr. Kidd?—I think Mr. Magrath only got £65.

13155. Was that sum also paid by cheque?—It was.

13156. You are not sure that Mr. Magrath did not get more than £65?—I can't be positive.

13157. Where did you bank?—In the Ulster bank.

13158. The £1,480 was lodged to your credit in Dublin?—Yes; I think it was £1,483 3*s.* 6*d.*

13159. Do you know how much was lodged in the Ulster bank?—£1,483 was lodged in Dublin to my credit. They sent down a letter of advice to the bank here. That £1,483 appears in the books in Sligo, but it is mixed up with other accounts of mine.

13160. Would the books of the bank afford any clue as to how that £1,483 was distributed?—Not in the least.

13161. Would your own books do so?—No, not in the least.

George Atcheson sworn and examined.

George Atcheson.

13162. The Chief Commissioner.—Do you know Peter Harrison that was examined here?—I do.

13163. Was it you accompanied him to Collooney?—Yes; he asked me to go as far as Collooney with him, as, he said, he had been threatened, and was afraid to leave the town by the railway station—that he would be beaten if he voted for Major Knox.

13164. How did you find out Hughes—for Hughes himself is puzzled about it?—I didn't find him out at all. I hadn't the pleasure of his acquaintance; but I believe there was an envelope sent to me with his address on it.

13165. Do you know who sent it to you?—I couldn't say by whom it was sent. I gave it to Harrison.

13166. Who brought you the envelope?—I don't know; it was left in the place directed to me.

13167. Did you tell anybody that Harrison was going away?—I did; I told some parties of it.

13168. Whom did you tell?—It was generally understood in the place that he was going away.

13169. It was not understood, you know, on the other side?—I think I told some person on Major Knox's side.

13170. Whom did you tell?—I don't know the gentleman's name.

13171. Where did you tell it?—In Mr. Leech's house.

13172. In the little room?—It was in a large room, up stairs.

13173. Whom did you tell that you "got at" Harrison—try and recollect?—I don't know the name of the party.

13174. Who were in the room when you told it?—Myself and that person.

13175. Was it Captain Ethelred Knox you told?—I can't say whether it was he or not.

13176. Do you consider that a satisfactory answer?—I do; because I am not sure whether it was he or not.

13177. Do you know Captain Ethelred Knox?—I know him now.

13178. Was he the person you told that Harrison was got at?—I am not certain.

13179. It may have been he?—It may.

13180. Do you think it was?—It might have been.

13181. Do you know Captain Ethelred Knox's appearance?—I do.

13182. Describe him?—He is a rather a small sized gentleman, he is about the size of the Clerk of the Peace.

13183. Does he wear a moustache?—I believe he does.

13184. Do not you know he does?—I don't. I only saw him once or twice. I saw him here on the day of polling, and that's the way I know him.

13185. You saw the person by himself in the room in Mr. Leech's, to whom you told that Harrison was going away to Collooney, to defeat the ends of justice?—I did.

13186. Was the person you told it to a small-sized person?—I think he was.

13187. Was he like Captain Ethelred Knox in appearance?—I didn't take particular notice of him at the time—it might be him.

13188. Who told you to go to that person's room to tell that Harrison was going away?—I said to the servant at Leech's that I wanted to see some of Major Knox's friends; he showed me up stairs, and I went to the place he told me.

13189. What did you tell the person you met there?—I gave him Harrison's name, and said he wished to get some money, and that I didn't know that Harrison was to go to any particular place in Dublin.

ELEVENTH DAY.
October 18.
George Atcheson.

13191. You wanted to know where Harrison was to go to in Dublin?—I wanted him to make any arrangement he wished in the matter.

13192. As to where Harrison was to go?—Yes.

13193. What did he say?—He said yes, that it would be all right.

13194. How much was Harrison to get?—There was no sum mentioned specially.

13195. Between you and this person in the room in Leech's?—Not at that time. It was understood that Harrison was to get some money.

13196. How much was it understood he was to get?—Thirty pounds.

13197. When was it understood—because I could not understand that you meant thirty, forty, or fifty by your saying it was all right—when was it understood that £30 was to be the price of Harrison's going away?—I believe I put down Harrison's name on a piece of paper, and put the figure 30 or 40 opposite to it. I said afterwards that £30 would be as much as he ought to get.

13198. To whom did you say that?—To Captain Ethelred Knox.

13199. Where did you say it to him?—In Mr. Knox's house on the Mall.

13200. You put Harrison's name on the list?—No, but by itself on a piece of paper.

13201. How much did you put opposite to it?—Thirty or forty pounds.

13202. To whom did you give that piece of paper?—I gave it to the person I saw in Leech's.

13203. Was that Captain Ethelred Knox?—I don't know. I am not certain.

13204. Who else could it be? Do you know Mr. Hignell?—I don't.

13205. Was he a young or an old man to whom you gave it?—I believe he was a young man—he wasn't so much as forty years of age, I think.

13206. Did you give the piece of paper with Harrison's name on it, and with either the figure 30 or 40 opposite to it, to Captain Ethelred Knox?—I gave it to the person I saw in Mr. Leech's, the day after Harrison went away. I went to the house on the Mall, and I told him that Harrison had left town, and that I called on him for some money, I was out of pocket in consequence. I said I gave him £2 for his railway fare, and that I paid ten shillings in expenses to Collooney.

13207. Did he give you any money?—He first said he would see about it; he afterwards left £30 for me.

13208. How much were your expenses?—About fifteen shillings in cash, and Harrison's railway fare to Dublin.

13209. Where did he give you the £30?—He left it at Mr. Williams's one day for me while I was out; he left it on the parlour table rolled up in a piece of paper.

13210. How long after the election was that?—I think it was before the polling day.

13211. Was it after the nomination day?—It might be.

13212. In what sort of notes was the £30?—It was in three ten pound notes.

13213. On what bank were they?—I can't say whether it was the Bank of Ireland or the Provincial Bank.

13214. It was the day before the polling he left the £30 for you at Mr. Williams's?—I don't know that it was the day before the polling, but it was before the polling day—it was between Harrison leaving town and the poll.

13215. Had you before this told Captain Ethelred Knox how much you wanted altogether?—I did.

13216. Did he leave it all for you?—He did, he left it for me in a parcel.

13217. How much was in the parcel?—Three ten pound notes, two pounds, and two or three shillings in copper.

13218. The exact amount of your expenses on the day of Harrison's going away?—Yes.

13219. Did you tell Harrison you had money for him, or that you would get it for him?—I said if he wanted money—I knew he wouldn't go away without the promise of some money—I would try and get it for him.

13220. I wish you would try and recollect what day it was the parcel was left at Williams's for you—I will try and refresh your memory, the polling day was on Thursday the 19th, what day did Harrison go away?—It might be five or six days before that.

13221. How soon after he went away was it that you got the money for him?—Two or three days after he went away.

13222. Did you see the envelope, or whatever direction there was on it, with Harrison?—I did.

13223. And was it that he was to go to Dublin?—Yes.

13224. I presume you remember the address on the envelope?—Now that I heard of it I do. Before that I wouldn't swear to it, for I didn't take any particular notice of it.

13225. Did you ever hear of Hughes until this inquiry?—I didn't.

13226. When you spoke to the person you say you aren't sure was Captain Ethelred Knox, did you understand that he was to make arrangements in Dublin by which Harrison was to be kept and treated properly?—Yes, some party was to do it.

13227. On that occasion did you convey to that person that Harrison expected money?—I did.

13228. How much did you convey that he expected?—I put on a slip of paper Harrison's name, and opposite it £30 or £40.

13229. If the person to whom you conveyed that wasn't Captain Ethelred Knox, why did you go to Captain Ethelred Knox to ask for money; if he wasn't Captain Ethelred Knox what made you go to him about money?—I went to the Mall house, I saw him there and I told him about it.

13230. What did you tell him?—I told him I got Harrison away, and that I came to arrange about the expenses and some cash I gave him for it.

13231. Did Captain Ethelred Knox know anything about Harrison having gone away at the time?—He did.

13232. Did he refer to any list then?—I am not sure.

13233. Did you see a list of voters with him?—I didn't.

13234. What did you say to him?—I went in, there were some other persons seeing him at the time, I waited until he was disengaged. I then told him that I was after paying Harrison's expenses to Dublin, and that he expected money for going away.

13235. What did Captain Ethelred Knox say?—He said he would see about it. In the course of the day he left the money for me. I was in Mr. Williams's employment at the time.

13236. Who handed it to you?—He went into the parlour and said he left a parcel for me. I was out at the time he called, but he waited until I came in. He said he wanted to speak to me. He told me he had some commands for me. I went into the parlour and found there the parcel rolled up in paper.

13237. Was there any scrap of writing in the parcel or did anything pass between you and him on the subject?—No, except that I gave him a detailed list of the cash I was out of pocket—of the railway fare and other expenses.

13238. Did you give him a list on the day you spoke to him yourself?—I did.

13239. Was it in your own handwriting?—It was.

13240. Tell us, could you read or write out a copy of that list—how it was headed and all about it?—I said, railway fare, so much.

13241. Write out a copy of the heading of it?—I had no heading at all to it.

13242. Write it out exactly as it was?—I will.

13243. Don't heed it now; write exactly what it was?—[Witness wrote.] It was just something like that.

13244. Do you mean to say that you put down the £30?—I don't know whether I put down £30 in the list or not. I am not certain. I don't think I did. I did not think it necessary to put down the £30.

13245. Just read it out yourself?—Cash 15*s.*, that was given to Harrison; and I put down 2*s.* 6*d.* for my own expenses to Collooney; 25*s.* for railway fare ——

13246. Making a total of £2 2*s.* 6*d.*?—Yes; as well as my memory serves me that was the amount to the farthing.

13247. You do not remember whether you put down the £30?—No, I rather think the £30 was a verbal affair, but the other being for money I was out of pocket, I gave him the particulars of it.

13248. And you got it to the penny?—I got it to the penny.

13249. Did any other money pass through your hands for the election?—No, not for the election.

13250. Did any money pass through your hands at any previous election?—Not at any previous election.

13251. At any previous election?—Not at any previous election, either county or borough.

13252. Were you ever concerned in a transaction of this kind before—getting away a voter on the understanding that he was to get money for going away?—I was not—not for any election.

13253. How much have you allowed Harrison out of this since?—About £20.

13254. In cash?—Partly cash and partly goods.

13255. Why have you not given him the balance—was it the petition that stopped it?—It was not. I gave him some before the petition, and I gave him some since. He did not ask me for the balance.

13256. Were you subpœnaed to Carrick?—I was not.

13257. Did you know of any one else being got out in the same way that Harrison was?—I did not, unless what I heard since the commencement of the inquiry from the reports in the papers of the trial at Carrick, and so on. That's all I know.

13258. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—When you called to see Captain Ethelred Knox you say there was some person transacting business with him—was it Mr. Stokes?—It was not.

13259. Who was it?—He was a stranger. I saw a gentleman walking before me up the Mall; I did not know exactly the house Captain Knox lived in, and I went on a piece farther, and asked, I think, some old gentleman I saw standing at the church gate where Captain Knox lived. He said he could not tell me, and I turned back, and made further inquiry down some of the houses, and I ascertained the house; and this man was inside when I went there, and I remained in the hall till he had done, and he went out.

13260. Was it on that occasion of your calling on Captain Ethelred Knox that he gave you the money—the £30?—It was not. He did not give the money there at all. I told you that he left the money in Williams's for me—that he came to Williams's with the money to me.

13261. Then had you two interviews with Captain Knox?—I had.

13262. Are you sure it was not at the first of these interviews that you told him about your managing to get Harrison away?—Oh, I am positively certain that it was at either of these two interviews that I spoke of it. I am positively certain, because Harrison was gone when I went to his house on the Mall.

13263. Had you known Captain Ethelred Knox's appearance?—I do now.

13264. And you are not sure whether or not Captain Ethelred Knox was the gentleman you had the first interview with? The first interview?—I am not certain.

13265. You are not certain now, although you know his appearance?—Although I know his appearance now I am not certain.

13266. On your oath don't you believe that it was Captain Ethelred?—I really would not swear it was. I am not certain.

13267. Not quite certain?—But I am quite certain that it was he that I saw at the house on the Mall, and I am quite certain that it was he that was in Mr. Williams's house.

13268. The Chief Commissioner.—And gave you the money?—And left the money for me. I am quite certain of that, because I saw him afterwards. I was poll clerk at the election along with Mr. Conry here in court, taking the votes; and he came up and was asked by Mr. Conry whether he was the Ethelred Knox that was registered to vote out of certain premises now on the list of voters for the borough of Sligo, and he said, "Yes." I was then confident that it was the same gentleman.

13269. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—You say you are not quite certain whether it was Captain Ethelred you first saw?—I am not certain.

13270. What is your opinion?—Well, I could form no opinion on the subject.

13271. Now do you swear that?—I do.

13272. That you can form no opinion?—I could not say whether it was he or not. I saw him for the first time, and I did not take particular notice at that time.

13273. The Chief Commissioner.—It was the first time that ever you saw that person whoever he was—was it?—Well, I believe it was. He was a stranger to me. I did not know his name at that time.

13274. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Were you aware of Captain Knox having given money to Stokes in the same way that he gave money to you?—I was not. I was not aware of his having given money to any person here, except to myself. From what I heard of the reports——

13275. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Do you know Mr. Lawder?—I do. I saw him here.

13276. You are quite certain it was not he?—I am quite certain it was not Mr. Lawder I saw.

13277. You know Major Knox?—I know Major Knox.

13278. You are quite certain it was not he?—I am quite certain it was not Major Knox.

13279. It was a gentleman?—It was a gentleman.

13280. That is, not a person like Brien?—No, it was not.

13281. Did Harrison come to you first, telling you he was going away?—He said he wanted to go away.

13282. He came to you first?—Oh, yes; I never was in Harrison's house I believe in my life.

13283. He was in Mr. Williams's employment?—Yes, he came in to Mr. Williams, and said he wanted to get away.

13284. Had you any idea of his going away before that?—Well, I thought he might have stopped, and perhaps voted at the election. I had no idea of his going away.

13285. You had no idea of his going away?—No, I had not any idea of his going away, until he told me he wanted to get away, because I thought he would have voted at the election.

13286. Did he then talk to you about the money?—Yes.

13287. Tell us exactly what he said then?—He said he would expect to be paid for going; I knew perfectly well that Harrison would not go without trying to get money.

13288. Did he give you the idea that he was going because he was frightened, or that he would stop, in fact, if he was not going to get money?—Oh, he gave me to understand that he was threatened, and wished to leave, and that he would leave.

13289. But that he wanted to get money?—And that he wanted to get money for it.

13290. Did he say that if he did not get money he would vote?—No, he did not.

13291. From his manner, what is your impression as to whether he was going away whether he got money or not?—Oh, I don't think he would go without trying to get money if he was going—I don't think he would without trying to get some money.

13292. But he had confidence in you?—Yes.

13293. And did not insist on any particular sum?—No, he did not.

ELEVENTH DAY.

October 18.

George Atcheson.

13294. What time of the day was it when you first went to Leech's?—I should say—I could not tell exactly; it was, perhaps, three or four o'clock.

13295. So that it was dark, I suppose?—Oh, it was not dark then; it was before dark.

13296. It was before dark?—Well, it was before it was dark, at all events.

13297. There were no candles in the room?—Oh, no; no candle in the room; it was as light as it is now nearly.

13298. What room in Leech's was it that you were shown into?—I think it was the front room.

13299. On the front floor?—On the front floor.

13300. And then you told us this person said it was all right; but you did not mention money payments—did you—at that interview?—I said I put on a piece of paper the name of Harrison, and £30 or £40.

13301. At the first interview?—At that interview; if you refer to the notes, you will find that I said so.

13302. I dare say you are accurate; I thought you said you came back again in the night?—No; it was in a day or two afterwards that I said I went to Knox's house on the Mall.

13303. Quite right; I shall come to that presently. You wrote down Harrison's name and £30?—And thirty or forty pounds.

13304. And then you went away?—Then I went away.

13305. A gentleman having said it was all right; did he read it in your presence?—He looked at it in that way.

13306. And said it was all right?—Yes.

13307. He did not say to you to call at the Mall?—Oh, he did not say that to me; he did not make any appointment to call at any place.

13308. He said nothing at all in fact?—No.

13309. And then Harrison went away?—Harrison went away.

13310. And you went to Captain Knox?—And I went to Captain Knox.

13311. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Did you see any mob traversing the town at the time of the last election?—I did.

13312. Would you describe what appearance that mob presented, did it appear to be organized?—Well, I could not tell you. Some persons appeared to be more prominent than others, as leaders in it. I saw several mobs passing through the streets at the time. I did not see any mobs on the day of polling for I was not out; I was in this court from seven in the morning until after five at night; but going home I got a blow of a stone myself after leaving this court. I was struck in the back of the neck with a stone, or on the shoulders.

13313. Was your house damaged?—I don't live in town; but in Mr. Williams's house panes of glass were broken.

13314. Was any violence shown towards any of your family?—There was not, further than what I have described. I have no family but my wife, and she was not in town at the time of the election. I was struck myself with a stone after leaving the court house, and that was all. I was afraid to go through the town at the time. I was afraid to go home the night before the election, until Mr. Tighe, the Mayor, came down with me to the barrack and gave me an escort of four police to go out part of the way home with me, and they went about a mile from the town.

13315. Did you consider that escort necessary for your safety?—Well, I believed it was. I was making up the poll books, and writing the names in them on the night before till about ten o'clock, and there was such shouting and rioting in the street that when the Mayor came down to Mr. Williams's to see if I had them ready, he said he would give me an escort of police to take me home. He brought me over to the barrack and sent four police with me as far as the streets of the town went on my way.

13316. Were the mob armed with bludgeons and stones?—Well they had stones and sticks. I could not tell you their weapons

13317. Did you see them using stones or sticks?—I saw stones thrown.

13318. Was their demeanour violent and excited?—Not in the part of the town where I was at that time it was not very violent. They were going through shouting and booing at parties that they were not favourable to, or that they did not like—booing opposite to their houses, and they continued turbulent and threatening, and where they met any supporter of Captain Flanagan they cheered opposite to his place.

13319. Was there any particular class of Major Knox's supporters that the violence seemed to be directed against?—Well there was, it was more to the Roman Catholic supporters of Major Knox than to the other side.

13320. Were the Conservative supporters of Major Knox left comparatively uninsulted?—Some were and some were not. I believe glass was broken in Mr. Balfour's, and some in Mr. Lyons', and in Mr. Gilmore's, and Mr. Williams's places. In Mr. Williams's place glass was broken for two or three nights in succession.

13321. Is there anything else connected with mob violence that it occurs to you to mention?—Well, nothing more than what I have mentioned.

13322. The Chief Commissioner.—At the first interview that you had with the gentleman whom you cannot positively identify at all events, did you tell him your name?—I did not. Yes, I believe I said my name was Atcheson. Yes, I believe I did.

13323. I am trying to find out what passed?—Yes, I told him.

13324. Have you any doubt that you did?—Yes, I have no doubt I told him my name was Atcheson, and I told him where I lived.

13325. I presume you mentioned Mr. Williams's name?—Yes, I said I lived with Mr. Williams, so that his knowing from me that I lived in Mr. Williams's, would be a sufficient guarantee that I was favourable.

13326. That you were on the right side. Did he give you any name?—He did not.

13327. On the occasion that you went again and asked for the money?—Yes; I understand.

13328. For this £2 2*s.* 7*d.* and the £30; did the gentleman appear to know you?—Well, I told him that I—I don't know that he did. He did not perhaps recognise me.

13329. Did he address you as Mr. Atcheson?—No, he did not. I told him I had got Harrison away, and that I went with him as far as Collooney, and that I called on him to leave a list of expenses. This was the money that I thought I should get. I did not go to him for the purpose of getting it then, but to say that I——

13330. When Captain Ethelred Knox, as you say, came to the place of business of Mr. Williams whom did he ask for?—He asked for me.

13331. From whom did he want to know were you there?—I think some person in the shop—some young man in the shop said I was out.

13332. That was what he told you?—Yes.

13333. Or was it what the Captain himself told you?—Oh no; I was out for a few minutes, and he asked for me.

13334. I want to know now—I suppose that is now known in Mr. Williams's establishment as the occasion on which you got the money?—I don't know that it is.

13335. I mean that it is known at this moment?—It may be since I came into court.

13336. I dare say it is known very well now?—Yes.

13337. I want to know can you name any of the young gentlemen in the office who were there that day?—Well, I suppose all the young men in the employment of Mr. Williams were there then. He came in and asked for me. They said I was out, and he waited till I came in. He was not more than two or three minutes in before me; and he spoke to me.

13338. How long was he there altogether?—I suppose he could not be five minutes there altogether.

13339. The business was done rapidly?—Well, it was not a very large transaction to take up a great deal of time.

13340. I ask you, Mr. Atcheson, when you go back, to ascertain if there was anyone present that remembers the occurrence, in order to save the trouble of summoning all the young men in Mr. Williams's shop?—I will give you any names of any of Mr. Williams's young men.

13341. When Captain Ethelred Knox came to the office or place of business you know he asked for you—he asked is Mr. Atcheson at home?—He asked for Mr. Atcheson. I believe that's what it was.

13342. And they said he was out. I want to know who said you were out?—I could not tell you; but if a person goes in and asks for me they would say I was out; and he waited till I came in.

13343. These were election times, and these things are remembered a little better than at ordinary times?—I don't know.

13344. I will ask you to try if there is anyone in the shop that remembers the occurrence?—Well, I will ask.

13345. The Chief Commissioner.—We do not wish to put Mr. Williams or any other gentleman in town to inconvenience in carrying on his business.

13346. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Did you mention your name to Captain Knox when you went to him at the Mall?—Yes, I think I did. Yes, I said my name was Atcheson—I told him who I was.

13347. What made you first think of going to Captain Knox?—I went to leave the list with him of the amount of money that I wished to get for Harrison.

13348. What made you think of Captain Knox?—Because it was on Major Knox's side that I expected to get the money for him.

13349. What made you think of the Captain?—I did not mean the Captain no more than any other gentleman that I saw at Knox's house at the time. If I saw Utred Knox I would have spoken to him in the same way, or any other person.

13350. When you went into the house whom did you ask to see?—I asked to see Mr. Knox.

13351. Whom did you mean by "Mr. Knox"?—Any of the two or three gentlemen—Mr. Utred or Mr. Ethelred, or any of the gentlemen that I saw.

13352. Why did not you go to Mr. Leech's, where you had been before?—Well, I did not wish to go to Mr. Leech's house very often. I did not want to be going into it. I wanted to ask for Mr. Knox, and I did call at Leech's, and they told me they had not come down from the other house at the Mall at the time I called at Leech's.

13353. Before going to Ethelred Knox's?—Before going to Ethelred Knox's on the Mall.

13354. Captain Ethelred Knox was living at his brother's?—He was living at his brother's.

13355. You know Mr. Utred Knox?—I do.

13356. Are you sure the gentleman you saw the first time was not he?—Oh, I am certain it was not. I knew Mr. Utred Knox previously; on account of his being Clerk of the Peace I knew him.

(The witness withdrew.)

Mr. Edward Pollock, sworn and examined.

Mr. Edward Pollock.

13357. The Chief Commissioner.—You are a solicitor residing in Sligo?—I am.

13358. Do you know Major Knox?—I do, very well.

13359. Were you acting as his solicitor in transactions about the purchase of house property in the borough?—I was for a great portion of it.

13360. Have you a list of the voters who were in the houses he purchased or rented, as tenants?—I haven't.

13361. Can you give us any information on the subject—Major Knox said you could?—I don't think I can.

13362. Do you know how many of them were held with a lease?—There were only two or three, I think. One of the tenants who held by lease was Hillas Smith, of Victoria-bridge; he sold three houses; and there was a sale in the Bankrupt Court by Mr. Little. These are all I know about.

13363. That is only three?—That's only three. There were a good many more, but I had nothing to do with them. Mr. Harloe Phibbs had to do with them.

13364. Had you been concerned in the sale of this property?—I had not, Mr. Phibbs managed that.

13365. I must ask you about a voter named Patrick Neilan—did you give him any money?—I did. I gave him £20.

13366. How long was it before the election that you gave it to him?—It was a year or better, I think.

13367. He said the 15th February, '68, was the end of the transaction?—That was likely to be it.

13368. Did you know, when you gave him the £20, that he was a voter?—I didn't.

13369. How did it happen that you gave him the £20?—I remember—I didn't know who he was at the time—apparently a poor man came to me with a note from Major Knox. I asked him what he wanted. On reading the note, it explained to me that Major Knox had received a petition for help from him, and that an ejectment for rent was brought against him by his landlord. Major Knox asked me to inquire what sum would be sufficient to relieve the man. I did so, and I thought that £12 would do it; but I afterwards found that there was more rent due. The result of my inquiry that I wrote to Major Knox saying that £20 would be necessary, and that I had paid it to Neilan. I am not now aware whether Major Knox sent me then to recoup me, or did so afterwards.

13370. You took his security for the money?—I did. Neilan was unable to pay back anything. I know that of my own knowledge.

13371. Did you ask him to pay it back?—I didn't.

13372. Did you pay him the £20 before Major Knox sent you the amount?—I forget now whether I gave it to Neilan first, but I know I was repaid it by Major Knox.

13373. Was that transaction one of pure charity?—I thought so at the time. I had no reason to doubt it, because it was an act of popularity. There were rumours at the time that, if there was a vacancy, Major Knox might come in and stand. I thought that this might be an act of popularity.

13374. Did you think that Neilan then was a voter?—I didn't think anything about it, except that he might be a voter.

13375. I want the other transaction about Patrick Flynn?—Yes. I was examined about that in Carrick. Flynn's case was this, I was solicitor for Stewart and Kincaid's office, for several landlords, and amongst others, for the Palmerston property. An ejectment was brought against Pat Flynn for non-payment of rent; I think it must have been a year's rent or the ejectment would not lie—I forget the amount stated on the back. At all events Flynn came to me on the entering day of the sessions—the day before the chairman presides—and asked me could I interfere to have the ejectment not pressed against him. I knew the man a long time and I told him it was not in my power to do it; that I was not entrusted with that charge from the office; that I would be obliged to enter it. They send me a list of those to be entered, and I had no authority not to enter it. He came and said he thought he could get some money. I heard it stated at Carrick that Thomas Brennan was mentioned. I do not remember whether Thomas Brennan at the time was here or not; but just about the court here beside me one or two persons came to me and asked me to overhold the ejectment, and that the money would be paid. It appears, afterwards, from knowledge I subsequently acquired that Brennan and Flynn got the money in a bill on one of the banks here. That of my knowledge I did not know. I called out, I think, to Utred Knox to overhold the ejectment—to let it pass over. This was, I think, the entering day. The third day of the sessions is the day on which the ejectments are tried here. It transpired afterwards—I don't know how it was—that it was not nilled, or taken out of the book till October.

13376. That is the fact?—That is the fact from what I have inquired since; but when I called out to Utred Knox at the moment to overhold it, in order to see if I could get the money when the barrister was sitting, it was a matter of indifference on our part, and I had no object if the money was paid. When I settled my account at the end of the year I had charges against them professionally, and they against me; but there was nothing in the world in it connected with the election.

13377. Did you know Thomas Brennan was the man that paid the money?—I did not.

13378. How did the money come to you?—I don't know who handed it to me—whether it was Flynn or not. I heard Brennan swear at Carrick that it was he. There was a little crowd about here; and we are in a fuss on these entering days; and I did not care, provided I got the money, who gave it to me.

13379. Did you conduct the borough revision?—I was one of those that conducted it. A good many of us were engaged on it, it being a critical time.

13380. Can you say how much that borough revision cost altogether?—I don't know at all. I was not the conducting agent.

13381. You stated that you used to conduct both until you found you could not?—I found I could not; there was too much to do. The county I have latterly done, with the exception of the last election.

13382. Who, then, conducted as conducting agent?—Mr. Harloe Phibbs.

13383. The last time?—The last time.

13384. Did you know the persons paid for working the borough revision?—Not one except Jenkins, the summons server, but he is no voter.

13385. Can you give us any information about the rioting at the last election?—Well, only pretty much what I have heard and seen here. Judge Keogh examined me particularly about it at Carrick. The town was very violent, with broken houses and mobs, and that sort of thing; but as I mentioned to him, I don't think any respectable man at either side here took any part in it. I think the object on both sides would have been to put down the mob violence. On the voting day here it was a terrible shock to the feelings of every well-conducted man to find that poor gentleman, Captain King, shot outside there; it put us all into a state of agitation that I could not describe.

13386. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Neilan is a man in very poor circumstances?—So I am told. I never saw him except at Carrick.

13387. Was he in better circumstances when you made him that advance of £12?—No; I understood from his petition that he was wretchedly poor. He was since ejected; the ejectment was pending against him, and he was not able to pay up when it came round.

13388. In fact I suppose you have no expectation of the money being paid back?—Oh, I think not.

13389. Why did it occur to you to be the security?—I rather think I was told in a letter from Dublin; I think so.

13390. That is, in the letter you had from Major Knox?—Yes; that's my impression. Perhaps it would not have occurred to me to do it myself at the time.

13391. What has become of that letter?—Oh, I have not it. I destroyed it; but it was exactly to the purport that I tell you—to make inquiries and find out whether it was an exaggerated case of distress or not.

13392. And suggesting, as well as you remember, that you should be the security?—That's my recollection. I cannot say positively, but it is my recollection. I argue that. I don't think I would have done it myself.

13393. Mr. Pollock, how long have you been resident in Sligo?—Oh, a long time. I have been in the county I suppose twenty-five years, and in town—living in Sligo—ten or twelve years or more, I dare say.

13394. I suppose you have had a good deal of experience in election matters in the borough?—Yes, I have been at a considerable number.

13395. From the knowledge you have of the borough is there a class of voters who expect money to be distributed amongst them?—By general repute there is most unquestionably.

13396. Do you concur in that general belief?—I do.

13397. From your knowledge of the borough?—I do decidedly.

13398. Had you known money to be going in the borough after Sadler's election?—Only by repute. I never knew of a shilling. I would not mix myself in a transaction of the sort. I never knew of a shilling going in any way to my own knowledge, never.

13399. Major Knox, I presume, discussed the lists of voters of the borough with you and Mr. Harloe Phibbs?—I don't know that he ever did it with me particularly; I rather think he did not, for I was not conducting the borough election. I kept, from other reasons, pretty much away from it.

13400. Do you remember any other consultation that you had in reference to the borough—any statement in the presence of Major Knox, that there was a class of voters that would require money?—I don't remember that I did; but my belief is that it was discussed before him—I have no doubt that it was.

13401. That money should be forthcoming?—That there was a class here expecting it. I have no possible doubt in my own mind about it, independent of any evidence I heard here; just from repute and that sort of thing. I never asked for a farthing myself.

13402. Was it stated in your presence, and the presence of Major Knox that there should be money forthcoming from Major Knox to give to some voters, or he would fail to get their support?—Not in my presence.

13403. Are you aware of any money having been distributed by Major Knox amongst voters?—Not a farthing.

13404. Besides this case of the Neilans?—Not a farthing, except the one I have mentioned myself.

13405. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Had Neilan two interviews with you?—He had. You know he returned—I made my report, and he returned to see what answer came from Dublin. I think that was the only time that I saw him again when he came back—when I gave him the money.

13406. At the first interview did he say he would not take less than £20?—No; he did not say he would not take less exactly, but he implied that he would not take less. When I said £12, he refused—said that would not relieve his necessities—would not keep the house over him. The ejectment, you know, was for more than that.

13407. It was rather an extraordinary thing if he refused to take the £12?—Well, indeed, it was. It surprised the Judge very much, for I think he said so on the table, if I remember.

13408. Did it not surprise you at the time?—Oh, I thought he was endeavouring to get as much as he could.

13409 Yes, but if he came as a beggar?—It did surprise me.

13410. His not being content to take £12—a large sum?—It did surprise me, of course.

13411. Coupling that with his manner, did you not then understand that the man was making a bargain?—I did not.

13412. I am not speaking now as to anything you heard from Major Knox; but did his manner not strike you at the time, reflecting on it as being that of a man who was giving something, or intending to give something as a consideration for the money he was to get?—No; I don't think it did. I really and truly believed the man was in miserable circumstances. I inquired about him afterwards and heard he was, and that by this ejectment his family would be thrown out on the street; and he was making the most importunate claims that he could. He told me two or three times that £12 would be of no use to him.

13413. Did he say it in that way or imply to you that he would not take £12?—Oh, no; he said it in that way.

13414. I see?—He said it in that way—that it would be of no use to him.

13415. Trying to get more?—Trying to get more; in fact, urging my feelings of compassion as much as he possibly could.

13416. Then the £20 was settled upon before he left on the first occasion—that is, that you would communicate to Major Knox?—It was settled and I promised to write to the Major, and say what sum would relieve him.

13417. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Was any application made to you for money since the election, by any of the voters who supported Major Knox?—Not one. Faith they knew very well I had nothing to say to it, if money was going. Not one of them ever came near me. Mr. Heron, would you allow me to make one observation? There was a piece of evidence utterly disregarded at Carrick by Justice Keogh—namely, about that £10 note.

13418. The Chief Commissioner.—I don't ask you anything about it.

13419. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—You could give us the names, or the description of the three houses if necessary, by reference to your books, and the sums paid, and all about Major Knox's purchase of them?—I have not the deeds; I gave each man his own deed.

13420. But you have entries in your books that would show?—No, not as to the amount paid. I can ask Mr. Smith for his deed which will tell you it; and the other was purchased by my partners, Nunn and Jones, of Dawson-street, in the Bankruptcy Court. I don't know the exact sum. Major Knox became the purchaser.

13421. The Chief Commissioner.—They were small sums?—Oh they were small sums; any of them that I had any connexion with.

13422. Can you tell us who were the tenants in the houses at the time they were purchased?—I don't know who they are. They were a long time vacant.

13423. They were all vacant?—They were vacant houses, with the exception of Little's, in High-street; and the Major had to fit them up.

13424. Who occupied Little's house?—Himself, until he became unfortunate and failed in business. He was a most respectable man in the town in his trade.

13425. Was it after the purchase of his house that he became unfortunate?—No, it was before it. He was sold out in the Bankruptcy Court.

13426. Then that house was without a tenant at the time Major Knox purchased it?—Except so far as he permissively occupied it under the Court—was allowed to remain.

13427. Could you procure for us the names of the persons allowed into these houses as occupiers?—I think I can from Mr. Phibbs. I don't myself know any of them.

13428. We will examine Mr. Phibbs?—He will tell you about them; I don't know.

13429. Did the rioting continue for any length of time after the election?—It did for some time, subsiding gradually. We had an enormous amount of money claimed off the borough for malicious injuries.

13430. The Chief Commissioner.—We can get the amount from the Secretary of the Grand Jury?—I know it being one of their officers myself.

13431. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—When it became known amongst the Conservative voters that some other candidate should come forward than Major Knox, did you hear it stated that nobody need come forward unless a rich man?—No, I did not.

13432. Or anything at all to that effect?—Oh no. But my own opinion is, that a man coming here without money would have no chance.

13433. Did you introduce Mr. Abbott to the electors?—I never saw him until I was introduced myself. I moved a resolution at the meeting, I believe, but I never saw the gentleman at all. He looked very unlike a——

13434. Do you know the circumstances of the purchase by Mr. Abbott from the Major of these houses?—Nothing in the world of it.

13435. Is there any further information that you can give us on the subject of this inquiry?—Well, indeed, no. I was very anxious; but Mr. Heron said, kindly, that he did not want me to bother my head about it. I have put on record my contradiction of the evidence. Major Knox never gave me a halfpenny.

13436. The Chief Commissioner.—I do not require, Mr. Pollock, to ask you a question on the subject.

13437. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Did you hear anything about mobs on Captain Flanagan's side getting drink in the public-houses?—No, I did not; except that I saw they evidently had got drink.

13438. That we can believe?—I saw that with my own eyes; but I did not know what houses were open to them.

13439. Was there no watch kept upon these mobs by persons on behalf of Major Knox?—Not that I am aware of. I dare say they were well watched though.

13440. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—From anything that occurred, and anything that you heard, and know of your own knowledge, was there any impression on your mind that mobs for Captain Flanagan, at the last election, were hired and paid?—No, I have not the smallest idea. I rather think they were not. It was generally understood that the sinews of war were not very strong on Captain Flanagan's side; and from the number of people I saw coming in from the country—I have a very large acquaintance with the place from Quarter Sessions practice, and I saw men from Geeva and different places come in—I think it was more the enthusiasm of the cause than anything else.

13441. The Chief Commissioner.—And then, when they did come into town ——?—They had some refreshments of course.

13442. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Are there any public-houses in the town known as Captain Flanagan's public-houses?—Not that I am aware of. I live quite in a different part of the town, and I never was out when I could help it. It is up in Pound-street, and that direction. I live up in the Mall, and I am very glad to keep quiet.

(The witness withdrew.)

Andrew Crozier sworn and examined.

13443. The Chief Commissioner.—How did you vote at the last election?—For Major Knox.

13444. How did you vote at the election before?—For Mr. Macdonogh.

13445. Did you get any money after Macdonogh's election?—Yes, I got £15.

13446. From whom?—Mr. Sedley.

13447. Did you ever get any other money after an election?—Never; I never voted except on the two occasions.

13448. What is your business and occupation?—I keep a bakery and a grocer's shop.

13449. Had you any idea, before you voted for Macdonogh, that you would get any money?—Not the least.

13450. How did it happen that your name was down on Mr. Sedley's list?—I don't know how it happened.

13451. Had you been known before that to be a Conservative?—Well, they always thought I was one, I suppose.

ELEVENTH DAY.

October 18.

Andrew Crozier.

13452. What is your house rated at?—I think it was rated up to £9 at the time. It is rated higher now. I have two houses now.

13453. You knew you were getting this £15 on account of having voted for Macdonogh?—Well, a man named Phayre came to me, and told me that Mr. Sedley wanted me, I think, four or five months afterwards; and I did not know what he wanted with me till I went down to his office.

13454. Well, but you knew, when you got the money, that it was on account of your vote?—Well, I was beginning to think that.

13455. What made a respectable man like you take money for your vote?—Very few men would throw it away when they would get it, and I took it when I got it.

13456. And you thought you were not doing anything wrong and dishonorable?—No; I thought I was not doing anything wrong at the time.

13457. Do you mean to say that if you got another £15 after the election you would refuse it; will you take it?—Well, I don't know whether I will take it now or not.

13458. You will wait and see whether you will get the offer. Did you hear any word about money going at the last election?—Oh, it is generally spoken that there was money going.

13459. Do you know who had the money?—Not a ha'porth.

13460. Did you hear that your name was taken down on any list?—No.

13461. Who canvassed you?—Major Knox.

13462. Who else?—I forget what gentleman was with him.

13463. Are you a Sligo man?—No, I am not.

13464. Were you ever in Leech's house?—Never. Oh yes, I was often in it.

13465. During the election?—No.

13466. You said you heard word about money going, or that money would be going?—Oh, people going back and forward—talking and coming into my shop.

13467. Who talked about money going?—Well, I could not say what their names were.

13468. Did you hear how much was going for a vote?—No, not till I heard this inquiry.

13469. I mean, did you ever hear anything to the effect of a Roman Catholic getting £50 for voting or going away?—No, not till I heard it at the petition at Carrick, and read it in the paper.

13470. And that Conservative voters were getting £20; did you ever hear that?—No. I heard nothing about it till I read it in the paper.

13471. Were you at the meeting for Mr. Abbott?—Yes, I got a circular, and I went to it.

13472. Did you understand that Mr. Abbott was a rich man?—I did not care whether he was rich or poor.

13473. Did you think he had a chance of Sligo if he was not a rich man?—Well, I think he would have a poor chance.

13474. Was anyone going with you to go together at the last election?—No, not one.

13475. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—What business are you in?—A baker and grocer.

13476. Did you lose any custom after Macdonogh's election?—No, I did not.

13477. Did anybody offer you any money to vote for Sergeant Armstrong?—There was a man named Gilmore who told me he would get money for me if I would vote for him.

13478. What is his Christian name?—James Gilmore.

13479. How much did he say he would get?—Well, I don't remember how much; it was so many sacks of flour.

13480. Did he really mean that you were to get sacks of flour?—Yes.

13481. How many sacks of flour did he mention?—Well, I think something about twenty; I don't remember the price of them at the time.

13482. How much is a sack of flour worth?—It varies in price.

13483. Give us some idea; how much is it now?—You get good flour now for £2 2*s.* 6*d.*; £2 3*s.* it is up to.

13484. That is about £40?—I think something about that.

13485. Well, what did you say to Gilmore?—I told him I would not vote.

13486. For Armstrong?—No.

13487. You are a Protestant?—Yes.

13488. Did you hear of anybody else that got an offer of money to vote for Sergeant Armstrong?—No, I did not.

13489. Could you tell us any names of persons who said there was money going, or would be money going after this election?—No, I could not tell you of any names.

13490. Try now?—I could not tell you any names. People coming in and out of my shop that I did not know by name but only by eye-sight, said that Major Knox had lots of money and that people would be made up by him.

13491. That was generally said?—Yes.

13492. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Did you vote on more than two occasions?—No. I had not a vote at the time Macdonogh came first.

(The witness withdrew.)

William Smith.

William Smith sworn and examined.

13493. The Chief Commissioner.—How long have you been an elector?—A great number of years.

13494. Did you vote at the last election for Major Knox?—I did.

13495. Did you vote at the election before it for Mr. Macdonogh?—I did.

13496. Did you get any money after Macdonogh's election?—I did.

12497. How much—was it £15 from Mr. Sedley?—Yes it was.

13498. Had you voted for Macdonogh at his first contest?—Yes.

13499. Did you get any money after that?—I did.

13500. How much?—I recollect it was £16.

13501. From whom?—From a man named John Burke.

13502. Was there any balance of account between you?—Well, there must have been.

13503. So that you only got £16?—He came to the house to me—I was in the kitchen—and put it into my hand.

13504. You knew what it was for—because you voted for Macdonogh?—Well, I considered that it was. It was a good while after, I had no understanding with Burke about it.

13505. Who had canvassed you to vote for Macdonogh?—Himself.

13506. Had you voted at Mr. Wynne's election?—I had.

13507. For Mr. Wynne, I suppose—the Right Honorable?—For the Right Honorable.

13508. Did you always vote for him against Somers?—I always voted for him except on one occasion that Somers was starting, and he solicited me to vote for Somers.

13509. Did you vote for Somers?—I did.

13510. Did you gain anything by voting for Somers?—No, I never got a halfpenny before Macdonogh's time at any election.

13511. Whom did you vote for at Colonel Townley's election—was it for Somers or for Townley?—I think it was Somers and Townley.

13512. But whom did you vote for—Somers or Townley?—I know I voted for Townley once.

13513. Do you remember John Sadler's election?—I recollect the time, but my memory is very short now; I have been ill nearly eighteen months.

13514. After Townley's election did you get any money?—No.

13515. Because we have it in evidence that a lot of people got £10 each—did you get £10?—I got no money at all. I never got money at an election until after Macdonogh's.

13516. Were you always considered to belong to the Conservative party here?—I was.

13517. Now, at this last election between Knox and Flanagan did you hear of any money going?—Oh yes. No one in Sligo could be without hearing that there was money going.

13518. Did you hear that anyone had money on the other side?—Well, I don't know anything of it of my own knowledge.

13519. No, not that you actually saw; but did you hear who had money on the other side?—Not to know it.

13520. But did you hear who was said by the people to have the money ready for the voters on the other side?—Well, except passing talk.

13521. What was the passing talk;—I had no conversation with anyone to know it myself.

13522. What was the passing talk about money going on the other side—who was named as having the money?—I heard that Harper Campbell had money.

13523. Was that at the last election;—No.

13524. That was Sergeant Armstrong's election?—I think it was Sergeant Armstrong's election.

13525. Did you hear that anyone had money at the last election between Knox and Flanagan?—I heard that Mr. Lyons had money.

13526. How much?—I could not say. There were so many names mentioned as having money and not having money.

13527. Did you try to get any money yourself at this last election?—No, I did not.

13528. Did you apply after the election?—I never applied at all at any election.

13529. Did you expect that you would be compensated?—No, I did not.

13530. Did you expect any money?—I was not able to go at all through the town. It was as much as I could do to come up here now.

13531. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Have you a son that has a vote?—No, he has not. He registered at the registry the other day here.

13532. He never voted?—Oh, never voted in his life.

(The witness withdrew.)

John Smith sworn and examined.

13533. The Chief Commissioner.—Where do you live?—A few doors from the barrack corner.

13534. Do you attend at the parish chapel?—I do.

13535. On Sundays?—Yes.

13536. What exactly do you do there—describe your duties?—My duty is to mind the table.

13537. That's where the money is?—Yes, to give the names of respectable gentlemen who pay silver to the collectors.

13538. How are the people shown to their seats?—Well, for the last couple of months tickets have been issued for the different galleries.

13539. Were you in that employment at the time of the last election between Major Knox and Captain Flanagan?—I was.

13540. Who exactly employs you and pays you for the services you perform?—The acting parish priest.

13541. Who is that now?—Father Morris.

13542. Do you know Laurence Burke and John M'Guirk?—I do.

13543. Do you remember last Christmas day?—I do.

13544. Had you received any directions from anyone in reference to Laurence Burke and John M'Guirk?—Yes, I got directions from the parish priest to tell M'Guirk that he wished to speak a word with him.

13545. Go on?—That was all. I went up stairs and I met M'Guirk on the landing—not in the seats—and I told him Father Morris wished to speak a word to him. I turned on my foot and he came down after me; and that was all.

13546. Did you know what you were sent for?—Well, no.

13547. I don't mean did you know positively; but had you heard before any directions about Laurence Burke and John M'Guirk, or any other elector?—I never got any directions, nor heard of anything more than——

13548. Go on?—That M'Guirk voted for—or at least, he was to vote for Major Knox.

13549. What did you hear about these two men?—Well nothing more than just a flying report through the whole town of all those that were to vote and that were not to vote.

13550. Did you hear the conversation between Father Morris and Laurence Burke?—No, I went back to my business again and did not hear what passed between Father Morris and Laurence Burke; but I know Laurence Burke waited for mass.

13551. Now, go on about John M'Guirk?—That's all I have to say about M'Guirk; only two words passed between M'Guirk and me. What passed between Father Morris and M'Guirk I can't say; it was not my business.

13552. It was to John M'Guirk you brought the message in the gallery?—Yes.

13553. Did you yourself speak to Laurence Burke—listen now: he says that you told him not to go up—that means not to go up to the gallery—and that you said he was to go to the place under the stairs?—I don't mind saying a word at all to Burke.

13554. Will you swear that you did not?—I will swear that I cannot positively swear that I mentioned a word to Burke. Burke did not go upstairs.

13555. I know he did not; who told him not to go up?—I can't exactly say.

13556. Had not Burke a right to go up, according to the usage of the church, if he had paid his money?—Of course he had.

13557. He had paid his money?—He had.

13558. For what place?—He had paid his money for the usual ——

13559. I mean the name of the place?—The gallery.

13560. The south gallery?—Well, it is immaterial which gallery he went to.

13561. Why did'nt Burke go up?—Well, I can't say. A good many others that go there and pay did'nt go upstairs.

13562. Do you know now why John M'Guirk went away and did not hear mass on Christmas Day?—Well, I could not tell. I did not hear the conversation that happened.

13563. Do you mean to tell me you can't give me information on that subject?—I assure you I can't give you the slightest idea as to what happened between himself and Father Morris.

13564. Did you think it an extraordinary thing that M'Guirk, having paid his money for the gallery, should be called by you down, and then leave his parish church without hearing mass on Christmas Day?—Well, that rests with the reverend gentleman and M'Guirk. I had not anything to say to him only to tell him that the reverend gentleman wanted to speak a word to him.

13565. Did you not believe that these transactions,

ELEVENTH DAY.

October 18.

John Smith.

as regarded the two men Laurence Burke and John M'Guirk, had reference to the election?—Well, I believe they had.

13566. Why do you believe they had?—Because they had votes.

13567. Go on, now. How would that, unless you give us some information about their having votes, affect their not going up to the gallery or leaving their parish church without hearing mass on Christmas Day—go on and explain?—Well, I could not. I can't form any idea of it.

13568. By whose authority did they go away, or not go up to the gallery?—I think my opinion is neither of them might have gone away. Whatever words passed between them and Father Morris I think they were not altogether removed from the chapel—that they might have heard mass.

13569. Where?—Anywhere they wished. There was no hindrance to their going anywhere, no more than that I told M'Guirk Father Morris wished to speak one word to him. I did not wait to have him down before me, but returned, and he came down.

13570. Did you know then what you were going for?—Well, I am not supposed to know anything. I could not tell any man's mind.

13571. Did you know what you were going for?—I went up for M'Guirk.

13572. Why?—I could not tell the reason.

13573. Now, you are not answering in a manner satisfactory to me?—Well, sir, I would be more than delighted if I could give you full satisfaction. I could not tell any man's mind.

13574. If we are of opinion that you are trifling with the Court you shall certainly be committed; I just give you that caution?—I will tell you anything I know, sir.

13575. Did you hear anything to this effect—that any member of the congregation who voted for Major Knox would be separated from the rest and put in the porch of the chapel—did you ever hear those words before?—Well, their names were not mentioned.

13576. No?—I heard the words, but there were no names mentioned.

13577. Who said those words, on your oath?—Well, I believe his lordship said something to that effect.

13578. Was that before the election?—No. I could not exactly say before or after.

13579. Was it in the parish church that his lordship, the bishop—I presume you mean the bishop—said those words,—were they used more than once?—Well, upon my word, I could not exactly tell you; I am so much engaged at the door that I could not distinctly hear the words from the pulpit. I assure you there are often announcements from the centre of it that I never hear.

13580. I am sure of that?—Because I am a long way from the pulpit.

13581. I am sure of that. Did you carry any message to any other elector in the church besides John M'Guirk?—No, not a word. I did not interfere with Burke at all to the best of my opinion. All the message I gave was: I went up stairs and told M'Guirk that the reverend gentleman wished to speak one word to him.

13582. Now attend to this. Did Father Morris give you any direction on the subject?—Never, only to tell them to come down; that he wished to speak to them. He never mentioned a word to anybody.

13583. At what mass was it that his lordship used the words you have now mentioned?—Well, after mass, when his lordship goes to preach the sermon if he has any announcement to make.

13584. Was it after last mass?—I believe so; whatever he said it was after last mass. I never knew him to say anything at first or second; there might be twenty things spoken.

13585. Never mind what might have passed. Will you swear that you did not tell Laurence Burke that he could not go into the gallery, but must stay in the porch; will you swear you did not tell him that?—I will swear that I never exchanged a word with Laurence Burke that morning.

13586. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Do you remember whether Burke came to chapel after M'Guirk?—I can swear that he waited,—the very last person that morning for mass. He was the very last person; but where I had my attention was—it was about the foot of the stairs that he remained for a length of time after mass was over.

13587. Was your attention particularly drawn to him?—Well, not particularly, but he was under my eye. He was at the foot of the stairs and could not pass out unknown to me. I know the mass was long over before he removed.

13588. You remember distinctly that he came into the chapel after M'Guirk had been ordered down from the gallery?—Yes, he did. It was after what happened to M'Guirk that Mr. Burke came in.

13589. Now, was there room in the gallery for Burke?—There was plenty of liberty.

13590. Plenty of room?—There was a very large congregation, but he did not go farther over than the first seat from the organ box. It was just at the first seat that he knelt.

13591. Do you remember distinctly that Burke was one of the last that came into the chapel?—There were one or two between M'Guirk and Burke, and he was the last of the two.

13592. What makes you remember that he was the last of the two?—Well, because he knelt at the foot of the stairs. M'Guirk was the first and went up stairs.

13593. Will you swear that you had no word with Burke that Christmas morning?—Well, I don't remember that I ever exchanged a word with Burke that morning more than to hand him back the five shillings that he left on the table.

13594. You handed him back the five shillings that he left on the table?—I did.

13595. Why did you hand him back that five shillings?—Well, I can't exactly say what was the reason I handed it back. I was directed by the collectors. There were five or six collectors there, and they gave it to me to hand to Burke, and I gave it to him.

13596. The collectors gave it to you to hand back?—Yes.

13597. Who were those collectors?—Well, there were, I think, three or four.

13598. Name them?—I think Mr. Donegan was in it and Mr. Tighe.

13599. What's his Christian name?—His son, I can't exactly recollect. I don't know his Christian name.

13600. What other people were there as collectors?—Well, I don't know. I don't mind if there were any others. There may have been two or three standing round; but I took no interest in the collection. These two particularly I noticed.

13601. Was not the giving of that 5*s.* to Burke an intimation to him that he was not to go up to the gallery—you are on your oath?—I am, sir. I would be anxious to give you every satisfaction I possibly could; but I assure you I cannot form any idea what was the reason that he got the money.

13602. That he got the money?—Yes.

13603. But having got it, was that not an intimation to him that he was not to go up to the gallery?—Well, it might be.

13604. Have you any doubt that it was—you are bound to tell?—I am bound to give you the greatest satisfaction I can.

13605. Could he go up to the gallery having got that 5*s.* back?—He could. He went there often since.

12606. He could physically; but on that Christmas morning was not it an intimation to him not to go up to that gallery?—Well, I am of opinion there would be no force at all used with him.

13607. I am not at at all inferring that force would be used; you are not answering us candidly and honestly?—Well, I am anxious to do so.

13608. What was the meaning of giving the man that 5*s.*? Do you mean to say that after giving him that 5*s.* it would have been a matter of course his going up to the gallery?—Oh, it was after mass I gave him the 5*s.*, when he was going home.

13609. You swear that?—I do. It was outside the gate I gave him the money.

13610. Gave him or them?—Gave Burke. After the mass was over I gave him the 5*s.*

13611. Who told you to give him back the 5*s.*?—These two collectors, particularly.

13612. Was it in consequence of your having said anything to him when he came into the chapel?—But I did not say anything to him.

13613. Or of the collectors saying anything to him?—No, nor the collectors, in my opinion, did not say anything to him either.

13614. Did he go up to the gallery?—He made no attempt to go up.

13615. Then he did not go up?—He did not.

13616. Or make an attempt to do so?—Not to the best of my knowledge. I don't think he made the slightest attempt to go up to the gallery. The congregation were all assembled on the stairs of the gallery, and the galleries were thronged.

13617. Is it usual for the Catholic parishioners to give silver unless they go up to the gallery?—Well, a certain class of people give silver at all times, no matter on what occasion. He is in the habit of giving silver any time he goes there.

13618. Yes; and he always goes to the gallery?—Well, he does sometimes.

13619. Do not the class of people who give silver when they come to the Roman Catholic church go up to the gallery?—They do; and many a time they give silver and don't go up to the gallery, but to the ground floor.

13620. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Was there any talk that morning about Burke or M'Guirk being turned out of the gallery at mass?—I did not hear a word of any talk about it. There may have been, but it did not come to my ears, and I could not give any evidence about it. I did not hear anything particular.

13621. Did you hear anything at all?—Not a word I heard, more than that M'Guirk left the chapel and Mr. Burke remained for mass. That was all I heard.

13622. You heard that said?—That was all.

13623. Did anybody appear surprised at M'Guirk having left the chapel?—Well, I think not.

13624. Was it not unusual?—It was a common thing through the town after that, for he reported that he was removed.

13625. That he was removed?—He did. I heard it said down the street that M'Guirk was removed—that he was put out of the chapel.

13626. Did you not hear the thing talked of afterwards?—Oh, there was a rumour of it through the town.

13627. What was the rumour?—That he was removed from the chapel; and if Father Morris said anything to him—whatever he said I did not hear it—that he did not, in fact, wait for the answer of Father Morris, but went away himself.

13628. What was the rumour as to what Father Morris told him?—I could not say that; but that he left the chapel and did not wait for the answer of Father Morris.

13629. Was there any rumour about anybody else having left the chapel?—No.

13630. Do you believe that anybody else did leave the chapel?—No, I don't believe ever there was. There never was a sentence more about anybody else from that morning out.

13631. The Chief Commissioner.—Mrs. M'Guirk left with him?—There might have been a woman perhaps. You could not stop a woman's tongue; they generally used——

13632. The woman's tongue was not going in the chapel?—Troth it's often going.

13633. Listen to me, sir; your evidence is most unsatisfactory?—Well, sir.

13634. Mrs. M'Guirk was there at the time?—I did not see her, but I heard she was there.

13635. Do you know Mrs. M'Guirk?—I did.

13636. Do you say that she was not there when you gave the message on the gallery?—I did not see her at that time.

13637. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Were you at the foot of the stairs?—I was.

13638. That was your place?—That was my place.

13639. Did you see Burke leaving at the foot of the stairs?—I saw him only at the foot of the stairs, and he remained there until mass was over.

13640. The Chief Commissioner.—Do you know Martin Boyle?—That's the sergeant—I do.

13641. Were you there when anything happened to him?—No.

13642. You are there every Sunday?—I am.

13643. Were you there on the 29th of November?—I was. I am in it every Sunday.

13644. Did you hear anything said to Martin Boyle?—No, I never heard a word.

13645. Was your attention directed to that occurrence at all?—No, not a word. I never heard a word about any but the two just in question.

(The witness withdrew.)

John George Davis sworn and examined.

John George Davis.

13646. The Chief Commissioner.—Are you in Mr. Williams's employment?—I am his partner, sir.

13647. Do you know Captain Ethelred Knox?—Yes.

13648. Did you know him before the election?—I did for a few days, for a short time.

13649. I presume you were introduced to him?—I think it is very likely I was.

13650. Do you remember his calling at your place of business and inquiring for Mr. Atcheson?—I do, sir, quite well.

13651. State what occurred?—He came in and said, "Good morning," and shook hands. I was engaged at the time. He asked me was Mr. Atcheson in, and I said he was not, and he said, "I have a little parcel for him."

13652. A parcel for him?—Yes, or something to that effect. I said, "If you will be kind enough to wait for a few minutes he will not be long out." I went on attending to my business, and Mr. Atcheson came in afterwards and went to the top of the shop with Captain Knox, and went into a little parlour with him, and came out in two or three minutes and bade him good-bye. I saw no more.

13653. When he said he had a parcel for Mr. Atcheson did you suspect it was about the election?—I did.

13654. That the parcel meant money?—I did, and I was determined I would have nothing to do with it, and I would not take charge of it.

13655. You knew Peter Harrison had gone away?—I did.

13656. And also that Mr. Atcheson had gone with him to Coolany?—I did.

13657. When you refused to take charge of it did you intimate to Captain Ethelred Knox your reluctance to be concerned in such transactions?—I did not.

13658. I do not mean in words, but did you intimate to him that you would have nothing to do with it?—I really did not by gesture or manner convey to him anything more than I have said to you. I was attending a lady at the counter, and I stopped attending her for a moment, and he said, "I have a parcel for Mr. Atcheson, will you take charge of it?" and I said, "If you will be kind enough to wait for a few moments he will be in himself."

13659. And had you heard that Harrison was to get money for going away?—I understood it was

ELEVENTH DAY.

October 18.

John George Davis.

arranged he was to get money, but with whom that arrangement was made I do not know.

13660. How did you understand he was to get money for going away?—I understood that Mr. Atcheson was to get the money from the gentleman with whom he had made the arrangements, and I was determined to know nothing further about it, and I made no inquiries. I knew that Harrison was going of course.

13661. Did you know, then, from whom Mr. Atcheson was to get the money?—I did not, sir.

13662. Did you ever know Mr. Hughes of Queen-street?—Never.

13663. I presume you had not then heard of the gentleman?—No. I asked Harrison when he came back with whom he stayed, and he told me.

13664. Did Captain Ethelred Knox at any other time call at your place of business?—Never to my knowledge. I never saw him in the house but on that one occasion.

13665. Do you know of his giving or leaving money for any other person?—No, sir.

13666. Can you give us any information about the corrupt practices said to have prevailed at the last election?—No.

13667. Do you know anybody else who got money to go away and not vote, like Peter Harrison?—Nothing more than Cherry's affair with Shields, but I heard about Mr. Stokes and the M'Mullens, and I heard some rumours about Galbraith, and the Youngs, and Henderson.

13668. At the time did you?—I could not exactly say at that time. I heard they were in training, or were in hand, but I could not say exactly the day.

13669. Were you in Mr. Leech's house during the election?—I might have gone to the shop, but certainly not upstairs.

13670. Did you see Captain Ethelred Knox in any of these houses?—No, sir; I was not out much.

13671. Do you know of any list making the same provision for voters as was made for Peter Harrison that might be got at?—No, sir, no list.

13672. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—When Captain Ethelred Knox came into the shop did Mr. Atcheson appear to accost him or to address him as if he had known him before?—Captain Ethelred Knox was standing with his back to the counter when Mr. Atcheson came in at the door. I was attending to a lady a yard or two away, and Mr. Atcheson came in at the door. No words passed that I heard, and he went on towards the top of the shop with Captain Knox following him. I do not know that he appeared to know him. He bowed, or something like that.

13673. Did Mr. Atcheson make any observation to you at that time of having arranged with anyone about Harrison?—I cannot call to mind just now that he did. Certainly not before that. I knew afterwards that he had arranged with him. I mean to say not before he went away with Harrison. Perhaps the day he went with Harrison, he might have told me that Harrison was going with him in the evening.

13674. In connexion with Harrison, has Mr. Atcheson ever mentioned anyone at all as being mixed up in that transaction, except Captain E. Knox?—Never to me, sir. I in fact gathered from Atcheson that he got the money from him, and went to Coolany, and that Harrison went away to Dublin, and came back. I never heard until this morning when I saw him here, that Captain Knox paid him his expenses.

13675. Before that, were you under the impression that the only one mixed up in the transaction was Captain Ethelred Knox?—Mr. Atcheson told me that he had seen Captain Knox in a house upon the Mall, and he told me also that he saw a person at Mr. Leech's whom he did not know, and afterwards when I saw Captain E. Knox, I knew him myself, but I did not know that Mr. Atcheson knew him at the time. I was informed of his identity on the polling day.

13676. But when Mr. Atcheson saw a person at the Mall whose appearance he did not know——?—He did not see a man whose appearance he did not know at the Mall, but at Mr. Leech's.

13677. But was it immediately afterwards he mentioned he did not know his appearance?—I think so, but I could not say.

13678. You think he said so, and he mentioned that before he saw Captain Knox at the Mall?—I think so, but I could not be positive of that.

(The witness then withdrew.)

Harloe Phibbs.

Harloe Phibbs sworn and examined.

13679. The Chief Commissioner.—Were you engaged in the purchase of the houses for Major Knox?—No.

13680. Well, who was then?—I understand that Mr. Pollock was engaged for the purchase of the houses, and Mr. Sedley. I was engaged in taking some houses as yearly tenancies, but not as purchaser.

13681. Have you a list of the houses?—I have, sir. I will refer you to it.

13682. And give each case of an elector?—I will give you each case. I made it out from a pencil memorandum. There was a house taken at the rectory—it goes by another name, but I put it down as the rectory—and it was taken by Major Knox from Mr. Wynne, as a tenancy from year to year under an agreement, which I prepared. George Reid was occupier.

13683. And when did he become occupier, or was he the occupier?—He was on the registry of 1868, and it was I think in the May or June of 1867, or July, 1867, he became occupier. He was a year in occupation in July, 1868.

13684. What rent did he pay?—I think his rent was £5 a year, either £5 or £6. I think it was £5 a year.

13685. Go on then?—The next house was taken from the Misses Dudgeon by Major Knox, and it is in John-street, as a yearly tenancy, and I think the rent was £16 a year, the head rent.

13686. Then what interest did the Major get in it?—Nothing, he took it as a tenant, and then sublet it.

13687. And what rent did he pay?—£16 a year, and then the occupying tenant—it was not with me he settled it—paid £12 a year, I think, that is £4 a year less.

13688. Of course you know the object of this inquiry?—I do, sir.

13689. The occupying tenant was to pay £4 a year less than the Major?—Yes.

13690. And in reference to the other house?—I think the rent paid by the Major was £10 a year. The house was very much out of repair, and when put into proper repair, it was the intention to put two or three persons into it.

13691. But at all events, the first transaction was that the rent of the Major was £10 a year, and what was the rent of Reid the occupying tenant?—£5.

13692. Go on?—The next house was a house taken in Stephen-street, from a Mrs. Simmons. At the time it was taken, it was intended that the Major himself should reside there, but he altered the arrangements, and instead of residing there, he went to a house in the Mall, and then he let it to a Mr. Edward Horman, together with a Mr. Jeremiah Rogers, at a rent of £20 a year.

13693. What rent were you paying for it?—£36 by the year.

13694. Very well, what is the next?—The next house is the Mall house. It was taken for the Major himself, by Mr. Utred Knox. I do not know the rent. I think they were paying £27 a year. They took that direct from the landlord, and occupied it themselves. They occupied that instead of the house in Stephen-street, which was to be occupied by the Major.

13695. Well, what was the next?—The next house was in Albert-street. There were two houses there, one of them waste, and the other occupied by a Mr. John Hegarty. That house and the waste house were purchased I understand by the Major, subject to a head rent. They were the property of a Mr. Madden, who let them to the Major at a head rent.

13696. What were they purchased for?—I think for £200. It was a lease for lives renewable for ever, and it was converted into a fee-farm grant.

13697. What was the head rent?—I think the head rent was £20 a year; but I have not the papers for it. These houses were let, one at £20, and the other at £25 a year. There was an interest there; that was the former letting of the houses. There is one I think let at the present moment at £20, and the other appears to be waste; but I believe it is let, I heard it was let to a tenant.

13698. Are there any more?—There are, sir.

13699. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—I beg your pardon—one of the houses in Albert-street you say was purchased at £200?—The two houses were purchased at £200—over £200 was the purchase money. The head rent payable to the head landlord, the Messrs. Armstrong, was I think £20 a year for the two, and the letting value of the houses was £20 for the one, and £25 for the other—Hegarty was on the registry of 1868; he was the tenant, and he voted against Major Knox.

13700. That is the one in Albert-street?—Yes.

13701. The Chief Commissioner.—Go on please?—Yes; then there was the small paddock called the fair green, a field that was taken by Major Knox from Mr. Wynne, at I think something about £5 a year—£4 10*s.* or £5. It was let then to a tenant named Thomas Cunlisk, at I think an advance of probably £1 a year. I think his house was about £6 a year. Thomas Cunlisk voted against Major Knox. The next was another field taken by Major Knox from Mr. Wynne at Ballinode, and the rent of that was £10 a year, and that then was let to a conacre tenant, at a rent of something about the same money; and the last tenant that was there was a man named John M'Grath, and I do not know his exact letting rent for this field. He occupied it for six months, and gave it up then—he did not vote at all.

13702. He did not vote at all?—No, sir; he did not vote at all. The next was a field taken by Major Knox from Mr. St. George Jones Martin, at Knappa; that field was taken at £17 a year, and it was let to a tenant at that rent, and that tenant was not on the registry at the time.

13703. What was his name?—Henry Clancy; he was not long enough in occupation of the field to be on the registry.

13704. Well, go on please?—Well then in Main-street there are three houses, and they were taken by Major Knox from Mr. H. Smith on lease, and I think the rent payable there for the three houses is something like £36 a year, and I think they were let to tenants at an amount that would cover about that rent. I do not know anything about it except what I heard.

13705. Who are they?—Thomas M'Kim, Richard M'Kim, and Mr. Malley; none of these were on the registry of 1868.

13706. They were not long enough in occupation?—No, sir. The next is Albert-street house, which I come back to again, and that house was let, and is, to a Mr. John Farrell and his three sons. There are four tenants in that house.

13707. And can there be four votes from that house?—There cannot, sir; all their rent is £20 a year, and that is under agreement.

13708. What is the rent payable by Major Knox?—I think if you were to apportion the rent it would be £10. They were held under a lease for lives renewable for ever, and I received the rents, but it was converted into a fee-farm grant, and I do not know the rent now, but it is not more than £10.

13709. Is that the whole?—That is all the houses I know anything of.

13710. Were there any other houses that any solicitor was concerned in for Major Knox except yourself?—That house in Albert-street I was not concerned in at all; except to let it. I was not concerned in the purchase of that house, and I understood since, the Major had made some arrangements for purchasing some other houses, but that I know nothing of.

13711. Does the Major still retain property in those houses?—I cannot tell that, sir; he retains property in the rectory house, and in the house in John-street.

13712. Has there been any arrangement by which these have been transferred to some one else?—There has been some arrangement about a transfer to Mr. Abbot.

13713. You know nothing about that?—No, sir; the only thing I know is his houses in Union-street have been transferred to Mr. Abbot. They were held under a lease, and I was told they were transferred to Mr. Abbot, I think by Major Knox himself.

13714. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Are there three houses?—There are three houses in Union-street.

13715. The Chief Commissioner.—Now do you remember the transaction of Mr. Wilson bringing the money to Gray?—I do, sir, perfectly well.

13716. Did Mr. Wilson tell you he had any money?—I will tell you all I know about that. I met Mr. Flynn in Sligo, whom I did know. I did not know Gray except that I knew his appearance, but I did not know Gray was his name. Flynn came to me and told me—I was then I think after returning from Dublin at the time—that the Pound-street boys were badly treated, and they wanted some money for drink, but I said I did not know anything about the money matters, but that I would ask the question. However, in course of conversation afterwards I spoke to Mr. Wilson, and mentioned the matter to him, and I think on that occasion he told me he had a few pounds for mob purposes, in fact I believe it was intended for drink. I then said that Flynn had spoken to me, that he had a long list in his hand that I did not look over, and that there were a number of persons in the Pound who wanted to get something for drink, and who considered themselves badly treated; and he said if I thought well of it he would give them £5. "There is a man named Gray," said I, "who is the principal man; I do not know Gray by appearance, but I will see about it." As I was leaving the shop I took up a card, and said, "Will you know that card again?" and the shopman said "Yes," and I met Flynn afterwards, and said I could get £5 for drink and no more, and Flynn grumbled, and said there was a long list, but I did not read the list and I said, "This will get you £5." "I do not want money for myself said Flynn, nor would I take it, nor is there any man on the list who is a voter." Said I, "If there were I would not give you the money." I said, "Send to Mr. Wilson for the money; there is a card." He went to Mr. Wilson, and I understood he got the money.

13717. Did you ever mark another card like that?—No, sir; and never will again.

13718. There was a great deal said about the card being marked?—There was no mark whatever.

13719. There was a hole in the card?—No, a little mark in the margin where I took a piece off, and said, "Will you know that again?" and he said, "I will."

13720. You conduct, Mr. Phibbs, the Conservative Registration inquiry?—I do, sir.

13721. How much did the registration before the election cost? I mean on your side?—That is the last one.

13722. Yes, before the election?—Oh I could not form an opinion, sir. The money did not pass through my hands.

13723. Through whose hands did the money pass?—There was money sent to the late Mr. Robinson, and as to the sums that were sent to him I know nothing of.

13724. But you were managing, and you had the staff of professional men under you?—I had, sir. I did not act as manager. I acted in conjunction with the other persons. I have had the conduct of the borough registry for some years in my hands.

13725. Can you describe the state of the town during the election as regards the conduct of the mob?—I can. It was certainly extensively excited and very riotous, and there was a great deal of injury done to property—house property.

13726. I presume you have seen many other contested elections?—I have seen a great number.

13727. Was this as bad, or worse than any you have previously seen?—I was present at one that I think only equalled it, and that was the contested election between Mr. Martin and Mr. Wynne, a great number of years ago. I saw a number of men armed with staves.

13728. Speak of anything you have seen?—I was on the day of the polling within two hundred yards of the court-house, and I saw men's houses wrecked within view of the authorities and within view of the police officers who were stationed here; and who could not stir unless by orders. I did apply to some persons, I forget to whom, and my application was minded, and there were two companies of infantry sent up, one to one place and one to another, in charge of a magistrate each. The constabulary could not stir.

13729. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Whose house was wrecked?—The house of a man named Carragh. I saw the mob running in and out through the windows. The windows were forced open. At night, as I had occasion to be sometimes up late, I always went home under an escort. I felt it was absolutely necessary.

13730. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Did you conduct the Conservative Registration business in 1867?—I did.

13731. Did you know then that Patrick Neilan was a voter?—Oh, I am sure I did.

13732. Did you make any lists of the voters for Major Knox?—Not more than the register—but probably I might have put on the register an observation to each name as I went along.

13733. Do you remember when you first furnished it to Major Knox?—Indeed I have no recollection of that. It was very early. I think earlier than 1867. I think so, but I have no precise recollection of it.

13734. How could you distinguish the names on the registry?—I think I could distinguish the names by putting down the religion, Protestants and Catholics.

13735. And having put down the religion what further marks did you put down?—Well there are some Protestants that I knew never voted for the Conservative party and I marked them.

13736. How did you mark them? What mark did you put?—I think I might have put some pencil observation.

13737. Did you put a mark to say that they had never voted with the Conservatives, or that they were men open to bribery?—Oh no; these men were not open to bribery in any way. I would not attribute that to them. They were respectable gentlemen in this town.

13738. Well, did you put any mark against any of the names of the Roman Catholic voters that you thought were open to bribery?—Indeed I did not, sir, do anything of the kind.

13739. Did you mark off any of them as to be canvassed by Major Knox?—I was with Major Knox in his canvass, and I canvassed everybody in Sligo. At the last canvass I was not among the number of new men likely to be on the registry—the men between the £4 and the £8 valuation. All the men of the £8 valuation I knew by appearance. The others, who were the men between the £8 and the £4, I did not know, and I was not able to give him sufficient information about these, as to what their religion was.

13740. But did you make inquiries as to who the persons were who were likely to come on the registry as under the £8?—Oh, surely I did.

13741. Did you make out a list of any of these persons?—No, sir. We served notices in a great number, and I know by the number of notices served by the opposite party and comparing that list with my list.

13742. Are you able to tell us when Rooney's name appeared?—Michael Rooney?

13743. Yes?—Oh, he was always on.

13744. The Chief Commissioner.—He has land in the neighbourhood?—He has conacre land here.

13745. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Was he always on?—I think so, always; on I think for the last five or six years, and if he was put off, it was by some accident.

13746. And of course his name must have appeared upon any list you furnished to Major Knox?—Yes, of course; it is a printed list.

13747. Did I understand you to say that the earliest of these lists you furnished to Major Knox was in July, 1867?—No; I furnished a list and I could not bring it to my mind when I furnished it, but probably he had a list before him when I made some observations respecting the names. I do not recollect furnishing a list, but I recollect speaking to him about it.

13748. Was the making out of the lists and the getting information as to the voters originated shortly after Major Knox became a candidate for the borough?—No, sir. It was always my business to make out the lists and see the persons who were coming on the registry, and make my objection to them if necessary.

13749. Just so. And I presume you communicated early with Major Knox, or as he became a candidate for the borough?—I have no distinct recollection, but I should say so.

13750. Furnished him with a list and gave him every information?—I gave him every information I possibly could.

13751. Neilan's name was on the registry before this?—It was on the registry before 1867, but I do not know precisely. I know it was on the registry for 1867, and I know it was on the registry for 1868.

13752. Do you happen to know the Christian name of Mr. Abbott?—William, I believe.

13753. What is his address?—He is at present in Paris, I hear; that is the last I heard of him.

13754. What was his address before you heard he was in Paris?—The only address I ever knew was when he stopped in London, and I visited him for three or four days. He was then stopping at the Grosvenor hotel.

13755. What is his place of residence?—That I could not tell you, sir.

13756. Have you ever had any communication with Mr. Abbott by writing?—Never.

13757. You have had no correspondence with him?—I do not think I ever received or wrote a letter to him. I have no recollection that I ever did.

13758. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—You were conducting agent for Mr. Macdonogh?—I was, sir.

13759. Were you at both his elections?—I was.

13760. Do you recollect the election of 1860?—I do.

13761. Colonel Tennison and Mr. Somers were both candidates?—Yes, sir.

13762. And Colonel Tennison retired?—Yes.

13763. And Mr. Somers polled one vote I believe—that has been stated by Mr. Macdonogh?—I think he polled more than one. I think he polled three or four.

13764. Would you tell me why he polled such a small number?—I could not tell you because I was in the opposite camp.

13765. You must have formed surely some conclusion. You must have known why he polled such a ridiculously small number?—I do not know. I knew Mr. Somers for a long time. I had been previously connected with Mr. Somers at former elections, and I never charged him sixpence for it up to the time Mr. Wynne came here. But I knew Mr. Somers to be a very clever electioneering gentleman, and I am sure he must have had some reason for that.

13766. The Chief Commissioner.—Very likely for petitioning purposes?—Very likely.

13767. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—What is the rumour which prevailed?—The first I knew of it was the placard of Colonel Tennison's withdrawal, and we were really at sea at the time, what I heard of this afterwards was that the cause of Colonel Tennison's leaving was in consequence of a demand that was made by some Roman Catholic voters.

13768. For money?—For money. In fact the sum was £650. At a late hour of the evening it appears the parties had a meeting, and the result of that meeting was that Mr. Harkan, a barrister who is known to us all, waited upon Mr. Randle Peyton, the conducting agent, and private solicitor for Colonel Tennison. They then went and called upon Mr. Charles O'Donel, who occupied apartments in Castle-street. He was Colonel Tennison's friend and adviser, and the result of the interview with him was the withdrawal of Colonel Tennison altogether.

13769. In consequence as you understood of bribery?—In consequence of a demand that had been made upon him for a certain sum of money, which he would not give. Mr. Randle Peyton would not allow it.

13770. Did report point to any persons as those who had made that demand? Of course we are merely speaking of report, and I do not expect you to know of your own knowledge?—No, sir, I cannot say, because I think it was spoken of as if a list was furnished with the names on the list, and that list was taken by Mr. Harkan, I think, to Mr. Peyton, who brought it to Mr. O'Donel in company with Mr. Harkan.

13771. What names were on that list?—I do not know.

13772. We have heard a great deal of some £850 expended illegally by Mr. Macdonogh at that election. Did you know anything of it at that time?—Not a sixpence of it, sir. I never in all my life, directly or indirectly, offered, gave, or caused to be given sixpence to any man for his vote or to abstain from voting. At the Carrick petition I was summoned as a witness, and in the bill of particulars there was an allegation against me for thirty-seven cases of bribery and other corruption.

13773. The Chief Commissioner.—We do not think it necessary to ask you any questions about that?—I read in the reports in the newspapers that my name was mentioned here by, I think, Mr. Hugh Conlan—Mr. Ormsby's and mine. It was stated that a man named Dolan had told me that eleven persons were to leave at the last election who were Roman Catholics, that they were to get £40 each, and that Mr. Ormsby and I had stated that they could not get £40, for we could not trust them. Such a thing never happened, and I never heard of such a thing until I saw it in print.

13774. Did any money pass through your hands at the election of 1860?—Not a sixpence except my conducting fee. I got my conducting fee all right.

13775. Were you his agent in 1865?—I was, sir.

13776. Could you give us the poll books for 1865? You have copies of the poll books for the last time?—Yes.

13777. Could you give us the poll books for 1865?—No, sir. I will make search and if I have got them you shall have them. I am inclined to think that the poll books went to Dublin. I will make search for them and if I have them you shall have them.

13778. In 1865 no money passed? I will ask you formally, did any money pass through your hands except for your fee?—Not a sixpence.

13779. And you did not know of any money passing?—Not a sixpence, nor was I present at any conversation or at any meeting when it might have been spoken of.

13780. Have you got in your possession any lists marked by yourself previous to the election of 1865 or the last election?—I do not know that I have. I will see if I have, but I am sure that I have not one; if I have I will give you them. I will give you any list that I have.

13781. Now, at the last election between Captain Flanagan and Major Knox, did you hear anything about money being going on Major Knox's side? I will ask you in the first instance, did you know that sums had been illegally distributed at previous elections by Mr. Macdonogh?—I did not know except by hearsay. Until I went to Carrick I knew nothing about the distribution of the money by Major Knox. I heard of it then for the first time, and until Mr. Macdonagh was examined, and in the progress of this investigation, I knew nothing about the money. I had always suspicions about the money going, but as to the parties who got it I did not know.

13782. Had you any suspicion of that kind about Major Knox's election?—Not until I went to Carrick. Immediately before going to Carrick I heard it rumoured.

13783. But at the time of the election?—None at the time of the election.

13784. Had you heard any reports of money going on Captain Flanagan's side?—There were rumours on both sides, but I never could get any persons to tell me what they knew.

13785. You heard in fact nothing that would assist us in this investigation?—Nothing that would assist in this investigation.

13786. Mr. Commissioner Byrne. — From your knowledge of the borough would you say now that for years past there has been a class of voters who would expect money to be distributed amongst them afterwards?—Well, I dare say there was such a class.

13787. Have you any doubt of it?—Indeed I have very little doubt that there is some on both sides that expect it always.

13788. That expect it always?—I have very little doubt about it.

13789. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Is that opinion formed independent of anything you have heard during the investigation?—I think what I have heard during the investigation strengthens me in that opinion.

13790. I have no doubt it adds to it, but if you had been asked as the first witness here the question that you have been asked by Mr. Commissioner Byrne, would you have given him the same answer?—Well, I should say I would.

13791. Now, you state, I think, that you were agent for Mr. Somers?—Well, I was agent for him acting under another agent.

13792. But acting for him?—Yes, sir.

13793. Was that in both the elections of 1857 and 1859?—In 1859, I think, was Mr. Wynne's election.

13794. They were both Wynne's elections?—I was on both occasions opposed to Mr. Somers. I was concerned for Mr. Somers previously.

13795. Have you any reason to believe that money was spent illegally for Mr. Somers in that election?—Oh, indeed I have not. I think the poor man had not the money to spend, and if the money was spent it was spent for him, but I knew nothing about it. I think £100 of Mr. Somers would go as far as £1,000 of any other man's.

13796. The Chief Commissioner.—He was very skilful?—No. He was very popular.

13797. I thought you meant in the management of money, because there was a good deal of money wasted?—Yes, sir.

13798. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—You were acting directly for Major Knox?—Everything I could do.

13799. And, of course, taking the management of everything that was going on?—Yes, in a good deal of things.

13800. Could you form any opinion as to whether the mobs of Captain Flanagan were organized for the purposes of intimidation?—The mobs must have been,

ELEVENTH DAY.
October 18.
Harloe Phibbs.

for this reason, that the Sligo mob would never have committed the damage that was done compared with mobs brought in from the country; frieze-coated fellows. I saw a witness examined here a day or two ago, a man named Ward. Well, I was going home to my own house one day during the election and this man was at the head of a mob coming into town from Knockrea side.

13801. With a mob?—Yes.

13802. Directing them and leading them?—He was at the head of them, and they hooted any person in the interest of Major Knox that passed.

13803. Then these countrymen must have had the houses pointed out to them that they were to wreck?—Of course they must have had. I happened to be out one night with one of the Sligo magistrates, and I saw the house of one man literally gutted. He sold hats, &c., and there was a lot of the hats and hat-boxes strewn about Market-street, and kicked about the street.

13804. Did you take any steps to have information as to whether these mobs were supplied with drink at certain houses?—I did not, sir, take any steps to ascertain that, but I only heard that they were supplied with drink.

13805. Tell us where?—The house of Ward was one of the houses. The house of a man named Marian was another. I can't tell all.

13806. But what you heard?—There was another house at the top of the street, I think Jordan's.

13807. Any others that you can recollect?—I cannot recollect about any other houses.

13808. Now, do you recollect who told you?—No, I do not, sir. It was just in the hurry of the moment at the time. There was always a large mob at the head of Knox's-street, just near one of these houses, and near the house of a man named Gethins, whose house was wrecked.

13809. The Chief Commissioner.—Why do you say the Sligo mob would not have committed these outrages upon the houses?—Well, I think the Sligo mob, taken as a mob, are rather quiet men.

13810. And I suppose if there were two Sligo mobs they would take care not to hurt each other?—I do not know about that, but I never met an insult from a Sligo mob.

13811. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Mr. Kidd expressed an opinion that the violence of the mob would not have been very great but for the inefficiency of the police and military?—From your observation do you think that observation of Mr. Kidd was well founded? Oh, I do not know.

13812. Did you see any want of protection on the part of police or the military?—I think the organization with which the military were placed, and the way in which they were placed were very defective. They were not placed as at former elections. At former elections I could walk up and down to the Court-house, and from the Bishop's house down to Castle-street, and could do so without trouble, for this reason—there was a body of dragoons drawn across the street there and another here, and there was no person allowed to pass up and down excepting only the persons who had business. None of this mob or riotous persons would have been allowed to pass, and that was spoken of and asked for, and it was refused. It was not done.

13813. The Chief Commissioner.—When you say spoken of do you mean by those acting on Major Knox's side?—Yes.

13814. To whom was the application made?—I do not know, but I know it was spoken of.

13815. Was the mob allowed to come up and down in front of the Court-house here?—It was as much as we could do to bring the voters across from the other side of the street here. There was one voter and I was obliged to go down with a troop of drogoons, some infantry and some police to the quay for him. We went down to his house. He is a ship captain.

13816. Was it in this Court-house we are in now that the polling went on?—Yes, sir.

13817. How many booths were there?—Three, I think, one of which was in the next court, and one in the grand jury room.

13818. How many men who voted on Major Knox's side had you to get an escort for?—I am not sure. Perhaps it is the county election I am speaking of in the matter of the booths.

13819. But you were attending to the polling on the day of the borough election?—Yes.

13820. How many men had you to get an escort for, who could not appear without an escort—I mean of constabulary or military?—Oh, there were several. There is one I went myself specially to. Mr. Robinson and his brother were in Garden Hall, and we went with an escort and brought him in a carriage.

13821. What escort had you?—I think we had the dragoons, some dozen of dragoons, and a lot of police. I do not think we had any infantry.

13822. You have described about the previous elections the horse being formed across the street; at this last election was there any drawing of lines at any street to prevent the mob going backwards and forwards?—No, sir. They had free access to go where they liked. The dragoons were kept walking up and down, but had the mob been kept back as it was in former elections, I do not believe Captain King's life would have been lost.

13823. You described going down with the cavalry and constabulary for Mr. Robinson; when you went down did the mob follow you down?—No, sir, not on that occasion. But when we went down for this other voter there was a mob followed us down, and not alone that, but there was a mob below of upwards of 200 men. We brought an elector back with us. I think we came up Wine-street, and we met another large mob there. There was a boatright and we took him and brought him home, and when we were going over the bridge just directly opposite the Ulster Bank, a fellow threw a brick at us, and it fortunately did not strike any of us. Mr. Whelan was the resident magistrate in charge, and he sent in two or three men to take him out and make him a prisoner, and lock him up.

13824. But at any time going with these escorts had you a sufficient number of men to form a line across the street and prevent the mob following?—I had, sir.

13825. And that was not done?—It was not done.

13826. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Is mob violence common in Sligo at elections?—It is, sir.

13827. Was there much at Mr. Somer's election?—There was a good deal, but I do not think anything at all like the last. There was some.

13828. Do you know a man named Dunoray?—Donleavy.

13829. I mean a man whose house was broken into?—There was no man of that name whose house was broken into.

13830. Was Balfour the name of the house in Market-street where the hat-boxes were?—No, Burke's. He lives next door to Mr. Balfour's.

13831. You know Captain Ethelred Knox, I suppose?—I do, sir.

13832. Was he taking an active part in this last election?—He was here, but what part he took I am not aware of. I do not know any transactions about him.

13833. The Chief Commissioner.—Were you ever in the room he is described to have occupied in Leech's house?—I was in Major Knox's room at Leech's.

13834. But Captain Knox had a room there?—If he had I did not know of it. There were two rooms there—the only rooms I ever saw. I never saw any other rooms, and if he had I did not know anything about it.

13835. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Do you know anything about the conditions or the arrangements between Major Knox and Mr. Abbot for the sale of these houses?—No, sir; I did not conduct any arrangements or conditions between them.

13836. But you did not hear it from Major Knox?—What I heard was that Major Knox had sold his interest in these houses. There was another house, a house in Market-street, that is not on my list, and I only recollect it now. That house was a waste house, and it was purchased originally by Major Knox in the Bankrupt Court. It belonged to a man named Little, a shopkeeper in this town, and the house was sold in the Bankrupt Court and Major Knox purchased it, and I think he has assigned that house to Mr. Abbot; but what the consideration is I do not know.

13837. Do you know whether these assignments were made previously to the meeting at which Mr. Abbot was introduced to the electors?—No, I do not, sir. I had nothing to do with the assignments. The only thing was these agreements I spoke of, but I had to prepare a lot of them.

13838. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Now, is there anything else connected with bribery or intimidation which occurs to you to communicate to us?—Nothing, I do not recollect anything.

13839. If there should be anything hereafter that strikes you, mind I shall be very happy to hear it?—I shall mention it, but I do not recollect anything.

13840. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Do you recollect who was conducting agent of Mr. Somers at the election where he polled one vote?—I think it was Mr. Graham, who is since no more. As long as he was able to do business he was his conducting agent for years past.

13841. Were you aware that Captain Ethelred Knox took a part in the business of the election?—Oh, he was to this extent that he and Major Knox were cousins. He came to do anything he could for him; but what he did at the election I do not know of.

13842. Did you know of his having large sums of money in his possession?—Indeed I did not; nor did I think or believe it until I heard it sworn.

13843. Were you aware that he had any communication with Mr. Stokes or Mr. Atcheson?—No, nor did I know that Mr. Atcheson's name was used until I heard it to-day in court. I heard it to-day in court.

13844. There was a very large number of the voters at the last election who were unpolled, an unusually large number. Are you able to state how many of these voters did not record their votes?—I got a paper this morning which will give the information you require. Samuel Benson was one of those who did not record his vote. That man belongs to some of the lay preachers, Mr. Trench's denomination, and he does not take any part for either party. James Caldwell is another. He was in the country, or was on his way from America. Henry Dale is the man we sent for to the quay and we dare not attempt to bring him out.

13845. The Chief Commissioner.—Do you mean to say in consequence of the mob?—Yes, and the man got frightened and would not come out. Mr. Pollixfen sent some one down for him and he would not come out; he was afraid.

13846. Was there a great mob outside the house?—Yes.

13847. Had you a car?—Yes.

13848. And infantry and police?—Yes.

13849. Had you a car for him?—No, sir. He would have had to walk in the centre. John G. Davis is down here, but he voted I see. Mr. Fox is here. I do not think he voted. He is an agent for Lord Palmerston's estate. Mr. Gordon is the manager of the provincial Bank, and would not vote. I see two gentlemen named Hall, William and John, but these gentlemen live in London and were not here. I see then Dr. James Johnston; I thought he voted and wondered why he did not do it. I see Tom Middleton. Well, he is a very old man, and he did not like to interfere with either party. I see four gentlemen from Limerick—the Russells. They did not vote. Mr. Russell was busy with his own arrangements. Then the Rev. Mr. Sheppard did not vote. Mr. Trench is the next gentleman. He too is put down as reverend, but he is not. Mr. Wilds is an officer of pensioners.

13850. As regards any of the other names who did not vote, do you know why they did not vote?—The names of the Roman Catholics?

13851. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Those that are printed in the large type?—Well, I could not tell, sir.

13852. The Chief Commissioner.—Had any of these, to your knowledge, pledged themselves to vote for Major Knox, and were they prevented by threats?—Well, I will just read them over and see. There is one, or two, or three I know here who did not vote, and I heard they were afraid.

13853. Well, just mention their names?—Well, there is one I did all I could to get out, and that is Mark Antony M'Donagh.

13854. He told you he was afraid?—He did, sir. He did not come out. Well, there is another. John M'Guirk told me he was afraid. Their fear was after the sad accident in the morning of Captain King being shot.

13855. He said so himself?—He told me so. I knew these two, but I do not know what caused the others. The last gentleman who appears on the list never takes any part in politics—Dr. Powell.

13856. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—From your knowledge of the constituency is that an accurate list of the Roman Catholics who did not vote?—I should check them with the rate book before I could answer that.

13857. Well, if necessary, we will be able to do that?—I would not say this is accurate, because I see in some of these places persons put down for not having voted who I know did vote. I know Mr. Ormsby voted, and his name is there too.

(The witness withdrew. He handed in a copy of the Sligo Champion of the 1st September, 1868, from which he had been reading the names of the voters referred to in his examination.)

13858. The witness, Mr. Sedley, said—I have been told that Mr. Phibbs spoke of me as having been concerned for Major Knox in regard to some houses. I will give you any information in my power on the subject.

13859. The Chief Commissioner.—Very well.

(The witness again withdrew.)

Robert Stokes re-examined.

Robert Stokes.

13860. The Chief Commissioner.—How long was it before the election that you first spoke to Captain Ethelred Knox about money being wanted by you—about how long?—I think it was four or five days.

13861. What led you first to speak to Captain Knox? Had you applied to anyone else for money?—Never, sir.

13862. Had you applied to anyone else on your own side—on the Conservative side—for money?—I had not.

13863. Then why did you apply to Captain Knox?—Captain Ethelred Knox was introduced to me, and from our conversation he intimated that he would supply the funds.

13864. Who introduced you to Captain Knox?—I think it was the Major introduced me as his friend.

13865. Where were you introduced?—I think at my own door.

13866. Where was it that Captain Ethelred Knox intimated to you, I do not mean by words, but intimated to you that he would supply money?—When he left my own house.

13867. Was it on the occasion of the first interview?—It was the first money he gave me—not the first interview.

13868. When did he first apprize you he would supply money? You remember, you say, being introduced, or do you remember being introduced by Major

ELEVENTH DAY. October 18. Robert Stokes.

Knox?—I cannot say there was a formal introduction, but I knew him as his friend, and I had heard of his name. I do not say there even was what I would call, or what you would call, a formal introduction in any way.

13869. Where was it first, then, was it at your own place or in Leech's house that Captain Ethelred first informed you he had money?—It was in my own place he first gave me money.

13870. What exactly did he say? Did he intimate that more would be ready?—I cannot say he said that, but he left that impression, and whatever I wanted I applied for.

13871. Mr. Barber was examined here—what money did you give him?— Fifty pounds.

13872. In what shape?—A fifty pound note.

13873. On what bank?—The Bank of Ireland.

13874. Where did you give it to Mr. Barber?—In my own house.

13875. Who gave you that £50 Bank of Ireland note?—Captain Ethelred Knox.

13876. And do you remember his giving that as a separate sum of £50?—To the best of my memory he did.

13877. Where was it he gave you that?—If I do not mistake he gave it to me in Leech's house.

13878. Did Captain Ethelred Knox know from you when he gave you that, that it was for Gallagher the livery stable keeper?—He did.

13879. Now you told us that you have not paid the M'Mullens?—Yes, sir.

13880. And you told us that Captain Ethelred Knox informed you you were not to pay the M'Mullens?—He did, sir.

13881. When did he tell you that—how long after the election?—Perhaps it was a week or ten days.

13882. A week or ten days?—Yes, I am not accurate as to the time.

13883. Now if you were not to pay the M'Mullens Captain Ethelred Knox must have known you would have some balance of money in your hands. When he told you not to pay the M'Mullens—just tell exactly where that conversation was and how it came about?—He came down from Dublin and asked me for the balance of the money and I would not give it to him.

13884. Came down from Dublin?—Yes, sir.

13885. Why would you not give it to him?—I could not keep my word with those I promised if I returned the money.

13886. Did he know the balance you had in your hands?—I told him.

13887. How much?—About £100 or more or less.

13888. Where was it he asked you for the balance?—In my own house.

13889. What exactly did he say to you?—As well as I can recollect he told me it was a good deal better to give it up, that there might be a petition and there might be other things going, and it would be better for me to be rid of it, and I thought so myself, but then I looked upon it that my word was at stake with these parties, and if I gave it up I would not get it back again. So I ran the risk in order to keep my word.

13890. What then led to speaking about the M'Mullens?—In telling him.

13891. Did you tell him you had this £100 for the M'Mullens?—He knew for he gave it to me for them.

13892. Did he intimate from what quarter the M'Mullens were to be paid?—He did not.

13893. Had you and he a little difference about whether you were to keep the money or not?—He seemed a little cross but there was no difference.

13894. But he wished to possess the money?—He did, sir.

13895. Had you at the time the very notes he had given you?—I had not, sir.

13896. They were mixed with your own accounts?—Yes, sir.

13897. Did you hear of anyone else being down collecting up the money that was in the hands of trustees like yourself?—None applied to me.

13898. I did not say they did because you dealt with Captain Ethelred Knox; but did anybody else come down to collect the money that was in the hands of trustees?—I can't say.

13899. But according to what you heard—did you hear of any other gentleman coming down from Dublin to collect the money in the hands of trustees?—I cannot say that, I cannot tell.

13900. But do you know who came down from Dublin at that time with Captain Ethelred Knox? What gentleman was with him?—Mr. Grubb was present at it.

13901. Who is Mr. Grubb?—I do not know more than that he was with him.

13902. Did Mr. Grubb say anything at that interview?—I think that he advised me to give it up—that it would be better for me and safer for me.

13903. Do you know Mr. Grubb's Christian name?—I do not, sir.

13904. Was he a Sligo man or a Dublin man?—A Dublin man.

13905. Did Mr. Grubb call upon anyone else to your knowledge or as you heard at the time?—Not to my knowledge.

13906. I do not mean that you were present at all?—No, or that I could say.

13907. Did you hear at that time of anyone else having money similar to yourself in hands?—That I cannot account for.

13908. I do not want you to account for it, but was there anyone similarly situated in the matter to yourself?—I do not.

13909. Why did Mr. Grubb come with Captain Ethelred Knox?—I could not answer that question why he came.

13910. Was he here at the time of the election?—He was.

13911. What was he doing?—An assistant I suppose.

13912. Assisting Captain Ethelred. Did you ever see him in Ethelred's room?—Never.

13913. Did Mr. Grubb ever call upon you?—Often.

13914. Did you give him the list, or tell him about the men you had secured?—To the best of my memory I did.

13915. Who were they?—The two M'Mullens, the four Ryans, Gallagher, and Henderson. I do not say I told him all, but I told him about the M'Mullens.

13916. You told him about the M'Mullens?—Yes, sir.

13917. Could he have been the man who gave the address to Mr. Kavanagh?—I do not think he was; I am not certain upon it.

13918. Mr. Hignell is positive he did not give that address?—I will not say now who is right and who is wrong. If he be right some other man must have given that address to get the M'Mullens away.

13919. Did Captain Ethelred Knox intimate to you on that occasion that he asked you for the balance in your hands, that he was calling upon any other people?—No, sir.

13920. How long was he in Sligo on that occasion?—Perhaps four or five hours, or six hours.

13921. Did he go back to Dublin the same day he came?—I believe he did.

13922. Is there any way you could fix that date which you say is ten days after the election?—I could not swear.

13923. There is no way of your fixing it now?—There is none.

13924. Did you see that Mr. Grubb since?—I saw him at the cattle show in Dublin, accidentally, in the yard.

13925. Were you speaking about the election?—We were at a stall.

13926. Did you speak about the money in your hands?—I might have done so, but I entirely forget what occurred.

13927. Which cattle show do you mean?—Was it last summer, or was it the horse show?—The general cattle show, not this summer, but the summer after the election.

Robert Stokes.

13928. The election was in November, 1868, and there has been only one general cattle show in Dublin since, and that was in April. Was it after the petition?—I am at a loss for that. I do not know whether before or after the petition.

13929. Was Mr. Grubb at Carrick?—He was, sir.

13930. Were you speaking to him there?—I was.

13931. What were you talking to him there about?—I met him in the Court-house.

13932. Was he one of the gentlemen that made the observation about your evidence?—I do not think he was.

13933. Where was Mr. Grubb at the time of the election when you saw him, and spoke to him about these people?—I think it was in my own house.

13934. Used he to call upon you?—He used.

13935. Did he ever bring a letter to you from Major Ethelred Knox?—I do not recollect that he did.

13936. Who used to bring messages to you from him?—There was no one between him and I.

13937. Did you call upon him every day?—Every day I had any success to mention.

13938. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—What is Mr. Grubb?—I do not know, sir.

13939. Do you know where he lives?—I do not.

13940. The Chief Commissioner.—Did anyone ever write to you about this money in your hands?—No one.

13941. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Was there anybody else except Mr. Grubb who was aware of Captain Ethelred Knox's transactions?—No, sir, not that I recollect.

13942. You told us something about a brief of your evidence at the trial at Carrick, that you say could not be produced—do you mention distinctly what that transaction was, and who made the observation?—Which transaction?

The Chief Commissioner.—Stand down for the present.

(The witness withdrew.)

Charles Sedley.

Charles Sedley re-examined. He made the following statement:—

13943. The only thing I remember in relation to property purchased by Major Knox was this. Mr. O'Connor of the Mall, and his son, were made bankrupts, and they had some interest in land near Sligo, and I think it was a tenancy from year to year. They were made bankrupts in November, 1868, and their interest in the property was sold after the election in Sligo, and Mr. John O'Connor, son of the elder bankrupt, bought it.

13944. The Chief Commissioner.—I do not trouble you with any purchase after the election?—The only other matter I know of was an arrangement with a Mr. Leech. I believe the arrangement was previous to the election, but I was not acting for Major Knox previous to the arrangement. On the contrary, I had to bring some pressure to bear upon him to carry out the arrangement. A petition was presented in the Landed Estates Court, and I was only concerned for Mr. Leech in connexion with it.

13945. We have nothing to do with this, but it was mentioned that it was a mystery why you left town. Did you hear that observation made?—I did not, sir. I was concerned in a very heavy will case for the friends of Captain M'Manus, who left large property near Ballysodare. I was under an order of the Court of Chancery, to deliver up leases and documents connected with that will case, and it was of importance for me to know the contents of them, and as I was determined not to let the election interfere with my private business, I left town and took memoranda of these leases in the will suit, and they turned to be of the greatest importance, and if they had gone into Mr. Brett's hands without my seeing them, it would have been a great loss.

Mr. Samuel H. Sloane.

Mr. Samuel H. Sloane sworn and examined.

13946. The Chief Commissioner.—What is your occupation?—I am connected with the press, and have been for years.

13947. Have you been connected with the Irish Times?—Yes.

13948. In what capacity?—As sub-editor; I am not now connected with the Irish Times.

13949. Were you at the time of the election?—I was.

13950. During the election did you know of any Sligo men being in Dublin?—Oh yes, I did. I saw them.

13951. Name them?—There was a Mr. Petit I saw in Dublin.

13952. Anyone else?—And I saw the man called Brennan.

13953. Do you know anything of the M'Mullens?—I heard of them, but I do not know anything personally of them.

13954. You heard they were in Dublin?—I did.

13955. From whom?—From a conversation between Mr. Hignell and Mr. Kavanagh.

13956. What was that conversation?—Well, it had some reference to lodgings not being suitable in Mr. Kavanagh's house, and that he had changed them elsewhere.

13957. Did you know then they were voters?—I did not, but I understood they were.

13958. That is what I mean?—Yes.

13959. Did you hear about these men being removed to Clitheroe in England?—No, not till it came out at this inquiry.

13960. Now, what others did you know anything about—did you know anything about Harrison being in Dublin?—I did not.

13961. What other Sligo men did you see?—There was a Mr. Cherry that I think I saw in Dublin.

13962. At the time of the election?—Before the election.

13963. Had you any conversation with him on election business?—I had not.

13964. Or he in your presence?—No; he was conversing with Major Knox, but I did not hear the conversation.

13965. Any other Sligo voter?—Well, I am not aware of any other that I recollect.

13966. Do you know of any of the payments made to any of the Sligo voters in Dublin?—Yes, I believe that payments were made.

13967. Tell what you know—what you believe?—Well, I heard that Mr. Hignell was in the habit of regularly paying those who were in Dublin and in England.

13968. Who told you that?—Well, it was from Mr. Hignell himself I heard it in the course of conversation.

13969. Did you understand from Mr. Hignell how many he was in the habit of paying for?—No, I did not; but I understood there was a number, because he had to go to different parts of the city, as I understood, where these people were stopping.

13970. Did you so understand from Mr. Hignell himself?—Yes, I did.

13971. About how many did you understand from him—I mean infer from what he told you—he was in the habit of paying for in this way?—Well, I really

ELEVENTH DAY.
October 18.
Mr. Samuel H. Sloane.

did not form an opinion as to the number, but I thought there might be five or six. I formed no opinion upon that.

13972. Did Hignell inform you that he himself was making weekly payments for those men?—I understood from him at certain times, that he was going to pay these people, or settle their accounts in the lodgings in which they were.

13973. About how long was that going on—I presume the way this came to your knowledge was when he would be leaving the office, you would understand from him the business he was going out upon?—Quite so. He was coming very often in contact with me in the evenings after I came into the office, and I heard it from him.

13974. You were sub-editor?—Yes.

13975. What hour of the day was it your duty to go into the office at?—About half-past five I generally came to the office, and I did not leave until an early, or rather a late hour, in the morning—generally four o'clock.

13976. Getting out the paper?—Yes.

13977. It was your duty to see it out?—Yes.

13978. Now, at what time did Mr. Hignell then leave the office according to his business?—I think he went to bed about nine o'clock.

13979. Then you, of course, would see him constantly between five and nine o'clock?—Oh, yes, and sometimes later.

13980. Used he have to leave the office, and go away, as you understood, to make these payments?—I understood he went away for that purpose on some occasions.

13981. About how long was that going on—how many weeks or months from the time of the election?—Oh, I should say it was going on to my knowledge about a couple of months, or, perhaps, more.

13982. Did you understand from Mr. Hignell at any time, how much was paid?—No, I did not. I never understood that.

13983. Did you hear from him at all the names of the people, or was it known in the office from conversation?—Well, I think it was not known in the office generally, except by himself, and, perhaps, a few others.

13984. Did you hear, or learn the names of the people?—I did not, beyond what I have told you.

13985. Do you know nothing at all about the sending of the M'Mullens to England?—Nothing whatever.

13986. Were you ever in M'Dowell's house?—I think I have been once in it.

13987. Did you not know that they were there?—Oh no.

13988. That one of them was there for seven months nearly?—I understood they were in Henry-street, but I did not know where.

13989. How did you understand?—Because I heard a convesation between Mr. Kavanagh and Mr. Hignell, and I understood from that conversation that it was in Henry-street they were. I did not know exactly the place.

13990. Were you ever in Mr. Kavanagh's house?—Never.

13991. Do you know Mr. Hughes' of Queen-street?—Yes.

13992. Did you know Harrison was in that house?—I heard it. I did not know it personally.

13993. Did you hear Harrison's name at that time?—Yes, I did; I heard his name mentioned.

13994. By whom?—Well, some person in the office.

13995. Was it mentioned by Hignell?—Well I am not absolutely certain, but I should say it was.

13996. Had you anything to say to the management of these voters?—Oh nothing whatever.

13997. Do you know anything of the £9 proved by M'Dowell to have been sent to him in Henry-street?—Nothing whatever.

13998. Do you know anything as regards any individual sum paid to any Sligo voters—or the short way to put it is—can you give us information or suggest the name of a single individual that you believe can give us information on the subject?—I believe Brennan was regularly paid.

13999. That is Tom Brennan. How much did you understand he was paid?—Well I believe he sometimes got £2 and sometimes £3, perhaps more, according to the statements I heard.

14000. Whose statements?—Mr. Hignell frequently stated he was getting a great deal too much money—something to that effect.

14001. A great deal too much money?—Yes.

14002. Was he constantly about the office?—Very constantly.

14003. Was he pestering for money?—Subsequent to the election—not so much that I am aware of as before it.

14004. It is subsequent to the election that I refer to. I am not asking about what he was doing in Sligo at all?—Oh yes, and I heard him complain that he did not get sufficient money and get it sufficiently often.

14005. Complain to whom?—He stated the matter to myself.

14006. Did you ever hear him complain to Mr. Hignell?—No, I never have. On one occasion he came upstairs at a late hour of the night having had a car out all day, and he had not money to pay for it, and he was going about the office in the ordinary way, rather unpleasantly, and I spoke to Mr. Hignell—in fact awoke him out of bed—and he sent out payment for the car—eight shillings, I believe.

14007. Eight shillings?—Yes, which I handed to Brennan.

14008. Do you mean eight shillings for a car for one day's car hire in Dublin?—So it was charged, for the man was at the door and would not leave the place until he was paid.

14009. What was Brennan doing driving about in Dublin, incurring a bill of eight shillings on an outside car?—I really could not tell. I don't know.

14010. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—When these payments were being made by Mr. Hignell who had charge of the cash in the office?—Captain Ethelred Knox I understood had always the cash in the office.

14011. Would it have been the course of the office for Mr. Hignell to apply to Captain Ethelred Knox for cash for disbursement?—Yes, quite so.

14012. Were you aware of Mr. Hignell having applied to Captain Ethelred Knox for money for this purpose?—Well, not to an absolute certainty. I understood that that was the course, but nothing beyond that.

14013. You understood that?—Yes, I understood that always.

14014. Were there any grounds for coming to that conclusion or having that impression on your mind?—It was through Captain Ethelred Knox all the salaries were paid to the different officers in the house, and to those connected with the machinery department. He paid all bills, and went to the bank, and drew the money, and lodged the money. I understood it would be through him the money would come. That is my ground.

14015. The Chief Commissioner.—Had you any quarrel with Major Knox?—Myself, sir.

14016. Yes?—Oh, yes, very frequently, it's of common occurrence, sir, there.

14017. I don't mean that—when did you leave the office?—On the 11th of July.

14018. Last?—Yes; I was there from January, 1866.

14019. Till the 11th of July 1869?—Yes.

14020. And the whole of that time were you sub-editor?—The whole of that time.

14021. Was that the first time you were sub-editor?—Well, I was editor before. I was never sub-editor. It was on a provincial paper, though, the Nenagh Guardian.

14022. Did you leave the Irish Times in consequence of any quarrel?—Yes.

14023. Was it a quarrel with Major Knox personally?—Oh, it was with Major Knox personally.

14024. Do you recollect the time of the conversation between Mr. Hignell and Mr. Kavanagh that you have mentioned?—Well, it was some time previous to the election, but I could not say when.

14025. Some time previous to the election—are you certain of that?—The conversation about the M'Mullens?

14026. About the M'Mullens — when Kavanagh spoke about his lodgings being unsuitable for them?—It was some time about that, but I am not quite sure. I think it was subsequently.

14027. About the time of the election?—Something about that.

14028. Could you recollect the particulars of that conversation—where did it take place?—It took place in a house named Revel's—a public-house—not far from the Irish Times, in the same street.

14029. Is that a corner house?—It is a corner house.

14030. I suppose they were drinking?—They were.

14031. And you were drinking with them?—Yes.

14032. Try and give us any particulars about that conversation?—Well, I really did not pay more attention than just listening to the facts mentioned, but I heard this——

14033. Mr. Kavanagh mentioned that his lodgings were unsuitable?—That those people, I think, had come to his house, and that he was either full then or that his lodgings were unsuitable for them, or they were not suitable to him, and that he sent them to Henry-street.

14034. Did Mr. Hignell make any observation to that?—I believe he did.

14035. What was it?—He said it would be well to take care of them, or something to that effect.

14036. Did you infer from Mr. Hignell's manner that he was aware that the M'Mullens had come to Dublin?—Oh, I believe, certainly he was.

14037. Aware of the fact?—Oh, certainly.

14038. Before this conversation?—I don't know, sir.

14039. I mean whether when Kavanagh mentioned this circumstance to Hignell Hignell for the first time heard that the M'Mullens had come to Dublin?—It appeared to me he understood it—that was the inference I would draw at the time, perhaps.

14040. Could you give us the names of any person in the Irish Times office who were aware of these payments being made by Mr. Hignell to those various persons?—Oh, Major Knox was aware of the payments being made to Brennan.

14041. What other persons were aware of it?—Well, I think I can't speak absolutely about anyone else, but I know that he was aware of it.

14042. How do you know?—Because he told me himself.

14043. Major Knox?—Major Knox himself told me that Brennan—I paid 6*s*. on a similar occasion to the one that I have mentioned, when the man came upstairs at night, thinking it would be reimbursed or given back to me, as had been done before. When I asked for the 6*s*. afterwards there was some objection, and I spoke to Major Knox himself, and he told Mr. Hignell in my presence, in the front office, that he could reimburse this 6*s*. to me out of Brennan's next payment.

14044. Was Brennan in the employment of the office at that time?—No.

14045. Mr. Hignell and yourself and Major Knox were present at that conversation?—Yes.

14046. Anybody else?—Well, there were others just about us in the office. It was outside the door of the front office in the lower part of the commercial department.

14047. Do you recollect when that conversation took place?—I am afraid I could not fix the day. It was after the election a good while.

14048. Was it after the petition, do you know?—Yes; I really think it was.

14049. Is that the only circumstance from which you infer that Major Knox was aware of the payments being made to Brennan?—Yes; that is the only direct statement that I heard him make on the subject.

14050. Do you recollect the names of any other persons whom you believe to have been aware of the payments?—I should say Captain Ethelred Knox was aware of them all.

14051. But I mean other persons in the office?—There was a night clerk there that I understand made up the accounts of the different payments made to the different parties.

14052. What is his name?—Thomas.

14053. Is he in the Irish Times now?—I am not aware.

14054. Have you seen him lately?—I have not seen him lately.

14055. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Do you know where he lives?—No, sir; I do not.

14056. Anybody else besides Thomas?—No.

14057. That you have any reason to believe knows—I don't want mere guess work—I want you to restrict yourself to absolute knowledge?—No, I don't think I could mention any other.

14058. Do you know a person called Grubb in the Irish Times' office?—No.

14059. Was there no such person there in your time?—Not that I was aware of. I knew several other Sligo young men that were in the Irish Times office. There was Mr. Petit, son of the man I saw here. He is still in the office. There was M'Gouldrick.

14060. Is he a son of the man called M'Gouldrick who lives here?—I believe so; yes, he is.

14061. Any other names who were Sligo people?—There was Mr. Wilson who is still there I understand.

14062. Is he a young man?—He is an old man.

14063. Do you know the Christian names of these three that you have mentioned?—I do not know the Christian names of one of them. There was another called Harper. He is not now in the Irish Times.

14064. Do you know where he is?—He has got some civil service appointment in the Inland Revenue or Post Office, or something.

15065. Do you know his Christian name?—I think it is John; I am not sure.

14066. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Mr. Sloane, you are bound to tell us the whole truth, and I only remind you of that in order that if there be anything you are aware of in reference to Major Knox's connexion with the Sligo contest you may tell us?—Oh, certainly I would.

14067. Is there anything now in connexion with Major Knox's Sligo contest that you are aware of that would assist us in this inquiry?—Well, I really don't see that I know any particular further than I have stated; unless you may put to me any question that, perhaps, might raise them in my mind; that might draw up something to my mind. I don't recollect at the present time.

14068. The Chief Commissioner.—Are you aware, for example, or can you give us any information about any sums of money going down to Sligo?—Well, I heard from Mr. Hignell on one occasion that he took a certain sum of money down to Sligo.

14069. How much?—I think £100.

14070. When did Hignell tell you that?—It was a considerable time previous to the election. He came down here specially.

14071. What was that money for?—I could not tell.

14072. Was that for the regatta?—It may have been.

14073. Or for the revision?—I don't know.

14074. Did Hignell ever tell you he took down any other money?—Well, I think I have heard it once or twice from him.

14075. Did you hear it after the election?—Not after the election.

14076. What other sums did you hear that he took

ELEVENTH DAY.
October 18.
Mr. Samuel H. Sloane.

down?—I did not hear of any special sum after, except the one I have mentioned. I think it was two £50 notes.

14077. For whom were the two fifties?—I really do not know.

14078. In the course of business, if Mr. Hignell got that money in the Irish Times office would it appear in any account given or in the books?—I think it would not. It would not appear, I think, under that head, because——

14079. Would it appear as given by Captain Ethelred Knox, the manager, to Mr. Hignell?—I think it would not.

14080. Why?—Because, in the book containing the salaries where each person employed in the office signs his name, I have seen several sums after Mr. Hignell's name. He simply signs his name, and then I saw several sums, £2, £1 18*s.*, and so forth following each other down, while the simple signature of the others was all that was there; and what these sums were for was not specified in the book.

14081. I am just asking you from what I know of bookkeeping in an office like the Times, whether whatever sum the manager gave to anyone for any purpose he would of course put down the name of the person to whom he gave the sum?—I am only speaking about the salaries paid to the officers of the establishment. I have no knowledge whatever of other books.

14082. Were these sums to Mr. Hignell, these sums of £1 18*s.*, &c.?—Oh yes. For instance, my name and some other names following it, and then, perhaps, Mr. Hignell's with a number of items entered underneath his name.

14083. Which could not be for his salary?—Oh no; I believe not.

14084. That is you believe according to the course of business?—No.

14085. Was that a usual occurrence before the election time in the Irish Times office?—I think I saw it both before and after the election.

14086. How long before the election?—I saw it some months I think before it.

14087. Do you remember when this commenced?—I do not. I could not positively specify the time.

14088. And do you say all the other entries in that book which you saw, would be proper entries of salaries?—I think so, or for wages.

14089. Had Mr. Hignell the disbursement of any of what is commonly called the office petty cash?—Well, I think he did do something of the kind.

14090. Might they have been for this?—I could not say.

14091. You know what I mean. In a great office like the Irish Times—the petty cash?—They might be for a purpose of that kind, sir.

14092. For what?—They might be for paying correspondents that supplied information specially to the paper. That just strikes me now, Mr. Hignell looked after these things generally.

14093. Hignell told you of the two fifties?—I mean by the £100 the two fifties.

14094. Do you know of anyone else having brought or was said to have brought down money to Sligo?—No, I am not aware. I don't know of anyone else.

14095. Can you give any information as to any of the houses at which these voters were supposed by you to be staying from Hignell stating that he was going to pay them?—Well, I heard there was one—Mr. Hughes. I heard some voters were there. I don't know of any others except those that were mentioned in Henry-street.

14096. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—May I ask you were the notes that you received in payment of your salary of the Bank of Ireland or of any other bank?—Different at different times, sometimes they were Bank of Ireland notes, sometimes others, and sometimes gold. There is a matter I have been just thinking of. I saw frequently in this Commission inquiry about where Captain Ethelred Knox is. It is right to mention that I was told last night by Mr. Barnardo, of Mary-street, that he met him on Tuesday last in London, in company with a reporter on the Standard, Mr. Hartford, who used to be on the Dublin press.

14097. Who told you that?—Mr. Barnardo of Mary-street. I think the son of the furrier.

14098. What is his Christian name?—I don't know.

14099. In company with whom did you say?—Mr. Hartford, formerly a reporter on the Dublin press and now on the London Standard.

14100. What's his Christian name?—Robert.

14101. Is he a Kilkenny man?—He is a Dublin man.

14102. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—When did you meet Mr. Barnardo?—On Friday night.

14103. Friday night last?—Friday night last.

14104. The Chief Commissioner.—How did Mr. Barnardo happen to know this—who did he say told him?—Mr. Barnardo when we met said he had seen a friend of mine—knowing I was in the Irish Times office—that he was very much surprised to see him at the Alhambra, or some other place, with Mr. Hartford.

14105. Did he name the Alhambra as the place?—He did. He met him there once. He met Captain Ethelred Knox there once.

14106. In company with Mr. Hartford?—Yes.

14107. On what day?—On Wednesday.

14108. Wednesday last?—Yes. He saw him also on Tuesday besides, he said, at some other place.

14109. A place of public amusement like the Alhambra?—I think so.

14110. Did Mr. Barnardo tell you he himself saw him?—He did.

14111. Is that the Mr. Barnardo who keeps the shop in Mary-street?—Yes.

14112. I think he also keeps a shop in Dame-street?—Well, I think he is the son. He is a young man.

14113. Does his father keep both shops?—I am not aware of any other.

14114. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—This was on Friday last that you say you met Mr. Barnardo?—Yes.

14115. Was it in the street?—In the street.

14116. Was it a merely incidental conversation?—Just merely the observation that he saw a friend of mine in London before he came over.

14117. Did neither of you know at the time that Captain Ethelred Knox's presence was required here?—I knew it, because I had been reading it in the papers. I knew it at that time, and before that, but I don't think the other knew anything about it when he made the observation.

14118. Did you tell him then that Captain Knox was wanting here?—I did.

14119. Did he say he had been speaking to Captain Knox?—He did not say that. He said he met him and seemed to be surprised to see him.

14120. Did you ask him whether he knew where Captain Knox was now?—I did.

14121. What answer did you get?—Well, he told me the name of the hotel—I am afraid I forget it now—where he believed he was stopping.

14122. Try and recollect it?—I will recollect it in a minute.

14123. The Chief Commissioner.—Was it the Charing-cross?—No.

14124. Westminster Palace?—No.

14125. The Langham?—That's the one.

14126. Would you know the Langham yourself?—I would not. I was never in it.

14127. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Did Mr. Barnardo say how he found out where Captain Knox was stopping?—I asked him.

14128. But did he give you any explanation of how he found it out?—He did not—no explanation whatever. He said he believed he was there. He mentioned some other place where he said he met him also on Tuesday, and whether they had a conversation or not I don't know; but he believed it was at that hotel he was stopping.

14129. Was he a friend of Captain Knox, this Mr.

Mr. Samuel H. Sloane.

Barnardo?—Well, he does business in the Irish Times office.

14130. The Chief Commissioner.—That is, he has a business connexion with the office?—Yes, I saw Mr. Barnardo there often myself.

14131. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Was anything said by Mr. Barnardo as to the time Captain Knox was likely to remain in London?—Nothing whatever.

14132. Was anything at all said with regard to his movements?—Nothing but what I told you. There is another place he said he met him on Tuesday, but I forget where it was.

14133. The Chief Commissioner.—A place of public amusement?—Yes.

14134. Was it any of the theatres?—No, none of the theatres. It was some place like the Alhambra, I suspect.

14135. Is there any other information, Mr. Sloane, that you can give us?—No, sir, there is nothing more that I think I can give you. I just wish to state before I go down that I neither directly nor indirectly, as has been insinuated in Dublin, asked to be summoned on this inquiry.

14136. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Who insinuated it?—I heard it was insinuated in a conversation between Mr. Hignell and some other parties at that same public house that I have already mentioned.

14137. Between what other parties and Mr. Hignell?—I don't know at present, but I believe there was a number of persons there.

14138. The Chief Commissioner.—Did Mr. Hignell insinuate that?—I heard it stated by another person.

14139. Who told you that Mr. Hignell said so?—Mr. John Hill.

14140. Who is he?—He is a reporter—the reporter of the Evening Mail; and he said that he understood from the conversation that such was insinuated.

14141. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Your being summoned, Mr. Sloane, is entirely from your name transpiring in the evidence of one of the witnesses?—I did not know that.

14142. The Chief Commissioner.—Your name has been mentioned here in the sworn evidence, and I think you had better not leave town to-morrow, unless pressed by business?—I have not been well for some time, and I came down under great difficulties. However I dare say I shall be well enough here.

(The witness retired.)

The court was adjourned till eleven o'clock the following morning.

TWELFTH DAY.

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 19, 1869.

The Commissioners sat at eleven o'clock.

14143. William Young, who had been examined on a previous day, appeared on the witness table, and said—Would you allow me to state a matter that I forgot to mention the last day I was here?

14144. The Chief Commissioner.—Certainly; make any statement in reference to your evidence that you wish.

14145. Witness.—Mr. Williams, the magistrate, came to me and asked me would I interfere with Watt Henderson. I said I didn't know of any way that I could manage him but one, and that was to give me the money for him; and I said if he didn't vote for the party I would give back the money.

14146. Did Mr. Williams refuse to have anything to say to bribing him?—Well, he didn't give me any money at all; he gave me no money.

14147. You told Mr. Williams that the only way of managing Henderson was to give money to him?—Yes, that was what I thought.

14148. Had Mr. Williams refused to have anything to do with giving Henderson money?—It was in the Express paper that I myself asked money from Mr. Williams. I never asked him for a penny. Mr. Williams spoke to me in my own house to prevail on Henderson to vote for Major Knox. I said I knew but the one way to manage him.

14149. And that was to lodge the money?—Exactly.

14150. You said you would hold the money for him, and that in case Henderson didn't vote you would give it back?—Yes, I said I was badly treated in this thing about landlord and tenant. I had a house for £14 a year, and John Lyons wrote to my landlord to say that he would give £100 over my head for it. I said that as my landlord was an honorable man, I would offer him £50 to let me as I was. He took it, and let me as I was. I can't recollect anything more at present. Watt Henderson would be the best man to bring up here—he could tell the discourse as it took place.

John Young.

John Young next appeared on the table.

14151. The Chief Commissioner.—Have you any evidence to give yourself?—Watt Henderson told me that he was dealing with Mr. Williams about getting the money for him, that Mr. Williams had £20, and that he would give it to him after the election. I said Mr. Williams would treat him as he did another party and give but £10. I said I thought that Stokes and Gethins would be safe people to have the money, and this very money he gave to Stokes.

14152. Have you heard of any other voters who you believe got money?—No. My father told me he had a conversation with Mr. Williams, and that Mr. Williams said there were five or six Roman Catholics who were going away.

14153. Can you give the names of any of them?—Peter Harrison was one of them.

14154. Do you know the names of any of the others?—I don't.

Sergeant Martin Boyle.

Sergeant Martin Boyle sworn and examined.

14155. The Chief Commissioner.—What position do you hold?—I am sergeant of the permanent staff of the Sligo Rifles.

14156. How long have you been sergeant?—Nearly fifteen years—I will be fifteen years next May, and twenty-five years in the service of the regular army.

14157. In what regiment were you?—In the 97th.

14158. Are you an elector of the borough of Sligo?—I am.

14159. How long have you been an elector?—Since the last Reform Bill.

14160. Did you ever vote at any previous election?—Never.

14161. Whom did you vote for at the last election?—For Major Knox.

14162. Are you a Roman Catholic?—I am.

14163. Did you vote for Major Knox honestly and conscientiously, because you believed him to be the best candidate?—I did.

14164. Was there any influence brought to bear on you to make you vote for him?—None whatever.

14165. Before the election did you hear his lordship,

TWELFTH DAY.
October 19.
Sergeant Martin Boyle.

the Bishop, address the people on the subject of the election?—I did.

14166. What day was it you heard him?—On Sunday, the 15th November, four days before the election.

14167. Were you in the parish church on that Sunday?—The staff attend that church.

14168. State to the Court what you heard his lordship say?—Should any of the Roman Catholic party vote for the Tory candidate, they would be considered as rotten branches and lopped off; and if a defeat should arise, the crushing weight of the defeat should come down on those who voted for Major Knox, or for the ascendancy candidate.

14169. Did you hear anything said by the Bishop about any place into which the Roman Catholic voters should be put?—The Roman Catholic voters who voted for Major Knox were to be separated from the rest of the congregation and put in the porch—that is, under the stairs.

14170. Did you hear the Bishop say that?—I did.

14171. Are you a married man?—I am.

14172. Was your wife with you at the parish church on that Sunday?—She wasn't; she goes to the Friary generally.

14173. Did you yourself afterwards receive any message in reference to this matter—were you told to go anywhere?—In consequence of having voted for Major Knox I obtained written leave from my commanding officer to attend the Friary church until further orders. On the first Sunday I attended it I was turned out. This is a copy of the report I sent to my commanding officer of the circumstances. [Copy of report handed in.]

14174. Before you obtained the order to go to the Friary church had it been one of the regulations of the staff that the Roman Catholic members of it should attend service at the parish church?—Decidedly.

14175. Is that by orders?—Yes, by the orders of the commanding officer, Captain Stronge.

14176. Is he the Adjutant?—He is.

14177. How many on the staff?—Sometimes there are more and sometimes less.

14178. When did you get the order for permission to attend mass at the Friary?—On the 24th November—you will observe it by that paper.

14179. Did you attend or go to mass on the 29th, to the Friary?—I did.

14180. Before we go to that, did you attend mass the first Sunday after the election?—I did. I am obliged to attend mass every Sunday.

14181. Where did you attend mass on that Sunday?—At the parish church.

14182. Did anything occur on that day while you were at mass?—Yes; that was the day on which the Roman Catholic supporters of Major Knox were sentenced to the place under the stairs.

14183. Was it the Sunday after the election that that took place?—It was, the first Sunday after the election.

14184. What you describe as what the bishop has said after the election?—The first statement was made on the 15th November—the Sunday before the election; the second part was said on the Sunday after the election.

14185. You got permission on the 24th to attend the Friary?—I did.

14186. Did you go to mass on the 29th, the following Sunday, to the Friary?—I did.

14187. About what hour was it when you went there?—About eleven o'clock, I should say.

14188. State what occurred while you were at the Friary?—On Sunday, the 29th, I was in the Friary at my devotions, kneeling with a prayer book open in my hand—I was about a quarter of an hour there, when the Rev. Mr. Hibbits came up towards me, and said, in a very angry tone, apparently, "Where is this man?" A man that sat in front of me immediately pointed me out, and said "Here he is." The Friar then ordered me in a very peremptory tone to get up, and leave the place, and go outside. I got up accordingly, and made no reply; in fact I hadn't the power of replying to him, I was so thunderstruck at being turned out of a place of worship. It was a very wet day, I didn't remain outside, but went home. When divine service in the Protestant church was over, I reported the matter to the Sergeant-major, but he wouldn't deal with the case, and sent me to Captain Stronge. I went to Captain Stronge, and furnished him with a report of the circumstrnces, of which you have the copy.

14189. Did you hear mass on that Sunday?—I didn't. Mass was not begun at the time—they were about commencing mass.

14190. What sort was the weather that day?—It was very wet.

14191. Then, I suppose you didn't remain outside, but went home?—I didn't remain outside, I went home. It was the day before the county election, and there were a great many of the constabulary in town at the time. I suppose I would not be allowed into the church at all but that I was so much dressed like a constable.

14192. How was it known that you were inside?—I don't know. I suppose some one gave information that I was inside, Rev. Mr. Hibbits then came and ordered me out.

14193. Were any of your family with you on that occasion?—No, for when I was going out from my house I suspected that matters weren't altogether smooth on the surface; and I said to Mrs. Boyle if all is right you can go to next mass. I came home, and I said to her that I was turned out of the church.

14194. Didn't your family attend mass that day?—I can't say, I don't think they did.

14195. Did anything of the same kind afterwards occur?—No, because I went to Captain Stronge and requested of him permission to remain away, and say my prayers at home.

14196. Did you attend divine service after that?—Not for five or six months.

14197. Did any of your family?—I think they did, occasionally.

14198. Besides that, was there any injury done to your house?—My house was broken when I came to it.

14199. On what day was that?—On the morning of the polling day, or about midnight.

14200. Describe the damage done to your house?—The whole front of my house was broken, the door was knocked down, and the parlour windows were broken in.

14201. It was only with stones that the windows were broken?—That's all. There was damage done to the front bedroom. I was in Mrs. Hall's at the time when the mob came and attacked my place; but my wife and daughter had to climb over a wall, and had to take refuge in the Lungy field from twelve till four o'clock in the morning.

14202. This is the order you got from Captain Stronge?—That is the written leave I got from him, and it is signed by the Sergeant-major.

14203. Were you in Mrs. Hall's house?—I was.

14204. How long were you there?—I was there from Tuesday at four o'clock until the night after the polling.

14205. Did you pay her fifteen shillings for your board and lodging?—I did.

14206. Did you pay that out of your own pocket?—I did.

14207. Do you expect to be repaid that money?—I don't.

14208. Do you know of any voters being turned out of the Roman Catholic churches, but yourself?—I heard of a man named O'Conner, on the Mall, but I didn't see it. I heard he was turned out of the Friary church on the same Sunday that I was.

14209. What is O'Connor's Christian name?—Pat.

14210. Do you know of any other Roman Catholic who is an elector, being turned out?—I heard that Clancy's money was handed back to him, and that he walked away.

14211. What Clancy is that?—He was examined here.

14212. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Is it Pat or Charles Clancy?—Pat.

14213. The Chief Commissioner.—Anyone else that you remember?—No others that I know of.

14214. Had you paid the usual money for your place in the chapel?—I did.

14215. Was that money returned to you?—It wasn't. I didn't wait to demand it, or ask for it.

14216. What do you usually give for your seat in the church?—Sometimes I give silver, either a sixpence or a threepenny piece.

14217. You say you were twenty-five years in the Queen's service?—Yes, twenty-one regular years, and four years under age; and nearly fifteen years on the staff.

14218. What medal is that I see?—It is for long service and good conduct.

14219. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Was that the first occasion—the 15th November, on which the bishop said if any of the Roman Catholic voters should vote for Major Knox or the Tory candidate, they would be considered as rotten branches and lopped off?—It was.

14220. What was said on the following Sunday, the 22nd?—A place was pointed out for them to go there, and they were told that they weren't to associate with the rest of the congregation.

14221. Who pointed out the place?—I don't know. I didn't go there. Being a military man, I wouldn't give them the chance of degrading me so far as to stand in the porch for them.

14222. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Were you canvassed for Captain Flanagan by anyone?—I was.

14223. By whom?—By the Rev. Mr. Morris and Captain Flanagan himself.

14224. Did the Rev. Mr. Morris use any threats—I mean ecclesiastical threats—when he canvassed you, as to what would be done to you in case you didn't vote for Captain Flanagan?—No. He introduced Captain Flanagan as a military friend, and he asked me if I'd vote for him. I said I had promised Major Knox to vote for him, and that I intended to carry out my promise.

14225. Tell me who were the officiating priests on the Sunday before, and on the Sunday after the election, when these two declarations were made?—It is so long ago now that I can't remember. I disremember who it was—it is nearly twelve months ago now.

14226. Had you any conversation with the Rev. Mr. Morris or with any other clergyman, since you were turned out of the Friary, on the subject of your vote?—I had not; but my commanding officer called at the Presbytery to demand an explanation as to why I was turned out.

14227. Had you yourself any conversation with any of the clergymen on the subject?—I had not. I would beg to say that in the paper I saw in your hand yesterday—the Champion—the names of the Roman Catholic electors who voted for Major Knox were published in large print.

14228. Do you know, or did you hear, of any other Roman Catholic who voted for Major Knox, and who did kneel outside the chapel in consequence, either at the parish church or the Friary?—I can't say.

Mr. John Dignan M'Dermott sworn and examined.

14229. The Chief Commissioner.—I believe you were here at the last election between Major Knox and Captain Flanagan?—I was.

14230. What position did you then occupy?—I was conducting agent for Captain Flanagan.

14231. When were you retained?—I was retained by letter from Captain Flanagan some weeks before the election—the exact date I don't now know.

14232. Before the election?—Yes, and before he commenced his canvass. He said he wished me to come.

14233. Can you give us an idea of what the expenses of the election on the Liberal side were?—I couldn't give you the remotest idea. I had nothing to do with the election expenses.

14234. Who was appointed the expense agent?—Mr. John P. Treston, solicitor, was appointed agent for expenses.

14235. Do you remember making out a list of the electors?—No. I never did.

14236. Did you make out a list for your own assistance?—I didn't. There was a list of the electors kept by Mr. O'Loghlen; but I myself never made out any list. Mr. O'Loghlen was brother-in-law to Captain Flanagan, and he took an interest in the matter. I was only made acquainted with it so far as classifying the electors into Protestant, and Catholic, and doubtful.

14237. That would be a very singular list—Protestant, Catholic, and doubtful?—Yes. The original intention was to see what the number of Catholics was—it was assumed that they would all vote for Captain Flanagan, but it was found that, notwithstanding their religion, some of them wouldn't vote at all.

14238. Did you not take any part in any discussion about the expenses of the election?—None, whatever. I merely retained two solicitors, Mr. James M'Niffe, and Mr. William Harkin. I took no further part in it.

14239. Are you aware what the expenses of the last election on the Liberal side were?—I am not.

14240. Who can give us any information about it?—If anyone can, it should be either his private agent, Mr. Lynch, or Mr. Michael O'Loghlen.

14241. Which Mr. Lynch do you mean?—Mr. Stanislaus Lynch. I can't say whether he is aware of it either; I only answer the question as best I can.

14242. Was Mr. Lynch here the entire time?—He used to come here occasionally, and leave again. He wasn't here the entire time—I am almost certain he wasn't.

14243. Did you keep any list of the electors?—I did not.

14244. Did you see any list of the electors?—There was a printed list of the electors—there was a lot of these lists scattered on the table, but I never got one for myself.

14245. Did you make out any list for your own information?—I never did.

14246. Did you anticipate before the polling that you would have a majority?—For some time before the polling I didn't think that Captain Flanagan would have a majority when I heard of the defections of Roman Catholics from the Liberal ranks.

14247. You understood that there were some Roman Catholics who would either leave town or vote for Major Knox?—Precisely.

14248. How long before the election was it that you understood this?—I think it was some time within a week before the polling that I became almost certain of it; and, in a conversation with Captain Flanagan on the subject, I think he was not sanguine of success himself; but he felt that he was pledged to go on, and he would go on.

14249. Would you say that on the Sunday before the election your belief was that Captain Flanagan would be beaten?—It was some time within a week before the election; decidedly the impression on my mind was three or four days before the polling that he would be beaten—there were so many accounts of persons leaving the town that I was not sanguine of his success.

14250. Did you see any strange mob in town?—No, I didn't; but as I am, I believe, at liberty to give hearsay evidence, I heard that on the morning of the polling there were seventy or eighty strangers in town, and that they had assembled close to the court-house.

TWELFTH DAY. October 19. Mr. John Dignan M'Dermott.

I didn't see it myself, but I was informed that these persons had revolvers, and that the people of the town, who were without revolvers, beat them from the town, and that they, in consequence, took refuge in the Victoria Hotel yard. As I said, I didn't see this myself, but it was a general rumour in the town, that before the doors were opened strangers armed were about the court-house for the purpose of taking possession of it.

14251. These must be a small mob on Major Knox's side—I mean the revolver men?—I don't know on whose side they were—I didn't see them myself—but I assume they were on that side.

14252. Do you know anything about men being brought into the town from Geevagh?—No. I wasn't aware of anything of the sort until I saw it in the papers.

14253. Did you hear that such a thing was done?—I wasn't aware of it, nor did I hear of it at the time; nor did I know of it until I read it in the papers since the commencement of this inquiry.

14254. You consider that Mr. O'Loghlen and Mr. Lynch are the persons who can inform us as to the expense of Captain Flanagan's election?—No further than I have stated.

14255. You know his election must have cost something?—Of course it did.

14256. And a great deal more than is returned in the election account returned to the Mayor?—It wasn't I made out that accoumt. I never saw it.

14257. Who made it out?—I don't know. I didn't, nor was I consulted about it.

14258. In fact you only conducted the legal part of the election?—Precisely. I made up my mind to do that only.

14259. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Were the Catholics who were entitled to vote at the last election more numerous than the Protestants?—I think they were from my recollection of the list of voters. I had no list before me, or in my possession, but when we came to Sligo it was considered by every one that there was a majority if the Liberals were true to themselves.

14260. Did you consider that there was not only a majority of Catholic electors, but of Liberals?—I took it generally. I took them as Catholics and Liberals, and it was considered that the election should be won by the Liberals if they stood together and voted all the same way.

14261. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Do you know a man named Lenehan—his name has been mentioned here during this inquiry?—What rank is he?

14262. The Chief Commissioner.—He is described as a farmer from Geevagh, or a man from Geevagh?—I don't know him.

14263. Would you know him if you saw him?—I wouldn't. I never heard of him.

14264. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Have you heard since the last election from anyone any statement as to money being expended illegally by Captain Flanagan, or by any one on his behalf?—Within the last couple of months I heard a statement made generally that there was money given to non-electors on the Liberal side, but personally I am not aware of it; nor did I hear a word about it during the election.

14265. How long ago is it since you heard that statement?—It is within the last six weeks I heard it. I heard nothing of the sort during the election, or before or after it, except that one general statement.

14266. How much did you hear was given to the non-electors on the Liberal side?—No specific sum was mentioned.

14267. Did you hear that it was a large sum?—I didn't. I didn't hear anything about the amount—what I heard was simply that Captain Flanagan's men got money too.

14268. Who did you hear make that statement?—The matter was mentioned in a private conversation, but I suppose I am bound to mention the name. The person I heard make the statement was Mr. Patrick M'Niffe. He said he heard it stated that money was given on the Liberal side.

14269. Have you mentioned his name already?—No. I mentioned Mr. James M'Niffe's name.

14270. What is Patrick M'Niffe?—He is an attorney.

14271. Was he employed for Captain Flanagan at the election?—He was not.

14272. Was he an active supporter of his?—He voted for Captain Flanagan, he was a supporter of his, no doubt.

14273. Did you hear that any other person made a similar statement?—I did not.

14274. I will not ask you whether you have any belief as to the truth of that statement, but have you any grounds that would lead you to come to the conclusion whether it is true or not?—None whatever.

14275. Can you tell me how many of the Roman Catholic voters you counted as doubtful?—I cannot, for the reason I stated—that I had not got a list of the voters at all; it was entirely in the hands of Mr. Michael O'Loghlen, the brother-in-law of Captain Flanagan.

14276. I suppose you are aware of the fact that very violent mobs occupied the town during the day of polling?—I never witnessed any act of violence during the election. I have no doubt that the people were very much excited on that day, and that there were what are called mobs of people in the town; but I never witnessed any act of violence on their part, beyond the ordinary things to be witnessed at elections—shouting and yelling, and the like.

14277. Did you ever hear the names of any persons as being active in organizing these mobs?—I did not.

14278. Do you know of anyone who could give us any information on that point?—I don't. I can't remember that I heard the names of any persons who were active in organizing mobs, because I had nothing whatever to do with any of them. I kept by myself in my office, and I had no communication with other people.

14279. Can you mention the names of any persons who were active on Captain Flanagan's behalf—you have mentioned Mr. O'Loghlen, Mr. Lynch, Mr. James M'Niffe and Mr. Patrick M'Niffe?—There was a gentleman with Mr. O'Loghlen—Mr. Moloney—who came from Clare, but he was not retained by me. He came at the instance of Mr. O'Loghlen; he was here during the election, and was an active supporter of Captain Flanagan. With regard to the other active supporters of his—there were Mr. Conroy, Mr. Keighron, Mr. Phillips, Mr. Dunnigan—in fact, of the respectable Liberals a good many were active supporters of Captain Flanagan. I can't recollect the names of all the respectable Liberals of the town.

14280. The Chief Commissioner.—In reference to tracing who had control of the money for Captain Flanagan, I find in the election expense return that you were paid one hundred guineas fee?—A hundred Irish—£92 6*s.* 1*d.* British.

14281. Who gave you the cheque for that?—It came through the agent for election expenses, from Mr. Treston—it was sent by post by him. In reference to the election expenses I never got a another farthing from Captain Flanagan. I attended at the revision sessions for a fortnight or three weeks, and I wouldn't accept any fee for that.

14282. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—When you accepted Captain Flanagan's retainer, had you any previous knowledge of Sligo elections?—I was here at several elections. I was at two or three of Mr. Somers's elections, and at the last election of Sergeant Armstrong's—I came down here rather of his, I accepted no fee, not a farthing, from Sergeant Armstrong.

14283. Can you give us the dates of Mr. Somers's elections at which you were—he was a candidate in 1857 and 1859?—I was at one of them—the precise dates of these elections I don't now know.

14284. Was Mr. Somers beaten by a large majority at the election you came to help?—The first election at which he was a cadidate, was, I think, in 1847; he succeeded and was elected then.

14285. Were you his conducting agent at that election?—I was not; I was then but a young man, only after being admitted an attorney.

14286. Who was Mr. Somers's conducting agent on that occasion?—I think it was a Mr. Graham.

14287. Do you remember the last election of Mr. Wynne's?—I was not at Mr. Wynne's election.

14288. Have you heard that after Sergeant Armstrong's election a large sum of money was expended on voters?—I didn't hear it for a year after the election. During the time I was in Sligo, I was with him constantly, I dined with him and met him with his friends; and I wasn't aware during that time of the illegal expenditure of a single farthing.

14289. Had you heard of it when you got Captain Flanagan's retainer?—I had. I heard after the election—as was stated by Sergeant Armstrong in his evidence here—that in some twelve months after the election applications were made to him for money. I hadn't the slightest knowledge of these until I read it in the papers.

14290. Who was Sergeant Armstrong's conducting agent?—Mr. Tracey.

14291. Did you know that Sligo was a corrupt place at the time of Sergeant Armstrong's election?—I suspected that there were persons in it that were corrupt.

14292. Did Captain Flanagan know that there were corrupt persons in the borough at the last election?—Captain Flanagan knew very well all about Sligo. I remember saying to him that he was not to do anything illegal, that he was to rely on the popular feeling in his behalf, and that the question which then agitated the minds of the people would tend to carry him through. I recommended him not to spend sixpence illegally, and I told him that I would be no party to it. I was at frequent elections, and—I am now speaking in the hearing of all parties—I challenge any person to say that I ever acted at any election illegally, or that I didn't always keep within the four corners of the Act of Parliament.

14293. The Chief Commissioner.—You are quite right to say that.

14294. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—You mentioned a statement being made that money was given at the last election on Captain Flanagan's side, to non-electors, and you said that it was made by Mr. Patrick M'Niffe?—I did not. I said he told me he heard it was made. I didn't hear him say that money was given on the Liberal side at the last election.

14295. Did you hear that any similar statement was made by anybody else?—I didn't. It was within the last six weeks I heard of it, when I was at the seaside.

14296. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Did Mr. M'Niffe tell you from whom he heard it?—He did not. I don't remember that he mentioned any name. I took it from him that it was more a rumour than anything else. How he heard or learned it, I don't know; but he was the only person I heard it from.

14297. You know nothing of any applications being made to Captain Flanagan by publicans for money for refreshments given to the mobs?—I don't. No bill was ever sent to me; I am not aware of any of the financial matters connected with the election.

Major Knox re-examined.

14298. The Chief Commissioner.—Was your attention called to Mr. Galbraith's evidence?—It was. I read it in the papers.

14299. Do you recollect seeing him on the occasion he spoke about?—I can't say what occasion it was that I saw him, but I have a recollection, decidedly, of his calling on me at Mr. Leech's—I have no doubt of it. I was very little at Mr. Leech's. I was out canvassing all day, or out somewhere during the day—I was at the hotel very often, where we had a kind of committee room; and I was dining out in the evenings generally.

14300. What occurred on that occasion?—I haven't the slightest recollection. Mr. Galbraith, if I understand his evidence rightly, from having read what he said, stated that on that occasion he told me that one of the Youngs was tampered with. I understand he stated that in his evidence, I can't say whether he said that or not, because constantly, every day in fact, people called with statements of that kind, and I shouldn't in the least wonder if he did say it.

14301. Was Mr. Stokes in the house on that occasion?—He was not. My recollection is, I may be wrong, but my recollection is, that great numbers of my supporters called there the same time, sometimes as many as eight, ten, and even twenty called on me at once; but that Mr. Galbraith called without anybody. I recollect perfectly his calling, and I think I asked him his name. I don't know what he called. I don't know that he made any statement about the Youngs, but if he said he did, I am sure he did.

14302. Was he a warm supporter of yours, and active as a Conservative?—He was. At one period there was an enormous number of rumours of persons being tampered with, and of men leaving.

14303. From what you recollect, and having read Mr. Galbraith's evidence, can you now say that he intimated to you that one of the Youngs wanted money?—Certainly not, most distinctly not, in fact I should recollect it if he did, as I had a letter of introduction to the Youngs from Mr. Magee, a son-in-law of Mr. Young, and I looked upon the man as quite above anything like bribery.

14304. Who gave you the letter of introduction to the Youngs?—A Mr. Magee, a relation of his, I think he is his son-in-law, I don't know how it was I met Mr. Magee, but however it was, I brought a letter from him to them.

14305. I will read for you what I believe to be a pretty accurate report of his evidence. I asked him, "When you went to Major Knox, did you convey to him that the Youngs wanted to be bribed?" and he said, "I believe I did"?—But I understood Mr. Galbraith afterwards to say that he didn't convey that to me.

14306. Quite right, Major Knox—he said, "I used some expression to him," that is to Major Knox, "I conveyed to him that they wanted money, and I believe he understood me"?—If he said to me that the Youngs were tampered with, I shouldn't take that as meaning that they wanted money for I looked on them as men quite above that.

14307. Do you remember Mr. Lawder being present at that conversation between you and Mr. Galbraith?—Mr. Lawder was never but twice at Mr. Leech's, once in the morning, and once that he dined with me. I used always meet him at the Victoria hotel, the county committee rooms were there, and I used them. Mr. Lawder was also the county agent.

14308. From the evidence of Young, Galbraith, and Stokes, it appears that he got ultimately £40?—So I saw.

14309. And that Galbraith had the half notes, in his evidence at the Carrick trial he stated that, and we must believe it to be true?—Clearly.

14310. In reference to the money that was given to Young, can you now give us any clue as to how the money passed from Stokes to Young?—I have no idea at all.

14311. Did you know that Mr. Galbraith was mixed up in it?—I never had any communication with any one as to giving money to electors, directly or indirectly, and I need not say that if I had intended to bribe, which I never did, I should never have given the money in that way. I know too much about elections, and every one was aware that I announced from the first that I wouldn't have anything to do with bribery. I didn't intend to bribe, and I knew nothing of his getting the money.

TWELFTH DAY.
October 19.
Major Knox.

14312. Giving half notes was a clumsy proceeding, certainly?—I never heard of such a proceeding. We, when at Carrick, produced Mr. Galbraith, and he was examined. We also produced Mr. Stokes. My cousin, Captain Ethelred Knox, I particularly brought down, I directed Judge Keogh's attention to him, and endeavoured to have him examined. I certainly would not have done that if there was anything behind that I knew of, and that I was afraid would come out.

14313. Mr. Galbraith said he was asked at Carrick if he had told you that the Youngs wanted money, and that he said he did?—I have no idea of the kind. I had no communication with him at Carrick.

14314. Did you see or hear the evidence that Mr. Davis gave here?—I did not.

14315. Or the evidence which Mr. Atcheson gave yesterday?—I did not.

14316. Did you hear what they stated?—No, I did not.

14317. They gave very important evidence. You know old Peter Harrison?—I heard of him.

14318. When he was examined he left the table saying that he wasn't bribed at all. Mr. Atcheson, however, was examined yesterday, and he stated that he got £30 for him; that, in fact, he got it to bribe Harrison; and Mr. Davis stated that Captain Ethelred Knox came with a parcel which he knew to be money; that he asked for Mr. Atcheson; that he refused to take the parcel, and that Captain Knox waited until Mr. Atcheson came in. Mr. Atcheson stated he got from Captain Ethelred Knox £32 2*s.* 7*d.*, £30 for Harrison, and £2 2*s.* 7*d.* for expenses incurred in removing Harrison from Sligo to Dublin. Did you ever hear of that case?—Never; but Harrison's wife called on me about three weeks ago—perhaps it is not so much—at my house in Dublin, and asked me for some assistance for Harrison. She distinctly conveyed to me and told me that her husband hadn't got any money and that he was a loser by the election.

14319. Mr. Atcheson told me that he got the money for Harrison?—I don't know Mr. Atcheson; I do know Mr. Davis.

14320. It was stated here yesterday by a witness that Mr. Barnardo, of Dublin, said he saw Captain Ethelred Knox in the Alhambra, in London, last Wednesday?—So I heard.

14321. Had you any letter or telegram from him lately?—I had no communication with him since the first or second week in September. I have not heard from him at all since then, and I may say I am nearly convinced that there is no truth in the statement. He had been in London. I have written to him and addressed the letter to the Poste restaurante, Marseilles, but I have not yet received a reply from him.

14322. Have you any reason for knowing that he would call for your letter?—His arrangements were to embark at Marseilles for Suez. He had his choice of embarking at Marseilles or Portsmouth. He has a free pass to Suez from the Viceroy.

14323. He is to be at the opening of the Suez canal?—Yes.

14324. When is that to be?—On the 7th or 17th November, I am not sure which.

14325. I saw that some accident happened; the opening may therefore be delayed?—Yes.

14326. When you had the communication from him in September did he inform you where he was going to?—To Paris.

14327. To stay there until he went to Suez?—I understood he was to stay there or somewhere near—perhaps at Brussels; he has a friend at Brussels. He was then to go by the P. and O. steamer and sail for Suez.

14328. He got a free passage there?—Yes, I can tell you what the exact date is, as I brought with me the Viceroy's letter.

14329. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—I suppose he has hardly sailed from Marseilles yet?—I hardly think he has. Mr. Russell of the London Times is not starting for two or three days from England. He may have gone by an earlier boat, but I don't think he can have sailed from Marseilles yet.

14330. Can you give us any information as to where a letter would find him, supposing him to have gone to Suez?—I should say the hotel at Suez. I believe there is a large hotel at Suez.

14331. It wouldn't be Alexandria or Cairo?—I can't say; but I think that Suez would be the place to find him.

14332. Had he made any arrangements to go anywhere else after the opening of the Suez canal?—He was to go to Indore in Central India.

14333. I suppose his return from that would be very indefinite?—I don't know what his arrangements about returning are, but I suppose it would. His intention when I last saw him was to be present at a grand Durbar at Lord Mayo's; I can't say when that is to be. He is going out to a friend of his and mine.

14334. The Chief Commissioner.—Have you been making inquiries since you were examined here as to the different statements about the bribed voters?—I have not.

14335. I mean with regard to the ten men on Mr. Stokes's list?—I haven't been here since, nor have I had an opportunity to do so.

14336. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Do I understand you to say that, though you probably saw Mr. Galbraith about the Youngs, and though he then may have made the statement about their being tampered with, you positively swear he made no statement from which you could infer that money was to be paid?—Most distinctly; I am quite distinct as to that.

14337. Did you know of the Ryans, or Harrison, or Pat Gallagher being bribed?—Certainly not. As regards the Ryans, my opinion of them was that they were not men of that kind at all; that they were men that wouldn't expect a bribe for their vote. I don't know Gallagher at all. I don't know that I ever saw him.

14338. Do you know the Messrs. Barnardo?—No. Are they furriers?

14339. Yes?—I don't know Mr. Barnardo, but I dare say I have been in his establishment.

14340. Do you know the name of his son?—I have seen him—the young man.

14341. The Chief Commissioner.—Is he an engineer?—I don't know what he is; I don't know anything further about him, except that he used call on me for a pass for the opera occasionally. I thought he was a medical student.

14342. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—You said you would let us have the marked register of voters that was produced at Carrick?—There was no marked register produced at Carrick on my part. I haven't it, I sent to the registrar here the only register; but I mentioned that Mr. Wilson gave me a copy of the register.

14343. How long before the election did Mr. Wilson give it to you?—He gave it to me after two revisions—the revisions of 1867 and 1868; he gave me an analysis of them also.

14344. Were they marked as distinguishing the Protestant from the Catholic voters?—I think they were, but I am not certain; whether they were marked as distinguishing the Conservatives and Liberals, or the Catholics and Protestants, I am not sure.

14345. Were any of the names marked doubtful?—The analysis gave the supporters of myself, and probably of the opposite candidate. I think there were a good many marked doubtful, particularly Protestants. A large number of them were marked doubtful.

14346. I understand that early in your candidature you had examined the registry list?—I didn't examine the names in detail, but I examined the analysis.

14347. Very early in your candidature?—Yes, immediately.

14348. Have you searched for these registers?—I have, but I believe they were destroyed at Mr. Leech's.

14349. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—We have heard here that Captain Ethelred Knox managed all the monetary departments of the Irish Times office?—Yes, all the money that was received from the different receivers ultimately came to him; he banked the amount, and drew cheques for the payment of the salaries in the office, paid accounts, &c.

14350. Was there a sum put to his credit every month?—The way it was done was this—all large payments were lodged in a large account, and if he required more money for the office I gave a cheque for it; but I didn't give any money for years, the business is so large. I brought down this bank book (a private bank book), though it has nothing to do with this matter.

14351. What bank did Captain Knox bank in?—I wrote to the manager of the Provincial Bank yesterday to know whether Captain Knox did bank there or not, and I find he did. The manager added a note that Captain Knox "had an account in this office."

14352. During the three months, September, October, and November?—Yes, in 1868; that was his own private account.

14353. The Chief Commissioner.—Captain Knox banked his own account in the Provincial bank?—Yes.

14354. Where was the Irish Times account banked?—In the Hibernian Bank. I brought down the bank book, and I think I could send you all the cheques. (Bank book handed in.)

14355. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Was Captain Knox's Irish Times account ever checked?—Yes. I always checked it every month, and generally every week.

14356. Do you recollect any sum being drawn by Captain Knox out of the Hibernian Bank, which the accounts do not show, was applied to the Irish Times business?—I do not.

14357. It would actually strike you if any such thing occurred?—I am sure it didn't occur.

14358. Had Captain Knox very large sums of money in his private account?—I know he had some means. I don't know what they were. I didn't know much about them until the Carrick petition, when he was asked to be one of the securities for the costs. He went one of the securities. He has, I believe, some charge on the estate, but I don't know much about the matter.

14359. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—He is the younger son?—Yes, of a large family.

14360. The Chief Commissioner.—You say Captain Knox offered to give security for £1,000—the costs of the petition?—It was only £500; he was but one of the securities. Mr. Lawder knows all about it.

14361. Mr. Abbott's name has been mentioned here by the electors—have you known him for some time?—I have known him a little for a long time, and I know him well for some months past.

14362. What led to your introducing him to the borough?—After Judge Keogh delivered his judgment at Carrick, the electors, my supporters, held a meeting here, and they forwarded to me a resolution, which they adopted, regretting the occurrence, and saying that if I suggested a successor, they would support him unanimously.

14363. This was in consequence of your being disqualified?—Yes. A great many letters, when the announcement was made, came to me from gentlemen aspiring to Parliamentary honours. I got no communication from Mr. Abbott, but I did from Sir James Cotter, of Cork. I referred them to a friend of position in London, and he strongly recommended Mr. Abbott as a proper person to represent Sligo.

14364. Did you arrange to transfer the houses you purchased, to him?—No. He took one or two houses off my hands, and I understood that if he gets in he would take all of them off my hands. Pending this Commission, I didn't like to expedite matters.

14365. If he is a candidate for the borough, is there any understanding between you and him that he is to take all the houses you purchased off your hands?—If he were elected, I am sure he would—my connection with the borough having now terminated. He is to take everything of the kind off my hands.

14366. What has been your expenditure as regards these houses?—I get the expenditure on them, which, as well as we could make it out, was about £1,000. That is not quite a loss; there may be a £100 or so paid in rent.

14367. You did introduce Mr. Abbott to the borough?—I did. A meeting of my supporters was called by a circular that was issued. Mr. Abbott came down to Sligo. I came down with him, and I introduced him to the borough as a person of position, and—what Sligo chiefly required—a person of great commercial and mercantile standing.

14368. What is his address?—I am not aware what his address in England is; but "the Louvre Hotel, Paris," will always find him.

14369. You mentioned that the understanding between you and him is that he will recoup you all the loses of these houses?—Yes.

14370. Is there any understanding that is to recoup you what you lost by the election?—No actual understanding, but I understand that, if he is elected, he will recoup all the expenses of the election petition. I can't say that I have it any way directly from Mr. Abbott.

14371. That is £3,000?—Not so much—perhaps £2,000 or £1,500 on my side—as you are aware, I had to pay the costs of both my own and the other side. Colonel Taylor told me it was usual for the succeeding candidate to pay the expenses of his predecessor when unseated on petition. I had no direct communication with Mr. Abbott on the subject, but I conveyed what Colonel Taylor told me to a friend of Mr. Abbott's, and he said that Mr. Abbott would do what's right.

14372. Who is the friend of Mr. Abbott that said that?—A Mr. Carlisle. I don't know what he is, except that he is a friend or connexion of Mr. Abbott's—a secretary or something of that sort; he was down here with him.

14373. I am not asking you of your personal knowledge of Mr. Abbott, but is there any arrangement you ever heard of, or that you can give us any information about—that Mr. Abbott is to pay these voters who, without any sanction of yours, were promised money by your supporters at the last election for their votes?—Certainly not. Most distinctly not; quite the contrary. I had very recently a conversation with Mr. Abbott on the subject of this borough, and I told him that it ought to cost him almost nothing, because I had, as I conceived, gone to the expenses that were necessary. He didn't appear to understand it.

14374. Then you had a discussion with him as to the cost of contesting the borough?—He was staying at my shooting lodge, and we had conversations several times.

14375. About the cost?—We didn't go into details, but I said he ought to be elected for very little.

14376. What was the whole expense he was to be at, put down, including the past expense of the petition, the purchase of the houses, and soforth?—There was no understanding on the subject. The losses on the houses were estimated at £500, because they were not remunerative. I believe Mr. Phibb's recollection will accord with it; then the costs of the petition, at least my share of the costs—that was all he was to pay.

14377. As to those houses, we have it that you were paying more to the landlord than you let them to electors for?—In many cases that's so.

14378. I presume you were paying what was understood to be their value?—I paid what former tenants paid.

14379. How was it that you let them to tenants who were voters, at less than the understood value?—It was understood that there might be a loss, when the houses were taken. As I stated already the object in taking them was to make votes. The tenants were removed from small houses into larger ones, and, as we thought we could not ask them to pay the larger rent, they were let in at the smaller rent—that was generally how it was done. For one house, for which we paid £40 a year, the tenant paid but £20 or £22.

14380. We have it in evidence that a number of electors on both sides expect to be paid after the election on behalf of the candidate for whom they voted, whether he is the successful candidate or not?—At my election?

14381. No—we have it that electors, men of respectability on both sides, expected to be paid after the election always?—My impression is, that that is not the case. Since the passing of the Reform Bill that trade has been extinguished, an increase of voters from 300 to something like 550 would make it too stupendous a thing altogether. From my knowledge of canvassing the borough I don't believe that that feeling does exist. I am very strongly of that opinion. Whatever the future of Sligo may be, now that my political connexion with is at an end—it is but just to my late constituents to say that I saw more corruption and attempts at corruption in one hour, in another constituency for which I once stood, than I saw for two years in Sligo—that constituency is the borough of Tralee.

14382. In reference to what did you hear Mr. Stokes's name mentioned as being engaged in doing something rash, when did you hear it?—I think it was about a week before the election—the Sunday before the election, when I was determined, it was said, to leave the town.

14383. Was it the Sunday before the poll, or Sunday week?—It was the Sunday before the polling.

14384. There's no doubt about that?—No; I am so clear about it, because there was a rumour circulated about the town that I was leaving it, and that I had given up all chance of the election. I had to write a placard, and have it printed, that it was not so.

14385. In reference to what voters did you hear Mr. Stokes's name mentioned, as having indulged in something rash?—I heard it several times. The way I heard it first was—Sir Arthur Gore wrote to me from his house, to say that he heard it.

14386. Of Mr. Stokes?—That very foolish work was going on. I made some inquiries on that morning, which I think was Sunday; and I heard that Mr. Stokes had offered money to electors. I called on Mr. Stokes on that or the following day—so many things occurred, I forget the dates—and cautioned him; and I wrote, in reply to Sir Arthur Gore, that I had known nothing of the transactions, and that I was greatly annoyed about them.

14387. Would I direct your attention to the names of those you heard Mr. Stokes offered money—in reference to what voters did you hear he made the offer?—I don't think I heard any names mentioned, that I can remember.

14388. I direct your attention to question 5607 in your evidence at Carrick—you there mention the name of a voter named M'Tighe. You are reported to have stated—"I heard of his (Mr. Stokes) making some kind of inducement to a man whose name, I think, was M'Tighe"?—There is no voter of that name.

14389. There is no such voter?—No, there is not.

14390. Could it be M'Goldrick?—No; he is not of that class of man, he is above anything of that sort.

14391. It must be some Mac?—I can't tell you now.

14392. That's a very curious thing?—If I looked at the registry I might see the name. [Looks at the registry.] I don't know whether the name was M'Goldrick or not. I almost think it is M'Goldrick. It is not the M'Goldrick you refer to. There is another M'Goldrick, a tailor. I have some recollection of hearing something about it. I cannot say positively, but I think that's the only name I can call to mind. It is the only one that might have been—but I think there is another M'Goldrick, or some name like M'Goldrick.

14393. Did Sir Arthur Gore mention to you that he had received information from any person?—Oh, not at all. I am sure he did not know. All he wrote to me was that he had heard that day in Ballina that some one had offered money, which was very foolish—that there was money offered; and I think he said he knew it was not in accordance with what I told him, and he advised me to see to it at once. I don't quite recollect the words of the letter, but it was to that effect; and I wrote in reply that I knew nothing of it, and that I was greatly annoyed.

14394. I will refresh your memory about what you said when the thing was recent to you, Major Knox—"I heard from somebody in Sligo that a suggestion was made—that some man—I think M'Carrick was the name to the best of my recollection—made some arrangement, on solicitation, to those men to go away, and I went down to Stokes and spoke to him about it"?—Yes. I did not know the name, but I almost think it is M'Goldrick. Is there another M'Goldrick?

14395. There is?—That's the name. Yes. I think so.

14396. In consequence of anything that occurred, Major Knox, or that you read in the evidence since you were summoned last, do you wish to make any statement to us?

14397. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Before Major Knox does that I want to ask him a question about Mr. Sloane's evidence?—Yes; I was anxious to ——

14398. A man called Samuel Sloane, formerly the sub-editor of the Irish Times, was examined here yesterday, and he said that he was present at a conversation between you and Mr. Hignell, at which he made an application to Mr. Hignell for the repayment of a sum of six shillings which he had paid to Brennan for car hire, Hignell having on a previous occasion paid Brennan eight shillings for car hire; and that you authorized Hignell to pay the money, making use of some such statement as that "it could be stopped out of Brennan's next weekly money," or "paid next week?"—Yes. That statement of Sloane's, similar to every one that he swore to yesterday, was utterly false—utterly false. It is true that Mr. Sloane gave Brennan nine shillings, and it is equally true that I had it stopped from Mr. Sloane's weekly pay. After a considerable time—Mr. Sloane came to me very constantly about it—the money was repaid to Mr. Sloane. As regards Brennan's car-hire there was a good deal of money paid for Brennan's car-hire, as is returned in the return I gave you the other day. I think I told you that £18 was paid for Brennan.

14399. But this was in Dublin?—In Dublin—yes, in Dublin. You know Brennan came up to Dublin with his nose broken and his leg dislocated, and I was forced to have him put into the Meath Hospital, and to pay his expenses there, and a doctor for being with him. This car hire had to be constantly paid for; cab hire for taking him to Dr. MacNamara in Stephen's-green, and having him examined. He was moved out of hospital. It is quite true that I returned £18 as paid—yes; it was as near as I could go to it—yes; but it is not at all true that there was any weekly pay. He got nothing of the kind. His lodging was paid as long as he was really unable to do anything for himself. Then he got recommendations—I gave him recommendations to Sir Arthur Guinness and others to try and get him employment. That was all that was done for him.

14400. I did not understand what you said about the money being stopped from Mr. Sloane?—Mr. Sloane—my recollection is that Mr. Sloane paid that money, or rather he did not pay it; no, but he directed the night clerk to pay it.

14401. I understand?—That was it, which was a thing I was obliged to discountenance, because the night clerk had no right to pay the money. He should have handed over all the money; and I directed them to stop it from Mr. Sloane. Ultimately, it was repaid to Mr. Sloane after a week or two. I think he came several times to me about it, and said it was a mistake, and I did not wish to press it.

14402. He solicited you?—Yes, very frequently. But I heard several statements that I believe Mr. Sloane swore to yesterday that are perfectly untrue.

14403. The Chief Commissioner.—State what you wish to say on that subject?—First, I understand he stated that he left our office in consequence of a quarrel with me. I should not enter into this question, because it is not really in any way connected with this commission, but from the fact of my being a large employer I am placed in an unpleasant position by this man going about Dublin boasting that he would get himself subpœnaed here to blackguard me. That came to my knowledge from various sources.

14404. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—I beg pardon, just on that point. Mention the name of any person who can give information on it?—Well, I believe Mr. Mowatt was one of the sources I heard it from; but he was boasting what he would not do down here. A clerk named Thomas, I am told, whom unfortunately we had to part with, owing to a deficiency in money matters in the office has been also mentioned. It is extremely unpleasant—I am anxious to give every information to the commission in my power—but it is extremely unpleasant that we should be placed in that position, because in a very large establishment we are obliged sometimes to part with an official. And as regards Mr. Sloane leaving my office, I am obliged to state now, as he has gone into the matter, that he left it because he was in a state of perpetual drunkenness; and I could not believe anything he said, and he was not a man that I could continue in my office. I mention that for another reason, because he was sent to Sligo on business; and perhaps as something may be stated as regards that, it is better to mention what the business was. Before the petition at Carrick, one evening my conducting agent was in my house, and it was necessary for me to send subpœnaes down here, and there was nobody to send at that hour of the night but a little boy from Dargan's office, the scrivener; and Mr. Lawder asked me to send down some reliable man—some person of an age more than a boy. So I sent for Mr. Sloane to the office, and in my house gave him his instructions. Mr. Sloane was to start next morning. He did start, and, as I subsequently learned, not sober. He got as far as Enfield, and fell between the train and the carriages, and got smashed up, and was brought to Dublin. These facts were all brought to my knowledge, but as he went on my business I continued his pay to him and continued him in my employment; and he rewarded me afterwards with being perpetually tipsy and ill conducted in every way.

14405. The Chief Commissioner.—Is there any other subject?—I think there is nothing else, except that perhaps I ought to make one statement to the commissioners, which is this. At my last examination here I was asked if I knew anything as to any money being given other than what I——

14406. Returned?—Returned, and I said I did not. I did not, and I do not; but I think it right I should add that I of course heard rumours as to money having—some transactions—I do not think it took the form of money. My impression of it was a kind of authority or something of the kind as regards, I dare say, Mr. Stokes; but I did not even know the names. But there were remarks of that kind, it is only right to say that, remarks as regards one or two others too.

14407. You must tell us now, Major Knox?—Well I heard rumours. I did not hear the names of the recipients; but I heard small sums had been given. Different rumours were about. When I investigated most of these rumours, they turned out not to be true. Somebody told me that Utred Knox gave money. I inquired and there was not a word of truth in it. Somebody else told me that Mr. Hignell brought down money from Sligo. That turned out not to be true. By-the-by, on that perhaps I ought to state, that after the revision a letter came to Hignell from Brennan, saying that he required money for the mob; and Mr. Hignell by my directions brought down £50 to Brennan, with instructions that if the money was legitimately to be used for the mob, and if it was required, the money was to be given to Brennan to distribute amongst them; and that if it was not clear that it was legitimately to be used for that purpose and distributed amongst the mob it was to be brought back. Hignell came to Sligo; he saw Brennan, and the result was that he brought back the money. That's the only money that Mr. Hignell I am certain ever brought to this town, or I believe anybody which I ever heard of.

14408. You were going on to say that you investigated other rumours?—I investigated them all. There were rumours of every description circulated. One rumour was that Captain Flanagan brought £500 and distributed it here. That was untrue as I ascertained. There was every species of rumour circulated.

14409. I thought you were going on to say that you found there was some foundation for some of the rumours?—I never knew there was till I heard here what occurred in this court about Stokes and others.

14410. Can you give us no information or clue; I thought you were under the impression that you had discovered something?—No, I have not, beyond what I have seen here; and I have urged Captain Ethelred Knox very strongly to return, but whether he will do so or not I do not know. I am certain that if he did it could be explained that he did not give it intentionally for bribery. He may have thought it was required by men leaving from the state of the town, but I do not think he gave it for bribery.

14411. Of course. You are aware now since Davis and Atcheson have been examined?—But I believe that man was leaving—Harrison, I understood was leaving.

14412. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Harrison was leaving?—I think so—Yes.

14413. It assumes now a very different aspect where only one person——?—Oh, yes, of course.

14414. These two gentlemen, apparently, cannot be doubted?—No, nor Mr. Galbraith, nor Mr. Stokes. From what I know of Mr. Stokes, he may have been in Carrick, perhaps frightened; but from what I know of them, I don't think any of them would go so far as to criminate a man unless he had——. I know nothing about it, but I do not doubt it.

14415. Have you since the election paid any money to Captain Ethelred Knox which is not accounted for?—Never before nor since, at any time of my life, never, directly or indirectly; nor has a shilling of my money ever gone to him beyond his pay.

14416. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Of course?—Yes; never.

14417. Does he still retain office in the Irish Times, Major Knox, I mean with regard to his anticipated return?—No. Well, I think not. His health has been very bad. For eighteen months he has been threatened with consumption a good deal. His brother is filling it now—yes. Another brother had to fill it some months ago from his being ill, just after Carrick I think it was.

14418. His brother is acting for him, I presume?—His brother is appointed now. He is moving up to Dublin. He is moving his wife up.

14419. The Chief Commissioner.—We have it in evidence that Captain Ethelred Knox gave a sum amounting to £307 2*s.* 7*d.*?—Yes.

14420. Between what he gave to Mr. Stokes and what he gave to Mr. Atcheson?—Yes.

14421. Is there no possibility, Major Knox, from what you know, of that sum having been drawn from the Irish Times account which you now have in Court?—Oh, I think not—not so large a sum as that, nor I think any sum. I am certain not; I would be very happy to send you all the cheques.

14422. I know I was looking over the books, and from my knowledge of the matter, in does not represent that any sum of the kind was at the time taken?—I am sure not.

14423. That Irish Times account appears a business account?—Yes.

14424. Of a great establishment?—I had no reason to think that Captain Ethelred Knox's name would be mentioned here at all; he was very unwillingly at Carrick.

TWELFTH DAY.
October 19.
Major Knox.

14425. Unwillingly?—Very; I brought him down very unwillingly; and on another occasion that he had to be examined in court, he very unwillingly attended indeed. And I am quite certain he won't attend here.

14426. You are certain he won't?—I am certain he won't. I am certain that nothing will induce him to go into the witness box—it is only right to say I am certain of that. I have no knowledge—I have written to have urged him to attend.

14427. You mean that he is nervous?—Oh, he is in a dreadful state. One time that he was summoned to the Green-street Commission he stated that his name was Jonathan; and we lost the case, because Mr. Sidney, the opposite counsel commented on the fact that Captain Ethelred Knox did not attend.

14428. Was that a prosecution you had?—A prosecution against a man.

14429. Now tell me—at Carrick were you present at any consultation, when the evidence about the M'Mullens was discussed?—Never. No; I was at several consultations, but I don't think their names ever transpired.

14430. Were you present at any consultation at which the evidence of Mr. Stokes was discussed?—Well, I was, I think. I am almost sure his name was mentioned. I don't know that Mr. Macdonogh was present; but Mr. Robinson, I think was, and Mr. Kaye. Possibly Mr. Macdonogh was, but I am not sure.

14431. We have now two sets of briefs of Mr. Stokes' evidence?—Yes.

14432. And in the first set which was marked "A," his evidence is taken down—"I never gave, or offered any money or other consideration for voting; James M'Mullen left before the polling day by request of Mr. Stokes." Then comes—"Blank paid, travelling expenses of James and William M'Mullen to go to Dublin." Now do you remember that being discussed in your presence?—No, I do not. I don't remember to have gone into the details of the evidence; but I remember the decision come to, as I understood it, by my counsel, was that Mr. Stokes's acts were quite unauthorized by me; that I had warned him not to do anything of the kind; and that it was a question, as I understood, of the law of evidence, and that agency should be disproved. That's all I understood. I did not see the briefs. No; I had not time.

14433. I may mention that the reason I called your attention to it is this: other persons are mentioned, and there is also this phrase in it—that is, the first brief of his evidence—"I did a good deal of such work generally"?—I never heard it.

14434. This brief, as far as we can asertain, ultimately was not used; but another brief is prepared of his evidence, in which the statement about giving money to the M'Mullens is omitted. This evidence of Stokes about the M'Mullens—if he was believed to be your agent, would alone have unseated you?—Yes.

14435. Did you know anything about this omission? I did not at all know.

14436. This, Major Knox, is for the purpose of following out the inquiry?—I forget his evidence at Carrick; whether he stated that he had, or had not given money to the M'Mullens.

14437. He swore most positively that he had not. I will read you his evidence?—I don't think I was in court when he was examined.

14438. I will read his evidence. Judge Keogh says at question 6544:—

"Do you know who gave him the money to go away?—I do not. All I provided was the car for them. Who told you to provide the car for them?—It was my own entire act; I went down and gave the order to Mr. —— for the car. While I went down to do it, they met me and said they wished to do it. And you gave them no money?—No. You did not know who did?"

Then his lordship said—

"I will give you an opportunity of reconsidering the question. Will you tell me now, what inducements were held out to these men, and by whom, to get them to leave the place?—Indeed I could not. You swear you cannot?—I swear positively."

Well now, we all know, according to the evidence here, that that was wilful and corrupt perjury; and I find in the first brief that was prepared of his evidence, a statement that would have unseated you, that is, that he did give them the money?—Provided agency were proved.

14439. Provided agency were proved?—Which it was not—which was disproved distinctly.

14440. I am trying now, as is our duty, to ascertain what made Mr. Stokes, apparently a respectable man, commit perjury at Carrick before the Judge; and I find this matter of the briefs—I find evidence omitted in the brief that was used in court, the true statement being in the first brief of his evidence?—I don't know at all. The evidence was taken down at a house opposite the hotel, I remember, in which I never was for a moment, except to see Mr. Lawder. It was done at night, and I was then generally entertaining a number of people—friends—and I did not know anything about the evidence. I knew that Mr. Stokes had done some things, which, if agency were proved, would probably be very bad; but I did not know what they were.

14441. Do you remember that being discussed in your presence?—Oh, never—certainly not.

14442. About Stokes and the M'Mullens?—No; I don't remember that I ever heard anything about these M'Mullens to make an impression on my mind—it was in the bill of particulars, I understood—until after the petition was over.

14443. You did not pay attention—of course there was?—There were, I think, some hundreds of such things, and these all were served a day or two before the trial. I did not notice them particularly.

14444. It is your opinion at present that it could not have been by accident that that evidence was omitted from the briefs used in court?—Are the two briefs in the same handwriting, might I ask, because——

14445. One set is marked "A." Mr. Lawder, your conducting agent, can give us no information on the subject [the briefs were handed to the witness]?—I don't know them at all.

14446. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Do you know a person called Grubb, who is, or was, in the Irish Times office?—No, he never was. I do know him. He was a friend of Mr. Morrison's, who was down here. He was in his father's office.

14447. It was stated here yesterday that he accompanied Captain Ethelred Knox on the occasion after the election when he came to Sligo?—I am not aware.

14448. Do you know anything at all about that?—I don't know. I know Mr. Grubb. I have seen him.

14449. Do you know anything about Mr. Grubb coming to Sligo at any time after the election for the purpose of collecting funds?—No, I do not at all. I never heard it.

14450. Do you know anything at all about a person called Perkins, who was examined here? He is a traveller for Brown & M'Conkey?—I saw his name mentioned. I never saw the man, but I heard of him before.

14451. What did you hear of him?—All I heard of him was that he came from Killala, where a good many of my family live. I believe he is the same man—Francis Perkins.

14452. John?—Perhaps I am wrong.

14453. Did you see a statement of the evidence of this person as to an offer of £50 and then of £75?—I did. I never heard of it.

14454. Oh, I don't suppose you do. I merely want to know can you give us any information at all about any possible connexion between Perkins and any of your supporters?—No. I don't know. I am sure there was none. He may have chatted on the subject, knowing my family. Mr. Perkins is a very respectable man, and was Clerk of the Union for years in Killala

14455. Mr. Perkins?—He was—yes. He is very much respected and all his family. Some of them are very wealthy people there.

14456. The Chief Commissioner.—Major Knox, can you now see any reason to doubt the truth of the statements made by Mr. Stokes, Mr. Atcheson, and Mr. Davis as to Captain Ethelred Knox giving this sum of £300?—Well, I know nothing about it one way or the other beyond what I read. I know them to be respectable men—all these men except Atcheson whom I never knew.

14457. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—We do not ask you to form an opinion on that evidence at all?—I do not know. I have not the least——

14458. As to that evidence your mind is a blank at present?—Perfectly—yes.

14459. The Chief Commissioner.—Is there anything else that you wish to give us information about, or to make any statement about on your own behalf or that of your friends who have been named?—Really I don't remember anything. I don't think there is anything else. I don't think I am aware of anything that has not been mentioned.

14460. If there be, at any time in the course of the day when it is your convenience?—Yes, will you require me down here again?

14461. I think not?—I am anxious to go away, I have not been very well.

14462. I may mention that we shall write to the manager of the Provincial Bank for Captain Ethelred Knox's bank account?—Yes, I did not ask that. I did not think I was justified in doing so. I never would have got it.

14463. Of course he did not leave his private bank book after him when he went?—No. I asked his brother. None of us know much about his private affairs.

(The witness withdrew.)

Bernard Healley sworn and examined.

Bernard Healley.

14464. The Chief Commissioner.—Are you an elector?—Yes.

14465. Who did you vote for at the last election?—For Captain Flanagan.

14466. Who did you vote for at the election before that?—For Sergeant Armstrong.

14467. Did you get any money after that election?—I did.

14468. How much?—Twenty pounds.

14469. From whom?—In Mr. Harper Campbell's office.

14470. Did you ever get any money before for voting?—Never.

14471. What business are you?—Cattle dealer and trader.

14472. On whose recommendation did you vote?—On no one's recommendation at all.

14473. Did you expect to get any money when you voted for Armstrong?—No.

14474. Did you know you were getting money on account of your vote?—I did not.

14475. Did you think it an honorable thing for a man like you to do?—I may remark I heard it circulated that they were getting money from Harper Campbell and that my name was down, so I went to Harper Campbell's office and got the money—£20.

14476. After you got the £20 did you not know that it was from Sergeant Armstrong you were taking it?—I did not know that I should refuse it and I did not refuse it.

14477. Had you any promise when you voted for the Captain?—Oh, not the least.

14478. Are you a Roman Catholic?—I am.

14479. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—How long after Easter was it you got the money?—Sometime in April—I could not exactly say.

[The witness was directed to withdraw.]

Samuel Hans Sloan presented himself and said—

Samuel Hans Sloan.

14480. I wish the Court to allow me to be examined further in reference to Major Knox's evidence.

14481. The Chief Commissioner.—Yes, but in anything you are going to say confine yourself to facts within your own knowledge, and do not make any comment upon any evidence. Now go on?—Yes, sir. The evidence of Major Knox regarding that 6*s.* transaction is incorrect. The facts are these: as I mentioned already on a previous occasion I got 8*s.* from Mr. Hignell to pay Brennan, and I gave the 8*s.* and Brennan went away with a carman, and the next night when he applied for the 6*s.* I did not like to awake Mr. Hignell at the late hour, and I got the money from the clerk and paid him. This money was stopped out of my week's salary, and when I applied for it to Major Knox in the lower office he said to Hignell that he might pay it out of Brennan's weekly wages. But I never received the 6*s.*—Hignell never paid it to me nor anyone else.

14482. Is there any matter of fact you wish to make a statement about?—Major Knox has sworn that I was perpetually drunk, and I wish to give that the strongest contradiction. I was never drunk in his employment. I was three years and six months in his employment—I believe the longest period that any sub-editor was in his employment. I could not have discharged the duties in the Irish Times office for that period and been perpetually drunk from five o'clock in the evening until four in the morning. In regard to the matter he has sworn about my going to Sligo, on that morning I was in his house until two o'clock. I then went to the office and did my duties there, and then went to the train. I did not fall, as he has said, but I was thrown out on entering the train; and I think it is very unfair of Major Knox to say what he has said, as there is an action pending.

14483. Do you mean you have a case against the company?—I have, sir, as to that.

[The witness was directed to arrange with the secretary as to his expenses, and informed that he would not be required again.]

Thomas Donegan sworn and examined.

Thomas Donegan.

14484. The Chief Commissioner.—Were you a collector at the parish church on the occasion when money was returned?—Well, not exactly as collector, sir; but on occasions such as Christmas and Easter it is usual for a number of the Catholic gentlemen of the town to attend, and I was there not exactly as a collector. I know the circumstance you refer to.

14485. Just state what occurred in your presence?—I saw M'Guirk come in amongst others and pay his contribution and walk up the gallery stairs. A short time afterwards this paid official, Smith, followed him, and I saw M'Guirk go down afterwards, and I did not see him again. I saw Laurence Bourke and Smith also speak to him, and he went out and spoke to others outside.

14486. Smith denied that he spoke to Bourke. You will tell us all that occurred. Did you see Smith speak to Laurence Bourke when he entered?—Well, I really cannot recollect that.

14487. Who had charge of the money?—Well, there are generally two collectors writing out the names and the amount of the contributions given.

14488. Were you assisting him?—No, not in that way. I was there as a number of other gentlemen were.

14489. Did you understand that Bourke was put out on account of his vote?—I did not understand he he was put out at all.

14490. Did you understand he was ordered to go to a particular place on account of his vote?—I did.

14491. Ordered to kneel in the porch?—I did—exactly.

14492. On account of his voting for Major Knox?—I did not think he voted at all.

14493. On account of his not having voted?—Yes.

14494. Before you went to the church that day did you understand it was to be done?—I had no idea whatever about it. There was no arrangement about it.

14495. Were you present on any occasion when the bishop spoke about that matter?—I was.

14496. That was on Sunday the 22nd?—It was immediately after the election.

14497. What did you hear his lordship say?—Well, my recollection of the matter is that some of the parishioners had spoken to Dr. Gillooly that they would be dissatisfied to mix with those parties who voted for Major Knox, who, I think he said, sustained the Conservative cause, and therefore he did not wish they would mix with the congregation—that they should remain in the porch.

14498. Is the porch the usual place for the parishioners to hear mass?—Well, I generally stop there I know—that is, the stairs leading up to the chapel. I always stop in that place myself.

14499. Just repeat exactly what the bishop said?—I have given you the substance, and I really cannot remember his words clearer than that—that is, that some of the parishioners had spoken to him that they would feel very dissatisfied to mix with those parties who had not sustained the Liberal cause, and that consequently he would wish that they should remain in the porch and hear mass, and all that sort of thing, in the porch.

14500. Were you present at the abbey at all when anything occurred to Martin Boyle the sergeant?—No, sir.

14501. Did you hear what the bishop said the Sunday before the election?—Well, very likely I was there, but I do not remember exactly. I know he referred to election matters.

14502. Did you see the money taken off the plate, and returned to Bourke?—My impression is that Father Morris took the money and handed it to M'Guirk before mass; and I think that Smith took the money, and returned it to Laurence Bourke after mass.

14503. Why was the money returned? Was it because it was supposed to be part of the proceeds of bribery?—Exactly. They would not have Major Knox's money mixed up with the other money. That was the feeling of the bishop.

14504. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—You said at first you understood that the bishop had been spoken to by some of the parishioners. Were you referring to any statement you had heard from some party?—I think I stated that these were Dr. Gillooly's own words.

14505. Yes, you said so afterwards, but at first you said you understood that some of the people had spoken to the bishop?—I mean that I heard it from the bishop the words he used in his sermon. I had no means of knowing it but that.

14506. Did the bishop on that occasion assign as his reason, the complaints of the parishioners?—That is my impression.

14507. Your impression, but you will not positively swear?—No; I think I am quite certain that Dr. Gillooly said that.

14508. You were at mass on the 15th November?—I generally do attend mass.

14509. Do you remember the bishop on that occasion making any statement, that if Roman Catholic voters voted for the Tory party they should be knocked off as rotten branches?—Well, I remember the words "rotten branches" now, but whether it was in the sermon subsequent to the election, or prior, I cannot say.

14510. But you remember the expression?—I remember the words "rotten branches" being used. I saw a letter afterwards from Dr. Gillooly in a Dublin paper, and that might be in my memory.

14511. But were the words "rotten branches" used in reference to the direction that the persons who voted for the Tory party should sit in the porch?—I think they referred to election matters—certainly.

14512. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—You said that you yourself stop in the porch always—that you hear mass in the porch?—Yes; I do not go into the body.

14513. Or into the galleries?—To the galleries generally. Just the very place where M'Guirk was spoken to by Smith.

14514. Did you not understand that it was intended as a degradation to Bourke, his being directed to kneel there?—Decidedly I did. It is not at all unusual for parties going into chapel to kneel in the other place, but as far as Bourke is concerned I understand it was a degradation.

14515. Did you hear of any other persons except Bourke and M'Guirk being so treated?—These are the only two. I do not believe the thing occurred before.

14516. They had attended chapel before, and have since?—Oh, yes.

14517. Regularly the donation is larger, but is there anything specially significant on a Christmas?—Oh yes, the money goes to the bishop. It is much larger at Easter and Christmas than at any other time.

14518. The Chief Commissioner.—Those are the fees that go to the bishop in the bishop's parish?—Yes.

14519. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—But does the money paid on ordinary Sundays not go to the bishop also?—No; it goes to pay the expenses of the chapel, and it is lodged in with one of the laity.

[The witness was informed that he might withdraw.]

14520. Witness I wish to add—my name has been mentioned by the witness Devanny. He said that some man named Lenehan, or something like that, offered him some money, and that he was referred to me, to trust in me. I never knew such a man as Lenehan, and I know nothing whatever about bribery at the last election. He told Devanny to refer to me and it would be all right. I was anxious to state I know nothing whatever about the matter, and I never knew such a man in my life.

14521. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Nor about any bribery?—No.

(The witness then withdrew.)

Thomas Reid Wilson.

Thomas Reid Wilson sworn and examined.

14522. The Chief Commissioner.—You are an elector I believe?—Yes, sir.

14523. And how long have you been an elector?—I suppose I have been an elector about 15 years.

14524. Have you been assisting the Conservative Registration Society?—Yes, sir.

14525. Since what year?—Since 1855, I think, sir.

14526. Had you the management of the funds of the society?—No, sir; I had nothing whatever to say to them.

14527. What was your position in it?—Merely to attend the registry, and prepare the notices and serve them

14528. And you did not know about the expenses of the society?—No, sir; nothing.

14529. Now did you know Captain Ethelred Knox?—I knew him a few days before the borough election, but not previous to that.

14530. Who introduced you to him?—Well, I could not say who introduced me to him. I met him in the town during the course of the canvass.

14531. Do you know the room he is stated to have had in Mr. Leech's house?—No, sir; I never was in it. I thought he stopped on the Mall with his brother.

14532. So he did, but he is stated to have had a room in Mr. Leech's?—I do not know.

14533. Do you know Stokes?—Yes.

14534. Did you ever see him and the Captain together?—No, sir; I never saw them together. I saw Mr. Stokes every day before and during the election.

14535. Never mind before, but now? Did you get any money for the mob?—I did.

14536. How much?—Five pounds first from Mr. Utred Knox, and £10 subsequently from Major Knox for them.

14537. What time was that?—About the revision time I think.

14538. Was that all the money you spent on any mob on Major Knox's side?—It was, sir—all the money I spent on any mob.

14539. Did you get any other money having reference to the election?—No, sir; not one six-pence.

14540. Or having reference to the revision?—No, sir; unless my own salary.

14541. Did you advance Tiernan a sum of money?—I did.

14542. How much?—Four pounds.

14543. That was in June, 1868?—Yes, sir.

14544. Now you knew Tiernan to be then a voter?—Yes, sir; he was.

14545. You knew him to be a voter?—I did, sir.

14546. Had you ever lent him any money before?—I had, sir.

14547. Did you take his I. O. U.?—I did.

14548. Has he paid you since?—Never.

14549. And you do not expect to be paid?—If he was worth it I would make him pay me.

14550. Did you think at the time you lent him the money he was able to repay you?—No, sir.

14551. Why did you lend him the money?—Because he would not have registered if his rates had not been paid.

14552. Did you do that to support the Conservative side?—I did, sir.

14553. Do you expect anyone to repay you that money?—I would have been repaid if the secretary had not been in bad health—he was in bad health at the time.

14554. Who was the secretary?—Mr. Robinson.

14555. Did you apply to him for it?—No; he was in a very delicate state of health.

14556. Did you expect that to be repaid out of the funds of the society?—I did.

14557. What I mean by that is you did not advance that money as a mere gratuity to this man?—No, sir.

14558. But you expected it to be repaid out of the funds of the society?—I did.

14559. Did you pay any other person's rates?—I paid the rates of a man named Burrowes.

14560. How much?—I have his I. O. U. [produced I. O. U. dated 30th June, 1868, of Burrowes for £1 14*s.* 6*d.*]

14561. Tell me names of any other persons whose rates were paid?—I paid the rates of a man named Robinson—I could not find his I. O. U.

14562. How much, and what is his Christian name?—John Robinson. He is an elderly man, and I think he was examined here before you. I could not say exactly the amount. I think it was something about 30*s.*

14563. Anyone else?—No.

14564. And you only paid these three?—Only these three.

14565. Do you know anyone else besides yourself who paid the rates of the voters, or who marked them to pay?—No, sir, I do not.

14566. Do you believe anyone else was paid?—I believe there were some paid by Mr. M'Niffe on the other side.

14567. What M'Niffe?—Patrick M'Niffe.

14568. I am aware that such things are done; but I want to know how much was paid on your side, and on the other side?—I have told you what I paid. I do not know any others.

14569. These men were understood to be Conservative voters?—Tiernan generally voted with us but he was not called a Conservative voter. He was always placed on the Liberal side.

14570. A doubtful man?—Doubtful.

14571. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Did he promise to vote for you if he was paid this £4?—No, sir. I never asked him.

14572. But the two others, Burrowes and Robinson?—No, I never asked. I expected they would vote with us, but I never asked.

14573. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Did you make a copy of the register of 1867 for Major Knox?—I think I made out a list.

14574. Did you give the marked list to Major Knox?—I sent it to him.

14575. Did you do the same with regard to the registry of 1868?—I did, sir.

14576. And had you besides that consultations with him in reference to men who were doubtful?—No.

14577. Had you any conversation with him?—I had. I was in his lodgings frequently.

14578. Discussing about the voters?—Yes, discussing what voters were likely to vote. The new Reform Act had just come in, and there were a great number of voters added to the list, and no one knew how they would vote, that is those between four and eight pounds.

14579. Did you make it your business to communicate to Major Knox whatever information you could give him?—Decidedly, sir, but I had very little means of arriving at it, because I did not know a great number of the names.

14580. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Had you anything to do with the Registration Society at the time of Sergeant Armstrong's election?—Yes, sir; I was connected with it since 1855.

14581. The Chief Commissioner.—Now, you sent the list of 1867 to Major Knox?—Yes.

14582. Was that produced in Carrick?—Not that I am aware of. Mr. Coffey had a list in his hand, and he asked me if I sent a list, but he did not put it into my hand, and I cannot say whether it was the list I sent or not.

14583. Was that divided into Protestant and Roman Catholic voters?—Yes, sir.

14584. At particular columns?—I would write a list of Catholics and Protestants.

14585. Was that on the printed list of the clerk of the peace?—No, sir; it was on a written list.

14586. Written out in your own handwriting?—Yes, sir.

14587. You stated, I see, at Carrick that you burned some letters from Major Knox before the election?—Yes, sir.

14588. Why did you burn the letters?—Whenever I answer a business letter I always burn it unless it is a receipt or an acknowledgment of the payment of money. I could not keep such an accumulation of letters as I receive.

14589. Can you give us any information as to the mob violence that took place during the election?—I was pelted myself at the head of Knox-street on the day preceding the election, and I was obliged to apply to Mr. Coulson the very night he got the cut in the temple. I asked him for protection to see me home not more than about 200 yards from this court-house.

TWELFTH DAY.
October 19.
Thomas Reid Wilson.

14590. And did you believe you could not safely reach your home without an escort?—I did.

14591. Are you aware of any voters having been deterred from recording their votes by the violence of the mob?—No person, sir. I could not say.

14592. Did the mobs appear to be organized?—Well, I did not see that organization, sir. They seemed absolutely ubiquitous. They seemed to be here and there and everywhere almost at the same time.

14593. Did their employment manifest any pre-concert?—Oh, certainly.

14594. How, now—could you give us any idea?—Either that or they must have been so large that they were about everywhere; because if there were two or three friends of Major Knox's in this street there would be a crowd surrounding the house they were in, and if Major Knox himself was at the Mall there would be a crowd at the Mall on the same evening.

14595. Were the mobs very numerous?—There were several mobs through the town—not one large mob. There was a vast number of mobs.

14596. Did they appear to have any leader?—Well, I could not say. It was as much as ones life would be worth then to look out of a window if the mobs were passing.

14597. Did you stay in owing to the violence of the mob unless it was necessary to go out?—Yes; unless it was necessary.

14598. And then you went out with an escort?—No; I only got an escort one night from the hotel.

14599. You know Mr. Stokes well?—Yes, sir.

14600. And Mr. Cherry?—Yes, sir.

14601. And Mr. Atcheson?—I do not know him very well, but I know him.

14602. Did you know Peter Harrison had been got to leave town before the election?—I heard he was gone.

14603. Did you know Mr. Atcheson had gone on a car with him?—I never heard that until I heard it here.

14604. Were you the Secretary of the Conservative Registration Society?—No, sir. Mr. Robinson was the secretary. I was merely acting for the revision, and as soon as the revision was over I was done.

14605. Well, what name had you there?—I had no particular name.

14606. Did you know that Stokes was getting voters to leave town?—I heard he was tampering with voters before the election.

14607. Who told you that?—I believe it was generally reported, but I could not mention any name.

14608. Did you know the names of those men whom he said he succeeded in bribing?—Except the M'Mullens I did not know any other name.

14609. Did you mean he had succeeded with the M'Mullens?—Yes.

14610. Who told you that?—I do not know. It was generally spoken.

14611. That the M'Mullens were out of the way?—That the M'Mullens were gone.

14612. Was "gone" the phrase used?—I think so.

14613. Did you know that at Carrick?—Yes, I did.

14614. And that Stokes had accomplished that?—Well, I think I did.

14615. Did you hear Stokes examined at Carrick?—No, sir, I did not.

14616. Now, did you hear that Stokes had got away any other voters?—No.

14617. Were you before the election engaged in going over the lists with anyone on Major Knox's side; I mean four or five days before the election?—No.

14618. Were you not consulted to give information, you that knew so much of the town?—I gave the information on the original list I sent to Major Knox. I could not give any information with regard to the voters between £4 and £8, for I did not know them, and I think 102 had been added to the lists by the reduction of the franchise.

14619. Did you speak to Captain Ethelred Knox before the election?—No, sir, not until I met him at Carrick.

14620. Now, you say you heard that Stokes was tampering with voters before the election; and you say you heard that in conversation amongst your friends on the Conservative side?—It was spoken of on every side.

14621. Have you any idea at all who was supplying him with money?—Not the slightest.

14622. Had you any idea at all as to who had brought down any money?—No, sir. I did not know that there was any money brought down.

14623. Did you not know perfectly well that Stokes would not promise money unless he had some back?—I thought it would be unlike him.

14624. At the time you believed he had some back?—Yes, sir.

14625. Otherwise you knew very well Stokes would not give a promise of money?—I do not think he would.

14626. Had you any idea at all as to what back he had?—No, sir, not the least.

14627. Were you yourself engaged in anything of the kind?—No, I was not. There were four charges brought against me in the bill of particulars, and I refuted them all at Carrick.

14628. Had you anything to say to the distribution of money on any former occasion?—No, sir, never.

14629. Never distributed any?—Never one sixpence, except what I tell you.

14630. Do you know of any other money being distributed at either Mr. Macdonogh's first election or the second election, than what is already detailed as to the £850 and £485?—I did not know of that until I heard it here.

14631. You did not?—No, sir; it came upon me by surprise.

14632. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Can you give us any information, either upon hearsay or of your own knowledge, as to the giving of money or intimidation on Captain Flanagan's side?—There was one man you had up before you who I heard got money—he and his son—Patrick Barry at the river side. I heard he got money for supporting Captain Flanagan.

14633. The Chief Commissioner.—From whom?—I do not know from whom. I merely heard it.

14634. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Who did you hear it from?—It was generally rumoured.

14635. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Could you tell what was the name of the person who mentioned this?—I could not tell you, sir. In fact, there is such a lot of rumours at election times, that one could not positively remember them all; and there were rumours of money on both sides at the last election.

14636. Was there any other voter in reference to whom there was a rumour like that?—You had them all before you—you had Blair.

14637. Anyone else?—Well, there were the two men whom I was accused of bribing, and they were both before you—Reed and O'Brien, and they denied that I said anything to them. I had it over and over again thrown into my teeth that I bribed them.

14638. Were they also reported to have got money at Captain Flanagan's side?—No, sir, but from me.

14639. And when you mentioned Patrick Barry and his son were you referring to a rumour that they had got money on Captain Flanagan's side?—Yes.

14640. Well, was there anyone else?—I heard that Robert Hazlett on the Mall got money from Captain Flanagan before he voted.

14641. Any others?—No, sir, I did not hear of any others.

14642. Is there any information you can give us in reference to intimidation on any side, or practised by persons acting for Captain Flanagan?—Well, I would not like to say anything except what I personally know. I could not say anything from hearsay about it.

14643. You are bound on your oath to answer any question we put to you. From rumour or hearsay can you give us any information in reference to intimidation?—Well, I heard that clerical intimidation from the altar from Sabbath to Sabbath caused a great deal of the riot.

14644. Anything further besides the clerical intimidation?—No, sir, I did not hear anything.

14645. Did you hear it rumoured that these addresses from the altar very much excited the people?—I did, sir.

14646. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Did you hear the names of any of the clergymen mentioned?—No, sir. I do not know the names of the Sligo clergymen, except Dr. Gilloolly and Father Morris. These are the only two.

14647. Could you recollect from whom you heard these things?—I could not swear. I heard you ask some questions about the meeting from Mr. Abbott. I printed the circulars in my office, and I brought you up a copy of the circular to show it to you.

[Circular handed in and read by the Chief Commissioner, as follows:—]

"Sligo, 19th April, 1869.

"DEAR SIR—You are requested to attend a meeting of the friends and supporters of Major Knox, on Wednesday, the 21st inst., at half-past three o'clock in the afternoon, at Allingham's Hotel, to consider the present position of affairs in our borough, and secure its future representation.

"I am, dear Sir,

"Your obedient servant,

"R. D. ROBINSON.

"100 copies. 19th April, 1869."

14648. The Chief Commissioner.—Who instructed you to print the circular?—Major Knox; and Mr. Robinson gave me leave to put his name to it. He was then in bad health.

14649. In whose handwriting is the words "100 copies"?—That is the foreman's. It is the direction to the printer. That should be 300 copies.

14650. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—You have had much experience of the views of the Conservative voters in this borough?—Yes.

14651. Is it your belief that they generally expect money after an election?—No, sir; there are a few off-shoots that expect money, but I think the general body of them are as pure a constituency as any in the world.

14652. What do you mean by a few off-shoots?—There are a few members of it.

14653. Could you give me any idea of the number?—Probably about ten.

14654. You do not think the number should be higher than that?—I would not put the number higher than that.

14655. The Chief Commissioner.—Mr. Sedley paid twenty-six?—I was perfectly astonished when I heard that.

14656. When did you hear it?—I did not hear it until I saw the list in print.

14657. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Do you know anything about the views of the Liberal voters?—No, sir, I do not.

14658. Do you consider, as an active member of the Conservative party that any large proportion of them are accessible to bribes?—No, they are generally very strong against it. I would not say there was a greater number than what I have said accessible to bribery.

14659. The Chief Commissioner.—According to Sergeant Armstrong's evidence, there were ninety-seven off-shoots after his election?—I understand from his evidence that he did not think to be applied for that until afterwards.

14660. But they took the money?—Yes.

14661. What he means is men who after an election will take money?—Well, it is a great trial to a man, if you place money in his way, to refuse to take it.

14662. But as a man of the world, do not you think there is a great many more than ten on either side?—I do not think there is more than ten on either side, who would not vote for either party without money. If they got money they would take it.

14663. They require to be strengthened by their own party?—I think they would take it if they got it, but I do not think they would actually require it to vote with their party.

14664. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Are you still employed at the revision business?—Yes, sir. In fact I was elected secretary about a week or ten days ago; since the death of Mr. Robinson.

14665. And you receive a salary?—Yes.

(The witness withdrew.)

James Grevatt sworn and examined.

James Grevatt.

14666. The Chief Commissioner.—Are you a voter of the borough?—Yes, sir.

14667. Who did you vote for at the last election?—For Major Knox.

14668. Who did you vote for at the previous election?—For Mr. Macdonogh.

14669. Did you get any money after that election?—Yes.

14670. How much?—Twenty-five pounds.

14671. Who paid you?—John Burke.

14672. That was after Mr. Macdonogh's first election?—Yes.

14673. Who canvassed you at that election?—Mr. Macdonogh.

14674. What business are you in?—Cabinetmaker.

14675. Did you expect any money when you voted?—No, sir, I did not.

14676. How did you know you were on the list for money?—I did not know that.

14677. Somebody must have told you or you never would have got the money?—Well, I got an intimation of it at the time.

14678. I am sure you did, otherwise you could not have got it. Who told you you were on the list for money?—A man of the name of Burke.

14679. Did you ever get any money before that?—Never, sir, by anyone.

14680. Did you ever get any money since?—I did, sir.

14681. From whom?—At Mr. Macdonogh's second election.

14682. From Mr. Sedley—Yes.

14683. How much?—Fifteen pounds.

14684. Do you know why you only got £15 the second time?—I do not, sir; I never expected it.

14685. Would you take money after any election for the man for whom you voted?—I suppose if I took it twice I would take it again. I cannot say. I might.

14686. You do not think you would refuse?—I do not know; under circumstances I might.

14687. Do you think it any harm to take money after an election from the candidate for whom you voted?—Well, I must say I never did think it harm.

14688. You do not think it harm now?—Oh, this inquiry has changed my mind.

14689. Did you go to Mr. Abbot's meeting?—No, sir, I did not.

14690. Why did you not go to Mr. Abbot's meeting?—I had no great desire to go to a political meeting.

14691. You voted for Major Knox at the last election?—I did, sir.

14692. Now, did you expect any money would be going after Major Knox's election in the same way?—I did not.

14693. But did you not expect it to be going?—It never entered my mind.

14694. Do you know Stokes?—I do.

14695. Did he speak to you at all about this?—Never.

14696. Who was with the Major when he canvassed you?—I think it was Mr. Phibbs.

TWELFTH DAY.
October 19.

James Grevatt.

14697. Well, we know these gentlemen did not speak to you about money. Did anybody speak to you about money?—Not one of them.

14698. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Did you get £25 in cash or did he stop anything?—There was some £12 10*s.* due to Mr. Williams at the time.

14699. Was that stopped out of the £25?—It was.

14700. Was there any other sum stopped out of it?—Not that I recollect.

14701. Did you get the whole £15 from Mr. Sedley in cash?—If I do not mistake I got £7 10*s.* and £5 a few days afterwards.

14702. You got from Mr. Sedley?—No, from John Burke.

14703. Did you get the whole £15 from Mr. Sedley in cash?—I did, sir.

14704. The Chief Commissioner.—Did you look upon it as bribery, taking the £25 and the £15?—I did not.

(The witness withdrew.)

Daniel Clarke.

Daniel Clarke sworn and examined.

14705. The Chief Commissioner.—Do you know Mr. Perkins who was examined here?—Yes.

14706. Is he any relation or connexion of yours?—He is a brother-in-law of mine.

14707. Do you hold any official position in Sligo?—Yes.

14708. What are you?—Clerk of the Union.

14709. Do you remember Mr. Perkins being in Sligo in October during the revision?—Well, I do recollect that he was.

14710. Was he ever with you in your office?—Yes, he has been frequently.

14711. Frequently in your office?—Yes.

14712. Do you remember going over the returns with him you were making for parliamentary purposes?—No, nor do I believe anything of the sort ever occurred.

14713. Had you any conversation with him about the revision?—It is very probable I had, but I do not recollect any of it.

14714. Was he often in your office at that time?—I cannot say he was in my office at that particular time; in fact, I rather think he was not.

14715. Was he ever in a similar position anywhere else; that is, as Clerk of Union?—He had a brother who was Clerk of the Union if I recollect right.

14716. Where was that?—At Killala.

14717. We have it, but I forget the exact dates, that he was there, according to his book, off and on in Sligo from the 11th to the 20th October. Do you remember his being in your office during these days?—No, I do not.

14718. Was he interesting himself in the revision at all?—No, he took not the slightest interest in it.

14719. Do you remember his being in your office?—Well, I cannot recollect that he was in my office during the time of the revision. In fact I have not a very distinct recollection of his presence here at all at the time, but the matter is forced upon my mind by his evidence. I recollect his wife, my sister, being at our house at the time; but I have no distinct recollection of the office.

14720. Used he to be travelling through the country during that time?—Yes; I rather think he left every morning, and came back as far as possible the same night when he was travelling on a railway line, so that he could get back.

14721. Is Mr. Perkins in any way connected with politics in Sligo?—I never knew him to be a politician anywhere. In fact, he eschews politics.

14722. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Did you ever hear before this inquiry of your brother-in-law having offered £50 to any voter?—No, I was quite astonished when I heard, but not from him, of the matter. I was quite astonished when I saw Dunleavy's evidence in the paper.

(The witness withdrew.)

Matthew Feeny.

Matthew Feeny, sworn and examined.

14723. The Chief Commissioner.—Are you an elector?—Yes, sir.

14724. Who did you vote for at the last election?—I did not vote at all.

14725. Why did you not vote at the last election?—I determined in my mind I would not interfere. I was holding the public situation of relieving officer.

14726. Were you examined in Carrick?—No, sir.

14727. When were you appointed relieving officer?—Better than sixteen years ago.

14728. Did you vote at the election before?—I did.

14729. For whom?—For Sergeant Armstrong.

14730. Were you relieving officer then?—Yes.

14731. Did you get any money after that?—No. I never got any money in my life at any election.

14732. Did you vote before Sergeant Armstrong's election?—I did, sir.

14733. For whom?—For Mr. Somers all through life.

14734. All through?—Yes, sir. I voted for him against Mr. Wynne, who is the chairman of the board of guardians, and against Mr. Townley, Mr. Sadler, and Mr. Ball.

14735. I need not ask you if you got money from Mr. Somers?—No. I paid towards assisting him.

14736. Had you any reason to believe you would lose your situation if you voted at the last election?—Well, no; I had not.

14737. I want to know this. You voted before all through for Mr. Somers, and you voted for the Sergeant, and that is strong evidence of your belonging to the Liberal party?—Yes. I did not vote at the last election—at twelve o'clock I heard that the election was lost to Flanagan. I heard by the account of the neighbours that twelve or fifteen Roman Catholic voters voted against him, and I knew at that hour it was impossible to turn the balance.

14738. And would you have voted for Captain Flanagan?—Yes, so that a vote would return him I would, although I never spoke to the gentleman in my life, nor he to me.

14739. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Were any of your windows broken?—Oh, not at the late election. I did not during the two last elections leave my own place. The day after the polling I saw several houses broken.

(The witness withdrew.)

John Robinson.

John Robinson, sworn and examined.

14740. The Chief Commissioner.—Who did you vote for at the last election?—For Major Knox. I am a Conservative these forty-six years, a Liberal Conservative, and I always go with the Conservative side.

14741. Did you vote for Mr. Macdonogh the election before?—I did.

14742. Did you get any money for that vote?—About three months afterwards I met Mr. Sedley in Mr. Leech's shop, and I went in accidentally. He was standing at the counter with Leech, and on coming home he met me in or about Doherty's shop, and said, "Come down to my office." I went down, and he gave me fifteen sovereigns, and said, "There is a present," or something to that effect. When I got the fifteen sovereigns I came out. There was a hubboo about money expected, and I took the fifteen sovereigns and I showed it; and when I was asked "What news," I said, "There is my news." I showed it to different people, and they all knew I got the money.

14743. You would not have got the money if you had not voted for Mr. Macdonogh?—God knows I could not swear that.

14744. Did you ever get any money before?—I got £5 from Mr. Wynne's election.

14745. Who gave it to you?—Mr. Morrison who is now dead.

14746. Was that the election at which Mr. Wynne beat Mr. Somers?—No; it was Mr. Wynne and Mr. John Martin's election.

14747. Who got in that time?—It was Mr. John Martin. There were open houses that time.

14748. Did you ever get any other money besides that £5 and the £15?—Well, I cannot recollect.

14749. Did you vote at Mr. Sadler's election?—No

14750. Why?—The reason was I did not want to interfere with it.

14751. Did you vote at Colonel Townley's election?—No. I told him I could not for I had promised.

14752. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Did you get any money from Mr. Monds?—Never.

14753. Did you get any money at Mr. Macdonogh's first election?—I cannot recollect. I do not think I did. No one ever came near me for my vote.

14754. The Chief Commissioner.—Have you been offered money now for having voted at the last election?—No, but if anybody gives me money, God knows I will take it with pleasure. I am willing to earn it, but if they give it to me into my hand I will take it good humouredly.

(The witness withdrew.)

John Robinson.

Robert Lindsay sworn and examined.

Robert Lindsay.

14755. The Chief Commissioner.—Who did you vote for at the last election?—For Major Knox.

14756. Did you vote for Mr. Macdonogh at the previous election?—I did.

14757. For that did Mr. Sedley give you any money?—Ten pounds.

14758. Why did he give you only £10?—I could not tell.

14759. What are you by occupation?—I am a farmer, sir.

14760. Are you a Sligo man?—I live in the borough.

14761. Who is your landlord?—The Right Hon. John Wynne.

14762. Do you know anybody else on the estate who got money for voting for Mr. Macdonogh?—I did not know what they got until I saw it in the paper about the inquiry.

14763. Did you not know there was money going?—I did not know.

14764. Did you ever get any money before?—Not in my life, and I am voting these twenty years on the Conservative side and never left it. I voted two or three times for Mr. Somers and for Mr. Wynne against Mr. Somers.

14765. Do you expect any money for the last election?—Indeed, I do not—not a cent. I got £10 and I am very sorry I handled it. If I had something that would be worth while I would be glad.

14766. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Did you hear any talk of money going at the last election?—There was a rumour going of money going on both sides; but I had no knowledge of it.

14767. Did you make up your mind that if that money was going you would not take it?—Well, I think if I was offered money after the election I would take it.

14768. The Chief Commissioner.—What is the least sum you would take?—Well, the most I would get I would take.

14769. What is the most you would take?—I never made a bargain.

14770. You said you would take money. You would not take 1*s.* or 6*d.* Is £10 the lowest?—The same as Mr. Sedley gave me—£10.

14771. Did you complain that it was not enough?—No, sir, I did not.

14772. Do you know anything more about money?—Not a penny. I voted at that election for Mr. Macdonogh and I did not expect one penny.

(The witness withdrew.)

Samuel Gillmor sworn and examined.

Samuel Gillmor.

14773. The Chief Commissioner.—What is your occupation?—A farmer.

14774. Who is your landlord?—Mr. Cooper.

14775. Did you vote at the last election for Major Knox?—I did.

14776. Did you vote at the previous election for Mr. Macdonogh?—I did.

14777. Did Mr. Sedley give you any money?—Well, he did.

14778. How much?—Twenty pounds.

14779. Did you ever get any money before the £20 for having voted?—Well, I suppose I did, but it's a good while ago—a long time ago. It is out of my memory now.

14780. Who gave you the money before—first of all, how much did you get?—I really could not tell.

14781. About how much?—I don't recollect. I think I got £30 once.

14782. Who gave you the £30?—It was sent out of town to me, to my own house.

14783. After whose election was that sent—was it for voting for Mr. Wynne?—No.

14784. Was it for voting for John Sadler?—I do not exactly recollect who he was.

14785. Or Colonel Townley?—But I think Sadler was implicated in it.

14786. Did you vote for Mr. Somers or against him?—I did not vote on either side.

14787. You did not vote at all?—No.

14788. The time you got the £30?—Yes.

14789. Who gave you the £30?—I met a young man here in Sligo—Henry O'Connor, a merchant—as I was coming in from the country to keep myself safe, because I lived far in the country, and I was in dread of the mob coming by night for me, and he stopped me on the road. "Now, Mr. Gillmor," said he, "where are you going?" "I am going into the tally-room," said I. "What will I give you," said he, "if you don't go in at all?" "I don't know," said I. "If you vote on our side," said he, "I will get you £50." "No, I would not vote against my own side," said I, "if you gave me £400." "Well, I'll tell you what I will do with you," said he. "I will send out £30, and don't vote at all, and go out of the way." "Well," said I, "a very little thing would make me do that." I did not care whether I voted or not, so I went away up as far as Knock-na-rae and stayed there.

14790. Did you go to the top of the hill?—Well, I did not go to the top of the hill, but I went convenient to it. I amused myself there till the voting was all over, and came to my own house after that, and no more about it.

14791. How long after that did you get the £30?—It was at the time; I would not go without it.

TWELFTH DAY.

October 19.

Samuel Gillmor.

14792. Who gave you the £30?—I understood it came from Henry O'Connor, but he is dead.

14793. Who brought it to your house?—I am not certain who he was—it's a good while ago.

14794. Who did you understand brought it to your house?—Some of the mob that belonged to the town, and when they came I took it and walked away and no more about it.

14795. You got that £30 for not voting?—For not voting.

14796. Against the Liberal side—O'Connor was on the Liberal side?—He was on the Liberal side.

14797. Do you remember now was he for Colonel Townley or for Sadler?—Well, really I can't tell.

14798. Did you ever get any other money beside that £30?—I got £5 lately.

14799. Who gave you the £5?—I could not say who gave it to me.

14800. Where did you get it?—I got it here in the Court-house.

14801. How long ago?—In the Clerk of the Peace's office.

14802. Who gave it to you?—The Clerk of the Peace as far as I understood. I did not know whether he was or not, but he gave it to me.

14803. When was that?—Michael Doherty—I suppose he is not far from us—came out to my house and said, "Mr. Gillmor, there is a gentleman in Sligo that wants to see you." "Who is he?" said I. "Oh, a gentleman, come on as quick as you can." "Well, I am going in any way, Michael," so in I came. I came down here below to the corner. Michael Doherty saw him passing by. "There's the gentleman," said he, "follow him up and ask him does he want you." So up I went and he came to the court-house here—to his office. "Sir," said I, "are you wanting me?' "What's your name," said he. "My name is Gillmor," said I. "Oh, yes," said he. "I do. Here's £5 for you. Will you give an acknowledgment." "Certainly," said I, "I will." So I took it and walked away, and I would not know the man the next day, because he was a stranger.

14804. Did you give him the acknowledgment?—I gave it.

14805. What was it?—An I O U. He drew it himself and I put my name to it.

14806. You put your name—Samuel Gillmor?—Yes, Samuel Gillmor.

14807. How long ago was that, Mr. Gillmor?—To be exact about it I can't tell.

14808. How long after the election was it?—It was before the election.

14809. What was the £5 for?—Well, really I could not exactly say what it was for, but he gave it to me. He did not mind me what it was for.

14810. Had you any idea in your own mind what it was for?—Well, indeed, for fear of making a mistake I could not say no more than that I thought it might be from Major Knox. He came out to my place to canvass me—he and Mr. Phibbs. They came out one night to canvass me, and I gave him my word that I would go with him; that he might not make himself the least uneasy about me, and that was a good while before the election.

14811. Would you know the Clerk of the Peace if you saw him again——?—Not one of me would know him. I understand he is not here now. They said he was Mr. Knox at that time, but I am told he is not the man now.

14812. Had you applied for this money before?—Sir?

14813. Had you applied for this money?—Why, I wrote to him—I think it was about last spring two years—for the loan of £5 or £6.

14814. Whom was it you wrote to?—To Major Knox. I got no answer from him for a good while, until this man, Michael Doherty, came out to me, and told me; and it was this man who was in the Clerk of the Peace's office that gave it to me; so whether it came from Major Knox or not I can't say, but this gentleman gave it to me.

14815. Did you ever get any other money?—Not to my recollection.

14816. But you might?—Oh, I voted, I suppose, these forty years.

14817. But you took £30 for not voting?—Well, I was very easy about it. I would as soon I did not get the £30, and to go in and vote for Mr.——

14818. What did Michael Doherty say to you?—He told me to come in, that there was a gentleman in the town that wanted to see me.

14819. Had you ever applied to the gentleman that you call the Clerk of the Peace for money?—Never.

14820. Had you ever applied to anyone but Major Knox?—No. I understood according to what Michael Doherty told me that he was the Clerk of the Peace.

14821. You swear you never got any other money?—Not since these two elections.

14822. Or before?—Or before, only the £30.

14823. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Did you post that letter to Major Knox yourself in the post office?—I may say I did. It was Michael Crane that put it into the office.

14824. You gave it to Michael Crane to put in the office?—Yes; I stood by while he was putting it in.

14825. You stood by?—I did.

15826. The Chief Commissioner.—Sit down and wait. We have sent for Doherty?—I told him the other day that when I was called I would have to mention his name.

15827. And that you would tell the truth like an honest man?—I would tell the truth if it was to save his life or any other man's.

(The witness withdrew.)

Michael Currid.

Michael Currid sworn and examined.

14828. The Chief Commissioner.—Did you vote at the last election?—I did.

14829. Whom did you vote for?—Captain Flanagan.

14830. Did you vote for Sergeant Armstrong at the previous election?—I did.

14831. Did you get any money after that?—I believe I did.

14832. What do you mean by saying "you believe you did"—have you any doubt of it?—I understood that Michael Foley left £15 to a friend of mine to give to me.

14833. Who was the friend of yours?—Mr. Brennan in Market-street.

14834. Did he give you the money?—I owed him an account and he kept it. I did not ask it from him—the £15.

14835. Your account was never demanded from you after that?—Never.

14836. Was your account about £15?—It was less, I think.

14837. Did you ever get any other money but that?—Never.

14838. At the time you voted for Sergeant Armstrong did you vote according to principle?—Certainly, I did.

14839. Did you expect any money?—Not for my vote.

14840. Did you expect any money would be going after the election?—Well, I could not say whether or no.

14841. Did you think it likely there would be?—I never heard.

14842. Did you not think it likely?—At the time I voted I did not hear.

14843. Did you think it likely that money would be going?—Certainly. I dare say I thought there would be money going.

Michael Currid.

14844. Why did you think there would be money going—was it because it was always going after elections?—Well, that was the first time that ever I voted, and I could not say before that.

14845. Did you understand from what you knew of Sligo that it was likely there would be money going after the election?—Sometimes there was, and sometimes there was not.

14846. Did you expect that any money would be going after Captain Flanagan's election?—No.

14847. Why?—I could not say why, because there never was any talk about it. I never heard any talk about money being going.

14848. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—There was talk about it in Sergeant Armstrong's time then?—Not till after the election—long after it. For nine months, I think, I did not hear of it.

14849. You told us you thought there would be money going at the election?—After the election.

14850. No, but at the election. You told us you thought it would be going at the election?—Well, if I said that I thought wrong.

14851. Did you say it—say whether you did or not?—I say I did not know anything about it, or hear anything about it at the time of the election.

14852. Did you expect any?—No, not for my vote.

14853. Did you expect you would get some money afterwards for your vote, or not?—Well, after——

14854. Now, I mean at the time of the election?—No.

14855. Did you hear anything about drink going at the last election?—Captain Flanagan's election?

14856. Yes?—No.

14857. You did not hear it?—Nor see it. I never got a glass of beer or anything else.

14858. Did you see anyone or hear of anyone getting any?—Unless what I, or anyone else, would pay for out of our own pockets.

14859. Were there a good many mobs?—Mobs?

14860. Yes?—Everyone has a mob, I think.

14861. Were there a good many country people in town?—I could not say.

14862. Have you been long in Sligo yourself?—I was born in Sligo.

14863. And do not you know the Sligo faces?—Yes.

14864. Did you see many people in town that were not Sligo faces; now, just think?—There were plenty of people every day that are not Sligo people in town.

14865. But were there more than the usual number among the mob that day?—Well, I dare say there were plenty.

14866. With frieze coats?—Certainly. Every day there are plenty of people with frieze coats.

14867. Come, you know perfectly well what I mean; were there many people making up the mobs that did not belong to Sligo that day?—Well, I dare say there were more in town that day than there would be on other days.

14868. Did you see many drunk?—No.

14869. Did you see any of them drunk?—No, I could not say.

(The witness withdrew.)

James Cunningham was called.

14870. A person in court stated that he had been sick for the last twelve months, and was not able to attend. However James Cunningham himself got upon the table immediately afterwards, and took his seat in the box. The person who had spoken said it was Peter Cunningham he meant.

James Cunningham was then sworn and examined.

James Cunningham.

14871. The Chief Commissioner.—Did you vote at the last election?—No.

14872. Did you vote at the previous election?—Yes.

14873. Whom did you vote for?—Mr. Macdonogh.

14874. What is your occupation?—A grocer.

14875. Did you get any money after Mr. Macdonogh's election?—About eight or nine months, I think, after it, I got £15.

14876. From whom?—Mr. Sedley.

14877. Did you get any money at Mr. Macdonogh's previous election?—Not on my own account.

14878. But on anybody else's account?—Twenty pounds was left with me by Mr. John Lyons for a man named Owen Conlan.

14879. Did you give it to him?—Yes. He was to vote for Mr. Macdonogh, and I gave him the money according as I was directed.

14880. Was that before the election?—After it.

14881. Did Owen Conlan owe you an account?—No.

14882. Why were you selected as the trustee for Owen Conlan?—Well, Mr. Lyons and I were acquainted, and he left the money with me.

14883. Why did not you vote at the last election?—I was not on the registry.

14884. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Did anyone pay you to keep off?—No.

14885. The Chief Commissioner.—Did you ever get any other money but that £15, and £20 for the other voters?—Never.

14886. Why did you take the £15—did not you know it was for your vote?—Well, I took it as it was given to me.

14887. Would you take it now?—Well, I don't know what I might do now.

(The witness withdrew.)

Major Knox re-examined.

Major Knox.

14888. The Chief Commissioner.—Samuel Gillmor has been examined here, and he said that he wrote to you asking for money, and that afterwards he was brought by Michael Doherty to a gentleman whom he describes as the Clerk of the Peace, who we all know was Mr. Utred Knox. Did Gillmor ever write to you for money?—I don't remember his writing to me; but I remember hearing that he got money from Mr. Utred Knox. Oh, yes, I remember that—quite—at Carrick; but I don't think I ever remember his writing to me.

14889. Was it Utred Knox that stated it at Carrick—Samuel Gillmor was not examined?—No; but my recollection is that he stated it at Carrick.

14890. It is now said by Gillmor that he never applied to Utred Knox, but that he wrote to you and was brought by Michael Doherty to the Clerk of the Peace?—Well, I think he is quite inaccurate. My recollection of that is, I don't think I ever heard of his name as getting money till Utred Knox volunteered it at Carrick. I don't think he ever wrote at all.

14891. Volunteered?—Volunteered. I think that will be seen on the evidence. I don't think I ever saw that Mr. Gillmor that I know of.

TWELFTH DAY.

October 19.

Samuel Gillmor.

Samuel Gillmor was recalled.

14892. Major Knox.—I do not think I ever saw you except once when I canvassed you. Did you ever see me except when I canvassed you?

14893. The Chief Commissioner. — He says you called out with Mr. Harloe Phibbs?—I think I remember that quite.

14894. That is all?—It's just possible he might have written to me and that I sent some letter as I did some letters to Sligo to Mr. Pollock, but I don't remember it.

14895. Utred Knox says he went out for you with the money?—I never gave him any money. There may be one or two on my list, but I never heard Gillmor's name.

(The witness withdrew.)

Edward MacIlhenry.

Edward MacIlhenry sworn and examined.

14896. The Chief Commissioner.—Did you vote at the last election?—I did.

14897. Whom did you vote for? — Captain Flanagan.

14898. Did you vote at the previous election for Sergeant Armstrong?—I did.

14899. After that was any money offered to you?—No, not for that I suppose, for there was no money offered to me at any time; but in the course of nine months afterwards, I was sent for by a messenger to go to Bryan Chrystal. I signed a paper there and got £20. It was never promised to me by anyone.

14900. Had you ever got any money before?—Never.

14901. Did you know that that money was in consequence of the election?—I suspected that it was.

14902. What did Chrystal say to you?—He said nothing only gave me the money, and I signed the paper.

14903. How did you know that you were to go to Chrystal's?—I was sent for by a little boy.

14904. Had you heard that the money had come down to town?—I did not previously.

14905. Who told you?—I did not hear.

14906. Had you made any application for money?—Never.

14907. What business are you in?—I am a shoemaker.

14908. Do you think it a right thing to take money?—Well, I took it. It is one of the acts that I am very sorry for, for I am twenty-five years voting in Sligo, and never took a halfpenny before, nor never looked for it, and if I wished to make politics a trade, I suppose I would have made something of it in that time.

14909. Did you expect that any money would be going after this election?—No; I voted for Captain Flanagan without ever being asked.

14910. I suppose you were in politics a Liberal?—Always. I have been so for these twenty-five years.

14911. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Did you get the whole of the £20 in cash?—I did.

14912. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Did you hear anything about mob money going at the last election?—No.

14913. Do you believe any was going?—It might be for all I know. I did not mix myself up in anything of the kind.

14914. You did not hear anything of it?—Never.

14915. What part of the town do you belong to?—Castle-street.

(The witness withdrew.)

Martin Davy.

Martin Davy sworn and examined.

14916. The Chief Commissioner.—Did you vote at the last election?—I did.

14917. Whom did you vote for?—Captain Flanagan.

14918. Did you vote for Sergeant Armstrong?—I did.

14919. After that election did you get any money?—I did.

14920. How much?—£15.

14921. Who gave it to you?—Bryan Chrystal.

14922. What business are you in?—A farmer.

14923. Who is your landlord?—I am my landlord myself.

14924. How much land have you?—Seven acres and a half.

14925. How did you know the money was at Chrystal's for you?—Begor, when it was in it, everyone knew it.

14926. But who told you—somebody must have told you?—Why, in fact, twenty told me.

14927. Twenty electors?—I don't know.

14928. Did you know of anyone else being paid at Chrystal's beside yourself?—No; I know my father——

14929. How much was he paid?—£15.

14930. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Is your father alive?—He is; he was examined here.

14931. The Chief Commissioner.—Did you ever get any other money at an election?—No.

14932. Were you active for Captain Flanagan last time?—I voted for him.

14933. Were you active—did you bring in any of the country boys—that is what I mean?—Me, sir; I voted for him, and that is all that I did.

14934. Did any of the country boys from your place come in?—Well, there are no boys in it to come in, for I am not half a mile from the town.

14935. Did you expect any money for your vote?—Me, sir?

14936. Yes?—No, sir, nor never did.

14937. Would you take it now if it was given?—Well, indeed I would take money any time I got it.

(The witness withdrew.)

Patrick Collery.

Patrick Collery sworn and examined.

14938. The Chief Commissioner.—Did you vote at the last election?—I did.

14939. Whom did you vote for?—Captain Flanagan.

14940. Did you vote at the election before that?—Yes.

14941. Whom did you vote for?—Sergeant Armstrong.

14942. Did you get any money after that?—I got £15.

14943. Who paid you?—Mr. Phillips.

14944. What business are you in?—Public business and bakery and small entertainment.

14945. Now, at the last election were there any country people in your house on the day of polling?—No, nothing more than in general. I do largely in the way of entertainment to the public, but there was nothing more than on market days and such days, the public passing in and out. I do very largely, and there is not another man in the trade in the town that does more than I except one house.

14946. What part of the town are you living in?—I live in Pound-street.

14947. Was there a mob in Pound-street on the day of the polling?—Well, there were people passing up and down the street as is usual at elections in Sligo.

14948. Did you know any of them—I suppose you know the county of Sligo well?—I do, very well indeed.

14949. Do you know the Geeva people?—Well, I have a knowledge of the Geeva people very well.

14950. They deal with you and put up with you when they come in?—They do.

14951. Did you see many Geeva people that day?—Not that day. At the county election I saw Geeva boys, but none at the borough.

14952. Had you any orders for the county or borough election?—No, I had no orders for either the county or borough elections, except what voters boarded with me the night before the polling—men that came in. I entertained no men but voters at the county elections, and I never received an order at any election except what voters I entertained the night before the polling—men who came in.

14953. That's quite right. If they came in a distance they required lodging and food?—I had that for them for the county, but none for the borough.

14954. Was there a mob in town?—There were a good deal of people in town.

14955. Where did these people get meat and drink for the twenty-four hours they were in the street?—I am not aware. I think any of them that were in town went home again hungry—that's my conviction. I had entertainment, and did very largely with the public, but I did not sell two shillings' worth of bread, nor entertainment to countrymen that day. I am on my oath, and I know the country very well. I saw them parading the street, and they got neither food nor money to my knowledge; and I am sure if they had money they would have called, because I deal as leniently with the public that way as anyone.

14956. If the mob had got money you think your house would have got a large share of their custom?—If they got money I think I would have got their patronage, so far as paying me for their board; for what they would eat.

14957. You appear to be a very intelligent man, and you know the country and you know the town. Had you ever at any previous election got orders?—Never in my life.

14958. Do you know what I mean by orders?—I do, perfectly well.

14959. That is a writing to this effect—"Give £2 worth of bread or whiskey to bearer"?—I never received a shilling in my life upon an order.

14960. Do you know any house in town where these orders were given at the last election?—No, I do not, on my oath. I never left my own house and my own business, and I never heard to my knowledge of a house having got a shilling's worth; but I may say this much of some boys that came in from the country, that knowing them to be hungry, I got tea ready for ten or twelve of them when they had no way of taking them home. I never received a shilling since for it.

14961. Was that the evening of the polling?—Well, I should think it was.

14962. Was that the night the houses were wrecked?—Yes, the night the houses were wrecked—some of them were wrecked.

14963. How many boys did you give tea to?—Four or five, or six.

14964. What part of the country were they from?—From the parish of Sooey.

14965. Whose property is that?—I could not say.

14966. Were they all from the same place?—I could not distinctly state what place they were from.

14967. What hour was it when you gave them the tea?—Well, they came in in the morning and said they had no money, and I gave them breakfast.

14968. Did you give them dinner?—No.

14969. What did you give them for tea?—Just bread and tea alone—nothing but bread.

14970. Did they get no whiskey?—Not a drop.

14971. Were you told by anyone not to give them any drink?—I never was.

14972. Do you mean to say that these boys from the parish of Sooey would not take whiskey?—If they got it of course they would, but I was not going to give them whiskey when they had no money. I gave them breakfast.

14973. How far is the parish of Sooey from Sligo?—Six or seven miles—about six miles, I suppose.

14974. Did these boys say who told them to come in?—They came into town to see the election going on.

14975. At what hour of the morning did you give them breakfast?—It was after ten o'clock.

14976. Was it after you heard that Captain King was shot?—Oh yes, it was.

14977. Long after?—Long after.

14978. Was that all the refreshment given to strangers in your house that day?—Oh there was more given to different people coming from different parts of the country—coming on business and otherwise. We took no particular notice of them coming in and paying for refreshments.

14979. Some people from different parts of the country?—Yes.

14980. About how much would you say your house took that day?—did you take £20?—Oh no, nor £5, nor £4. We supplied a good amount of tea, and would not charge people more than sixpence for bread and tea alone.

14981. Did you supply a great number of breakfasts that morning?—No, not that morning. I came in and recorded my vote and returned home again, and then turned back to see how it was going on at the Court-house, afterwards.

14982. Why did you supply the Sooey boys?—I was acquainted with them, and they went in and said they had no money and asked would I trust them for their breakfasts. I said I would not see them short of their breakfasts.

14983. Did you give any other breakfast or tea on credit that day?—No, on my oath, I am not aware that I did.

14984. Did you give breakfast to one hundred people that day?—No, nor to fifty.

14985. Did you give any dinners in the house that day?—No, not that I am aware of, except that during my absence any person would come in and order tea as usual.

14986. I mean to any number of persons?—Oh no, by no means, except our general business. We keep stables and cook for and attend to such men as pass with horses and carts.

14987. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Did the Sooey boys appear to be disappointed at not having got money in town?—No, they did not—not a bit. They did not even come together—they only came in twos, and said they had no money and asked would I let them have some tea till the next day they came to town again. I said I would.

14988. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Did you tell them you thought they were great fools to come in seven miles without having a farthing in their pockets?—Well no, your honour, I did not.

14989. Did you think so?—I did indeed.

14990. Perhaps you expected someone would pay for their dinner?—I did not expect any person would pay for it. In election times they would be a little elevated and don't consider an idle day much loss.

(The witness withdrew, and the Court then adjourned till eleven o'clock the following morning.)

THIRTEENTH DAY.

October 20.

THIRTEENTH DAY.

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 20, 1869.

The Commissioners sat at eleven o'clock.

The Right Rev. Dr. Gillooly sworn and examined.

The Right Rev. Dr. Gillooly.

14991. The Chief Commissioner.—You are the Bishop of Elphin, my lord?—Yes.

14992. The borough of Sligo is entirely in your lordship's diocese?—Yes.

14993. You remember the last election?—I do.

14994. Has your lordship's attention been directed to the evidence given about certain directions—that those who voted against the popular candidate, or those who had not voted, should be put in a particular portion of the parish church?—I read something on the subject; I heard something on it.

14995. Would your lordship state what you know of the matter—first, as regards the directions which you yourself gave, and then as regards the directions the acting parish priest in your parish gave on the subject?—With regard to my own directions, I gave no directions whatever on the subject. I merely expressed a wish and an advice, which was addressed to the parties concerned. It was, I think, on the second Sunday after Captain Flanagan's election, and, as everyone is aware, there was very great excitement caused by it—I may say the whole of the Catholic population of the town felt very indignant with the course adopted by a certain number of their body. That indignation manifested itself on several occasions in the borough, and I had reason to fear that it might manifest itself, if not in the church, at least in the immediate vicinity of it on the day I alluded to the subject. I was to preach myself on that day at the last mass; and, as I was going to the church, a young man came up to me and said that he and several others had arranged to attack those parties if they came to the church. I reprimanded him, and forbade him most strictly not to carry out that idea, if any such he had. I told him I would take the most stringent measures to prevent such a thing, and to punish it if it did occur. Then he promised that he would not do so, and he went away. When I went to the church I told the circumstance to one of the priests, who was in the sacristy at the time—I don't know which of them it was—and he told me that he himself had to interfere to prevent the wife of one of the Catholic electors who had voted for Major Knox being interfered with in the church, and that he had to leave the sacristy for that purpose. I then saw the necessity of alluding to the subject myself, but until I heard these things, and until I was made aware of the feeling and of the intention to give annoyance, I did not intend to speak on the subject. I thought it my duty then, in order to prevent disorder in the house of God, to allude to it, and I did so, I think, before I commenced the sermon on the gospel of the day, to the strong and just feeling that existed in the town of dissatisfaction with those who had violated their duty; but I said that that feeling should be kept out of the church, and I said, perhaps, as it was not easy to control it, "Let those persons who come to the church go to that part near the porch," indicating the part of the church that I meant. My sole object in that was to prevent any collision occurring between them and the others. I was afraid lest they should place themselves too prominently in the church, as I was disposed to think that some of them were inclined to do, in order to provoke the feeling of the people, and lest, under the circumstances, some annoyance might be offered to them in the church. I said let them remain in that part of the church. I never said, and I never intended to say, that they should not place themselves in another part of the church. I am very cautious in any regulations I make, and I am sure I did not say the contrary of what I intended to say. I never intended to say, and I am perfectly certain I never did say, that they should be excluded from every part of the church. The porch is a sort of private entrance to the church, and some of the most respectable persons and merchants in the town hear mass there. My sole object in directing them to that place was that they should be out of the way, and not provoke a collision with the congregation. I never said anything that could bear another meaning. I believe what I said was misunderstood not only by those who made affidavits for the purposes of the election petition, but by other persons also. I heard one or two say that I meant a prohibition. I never did. I never so expressed myself, but, from my directing or advising them to go to one place, some people, by an illogical conclusion of their own, understood that I wished to exclude them from any other place. I never meant that, nor expressed it in words: and in point of fact they were never excluded from any part of the parish church, and I never gave that direction to any of my priests. If I had intended to separate them from the congregation, I would have talked over the subject with the priests, and given them instructions to that effect, which I never did. These persons were never removed; I never approved of their removal from my own church, or from any other church. I heard that on one occasion, Christmas morning, my administrator in the town, the Rev. Mr. Morris, sent for one of them, M'Guirk, who was placed in one of the passages. On Christmas morning there is always a very great crowd at the mass; persons come in from the country to the parish church, who are not in the habit of coming there; and M'Guirk was in a conspicuous place and was in the way. Father Morris, to prevent any possible annoyance, sent for M'Guirk and asked him to go to some other place out of the way; he did not command him, as he told me; he merely requested him and another man named Burke who, I understand, on the same occasion wanted to place himself in a prominent position, to place themselves in a quiet place where they would not be so prominent. It appears that some person was requested to retire from the friary. I was perfectly ignorant of that before it happened. I gave no instructions whatever about it, and if I had been consulted on the matter, I would not have allowed it to be done.

14997. Then, what occurred in reference to the sergeant, had it not your lordship's approbation?—It never had; I disapproved of it; in every instance where persons were removed from the church that I heard of, I disapproved of it. Even though the clergyman might have strictly a right to do it in certain circumstances, I disapproved of it as a wrong thing to be done. I thought it would be an imprudent thing to do in these cases; and in talking over the matter I must have expressed that opinion several times.

14998. We have it in evidence that the money was returned on Christmas-day to Burke and M'Guirk, was your lordship aware of that?—I think there was something mentioned about it in my presence; I think the question was asked, ought the money to be accepted from these parties? I gave no opinion or instructions about it, but the feeling was that it ought not. It was felt that persons who had got money so badly, and had acted so badly for the sake of money, should not have their offerings accepted on this occasion. I heard that some of these persons had boasted that, if they paid their money, it would be taken from them as well as from others. I may mention that, in the direction of my diocese I am oftentimes consulted by priests with regard to certain men who are misconducting themselves, and setting a bad example in the parish. Some of these ignorant people think that, however badly they misconduct themselves, the priests will pass over their misdeeds, if he accepts their dues. I have invariably advised the priest who consulted me not to accept dues from these parties, and I shall continue to do so, because I think it right to prove to them practically that it is not their money we want but their souls.

14999. When you heard what occurred at the abbey in reference to Sergeant Boyle, did you express to the clergy of that church your disapprobation of it?—Not directly. I have no jurisdiction over the management of their church; they have control over their own church and the congregation of it; but I manifested my opinion and my wishes on the matter to persons who I am aware conveyed that opinion to them. I do not think it happened more than once, but I did not consider myself justified in issuing an order on the subject as regards their church. When I first heard the statement made, I believe, by Sergeant Boyle and by others, I was away on duty through the diocese, and I immediately wrote to the newspapers to contradict it. I have the letter cut from the newspaper.

15000. Your lordship might read that letter?—His lordship read the letter as follows:—

"My attention has been called to reports which appeared on Friday last in the Dublin daily newspapers of the proceedings in the Court of Common Pleas respecting the Sligo election petition. It is there stated, apparently on the affidavits of some of Mr. Knox's supporters in Sligo, that in addressing my flock in the parish church of Sligo, both before and after the borough election, I said—'That those Catholics who would vote for (or had voted) for Major Knox should not be allowed to sit in that church with the rest of the congregations that they should be treated as rotten branches, and cut off.' I take the earliest opportunity of contradicting those statements as untrue, and declaring that neither the alleged expressions, nor any others equivalent in meaning were ever used by me in my address to my flock; that on no occasion, public or private, have I announced, ordered, or approved of the removal of those Catholics referred to, from any place they might occupy in my parish church or any other house of worship; and that if such removal occurred which I have not now the opportunity of ascertaining, it was without my knowledge or sanction. I beg you will kindly give this letter insertion, and oblige your faithful servant,

"✠ L. GILLOOLY.

"January 11, 1869."

Every word of that letter I now repeat, because whatever I write or say on the subject is the same as if I were testifying it on my oath. I heard it was stated also that I said "they should be cut off as rotten branches." I never used that expression. I don't mean to say that the person who swore to it swore what he knew to be false, but I never used it. If he were present he must have misunderstood my words. I referred to rotten branches, and I said most probably, although I cannot now remember the words I used, that it would be better that rotten branches should be cut off than that they should be left hanging to the tree, injuring the vitality of it; and that it would be better that the member which was rotten should be cut off, rather than it should infect the body. I then said I feared that some of those persons had cut themselves off by their misconduct, and by persevering in a course of conduct which they knew to be criminal. In any remarks I made I referred only to the Catholic voters of the town. I never applied a single word or observation to anyone else. I expressly declare that I alluded, and merely wished to allude to them; and I never made any personal observation to any candidate or voter. I merely expressed myself as to the principles of the contest, and the duty the electors had to discharge. I put this advice to them as strongly as I could, and I showed them that if they failed in their duty they would not only be incurring moral guilt and sin themselves, but would be doing an injury to themselves and to the church—that they would cause public scandal, and that, in order to reconcile themselves to God, they should make public reparation for that scandal. I avoided all personality as much as I could, and tried to prevent it in anyone over whom I had control. I spoke on several occasions on the subject, but I speak on every other matter of importance in which my flock is concerned—if there is any danger to their souls, or any sin prevailing—drunkenness, for instance, or rioting, or secret societies, or anything else—I do the same. I didn't act exceptionally in that case. As regards the election if there was a violation of duty on the part of some, I don't think I reprimanded their conduct more strongly than I should have done in a case of grievous moral guilt or sin being incurred by persons for whose salvation I am responsible. With me it was entirely a question of principle and of duty, and not a personal question as regards either of the candidates. This was not a question of persons or of individuals, but question of duty, because my anxious desire is to keep out of politics as far as I can. I considered it my duty to interfere then, as it may be again, for, unhappily, we have no bond of union among our people except the clergy, and I did merely what I considered my duty.

15001. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Sergeant Boyle told us that the reference to the rotten branches was in your lordship's address to your congregation on Sunday, the 15th, was he accurate in that?—I cannot undertake to rectify the date. I think it was the second Sunday after the election. I don't know the exact date, but I think it was the second Sunday after the election. I spoke before the election and since on the subject—one, I think, after the election. I cannot rely on my memory as to dates, but I am certain that I never used the words that those who vote for Major Knox ought or would be cut off as rotten branches.

15002. Sergeant Boyle stated to us that the reference to rotten branches was in the discourse you addressed to your flock on the 15th November; and a witness named Dunnigan stated that he remembered the expressions to be used—can your lordship say from your recollection whether Sergeant Boyle was accurate or not in referring it to your discourse on the 15th?—I can't say; it may have been on the 15th. I cannot rely on my memory as to dates. I have to consult my memoranda on everything as to dates.

15003. Sunday, the 15th of November, was the Sunday before the election?—That I am not certain of. I can't say. I believe it is quite possible, and I am quite ready to agree that it was the Sunday before the election that I used the expressions.

15004. Did your lordship, in any discourse before the election, state that the Catholic voters who voted for Major Knox, or who voted for the Conservative candidate, should make reparation before they could be reconciled to God?—Yes, I did. I say that they could not, without giving public scandal, and being guilty of moral sin, be reconciled to God without making a public reparation—that is merely a first principle of theology—where the crime is public, the reparation must be public of necessity.

15005. Did your lordship by that mean to convey that until the reparation should be made, those persons would be in a state of mortal sin?—No. I didn't state how that reparation should be made, or what it should be: I merely stated that they would be guilty of a public and scandalous offence, and that that offence would, of necessity, require a public reparation before they could be reconciled to God. I spoke of Catholics who, I believed, knew that they were acting against their convictions in voting against Major Knox. I stated it clearly. I said I assumed that every Catholic knew his duty. I spoke only of those who voted against their convictions and what they knew to be their duty, and of none others; because I should never wish any Catholic—not to say any Protestant—to vote against his honest convictions. If a man was going to do what I considered wrong, and what he believed to be right, I would first try and persuade him that it was wrong; and if he had a false conscience I would not be the person to ask him to go against it—I would not force him to do what he believed not to be honest. I never had an idea of doing so. I spoke only of persons acting against their sense of duty, and doing things which the community believed to be wrong, and by that act doing an injury to the whole community, who have a right to the proper exercise of that vote just as much as the individual himself has. I stated that such a fault required public reparation, on account of the public scandal and injury that would accrue from it.

15006. I will strive and submit an inference that strikes me as arising from the words you said you used, and you will correct me if I am wrong. You stated that, in order to be reconciled to God, these persons should make reparation; and the inference I draw from that is, that until they made reparation, they were not in a state of salvation?—The inference is that, until they made reparation, they would not be reconciled to God—whatever sin they committed, they remained in it until they made reparation.

15007. And would not be in a state of salvation?—I don't say that. I say that whatever sin they committed, they should remain in it until they made sufficient reparation.

15008. I will ask your lordship, as a matter of theology, if reparation were not made before death, would the sinner be in a state of salvation or not?—If the sin were what we call mortal, he would not be in a state of salvation.

15009. Would the sin you are referring to be a mortal sin?—I don't say that. It would depend a good deal upon the state of the conscience of the individual. I have started by saying that any Catholic who understood his duty would not vote against his conscience and his conviction; and that under the circumstances in which they were placed and in which they were then called on to vote they would, in my opinion, be guilty of a grievous offence, if they voted against their convictions.

15010. Would it be a mortal sin under certain circumstances?—It would: I believe it would. I don't say it would be a mortal sin for all. I stated in my address before the election that no Catholic would be at liberty to vote against his conscience, against his sense of duty: and I stated at the same time that some might be under circumstances that would excuse him from voting at all, and that, if they consulted me on the subject, I would be happy to see them, give my opinion, and, in point of fact, approve of men placed in certain circumstances, not voting. A poor man might be in danger of incurring such losses as would bring ruin on himself and his family by voting—such a man I would recommend not to vote. But in no case, I told them, could I approve of any man voting against his conscience and his convictions. That was the doctrine I laid down, which I consider perfectly sound and tenable—it is the spirit of the law of the land as well as of the Gospel.

15011. I understood your lordship to say that you disapproved of the monks directing Sergeant Boyle to retire from the chapel?—Yes; had I been consulted, I would have told them not to do it.

15012. Did it occur to you, when it came to your knowledge and met your disapprobation, to express your opinion to them of the act of the gentlemen of the monastery or friary?—No, it did not. I believed at the time that it wouldn't occur again, and I make it a rule not to interfere with their concerns except when I am bound to do so, and where there is good reason. I make that a general rule as far as I am concerned with religious orders in my diocese.

15013. Did you regard it as a grave error on the part of the monks?—Not a grave moral error, but I thought it was not prudent under the circumstances. I believe that, so far as strict right is concerned, they or I might have a right to do so, but, under the circumstances, I considered it imprudent, for many reasons. I don't say it would have been morally wrong.

15014. Is it not the belief of the Catholic Church that it is necessary for the members of that Church to hear mass on Sunday?—If they voluntarily neglect, or voluntarily omit to hear mass without sufficient reason, it is considered a grievous sin.

15015. But would not it be a grievous sin if they were debarred from hearing mass by direction of their spiritual superiors?—These persons were not debarred, in point of fact; they were always allowed to hear mass in the church; in no case were they prevented from, or asked to neglect the hearing of mass—they were merely asked to hear it in a certain place on one or two occasions. They might have heard it there as well as men equal, and even superior in rank to them, who are in the habit of hearing mass in that place. If we go back to the primitive church we will find that persons guilty of public grievous offences were often times altogether excluded from the mass. Of course we don't observe these penitential rules, but in the early ages of the church they were practised—there was no intention of the kind in these cases.

15016. Supposing that Sergeant Boyle exercised his franchise honestly and fairly, would not it be a grave mistake if, when he left the parish church and went to the friary, he was to be excluded from hearing mass?—He wasn't excluded from the parish church—he never was.

15017. I do not say he was, but was not he excluded from the friary?—He was merely requested to retire to another part of the church where he could discharge his obligations quite as well as where he was. I have never heard of an instance where any elector was excluded from hearing mass.

15018. Did your lordship take an active interest in the last election?—I did.

15019. Do you recollect whether any of the electors called on your lordship, and consulted you about their votes?—Yes, several called on me. I said in one of my sermons that there were cases in which electors would not be called on to exercise the franchise, as, for instance, I said when the exercise of it would entail injury or bring ruin or loss on themselves or their families. I said if there were any persons present who found themselves in these circumstances, let them come to me, and we will talk the matter over. On that invitation some came, others came because they were asked by some of my priests. I said to the clergy, "If you think proper to ask the voters to come and see me, I will be happy to see them," as I always am. Some were asked to come in that way; others came spontaneously—several of them.

15020. There are often indirect observations made that would not be made directly or openly. May I ask, did any of the voters who so called on you refer to money going at the election on either side?—In my interviews with the voters I invariably confined myself to urging them to do their conscientious duty. I believe everyone of them—several who afterwards voted for Major Knox—admitted that they knew they would be doing wrong; that their wish would be to vote, as they said, with their church and their party; and then they referred to circumstances which made it very hard to do so. With regard to money, I think there were two or three of them, as well as I remember, who hinted it to me, but they daren't speak of it openly, for I have always condemned and opposed bribery in every shape and form. When Sergeant Armstrong came here I had an express understanding with him that one shilling should not be employed before or after the election for bribery; and it was on that express condition I promised him my influence. I had the same express understanding with Captain Flanagan, and I had an assurance from him and his agents both before and after the election, that no money had been given, and that not a single illegal act was done. Had I known that bribery was employed, I would certainly have separated myself from the party who would have been guilty of it. I could infer from some of the parties who came to me that they were offered money.

15021. Does your lordship recollect how the hints about money were expressed?—One man, I think, said, "Men with large families must look to themselves;" and another said, "I am a poor man," or, "I am in debt. I owe so much to the person who is asking me to vote for Major Knox, and if I don't vote for him, the decree against me will be put in force;" and so on.

15022. Do you remember the names of any of the parties who hinted in that way about money?—I think Shields mentioned something to me with regard to a debt he owed Mr. Cherry. Devanny gave me to understand the same.

15023. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—That he owed a debt?—No, that he wanted a consideration for giving his vote—he didn't say it openly: for none of them would dare speak openly on the subject; but it was hinted at in a covert way. I think it was Hunt or Magrath referred to the duty he had to discharge of looking after his children.

15024. The Chief Commissioner.—Was that Michael Hunt and John Magrath?—It was one of them referred to it—Hunt, I think—Neilan asked no money, but he represented his poverty, and mentioned that he got money before from Major Knox. I reproved him for having done so, and I told him that he would be bound to restore that money if ever he had the means, that he got under false pretences—under an implied promise that he would vote for Major Knox, which he did not intend to do, and which he could not do conscientiously. Some people hinted that they would be deprived of their business, or that they might as well give up their business if they didn't vote for Major Knox—as they had got money in the bank on the security of persons who would turn against them if they didn't vote for Major Knox.

15025. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Do you recollect the names of any voters whom you advised not to vote?—I told a man named Gethins not to vote unless it was absolutely necessary. He is a baker.

15026. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Is that Edward Gethins?—I don't know his name. I felt for his position, it was such as would, I thought, exempt him from voting, and I told him so. He promised that he would remain at home, and, if it were absolutely required, that he would come up and vote in the evening. Brennan didn't look for money, but he was one of those who expressed his sorrow for having anything to do with Major Knox and with bribes. He told me the large sums he gave to parties, and the drink he gave. I put his guilt before him, I told him he was ruining himself by drink, and others also. He expressed his great regret at being at all connected with Major Knox, and said he was determined to break off his connexion with him. He asked me to allow him remain in town until he got some money from Major Knox, which he had expended, to repay his mother. I agreed to that. He said he thought it was no harm to continue as agent for Major Knox's houses, for which he said he was getting £80 a year; and I agreed to that too. He promised to give up all that was sinful—a promise that he did not fulfil.

15027. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Was this before the election?—It was.

15028. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Were you aware that the contest would be very close?—It was known from the first that the contest would be very close; it was known from the result of the revision which was not favourable to the Liberal party; but it was also known that if the Liberals voted for the Liberal candidate, he would be easily returned—that I was convinced of, because if there was not a fair chance of success, I would not feel justified in having a contest at all, for these contests are always attended with very great evils.

15029. Did your lordship believe that within a short time of the election, if Catholic voters did what was their duty, Captain Flanagan would be returned?—I was quite certain of it.

15030. The Chief Commissioner.—Did your lordship ever ascertain that the £1,483 was given by Sergeant Armstrong to Mr. Harper Campbell to pay voters after the election?—I knew nothing of that transaction. I never heard of it until I heard that the thing was actually done, and that Sergeant Armstrong's agent, Mr. Tracy, had come down to Sligo with the money, and that it was distributed. There was a dinner to Sergeant Armstrong on the following day at the hotel, and when I heard of the distribution of the money, I requested all my priests to absent themselves from the dinner, and to make known my wishes on the subject to any country priests that might come in. I did that in order to mark my very strong condemnation of the proceeding. There was no priest at the dinner but one from the country, who had seen no other priest before going to it, and he expressed his regret afterwards. On the evening of the same day there was a lecture to be given by my architect, and it was sought to postpone it until after the banquet, but I refused to allow it to be postponed.

15031. Was the lecture to be given by Mr. M'Carthy?—No; by Mr. Goldie. I knew nothing whatever of the money being brought down to Sligo. I did not hear of it at the time; but I believe that money was brought down and distributed.

15032. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Does your lordship recollect a man named Charles Clancy having an interview with you at the last election?—No; that is the son.

15033. I mean the man who did not vote?—I have no recollection of seeing him at all at the last election. I think I had not a word with him on the subject of his vote. His father did at the previous election come to me, and express his regret at having voted for Mr. Macdonogh. I do not think he came to me at all at the last election. He justified himself, I recollect, in voting for Mr. Macdonogh by the pressure that was brought to bear on him—the son I did not see at all.

15034. Does your lordship recollect anything about Michael Hunt coming to you, or to any of your clergy, and making a demand for money—a thousand pounds, or any other sum, as a consideration for him and others voting for Captain Flanagan?—On the day of the election of Captain Flanagan, towards the close of the poll, I remember several persons went to see Magrath and Hunt, and ask them to come down and vote, as they were bound to do. As well as I recollect, I wrote on a piece of paper, asking Magrath and Hunt to come down to the court-house to vote. They had come to see me previously, and I urged them to do their duty. I assumed that they regarded it as a duty, and I sent that message to them just about the last couple of hours of the close of the poll. After that I remember I was in my drawing-room when Father Morris came up to say—I believe that some of Captain Flanagan's friends were in the room at the time—that Moran and Hunt's son were below stairs, and that Hunt's son came with a message that ten votes would be available for Captain Flanagan if £1,000 were sent down. There was an answer sent down that they should go away; the offer was rejected, as, of course, it ought to have been.

15035. I have no doubt of that. Do you recollect was it Father Morris brought you that message?—I think it was he brought it. The way it occurred was this—Moran went up to ask Hunt and Magrath to come down and vote, and he came back with this young man. When I was in my room, the message was brought up, and an answer was sent back that if they voted, it should be without any consideration of the kind.

15036. The person with Moran was the son of Michael Hunt?—I understood that he was.

15037. Do you know his name?—I do not.

15038. Could your lordship give us the names of the ten men who were to vote for Captain Flanagan in case the £1,000 was forthcoming?—I did not hear that ten names were mentioned, but the message was that ten votes would be secured if £1,000 were sent down. I do not believe the ten names were given. I heard it stated afterwards that they could hardly bring up ten voters at that time to vote. It might have been very possibly an exaggeration.

THIRTEENTH DAY.

The Right. Rev. Dr. Gillooly.

15039. Very likely—you have told us that you formed a conclusion that several of the individuals who came to you with regard to the election, were expecting money?—They did not express that, they might have used some expression that led me to believe that they expected money; but I invariably made an observation to the effect—to put it out of their minds. I wished to let them know that if they voted for Captain Flanagan, it should be without money or reward of any kind.

15040. Could your lordship tell us how many of your flock expected—I presume that a considerable number expected it?—I have taken down the names of those who came to me—Devanny, Shields, Magrath, Hunt, Brennan, Kilcullen, Neilan, Gethin, and Gray, junior.

15041. Did Michael Doherty come to you?—I don't remember—he may have. I gave the names of all I recollect to have come. Persons are in the habit of coming to me when they like, and I invariably make it a point to see them. Others besides those I have named may have come; but I do not remember any others at present.

15042. Did you form the conclusion that generally these ten men were expecting money?—My belief and conviction was that no Catholic in the borough intended to vote for Major Knox except for money, or from pressure of another kind brought to bear on him.

15043. Or refrained from voting?—Or refrained from voting—I should not say refrained, perhaps, for there were some men who did not vote, but who would have come up to vote in the evening if it were absolutely necessary. But when it was seen that Major Knox was in the majority, and that a majority on Captain Flanagan's side could not be except by corrupt means, they were not asked to come up. There were six or more voters who, from the circumstances in which they were placed, were justified in staying away. I believe that others did not take money, but there was a pressure brought to bear on them from landlord or agent sources.

15044. Had your lordship any consultation with your clergy with regard to the election?—No formal consultation; we live together, and are constantly together. We understood the action we were to pursue; everyone, I think, perfectly understood that bribery was to be prohibited and prevented in every possible way, that everything illegal in the way of violence, and every illegal means was to be avoided most cautiously. I believe they observed that instruction, and saw that it was carried out to the very end.

15045. We have it in evidence that there was very great violence, that the town was in occupation of a mob or mobs on the polling day at least, if not previously—can your lordship give us any information on the subject—did any person come to your lordship, or to any of your clergy, to your knowledge, asking for money or drink for these mobs?—I am not aware. They certainly never came to me, nor am I aware that any such application was made to the clergy. There were great crowds in the borough for several days, but I don't believe that the crowd assembled on these occasions could be called a mob—it certainly was not a hired mob. There was great excitement at the time, and also great interest was taken in the election. Many persons came into the town from the country in consequence of the interest they took in the election—the county election was going on about the same time. It was well known that extraordinary means were resorted to in the borough, in order to corrupt Catholic electors and induce them to vote for Major Knox, or to make them stay away from voting. I didn't see any personal violence, there was noise, and on some occasions I requested my priests to go out among the people and try to prevent injury or violence; I went out myself through the town on several occasions for that express purpose, in order to prevent anything like disorder in the town. I don't know that I can say anything else about it.

15046. Was any communication made to your lordship shortly before the election to the effect that Captain Flanagan's chances were becoming worse as some of the Catholic voters were going to abstain from voting?—Yes.

15047. Was that communication made to you by any of Captain Flanagan's agents?—It was known that several persons were being tampered with, but it was not known whether successfully or not, until the day of the election. There were apprehensions entertained, because it was known that several parties were seen going to the houses of Catholic electors, and that there was a very complete organization to get over Catholic voters—there were apprehensions on that account. I heard of them both on the day of the election and some days previously.

15048. Was there any application made to your lordship to deliver an address to your flock with regard to the subject?—No; what I did I did from my own sense of duty.

15049. The evidence that Sergeant Boyle gave us was—he stated that he was kneeling in the Friary chapel on a Sunday after the election, when the Rev. Mr. Hibbits came up towards him, and in a loud voice said "Where's this man?" and ordered him to go outside and hear mass there; that the sergeant then went home, and didn't attend mass for five or six months afterwards—did I understand your lordship to say that you disapproved of that act on the part of the clergymen of the Friary?—Most distinctly.

15050. Because there appears no reason to doubt his evidence as far as the externals are concerned—he is a respectable man?—That makes not the slightest difference in my mind. If he was the poorest man in the town, I would make the same remark; his social position I would not mind at all.

15051. You stated some short time ago that you would consider that every Catholic who understood their duty and voted against that duty, would be in a state of grievous sin?—Not that. I said in a general way there is moral guilt. I don't say that in every case it would be a grievous sin. We Catholics make a wide distinction between venial and mortal sin.

15052. I know you do; but in the case of a Catholic who knows his duty and commits this offence, and who, you consider, was not in a state reconcilable to God until he made reparation for the offence he committed, would your lordship give him the rites of the Church before he made that reparation?—Not before he made the reparation I would consider sufficient—he should make reparation in any case. He should make what I would consider sufficient reparation for his offence before I would reconcile him. He should show regret for what he had done, and repair it to the best of his power.

15053. In fact, your lordship's statement to your flock amounted to this—that persons who voted for Major Knox would put themselves in a state in which they were liable to be denied the rites of the Church?—I didn't say that, nor did I mean to convey it. I never meant to deny them the rites of the Church; and, in fact, several of these persons have complied with their religious duties, and have received the sacraments since, without making any public reparation, properly so called, and that has occurred with my approbation and sanction. I never intended to refuse the rites of the Church to them, or to anyone, no matter how sinful; but it is the duty of the confessor who is to deal with the case where the offence is public, to get what he considers sufficient reparation, as far as the person concerned is capable of making it. I never said what that reparation should be, or what form it should assume, or that it should be a public reparation before the congregation. I did not mean to say it.

15054. Did not your lordship use the word "public"?

—I didn't mean that. I don't recollect I did say it. I said that reparation should be made for the offence before being reconciled to God. I said they shouldn't look upon it as a slight thing, and think that, after the election was over, everything should fall back to its previous position, as if nothing had occurred.

15055. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Your lordship stated that those who voted for Major Knox couldn't be reconciled until sufficient reparation would be made—now what would be considered sufficient reparation?—That would depend very much on circumstances. I didn't refer at all to the rites of the Church; I referred to and spoke of merely reconciliation with God.

15056. Did your lordship mean to convey that the clergy wouldn't in any way reconcile the sinner until reparation was made that would be considered by them sufficient?—The clergy should facilitate that reconciliation in every way; it is their duty to do so; but they should not administer the sacrament of penance if they didn't believe that the sinner was sorry for his offence, and made the reparation they considered due for the offence.

15057. But the sacrament of penance would be withheld until the reparation was made?—Reconciliation with God wouldn't be effected in the case of those persons until they had publicly repaired the fault they committed. That is my belief; I hold the doctrine—that where the offence is public, the reparation should also be public.

15058. Did your lordship mean to convey that the sacrament of penance would be withheld until reparation was made?—Of course I should have that in my mind.

15059. Was that what your words conveyed naturally?—Not that I had it in my mind then. I have it now in my mind. It was through the sacrament I meant that it was effected, when I spoke of reconciliation with God. I hadn't in my mind the form of reparation that should be made in each case. I neither stated, nor did I intend to state, what that form should be.

15060. Your lordship has told us that your view was that no Catholic would be at liberty to vote against his conscience?—Yes.

15061. But when making that address to them, did your lordship convey to your flock that they had a discretion as to whether they would vote for Major Knox or not?—I assumed that no Catholic could have a doubt with regard to his obligations at the time. I wouldn't assume that on any other occasion; but at the last election, where a religious question was concerned, I assumed that every Catholic knew his duty. It was a plain duty, as I am convinced it was, and one the most illiterate could understand.

15062. The Chief Commissioner.—When your lordship heard that Sergeant Armstrong had distributed the money—you heard it when he came to the banquet—did you consider that a violation of his promise to you?—I did, distinctly; and I made the observation to some person that, if he were to return to the borough he would find me very much altered in his regard. I considered it a violation of his promise, decidedly.

15063. Your lordship knew then that the money was given for bribery, to voters because they had voted?—I knew that if they hadn't voted, they would not get it; but I did not regard it as bribery, strictly so called, because I believe now as I did at the time, that the money was not promised before the election by Sergeant Armstrong, but by those acting for him. That was my belief, and nothing has since occurred to alter it. I believe that the promise made by Sergeant Armstrong to me was faithfully performed.

15064. Did your lordship consider that the giving of money in that way was demoralizing?—Oh, certainly; and it was chiefly on that account I objected to it—it wasn't the price of the vote that was so objectionable as its effect on the community.

15065. Did you intimate to Sergeant Armstrong that you disapproved of the distribution of that money?—I didn't see him to do so. I didn't know he was in town at the time I heard of it; and until his health was altered I had no opportunity of speaking to him on the subject.

15066. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—But though your lordship do not regard the distribution of that money after the election as bribery, do not you regard it as most demoralizing on the part of the electors, to give it to them?—Yes, and deserving of grave censure; for I consider that a vote should be given without money or payment, and that it should be given for the public good. If a person is bound to vote at all, in my opinion he is bound to vote for the public good.

15067. The Chief Commissioner.—Who were present when the message came to your lordship for the £1,000?—The Rev. Mr. Morris was there—Mr. Michael O'Loghlen, and Mr. Stanislaus Lynch were also present—they were both with me in my room at the time.

15068. When Father Morris brought the message from young Hunt?—Yes. The message came up to say that Moran was below stairs. Father Morris went down; and the message about the £1,000 was then brought up by him.

15069. Were James Moran and young Hunt understood by you to be below stairs at the time?—Yes, in my hall at the time.

15070. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Did your lordship consider the act of voting for Major Knox in itself wrong, totally irrespective of the state of mind of the Catholic voters who voted for him?—I wish to know what you mean.

15071. Suppose the sergeant in the Rifles voted honestly and fairly, and according to the best of his judgment and conscience, would you consider that a sinful act?—If he voted as he thought he was bound to do in conscience, and according to his principles, I wouldn't consider it wrong. If I met a Catholic who was wanting in principle, I would reason with him and endeavour to alter his views, but I wouldn't ask him to vote against his own judgment. I would try to alter his judgment, but I would not ask him to vote against what he considered right.

15072. Am I right in inferring that you used no language on the occasion your lordship referred to rotten branches, dealing with a case like this?—The idea never entered my mind. I alluded to the corruption which was known to have prevailed in the borough many years before, and I expressed my resolve to root it out, and purify the borough, as far as I could. I said that those who intended to vote against their principles were responsible for it, and were doing an injury to public morality, and that I should do everything in my power to prevent it.

15073. But take such a case as this—suppose a voter had promised Major Knox to vote, whether right or wrong—it is quite conceivable that there must be a difference of opinion as to the binding nature of that promise, he might consider he was bound to keep his word—would your lordship consider that such a person was wrong in keeping his word, and in voting for Major Knox?—He might be in some cases, though not in others; if he knew he was doing what he should not do in conscience, he would be wrong.

15074. But supposing he had promised at a time he did not know that?—I remember a case in which one voter told me that, before the Church question arose, he had promised Major Knox to vote for him; and then, if I remember rightly, I told that person that of course he was not bound by that promise—that, when he made it, he supposed the circumstances would be the same at the time of the election as at the time he made the promise, and that the change in the circumstances of course would justify him in withdrawing that promise—which I hold to be perfectly correct. I said nothing to anyone in private, which I should not preach from the pulpit as perfectly sound doctrine. That I beg to assure you of—on the contrary, I spoke less strongly to them in private than I did in public. If the Church question had not arisen before the election, I would think that many persons might conscientiously and honestly have voted for Major Knox, because they might suppose he might be as good a member as his opponent, on other questions. The Church question was one which every Catholic understood. Major Knox declared that he was for the maintenance of the Church Establishment, and it was on that point that the obligation arose for Catholics to vote against him.

THIRTEENTH DAY.

The Right Rev. Dr. Gillooly.

15075. If such a voter considered he was bound by his promise, would you consider that he was doing a wrong act in voting for Major Knox?—I would not, if he were honestly of that opinion.

15076. Assuming that he was—would your lordship consider he was doing wrong?—There are many cases where guilt arises from one's own conscience. If a person believes he is acting right, though he is actually doing wrong, and acting contrary to his duty, there is not moral but a material guilt in such a person; and I would view him in a very different light from another.

15077. The Chief Commissioner.—Is there any other subject in connexion with the recent election, with reference to which your lordship would wish to give us any information, or make any statement?—If I weren't obliged to come forward I would wish to have nothing to do with the inquiry. If you wish to ask me any other questions I will be happy to answer them, but I do not wish to volunteer any evidence, which I know you will get from other sources. It would not be consistent with my position, and certainly not with my feelings, to volunteer any statements.

(The witness then withdrew.)

The Rev. John Morris.

The Rev. John Morris sworn and examined.

15078. The Chief Commissioner.—Are you the administrator of the bishop's diocese?—Yes.

15079. Do you remember on the day of the polling James Moran and the son of Michael Hunt coming to the bishop's house?—I do.

15080. Did they see you?—They did.

15081. What message did they bring?—I think it was between two and three o'clock at the time, and unless I mistake I do not think they were in the drawing-room at all. That is a mistake of the Bishop's. I think I was in the sitting-room by myself when the servant came in and told me that they wanted to see me. I went out to a little waiting-room quite convenient to the hall-door, where we generally see persons of that kind. I saw Moran, and I asked him if he wanted to speak to me, and he said "yes," and I said, "Come and speak to me in the hall." I did not wish to have anything to say at all to young Hunt. I was dissatisfied with the part taken by these persons on that and previous occasions, and I asked Moran if he wanted to speak to me, and he said "yes." What he said to me was this:—"Is the election going to be lost?" I said, "What do you mean by that?" "I mean," says he, "is the election going to be lost? Those above can poll ten votes on one condition if it be complied with," and I asked what was that condition. He said if a person would go up and deposit £1,000 on the table that they should record the ten votes in favour of Captain Flanagan. I asked "Do you want to convey that as a message to me?" and he said, as far as I can recollect, "yes." And my reply to him was, "If you want to convey that as a message to me you can go back and tell the parties that as far as I am concerned if 5*s.* was to gain the present election I would not satisfy the parties, and if the election be lost let it be known through whom and by what means the election has been lost." That was my reply to him, and I had no more conversation with him, and he walked out—himself and young Hunt.

15082. Were the names mentioned?—I asked where could they get ten votes—I did not believe they could. "It is no matter to you," said he, "they can get the ten votes." I got no names.

15083. Where was young Hunt?—He was in the little room that I spoke of a while ago.

15084. Which of the young Hunts was it?—I do not know his name.

15085. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Would you know him?—I would know him, but I would not know his name. There are two brothers, and I think they are very like, but I am satisfied he was the son of Michael Hunt.

15086. The Chief Commissioner.—Did you know the men in the position of Hunt who were holding back?—No, except that I knew that Hunt and M'Grath, and I heard, I think, John Hart were holding back.

15087. Was James Moran?—James Moran did not hold back, for at the time I saw him he was after recording his vote in favour of Captain Flanagan.

15088. Did you understand Laurence Bourke was one of the party?—I thought so, and Thomas Devanny. I heard another name mentioned, but I did not know he was in connexion with them, but it was stated he was likely one of the party, a man named James Dolan.

15089. Was that the mail-coach guard?—Yes.

15090. Now, did anyone else at the last election bring any similar message to you about money being wanted?—No, sir; none whatever.

15091. According to your recollection did you communicate with Mr. O'Loghlen or Mr. Lynch?—I do not recollect that I did. Very likely a short time after if I saw the bishop I may have told it.

15092. I suppose you then came to the conclusion that the election was lost?—Oh, likely, if the ten votes could be recorded the election could be gained, but in any case I said if it were to gain the election I would not satisfy the persons, but I would let the world know how the election was lost.

15093. You referred to parties acting similarly upon former occasions?—That is merely from report. I know nothing concerning Sergeant Armstrong's election. I took very little part in that election at all. I did not even canvass on that occasion. Very likely I called to see one man some days before the election of Sergeant Armstrong, because of his holding back from his friends. He was a member of the victuallers' body in town, a decent man, and he was the only man holding back, and they were dissatisfied with him, and did not like to come up, and record their votes until they all came together, and he was stated to be a couple of miles out of town in the house of a land steward of Mr. Wynne's, and they were anxious that some person should go and bring him up, in order that they might all go together and record their votes.

15094. I will now direct your attention to what Bourke and M'Guirk stated occurred on Christmas Day last; you were then attending on the parishioners who were giving in their dues?—Yes, I was at one of the doors, and a number of gentlemen at the other door.

15095. Now, what occurred in reference to M'Guirk?—It was a very early hour, I think between six and seven o'clock, and it was very dark at the time, and the gas was lighting in the church; and shortly after M'Guirk went up some person came, I think the paid collector, a man named Smith, and said that M'Guirk was above kneeling in a certain place in the church; and I on this said to him, "Tell M'Guirk I want to speak to him." He came down, and I asked him had he any interview or conversation with the bishop before he went up to that part of the church, and he said, "No;" and I said, "Then under these circumstances if you take my advice you will hear mass in this portion of the church, amongst these good people who are hearing mass here." I asked him to do so two or three times in a very suppliant manner, and he did not seem inclined to do it; and when he was going off I returned him his offering.

15096. Why did you return him his offering?—Well, one of the reasons was I heard he said some time previous that when he would come on Christmas morning to pay his offering he would be as welcome as any other. There was a feeling amongst the parishioners that no money should be accepted from those who voted for Major Knox or abstained from voting.

15097. Was that because they were believed to have been bribed?—The common phrase was that none of Knox's money should be mixed with the other offerings.

15098. In reference to Bourke?—I think about twenty minutes afterwards Bourke was coming in on the gallery door, and some person told him to speak to me. He came to the other door where I was standing, and said, "Is there any objection to me hearing mass?" I said, "Not the slightest; but hear mass in that portion of the church where those good people are kneeling." He seemed disinclined to do so, and went out, and came back in a few minutes and heard mass in it; and so pleased were the persons who witnessed this, that if Bourke were to come back the next Sunday to the church and take the most prominent position in it, no person would be angry with him. He acted in such an humble manner as showed he had the spirit of a Christian about him; and he saw that although it was a little beneath him to do that, still that he should act as a Christian on that occasion.

15099. Did you give any of these directions to M'Guirk or Bourke in consequence of what the bishop had said in his sermon about any of these voters?—I was afraid from the feeling that existed in town, and particularly on a morning like that when we have such crowds in the church—we generally have twice the congregation that morning when compared with any other morning in the course of the year, and many of the poor people come there on that morning who, from want of clothes, might not come out in the noonday. The place was very crowded, and I was afraid some person might insult M'Guirk, and cause annoyance in the church; and if a thing of the kind occurred, we did not know what the consequences might be, because we thought it might go abroad that the gallery was coming down, and therefore I thought it right that they should hear mass in that position.

15100. Do you recollect hearing the bishop say anything of those going to the porch?—I was in the vestry on the occasion. He alluded to the porch, and said there was a great amount of dissatisfaction amongst the community, who had expressed a great unwillingness that these parties should mix with them in certain portions of the church—the gallery, or places where they were in the habit of going to; and, lest anything unpleasant might occur, it was to be appointed that I should ask them to hear mass in the place that I pointed out.

15101. Did you know anything about what occurred at the abbey?—No, I know nothing whatsoever about it; and I was very sorry when I heard it at the time.

15102. You then feel that that ought not to have occurred?—I do.

15103. Now, in reference to the election itself, and the conduct of the election, do you know anything about any dinner that day being supplied to any of the country people who were in town?—None whatsoever. I do not believe there was.

15104. You saw a great number of the country people in town?—I did on the day of the election, and I think the reason why so many were in on that occasion was, that I think the public spirit was up all through the county at the time. The Sligo borough and county were about the last elections, and the spirit was very much up. There was one reason which I might assign for the great numbers that came in. It was rumoured for some days previous to the election in town, that a number of young men, the sons of the Conservative farmers in the country, were to come in armed with revolvers. I heard that a number of them were employed and engaged by a certain person, who, it was stated, was to pay them 8*s.* a day.

15105. Who was the person, Mr. Morris, you heard that of?—I heard it stated that he was agriculturist or steward, I think, on Colonel Townley's property.

15106. Go on, now. You heard these rumours all through the town?—I heard that he went about and saw a number of these young men, and engaged them to come into town for the occasion, and that they were to be paid 8*s.* a day. I think, as far as I recollect, the name was Mr. Heron, steward.

15107. Do you know anything of any money being supplied on Captain Flanagan's side for the country people to come into town?—No, not one shilling. I do not know anything of it.

15108. Did any money at all pass through your hands for the election?—Not one shilling, and I hope never will.

15109. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Sergeant Boyle has told us it was in the bishop's discourse on the Sunday morning the 15th November that there was a reference to rotten branches. Do you remember whether there was in the same discourse any reference to the porch?—I do not recollect on that occasion at all. I do not think I was there on that day. I think my duties took me elsewhere on that day.

15110. Then do you remember anything of the bishop's discourse in reference to rotten branches?—I do not recollect.

15111. Now, when Bourke obeyed the directions he received to go to the porch did you regard it as a mark of humility on his part?—I certainly did.

15112. Because he might naturally have considered the place rather beneath him?—Very likely he might have, but some of the most respectable merchants in town hear mass there very often. I have known some of the highest merchants in town to hear mass there frequently as a matter of convenience rather than go to the gallery.

15113. But having regard to the feelings that were commonly prevalent, you regarded it as a mark of humility?—Yes.

15114. Might I ask you would you have withheld the sacrament of penance from a Catholic voter who voted for Major Knox before he had made what you considered a sufficient reparation for that?—Of course in matters of this kind which you allude to at present we always consult with the bishop and are guided by his directions, and it so happens that nearly all these persons, I think, as the bishop remarked, have received the sacraments.

15115. Well, having regard to the state of feeling in the borough at the time would you have given the sacrament of penance to a person circumstanced as I have mentioned without consulting the bishop?—At that time I would not.

15116. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—You told us that you were afraid that some one might assault M'Guirk, and that there would be a most unpleasant scene?—Certainly, I was apprehensive of that because I believe some little outrage was offered to the wife of one of the voters on the Sunday previous, and lest it should occur again I deemed it more prudent he should go to this part of the church.

15117. Did you tell that to M'Guirk?—I did not.

15118. Have you any reason to doubt that M'Guirk understood it as a command upon your part?—I think he could not understand it as a command because I asked him in the most suppliant manner three times, and said, "If you take my advice go and hear mass there, you will be better off," as Bourke did afterwards.

15119. The Chief Commissioner.—The galleries are very large?—They are.

15120. There are two staircases coming down from them?—Yes.

THIRTEENTH DAY.

October 20.

The Rev. John Morris.

15121. In case of any disturbance or anything of the kind occurring the matter would be attended with great danger?—Certainly, no doubt in the world of it, because it might go abroad in some other portion of the church that the galleries were coming down, and persons might be killed.

15122. The church at present is too small for the wants of the congregation?—Certainly, on a morning like Christmas particularly.

15124. But was your request that he should kneel in the porch prompted by any apprehension of danger in that direction?—Certainly, not a doubt of it. As I told you a while ago as an insult was offered on a previous occasion to the wife of one of the voters, I say a fortiori it would be offered to any of the voters who would come. That was the first time they made their appearance in church since the election.

15125. And was your request to him to kneel in the porch dictated principally by the consideration of the disturbance?—Well, I would also say as a sort of reparation for the part that he acted in abstaining from voting for the Liberal candidate.

15126. Was it not, in fact, intended as a species of church censure upon him for his having voted for Major Knox?—I would say it was more or less.

15127. Have you any doubt that it was intended as a church censure?—No, the dissatisfaction that existed at the time was the principal reason I did it. I knew very well that the community and the congregation would be very much dissatisfied if he were to go and kneel in a prominent part of the church, and my principal reason was this, lest anything unpleasant should occur to cause confusion.

15128. I must again put the question, was it intended to any extent at all as a church censure?—Well, I could not say it was a church censure.

15129. Was it intended as a humiliation to any extent?—It might be in reference to the allusion made by the bishop to a certain portion of the church—the porch. I did not even point to that portion of the church called the porch, but merely to the place where other persons were in the habit of saying mass.

15130. Well, now, I must ask you this again, have you any doubt that the placing M'Guirk in that particular place was intended to some extent as a humiliation upon him for having voted for Major Knox?—He did not vote for Major Knox.

15131. Well, for having abstained from voting?—I say so, more or less.

15132. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Did you hear anything of what the bishop said about any of his congregation separating themselves?—I was in the vestry of the church at the time.

15133. But did you hear him?—I think so.

15134. Did you understand these words of his lordship to be a direction to his congregation?—My impression was if they were to come to church and hear mass it was supposed they would go to that part of the church to which he alluded.

15135. But I suppose you mean the bishop directed them?—I would not say it was a command.

15136. Did you understand it so?—I understood if they were to come they would hear mass in that portion of the church, from his lordship's words.

15137. The Chief Commissioner.—You understood that in giving that direction to the two men you were obeying the bishop?—It was more or less carrying out the observations made by the bishop.

15138. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—You did not understand the bishop to mean it as counsel to them, but as a direction?—I believe that the understanding was if they were to come they would hear mass in that portion of the church.

15139. And you believed that M'Guirk was disobeying that?—Yes, I thought so.

15140. Did any persons come to you previous to the election and say they expected money?—No. No persons ever did it directly.

15141. That is what I mean—not say it directly, but were there any intimations conveyed?—Well, I cannot mention any person, but I believe there was a vague expectation on the part of voters in consequence of former elections that there might be some on this occasion as well as on the past.

15142. And did you think that that prevailed largely?—Well, I would not say largely.

15143. But do you mean to say you can form no opinion about it?—No.

(The witness then withdrew.)

William Palmer.

William Palmer sworn and examined.

15144. The Chief Commissioner.—Were you assisting Mr. Lawder at Carrick in getting up the evidence to resist the petition?—I was, sir.

15145. Was it under your superintendence that this suit of briefs were prepared (briefs marked A 1, 2, and 3, handed witness)?—I may say all the briefs were entirely under my supervision.

15146. Do you remember was it you took down Stokes's evidence?—He gave it in himself, sir, in his own handwriting.

15147. We have not been able to get that?—I think it will be down by the one o'clock train. I spoke to Mr. Lawder, and told him if it could be got at all to send it down by that train.

15148. As you understand me, those briefs marked A is copy of what he handed in?—I came down to Sligo here, and took down the entire evidence—the Sligo evidence, and there was a large number of parties who were alleged to be bribed by Stokes. I made out a list for him of the names from the list furnished by the petitioners. I gave that to Stokes himself, and told him in his own house to make out in his own house what were actually the facts in his own handwriting. He did that, and in the course of the evening brought it to me, and that was copied in Carrick.

15149. Is that his handwriting (document handed witness)?—Without seeing all the documents it would be impossible to say.

15150. I want to direct attention to this. The two M'Mullens have been mentioned in the bill of particulars. Stokes is charged with having bribed the M'Mullens. (Bill of particulars handed witness.) There is a copy of the bill of particulars. That was made for your conduct of the case. Now, do you see opposite James M'Mullen, No. 23?—Yes.

15151. To what does the page refer?—No. 23 page 6 is, I think, in the margin.

15152. To what does that refer?—I cannot tell, except the page of the brief I would say.

15153. It is obviously not the page of the big brief?—I do not know, for I do not know who paged this at all. No. 23 would be the number in consecutive order all down.

15154. No. 23 is the number in the bill of particulars, and page 6?—I cannot tell what that refers to at all.

15155. Now turn to page 3, and see the entry as to No. 23, James M'Mullen?—Yes.

15156. Then you come to "Never gave or offered any money, or other consideration, for voting. James M'Mullen left before the polling day by the request of Mr. Stokes." Then comes something like pounds—

"Gave —— pounds, travelling expenses, to James and William M'Mullen to go to Dublin"?—That is what is there.

15157. Now, don't you see that the brief goes on regularly and ends with "I did a good deal of such work generally"?—Yes.

15158. In whose handwriting are those three briefs?—I think this is the handwriting of some of the scrivenery clerks who came down from Dublin, and this (another brief) is in some others. There were altogether four clerks employed. [The witness's evidence related to the briefs marked A.]

15159. Now I will direct your attention to the briefs we have marked B, which are duplicates of the evidence of Robert Stokes and Cherry. Now nothing turns on Cherry's evidence. Why was that second brief of the evidence made?—The only way that could have occurred was this—that Stokes was in attendance listening to what they were proving against him, and he thought proper to add or diminish as to the facts of his evidence.

15160. In reference to the M'Mullens, his evidence which is in the first brief is omitted in the second?—If that is so, it must be by Mr. Stokes' sole directions, and by his authority, and at his request. There was nothing put into it that Stokes did not write himself, or direct personally as to the fact.

15161. Now, in reference to what is stated in the first brief, that evidence, if given by Stokes, and if he was believed to be an agent, about giving money to the M'Mullens to go to Dublin, would have unseated the sitting member?—I am aware of that.

15162. Now I want to know how you can explain why that is omitted from the second draft of his evidence?—Except in the fact that we understood he did not give the money, and that the matter was brought to his recollection on hearing the evidence in support of the petition.

15163. Is it not obvious that that was directed to be omitted from his evidence?—It must have been by himself solely. This may not be complete. Unless I had all the papers, I could scarcely throw light on the whole matter.

15164. You see that that brief containing Stokes' and Cherry's evidence is regularly paged?—Yes, sir. That appears to be regularly paged.

15165. And here is a duplicate of it also regularly paged, each page corresponding as should be in the proper scrivenry to the other page?—(Duplicate handed to witness).—It does appear, sir, to be omitted.

15166. That second brief was evidently copied from a draft?—Plainly, sir. It must have been.

15167. Now I want to know have you any recollection of that draft—that is the draft in which the evidence as to the M'Mullens was scratched out of Stokes' evidence?—I think, sir, that all the evidence that Stokes gave at any time, is entirely in his own writing, without any interference from anyone, and I think that may be forthcoming still, and may be down, without having the evidence and memoranda that Stokes drew up, it would be impossible to answer. If it is left out, it must have been entirely by Stokes' directions and authority, and without any intimation for any purpose at all.

15168. Surely you would not have allowed a witness to go to your scrivener and change his evidence?—Certainly not, sir. That would not have been permitted.

15169. Then the directions as to the alterations in the evidence must have come from some person in authority?—By Stokes himself to me, and by me to the scrivener.

15170. Have you any recollection of that?—It must have come through me—all the evidence came through my hands.

15171. Do you remember any consultation or conversation occurring to this effect, that Stokes' evidence would unseat the sitting member?—I never heard it, sir, or any words to that effect.

15172. Did you know when Stokes was going on the table, he was going to deny having given money to the M'Mullens?—Well, I cannot bring that to my recollection, sir, one way or the other.

15173. Did you know whether or not he was going to say he had given money or not to the M'Mullens?—Well, without reading the previous documents on that point, I could not say at present.

15174. In brief letter A, there is a statement—"Gave —— pounds to the M'Mullens on going to Dublin"?—That is so, sir. I could not say whether Stokes intended to deny the fact when he went up, without having his memorandum and other documents.

15175. What you tell us is that the alterations in the evidence must have occurred through your personal directions to the scrivener?—Yes, in this way. Stokes was listening with the other witnesses to the petition, and matters came to their knowledge which they professed to have no recollection of; and in Carrick, during the progress of the trial, they wrote out the evidence with these additional matters brought to their recollection.

15176. But the M'Mullens were not examined at all, and nothing could have occurred in evidence to refresh Stokes' recollection as to them?—Well, I cannot tell you about that. The matter of the M'Mullens was mentioned in this way—something about the "golden rappers." I think it was mentioned in that way.

15177. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—This is a case of Stokes not recollecting something, but forgetting something which he had previously recollected, and which we now know is the fact?—Well, he said that, and it is down in the second brief. I have no doubt I have the thing in Stokes' handwriting, from which this was made out. I never heard that statement that Mr. Macdonogh stated he would not be produced, for Mr. Macdonogh never spoke to any of the witnesses in Carrick at all.

15178. What Stokes said was that he heard Mr. Macdonogh stated that the brief of his evidence could not be produced in court?—I never heard it, sir, on the contrary, Mr. Macdonogh told me that the facts should be brought out to light, and everything that could show the truth. That was my direction in Carrick.

15179. Did any of the counsel in the case direct you to alter any of the briefs?—Certainly not, sir. I never did it myself, nor did anyone direct me to do it; but if a witness said, "this is my proper evidence," I should submit it.

15180. The Chief Commissioner.—Which of the briefs, the A or the B were used in court by counsel?—I could hardly tell, though I think it more likely the A briefs were used, for Mr. Macdonogh, I think, said he would not lift up the large brief, and requested that the evidence should be put in briefs by itself—small briefs?—I think it was the A briefs.

15181. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—You can give us no idea as to whether the A or the B briefs were prepared first?—At present I cannot tell, unless I got these memorandums that were in Stokes' handwriting. I have not seen any document about the petition since this trial at Carrick.

15182. The Chief Commissioner.—Well, we will ask you to try and find these drafts from which these briefs were prepared?—You are aware they are not in my possession at all. I have requested Mr. Lawder to forward them by the train which I believe he will.

(The witness then withdrew.)

Dominick Hunt sworn and examined.

Dominick Hunt.

15183. The Chief Commissioner.—On the day of the last election, did you go with James Moran to the bishop's?—I did, but I did not know what he wanted me for until I was half way down the street.

15184. Do you mean to say you did not know what you were going for?—No, sir.

15185. Did you ask to speak to Father Morris?—No.

THIRTEENTH DAY.
October 20.

Dominick Hunt.

15186. Did you know at all what you were going for?—No, sir, until he got me outside. He had me half way down the street before he mentioned it. He said he was going for £1,000, and that he would keep £200 that they owed him for the last election and pay himself for this, and he said he was sorry he voted in the morning, and that he would give me £100 for my trouble.

15187. Had you a vote?—No.

15188. What was your trouble?—I suppose to go along with him.

15189. Go on and say what occurred between you?—That is all. He went in and tried to get the money, and I believe he did not get it.

15190. What did you go for?—I had no business at all.

15191. Did your father know that you were going?—No, sir, nor nobody else, nor did I know myself until I was half way down.

15192. What were you to get £100 for?—Moran said he would give me that.

15193. For what?—For going with him.

15194. On your oath did you understand it was for your father's vote?—No, sir, I did not.

15195. Which way was your father to vote if James Moran got the money?—I do not know, sir. I do not know what he might tell on that subject, but I had no chat with him at all about it.

15196. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—When did you see your father after that?—The next day.

15197. Did you tell him about this?—I told him about two days afterwards, and he was very angry with me. Moran wanted M'Donnell to go with him first and he would not go with him.

(The witness then withdrew.)

Michael Doherty.

Michael Doherty (already sworn) re-examined.

15198. The Chief Commissioner.—Do you know Samuel Gillmor?—I do, sir.

15199. Did you give him a message to go to the clerk of the peace?—From what I have heard he swore I have no doubt I did, but up to last week I had no recollection of it until I met Mr. Gillmor accidentally, and talking of the commission he told me he had been sworn. I said, "When under examination I had to mention your name from report, and I hope you do not blame me for it?" "Oh, no," said he, "I have nothing to say to it, except the £10 I got from Major Knox."

15200. The thing is brought to your recollection now?—Yes.

15201. Who told you to give the word to Gillmor?—I have not the slightest recollection of it.

15202. Oh, now?—On my solemn oath I do not know. I have not the smallest idea who bid me.

15203. Who told you to go to Gillmor?—I do not know who told me.

15204. Gillmor says he wrote to the Major, and that you brought him word to go to the clerk of the peace to get £5?—I had no knowledge he wrote to the Major or anything in connexion with it.

15205. Do you think you went out of your own head?—I do not believe I did.

15206. Who do you believe told you to go to him?—From what I heard of his evidence I heard he said that I went to him from Utred Knox.

15207. He did not use the words "Utred Knox" at all?—I thought he did, and he told me himself he did.

15208. He did not know Utred Knox at all?—Oh, I name Utred Knox as the clerk of the peace.

15209. Then do you consider it was Mr. Utred Knox himself sent you?—It must have been.

15210. Who told this man that £5 was ready for him?—I never said a thing of the kind to him.

15211. Did you know he was to get any money?—No. I am certain sure if Mr. Knox was to give him money he would inform me of it. If he gave me the message in the ordinary way I would have delivered the message for him, but I had no other communication with him on the subject.

15212. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Do you swear there was not the least recollection of the transaction in your mind until Gillmor referred to it?—No; and up to the present I cannot call it to memory.

15213. Were you at Carrick?—I was.

15214. Did you hear it referred to there?—No.

15215. Did you hear Utred Knox examined?—No; I do not recollect that I did. I referred to the evidence at home last night in my own house, and referred to the evidence of Utred Knox, and that is all the knowledge I have of the transaction.

15216. Do you swear you were not present when Utred Knox was examined?—I will not swear, but I have no recollection of it.

15217. Did you take notes of Utred Knox's evidence?—No, sir, but I referred to the printed report.

15218. Did you read the report of the evidence at Carrick in the papers as it was reported?—It is likely I did.

15219. Have you no recollection of Utred Knox being examined as to having given the loan of some money to Samuel Gillmor?—Nothing more than I have read in the evidence. I would tell with pleasure if I knew of it.

(The witness then withdrew.)

James M'Hugh.

James M'Hugh sworn and examined.

15220. The Chief Commissioner.—Are you an elector?—Yes.

15221. Who did you vote for at the last election?—For Captain Flanagan.

15222. Did you vote for Sergeant Armstrong before that?—I did.

15223. Did you get money after that election?—I did.

15224. How much?—Fifteen pounds.

15225. From Mr. Phillips?—Yes.

15226. Did you ever get money at any previous election?—Never. I never asked for it.

15227. Did you ever get any money since?—No, sir.

15228. Did anyone offer you any money at the last election on either side?—No, sir, only what was given to me.

15229. What was given to you?—The £15.

15230. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Had you had any business dealings with Mr. Phillips before you got the £15?—No.

15231. Did you get the whole of the £15 in cash?—I did, in notes.

15232. Had Mr. Phillips canvassed you before the election?—No, sir; Mr. Conroy did.

15233. Did he give you the hard word that you should get money before the election was over?—No, sir, but he said he had no money for me.

15234. Did you ask him had he any money?—I did ask him, but he told me he had not.

15235. Was that at the time he canvassed you?—Long after; I think nearly twelve months. It was a long time afterwards before I heard money was going.

(The witness then withdrew.)

Mark Anthony M'Donogh sworn and examined. Mark Anthony M'Donogh.

15236. The Chief Commissioner.—Did you vote at the last election?—I did not, sir.

15237. Why did you not vote?—I would have voted only for the shooting of Captain King. I am very timid.

15238. Did the shooting of Captain King frighten you?—It did, and I did not go out.

15239. Did you remain at your own house?—No.

15240. Where?—At the hotel.

15241. At which hotel?—At Miss Allingham's.

15242. Were any other electors there with you?—I do not know, sir; there were plenty of people there.

15243. How did you vote at the previous election?—I had not a vote, sir.

15244. Was this the first time you had a vote?—Yes, sir.

15245. What is your house rated at?—I really could not tell, sir.

15246. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Are you a Protestant or a Catholic?—I am a Roman Catholic.

15247. Were any threats used to you before the day of election, that if you did not vote for Captain Flanagan you would catch it?—I do not know, sir. I was stopped in the street the day before coming up to Miss Allingham's.

15248. What day was that?—The day before the election.

15249. Who stopped you?—I think it was a man named M'Loughlin.

15250. What did he say to you?—He raised his cudgel to strike me, and some of the crowd got hold of me and dragged me off. I was rescued from them by Mr. Lestrange and Mr. Lawder, and got into Miss Allingham's.

15251. Did they beat you then?—They dragged me very much. I got free and I could not tell how.

15252. Was your house smashed?—Yes, sir, my windows were smashed.

15253. Did you get compensation?—No, sir, I did not put in for it.

15254. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—What are you by trade?—I keep a fancy shop in Bridge-street.

15255. Are you in politics a Liberal or a Conservative?—It was the Conservatives who gave me my vote and always supported me; and I would always vote for them except for that.

15256. Were you apprehensive they would withdraw their custom from you unless you voted for Major Knox?—I do not know.

15257. Did you receive any money before or after the election?—Oh no.

15258. Was there any promise?—No, sir.

15259. Was the sole motive for voting for Major Knox a consideration for your customers?—Yes, they always gave me my business.

15260. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Were you at the parish chapel the Sunday before the election?—No, sir, I was not.

15261. Or the Sunday after?—No, sir, I was not.

15262. You go to the friary?—Yes, sir, sometimes.

15263. Were you present when Sergeant Boyle was ordered out?—No, sir.

15264. Did anybody tell you, you were to separate yourself from the rest of the congregation?—No.

15265. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—You know what exclusive dealing is? Was there any exclusive dealing, to your knowledge, or did you hear of it being practised during the election time or afterwards?—Well, I heard there was.

15266. What did you hear of it?—I could not exactly tell.

15267. Did you hear it said that the Conservatives would give their custom only to men who voted for the Conservative candidate?—No.

15268. Was your mind influenced in any degree in your vote by what you heard of exclusive dealing?—No, sir, it was not. I made up my mind to vote for the Conservatives.

15269. Who is your landlord?—Mr. Charles Anderson.

(The witness then withdrew.)

James M'Niffe sworn and examined. JamesM'Niffe

15270. The Chief Commissioner.—Were you engaged in any capacity at the last election?—I was an inspector for Captain Flanagan.

15271. Have you had experience of previous elections in Sligo?—I have had.

15272. For many years?—I suppose for the last twenty years.

15273. Do you know anything about the mob that was in town at the last election?—Nothing at all. I only came to town the night before the polling from Dublin.

15274. It was mentioned yesterday that you said there was money going?—I say that is a mistake, sir. It may have been my brother, but it was not I.

15275. You did not say that there was money going on both sides?—Certainly not. I know nothing at all about it: and I did not say it.

15276. Do you know of any place where these people who were composing the mob got refreshments?—Certainly not, no more than you do.

15277. Can you give us any information?—None whatever beyond what I tell you. I acted as an inspector and was paid for it.

15278. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—From your knowledge of the borough for the last twenty years, is it your opinion that after an election there is usually an expectation of money being distributed?—A certain class of voters have expectations and strong ones, and I know there is a certain class who will not vote without being paid.

15279. That expectation is, so to speak, habitual?—That is my experience.

15280. The Chief Commissioner.—Did you yourself know anything about the distribution of money after elections?—I never saw one penny I believe, nor was it given to my knowledge.

15281. What do you mean by being an inspector?—In a booth.

15282. Conducting the polling?—No, sir. As the poll was being taken I was inspector for the candidate. There are two booths, and I was in the record booth as inspector for Captain Flanagan. I was occupied in the same capacity at the county election.

15283. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Have you been long absent from Sligo?—I have been living in Dublin for the last thirty years.

15284. How long were you in Sligo previous to the election?—I was down at the assizes.

15285. Not between the assizes and the election?—Certainly not.

15286. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Could you say whether there was an impression at all prevalent to any considerable extent amongst the voters that no one but a rich man would have a chance as a candidate for the borough?—Well, it is the general impression that a man requires money coming here. That in every borough is perfectly understood and known.

15287. You speak at all events in reference to this borough—there is that impression in this borough amongst the voters?—That is my impression.

15288. That is your opinion of the impression amongst the voters?—Amongst a certain class, sir; and there is another class of men that no money would bribe.

15289. How many could you say were in that class?

THIRTEENTH DAY.

October 20.

James M'Niffe

—Speaking roughly, I think it would be a fair average to say forty or fifty. That is merely a guess. I should say that at least. A fair average is between forty and fifty.

15290. That is including those on both sides?—Yes.

15291. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Have you heard since the election that money was going for mobs on Captain Flanagan's side?—I heard it talked of that there were mobs here, but as regards any payment being made for them I did not know or hear a word about it.

15292. Or refreshments supplied?—Or refreshments supplied. I never mix up in these things at all. I do not meddle in that kind of business.

(The witness then withdrew.)

Morris M'Nulty.

Morris M'Nulty sworn and examined.

15293. The Chief Commissioner.—Did you vote at the last election?—I did.

15294. For Captain Flanagan?—Yes.

15295. At the previous election did you vote for Sergeant Armstrong?—I did, sir.

15296. Do you remember Michael Hunt, John Hart, and James Moran, all voting together for the Sergeant?—I think I do.

15297. Do you remember bringing them a message that day?—No.

15298. Did you go to speak to them that day?—I did not.

15299. Did you not speak to any of them that day?—I spoke to John M'Grath.

15300. Where were you before you went to John M'Grath. Were you in the Court-house?—I think I voted in the Court-house here.

15301. I think you did, too. You need not tell us that. Do you expect to tell us that as a serious answer. A respectable man like you ought to give a straightforward answer. Where were you before you went down for M'Guirk?—I was at home.

15302. Who told you to go for M'Grath?—Myself.

15303. Nobody told you?—No.

15304. What did you say to him?—I was a great customer of his, and I thought I would have influence upon him to vote. I left him from £400 a year to £500, and I had no influence with any of the rest except with M'Guirk.

15305. When you went down to M'Grath did you find any other man with him?—I did not see anybody with him.

15306. Nobody?—No.

15307. Did you know that other men were in his house and were afterwards in his house?—I believe they were below in Michael Hunt's.

15308. And that they were all going together?—I did not hear that.

15309. Who told you the other men were in Hunt's?—I saw them in it. I was there myself.

15310. Did you go there to try to get them to vote?—I did not, indeed.

15311. What did you go in there for?—Was it to look at them from curiosity?—Yes.

15312. Are you serious now, you went to look at them from curiosity?—Yes, sir.

15313. Had you a glass of anything with them?—Well, I had a little with them.

15314. How much?—I could not say now.

15315. Who treated you, or did you treat yourself?—I think it was Michael Hunt. They gave me a drop of drink.

15316. Now, out with it all. What did you say to M'Grath?—I only wanted him to vote for Sergeant Armstrong.

15317. Did you intimate that he would get anything?—I did not.

15318. But was he to get anything?—I do not know.

15319. Was anything hinted about £300 or £250 that you had that day. Cannot you tell us the truth about it?—John M'Grath told me he was offered £300 by Mr. Lyons, sen.

15320. What did you say to that?—I could not say anything to it.

15321. Do you mean to say you said nothing when he said that?—I said it was a great deal of money to get.

15322. And that half a loaf——. Go on now?—I did not say anything about half a loaf.

15323. Did you hear the expression used that half a loaf would be better than no bread? Which of you used that?—I did not say it to him, but to Dominick Hunt last Friday.

15324. Why did you say that to him last Friday?—He was speaking about the election, and he said he was offered £20 from Mr. Phillips, and I said take it, for half a loaf was better than no bread.

15325. Did you know that those men were expecting money that day?—I did believe it.

15326. Expecting money from your side?—Yes, to be sure.

15327. Why to be sure?—Why they heard it was going, I believe. They said it was going, and they bet [should] get some.

15328. Did Hunt say that to you?—I had not the conversation with Hunt.

15329. Did M'Grath say it?—Yes.

15330. What did you say?—I could not say, because I had no money to offer him.

15331. Were you the last man who went down to them before they came up to plump for the Sergeant?—No.

15332. Who went down to them?—I could not say.

15333. Then you will not tell us anything more about it?—I could not tell you anything more about it.

15334. What time of the day did you vote yourself?—I think about nine o'clock in the day. Between nine and ten.

15335. Had you anything to do with the distribution of the £1,483?—No, sir.

15336. Did you get any of it?—No, sir; nor asked any of it at any of the elections. I voted twice, and I got no money and asked no money.

15337. And would not take it?—I would not take it, sir.

15338. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Now are you quite sure that when the £200 or £300 was mentioned to you you said nothing except that it was a large sum?—No, sir.

15339. Did you not say anything else?—That is all, sir, I believe. I think it was £300 or £500 he said—I could not say which.

15340. And did you say anything at all about half that sum, or anything like that?—No.

15341. Did you make any reference to half the £500?—I have no recollection.

15342. But you might have said it?—I might.

15343. The Chief Commissioner.—And it is likely you did say it?—I could not say.

15344. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Had many others gone down to them to try and persuade them before you had gone down?—I did not see any.

15345. Had you heard of some one?—No, sir. I was a good customer of M'Grath's, and I thought I might have some influence with him.

15346. Who sent you down to him?—Myself. I was dealing five years with him.

15347. Did you mention to anyone you were going down there?—No.

15348. When was it you made up your mind to go down?—Just the morning of the polling.

Morris M'Nulty.

15349. And was it late in the day you went down to him?—Between ten and eleven o'clock.

15350. And had you no conversation in the meantime with M'Grath?—No, sir. I wanted him to come and vote for Armstrong.

15351. Did the Sergeant ask you to go down?—No

15352. Or anybody else?—Nobody else.

(The witness then withdrew.)

Patrick O'Connor sworn and examined.

Patrick O'Connor.

15353. The Chief Commissioner.—Are you an elector?—Yes.

15354. Did you vote at the last election?—No.

15355. Where were you on the polling day?—In Sligo.

15356. Were you in your own house?—Yes.

15357. Were you molested in any way?—Very little in it. I was not molested by anyone. Nothing worth talking about.

15358. Why did you not vote?—Well I had some business in Dublin, and I was above in Dublin, and I was there for three or four days I do not exactly recollect, but I found out before I was very long in Dublin that there had been some kind of a set upon me. Some parties were coming to me and asking me would I take £50 or £60, so I refused it at first, and then they came to me in a day or two afterwards talking about £100.

15359. Who spoke to you about £50 or about £100 in Dublin?—Well, a gentleman came up to me one evening and asked me would I think of £50 for remaining in the city.

15360. Who was the gentleman?—Well, as he did not close the transaction perhaps it would not be right to mention it.

15361. You may mention his name?—Jeremiah Perry, solicitor.

15362. Who mentioned to you about the £100?—Another gentleman. In a day or two after that another gentleman. I rather rejected it at first, but in a day or two after that another gentleman told me he would make an appointment with me.

15363. Who was that gentleman?—I understand Mr. Lloyd.

15364. Where was it you saw him?—In the Court of Bankruptcy behind the counter.

15365. Is it Mr. Lloyd who is a clerk in the office?—Yes.

15366. What did he say to you?—He said he would make an appointment with me to go down to Major Knox's place.

15367. Where?—In Abbey-street.

15368. Do you mean the Irish Times office?—Yes.

15369. Who introduced you to Mr. Lloyd?—I do not recollect that anybody introduced me. I had some business to do in the office.

15370. What is your business. What are you?—A trader and shopkeeper in the town.

15371. Are you a Roman Catholic?—Yes.

15372. And how long have you been on the registry. How long have you been a voter?—I was only a voter just previous to the election. I did not look for the matter at all.

15373. Now did you ever make any agreement about the £100?—Well we came to terms and I began to consider about it and I was promised £80.

15374. Who promised you the £80?—Myself and my father to remain in Dublin during the election. Mr. Lloyd, I think, promised me.

15375. Your father had a vote too, I think?—Yes, sir.

15376. You say an appointment was made with you to go to Abbey-street?—Yes, sir.

15377. Did you go to Abbey-street?—I did.

15378. Who did you see there?—Mr. Lloyd.

15379. Where did you see him?—Up stairs.

15380. Was there anyone else there?—Major Knox was there.

15381. Do you know Captain Ethelred Knox?—I could not say I know Captain Ethelred Knox, but I know Mr. Utred Knox.

15382. You say Mr. Lloyd was there and Major Knox. Now tell us, O'Connor, all that then occurred?—Well we began to come to terms. They offered me £20 and £30 and £40, and to tell you the truth—I will tell you the whole truth—any way it was decided upon £80, and I got £20, and the remainder was to be given afterwards.

15383. Who gave you the £20?—Mr. Lloyd.

15384. Did he give it in the presence of anyone?—In the presence of my father.

15385. Where did he give it to you?—Up stairs in the Irish Times office.

15386. Now, what notes did he give you?—Two £10 Bank of Ireland notes.

15387. How long was that before the election?—It was about ten or twelve days or so, I am not sure.

15388. Your father was present?—He was.

15389. Was that after you had seen Major Knox?—Yes, sir. I seen Major Knox previous to that, but he was not in the room at the time.

15390. That the money was given?—No.

15391. Did you make any appointment with Mr. Lloyd previously?—Yes, to meet him there.

15392. Now how did you know Mr. Lloyd at all. Did you ever know him before?—I did not know him at first by name, but I inquired afterwards from people what his name was, and they told me his name was Lloyd.

15393. Would you know him well if you saw him again?—Yes, sir. He is a well-looking man, a gentleman.

15394. When you got the money did you give any I O U or document?—Yes, sir, I gave receipts.

15395. The father and you gave receipts?—Yes, sir, as canvassers.

15396. What was the arrangement made then—were you to vote or not to vote?—To abstain from voting.

15397. Did your father agree to that also?—He did.

15398. Now you say you were to get £40 each?—Yes.

15399. That is £80 for the two?—Yes.

15400. Do you mean to convey to the court that Major Knox understood that?—Major Knox had nothing to do with the transaction. Of course I do not know what he understood.

15401. I mean to say that the transaction was between you, but Mr. Lloyd made the arrangement?—Yes, sir. Major Knox refused to have anything to do with the transaction himself personally, and he referred me to Mr. Lloyd.

15402. Did you ask Major Knox for the money?—I understood by the appointment it was for money they brought me there, but he refused to have any personal connexion with it.

15403. How did Mr. Perry know you were a Sligo voter?—Because he was doing business for myself.

15404. Recollect now who was it introduced you to Mr. Lloyd—how did you happen to know him—were you making any declaration or affidavit or anything?—Yes.

15405. How did Mr. Lloyd know you were a Sligo voter?—That is what I was wondering at myself.

15406. How Mr. Lloyd knew you to be a Sligo voter?—Yes.

15407. Was it Mr. Lloyd first spoke to you about the election—what did Mr. Lloyd say to you about voting at Sligo, or not voting at Sligo?—An attorney's clerk came to me to say that Mr. Lloyd was very anxious about me.

15408. Who was the attorney's clerk?—Mr. Perry's clerk.

THIRTEENTH DAY.

October 20.

Patrick O'Connor.

15409. What is his name?—Michael Rourke.

15410. What for?—He said he was very anxious and looking for me—I believe there was a set made upon me.

15411. Where did Rourke tell you to go and meet Mr. Lloyd?—Well, I think it was not Rourke that made the appointment, but he said that Mr. Lloyd was very anxious to see me, and Mr. Perry then overtook me going down Sackville-street one evening, and he walked up to me, and said to me, what do you think of £50 for staying in town during the election? I hesitated about it, and then I began to think that my business would at least keep me in town. I got a hint from Mr. Lloyd that I would be wanted there about the time of the election. About two days previous to the election there came a telegram for me to go to Dublin.

15412. From whom?—From Jeremiah Perry, saying that I was wanting.

15413. Just state in your own way what occurred; was this before getting the £20?—No, sir, it was after I got it.

15414. Well now who was the clerk you have mentioned?—Rourke.

15415. He was the man who told you that Mr. Lloyd wanted you, and then you went and saw Mr. Lloyd, and where did he bring you to speak about the matter? Did he bring you into any private room in the Bankrupt Court, or where did he make the arrangement with you to see him in the Irish Times office?—I cannot exactly recollect small details, but I know he made some sort of an arrangement with me to meet him at the Irish Times office.

15416. Since the election have you applied for the payment of the money?—I have, sir.

15417. To whom did you apply?—To Mr. Lloyd.

15418. What did he say to you?—After the commission he said he would pay me.

15419. When did he tell you that—had you written to him?—I have written to him once or twice, and he did not answer my letters, and then I went up to Dublin myself.

15420. And you saw him?—I did.

15421. Did you demand the money from him for yourself and father?—Yes; I told him I wanted some money, as I was hard up.

15422. What did he say to you?—After the commission he said he would give me anything at all that was fair.

15423. When did he say that?—Probably about three or four months ago.

15424. Did you ever go to the Irish Times office to try and get payment of the balance?—Well, I understood that Major Knox would not interest himself personally, and I never asked Major Knox for a shilling.

15425. Did you ever apply to anyone else except Mr. Lloyd?—For money—no, sir.

15426. Did anyone write up from Sligo besides yourself to try to get paid?—No, sir.

15427. Is your father dead since?—He has been dead since.

15428. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Did you see Major Knox at the Irish Times office?—I did, sir.

15429. Was it the day you got the £20 or some other day?—On that very occasion. He referred me to Mr. Lloyd, and gave me to understand he could not tamper or mix with such matters.

15430. And when you went into the Irish Times office did you see Mr. Lloyd and Major Knox in the room?—I was there before Mr. Lloyd, and I went there by appointment to see what was up.

15431. And did Mr. Lloyd and Major Knox come into the room?—I met them both in a room first, and then I was brought into a waste room.

15432. And when they were both in the room was there any conversation about money or about your vote?—I understood I went there for money, and when I spoke to Major Knox he said he could not interfere, and referred me to Mr. Lloyd.

15433. And Major Knox left the room?—He remained in the room, and Mr. Lloyd brought me into another room, and was coming backwards and forwards making the offers.

15434. And it was after that you got the £20?—It was after that.

15435. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Was it after you had seen Mr. Lloyd you met Mr. Jeremiah Perry?—It was previous to that; I was getting hints of it off and on.

15436. Who gave you the hints?—Mr. Perry told me, "What would you think of £50 for remaining in the city during the election?"—myself and my father.

15437. What did you say to that?—I do not think I made any allusion to it, but he told me he would see me again about it or something in that way.

15438. Did you ever see Mr. Jeremiah Perry before he offered you the £50?—I had seen him several times. I had business transactions with him and he was doing business for me.

15439. And what time of the day was it you saw Mr. Lloyd at his office when he talked about meeting you at the Irish Times office?—That is, when we met at the Irish Times office?

15440. No, but the time you met him in the Bankruptcy Office first?—I had been in and out through that office several times.

15441. It was in the morning?—I think about the middle of the day. I have no particular recollection.

15442. And what time of the day was it you went to the Irish Times office?—About four o'clock in the evening.

15443. Did Mr. Lloyd tell you why you were to go to the Irish Times office?—Why I was to go to it?

15444. Yes?—I do not think he told me so himself. I know I came to understand it in some way; that he made an appointment with me in the Irish Times office.

15445. But has Mr. Lloyd any business in the Irish Times office that you know of?—I do not know.

15446. Were you surprised at Mr. Lloyd mentioning the Irish Times office?—From hints I got off and on for three or four days I came to understand it was to bargain for my vote. I came to understand it by hints and signs and one thing and another.

15447. When you went into the Irish Times office who did you ask for?—I think I mentioned to some of the gentlemen inside the counter that I came there by appointment to see Major Knox.

15448. But you know you were not coming to see Major Knox but Mr. Lloyd?—I came there to meet Mr. Lloyd by appointment. I did not know if I was to meet Major Knox or who I was to meet. I came there by appointment, and who I was to meet I do not know.

15449. To meet Mr. Lloyd?—To meet Mr. Lloyd and Major Knox.

15450. Did Mr. Lloyd say you were to meet Major Knox?—I am not sure, sir.

15451. Are you sure whether you asked for Major Knox?—I know I asked for Major Knox.

15452. Well, were you shown up then into Major Knox's room?—Yes, I think so.

15453. Try and recollect?—I was, sir. I went up stairs and I saw him in his room.

15454. What kind of room was it, front or back?—It appeared to be a small room.

15455. Was it looking out into the street?—I do not think it was.

15456. Was Mr. Lloyd in the room when you went in?—He was, sir, along with the Major.

15457. Were they both sitting down, or both standing up before the fire?—They were both sitting down.

15458. At a desk?—At a table.

15459. And were they close to each other?—Very close.

15460. Who did you first speak to when you went into the room?—Well, I met a townsman of my own in the room, and it was to him I first spoke.

15461. Well, who is the townsman?—Captain

Patrick O'Connor.

Edward Wynne, of Sligo, magistrate. He was the first I recognised, being a townsman.

15462. And you spoke to him first?—I did, I think, and shook hands with him.

15463. Well, what did you say to him?—I said nothing to him, except just bid the time of day. He left the room at once.

15464. Who did you speak to then?—I think I saluted Major Knox.

15465. Well, what did he say to you?—He asked me to go down to Sligo and vote for him, and I told him party feeling was too high in Sligo, and I could not think of doing that. I told him I was hard up, and he said he could not interfere; that there was some very stringent law against bribery, or something that way; and he referred to the Act passed by Sergeant Armstrong, that you would get two years in gaol for it; and he gave me a hint then to go on one side with Mr. Lloyd.

15466. I want to know what he said to you?—He said there was a very stringent Act.

15467. How did he convey to you to go to Sligo?—He referred me to Mr. Lloyd.

15468. What words did he use? He did not say "I refer you to Mr. Lloyd?"—He said he left that to Mr. Lloyd—that he would arrange.

15469. Do you mean that he left the money matters to Mr. Lloyd?—That is what I inferred.

15470. And then he went out of the room?—Yes, he went out of the room.

15471. That is, Mr. Lloyd and you went out of the room?—Yes.

15472. Had Mr. Lloyd said anything before he took you out of the room?—He brought me out of the room.

15473. Had he said anything to you when you were conversing with Major Knox?—I cannot recollect that, sir. I cannot recollect words said about last November.

15474. What did he say to you when he first took you to the other room?—He offered me £20, and was gradually going up, and I wanted £100 for abstaining from voting; and when he went as far as £80 we closed.

15475. And you said you would not go down to Sligo?—For abstaining from voting.

15476. But were you to go to Sligo?—I could infer from him that I had business in Dublin during the days of the election; that I would be summoned there; and there came a telegram for me to go up there, and I did not go up, for I did not like to go away, and stayed my ground.

15477. And you did not go to Dublin?—No.

15478. You stayed in Sligo during the voting?—Yes.

15479. Did your father stay?—Yes, sir, my father voted for Captain Flanagan.

15480. And you did not vote at all?—I did not vote.

15481. You said something about canvassing?—We were to get £10 a piece for canvassing, and we signed some kind of a docket.

15482. Did you canvass?—Not at all. I had no notion of canvassing.

15483. Did anybody canvass you for Captain Flanagan?—I think Captain Flanagan canvassed me himself.

15484. Nobody else?—Well, Father Morris.

15485. Did anybody threaten you that if you did not vote for Flanagan you would be the worse for it?—No; threats of that sort would not tell upon me. Nobody threatened me.

15486. After the election did anybody order you to go out of the friary during the mass?—Well, yes.

15487. Tell us about that?—I went in to mass about the time of the first Gospel.

15488. What day was this?—Some time after the election. I cannot fix the date. I got an intimation from a gentleman that Father Goodman wanted me, and I came out into the porch of the church, and he told me to kneel down there. So I very good humouredly rather remonstrated with him, and I went into the body of the church amongst the congregation. I heard mass there, and I came away then. I partly went in then.

15489. Did anybody say anything to you after you did go into the body of the church?—One man of the name of Tighe told me I was approaching into the place that was not allowed to me, and coarsely ordered me out, but that passed off good humouredly.

(The witness then withdrew.)

James Moran (already sworn), examined.

James Moran.

15490. The Chief Commissioner.—Did you go to the bishop's house on the day of the polling of the last election?—I did.

15491. Did you see Father Morris there?—I did.

15492. Did you tell him there were some men wanting £1,000?—I did.

15493. Who were the men?—I do not know the men that I met after I voted, but in sometime during the course of the day—we were wanting to do the best we could for the Liberal party—and I went up to M'Grath's and stopped there some time myself and two more, and whilst I was going out there, in M'Grath's yard, or outside the door, I do not know which, young Dominick Hunt said to me that ten voters could be got for £1,000, and I hesitated for some time, and I said, "Come along with me and we will see." He did come with me, down to the Presbytery. I met Father Morris, and I told him, and he just put up his two hands and says, "James, we can have nothing to do with such things."

15494. Did you go to the bishop's in order to try to get if you could the £1,000?—I went to deliver the message.

15495. Did you go to try and get the £1,000?—I suppose it was not me was to get it.

15496. But to try to get it for the men?—I went with the young man to deliver the message, as I have explained to you.

15497. Did you believe you had a chance of getting it when you went to the bishop's?—I believe I had not.

15498. But at the time did you believe it?—I positively knew the money would not be got, but I went.

15499. And do you say it was young Dominick Hunt who first gave you the word about the ten men wanting the £1,000?—I do positively swear it.

Dominick Hunt was recalled.

Dominick Hunt.

15500. The Chief Commissioner.—Do you hear what Moran swears?—Yes.

15501. Is that true?—No, sir.

15502. James Moran (to Hunt).—Was it not you who called upon me outside of M'Guirk's, and said there was ten votes to be got for £1,000, and I went down the street, and the other two men were along with you, and I brought you up?

Dominick Hunt (to the Commissioners).—It is not the truth. He pulled me out of the hall-way by the collar, and I was half way down the street before he told me what he wanted at all. He told me to go along with him, and I would not be sorry for going—(to Moran).—Who told the two men?

Moran.—I told it to Mr. Donegan and Mr. Cullen.

15503. The Chief Commissioner (to Moran).—Did you tell that on the spot to him?—Yes, and they told me to go back and bring the messenger with me.

THIRTEENTH DAY.

October 20.

Dominick Hunt.

Hunt.—They were in the house when I left, to the best of my opinion.

15504. The Chief Commissioner (to Moran).—Is Mr. Donegan the gentleman who was examined?—Yes.

15505. And Mr. Cullen?—Yes.

15506. What did you tell them on the subject?—I said that young Mr. Hunt told me that ten votes could be got for £1,000, and they told me to go back and bring him to deliver the message.

15507. Did you bring him?—Yes.

15508. Did you leave young Dominick Hunt before you met Mr. Donegan and Mr. Cullen? You say he told you that?—No; I think I turned back, and they said, "bring him with you."

15509. Why was he to go along with you?—He knew that himself. As these men were supposed to be either in M'Guirk's or in Hunt's he was the best to communicate this to them and not me.

15510. Was he the man that you believed knew the ten men's names?—Well, I believe so; but in the way going, I recollect he told me there would be only eight. I do not recollect what talk we had about the money.

Hunt (to Moran).—You told me half way not to say a word at all, and you would get £1,000 if you could, and give me £100 and keep £200 for your trouble at the last election.

The Rev. John Morris

The Rev. John Morris recalled.

15511. The Chief Commissioner.—Did you say young Dominick Hunt wanted to speak to you?—No; he did not. The moment I saw Moran I said to him to speak to me. Hunt was standing in the small room at the back of the window, and I had nothing to say with him or he with me.

15512. Was this young man Dominick Hunt in the room when the conversation took place?—It was in the hall it took place.

15513. Why did you decline to have any conversation with Hunt?—I was dissatisfied with the part taken by his father on that occasion and at the previous election.

(The witness again withdrew.)

Hunt was directed to leave the table.

James Moran.

James Moran re-examined.

15514. Mr. Commissioner Bruce (to the witness Moran).—Was it in M'Grath's you first heard about the ten voters?—It was not in M'Grath's, but it was after I came out into the yard or outside the door. It was immediately after coming out of M'Grath's.

15515. And it was young Dominick Hunt told you that?—Positively.

15516. Was there anybody by?—No one.

15517. What did you do immediately then?—I immediately told the two men who were with me.

15518. Then there were two men with you?—Yes, there were two men along with me in M'Grath's wanting to get these voters who were absent. I had been acquainted with them from the former election, and they thought I might have some influence.

15519. But when you went out from M'Grath's you left the two friends inside?—No, sir, they were off before me.

15520. You left the house with your two friends?—Yes, with my two friends Donegan and Cullen.

15521. They went on a little before and young Dominick Hunt came with you?—Yes, decidedly.

15522. Did you tell your two friends immediately what Hunt had said?—Yes, on the instant.

15523. What did they say?—They told me to go back and bring Hunt with me.

15524. Where were you to bring Hunt to?—I intended to take them to the tally-rooms, and as we were passing the presbytery I took one into the presbytery, and Father Morris told me to have nothing to do with it.

15525. Did Hunt join your two friends?—Not a word the others spoke to him to my knowledge.

15526. After you left Father Morris did you and young Hunt separate?—We went back home again. We could not get anything, and it was supposed that the election could not be gained at the time.

15527. Did Michael Hunt ever tell you that they were to get money?—I never saw Michael Hunt on the day of the polling at all.

15528. No, but before it?—I do not remember.

15529. Did he ever tell you he was holding out for money?—I do not know if ever he told me any such thing.

15530. Did he ever tell you he refused money because it was not enough?—He never did to my knowledge. He might be joking and talking about money and things, and taking a half glass of whiskey; but more than that I could not swear to.

(The witness then withdrew.)

Mr. Donegan.

Mr. Donegan came upon the table and said:—

My name has been mentioned by Moran. M'Grath was in our employment for twenty years, and it was thought I had some power over him, and I went simply to ask him to come and vote. I should mention I took a letter from Dr. Gillooly with me, and that was the reason of my going. I knew nothing about the £1,000 business until afterwards. Moran had not mentioned it then. I met Mr. Cullen going to this place, and I asked him to come with me and see these people, and I asked M'Grath to vote and he would not vote, for he had an old grudge to the Liberals.

15531. The Chief Commissioner.—On that day were you and Mr. Cullen told anything about the £1,000?—I do not think I heard it then. Sometime after in the presbytery I must have heard it.

15532. Did you hear there were ten or eight men holding out for the £1,000?—Yes.

15533. Did you know that they were? Did you understand as being engaged in the election for Captain Flanagan that they were?—I did, I think, hear, but could not positively make out the number he mentioned. I did not think such a number could be in it. I understood his brother-in-law, Michael Hunt, was there, but I did not see him.

15534. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Are you positive, Mr. Donegan, Moran did not tell you, because there is a contradiction of testimony with regard to that point? Moran swears that the three of you left the house, and that Hunt told Moran that there were ten men to be had for £1,000, and that he told you and Mr. Cullen, and that Mr. Cullen said, "Bring the messenger"?—I am positive Moran never mentioned anything about the £1,000.

15535. Could Moran have said to you that there were ten men to be had for money?—I do not believe he did. I asked Moran if he had any influence there to say a word.

15536. Moran went into the house with you?—Oh, certainly not; Mr. Cullen and I went alone in the matter—at least I asked Mr. Cullen to come.

George Thomas sworn and examined.

15537. The Chief Commissioner.—What is your occupation?—I am a clerk in the City of Dublin Artillery.

15538. I do not know what you say?—An orderly-room clerk in the City of Dublin Artillery.

15539. Were you ever connected with the Irish Times?—I was.

15540. What were you there?—I was a night clerk; at least the evening clerk.

15541. And when did you cease to be in that employment?—Last Thursday fortnight.

15542. Of your own wish I presume?—No, sir.

15543. How long were you in the Irish Times?—I think twelve months.

15544. Do you know Thomas Brennan?—I do.

15545. When did you last see him?—About a week before I left the Irish Times office.

15546. Where did you see him?—In the office.

15547. Used he to come to the office repeatedly?—Yes.

15548. Of your knowledge did he get any money there?—He did.

15549. How much?—I could not say the amount.

15550. Who used to pay him?—I have given him money, but I could not tell the amount.

15551. By whose direction?—By Mr. Hignell's.

15552. Used Thomas Brennan to get any weekly sum as you understood—any regular payment?—No; not to my knowledge.

15553. How much at a time would you give him?—Only a certain amount at a time, just as I might be told.

15554. How much?—I could not say the amount; I forget.

15555. Did you know of any Sligo voters being in Dublin, or were you informed by anyone in the Irish Times office of any Sligo voters being in Dublin?—Yes, I was.

15556. By whom?—By Mr. Hignell.

15557. Did Mr. Hignell direct you to do anything in reference to the Sligo voters?—On one occasion he did.

15558. What did he tell you to do?—Draw out a statement.

15559. Do you mean a statement in writing?—Yes, sir.

15560. A statement in writing of what?—Of the expenses attending the keeping of voters in Dublin for six weeks.

15561. Do you remember the names of these people?—I do, sir.

15562. Who were they?—Brennan first—the two M'Mullens, Gethins, Devanny. I do not recollect any of the others, or if there were more. I am not sure whether there were more or not.

15563. Do you remember the house where it was stated these men were stopping?—No, sir; I do not.

15564. What exactly was the account to be for?—Well, it was a rough statement of the expenses that would accrue for keeping them, from the 1st January until the 14th February.

15565. What was the total amount of that account?—I am not sure exactly now, but it is nearly £300.

15566. Do you mean by the expense, the expense of living?—No, sir.

15567. Now tell what the £300 consisted of?—The expenses of travelling, and the expenses of conducting—I forget the names of the parties—men to Manchester; and keeping them there for a certain time at so much per week, and the expenses of conducting others, I forget the place where they went to; but altogether it amounted to each individual about £50, or more. In some instances more.

15568. For what purpose was this £300 account made up?—I do not know. I was sent for one morning by the manager in the Irish Times office.

15569. Where did you get the materials for making out this account?—From Mr. Hignell's dictation.

15570. Did you write down what he told you?—I rote down what he told me.

15571. Now the M'Mullens we know were sent to Manchester and Clithero. Were there any entries in that account who was to be sent to England?—I am not sure now, sir. I could not be sure now, sir, it is so long ago. I know there were others—I am sure there were others.

15572. How many others were sent to England?—I cannot be sure, sir.

15573. Were there three?—No, sir. I cannot recollect now.

15574. Now, I gave you the names of Manchester and Clithero, which have been mentioned in evidence as places to which the electors were sent. Do you remember any of the other English towns?—I do not, sir. I think that is the only place that was mentioned to me, that was Manchester.

15575. Were there down in this the payments to Brennan?—There were, sir.

15576. About how much to Brennan?—I think there was about £50, sir.

15577. Was this the only account of expenditure for these persons from the 1st of January last to the 14th of February?—I am not sure about the date, but I am sure about the time—about six weeks. I cannot say the date exactly, but from the 1st of January to about the 14th of February.

15578. Was that before the petition was tried?—I think so, sir. It was.

15579. What day did you go into the Irish Times office?—I could not say now, sir. I have not the slightest idea. Some time in October.

15580. Some day in October twelve month?—Yes, sir, this time twelve months.

15581. It was before the election?—Oh, no. I was not in the office during the election.

15582. Was it after that you went there—after the election?—Yes, sir.

15583. The election was on the 19th November?—Well, it was after that that I joined the Irish Times office.

15584. Can you tell any other names of electors that were in that?—I cannot swear. These are the only names I know.

15585. Did Hignell tell you the object of this account?—He did not, sir. He said that Major Knox wished to have it.

15586. How many persons were there altogether who were accounted for in this account—were there more than six?—About six—six or seven. There may have been another.

15587. Do you know Mr. Hughes of Queen-street?—I do, sir.

15588. Do you know of any elector being in his place?—I do not, sir.

15589. Did you at the time?—No, sir.

15590. Did you know where the M'Mullens were?—I did not, sir.

15591. Do you know M'Dowell's, the confectioner's of Henry-street?—No, sir.

15592. Do you know Mr. Kavanagh?—I do by appearance only.

15593. Had you any conversation with him in reference to the Sligo election?—Never, sir.

15594. Now, in this account were the houses at which the voters were mentioned?—No, sir, nothing at all mentioned beyond expenses for the several voters being sent away to different places for a certain time at so much each.

15595. Do you remember now the way that account was written out?—I do, sir.

15596. Write out now, as far as you remember to the best of your recollection, a copy of that account?—I cannot give particulars.

15597. Write out what it was as well as you remember. (The witness made out a tabular form, a large column being left for names, and a small one for figures, which he handed to the Commissioners. He added)—I cannot say the amount, sir It was merely board and lodging at different places.

15598. Do you remember the heading?—Yes, sir, perfectly. I will not say that these are the exact

THIRTEENTH DAY.

October 20.

George Thomas.

words, but they are something tantamount to them, "Statement of expenses incurred by the undermentioned men from January to February, 1869," but I am not positive as to the dates.

15599. And then you remember no more names except Brennan, the two M'Mullens, Edward Gethins, and Devanny?—No, sir.

15600. Was M'Morrogh amongst them?—Yes, his name was amongst them.

15601. Had you ever any other interview with Hignell on a similar subject?—No, never, sir. He has frequently made a remark to me about men who would be about the office.

15602. Used these men to be coming about the office?—No, sir, not any but the one, Brennan. There was another on one occasion only; I do not know his name.

15603. What attracted your attention to him?—I was told to give him money.

15604. What money did you give him?—Half a sovereign.

15605. Which of the men was it?—I do not know. I could not give his name.

15606. Who told you to give him the half sovereign?—Hignell.

15607. When was that?—I could not say.

15608. Was it before the petition?—I think it must have been afterwards.

15609. I mean by that the trial at Carrick?—I think it must have been afterwards. I am not sure.

15610. Do you know where Thomas Brennan is now?—I have not the slightest idea.

15611. Where was it you saw him last?—In the office—the Irish Times office.

15612. Was he getting money?—I do not know, sir.

15613. Do you know what employment he is in?—I do not, sir, I know nothing at all about him, for in the office I never made any freedom with him. He used to come in and out.

15614. Do you know anything of any money having been sent to Sligo?—I do not, sir.

15615. Had you yourself anything to say to money transactions for the Sligo election?—No, sir, nothing.

15616. Do you know the man O'Connor who was examined here to-day?—I do not.

15617. Were you here when he was examined?—No, sir.

15618. Do you know Mr. Lloyd?—No, sir.

15619. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Did any of these payments mentioned in the account pass through your hands?—No, sir, none.

15620. Now at the time you wrote out the account, was there anything the matter with Hignell's right hand, or anything to prevent him writing the account himself?—No, sir, only he was not able to do it himself. He was not competent to do it himself.

15621. Do you mean to say he cannot write?—I mean to say he cannot.

15622. That he cannot write?—That he could not do it himself?

15623. The Chief Commissioner.—What do you mean?—That he is not competent to do it.

15624. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Not competent to write?—Not competent to draw out a statement of accounts such as I wrote for him.

15625. What are his duties in the Irish Times office?—They are indefinable, sir.

15626. Do you mean to tell us now he was not competent to draw out the account?—Yes, sir.

15627. Had Hignell anything to say to your leaving the Irish Times office?—He had.

15628. How?—I went into the Irish Times office on Thursday evening. Of course I will have to state the whole circumstances now. I know they were mentioned by Major Knox yesterday, and I will state the circumstances to you. On Thursday evening fortnight, I went into the Irish Times' office to do my duty as usual, and I did it. At eight o'clock Hignell comes down usually with letters, and he hands me over twelve, fifteen, or twenty letters, having opened them previously upstairs, and having marked on the letters so many stamps received on Post Office Order, or so much money. I take the letters from him usually, and enter them, with their amounts, in my book. On Thursday evening I did this, and on Friday morning, when I went in to hand over my cash, Mr. Hignell came down to me, and asked me why the advertisement of Paganini Redivivus was not in the paper. I said I did not know; that I had nothing to do with it. He said, "I gave you this advertisement last night, with 5*s.* in stamps in it." I said, "No, you gave me that the night before last." So he did. I received one the night before last from Paganini, and I had that entered. He said no more, and I said no more. On Friday evening, when I went into the office, the book-keeper called me, and said, I had got into a mess; and I asked him how. And he told me that 5*s.* was to settle before I resumed my business, according to the Major's orders. I went upstairs to see the Major, and he called Hignell down, and Hignell said positively that he gave it to me; and I asked him how could he be certain—that he gave me fifteen or twenty letters. The Major believed Hignell's word before mine, and told me I was not to resume business. The next morning I went before Mr. M'Comas, J.P., and made a declaration that I had never received that letter, and in spite of that I could not get an interview with the Major since, and I left the Irish Times office in that way. And more than that, gentlemen, this morning I was appointed to a situation in the Mediterranean, and, I suppose, through this it is done for.

15629. What is that you say about receiving an appointment in the Mediterranean?—An appointment in the telegraph service.

15630. And who procured that appointment for you?—Mr. Ansell, Superintendent for Ireland, sir.

15631. Well, but how do you mean to say you got this appointment?—I had been two years in the telegraph service before, and I applied for this appointment before I left the Irish Times office.

15632. The Chief Commissioner.—What do you mean by the appointment being done for?—Because Major Knox said yesterday here that I had committed myself.

15633. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Did you ever see Hignell attempt to draw out an account?—I know, sir, that he cannot draw out an account, I am positive of it.

15634. You do not mean to say he cannot write?—I do not mean to say he cannot write, but I mean to say he cannot draw accounts. I was at the mercy of that man in the office.

15635. The Chief Commissioner.—Have you any further information to give in reference to the Sligo election?—No information to give beyond what I have said.

15636. If anything has been said or has been reported to you as affecting your own character you have a perfect right to make any statement on your oath that you please?—Well, sir, the fact of the matter is that I understand Major Knox said yesterday that he dismissed me from the Irish Times office for deficiency in my cash. I have explained the circumstance now, and I expect the reporters will report it in every paper in Dublin.

15637. Do you now swear as far as you are concerned you are not guilty of that charge?—I swear that before God.

15638. Do you wish to say anything more in reference to that?—Nothing more than that I swear such a thing never happened me.

15639. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Before that transaction of the 5*s.* and the dispute about it, had you made any statement to any person that you could give evidence upon the inquiry in reference to Major Knox?—No, sir, never.

15640. So that you do not attribute in any way the quarrel in respect to the 5*s.*, to any statements that were made by you of what you could tell if you were sworn?—Certainly not.

(The witness then withdrew.)

George Campbell sworn and examined.

George Campbell.

15641. The Chief Commissioner.—Did you vote at the last election?—I did.

15642. How did you vote?—I voted for Major Knox.

15643. Did you vote at Sergeant Armstrong's election?—I did, sir.

15644. Did you get any money after that?—I did.

15645. How much?—I got £40.

15646. Who gave you the money?—Mr. Harper Campbell, or at least it was in his office I got it.

15647. Had you ever got any money before?—No, sir.

15648. Before or since?—Never before or since.

15649. Was any promise made to you at the last election?—None, sir.

15650. Or any offer made at the other side?—None, sir.

15651. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Did you get the whole of that £40 in cash?—If I might explain the way I got it was this. I was in some difficulties some time after the election, and a brother of mine came up here. There was an auction in my place, and he bought up some furniture for me to the amount of between £40 and £41, and he paid for it and he handed over the goods to me, and afterwards passed a cash order upon me. Mr. Harper Campbell was always a great friend of mine, and always stood to me in difficulties, and I went to him and asked him, and he sent his young man to pay the cash order.

15652. Was the cash order paid before the money was distributed by Sergeant Armstrong?—I could not tell when it was distributed. I could not tell the date but I think Mr. Campbell has the cash order, and that was the way it occurred. He never promised me any money or anything of the kind. Whether I asked him how he was to vote or whether he asked me I do not know, but he said, "I have always been a good friend of yours, and you will do as I do," and I said I would, and that is how it occurred.

15653. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Did you expect the money before you got it?—No, sir.

15654. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Was this transaction of the furniture before or after the election?—It was after the election a considerable time, at least I believe it was, but I could not say positively. It must have been after the election—I could not say positively.

(The witness then withdrew.)

The Rev. Thomas Hibbit, sworn and examined.

The Rev. Thomas Hibbit.

15655. The Chief Commissioner.—Do you know Sergeant Boyle?—Well, I think I do know him, but I have no acquaintance with him.

15656. Do you remember his being at the church?—Yes, I do.

15657. And the circumstance that has been deposed to in evidence?—Yes.

15658. Will you state it?—I was sitting at the door collecting, and a young man came out from the inside place at the nave of the church and said there was one of those men who voted against Captain Flanagan inside and that the people refused to sit near him—that they were all quite indignant. I went in for the purpose of removing him to another part of the church, and I said, "You cannot be here," and he rose from his seat abruptly and left the church. I never intended to turn him out of the church.

15659. I suppose when you say that you mean to convey you would not do such a thing?—Not at all. It was before mass, and I would not turn any man out of the church until he would hear mass. Of course I knew it would be a great sin to do it.

15660. Had you before heard what the bishop had said on the previous Sunday?—I heard it commonly stated.

15661. What was it you understood his lordship said?—That he mentioned from the pulpit that these people who voted against Captain Flanagan should be placed in a particular part of the church.

15662. Was that the porch of the church?—I could not say what part of the church.

15663. Did you consider yourself bound to obey his lordship as regards the management of your own church?—No, we are perfectly independent.

15664. As regards secular discipline?—Decidedly.

15665. And of course I know you are independent as regards the management of your own church?—Altogether, with the exception of receiving jurisdiction to the confession of the people. We receive that from the bishop, but in everything else we are independent of him.

15666. In your church to your knowledge did anything else occur similar to what occurred between you and Sergeant Boyle?—I do not know that anything occurred. I heard it said by O'Connor that Father Goodman interfered with his going in, but I do not know of it and never heard of it.

15667. Where did you intend to place him?—Amongst the poor people—amongst those who did not pay.

15668. He was in uniform?—He was. I did not know it was he until he was pointed out by the people to me.

15669. He was in the uniform of the Sligo rifles?—I do not know what department he was in at all.

15670. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Did I understand you to say you cannot receive confessions without permission of the bishop?—Yes.

15671. You naturally would defer to the judgment of the bishop of your church?—Decidedly.

15672. And be guided by him in matters of importance?—In matters at all with respect to the general conduct of the people or anything at all of that kind I would be guided by his advice most assuredly, but we are not obliged to be guided by his advice at all in anything that concerns our own house.

15673. May I ask you this question—would you have administered to Sergeant Boyle the sacrament of penance under the circumstances of his having voted for Major Knox?—Oh, well, that would depend upon his regret—altogether upon his own penitence.

15674. You would not do so?—I would hear his confession most assuredly, but if I were of opinion he was guilty of perjury, I would exercise my own judgment.

15675. So do I understand you to say you would not administer the sacrament of penance unless he made reparation for his guilt to your satisfaction?—Certainly.

15676. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—You used the word perjury?—That was a mistake—I meant bribery.

15677. You do not put the offence of perjury upon the same footing as voting for Major Knox?—I say any Roman Catholic who would receive money for voting for a Conservative candidate against a Liberal candidate must have some motive besides that of public good. He cannot act in accordance with his conscience.

15678. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Then did you assume that Sergeant Boyle's voting for Major Knox was sin?—No, I never formed an opinion at all upon the man's conduct one way or the other. Merely when this young man called upon me to go down to remove him, I went down for that purpose, without exercising any opinion as to the man's private conduct. It never entered my head at the time.

15679. Was it the observations of the young man that led you to that course or the observations of the people?—It was the observations of the young man, and the indignation that was expressed by the people on the occasion at his presence, and I wanted to put him beyond their range.

15680. Had you heard at the time of the observations the bishop had made?—I do not know that I had. I think it was immediately after the election that this occurred in our church.

15681. Had you not heard before the election he had referred to Catholic voters voting for Major Knox as rotten branches?—I do not think that I had.

15682. But you will not swear that you had not heard this observation?—No, I will not.

15683. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Sergeant Boyle, sir, swore that you said, "where is this man," and that you made him go outside?—No, I asked, "Where is this man?" He was alone upon the seat, and I said, "You cannot be here." The moment I said so, he arose from his seat and walked out of the church.

15684. Are you positive you did not say the words "go outside," or words from which he would assume that?—I am sure I did no such thing, I had no notion at all of turning him out of the church.

15685. I suppose if some one came and complained to you of the presence of Sergeant Boyle in the church you would have removed him?—Yes. There were three divisions in the church, one for the poor, one for the second class, and one for the higher class immediately near the altar.

15686. And in which was Boyle?—In the middle class.

15687. And I presume it was considered rather a degradation for Sergeant Boyle to have to remove from that?—I have no doubt in the world he must have fancied so himself, but I did not intend to offer the man the slightest insult in the world. It was not my intention.

15688. Supposing Boyle did not vote for Major Knox, I presume you would not have removed him from the place where he was if the congregation had not referred to his presence?—Certainly not. The people were all indignant at his voting for Major Knox.

15689. And you removed him because you considered their indignation was just?—No, I removed him merely to save him from the ire of the people in church.

15690. Do I understand you to say you anticipated violence?—Well no, but these people might not attend to their devotions during the mass.

15691. Then it was consideration for the other people and not for Sergeant Boyle?—Decidedly so, and to take them out of his range.

(The witness then withdrew.)

The Rev. Joseph Goodman.

The Rev. Joseph Goodman sworn and examined.

15692. The Chief Commissioner.—Do you wish to make a statement?—O'Connor mentioned in the course of his evidence something with regard to me, and the general statement has a great deal of truth in it. I was sitting at the door when a party came out stating that Mr. O'Connor was inside, and there was a great deal of commotion about it with the people—that the people were standing in the place and were indignant. I was afraid there would be a disturbance in the House of God, and I sent one of the parties to request him to come out that I wanted to speak to him. When he came out I said to him, "Mr. O'Connor, you had better kneel here and not expose yourself to anyone in the church." He did so in a very humble manner. I said, "You had better kneel inside and say your prayers." As far as I can recollect that is what occurred.

15693. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—And you stated to O'Connor that it was in consequence of the commotion?—Yes, sir, I apprehended something of the kind. The young man who came out to mention the matter to me appeared to be very much excited.

15694. The Chief Commissioner.—And you gave no directions, and as far as you know no directions were given that any of the persons who came to hear Mass should be put in any other place?—I had heard before a general rumour that the bishop had given orders to that effect, and though I did not think it was the proper course to pursue, I thought that discipline could not be interfered with. This was the only case in which it occurred. I partly acted for the sake of preserving the peace and tranquility of the place, and partly for the sake of carrying out the bishop's discipline.

15695. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—What you now depose to occurred after the observations of the bishop in reference to rotten branches?—The first time I heard that was in the bishop's letter. That was the first time I heard that phrase.

15696. Were you present at Mass in the Cathedral Church on the 15th November?—No, I do not belong to that Church. I belong to the Abbey Church.

(The witness then withdrew.)

Anne Cleary.

Anne Cleary sworn and examined.

15697. The Chief Commissioner.—Did you get any money after Sergeant Armstrong's election?—Yes, sir.

15698. Who gave you the money?—Michael Foley.

15699. How much did he give you?—£10; and some time afterwards he sent £5 by his clerk, Pat Boyle.

15700. Had your husband voted for Sergeant Armstrong?—Yes, sir.

15701.—Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Did he give it to you in cash?—Yes, sir.

15702. Did you also mention a sum of £5?—Yes, sir, £5 by his clerk.

15703. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Did your husband ever tell you he expected to get money for voting for the Sergeant?—No, sir.

(The witness then withdrew.)

Thomas M'Morrow.

Thomas M'Morrow sworn and examined.

15704. The Chief Commissioner.—How did you vote at the last election?—For Major Knox.

15705. Had you ever voted before?—No, sir, never.

15706. What were your politics?—Conservative.

15707. Always?—Always, as far as the last election is concerned.

15708. But before that?—I did not much think, as I had no vote. I am always for a man I think proper for the country.

15709. Did you go to Dublin?—I did, sir.

15710. When did you go to Dublin first?—Some days after the election.

15711. Were you in Dublin before the election?—No, sir.

15712. How soon after the election did you go?—A week or a few days.

15713. Where did you go to in Dublin?—To Capel-street first, to a place called Cleary's, a temperance place, where I stopped when in town.

15714. Who told you to go there?—It was Brennan. He was in the carriage with me.

15715. Did he bring you up from Sligo?—No, he did not bring me.

15716. He was in the carriage with you?—He was, sir.

15717. Any other Sligo men?—Not one.

15718. Did you and Brennan arrange to go together?—No; we were to go together, and I had no place to stop, and I went there for a night.

15719. Who paid your fare there?—I did myself.

15720. Was it Brennan brought you to the hotel?—It was. I was a stranger there.

15721. Had you ever been in Dublin before?—No, sir.

15722. You remained there one night?—One night.

15723. Did he give you the word to go to any other place?—No, sir.

15724. Where did you go to?—To the Irish Times.

15725. Who did you see there?—I saw a boy. I do not know who he is.

15726. Did you get any directions there where you were to go to?—I asked the boy could I see Mr. Hignell.

15727. Who told you to ask for Hignell?—Myself.

15728. You knew him here?—I heard of him here and no more than that.

15729. What did you hear of him?—I saw him and heard he was belonging to the Irish Times.

15730. You saw him?—I did.

15731. What arrangements did you make with him?—I asked him to direct me where to get a lodging house.

15732. Where did Hignell make arrangements for you to stay?—He spoke to a young man in the office, and I understood he told me that the young man would find me a lodging house.

15733. Where was the lodging?—In Great Charles-street, in Mr. Armstrong's.

15734. Were you brought there by the young man from the office?—I was, sir. I went with him.

15735. How long did you remain in Charles-street?—Until I came home.

15736. How long was that?—About twelve or thirteen weeks. Until the time of the petition, when I came to Carrick, and then I came home to Sligo.

15737. Who brought you to Carrick?—I came myself, sir. I was subpœnaed by both parties.

15738. During the time you were at Armstrong's, I suppose they paid for your board and lodging?—I never knew it until I heard it sworn by Major Knox.

15739. Did you get any money in Dublin?—No, sir.

15740. What money had you leaving Sligo?—About £5, and I got £1 6*s*. or £1 7*s*. in the Castle of Dublin where I had a contract for the military work here.

15741. While you were in Dublin?—Yes, sir.

15742. Now, when had you promised the Major to vote for him?—In July, sir, before the election.

15743. Did you hear that any money was going?—Well, I heard plenty of rumours of money going. I heard rumours that I had got £300 or £400, but I know no one who got it except through the court.

15744. Had you any hints that you would get any money?—I never made an arrangement, never asked, and never got it.

15745. Are you a Roman Catholic?—I am, sir.

15746. Had you ever interfered at any previous election?—No, sir, I never interfered.

15747. Before this time were you known as one of the Liberal party?—I do not know that I was. I think quite the contrary.

15748. What is your business?—I keep a provision shop, and sell flour and potatoes and butter.

15749. Do you expect to get any money now?—No, sir, nor would I take it. I would sooner Major Knox had not paid my fare. I made arrangements with the man in the house to pay it.

15750. At what rate?—I did not make any rate.

15751. And you did not know what you were to pay him?—I understood he would not charge me an exorbitant sum.

15752. You never made any arrangement with him?—Never as regards the amount.

15753. You have been staying in Sligo since?—Yes.

15754. Were you ever molested on account of having voted?—Well, sir, that is beyond count.

15755. What was done to you or your family?—We were all beat and smashed and tortured.

15756. Did you get any compensation from the county?—I did, sir, £84.

15757. Were you ever spoken to in any church here?—No, sir, I never was molested in any chapel I went to. I always got in. In fact it was in Dublin I was during the excitement. I used to go to chapel in Dublin. I understand that my family did not go until I returned, and when I returned I went to the chapel. I went there without any molestation.

15758. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Was your house wrecked?—Oh, there was nothing left in it.

15759. What night was that done?—The night of the election.

15760. Do you mean the night of the polling?—A fortnight previous to the election I had to be escorted to my house with a stipendiary magistrate, and I was pelted in my own house and a magistrate with me.

15761. Was that at the polling?—No, sir. Weeks before the polling.

15762. Do you know any of these people?—No, sir. We could well get out of the townspeople if the country people would not interfere. A cousin of my own, a Mr. Morrow, told me he could not live in the country if he did not come in.

15763. Where does he live?—In Drumahain, county of Leitrim.

15764. Did he tell you who sent him in?—He did not.

15765. Did he say he came in with many besides himself?—The whole country came in.

15766. Did he say he got any money?—He said he got drunk somewhere in Pound-street.

15767. That he got drunk without paying for it?—That he got his breakfast or dinner.

15768. Would you recollect the name of the public house if you were told it?—I would not.

15769. It was in Pound-street?—Yes.

15770. And it was a public house?—He did not say.

15771. Were there many threats used to you before the election?—Oh, there was, but we got over them.

(The witness then withdrew.)

Mr. Palmer came forward and stated that the documents he expected had not arrived. If the Commissioners wished he would go to Carrick and search for them.

The Chief Commissioner said he would not put him to that trouble.

John Gray sworn and examined.

John Gray.

15772. The Chief Commissioner.—Are you an elector?—Yes.

15773. Did you vote at the last election?—Yes.

15774. Who did you vote for?—For Major Knox.

15775. Did you vote for Mr. Macdonogh at the previous election?—I never had a vote before.

15776. Was any promise made to you?—Never.

15777. Did any money pass through your hands?—Never, through the whole course of my life up to the present. I never got a half-a-crown of election money, or half-a-crown value for an election.

15778. Were you engaged in any way at the election?—No; I would not accept of an engagement in the way of the election.

THIRTEENTH DAY.

October 20.

John Gray.

15779. I mean were you engaged as canvasser, or agent, or in any legal way?—No.

15780. Were you in Dublin?—Yes.

15781. Where were you in Dublin?—I was in Temple-street. I was not an elector then.

15782. What were you doing there?—I went up on an excursion myself and my brother.

15783. How long was that before the election?—I think in either July or August.

15784. Did you call at the Irish Times office then?—Yes.

15785. Who suggested to you to call at the Irish Times office?—No one. There were two or three acquaintances of mine from the town there.

15786. Who did you see there?—I saw two or three young men belonging to the town who had situations there.

15787. How long were you in Temple-street?—I think it was two or three days—I stopped in Taylor's.

15788. Did you see Major Knox in the Irish Times office?—Yes.

15789. Was it then you promised him your vote?—No.

15790. When did you promise him?—I promised him previous to that.

15791. What did you call upon him then for?—He gave me an order to build a dog-cart. He had one at home, and he wanted something the same. It was something of a style to take a few dogs to the mountains and a couple of gentlemen. I built him one.

15792. What was the price of it?—Thirty pounds; I could not give any one less to any other gentleman.

15793. Were you in Mrs. Hall's?—Yes.

15794. Were you afraid?—Yes.

15795. Why; was there any intimidation practised towards you?—There was intimidation practised towards anyone they thought would be in favour of Knox in the borough. My place about a fortnight previous to that was broken into. I picked up twenty-nine stones that were thrown into the place, and I was struck and the place smashed; and I got two men bound to the peace for twelve months.

15796. Was there any damage done to you that you got compensation for?—No; the place was smashed on the night of the polling again, and we got no compensation. It was not worth while looking for compensation for smashed windows. It is on the Conservative side we are living, and it is by them we are getting our living. In twelve months round I would not give £1 for the work of the Liberal party; and the Liberal party opposed us at the revision. My father and myself attended eight days and made our claim good. It is out of the Conservative party that we get our living. The Liberal party opposed us at the revision again, but I would go two hundred miles to vote for Major Knox again. I believe him to be a good gentlemen, and a true man.

15797. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—You are a coach builder?—Yes, sir.

15798. And a Roman Catholic?—Yes, sir.

15799. Did you hear anything of the mobs at the last election as to who was the ring leader amongst them?—I could not say, for Captain Flanagan never asked me to vote for him. I know one day there was a lot came down to my place with about 300 in it, but I do not know twenty out of all that was in it.

15800. Do you think they were country people?—Yes; country people. Imported mobs.

15801. Did you hear anything about them getting drunk at any house?—I heard them prowlimg about for nights previous to the election, shouting and cheering, and crying "to hell with Knox."

15802. Do you know any place where they were said to get drunk?—I know there were public houses where they were sent to. I was going about my business some nights previous to the election, and I was attacked with stones by some of these parties who were quite drunk, and there is a mark on my forehead.

15803. Do you know any of these people who were brought into the town?—No; they are strangers to me.

15804. You cannot give us the names of any of the persons who got drunk?—No.

15805. What were the names of the persons who were bound to keep the peace?—Both of them were Anderson.

15806. What were the names of the two Andersons?—William and Alexander.

15807. Were they voters?—No.

15808. Had you any reason to fear that your custom would suffer if you voted for Captain Flanagan?—Well, I know my living was dependent upon the Conservative side. If I wanted a favour or anything they are my best friends. I never got anyone to injure me except one of my own sort. I was run at with a hatchet after the election, and I gave a fellow a month's imprisonment in the county gaol.

15809. Was there any obstruction to your attending mass?—I heard there were obstructions, but I did not go to mass. I would not stand up in a porch to be a public odium to other parties.

15810. The Chief Commissioner.—You did not go to mass?—No.

15811. How long have you absented yourself?—I think I was absent about nine months.

15812. You did not go to mass on Christmas day?—No, sir.

15813. Nor Easter?—No.

15814. Nor Easter Sunday?—No, sir; I went in March last, and I was blackguarded at the chapel door, and I think I did not go until this month; my father insisted upon my going. I think those who robbed the borough and broke houses should be put into the porch and not those who voted for Major Knox.

(The witness then withdrew.)

Michael O'Hara proffered himself for examination and was sworn.

Michael O'Hara.

He said—What brings me up is this, that Mr. Petrie said he offered my father no money. I went down to the office with a brother of mine, and said to him, "What about the money?" "Never mind the money," said he, "it is in the safe for your father." "Well," said I, "I will go and register my vote." "Well," said he, "if you go to do so you will not get the money, or at least your father will not get the money." I said, "I do not care; my father does not value your £25, and he would not wish for £100 I went away." Neither would he, for he was not aware how we stood at the same time.

15815. The Chief Commissioner.—What election are you now referring to?—To Captain Flanagan's—to the last election.

15816. What did your father do at the last election—did he vote?—He did, sir. He voted for Captain Flanagan?

15817. Had you a vote?—No, sir, I had not. Mr. Petrie was to give my father £25 to go away and not register his vote. My father went away.

15818. Where did he go to?—He went to Ballymote.

15819. Was he to stay there?—He was until the register would be over.

15820. When did he go?—On the day I registered the vote. I went up and registered it myself.

15821. Did you vote at the last election?—No, sir. It was my father's vote I registered.

15822. Where did you do it?—In this court-house, in the court-house next to this. Then, when I registered my father's vote, Mr. Petrie met me afterwards. "So you did that to me," said he. "I did," said I. "You will be sorry for that," said he.

15823. Were you present when Mr. Petrie offered your father that £25?—No, sir. I went home. He would not allow any of us to be present for weeks before the registry. When he would come into the shop he would ask my father was there anyone listening.

15824. How long was your father away?—He went away by the half-past eleven train, and came home by the ten o'clock train.

Edgar Macklin sworn and examined.

Edgar Macklin.

15825. The Chief Commissioner.—How did you vote at the last election?—For Major Knox.

15826. How did you vote at the election before?—I had no vote.

15827. What are your house and land valued at?—I have no land.

15828. What is your house valued at?—£7.

15829. How long was it before the election you promised the Major?—Perhaps about a month.

15830. Did you get any promise about your vote or any hint?—For money?

15831. Yes?—Not one, nor would I take it if I was offered it.

15832. Did you go to Dublin at all?—I did not.

15833. How did it happen you only promised the Major about a month before the election?—That was the time he called upon me.

15834. Had you not been canvassed in the summer?—Never, and no one asked me but the Major. Perhaps I would not vote previously, for I had a situation that prevented me voting.

15835. Were you at the meeting about Mr. Abbot?—Yes.

15836. What did you hear about him?—Nothing particular.

15837. Did you hear he was a rich gentleman?—No.

15838. Did you hear he was to stand in the Major's shoes?—Yes.

15839. That phrase I have used?—Yes, words to that effect.

15840. Because the Major was disqualified?—I suppose so.

15841. Did you hear anything about his fulfilling the Major's engagements?—I did not.

15842. Did you know that at previous elections money had been paid after the election?—No.

15843. Did you never hear that Sergeant Armstrong paid money after an election?—No, I never heard it until this commission.

15844. Did you ever hear that Mr. Macdonogh had paid money after his election?—Never until this commission.

15845. And you never suspected there was any corruption going until this Commission?—Never. I think I suspected it.

15846. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Are you a Roman Catholic?—I am not, sir. I am a Protestant.

15847. Were you examined before Judge Keogh?—I was not, sir. This is the first examination I underwent, and it is James Wallace who is the cause of this examination. He mentioned my name the other day.

15848. And what did James Wallace say about you?—I was not present, sir. I only saw something in the paper about it.

15849. Do you wish to make any further statement?—I have nothing further to say than that.

(The witness then withdrew.)

Samuel Benson sworn and examined.

Samuel Benson.

15850. The Chief Commissioner.—You are stated to be one of the gentlemen who did not vote at the last election?—Yes, sir.

15851. In reference to that do you wish to make any statement to the Court or to give any information. We do not require it ourselves?—No, sir. I have nothing to say. I came upon the summons.

(The witness then withdrew.)

Edward Ferguson sworn and examined.

Edward Ferguson.

15852. The Chief Commissioner.—Did you vote at the last election?—I did.

15853. Who for?—For Major Knox.

15854. Did you vote at the election for Mr. Macdonogh?—Yes.

15855. For whom?—For Mr. Macdonogh.

15856. Did you vote for him twice?—No, once.

15857. Now, did you know anything about the money Mr. Sedley distributed?—Nothing.

15858. Were you ever in Dublin before this last election—I mean during the summer—I mean the summer before the election?—I was not.

15859. Did you attend Mr. Abbot's meeting?—No.

15860. Were you summoned for that meeting?—No.

15861. Was any offer made to you at the last election?—No, nor at any other election.

15862. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Did you vote for Mr. Macdonogh the first time he stood or the second time?—The second time. That is the last time he stood.

15863. You went to Mrs. Hall's?—I did.

18864. Why did you go?—I went there for protection.

15865. Why should you be attacked more than anybody else?—I will tell you the reason why I feared it. I do not live immediately within the town. I live outside of it, but within the Parliamentary boundary. I was afraid myself that I might have been taken away out of my house at night. I was not afraid of being ill-treated, for I would not be afraid of my fellow-townsmen, but lest it should be said that I allowed myself to be taken away.

15866. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Are you a Protestant?—Yes.

(The witness withdrew.)

James Compton sworn.

James Compton.

15867. The Chief Commissioner.—Do you wish to make any statement?—Yes. I have not one in the house with me but myself. My sister was absent at the time, and they used to come at night and threaten me. I thought it was best of me to leave the house and go where I would get protection.

15868. Did you go to Mrs. Hall's?—I did. Her husband and me were very intimate.

11869. Did you go there from sincere apprehension of violence?—Yes, sir, I did.

15870. How long did you remain there?—Four days, and I paid her for it.

15871. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Did you vote?—I did, sir.

15872. You voted for Major Knox?—I did, sir, and I voted for Mr. Macdonogh.

15873. Did you get money for voting for Mr. Macdonogh?—Never, sir, and never expected it, nor from Major Knox. It is on principle I vote.

15874. Did you ever say after this election that you had got money or that you had heard that others had?—Oh, I heard that others had got money.

15875. Who had you heard got money after this last election?—I heard that Mr. Stokes was giving money, but that is all.

15876. But did you hear any names mentioned except Stokes?—No, I did not sir.

15877. Are you a Roman Catholic or a Protestant?—I am a Protestant, sir.

15878. Was there any violence offered to you?—They used to come at night and make a noise at the door. They were blackguards, and not decent persons at all.

(The witness withdrew.)

THIRTEENTH DAY.

October 20.

John M'Goldrick.

John M'Goldrick sworn and examined.

15879. The Chief Commissioner.—Who did you vote for at the last election?—For Captain Flanagan.

15880. Did Stokes make you any offer at the last election?—No, sir.

15881. Was any offer made to you on any interest?—Mr. Petrie made an offer to me.

15882. How much did he offer you?—Forty pounds.

15883. Where did he offer it to you?—In my own house.

15884. What did he say to you?—That if I would not vote he would give me £40.

15885. Did you believe he was in earnest?—Well, I thought he was.

15886. Did you tell anyone of that offer?—I told different people.

15887. Were you examined in Carrick?—No.

15888. Did you tell your evidence before the Carrick petition to any one?—I told different people that Mr. Petrie offered me the money.

15889. Did Mr. Moloney take down your evidence?—He did not, sir. I never told him anything about it.

15890. Do you know of any other offer being made?—No, sir, I do not.

15891. Had you ever voted before?—I had, sir.

15892. For whom?—For Sergeant Armstrong.

15893. Did you get any money after that election?—I did.

15894. From whom?—From Mr. Phillips.

15895. How much?—Fifteen pounds.

15896. Why would you not take the £40?—I would not take £100 and vote for him.

15897. Would you take money on your own side if it was going?—I would.

15898. Did you ever get any other money but that £15 for an election?—Never, sir.

15899. Or in reference to any election?—Never.

15900. What are you by occupation?—A chandler, sir.

15901. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Are you a Roman Catholic or a Protestant?—A Roman Catholic.

15902. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Did you hear of any men getting drink in the mobs last time?—No.

15903. Did you get any drink yourself?—No.

(The witness then withdrew.)

William Gethins.

William Gethins sworn and examined.

15904. The Chief Commissioner.—Who did you vote for at the last election?—For Major Knox.

15905. And who did you vote for at the election before?—Mr. Macdonogh.

15906. Are you aware your name has been mentioned?—I am, sir.

15907. I believe you are one of those mentioned as being said to have got money?—No, sir, I never got money. I have been voting for the borough since the year 1845, and I never got money.

15908. You never got any?—Never got fee or reward for anything of the kind. I neither got dinner, lunch, nor wine from anyone, nor did ever I bribe a voter, or do anything with a voter.

(The witness then withdrew.)

The Court adjourned till the following morning.

FOURTEENTH DAY.

October 21.

FOURTEENTH DAY.

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 21, 1869.

The Commissioners sat at eleven o'clock.

Rev. Thomas Boyle.

Rev. Thomas Boyle sworn and examined.

15909. The Chief Commissioner.—Do you know anything on the subject of any parishioners, who either voted for Major Knox, or abstained from voting, being removed from the cathedral church?—I don't. I wasn't at the cathedral church at all. I go to a chapel in the country generally.

15910. Do you know anything of the country people coming into town at the time of the election?—I know there was a large crowd in town at that time.

15911. Do you know where they came from?—I don't.

15912. Do you know where they got refreshments when they came into town?—I don't. I haven't the slightest knowledge on the subject.

15913. Can you give us any information on the matter?—I can't. I have nothing to say on the subject.

15914. Do you know of anyone that gave them their dinner and some drink?—I don't.

15915. You mentioned that you usually attend a country parish chapel?—Yes; it is attached to this parish of Sligo.

15916. What is the name of it?—Coolerey.

15917. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Could you give us any information with regard to the mobs—where they came from?—I can't. I suppose they came from the neighbouring parishes.

15918. Do you know if any of the priests advised or encouraged their parishioners to come into town on the day of the election?—I don't.

15919. You did not encourage any of your parishioners to come in?—I didn't. I left the matter to themselves, to come in or not, as they wished.

15920. Were you in Sligo on the polling day?—I was.

15921. Were you a witness of any acts of violence alleged to have been done by the mob on that day?—I was not.

15922. Were you on the street when Captain King was shot?—I was not.

15923. Was there a mob in the street at that time?—There was a mob at the opposite side of the street, and I was passing from the court-house to Captain Flanagan's tally-room when I heard that Captain King was shot.

15924. Did you see any violence offered to any voters?—I didn't.

15925. Did you see whether the mob you saw was organized or not?—I saw no sign of organization. I was a good deal engaged myself.

15926. Were the people you say you saw at the opposite side of the street armed with sticks and stones?—They weren't armed with stones, and I saw very few sticks.

15927. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—You say you were engaged a good deal yourself; was that about the election?—It was.

15928. How were you engaged?—In going to the tally-room and from that to the court-house.

15929. And in bringing up voters, I suppose?—Yes.

15930. How many of your parishioners were voters?—Only one.

15931. You said that your parishioners were at liberty to come in or not as they pleased?—Of course they were.

15932. Was there any application made by them to you with regard to their coming in?—Not the least, to the best of my recollection.

15933. Was there any message sent from Sligo by anyone for them to come in?—I have no reason to believe that there was.

15934. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Did any of the voters speak to you about money in connexion with their votes?—No, not directly. But there was one man named Gallanagh, a butcher in the town, and he, some days previous to the election, said he was accustomed to get some money from Mr. Collins, a money lender in the town; but that he could not get it now on account of his going to vote for the Liberal side.

15935. That is on Captain Flanagan's side?—Yes. He said in consequence of his not getting the money from Mr. Collins he couldn't get security to get money elsewhere. I asked him if he meant that as wanting to get something for his vote. He didn't answer, and I put him off very summarily.

15936. Was that the only person that spoke to you about money?—The only one, to the best of my recollection. Of course I couldn't say what his intention was, but I drew my own conclusion from what he said.

15937. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Did you hear anything since the election about money being spent in treating the country mobs and country people who came into town during the election?—I know of no one who gave money, or was authorized to treat them in any house in town.

15938. Did you hear that such a thing was done?—I did not.

15939. Do you know whose money they were drinking?—I don't. I have no knowledge about it.

15940. Have you heard whose it was?—I have not.

15941. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Did any of the mobs get refreshment in any school-house?—Not to my knowledge.

15942. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—You never heard of it?—Never.

(The witness withdrew.)

Mr. Randle Peyton sworn and examined.

Mr. Randle Peyton.

15943. The Chief Commissioner.—Were you the conducting agent for Colonel Tennison at his election?—I was not. I had been his solicitor for years, and I came down here as his private solicitor.

15944. Do you remember his withdrawing from that election?—I recollect the circumstance, but I was not present at it.

15945. Do you recollect what led to his withdrawal?—I do. After the nomination, and when I was arranging some matters at the hotel, about ten o'clock at night a gentleman came to me—Mr. John Harkan, the barrister—and stated that he found there was no chance of carrying our man to the poll unless he supplied a sum of money, between six and seven hundred pounds, he said—for about twenty-five or twenty-six of the voters, the Liberal voters. He said they that evening had determined that they would not come to the poll and vote for Colonel Tennison unless that sum was placed in the hands of a gentleman in town whom he named; he stated that that amount was necessary to bring them to the poll, and that, though they wouldn't vote against, they wouldn't vote for him unless it was forthcoming. He said they wouldn't take any promise whatever unless the money was deposited in the hands of a gentleman in town for them. He then asked me had I so much money, I said I had not, but that if I had I wouldn't apply it in that way without express directions for any purpose. On consideration we agreed that we should communicate with Colonel Tennison's counsel, who had then retired to rest. We found counsel in Mr. Dogherty's lodgings, in bed; and we communicated to him the purport of our interview, when he determined that Colonel Tennison shouldn't incur such a risk, and would withdraw from the contest. I was then permitted to return to Dublin, and I accordingly did return.

15946. That is the entire thing?—It is.

15947. Do you remember if Mr. Harkan mentioned the names of any of the twenty-five or twenty-six voters who wanted to get money for their votes?—I think he didn't. I don't remember any one of the names of these voters.

15948. Were you ever conducting any other election here?—I was assisting in Somers' and Sadleir's election of '53, and I did so at the request of my then partner, Mr. Jones, who was a friend of Mr. Somers's.

15949. Do you know anything of the election in '59?—I don't. I wasn't here at that election. I was in Roscommon then.

15950. The Chief Commissioner.—In making your calculations at Colonel Tennison's election, before Mr. Harkan brought the announcement that twenty-five or twenty-six would not vote unless they got money, did you consider that you had a majority on your side?—I made no analysis of the votes, but the majority was calculated at not ten either way—I may say at not five any way.

15951. Was the actual withdrawal of Colonel Tennison on the evening before the poll?—No, not on that night. Colonel Tennison wasn't within reach at the time, and Mr. O'Donel, his counsel, was in bed. It was on the following morning the withdrawal took place, and that withdrawal was afterwards withdrawn.

15952. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—How do you mean?—There was a counter placard to the effect that Colonel Tennison would go to the poll. I give that from hearsay merely.

15953. In point of fact Colonel Tennison did not go to the poll?—He did not, I believe. I wasn't here on the day of polling.

15954. Do you know anything at all of the extraordinary circumstance of Mr. Somers going to the poll, and polling only one or two votes?—I do. I was occupied for several days in concert with a gentleman that represented Lord Palmerston, Mr. Kincaid; and he determined to give all the influence he could procure for Colonel Tennison if Mr. Somers would withdraw from the contest. Mr. Somers had a working support of six or eight voters, under ten certainly; and though he had no prospect of getting more, he wouldn't withdraw unless on terms of arrangement.

15955. So he went to the poll, and polled six or ten votes?—He did not.

15956. So Mr. Macdonogh, at least, said?—Mr. Somers had no prospect of getting a large support, nor had any canvass; but he held on to the six or eight men that formed his working support.

15957. The Chief Commissioner.—Did Mr. Somers go to the poll, in your opinion, with the view of petitioning against Mr. Macdonogh?—No; his whole object in going to the poll was, to the best of my belief, to obtain money from Colonel Tennison.

15958. Was there any demand made on Colonel Tennison by Mr. Somers?—I know I brought five hundred sovereigns down from Dublin for Somers without at the time knowing the object of it; but when I came to explain to Colonel Tennison the position he would put himself in, he approved of my advice and sent me back with every shilling of the money.

15959. Was that money to be given to Mr. Somers?—It was, as an instalment.

15960. What sum was to be given to him if he'd withdraw?—I heard he was to get £1,000, but I told Colonel Tennison it would be several thousands.

15961. Did you bring back the five hundred sovereigns to Dublin?—I did.

15962. You said that, if the £1,000 were given, more would have to be given after?—So I convinced Colonel Tennison.

FOURTEENTH DAY.

October 21.

Mr. Randle Peyton.

15963. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—You know the borough from before 1860, I suppose?—I know it from '53. I conducted a petition against Sadlier's return under difficult circumstances.

15964. Can you give us any information as to whether bribery was practised in the election of 1859 when Mr. Somers stood?—I know nothing of that election.

15965. I am not speaking of personal knowledge, but as a person acquainted with the borough, and intimately connected with the election in 1860, you would probably hear something of the 1859 election?—I heard of nothing that I can speak of with confidence, as I was then actively engaged in Roscommon. I didn't hear of anything that would be worthy of reliance.

15966. Do you know anything of the election of 1857?—Nothing. '53,'60, and '68 are the only periods I can speak of.

15967. You know nothing of the election of 1860?—I don't.

15968. What do you know of the election of 1868?—I was retained for the county election, and I came down, at the request of the county agent, some weeks before it came off. On that occasion I had a good deal of opportunity of seeing how matters were going on in the borough. I took a great deal of interest in the success of Major Knox, for I am twenty years, I suppose, solicitor to his family.

15969. Had you any reason to believe that there was any treating going on on Captain Flanagan's side, or that there were any mobs?—I saw very large mobs in the town from the country.

15970. Do you know how they were fed, maintained, or paid?—I can't say.

15971. From your observation can you form any opinion as to whether the country mobs remained in town for two or three days?—I should say so.

15972. Did you see many of them under the influence of drink?—I wasn't in sufficient proximity to them to form a judgment as to that.

15973. Well, they were very violent?—They were. I myself was hooted and pelted with stones in the suburbs of the town by children and women.

15974. How long did that continue?—I can't say. I wasn't continuously in the town for a fortnight, but I saw that the town was greatly excited and disturbed from the nomination to the polling day.

15975. Could you form any opinion as to what part of the country these mobs came from?—The only means I have of forming an opinion on the subject is that, when the presentment for malicious injuries done to property in the borough came before the Grand Jury, and it was discussed whether the levy should go on the barony or the county, one member said he knew that some of the mob came from Geevagh, and he afterwards voted to have the amount levied off the county.

15976. The Chief Commissioner.—From your experience of the borough, do you believe that there is a number of voters at every election who require to be paid, or expect payment?—Since Townley's first election the impression on my mind is that that is the rule amongst both classes of voters.

15977. On both sides?—Yes. I have stated my belief. It was known that Colonel Townley came here a wealthy Englishman who had no connexion with the locality, and I have heard that ever since money was expected from candidates.

15978. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—What is the date of Colonel Townley's election?—I can't speak with accuracy of it.

15979. Did Colonel Townley spend much money here?—I know nothing of it, but from hearsay.

15980. The Chief Commissioner.—We have it in evidence that he spent the large sum of £10 on each of his supporters?—I was ignorant of it.

15981. How much did you ascertain was spent by John Sadlier?—I have no distinct knowledge of any expenditure, but of two sums of money.

15982. What were they?—One was a sum of £25, that was produced by a voter in court; and the circumstances were detailed by me in my evidence on the petition against Sadlier before a Parliamentary Committee in 1854. I was acting for Somers at the election, and a voter named Slator came into the booth to record his vote. A gentleman in court at present was Deputy Sheriff, and knew Slator. The oath was as usual administered to Slator, but he hesitated to take it, and put his hand in his pocket. The Deputy Sheriff decided that Slator refused to take the oath, but I contended that there was no refusal while he had his hand in his pocket. Slator said, "I can't take the oath as long as I have that," producing £25 on the table. The Deputy Sheriff took possession of the £25, and wouldn't take Slator's vote. The vote, however, was admitted by the Committee. The other was, I think, a sum of £40, which a voter named Young, who was examined here, stated on examination before the Committee, he got from Mr. Gore Jones for his vote. It was a case in which he expected to unseat. Mr. Gore Jones came over at the last moment and stated that, though he was in the man's warehouse, and gave the money, it was for a pair of shoes. Young swore he got the money for his vote. I knew from several independent sources that there were sums distributed in the name of John Hanly, who was Sadlier's stalking horse.

15983. Mr. Commissioner Byrne. — Was he unseated?—He was not. Mr. Gore Jones saved him.

15984. Mr. Commissioner Bruce. — Did you hear anything about bribery going on Major Knox's side at the last election?—I was not present at the trial of the petition at Carrick, but I heard a great deal which led me to infer that there must have been a good deal of money going.

15985. You know nothing of it yourself?—If you mean by that, that I have any personal knowledge of giving money to any voter, I do not.

15986. Did you hear of any money being given to voters by Major Knox, or by anyone on his behalf?—I speak now of cases you may have heard of independent of what we heard here?—I heard very vague and very general statements that there was money paid.

15987. Have you heard of any particular cases where it was paid?—I can't say I did hear of any cases of which I can speak with confidence.

15988. Have you heard anything of Captain Ethelred Knox advancing money to voters?—Nothing that I can call to mind as being worthy of repetition.

15989. Was there even a vague report about Captain Ethelred Knox being mixed up in bribery before this inquiry?—I can't charge my recollection with it.

15990. Did you hear at the election that he had control of the funds for the election?—I knew he was the cashier of the office in Dublin, and that he was down here. I inferred from that that he had.

15991. Did you ever hear of his giving money to Stokes or Brennan?—Never. I know nothing of the transaction.

15992. What do you mean by saying that you inferred he had control of the funds, from the fact that he was cashier of the Irish Times' office, and that he was down here?—I drew the inference acting in these two facts.

15993. Did you see him down here at the last election?—I did, and I expressed my opinion adverse to his being here. I often cautioned the members of the family against it, and they listened to my remarks in silence.

15994. Cautioned them against having Captain Ethelred Knox down here at all?—No; but I endeavoured to impress upon them the necessity of keeping within the Corrupt Practices Act.

15995. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Could you give us any assistance in discovering whether there were any corrupt practices on Captain Flanagan's side?—I have no means of knowing a single particle on the subject.

15996. The Chief Commissioner.—Can you give us any information as to how much money came to the voters on Major Knox's side?—I can't.

15997. We have the large sum of £307 altogether, up to the present?—I have no knowledge of any private transactions of that sort at all. I didn't come here at all as one of the professional staff of the borough.

15998. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—I suppose you could give us information—formal information—as to the increase of electors since the passing of the Reform Act—it is, I presume, through your office it would be made up?—I suppose the books of record remain here, but I have no knowledge of the subject since I was appointed.

15999. We have summoned the town clerk, with the hope of getting some information on the subject?—I don't think he knows anything about it up to '51. I rather think the books were kept in the Peace Office.

(The witness withdrew.)

Mr. Patrick M'Niffe, sworn and examined.

Mr. Patrick M'Niffe.

16000. The Chief Commissioner.—Were you engaged in any way at the last election?—I can't say that I was. I refused to be engaged for Captain Flanagan, in order to hold my vote. I took nothing from him. I acted gratuitously.

16001. In order that you might vote?—Yes. I never expected anything, nor would I take it, from him.

16002. You were assisting, I suppose, in the election?—Yes, so far as I could.

16003. Do you know anything of the mobs that were in the town during the election?—I don't.

16004. Can you give us any information as to who fed and maintained them—we believe that these mobs were in town for some days, and must have been fed by some one?—I can't. I must tell you that I was rather an object of suspicion to that mob.

16005. Why was that?—It was a most infamous thing, and I am glad of the opportunity I have of denouncing it. During the previous Revision—I need not tell you that under the recent Act, claimants are bound to sustain their claims—on the long list, list No. 7, I objected to persons appearing on the list, on the claimants' list, as they didn't attend to support their claims as they were bound to do under the new Act. I objected, but, unfortunately, owing to an omission in the form I got—the word "of" wasn't in it, I omitted putting the place of my abode in the objection. The omission was held by Messrs. Robinson and Andrews as fatal to my objection. Notwithstanding that, they gave me a status, they allowed me to cross-examine the claimants as they came up, and the result wasn't affected by six votes one way or the other. Under a spirit of disappointment, or for some other reason, some parties infamously circulated the report that I got £1,000 from Major Knox to sell the borough. Neither Major Knox, nor anyone belonging to him, directly or otherwise, in any mode or shape, attempted to suggest such a thing to me. The suspicion met me everywhere, no matter where I go, whether it was to Petty Sessions here or Quarter Sessions there, it met me everywhere.

16006. In reference to these mobs, you say you were an object of suspicion to them?—For that reason—I wouldn't have anything to do with them. I wouldn't touch them.

16007. Did you see them here for some days?—The mob was composed more—I am bound to say it for the character of the election and of the townspeople—of the low rabble of children and women in this town, than of grown, manly men. I must state also that up to a certain time—in fact, for twelve months past, there was an organized system adopted on the part of Major Knox's friends, that nearly did bring people into a row here on the Saturday evening before the election. There was no mob. Sergeant Armstrong was in the field all along. Captain Flanagan was not in the field. It was only in the latter part of his illness, when it was known that Sergeant Armstrong couldn't come to the poll, that Captain Flanagan was adopted. Up to that time there was no mob, and after that there was no mob—any mob there was belonged entirely and solely to Major Knox. During the canvass I understand—I wasn't here myself at the time—Captain Flanagan was accompanied by a number of persons, and in going down Castle-street there was a tussle near Clancy's house. They broke some glass, the crowd came on, the work became thicker and hotter, and the crowd increased in numbers. That occurred within the last few days before the election, but the crowd was composed of women and children. Two or three days before the election there came into the town a number of strangers whom I didn't know. I had nothing to do with them.

16008. How many strangers were there?—I can't say.

16009. Were they 300 strong?—Perhaps they were. I saw a mob of 300.

16010. All strangers?—I wouldn't say strangers.

16011. Country people as distinguished from townspeople?—I saw them so.

16012. Did they come into town three days before the polling, and remain here for the three days?—I can't say. I wasn't out much. I can't say that.

16013. Do you know any place where they got their breakfast or dinner while they were here?—I don't.

16014. One publican stated that he gave a cup of tea to some boys?—I got more. I was told that I would be murdered in a certain place at a certain time. I went to the place to see if they'd murder me, but they didn't. If they attempted, I know what's what. I heard two or three observations made, fixing the corruption in the borough on Sadleir's and Townley's time. That is not true—it is not correct.

16015. When did you say it was?—There has been in this borough, ab initio, since the Reform time, a system carried out in it—even before the Reform Bill was passed.

16016. What system?—A system of corruption that has been in the borough among certain classes and certain numbers from '32 down. There were only two elections since that time that I say were truly elections without taint or corruption—Townley's second election and the last election for Sergeant Armstrong—qua elections. I need not tell you what this borough was. It was first in the hands of a nominee, who was returned by twelve burgesses—under that system, Lord Canning represented the borough at a cost of £10,000 to the nominee. After that there was a Mr. Barton, who represented the borough at a large cost to the nominee—he presented a pair of maces to the corporation of the borough. We now come to the Reform Bill; we know there were twelve burgesses before that. The nominee, in order to retain possession of the privilege he had previously enjoyed, expended more than £8,000 on it; and he struggled with Mr. Martin, who lost a fortune in trying to open the borough, for he expended more than £8,000.

16017. That was the first election after the passing of the Reform Bill?—Yes. This town was then flooded, absolutely, with whiskey—that is my recollection of that election; there was hardly a publican in the town that didn't get a puncheon of whiskey without cost.

16018. Come now to the next election?—At the next election to that, Mr. Martin was returned in '35 without expense. In '37 came the struggle between Mr. Somers and Mr. Martin. One would suppose that Mr. Somers, being a very poor man, would have no chance of being returned. He came here, and was adopted by the Liberal Club. He deposited a sum of £70 to defray the necessary expenses; the difference was made up by his friends in the borough, and they stood to him like men.

16019. How much did they subscribe?—I can't say. I am only now giving you what was hearsay then. Mr. Somers was returned in '37. From '37 to '47 there was a vacancy, and Mr. Somers had it all his own way. During that time, as the story goes, places were sold about in all directions; magistracies were paid for, and regularly purchased. We now come to '47——

16020. Confine yourself to the voters?—In '47 came the struggle between Somers and Dixon, when Dixon, who was a member of your own profession, retired. He came to the hustings—the nomination, I remember, was held in the market-house. There was a wonderful display of vigour on the part of Somers's friends.

16021. What was the corruption in that election—how much on each side?—Dixon was so corrupt that he counted the candles.

16022. What was the amount?—There was nothing at all paid away. Tom Dixon was rather screwish. He was driven off the hustings, and in the struggle got a scratch on the head; and he came out of the market-house, I remember, with his face cut, and he said it wasn't the first time he bled for his country.

16023. Come down a little later?—There was a petition presented against Somers's return.

16024. For bribery?—No, for want of qualification.

16025. We will not go into that?—About Townley's first election, Townley was unseated for treating.

16026. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—What date was that, do you recollect?—It was the summer of '48, I think.

16027. Who were the candidates at that election?—Mr. Somers and Mr. Townley.

16028. Was there any bribery at that election?—I knew nothing of it at all—people may have been bribed. I knew nothing of it. I acted as a personal friend of Mr. Townley's, and I never got sixpence for it. In all the elections in which I was engaged I acted for my party, and not for individuals.

16029. The Chief Commissioner.—Do you remember Colonel Townley's second election?—He was put out for treating at the first election, and in '52 he came back—the Liberals had then a majority of seventy on the registry.

16030. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Who were the candidates in 1852?—Mr. Somers and Mr. Townley.

16031. The Chief Commissioner.—Was there any bribery going on at that election?—There was no necessity for having recourse to note down the answer then, as there was great excitement at the time. Lord Russell was after writing his Durham letter—the Stockport riots were going on. The '52 election was a pure election, yet Colonel Townley was unseated on petition, for bribery, on the ground that a friend of his——

16032. I know that from the petition—there is no use in going into it now; we must assume that the committee acted rightly in unseating him for bribery. The next election was Sadleir's. After that election, when Colonel Townley was unseated, I believe that a large sum of money was distributed among the voters?—I don't know that. I can't say.

16033. Was there £1,000 distributed among them, did you hear?—I wouldn't attempt to measure it.

16034. We have it in evidence that £10 was given to each voter?—I know nothing of it.

16035. Do you know who brought the money to town?—I don't.

16036. It is rather a strange thing to say after that, that it was a pure election?—I am talking of the election, disconnecting it from what occurred before or after. It was in itself a pure election—there was a majority of seventy on the Liberal side.

16037. Then came Sadleir's election, who were the candidates at that election?—Mr. Sadleir, Mr. Somers, and Mr. Hanley.

16038. Mr. Hanley, I believe, was only a nominal candidate?—Yes, he came here under cover. I understood he came to catch any stray Conservative voters.

16039. Were you engaged at that election?—I was deputy sheriff. I was the person that got the £25 of which Mr. Peyton spoke; that was the only money I got.

16040. Do you know anything of the corruption that went on at that election?—I know nothing more.

16041. How much was Sadlier supposed to have expended?—It was said he spent three, four, or five thousand pounds—the election was a very close one.

16042. Do you remember the polling?—I do.

16043. Can you say what the numbers were?—I cannot. I know Sadleir had a majority of seven.

16044. Go on with the next election; the Tipperary bank went in 1856?—I know that, but Sadlier had got rid of all his troubles. There was a proposition made to Baron Hughes, who offered himself as a candidate.

16045. Were you concerned for the Baron?—I was as his friend, as he was put forward to represent the party.

16046. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Was that in 1857?—It was, I think, before that—in '55.

16047. The Chief Commissioner.—It must have been March or February, 1856, I think—the election took place very soon afterwards?—There was an election before that between Mr. Hartley and Mr. Somers—there was an election at which Mr. Ball, Mr. Hartley, and Mr. Somers were candidates.

16048. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—What year was that?—It was between Mr. Sadlier's and Colonel Townley's last election.

16049. Before 1853?—I think it was.

16050. The Chief Commissioner.—Why was it, do you remember, Mr. Bell left town?—He posted his reason for doing so.

16051. Had it any reference to pecuniary matters?—It had. A proposition was made that certain parties would require a certain sum of money to vote. I think it was £100 each, or £50 each. I don't know which.

16052. Was that the real reason for his retiring?—So he stated, and he posted it. This proposition was made. Mr. Ball left town, and Baron Hughes came. There was a proposition made, as I understood, by Mr. Somers. It was hinted that the Liberals had a majority of between thirty and forty. Mr. Somers stood up for more, he said he had a large number of friends that would stick to him, and that he would retire on his getting a gratuity. The actors here all now passed away. It was suggested that Mr. Somers had expended about £1,000 on the borough, and that he should be recouped. Baron Hughes immediately said he wouldn't stand, that he wouldn't endanger his character by giving money, and that he would go away. He said, "This sort of thing is a sort of standing thing in the borough, and you will never have peace or comfort until it is rooted out. Mr. Wynne is about to contest the election, and I'd recommend my friends not to interfere in it." Some half a dozen, however, did.

16053. Was that the election in which Mr. Somers got in and was afterwards unseated for the alleged tampering with the poll books?—That was the election when Mr. Wynne got in. There was an election afterwards in which there was some tampering with the books.

16054. I come now to the election at which Somers got in by altering the poll books?—I recollect it distinctly.

16055. We have it in evidence that at one of Somers's elections, Tom Ward paid four or five men four or five pounds each—they were members of the Liberal party that required to be strengthened—can you say at which of the elections that was?—I couldn't. I didn't dream that Somers had the means of bribing. I am certain he hadn't.

16056. Voters have been examined who got the money, and Ward swore that he got the money from Somers?—I know nothing of it. I often heard that a late nobleman was in the habit of supplying Mr. Somers with a small contingent for necessary expenses.

16057. Have you any reason to believe that the contests between Somers and Wynne were pure. I speak of the contests in 1857 and 1859, in 1857 Mr. Somers was returned, he having received 150, and Mr. Wynne 144 votes, on petition he was unseated?—Abstracting from the tampering with the books, I have no reason or means of knowing that these two elections were not in themselves pure.

16058. Were you acting at them?—I was.

16059. For whom?—For Mr. Somers.

16060. On the last occasion when he struggled with Mr. Wynne he only polled seventy-three, and Mr. Wynne 177. Mr. Somers had then no chance. We have it in evidence that forty of the Liberal party voted in a body early on the morning of the polling day for Mr. Wynne, in order to get rid of Mr. Somers?—That was at his previous election.

16061. It was not?—It must be.

16062. No, for at the previous election Somers got it, and if forty of the Liberal party voted for Mr. Wynne he couldn't get in. At his last election in 1859 forty of the Liberal party polled against him, for the purpose, as they stated, of getting rid of him; and they did get rid of him; do you know anything of that?—I don't.

16063. Do you think they got rid of him in consequence of his not being able to pay them?—I don't believe that that was the object.

16064. I now come to Colonel Tennison's election when he was a candidate against Mr. Macdonogh?—That was in '60.

16065. Yes—do you know anything of that offer that was made to Colonel Tennison's friends?—On the part of Mr. Somers?

16066. No, on the part of the Liberal party, that they would require six or seven hundred pounds?—I never heard of it until to-day when I heard it from Mr. Peyton; but I heard that—in fact, I induced Colonel Tennison to dine with Mr. Somers; and they were on the most friendly terms—there was a proposition made, with the view of securing the Liberal interest for the return of Colonel Tennison, that if a certain sum of money were given to Mr. Somers he would retire from the field.

16067. How much was to be given?—I heard £1,000. I believe Mr. Peyton has told you what occurred accurately and fairly. I remember that another friend of Colonel Tennison and myself, on the Sunday morning before the polling, met Colonel Tennison who had got notice of this, and he distinctly and emphatically prohibited his acceding to that thing. Mr. Peyton was in town with the money from the Saturday night previous. Mr. Somers was disappointed at not getting the money, and we were afraid that if he got it, he would be a blister in Kilronan for ever; and we accordingly advised Colonel Tennison not to give it. Mr. Somers found out that I and another had guarded Colonel Tennison against taking this step; and, in consequence, when we came to the hustings, Colonel Tennison and I were hissed, we got the most unmeasured hooting.

16068. Did you know anything at all, or did you understand in the borough, until this inquiry, about Mr. Macdonogh giving £850 for distribution among the voters after the election?—I didn't hear it.

16069. Until this inquiry?—No, I didn't.

16070. I now come to Sergeant Armstrong's election when he was returned in 1865: did you hear it discussed among the Liberal party, before Sergeant Armstrong's money was sent down on Easter Saturday, that it was necessary to have that money?—I kept myself carefully out of all discussions.

16071. Did you hear that such a discussion was going on?—I heard that there was an indistinct rumour of the kind going.

16072. In your opinion, knowing the borough so well as you do, and being very capable of forming an opinion on the subject, if Sergeant Armstrong did not yield to the demand and pay that money, do you believe he could possibly retain his hold on the borough?—I believe he could, and I believe, if he was a candidate at the last election he would be returned triumphantly.

16073. Then you consider that the distribution of the money had no effect in strengthening the party?—I don't believe it had. There were parties that got that money, who no more expected it than the man in the moon. I believe that.

16074. Did you know at the time that this distribution of money, was, as the bishop stated, wholly disapproved by him?—I knew that on all occasions he denounced in the most emphatic language even the approach to corruption.

16075. Can you give us any information, even by rumour, to enable us to trace out the bribery that was practised at the last election. I allude especially to the class of Catholic voters who abstained from voting on that occasion?—I could form no idea whatever of the parties with whom these men were in communication. I heard after the election that a man named Grubb, from the Irish Times office, had come to Sligo after the election, for the purpose of gathering the scattered funds in the hands of the trustees, either with a view to a petition or any subsequent inquiry.

16076. Do you know this man Grubb's appearance?—I don't.

16077. On whom did you hear he called?—I heard he called on Mr. Stokes, Mr. Petrie, and Mr. Cherry; but these are only rumours. I heard, in addition, that all the other parties on Major Knox's side gave up their trusteeship, and handed over the funds they had in hands. Mr. Stokes didn't hand it over, because, I understood, he gave it away, and so had Mr. Petrie and Mr. Cherry.

16078. Did you hear the names of the parties who, as you say you were informed, gave up their trusteeship; who, did you hear, refunded the money?—I believe Mr. Lyons didn't keep any of it.

16079. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Is that Mr. Henry Lyons?—Yes.

16080. The Chief Commissioner.—You heard that he returned the money he had on hands?—I did. I heard he acted very honestly and uprightly in the matter.

16081. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—You heard then that Mr. Henry Lyons had money for distribution at the last election?—Yes, as trustee.

16082. Did you hear of any other person having money for distribution in the same way?—I can't say that I did.

16083. Mr. M'Dermott, in his evidence before us, stated that you told him it was rumoured that after the election money was spent on Captain Flanagan's side?—On what?

16084. That money was spent illegally—that is the general way I put it?—Was it in treating and procuring mobs?

16085. The Chief Commissioner.—We understood that it referred to the mobs partly?—I never heard a word of money being given from Captain Flanagan's side to any elector.

16086. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Did you hear of any money being given from Captain Flanagan's side for any purpose, or to anyone?—I heard that some parties got some small sums, but they were, as I understood, non-electors. Mr. Molony could tell you more about the matter than I can.

16087. Who told you that money was given to non-electors—from whom did you hear it?—I think it was James Gilligan told me that there was money going on Captain Flanagan's side.

16088. Be so kind as to give us accurately what he said about money going on Captain Flanagan's side?—He said that there were some small sums given for treating non-electors. That's all I know about it; I had nothing to do with it.

16089. We are not saying that you had anything to do with it—we merely want to know what you heard?—That's all I heard.

16090. Did anyone else but James Gilligan tell you that money was given on Captain Flanagan's side?—Not any, and he seemed to know very little about it either.

16091. By "treating the non-electors" did you

FOURTEENTH DAY.

Mr. Patrick M'Niffe.

understand that the money was given for mobs?—That's my meaning.

16092. The Chief Commissioner.—To whom were the small sums given?—I can't say.

16093. Through what channels would the money be given—as regards the publicans and provision dealers who are known in the different districts of the country; for example, the Gevagh district, would it be given through them?—I can't say.

16094. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Was any name mentioned in connexion with the giving of these small sums?—No. I think I heard him say it was given rather for the purpose of watching the doubtful electors, and taking special care that they wouldn't elope. There was a great deal of doubt about their voting on the day of the election, and we wanted, if possible——

16095. The Chief Commissioner.—To encourage them?—No, but to keep them within the four walls of the town.

16096. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Was there what is called a Vigilance Committee at the last election?—There wasn't.

16097. The objection to your objection at the revision was a purely technical one?—Yes; there was no objection to the identity of the party; it was merely a slip in the filling up of the form.

16098. The polling-day was on the 19th?—Yes.

16099. Did you observe any violence on the part of the mobs until after the Sunday before the polling? Was the violence between that Sunday and the polling day?—I can't charge my memory with that. I rather think it was after the nomination.

16100. Was the nomination on Monday, the 16th?—I know the polling was on Thursday; the nomination then must be on Tuesday.

16101. Can you charge yourself with having observed any act of violence before that Sunday?—I can't. There was no violence that I remember until the night after the polling—until that very night.

16102. So that the town and neighbourhood was comparatively tranquil, in your opinion, up to the night after the polling?—The neighbourhood was; but in the town there were large crowds of women and vicious children—the women composed the worst part of the crowd.

16103. Are you a Roman Catholic?—I am.

16104. Did you attend mass in the parish church on the Sunday before the polling?—I did.

16105. Did you hear the bishop refer to rotten branches?—There was something about it. I heard some reference to it.

16106. I suppose there was a great deal of indignation after that Sunday against the voters who it was supposed would vote for Major Knox?—It didn't show itself until the night after the polling. We never dreamt that there would be so large a proportion of persons who would abandon the position they held.

16107. Was it invariably held that the Catholics who voted for Major Knox did so conscientiously?—We never dreamt that so large a number would vote for him. We thought that such as had purposed to do so, would eventually repent of it, and stand firm by their colours. We entertained that hope. If they had done so, beyond question Captain Flanagan would be returned; there was no possibility of defeat.

16108. Did you see any Catholic voters who did not vote for Captain Flanagan placed in the porch of the parish church during mass?—I did not.

16109. Was it a common rumour that they would be placed there?—It was not a common rumour.

16110. Did you hear of it?—I did.

16111. Before it occurred?—I won't say that. I heard of it afterwards. It may be I heard it before it occurred.

16112. I presume it would be regarded as a mark of humiliation if persons who were in the habit of going to the gallery were removed from that place, and directed to go to the porch?—It would be certainly a mark of humiliation, it would be a sort of penance on them for what I will not call religious apostasy, but political recreancy.

16113. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Whom did you hear say that Grubb came to Sligo to collect the money in the hands of the trustees?—I couldn't tell you, it was so common.

16114. Try and recollect whom you heard say it?—I can't fix on any individual.

16115. When did you hear it? Was it before or after the petition at Carrick?—It was about a month or three weeks after the election.

16116. You took an active part in the election?—So far as I could.

16117. You must have paid attention to that rumour—it would have an important bearing on the election?—I endeavoured to do the best I could to retain a representative of the Liberal cause, but after the polling I was so disgusted with the conduct of some of the party that I took no further interest in the matter.

16118. Then you took no interest in the petition?—Not after that.

16119. Try and recollect the names of any others besides Gilligan whom you heard say that Grubb came down to collect the money in the hands of the trustees?—I couldn't. I don't know any others. If I did know them you would hear it with pleasure.

16120. You recollect no names but Stokes, Petrie, and Cherry, as the persons on whom Grubb called?—These are the names that struck my memory. Now that may or may not be true.

16121. Did you hear anything of orders given to publicans to supply persons with drink at the election?—I didn't.

16122. Can you form a belief as to whether such orders were given?—I cannot. I kept myself away from these things after that report got into circulation, and after it was industriously circulated and propagated for objects of their own.

16123. Could you name any persons who were active as agents on Captain Flanagan's side?—I think all the Liberal party did what they could.

16124. But, you know, there are grades and grades?—All the respectable portion of the Liberal party did what they could to retain their position.

16125. Did you know of paid canvassers being employed at the last election?—Paid canvassers! I never knew of it. Paid canvassers! that is new here.

16126. The Chief Commissioner.—You heard of O'Connor's evidence?—I did not.

16127. He stated that both he and his father signed a document, for which they got £10 each as paid canvassers?—What O'Connor is that.

16128. Pat O'Connor?—That's new to me. I never heard of it before. I never heard of it in the borough. Paid canvassers!

16129. I presume a person in that rank of life would not have any effect in influencing the votes of others?—He is a respectable man, and he may have influence on persons in his neighbourhood. He and his father were at one period wealthy, but they might expect a gratuity for their trouble. I never knew of paid canvassers before. The term is new to me.

(The witness then withdrew.)

Henry Barnardo.

Henry Barnardo sworn and examined.

16130. The Chief Commissioner.—Where do you reside?—In Dublin, sir.

16131. Do you know Captain Ethelred Knox?—Not personally, but by appearance. If you allow me to state what I know of this matter I shall be very glad. I was in England for about a fortnight and afterwards went to London on business, and had not read anything of this inquiry, and did not know Captain Knox was wanted. I read Mr. Sloane's evidence here. When I returned to Dublin I met Mr. Sloane casually. I never knew him as a friend very much, more than meeting him in the Irish Times office when I went there on business, and I mentioned to him the fact that I had seen Captain Ethelred Knox in London. I did not say I saw him in the Alhambra; I did not say I saw him with Mr. Hartford; both of which things are quite untrue. What I told him was that I saw him in the Holborn Assembly rooms on Tuesday night. He asked me who I saw him with—I described the gentleman, whom I thought was a Dublin man, a rather tall, stout gentleman, quite different in description to Mr. Hartford. Immediately after I mentioned this circumstance to Mr. Sloane, he said Ethelred Knox was wanted at this inquiry, and he was very glad I told him. I asked him not to mention the facts as I was very much annoyed at having mentioned them.

16132. On what day did you see Captain Ethelred Knox in the Holborn Assembly rooms?—It was on Tuesday night.

16133. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—On Tuesday week?—Yes, Tuesday week.

16134. The Chief Commissioner.—That was Tuesday, the 12th of October?—I think so.

13135. Did you know Captain Ethelred Knox to speak to him?—I have spoken to him on business, but not as a personal friend. I never knew him personally.

16136. But when you say upon business, do you mean your own personal business in the Irish Times office, I presume with advertisements or some such matter?—Yes. At the same time there were a great number of people in the assembly rooms, and I should say when it came to a matter of very serious identity, there is a possibility I might have been mistaken. To the best of my belief it was Captain Ethelred Knox.

16137. Who did you say was with him?—I do not know the gentleman.

16138. Was he a Dublin man?—It struck me I had seen him in Dublin.

16139. Did you happen to mention, or did you know at all, or had you any reason to believe that Captain Ethelred Knox was staying at any hotel in London?—Yes; Mr. Sloane asked me that, and what I said I was very particular in. I was annoyed at what I saw in the paper. There were two gentlemen, one a friend of mine, and another whom I do not know near me, and as we passed through one entrance of the assembly rooms, a gentleman came up whom I thought was Captain Ethelred Knox, and I said, "There is a gentleman from Dublin." The strange gentleman said, "I think I saw him coming out of the Langham today." Mr. Sloane before he told me Captain Knox was wanted, took out a piece of paper to note down the Langham. I was roused when I saw him doing that, and I said not to attempt to put it down, because I had no means of knowing at the time.

16140. Who was your friend who then told you he thought he saw that gentleman?—He was no friend of mine at all.

16141. What was his name?—I do not know his name. I never saw the gentleman before.

16142. Was he with a friend of your friend's?—They got into conversation.

16143. Does your friend know him?—No.

16144. Was he a total stranger?—They got into conversation on the balcony, and I said "That is a gentleman from Dublin," and then the other said "I think I saw him at the Langham."

16145. Could you discover who that gentleman is?—I have no means of discovering him.

16146. Of course when you told Mr. Sloane that you had seen Captain Ethelred Knox, you had, I presume, no doubt upon your mind that it was Captain Ethelred Knox?—I had not. I had no idea he was required, because I had not seen any of the reports in the Irish papers.

16147. How long was he at the Holborn?—I think it was about half-past eleven o'clock when I saw him, and the Holborn rooms close at twelve.

16148. Did you see him more than once there?—I did not.

16149. Would you know the gentleman who was with him if you saw him again?—I would.

16150. Especially now as the matter has acquired some little notoriety?—Yes, and the reason why I would know the gentleman who was with him was that in the following evening I saw him at the Alhambra. That was Wednesday, but Captain Ethelred Knox, or the gentleman I took to be him, was not with him.

16151. Do you think now you are mistaken, or that you are correct in your recollection that it was Captain Ethelred Knox—we only want to ascertain the truth from you?—To the best of my belief at the time it was.

16152. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—You are familiar with Captain Ethelred Knox's appearance?—I have seen him very often.

16153. The Chief Commissioner.—For how long have you known him, I mean to speak to him on matters of business?—Well, I really cannot say. Perhaps four years or three years.

16154. Four years?—I think so—surely two years.

16155. Do you remember how he was dressed?—He was in evening dress.

(The witness then withdrew.)

George Beatty sworn and examined.

George Beatty.

16156. The Chief Commissioner.—Did you vote at the last election?—I did.

16157. Who did you vote for?—For Major Knox.

16158. Did you vote at the election before that for Mr. Macdonogh?—I did, sir.

16159. Did you get any money?—No, sir. Not one shilling. I always voted for my landlord, the Right Hon. John Wynne.

16160. Did anybody offer you anything the last time?—Not one shilling. I was never tampered with.

16161. And you always voted for your landlord and never got a shilling in your life?—I am an old man now, in the third generation of the Wynnes, and I never wanted to go against them.

16162. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Did you go to Mrs. Hall's?—I did.

16163. Why did you go to Mrs. Hall's?—Well, sir, I did not like to stop at home for fear of being perhaps pressed away, because I was an old feeble man—that was my reason.

16164. Are you a Catholic or a Protestant?—I am a Protestant, and a Conservative, and I always voted for them, because my landlord was with them.

(The witness then withdrew.)

James Byrne sworn and examined.

James Byrne.

16165. The Chief Commissioner.—Did you vote at the last election?—No.

16166. Did you vote at the election before?—I did.

16167. Who did you vote for?—For Sergeant Armstrong.

16168. Did you get any money after that?—I did.

16169. How much?—Forty pounds.

16170. Who gave you that money?—Mr. William Petrie.

FOURTEENTH DAY.

October 21.

James Byrne.

16171. Did he give you the whole of the £40?—He did, sir.

16172. Are you a Protestant or a Roman Catholic?—I am a Protestant.

16173. Why did you not vote at the last election?—I did not intend to vote for any party ever again. I will change my mind if I do. My present mind is not to vote at all.

16174. Would £40 have any influence in changing your mind?—It would not.

16175. Will you never take any money again?—I am sure I will not.

16176. Where were you on the day of the last polling?—Out at my own house.

16177. Did anybody threaten to molest you?—I think there was a watch there.

16178. Was any elector in with you that day in your own house?—There was not.

16179. Did you announce before the election that you would not vote?—Yes, I told them all along, the canvassers, that I had no intention of voting.

16180. Who did you vote for at Mr. Macdonogh's first election?—I did not vote at all.

16181. Did you ever vote before that?—Not in Sligo.

16182. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Are you a native of this country or of Scotland?—I am a native of Scotland.

16183. Did Mr. Petrie canvass you for Sergeant Armstrong before the election?—He did.

16184. Did he give you the hard word that something would be going after the election?—Allow me to say this—I was putting out a sunshade before the window, and he made some remark about putting it up, and I said I had some prize boots in the window, and he asked to see them, and I think I pointed to a pair through the window, and there was nothing particular in them more than in the others; and he asked the price. "Fifty pounds," I said. And he said, "I will give you £40." Nothing more occurred at the time, and he called again in a day or two, and I told him I did not want to vote at all for either party, and that it affected business a little to vote, and then he said, "I will stand my word which I said the day before," and there was nothing more about money. I found him a very good friend of mine, and a capital customer. I got about £30 a year from him, and I really wished to favour Mr. Petrie, not thinking that money would be paid, and there was nothing more said, only that he would stand what he said before. I think it was ten or nine months after the election that the money was paid.

16185. Do you know anyone else that Mr. Petrie was buying prize boots from?—None. I took no interest in elections.

16186. I suppose you never did give him the prize boots?—I did not; I made him boots shortly afterwards, but I did not give him these. That is the way it occurred, and I never expected it until it came ten months after the election.

(The witness then withdrew.)

Owen Bruen.

Owen Bruen sworn and examined.

16187. The Chief Commissioner.—Did you vote at the last election?—I did, sir.

16188. For Captain Flanagan?—Yes.

16189. Did you vote at the election before for Sergeant Armstrong?—I did, sir.

16190. Did you get any money after that?—About nine or ten months afterwards they sent me £20.

16191. Had you any promise before the election?—No, the only thing I said was that if any money was going, I would expect it. They told me that there was no money; that they could promise no money, or give any money.

16192. Who did you say that to about expecting it?—I think Mr. Phillips and Mr. Foley.

16193. Did they promise that if any money was going you would get your share?—No, they said they could not promise to anyone.

16194. Would you expect money for your vote at any election?—I never got it before, and I voted at many elections.

16195. Did you ask it?—No.

16196. Why then did you say if there was money going you would expect a share of it?—A thought came into my head that I should say so.

16197. Why?—Merely that I required some money.

16198. Why—why were you to sell your vote this way for money for the first time in your life, if it never occurred before?—Never.

16199. Did you vote for Mr. Sadlier?—Yes.

16200. And for Colonel Townley?—Yes.

16201. Twice?—I think only once for him.

16202. Do you mean to say you did not try to get money from Mr. Sadlier or from Colonel Townley?—No, I never did.

16203. Did you know money was going?—No, I never looked for it or asked for it.

16204. If you were paid money now would you take it?—I could not say that I would.

16205. But you could not say that you would not?—I could not swear to whether I would or would not.

16206. Did you say anything at this last election, that if any money was going you were to get your share?—No; I did not.

16207. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Did Mr. Phillips canvass you at the last election?—No, not at the last election.

16208. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Who did?—Captain Flanagan himself, and others who were along with him. I promised him my vote, and I gave it to him.

16209. Who were the others?—A great many when he was canvassing.

(The witness then withdrew.)

Philip Derham.

Philip Derham sworn and examined.

16210. The Chief Commissioner.—Did you vote for Captain Flanagan at the last election?—I did, sir.

16211. Did you vote for Sergeant Armstrong at the election before?—I did.

16212. Did you get any money for voting?—I did.

16213. From whom?—From Mr. Phillips.

16214. How much?—Ten pounds.

16215. Had Mr. Phillips canvassed you?—He was along with Sergeant Armstrong the day he canvassed me, and I told him I would give him my vote.

16216. Did you ever get any money before?—No.

16217. Did you ever get any money since?—No, I never got any, but that £10 from any person.

16218. Did you think it an honest thing to take that?—I did not think it was any harm, after so long a time after my vote.

16219. Was any offer made to you at the last election on the Conservative side? Did they try to get you to vote for Major Knox?—There was an offer, sir, not of money, but they wanted me to go out of the town.

16220. Who wanted you to go away?—Why, I do not know the man who came in to me; there were two of them; I knew one, but I did not know the other.

16221. Who was the man you knew?—Mr. Fraser, sir, a traveller for William Younger.

16222. That is the Edinburgh brewer?—Yes, sir.

16223. What is Mr. Fraser's Christian name?—I do not know his Christian name.

16224. But he was traveller for Younger and Co. of Edinburgh?—Yes.

16225. What business are you in?—I keep a flour store and grocery.

16226. How long was this before the election?—It was the night before the election they were with me.

16227. Would you know the man again who was with Mr. Fraser?—I would not, sir.

16228. Was he a gentleman?—He appeared to be a respectable looking man. It was rather in the dark before the gas was lit that they came in.

16229. Now go on and state what these men said to you?—He asked me to vote for Major Knox and I said I was afraid my house would be broken, and he said not to vote at all, but to go to Dublin or Liverpool, and that he would send me there.

16230. Well?—He went out, and I told him I was afraid to do so. He said he would call in again, and he never called afterwards.

16231. Did he offer you any sum?—No, sir, but he said "I will please you if you go."

16232. Would you have gone for a large sum of money?—I would not go away.

16233. Were you in treaty to go away?—I was in dread the house would be broken and I would not take the money from him, and I had promised to Captain Flanagan at the time.

16234. Do you know where Mr. Fraser lives?—He lives in Dublin.

16235. How often does he come here?—I think every three months.

16236. Do you know Mr. Fraser's Christian name?—I do not, sir. I think I heard it but I do not recollect it now.

16237. Has he been in Sligo since?—He has.

16238. Has he any relations in Sligo?—Oh I do not know.

16239. Did you ever hear where he lived in Dublin?—I did. I heard where he lived but I do not recollect it. I do not recollect what part he lives in.

16240. Would you know the name in Dublin if I gave it to you?—I do not think I would.

16241. Where does he stop when he comes to Sligo?—I think it is in Miss Allingham's. I am not exactly sure, but I think it is there.

16242. Now did anyone else offer you any money?—No, sir. No other one offered me any money.

16243. Was the man who was with Mr. Fraser a Sligo man or a stranger?—I do not know where he was from. He was a stranger to me for I did not know him.

16244. I suppose you knew Major Knox and his friends who were staying with him?—I knew Major Knox but I did not know his friends. I knew nothing about his friends.

16245. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Was Mr. Phillips with Mr. Flanagan when Mr. Flanagan canvassed you?—Well I think he was.

16246. Did you hesitate before you promised?—No, sir. I did not hesitate, when he asked the vote I told him he would get it.

16247. You never voted I believe before the election when Sergeant Armstrong was a candidate?—No, sir, I did not.

16248. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—I suppose you had heard that money had been going before Sergeant Armstrong's election?—I heard that there was. Well I do not know that I heard it—I am not sure whether I heard it or not.

16249. Did not you know that money was generally going after an election?—Of course I heard there was money going.

16250. You say the first time you voted that if money was going you would expect it?—Yes, I said that.

16251. And you said that because you heard that money was going?—The general talk of people was that money was going.

16252. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Did you hear of any money being spent on the mobs at the last election?—I understood there was money spent, but I knew nothing about where it was spent or anything about it. That is a thing that most people hear.

16253. Did you hear of money being spent on the mobs for Captain Flanagan?—I might hear it but I do not recollect. I might have heard it passing.

16254. Did you know of the mobs getting any refreshments in houses in the town?—No, sir, I know nothing at all about mobs. I always kept my own house.

16255. Have you any recollection now about what you heard as regards the mobs getting money?—I heard that they used to get money but no more than that. I did not hear who gave it to them, or anything more. Nothing but what I used to hear passing that they used to get money.

16256. That is the mobs of Captain Flanagan?—Yes, sir.

16257. And you are not able to give us any information more than that?—No, sir.

16258. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Who did you hear gave the money?—Oh, I did not hear of any person who gave money except the man who gave it to myself.

16259. Who did you hear got money for the mobs?—I do not recollect who I heard, but that the mobs got it. I did not hear any particular person.

16260. But did you not hear anything about there being through the public-houses orders for drink?—I heard that several got orders for drink.

16261. Who did you hear got any orders for drink?—Well, I cannot exactly say.

16262. Try and recollect?—I cannot recollect where it was given, but I heard it was given.

16263. Who did you hear it was given to?—There are so many publicans. I will get you a list if you want it. I think I heard that Thomas Ward got it. I am not exactly sure, but I think I heard it, and I think I heard that Pat Moran got it in Pound-street.

16264. Who else?—I do not recollect of any other that I heard of.

16265. Do you live in Pound-street?—No, sir, in Knox's-street.

16266. Is that near Pound-street?—It is not, sir; it is in the lower part of the town.

(The witness then withdrew.)

Andrew Carty sworn and examined.

Andrew Carty.

16267. The Chief Commissioner.—Are you an elector?—I am, sir.

16268. How long have you been an elector?—I think for about the last twenty years.

16269. What party do you belong to in the borough?—I cannot exactly say, for I live in Castle-street. The elections never gave me much trouble.

16270. Are you a Protestant or a Roman Catholic?—I am a Roman Catholic.

16271. Did you vote at the last election?—No, nor at the election before.

16272. Did anyone offer you anything at the last election?—They all knew how I was circumstanced—that I was not in the habit of voting for many years, and I was canvassed by the two candidates, and I told both of them I would do as I had done for years, and would not vote on either side.

16273. The candidates did not make any offer to you, but did anyone come to you to intimate that you would get money or anything for voting?—Not one person came to me to intimate that I would get anything.

FOURTEENTH DAY.

October 21.

Andrew Carty.

16274. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Did you hear anything about mobs at the last election, or about them getting money?—Nothing. I knew nothing about it, nor anything of that kind. It is my trade and business I study and look after.

(The witness then withdrew.)

Thady Boyle.

Thady Boyle sworn and examined.

16275. The Chief Commissioner.—Did you vote at the last election?—Yes, sir.

16276. Who did you vote for?—For Captain Flanagan.

16277. Did you vote for Sergeant Armstrong before that?—I did.

16278. Did you get any money after his election?—I did.

16279. How much?—£15.

16280. Who gave it to you?—Mr. Poe.

16281. Do you know of anyone else being paid at the same time that you were paid?—There was.

16282. Who was paid along with you?—Michael Martin.

16283. Anyone else?—No.

16284. Did you know of anyone else getting £15?—I heard of it.

16285. Were you on Colonel Tennison's estate?—No.

16286. What are you by occupation—are you a farmer?—I am, sir.

16287. On whose estate were you living—who is the landlord?—One Dr. Gibson who lived in Limerick, and is dead.

16288. Before you voted for Sergeant Armstrong had Mr. Poe canvassed you?—He had.

16289. Did you understand any money would be going?—No.

16290. Did you understand if there was to be any money going he would try to get you a share of it?—No, indeed, and I never asked one penny.

16291. Did you ever get any money before?—No, not that I know of.

16292. But did anyone get any money for you?—No, not one.

16293. What do you mean by saying that you did not get any money that you know of—could you have a doubt on the subject if you got money?—I got no money for eight or nine months after I passed my word.

16294. But did you ever get any money before that election—before the £15?—No.

16295. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Did you vote for John Sadlier?—No, my vote was broke that time.

16296. Did Mr. Poe canvass you before the last election?—No; no one canvassed me but Sergeant Armstrong.

16297. At the time of the last election who canvassed you?—Captain Flanagan.

16298. Was Mr. Poe with you?—No, I did not see him.

(The witness then withdrew.)

John Armstrong.

John Armstrong sworn and examined.

16299. The Chief Commissioner.—Did you vote at the last election?—Yes, sir.

16300. Who for?—For Major Knox.

16301. Did you vote at the election before that for Mr. Macdonogh?—I did, sir.

16302. Did you get any money for voting?—Never.

16303. Now, at this last election did anyone make any offer for your vote?—No one, sir, made any offer. I never received a halfpenny any time for voting.

16304. Were you in Mrs. Hall's?—Never.

16305. And you say you never got one shilling from anybody for voting?—Never one halfpenny.

16306. And never were promised?—Never.

16307. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Was there any debt paid for you?—Never, sir.

16308. Or did you get any shop goods?—Never, sir.

16309. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Are you a Roman Catholic?—No, sir, I am not.

(The witness then withdrew.)

Henry Barnardo returned to the witness chair and said—I wish it to be taken down that most positively I did not state to Mr. Sloane that I saw Mr. Hartford, and also that I did not see Captain Knox on the Wednesday evening.

16310. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—You did state that?—Yes, but though to the best of my belief I thought it was Captain Knox, I could not swear it.

16311. The Chief Commissioner.—But at the time you told Mr. Sloane?—Yes, and now to the best of my belief, it was him; but on neither occasion could I swear positively it was him.

(The witness again withdrew.)

Michael Molony.

Michael Molony sworn and examined.

16312. Were you here at the last election?—I was.

16313. Were you acting for Captain Flanagan?—I was, sir.

16314. How long before the election did you come here?—I arrived in Sligo on the night of the 3rd of November.

16315. What position did you occupy in the election?—Well, I think I may say I was here as the friend of Captain Flanagan—I mean the personal friend of Captain Flanagan.

16316. Can you give us any information as to the expenses of the election?—Well, I cannot—I cannot give that to any great extent.

16317. Well, to any extent you can, either by your own personal knowledge, or by the information you had at the time?—What I can tell you is, I have seen the expense agent's accounts, and as far as that goes I know it to be thoroughly accurate.

16318. That is not questioned?—The only thing I know of expenditure is of some money about which I will tell you. After I came here on the 2nd November, I heard when I began to inquire into the position of affairs, that there was a systematic attempt to take away from the town certain of the poorer class of Roman Catholic voters. That that is true is verified by circumstances that occurred in one place, and have come to your own knowledge. I, in common with other friends of Captain Flanagan, thought it advisable that there should be measures taken to counteract the gentlemen who were tampering with the electors. The first expenditure that I know of after I came was a sum, as well as I can remember, of £34.

It was paid to seventeen people, being wages at the rate of £2 per week each, for watching through the town, both by day and night, the houses of this poor class of electors, and also the movements of the people we suspected of tampering with them.

16319. Who had the distribution of the money?—I had. With my own hands I distributed it.

16320. You paid the seventeen people?—I did.

16321. Have you a list of the names?—I have not, but I can get it for you. I met these people altogether, and I told them the reason I wanted them—that I believed this attempt was being made—that I did not want them to do anything illegal; and that I merely wanted them to watch and report to me when they saw anything strange occurring.

16322. Who gave you the money?—I got it from Mr. Michael O'Loghlen.

16323. Well, what more?—Matters remained in that state until some days before the election, and it became generally rumoured, and I have some reason to believe, that there were armed people of a different persuasion—to use no stronger words—from the majority of the people; and the electors of this borough, who were being brought here, organized, as I may call it, for a mob, and that to a great degree exasperated the people. I may mention that I knew nothing on earth about Sligo until I came here in November. I did not know an individual in the town, and had not a Sligo acquaintance. I discovered that that was true subsequently, because a person named Richard Hickson, who lives in the house I occupy, came to me personally, and said that Mr. Cooper's agriculturist, named Heron, had sent twenty of these men into his house, and that he was not paid. This was in the month of April, and he instructed me, if necessary, to sue Heron for their keep. I did sue Heron, and I learned from my clerk that Hickson was paid £19 10*s.* for maintaining these people for the purpose I heard and believed they came for. Well, great numbers of people came into the town for some days before the election; but to give you any approximate number I am not able. My knowledge of the town was very scant at the time. I did not know the streets. I could not tell you then whether the town presented an abnormal appearance or not, but it seems to me that it did. There was a great number of people about the town. In fact there was considerable, I would not be justified in calling it excitement, but interest in the election by people who appeared to be country people. From my subsequent experience I now believe that these people came, some from the county Leitrim, some from Roscommon, and some from the county Sligo. I believe they came here from very strong sympathy with the quarrel between Major Knox and Captain Flanagan, and also on account of the great question at stake. Some of them came here, probably the Roscommon men and the Sligo men, from strong personal attachment to him who is no more. I believe others came in here because they were excited at hearing that these armed people were about being brought into the town. When they came into the town there were no houses of entertainment. That I positively and emphatically state, for I, in common with Captain Flanagan's friends, would have nothing of the kind.

16324. Do you mean no houses open?—Yes, no houses open; at the same time it was very unreasonable that these people could not get refreshments, and instead of having open houses, money was distributed amongst these people, and I swear and believe it was for the purpose of getting refreshments.

16325. How much?—That money was given through my hands in three sums upon three different days. As well as I can recollect the dates were on the 14th, 16th, and 18th November, and the money that was given in gross amounted, I think, to £180; that is, £60 on each day.

16326. Who gave you that money?—I got it from Mr. Michael O'Loghlen. I may say I got one sum from Mr. Stanislaus Lynch, who gave me £60 as Mr. O'Loghlen was not at hand; but Mr. Lynch I do not think knew what it was intended for, for he was not present at the discussion when we arranged matters of the kind.

16327. Did you distribute that money to the country people?—On the contrary, I did not know any of them. I said, "I will give that money to one or two people who may be relied upon, and let it be distributed; but I will have nothing further to do with the distribution."

16328. Who did you give that money to?—To two persons named Devins—James (there is a Thomas and a James), and a man named Gilgan, whose Christian name I do not remember, but the summons server will know who he is. I gave that money to them, they being pointed out to me as trustworthy men, but I do not know how they distributed it, and for the best of all reasons, as I did not know anybody here. I had nothing to say to it.

16329. Was that all the money passed through your hands for the election?—Well, in small sums there might be about £30 more, but it was for messengers and the incidental expenses; but for anything like organization those were the only sums. There was one sum of £10 and another of £6, and I think the £10 was given to a man named Dignam, whose mother has a public-house in the town, and the £6 to a man named Mullingan.

16330. Is Dignam the son of a publican?—Yes, and the reason that money was given was this: the very day I arrived in Sligo Captain Flanagan came in here from Drumlow, intending to remain from that day to the end of the election, and a vast number of people left with him and came into town with him, and there were complaints made that these people were entertained to some extent by the people in the town without the authority of Captain Flanagan, and I think the £10 was given to Dignam to recompense him for some of this drink.

16331. Was any money, to your knowledge, given to Tom Ward?—I am not aware of any.

16332. Nor to Marum?—No.

16333. You know the two men?—Yes, very well, and I emphatically say there was no open house for Captain Flanagan at the election.

16334. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Why was the £6 given to the man named Mullingan?—I do not think he is a Sligo man. It was for something that occurred before I came to Sligo that it was given to him.

16335. Do you include these two sums in the £30?—I do.

16336. The Chief Commissioner.—Was it Mr. O'Loghlen gave you this money also?—Oh, any moneys I got I got them from Mr. O'Loghlen.

16337. Any other money?—No, sir; the sum of £30 is only approximatory.

16338. Now, was your attention directed, while you were working the election and before the polling day, to any particular voters who were either going to be kidnapped—which, I suppose, is the phrase to be used—or were going away?—Well, yes. I heard the people examined here before you—Magrath, and Hunt, and Devanny, and, in fact, the "cave" here. They were the "cave" at the former election. Of course I suppose the term was borrowed from the famous Adullamite phrase used in the House of Commons.

16339. Did you hear about that message about the £1,000?—I did.

16340. That day?—Yes.

16341. What hour?—I was one of those who were present in the bishop's room with his lordship when the announcement was made, and in common with everyone in the room, I at once repudiated all idea of having anything to say to the transaction. His lordship at once expressed his full disapproval of it.

16342. Who brought the message?—I understand Father Morris.

16343. Did you understand that two men were below?—I would not undertake to say, but I do remember that there were the names of some two people mentioned, and that one of them was the son of a voter.

FOURTEENTH DAY.

October 21.

Michael Molony.

16344. Who was holding back?—Yes, I do remember that.

16345. Was any other offer of that kind made to your knowledge during the last election—I mean an offer coming from Roman Catholic voters who were holding back and wanted money?—Well, I could not say there was. I feel bound to say that I thought there was an expectation amongst a certain class of the people that there would be some hope held out to them, which we strenuously avoided.

16346. Did the voters themselves express that to you?—I could not say that.

16347. Or did you understand by their manner that they did expect money would be given?—I could not say that, because their communication with me was not much.

16348. You were here at least at the election? Do you know what time before the election you came to the conclusion that Captain Flanagan would be beaten?—I did not believe he would be beaten until twelve o'clock on the day of the polling.

16349. I mean the night before the polling. Did you then expect him to be in a majority?—I did. I believed that of the 229 men I was instrumental in polling no inducement would have got one of them to go away from Captain Flanagan. I am sure they were strongly attached to the cause they believed to be at stake, and I believe these men voted, everyone, purely.

16350. Do you remember, now, in making up your lists before the election, had you yourself a list for your own information that you used to mark on for your own information?—Well, I had not.

16351. Who kept that list?—I think, as well as I can remember it was Mr. O'Loghlen.

16352. You know what I mean?—Yes—the analysis of the borough.

16353. The men who were certain for or against, the men who were doubtful, and the men who, of course, you would understand to be liable to corrupt influence?—I never had that list, for the reason that I was not aware of anything of the election before I arrived here.

16354. Was there a list of men who on either side were open to corruption?—I do not think there was.

16355. Were they only classed amongst the doubtful?—They were only classed amongst the doubtful. We did expect that some of the people who differed from us in religious belief would have supported us, for I need not tell you there were a great number of Dissenters in the town, and we did expect to make something of them.

16356. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Did any of the Dissenters vote for Captain Flanagan?—I think we got a list of seven of the Protestants who voted for us, but I could not tell you what persuasion they were.

16357. I mean not Catholics?—Yes; there were seven Protestants who voted for us.

16358. The Chief Commissioner.—Were you consulted about the preparation of the expense agent's return?—I was not.

16359. I mean in reference to why this expenditure of £180 was not put down?—I do not know. I was not consulted about it.

16360. Have you any reason to believe that any other sum was spent for the mobs except that?—I am not aware of anything else, and I do not believe from the time I came to Sligo until the election was over any other money was ever spent. There was a demonstration some time in October.

16361. The procession?—Yes. I do not know what was done that day, but I think there was some money given.

16362. Are there trades here with banners?—No, there is no such thing in Sligo—I know what you mean—when they congregate and expect to get some money spent amongst the different trades—there is no such thing here.

16363. Who, as you understood, paid anything for the procession in October?—Well, I could not tell you who paid it, but I am quite sure that the person who could tell that there was no money spent is Mr. O'Loghlen.

16364. Had Mr. O'Loghlen the management of what I might call this extra expense?—Well, I think he had. He was the person. It was as the friend of Captain Flanagan, I conducted the election for Mr. M Dermott. Our conducting agent had his hands very full at the time, and interfered very little in it.

16365. Were you virtually then the conducting agent?—I was not. I came here as the personal friend of Mr. O'Loghlen and Captain Flanagan. I received a letter at the sea-side place I was staying at, asking me to come down as a friend, and I came down to help my friend Captain Flanagan.

16366. Can you give us any clue as to the bribery that took place on the other side—as to who brought down the money?—I could not. I brought out as much in Carrick-on-Shannon as I could. I had summoned some of the people who were examined before you here, who said they would not tell me the truth if they were examined. I did not examine them at Carrick, as I had no other evidence, and it was not considered expedient to put people on the table who would have tended to dilute the case we were making.

16367. Had you any information about half notes being in the possession of anyone?—I had not. I had these two Youngs summoned.

16368. They had the half notes, and Mr. Galbraith the other half notes?—I did not know that at the time, but I was told that they were people likely to be tampered with, and therefore I summoned them.

16369. Do you not know of any other expenditure of money?—Except the £19 10*s.*, and the £180, and the £34. The £19 10*s.* refers to the account of the man named Hickson. I do not know of anything else. I remember paying the rent of a tally-room, £7 10*s.*, and paying a man for posting bills and things of that kind, but I do not include that, for I assume it is in the expense agent's account. I forgot to state, and there is no doubt that it is true, that Major Knox, for a considerable time before the revision, and for, I believe, a considerable time after the revision, had a hired mob in the town, a violent mob, and violent to some of the people of their own side in religion and politics.

16370. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Did you make any efforts to get the votes of the M'Mullens?—I did. I never saw them, however, and I never heard of them until they had gone away.

16371. Did you canvass them?—I never canvassed anybody.

16372. Well, tell us anything you know in reference to the M'Mullens?—I heard and believed that the elder M'Mullen promised Captain Flanagan he would vote for him, and we regarded him as a sure vote, because he was a tenant of Mr. Kieran, one of our most influential supporters.

16373. Was it Mr. Kieran gave you that information?—After they went away, I asked were they reliable, and I heard they were persons who would vote for us if they remained, but they were amongst the class of voters who we believed would be tampered with.

16374. Do you remember being at the palace on any other occasion than that you refer to when the question of £1,000 was brought up?—No, not to discuss anything connected with the election. I had the pleasure of dining with his lordship before that, but I was not there for business purposes.

16375. Were either of these occasions within ten days before the election?—I dined there the Sunday that I came to Sligo, the first time I had the pleasure of seeing his lordship. I do not know that I dined there afterwards, but except in the way of social acquaintance, I did not know anything about his lordship. His lordship has been on more than one occasion hospitable to me, but I cannot tell whether it was before or after the election.

16376. Do you remember any conversation in which his lordship was present in reference to the election before the polling day than that which you refer to?—I do not know, but I am quite sure I have been present at conversations at which his lordship was present.

16377. Present before the polling?—Yes, but I have no recollection of it.

16378. His lordship took an active interest in the election?—He was very much interested about the result of the election.

16379. And from what you observed I suppose you can say that, so far as you formed an opinion, his lordship exerted every legitimate influence in his power for Captain Flanagan?—I do believe he did.

16380. And was very anxious for his return?—Very anxious for his return, and anxious in this way, that I believe, when Captain Flanagan came here and first consented to stand for the borough, he was informed of the Liberal majority on the revision, that it would be very large, and it turned out when the revision was over that as far as Protestants and Roman Catholics went, and that is the only way we have of classifying them, we were in a minority of one. Captain Flanagan was disappointed, and in fact had some hesitation about commencing the conflict at all.

16381. When did mob violence first attract your attention?—I cannot say that I heard of any mob violence until the morning of the nomination.

16382. Was the town, in fact, comparatively tranquil until then?—Perfectly tranquil. So tranquil that when I came to the court-house at eight o'clock, I expressed my astonishment at the apathetic looks all the people had. In fact there was no crowd before the court-house.

16383. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—That was at eight o'clock in the morning?—Yes, and there was not to my knowledge any injury done to any house in Sligo until the election was over. I am not aware of anything during the polling. There may have been when we considered we were beaten, but before that none.

16384. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Of course if anything further occurs to you you will tell us?—I will be happy to tell you. I heard there were a great number of licences issued by the resident magistrate here, both in the town and country, immediately preceding the election—licences to carry arms.

16385. And to whom did you hear that the licences were issued?—To the people of an opposite persuasion to me.

16386. Could you give us any clue as to the persons to whom these licences were issued?—If you get the books of the late Mr. Coulson, which I think are in the hands of his successor, you will find all the licences that were issued if they were issued at all. I heard upon the morning of the nomination that the first blow that was struck in the battle was this. There were a number of these men who were in a gateway near the court-house and they attempted to get into the court-house, and some of the crowd outside heard they were armed, and in fact I heard that a revolver was taken out of the pocket of one, that he was knocked down going into the court-house, and the revolver taken out of his pocket.

16387. Can you assist us in any way in getting the names of these persons?—I think Hickson knew every man in his house, and I am certain Mr. Coulson's books are procurable, and they will give you the names of all the persons who got licences. I may tell you I would not put myself in the invidious position of doing anything against my fellow townsmen, but I think it right as a justification for the sum of money spent—the £180, to say that we would not have spent that money if we did not think it necessary to repel force by force.

16388. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Were messages sent out into the country to bring in these men amongst whom this money was distributed?—I am not aware. There were some of the Roman Catholic clergymen from the country districts personal friends and supporters of Captain Flanagan, but I am not aware of any organization to bring the men in. In fact there was no organization as far as that went.

16389. The Chief Commissioner.—About how many men came in?—I could not give you the slightest idea.

16390. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Could you mention the names of any of these country clergymen who were active supporters of Captain Flanagan?—I think the Rev. Mr. Boyle is one of them. He is one of the clergymen here.

16391. Could you mention some of them?—The Rev. Dominick Noon is an intimate and sincere friend of Captain Flanagan, and he was parish priest of his parish.

16392. Anybody else?—The Rev. Mr. Quinn, and another gentleman who is in this parish and has great influence in Sligo, the Rev. Owen Feeny.

16393. And who was it first came to you to ask you to distribute this money—or was it in consultation before the mob came into town?—It was in consultation, but I think the payment of that £34 originated with myself. When I heard of the situation here I thought it necessary to do that.

16394. I am not speaking of that at all, but of the £180?—It was in general talk the arrangement was made between myself and Mr. O'Loghlen.

16395. Do you think Mr. O'Loghlen mentioned it first?—I do not know that. It is not the first time we have had election experience, and it may have come through him or through me.

16396. But were the people in the town when the conversation took place about distributing the money?—I believe they were.

16397. Can you form any opinion whether they came into town of their own accord or otherwise?—I believe they came in of their own accord. I can give you no information about it, as I may say I am dark upon this subject, probably from want of knowledge of the people. I have read some of the evidence here about the scene of violence the town presented at the time of the election. I have had the opportunity of seeing elections hotly contested in the south, and I think it was the quietest election I ever saw when there was a hot election either in Limerick or Ennis.

16398. Are you aware of the fact that upwards of £2,000 damages were levied upon the county?—Yes. I resisted all these claims on behalf of the ratepayers as well as before the presentment sessions, as before the Grand Jury, and finally before the Judge of Assize, and I succeeded in reducing these claims from £2,000 odd to about £1,200 or £1,300; and I believe, and I swear solemnly to this belief, that very much more money was presented than would have been sufficient to pay the actual damage that was done.

16399. The Chief Commissioner.—The exact sum levied was £1,245 9*s.* 7*d.*?—Yes, that is my recollection, and the original claim furnished was about £3,000.

16400. The original claim was £2,738 10*s.*?—Yes. I said some of these people came from the county Leitrim. I may add that the county is within a few miles of this. Mr. M'Niffe made allusion to a report that was, he said, circulated about him for selfish purposes. I am on the same side of politics with Mr. M'Niffe, and I think it right to say that I never for one moment believed the rumour that was given out, and I speak in the hearing of people who discussed it when I say that I never gave it the smallest belief.

ST. GEO. JONES MARTIN,
Secretary Grand Jury County of Sligo.

James O'Flynn.

James O'Flynn sworn and examined.

16401. The Chief Commissioner.—You are an elector?—Yes, sir.

16402. Did you vote for Sergeant Armstrong?—I did, sir.

16403. Did you get any money for voting?—Yes, about nine or ten months after.

16404. About how much?—£15.

16405. Who gave it?—Mr. Phillips.

16406. What are you?—A saddler and harness-maker.

16407. Who canvassed you for the Sergeant?—I think the Sergeant himself. I forget who was with him.

16408. Did you ever get money before that?—Yes.

16409. From whom?—£10 of Colonel Townley's money.

16410. Was that after the petition?—It was two or three years after it. The first election was in 1848, and I did not get anything until after the second election, and I did not expect it.

16411. Who gave you the £10?—Mr. Stoner.

16412. Now, do you think it no harm to take money?—I thought it a dishonour at the time, and I did not expect it. I did not require it, and I think it a dishonour to this day, and I lost more by elections than any man in Sligo, for I was put out of my own house for voting.

16413. Who put you out?—Mr. Wynne.

16414. At whose election was that?—After the election that Mr. Somers beat Mr. Wynne.

16415. What rent were you paying?—£10 4*s.* free of rates.

16416. Were you put out on notice to quit?—It was a weekly notice. I got only ten days' notice.

16417. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Only ten days' notice?—That is all.

16418. What time of the year were you put out?—In September.

16419. The Chief Commissioner.—You told us you got £10 or £15. Did you vote at the last election?—I did not.

16420. You had no vote?—I had not.

16421. When were you put off the list?—I was out in America, and I gave up my place to a brother of mine, but I did not stay long there.

(The witness then withdrew).

Denis Fitzpatrick

Denis Fitzpatrick sworn and examined.

16422. The Chief Commissioner.—Are you an elector?—I am, sir.

16423. Do you remember the time of the last revision?—I do, sir.

16424. Were you offered anything to stay away from the revision, and not be registered?—I was offered £25 by Mr. Stokes. He sent a message to me that if I would do so he would leave £30 in the messenger's hands or in some of the banks until after my name had passed by, and I might draw the cash.

16425. What did you say to that?—I refused it, and said I would not do it.

16426. Where was it Mr. Stokes made you this offer?—Outside the court-house door. I met him the evening before that at what we call the new lane, and I never spoke to Mr. Stokes in my life until that; and we walked on the road together, and he said, "Fitzpatrick, you will not refuse?" and I said, "I will not." He said, "You have a family," and I said "I have." "Would you like to see that family provided for?" and "of course, I would," said I; and he said, "What would you take and stop away from the revision altogether to-morrow?" "It is a thing I never heard before," said I. "I would take £50." "That is too high a figure," said he; "I will give you £15." "No," said I, "I will not." But at all events he sent up a young man in the morning to tell me if I would go and sign this paper he would give me £20.

16427. Who is the young man?—Alex. Shaw. I came down to the court-house to get myself revised, and I met himself, outside the court-house gate, and he said, "Are you going in?" and I said, "I am." "You do not know whether you will be revised or not," he said, and that he would give me £25. He sent Shaw afterwards to say that Stokes would give me £30, and I refused it.

16428. Was any offer made to you at the last election?—No offer, sir.

16429. Was any hint given to you that you would get any money?—Not the slightest, sir.

16430. Who did you vote for?—I voted for Captain Flanagan.

16431. Did they try to get you on the other side in any way?—They did not, sir.

16432. Had you ever a vote before?—I had, sir.

16433. At whose election?—I voted for Colonel Townley.

16434. Did you get any money for that?—Ten pounds in London from Gethins. There was a petition, and I was summoned on the petition, and I got £10 on the Saturday that I was leaving London for Sligo.

16435. After the petition?—Yes.

16436. Were you summoned by the petitioners?—Yes, sir, I was.

16437. Did you refuse to give either attorney any evidence you could give?—I did not, but the petition was closed before half the evidence was heard.

Denis Fitzpatrick.

16438. Were you charged with being bribed in that petition?—They charged me with having a letter of Mr. Stoner's in my possession, and wanted to extract the letter or contents of it from me.

16439. Had you a letter from Mr. Stoner?—No, sir.

16440. Did you ever get a letter from him?—No, sir; Gethins got a letter concerning me to pay me some money.

16441. Do you mean that Gethins had a list of voters?—I do not know, sir. I suppose he had.

16442. I mean when you say a letter about you?—I spoke to Gethins myself between the two elections. I considered myself badly treated when people got money and I got none; and Gethins applied then to Mr. Stoner, and Mr. Stoner wrote to Gethins concerning me.

16443. And gave him the money to pay you?—I do not know. The other election was going on then, and he dare not pay me for fear of the petition.

16444. And then you got the money in London?—I got £10 in London when I was starting to come to Sligo, and that is all the money I got.

16445. Would you take money now if you were offered it for this last election?—I would not take money to vote against Captain Flanagan.

16446. But would you take money on your own side if you were offered £10 or £20?—I would, sir.

16447. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Was the £10 given to you over and above your expenses?—It was, sir.

16448. The Chief Commissioner.—What hotel were you staying at?—I stopped at a small street in the Strand, called Arundel-street.

16449. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Did you vote for Sergeant Armstrong?—I had no vote then, sir.

(The witness then withdrew.)

Patrick Hennessy sworn and examined.

Patrick Hennessy.

16450. The Chief Commissioner.—You are a voter?—Yes, I have been.

16451. Did you vote at the last election?—I did.

16452. Whom did you vote for?—Captain Flanagan.

16453. Did you vote for Sergeant Armstrong?—I did.

16454. Did you get any money after that election?—Yes, some length of time afterwards.

16455. How much?—Well, I think the amount was £20.

16456. Was it from Harper Campbell?—Well, through him, I dare say.

16457. Who gave you the money?—I think one of his clerks.

16458. What are you by occupation?—I am a victualler, a butcher.

16459. Did you ever get any money besides that £20 before that?—No.

16460. Did you vote for Colonel Townley?—No.

16461. Had you a vote then?—I had.

16462. Whom did you vote for?—Somers—poor Somers!

16463. Did Mr. Stokes make any offer to you about the revision?—Well, I happened to meet him promiscuously one day in Knox-street, and he said to me that he understood I was going away—or that if I would go away I would be made as comfortable as ever I had been.

16464. What did he offer you?—He offered me nothing.

16465. But when he said "go away," did you ——?—He said, "If you give me leave, you will be made as comfortable as ever you have been in your time."

16466. Did you intimate to him that you would not consent to go away?—Well, I did not say yes or no.

16467. Would you have gone away if he had offered you enough?—I would not.

16468. Did you vote for Captain Flanagan?—I did.

16469. Do you expect anything now for that?—No.

16470. Would you take any money now to vote against your own side?—No.

16471. Would you take any money on your own side if it was going?—I would take it if it was coming in the way, but I would not look for it.

(The witness withdrew.)

John Byron sworn and examined.

John Byron.

16472. The Chief Commissioner.—You are an elector?—Not at present.

16473. Were you at Sergeant Armstrong's election?—No.

16474. When were you an elector?—At Major Knox's election.

16475. Whom did you vote for at the last election?—I voted for Major Knox, with enough to do.

16476. How do you mean with enough to do?—Why, I had to send for a guard to bring me up.

16477. Are you a Protestant or a Roman Catholic?—I am a Protestant.

16478. Why had you to send for a guard?—I don't know, indeed.

16479. Had you been a Conservative always?—Always.

16480. And your family?—And my family—grandfather.

16481. What business are you in?—A harness-maker.

16482. Did any person threaten you at the last election?—Well, there was a report going that I would be rescued the night before.

16483. What right had they to expect that you would vote for Captain Flanagan, when you and your family were Conservatives?—I don't know indeed. In the morning I got up about daylight to prepare to go up and have my vote recorded, when a gentleman who, I heard, was an agent for Captain Flanagan, and whose name I heard was Lynch, came to the door along with another young man. Before I was dressed, there was a mob down a few perches from the door, and they knocked at the door to see me. I opened the window upstairs, and asked them what was their business. He told me to come down stairs; that he wanted to speak to me. I told him I would not; that whatever he had to say I was there to hear it. "Oh," said he, "open the door, and let us in." "I will not," I said; "what is your business?" He would not tell me, so I shut up the window. They began knocking at the door very viciously with their blackthorn sticks. I opened the window again, and said, "I will have nothing to say to you; I partly guess your business—I have my mind made up." So they went away. Some other neighbours came to the door afterwards, and told me not to venture out, as I was set on. So I was afraid to venture out, and I waited till about twelve o'clock. I saw no sign of them coming, and I called a neighbour of mine named Dunne, and told him to go down for an escort, as I wished to have my vote recorded for Major Knox.

16484. Did the escort come?—The escort came.

16485. What?—Police and military—about fifty police, and forty or fifty soldiers.

16486. Was there such a mob as to require fifty soldiers to bring you to the poll?—Well, I did not expect that half the number would come; but I suppose on account of my sending up—that was the reason.

FOURTEENTH DAY.

October 21.

John Byron.

16487. Were you in Mr. Stokes's?—Yes, I work there.

16488. Do you work there still?—I work there yet. I have been there for the last five years and more.

16489. Do you know anything about what we now know to have been going on—did you bring any messages?—No; I never went of a message for him in the way of electioneering in my life, not even across the street.

16490. Did you know that Mr. Stokes was electioneering, as he has told us now himself?—Well, I thought by his movements that he was very urgent for Captain Knox, but I could not say positively that he had anything to do with the voters exactly. He was always a very joking man in the shop; a great many were coming in and out, and he used to be continually joking and going on with laughing and foolery.

16491. What do you mean by joking?—Joking about the election.

16492. Was he joking about money?—Something about money.

16493. Is that what you call joking—offering money to electors?—Well, I never heard him offering money to electors, but people would hint to him about money.

16494. Tell me now what people would hint to him about money?—They would talk about money.

16495. Tell it the way Mr. Stokes himself told it—what people were hinting to him about money?—Well, I can't exactly remember their names.

16496. Oh, you must try. You are living all your life in Sligo and know everybody?—Well, at his business house so many people——

16497. I know; but the business of the election is different from the saddlery business?—I cannot recollect any person.

16498. Do you mean to say that you cannot recollect any single voter that was, as you say, joking with Mr. Stokes about money; that appears rather singular when Mr. Stokes himself told us everything. You must now tell us everything you remember?—I really can't recollect indeed.

16499. It is not as if you had been called up before your master; you are now on the table telling us the whole truth, and you are not in anyway betraying your master's secrets, for there are no secrets?—Oh, if I could recollect it, sir, I would not be for a moment in hesitation about it; but I cannot recollect any person in particular. For every person—non-electors and all—he has a joking way in general.

16500. Do you know Captain Ethelred Knox?—No, I could not say that I know him, because I never meddled with anything at all.

16501. Can you give us any idea why the mob thought you might be compelled to vote for Captain Flanagan?—I cannot say indeed, because I was not even doubted as to my vote. I was not asked for my vote until the day before—until Major Knox asked me; and during the time he was asking me I had not time to answer him before a mob came round the door, and he had to send for an escort of police to take him out. He seemed very much intimidated at the time, and was very pale; and just as he was asking me for my vote a mob came screeching about the door.

16502. There was never any doubt about your voting for your party?—Not a bit that I could think of, because I never was asked by any person.

16503. Did you suspect at that time that Mr. Stokes had any money?—I did not. I did not hear of his having a penny.

16504. Or had you any reason to suspect that you would get a share of anything that was going?—Not a bit of reason.

16505. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Can you form any estimate as to how many persons were hinting to Mr. Stokes about money?—Indeed I suppose there were hundreds—people from the country, and every person talking and saying that Sligo was a great place for money during an election, and such as that. Hundreds of people—people from the country that I did not know at all.

16506. Do you remember any of the people of the town—shopkeepers—hinting to Mr. Stokes about money?—I did not indeed. I don't recollect any. I could not name one.

16507. Then your evidence is, that it was the customers of the shop generally?—The customers generally of the shop; because, as far as I saw, every place they went, it was a conversation between everybody, talking about election business, and that Sligo was the place for money.

16508. That Sligo was the place for money?—Yes, and all to that.

16509. Did you hear any conversation about Mr. Abbott, the English gentleman?—I heard that he was a rich gentleman, but nothing further.

16510. Did you attend Mr. Abbott's meeting?—I did, I was late at the time I went in. I was only just a few minutes in.

16511. Was there any little chat amongst the people, talking amongst themselves, about Mr. Abbott being a rich English gentleman?—I did not hear a word. I was standing outside on the lobby, and I did not hear one speech.

16512. I am not referring to the speeches at the meeting, but to the conversation—the chat?—Not a word amongst the electors that I heard; not a word at all.

16513. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Did anybody assault the escort while it was taking you up?—No.

16514. Were any stones thrown?—No, not one. Not a stone was thrown.

16515. You got up quietly?—I got up quietly. I had to stop in the court-house for some time until the mob inside the court-house had subsided. Attorney Palmer said he would insist on getting the court-house cleared; there was not such noise the whole day as there was at that time.

(The witness withdrew.)

Charles Gillan sworn and examined.

Charles Gillan.

16516. The Chief Commissioner.—You are an elector?—I was.

16517. Do you remember Mr. Macdonogh's election?—I do.

16518. Did you vote for him?—I had no vote at that time—yes I had. I voted for Sergeant Armstrong.

16519. Did you get any money?—I did, £15 from Mr. Kidd.

16520. Who canvassed you at that election?—I was living up in the country and Mr. Kidd wrote to me.

16521. What did he write to you?—He used generally to write to me at that time; and he mentioned to me in that not to make any promise about my vote. He wrote to me afterwards that he expected me down to vote for Sergeant Armstrong.

16522. Were you in Mr. Kidd's employment for any time?—I was for fifteen years.

16523. Are you still?—No; I am in the employment of the Commissioners.

16524. Did you ever get any other money but that £15?—No, not at an election.

16525. But after an election?—I think there was one transaction. I gave £10.

16526. At Townley's?—No, but at Tennison's. He did not stand; and I wrote for a brother of mine and paid him £10.

16527. Paid whom?—Paid my brother £10.

16528. Where did you get it?—I paid it myself.

16529. Who paid it back to you?—Well, I was about six or eight months out of it, and I asked every party in the town would it be refunded. I did not get it; I wrote to Mr. Tennison, and Mr. Poe gave me £10 about twelve months after.

16530. Was that £10 to represent the £10 you paid to your brother?—Yes.

16531. What did you pay it to your brother for?—Well, he came over here and I paid him his expenses.

16532. Where was he coming from?—Newcastle, in England.

16533. Did any other money ever pass through your hands about an election?—Not a shilling ever, nor a halfpenny.

16534. Was any offer ever made to you?—No.

16535. This last time?—No; I had no vote the last time.

(The witness then withdrew.)

Charles Gillan.

Edward Crummy sworn and examined.

Edward Crummy.

16536. The Chief Commissioner.—Had you a vote at the last election?—I had.

16537. What is your occupation?—I am a plumber and brassfounder.

16538. Was any offer of money made to you to go away at the last election?—There was.

16539. By whom?—By Mr. James Balfour.

16540. Where was that offer made?—In his own house.

16541. Has he any business connexion with you?—Nothing, only I work for him.

16542. That is what I mean. What did he offer you?—Well, he offered me £40 to go away.

16543. Are you a Roman Catholic?—I am.

16544. And you belonged to the Liberal party before?—Yes.

16545. What did you say?—I rejected it.

16546. Would you have taken more if he had raised his offer?—I would not.

16547. Did you tell him plump, at once, that you would not take it?—I did.

16548. Do you know Michael Hunt?—I do.

16549. Had you any conversation with Hunt about your vote at the last election?—Well, I had, after it.

16550. What did Hunt want you to do?—He asked me how did I do with Balfour.

16551. How did he know you had been up with Balfour?—Well, I don't know, but it appears he knew it.

16552. Well?—So I told him what I was offered, and he asked me if I got £50, or if I got £10 more—I don't remember which it was—would I take it. I said I would not, that if it was double the amount I would not take it. So there was an end of it.

16553. Did Michael Hunt mention to you the name of any other person that was joined with him, and that he wanted you to join in going together?—Well, no; but he told me the names of a lot of people that were not going to vote.

16554. Whom did he mention to you as not going to vote?—Well, he mentioned John Reid, Devanny, Patrick O'Brien, and, I think, Larry Burke.

16555. Did he say what they had got for not voting?—No, he did not.

16556. Did he represent himself as in communication with these men at all?—I saw them going in and out of the house. He knew that I saw them talking to him and he to them.

16557. Did you understand from him that he wanted you to join that little party?—Well, he did not ask me.

16558. No; but did you know what he meant?—Well, I suspected that he was trying if I would join it.

16559. Had you voted for Sergeant Armstrong?—I did.

16560. Did you get any money after that?—I did some time afterwards.

16561. How much?—Fifteen pounds.

16562. Who gave it to you?—Mr. James Kidd.

16563. Did you ever get any other money besides that?—No, never.

16564. Had you voted before that election?—No, that was the first vote ever I had.

16565. How did you know that the money was there for you—that you were on Mr. Kidd's list?—Well, I think it was Michael Hunt that told me about it at the time.

16566. Michael Hunt?—Or at least he told me to go down to him—sent me down to him or something like that. I can't remember positively, but he knew about it.

16567. That was the election of 1865 you know?—Yes.

16568. And the first time that you had a vote?—It was.

16569. Now, did Michael Hunt interest himself in getting you paid?—Well, we were in the habit of talking over the affairs of the election.

16570. Was he busy about the election?—Well, I don't know that he was busy, but he appeared to know all about it.

16571. Now, did Michael Hunt on that occasion tell you what he was to get himself?—No, he did not.

16572. Did you know, among you all, about that time what Michael Hunt expected to get?—Well, no, I did not.

16573. Did you think he was to be paid more than you?—No, I did not.

16574. Did you know he got something?—I heard he was offered money and would not take it.

16575. Before you heard he was offered money?—Well, I don't know whether he expected it or not.

16576. Did you expect any money after your vote at the last election?—I did not.

16577. Would you take it if it was offered to you?—Well if I thought it was not dishonorable or dishonest I would take it.

16578. Would you take money from the other side and vote against your principles?—I would not.

16579. Would you take money on your own side if it was going amongst the rest?—If I thought it was not bribery or dishonorable I would.

16580. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Was Mr. Balfour a canvasser for Major Knox?—I think not.

16581. Was it to vote for Major Knox or Captain Flanagan that the offer of £40 was made?—To go away and not vote at all?

16582. In whose interest was that offer made?—Major Knox's. I may say that I am very sorry to have had to mention Mr. Balfour's name at all.

(The witness withdrew.)

Patrick Gunning sworn and examined.

Patrick Gunning.

16583. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—You are an elector?—Yes.

16584. Did you vote at the last election?—I did.

16585. For whom did you vote?—For Captain Flanagan?

16586. Did you vote at the election before that?—I did.

16587. Did you vote for Sergeant Armstrong?—I did.

16588. Did you get any money after that?—I did.

16589. How much?—Thirty pounds.

16590. Who gave it to you?—Mr. Magill.

16591. Had he canvassed you for Sergeant Armstrong?—No; I think it was Mr. M'Niffe and Sergeant Armstrong.

16592. Why was it that you got so much as £30 after the Sergeant's election?—Well, I suppose he considered me a poor man with a large family.

FOURTEENTH DAY.

October 21.

Patrick Gunning.

16593. Had you made any application for money to the Sergeant?—No.

16594. Or to any other person?—No.

16595. When did you first hear of the money going?—I got it six or eight months, I think, afterwards, or may be, nine months—when it was going.

16596. Did you ever vote at any election previous to the Sergeant's?—I did for the London man, for the county.

16597. For Colonel Townley?—No.

16598. Mr. Sadlier?—No, but for Mr. Swift.

16599. At a county election?—Yes.

16600. Before you voted for the Sergeant did you ever vote at a borough election?—I did, for Somers.

16601. Did you get any money?—Not a shilling ever I got up to Armstrong's election. I was turned out of my land for Swift's.

16602. If money had been going after the last election would you have taken it for having voted for Captain Flanagan?—If it was going I would.

(The witness withdrew.)

John Brady.

John Brady sworn and examined.

16603. Mr. Commissioner Byrne. — Are you an elector?—Yes.

16604. Did you vote at the last election?—Yes.

16605. For whom?—Captain Flanagan.

16606. Did you vote at the election before for Sergeant Armstrong?—Yes.

16607. After that election did you get any money?—Well, I might say I did, when it was left at my place for me. I was arrested under the suspension of the Habeus Corpus Act, and imprisoned, and of course the money was left.

16609. How much?—I think £20. Of course it's right enough what Mr. Kidd stated.

16610. Did you ever vote at any previous election?—I did.

16611. Did you ever get any money before voting at an election?—After voting, exactly, I did not get money.

16612. Well what did you get?—Well there was an account—some little affair, which was never demanded, between a certain gentleman and me.

16613. After what election was that?—I think it was Tennison's and Macdonogh's.

16614. For whom did you vote at that election?—I did not vote at all.

16615. You abstained from voting?—Yes.

16616. Tell the whole story, now, about that election?—Well, a gentleman sent for me—Mr. Pollexfen, and I went down to his coal yard. He chatted over the affair to me, and said I was to get £20 for abstaining from voting. I agreed. After the election was over, I went to him, and there were no funds left to him to meet it; he said that the parties who had got the money, Macdonogh's money, had shut on it, and had not given it to him. Anything then that he did give was out of his own pocket, I firmly believe, because they shut on his money.

16617. Did he mention the name of the person who shut on the money?—No, he did not.

16618. How soon after Macdonogh's return did you get the money?—It was nine months. I got no money at all. I am in the meal and flour trade. However, it hangs still. I am in point of honour bound to pay it if he demands it. I don't exactly say it was for the election he gave me the value. It was a ton of meal.

16619. Whom did you owe the money to?—Mr. Pollexfen, if he demands it. It was only a case of honour, nothing more.

16620. Do not you believe he never will demand the money?—Begor, I can't say that.

16621. What was the price of the ton of meal?—It was about, I suppose, £9, or something that way. His clerk demanded it since.

16622. Was anything else given to you besides the ton of meal?—No; nothing.

16623. But before the election Mr. Pollexfen had arranged with you that you should get money?—Yes, to abstain from voting.

16624. Did you vote at any election before that?—Never—oh, I might have voted.

16625. Did you vote at Sadler's election?—I did not. I had a little transaction at Sadler's election also.

16626. What was that?—A brother-in-law of mine abstained from voting.

16627. What is his name?—Patrick Giblan. He is in America. He was then a Somers*ite*, and so was I myself. I was offered a cheque for £200 to make him vote for Sadlier, and more fool I was that I would not take the money nor allow him to take it.

16628. Who offered you the £200?—The gentleman is dead.

16629. What is his name?—Mr. O'Connor. He offered me a cheque for £200, which I would not take; and I then got £20 or £30—I could not say which—to keep him from voting, and I gave every fraction of it. That's all I received; and I never received three pence by it.

16630. Do I understand you to say that you did not vote yourself?—No. I had no vote then.

16631. Now, let me ask you this—who canvassed you at Captain Flanagan's election?—Father Morris and Captain Flanagan.

16632. Did Martin Phillips canvass you?—He did not.

16633. Did Mr. Poe canvass you at that election?—No.

16634. Who else canvassed you besides Captain Flanagan?—Mr. Foley and Harper Campbell—two gentlemen I had perfect confidence in.

16635. Confidence?—Decidedly—yes.

16636. If money had been offered to you after Captain Flanagan's election, would you take it?—Indeed I would.

16637. You would?—Yes.

(The witness withdrew.)

John P. Treston.

John P. Treston sworn and examined.

16638. The Chief Commissioner.—You were expense agent for Captain Flanagan?—I was.

16639. Who advanced you the money for the expenses returned in your account?—I was advanced no money whatever. The way was this. When parties sent in their bills to be paid, Mr. Lynch usually gave me a letter of credit in favour of the party presenting the account, and I would forward the party the amount, taking his receipt.

16640. I presume you mean Mr. Stanislaus Lynch?—Yes; Mr. Lynch of the Landed Estates Court.

16641. Who gave you all the money that passed through your hands?—I think, with the exception of the first cheque, that it was from Mr. M'Dermott I got it. It was a cheque drawn in my favour, and left with Mr. Tighe, and I indorsed it to Mr. Tighe as returning officer.

16642. Then I understand that whenever you wanted money for the legal expenses of the election you applied to Mr. Lynch on the matter?—For instance, in case of any party that would have a bill for printing and advertising, I would go to Mr. Lynch, and he would give me a letter of credit in that party's favour for the amount.

16643. Did any other money pass through your hands except the £458 7*s.* 8*d.* in your return—just look at it (hands document to witness). That is the original return signed by you, Mr. Treston?—This is the return. No other moneys passed through my hands, except those returned here. I may mention that I received my fees, I think, £15.

16644. I am not asking you about that. Did you know anything of this—we heard to-day from Mr. Molony that sums were paid for the maintenance of the country people who were in the town of Sligo during the election?—I never was aware of it.

16645. Did you never hear of that before?—I never heard of it, nor did I know anything at all about it; in fact, I had virtually nothing to do with the Sligo election. I was more engaged in the county. I was engaged for Mr. O'Connor.

16646. You were only expense agent?—Expense agent.

16647. Were you here during the polling?—I was.

16648. For Captain Flanagan?—I was.

16649. Was it from Dublin that you sent down the different sums mentioned in that?—It was.

16650. Then you paid nothing while you were here?—Not a farthing. There was nothing demanded in fact; there was, in fact, nothing due while I was here.

16651. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Were the mobs very violent in your opinion?—Well, indeed they were very excited; but I have seen them excited, not here, but in other places.

16652. You consider that they were not unusually violent?—Oh, indeed it was a violent election, but I have seen some equally so.

(The witness withdrew.)

James Burrows sworn and examined.

16653. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—You are an elector?—I am, sir.

16654. For whom did you vote at the last election?—I voted for Major Knox.

16655. Whom did you vote for at the election before that—was it Macdonogh?—I think so.

16656. Did you get any money after that election?—Not a bit of it.

16657. What?—I did after Macdonogh's defeat. I got £15 from Mr. Charles Sedley.

16658. Mr. Sedley canvassed you before that?—No, sir, just a gratuity as I thought.

16659. Had you ever voted before?—I had.

16660. For whom—Wynne?—I did.

16661. Did you ever get any money after voting for Mr. Wynne?—Never.

16662. Did you ever hear of any money going to Mr. Wynne's friends?—I did not; I don't think there was money there at all. I voted for Mr. Francis Macdonogh in opposition to an English gentleman who came here named Townley.

16663. I think you are mistaken?—No, sir.

16664. I don't think Mr. Townley and Mr. Macdonogh were at the same election?—Well, I think they were.

16665. Mr. Tennison, perhaps, you mean?—Well, I think so. It was some of the parties.

16666. Did you get any money then?—Not a bit of it; I did not.

16667. Did anybody offer you any money to vote at this election for Major Knox?—I never heard a word about it.

16668. I suppose if any was coming to you now you would take it?—Well, I don't know, sir. If there is a gratuity five or six months after the election very few would put it out of the door. I am not so pure as to do it myself, I assure you.

16669. Did you ever hear of Mr. Abbott?—Oh, I did—the merchant in London?

16670. Yes, who is coming to be a candidate here, they say?—I don't know what he is coming to be, but I heard about him.

16671. Did you ever hear any talk about his being a rich man?—Well, I can hardly tell whether it was by verbal observation or rumour. He is said to be a rich man, I believe.

16672. Did you ever hear any of the voters talking amongst themselves that they would get some money now that he was coming?—Never, sir; never, indeed. But I think, generally speaking, that any rich man is supposed to be influential coming into a poor borough.

16673. And to scatter the money after the election, you know?—I don't know that, sir; I don't know that; I am on my evidence here, sacredly, and I assure you I never expected it. It was handed to me by a gentleman—£15—and he said, "a friend sends you this." I think he said something in the shape of a "supporter."

16674. A supporter of Macdonogh?—I think so. That's my impression.

(The witness withdrew.)

Hugh O'Rorke sworn and examined.

16675. The Chief Commissioner.—You are an elector?—I am.

16676. Did you vote at Sergeant Armstrong's election?—I had no vote then.

16677. You are a Roman Catholic?—I am.

16678. Had you ever a vote in Sligo before the last time?—No.

16679. What were you rated at?—Nineteen pounds ten at that time.

16680. Were you put on the registry by the Liberals?—Well, really I don't know who put me on. I believe I was.

16681. Do you know who was attending as attorney on the Liberal side, and who on the Conservative side?—Mr. Molony at present. Mr. M'Niffe before.

16682. Did not you know he was working to get you on?—Well, I believe he was—yes.

16683. When you say you "believe" you mean that you have not any doubt about it?—Well, the reason I say I believe is because I did not instruct anyone to do so.

16684. Did you not know the attorney at each side was doing the best he could for his party?—Yes.

16685. Was any money offered to you not to go on the registry?—Never.

16686. Or any intimation to that effect?—Never.

16687. Did you wish to go on the registry?—Well, I did.

16688. In order that you might have a vote for your party?—Exactly.

16689. Honestly and conscientiously?—Yes.

16690. And when you were put on the registry you intended to vote?—I did.

16691. To exercise the franchise?—I did.

16692. Did you vote at the last election?—I did not.

16693. Where were you on the day of polling?—I was down here in my own house.

16694. Were you asked to vote for Captain Flanagan?—I was; I was canvassed.

16695. Were you asked to vote for Major Knox?—I was.

16696. Who canvassed you for Major Knox?—The Major himself and Mr. Phibbs.

16697. Anybody else?—That's all. Only once.

16698. Did you promise the other side?—I did not. I refused Major Knox.

16699. Yes; and you did not vote with your own side?—I did not.

16700. Why did you not go with your own side?—Well, I thought it would be against my interest—that it would not suit me any way. I did not like to do it. I was allowed to remain over, and if my vote had been

FOURTEENTH DAY.

October 21.

Hugh O'Rorke.

required for Captain Flanagan in the evening, he would have got it.

16701. Did you tell him so?—I did.

16702. I mean that if your vote would have carried the election you would have given it?—I would.

16703. Were you molested in any way on account of not having voted?—Not a bit in the world from any side, or any party, or anyone.

16704. You got no molestation whatever?—Not a word.

16705. Was there any offer made to you on any side at the last election?—No offer in any way, nor did I ask it.

16706. Were there many Roman Catholics like you that to your knowledge did not vote?—Well, no; except all you heard.

16707. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—What are you by trade?—I am an accountant and surveyor in Messrs. Robinson's land agency office.

16708. Were you apprehensive of losing customers if you voted?—In what way?

16709. Were you apprehensive of losing your place?—Well, no; I don't think I would.

16710. Did anybody canvass you on the Conservative side, except Major Knox?—No.

16711. Did your employer, Mr. Robinson, ask you?—No; he never asked me to vote for Major Knox.

16712. Did he ask you to stay away from voting?—He did.

16713. Did he give you any hint that you might lose your place if you voted?—No, he did not. He made it as a request.

16714. As a request?—Yes; and I believe he deserved it, and fifty times more.

16715. Why did you consider it against your interest to vote for anybody?—Well, I believe it would perhaps have annoyed him; I would not wish to do so. I would not wish to do so, for anything.

16716. The Chief Commissioner.—You got no molestation from anyone?—Not one—not from any person. I walked through them at all times—the mob, and everything else, and not one ever molested me.

(The witness withdrew.)

Thomas M'Gettrick.

Thomas M'Gettrick sworn and examined.

16717. The Chief Commissioner.—Did you vote at Sergeant Armstrong's election?—I did.

16718. Did you get any money after voting?—I did.

16719. How much?—Five pounds was handed to me and £15 was on a bill.

16720. That is £20 altogether?—Yes.

16721. Who gave you the £5?—Mr. Foley.

16722. Did you owe any money to Mr. Foley?—No.

16723. Whom did you owe the £15 to?—To my landlord for rent.

16724. Who was the landlord?—Well, the landlord is Mrs. Moffett. The agent is Mr. Brett.

16725. What business are you in?—A publican.

16726. Did you ever get any other money after an election?—No.

16727. Did you ever get any bill paid on orders after an election?—No.

16728. Did you vote for Townley?—No. I had no vote then.

16729. When was the first time that you had a vote?—Sergeant Armstrong's time.

16730. How did you vote this last time?—For Captain Flanagan.

16731. Was any offer made to you on the other side?—On Major Knox's side.

16732. Yes; did they want you to vote for Major Knox, or did anybody offer you anything?—Well, I was asked to go to the Major by some of his supporters.

16733. Who asked you?—Mr. Knox.

16734. Which Mr. Knox?—The man that held the situation in Mr. Lyons's in this town.

16735. What is his Christian name?—Samuel Knox.

16736. Now, go on with what he said?—That he would try to get me £50 if I were to do so. He added at the same time that he would not ask me to do it if I did not think fit to do so myself.

16737. What did you say?—I said I would consider about it.

16738. How long was that before the election?—It might be a week or a fortnight.

16739. Well, go on; did he come to you again?—We had a conversation again, and I said something just the same.

16740. Yes, that you would consider about it?—Well, my mind was made up to vote for Captain Flanagan. We had a second or a third conversation about the matter, and I told him that I intended voting for Captain Flanagan.

16741. Was anyone by when Samuel Knox made ou these offers?—Well, it's very——I can hardly think that there was. I think it was between himself and me.

16742. Was it in your own place?—No, it was at Mr. Lyons's.

16743. Who used to come for you to bring you up there?—I stopped there off and on. I was working at the place.

16744. You are in Mr. Lyons's employment?—Yes.

16745. As what?—A tailor.

16746. Where was it that he spoke to you in this way?—At Mr. Lyons's house.

16747. What part of it?—That part where he works himself.

16748. Is Mr. Samuel Knox in your trade also?—He is.

16749. Was he over you as foreman?—Yes.

16750. Were you doubtful at any time whether you would take the £50 or not?—Oh, I had no intention of taking it on that occasion. I had no intention of taking any amount of money on that occasion.

16751. You say you would not take any amount of money?—I would not.

16752. Why did you tell him you would consider of it?—Well, just—all I can say is that I would think over it for a time. I didn't know what reason I might say for thinking over the matter; however, as the offer had been made in that way and as he simply said I might not take it if I did not think fit myself, I just said I would think over it.

16753. Did you tell anyone you were offered £50—I mean before the election?—Well, I hardly recollect that I did. I think I kept it confined to myself. I hardly have any recollection.

16754. Do you know of anyone else being offered £50?—No.

16755. Did you hear that the £50 was a "tip" to the Roman Catholic voters—did you hear any words to that effect?—Well, I made very little inquiries at the time about it. I just kept as it were out of the way of knowing anything at all about it. I intended to vote for Captain Flanagan.

16756. Supposing any money was going on Captain Flanagan's side would you take it—would you take money from your own side, although you would not take it from the opposite side and vote against your principles?—Well, I don't know if I would. On that occasion there was no money offered—no word about it.

16757. But I mean would you take it now if it were given to you on your own side, although you think it wrong, as you say, to take money from the other side?—Very likely.

16758. You would?—Very likely I might, perhaps, if it were handed to me, for now I would not care. I got an account from Mr. Lyons then that I was not wanted—that they would not ask me to vote on Major Knox's side. I got an account down to my own place that I would not be asked to vote.

16759. Who sent you that?—It came from the house to me. A man named Samuel Lougheed came.

16760. Only for that might you have voted for the Major?—Oh no; I was not intending to vote for the Major on that occasion.

16761. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—You are a Roman Catholic, I suppose?—Yes.

(The witness withdrew.)

Mr. William Abbot Woods sworn and examined.

16762. The Chief Commissioner.—You are a magistrate of the borough?—Yes.

16763. I presume you know Sligo very well?—I think I do, though I am surprised I know the names of so few.

16764. Do you know Mr. Joseph Woods?—He is my son.

16765. Has he gone away?—He has.

16766. When did he go away from Sligo?—I think some month, or better, ago—two months.

16767. Where has he gone to?—San Francisco.

16768. Is he to return to this country?—I don't believe he ever will; and I think he would have gone earlier, but that he was expecting that his commission would have commenced sooner.

16769. Did you wish him to be examined at this commission?—Yes.

16770. Did he express that wish to you himself?—He expressed that wish. He did not wish to go till a month or two ago, and only for that he would have gone sooner.

16771. When exactly did he go away?—I will furnish you with that date by-and-by. I have a bad memory. It's something about the time I told you.

16772. I must ask you further, had his going away anything to say to this Commission of Inquiry?—Certainly not.

16773. Did you know anything about any of these transactions that we have had detailed in evidence about the money going through the town from Captain Ethelred Knox's hands?—No; I knew nothing about it.

16774. Did you know Captain Ethelred Knox?—Oh yes, I have seen him.

16775. I mean you knew him when he was down for the election—I mean at the time of the election?—I saw him here through the town at the time of the election.

16776. Did you know that he was said to be the cashier of the Irish Times?—Well, I only knew it by seeing him one time in the Irish Times' office, that I called in about some advertisements or something of the sort.

16777. Did any money for the election pass through your hands at all for any purpose?—Nothing of the sort.

16778. Did you know anything at all about the sums we have heard mentioned—the £20 that Mr. Stokes mentioned for the Protestant voter, and £50 for the Roman Catholic?—No, I knew nothing about it. I heard it here and in Carrick.

16779. Did you know Mr. Stokes?—I knew him very well.

16780. Do you remember hearing it said that the Major was going away on the Sunday before the election?—I don't remember anything about it. I was very anxious to keep myself away from the election altogether, and I knew nothing at all about Stokes, or anything about it. He and I had not spoken perhaps for a year or two.

16781. Do you know a man named Kelly a carpenter?—I do.

16782. Did you ever make him any offer?—Never.

16783. You know what he has sworn?—Yes.

16784. That £50 was mentioned between you?—There was nothing of the sort ever mentioned.

16785. Had you any conversations with the man?—I had a great many conversations with him.

16786. I know, but there is a particular one about a certain number of feet of mahogany—had you any conversation with him about mahogany?—I had.

16787. What was it?—Not only mahogany but every other class of timber. We went into a calculation of what two houses would cost. I was about to build three houses; we were about to build two first, and to leave the flues and all that built in the third. We went into a calculation as to what common pines, yellow and red, sold by the ton and cubic foot, and how many cubic feet ordinarily are in twelve foot planks, and everything of that sort, in order to see which would come cheapest. We went into several houses in the town, in order to see which plan would be most economical and nearest to the purpose we wanted. We did the two.

16788. Whatever conversation you had about mahogany?—Was of a bona fide nature.

16789. Had it any reference to the election?—No reference to the election—not the slightest.

16790. In point of fact, did you build these houses?—I did not.

16791. How long before the election was it?—I will tell you how it occurred. I was about to build them, and had carted some of the brick; and then I became aware with respect to the site I was about to build them on—having got notice of the Towns' Improvement Act being about to pass—that I could get no more for the houses, if the Act passed, which they proposed to knock down, than I could get for the vacant plot as it was. From the time I got notice to build I built at my own risk, and then I gave up for the time being; and the bill being thrown out again, I was about to resume, when I got notice that the bill was coming on again in another year. That was how it was.

16792. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Mrs. Dunleavy swore on Friday here that you said you would give her £50 after the election?—It is utterly untrue.

16793. Did you ever offer to get her husband a plastering job at the town hall?—Oh yes, long—long before the election.

16794. Had that anything to do with the election?—Oh, not at all; it was eight or nine months before the election at all, or a year, I dare say.

16795. The Chief Commissioner.—Did you know anyone that came down from Dublin to Sligo for the purpose of the election?—Not at all.

16796. Had you voted at the previous election?—Yes.

16797. And by the members of the Conservative party you are well known down her?—Yes.

16798. From your knowledge of the town is there a large class, or any class, of voters on either side that expect to be paid?—I know nothing whatever about it beyond what I heard here and in Carrick.

16799. Did you ever mix yourself up with anything of the kind?—Never by any chance; I never went to a meeting where there was money talked about, or anything at all about it.

16800. You avoided it?—Unquestionably. I never mixed myself up in any one way at any election; if I had you would have been hearing it here before now.

16801. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Had you any conversation with Edward Kelly in reference to how he would vote?—He called on me at my house, and wanted me to give him some money to leave town. I said I would not—not a penny.

16802. The Chief Commissioner.—How much did he want?—He first wanted £3. Then he wanted the price of a pair of shoes; at last I said I would not give him a penny, if a penny would do.

16803. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Was it at that time that the conversation occurred between you in reference to the mahogany?—Oh no, not at all; long before that.

16804. The Chief Commissioner.—Did you assist in the election by giving any list of the people certain or doubtful?—No, not at all.

16805. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—How long before the election did Kelly want the £3?—I dare say it was a week, or something like that; I am not very clear as to the exact number of days, but I think it was about a week.

16806. Was it to avoid voting?—Well, I suppose it was. He said to me several times for years back that he was exceedingly badly treated in a contract that he had with the chapel. He said frequently—"When I worked for you first, sir, I had full and plenty; I was robbed by this chapel, and they treated me unjustly." Frequently, as I stood over his bench, when he worked for me, he said words to that effect. And he frequently, for years before, expressed in my presence a desire that the day would come when he could show the parties who had treated him so badly that he cared nothing for them. He alluded to the election in that way, as if in chagrin and vexation. These conversations occurred perhaps six months, twelve, eighteen months, three, four, and five years previously.

16807. The Chief Commissioner.—Did you know for whom he would vote on the eve of the election after he expressed his willingness to take £3 to leave town?—I don't know what he would take, but I said to him that if a penny would induce him to leave the town I would not give a penny, because I knew the impropriety of it.

16808. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Was there any conversation with him about the market rising?—Nothing of the sort.

16809. Was there any statement about £40 or £50?—Nothing of the sort.

16810. Were there any voters that you canvassed for Major Knox?—Except my second son I don't think there were any.

16811. You are not quite sure?—I don't remember. I did not canvass; I am not sure that, in the way of conversation, if a friend called to my house on anything of that sort, we would not have spoken; but in no other way. My son, I know, very reluctantly voted; in fact I did not meddle at all. Even as much as I spoke to my own son about it, I did not tell him they smashed my windows.

16812. Had you any conversation with Roman Catholic or Liberal voters about their votes before the last election?—When I called to Mrs. Dunleavy to pay her for the manure, she said to me that Frank was coming home, or something of that sort, and that he was to vote for Major Knox. "Well, my opinion is," said I, "that if he comes home he won't be let to vote for Major Knox." I have sedulously avoided in fact——

16813. You were in her house, were you not, before the election, several times?—Yes, in this way. I had four carts constantly carting manure out to the country, and some month or five weeks before the election I had been buying manure in a house some three doors from her. She sent out to my man who was with me, requesting that he would look at the manure-pit that she had. At first I declined, as it was not a convenient place to get it out of. She sent a second messenger, and we went in, and I said to the man, "look at it, and tell me what it is worth." He said, "It is worth 2*s.* 6*d.*" She sold it at that, and I agreed to take it. It lay there perhaps a week or two until the other manure we bought had been carted away. Then it was carted from the place; and afterwards I called to pay her. I just put my head inside the door, and asked was Mrs. Dunleavy in, and some child or person answered "No;" and I went away. I was not, perhaps, a quarter of a minute at the house.

16814. Was that shortly before the election?—Perhaps a fortnight or three weeks, or something like that; perhaps a week or so before the election I called to pay it, and she herself, in fact, it was that forced the conversation.

16815. What did she say to you?—She said that Frank was coming home, or something like that. I said, "Where is he?" she said, "He is in Roscrea," or something of that sort. She said, "He is coming home to vote for Major Knox." I said, "My opinion is, that if he comes he won't be allowed to vote for Major Knox;" such was the state of the town at the time that I knew he would not.

16816. Did either she or you make any observation in reference to money—to what he would get for staying away?—Not the slightest, most positively, directly nor indirectly; an allusion to money in any way was never made between us.

(The witness then withdrew.)

The Court adjourned to the following morning, at eleven o'clock.

FIFTEENTH DAY.

FIFTEENTH DAY.

October 22.

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 22, 1869.

The Commissioners sat at eleven o'clock.

Mr. Stanislaus Lynch.

Mr. Stanislaus Lynch sworn and examined.

16817. The Chief Commissioner.—You were at the last election here?—Part of the time I was.

16818. We were informed that you and Mr. Michael O'Loghlen could tell us all about the election expenses on Captain Flanagan's side?—Yes, I have been for a great many years Captain Flanagan's private agent, and any money that was spent at the election passed through my hands.

16819. What was the entire expense of the election? It amounted altogether to £1,260, as well as I can recollect. I have a memorandum here of the particulars.

16820. Give the principal items of it as approximately as you can?—There were the expenses returned through Mr. Treston, amounting to £458. I paid after that Mr. Treston's fee, £15; a bill of the Imperial hotel, £50; I paid my own expenses, £12; Mr. Waters's additional fee for attending the inquest for one day, £10; total of that class of expenses, £568, including the £458, which was the amount returned. I gave Captain Flanagan, in cash, at different times £230; of that sum there is £81 included in the £458 —that was a bill I paid to Mr. Doherty; that leaves £148 which he got from me.

16821. Do you know how that £148 was spent?—I don't, except that I took it for granted it was spent legally and properly. The expenditure commenced at the end of July, went through the revision, and included all the visits to Sligo, on to the end. I gave Mr. O'Loghlen at various times, commencing early in October and ending in November, £538 in different sums. Of that sum I am aware that £50 was paid by him to the Major, which left £488 in his hands.

16822. Do you know that part of that was spent by Mr. Molony before the election, on mobs in the town?—Yes.

16823. Was the whole of the £488 given to the country people who came into the town?—It wasn't. We had to pay the expenses of the revision, and every class of expenditure. I had no account from Mr. O'Loghlen, of the expenditure of that sum, but he gave me to understand in Dublin that there was a sum of £100, which is in account between us, that has not been expended at all. In addition to that I gave £63 to Mr. Molony, on the 17th November. The memorandum I have is as follows :—

16824. That is the whole expenditure of the election?—Yes ; it is taken from a book of mine, in which I keep all my expenses. I don't know how it is made out, but I suppose it is rightly done. That concludes the whole campaign.

16825. £1,268 8*s.* is the total amount of the election expenses?—Yes. I am quite certain that Captain Flanagan made some private expenditure ; he may have spent £100 or so in subscriptions, which didn't pass through my hands, but certainly not more.

16826. That is the total expenditure?—Yes. I deducted from it the two sums of £148 and £488, which I gave Captain Flanagan and Mr. O'Loghlen.

16827. Do you know anything of country people coming or being brought into the town during the election from either side, or from near Captain Flanagan's estates?—I know that the day before the nomination a great many country people came into the town—I wouldn't call them brought in as a mob at all. There was an immense crowd in the town, and there was the same enthusiasm as at the county election for the popular candidate.

16828. When did you know of the comparatively large expenses going through Mr. Molony's hands to provide food and refreshment for the mobs?—I know nothing of how the money was spent. I took it for granted that there was a large expenditure for watching voters. I was here for about a week at the election, and I remember the very first inquiry made every morning was, "Anyone made away with last night?" or, "Was there any cave formed?" And men were paid very liberally for watching the voters.

16829. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Have you any reason to believe that any money was paid for Captain Flanagan's election that did not pass through your hands?—I am quite confident that there was not, to the best of my belief, unless what I mentioned of Captain Flanagan's own.

16830. I am not only speaking of money from Captain Flanagan, but in these cases money is often sent over from political sources?—I am certain that every shilling of every kind or description spent in any way to promote Captain Flanagan's return passed through my hands.

16831. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Before the Sunday previous to the polling was there any discussion between you and Mr. O'Loghlen, or between you and any of Captain Flanagan's friends, as to the necessity of keeping Catholic voters to their colours?—The general opinion was that we would require a great deal of vigilance ; we knew that there was a great number of men the other side were spiriting away ; that was our great apprehension.

16832. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Did you believe that if the Catholic voters kept true you would win the election?—Certainly ; but I had great doubts of it when I found out the system of taking the voters to Mrs. Hall's house ; I then couldn't have a doubt as to the ultimate result.

16833. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Had you any conversation or discussion previous to the election with the Bishop as to the election prospects?—I had a number of discussions with him at different times. The Bishop was much more sanguine as to the ultimate purity of what I would call our rotten voters than I was.

16834. Had you a conversation with him close previous to the election?—Yes. I seldom met the Bishop that the question was not discussed. I was not constantly here.

16835. How often did you meet the Bishop before the election?—I met him two or three times before the election.

16836. Did you meet him shortly after you came to town?—Yes. I dined with him.

16837. And you naturally discussed the subject of the election?—Yes. The Bishop was under the impression that four or five Catholic voters at the outside would in the end prove false.

16838. The Bishop took an active interest in the result of the election?—He was very anxious about it. I think it was due very much to the men who voted for us. That 229 men should come up with the fearful temptations that were held out to them, was more than could hardly be expected. I never saw anything like it. Personally I knew nothing of any of them.

16839. Did you read the reports of the evidence given during this inquiry?—I did. I read the reports in the Irish Times.

16840. Does it occur to you to mention anything to us in reference to it, except what has been stated by you?—No. I don't know of anything that I would consider myself justified in mentioning.

16841. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Did you hear after the election, or at any time, that the Catholic clergy were sending in during the election their flocks from the neighbouring parts of the country?—I didn't hear that they were sending them in.

16842. Or encouraging them to come in?—I can't say that, I don't attribute to the country people any of the rioting that went on in the town during the polling—which was the day the rioting commenced. It was absurd for them to speak of rioting before that day ; but on the night of the polling there was rioting. I don't attribute that in any way to the country people who came into the town. They certainly were very enthusiastic about the election. I never saw such genuine rage when they found out that they were sold—they turned out perfectly wild at the idea—it was indignation at being sold they exhibited.

16843. We have it in evidence from Mr. Molony that £180 was expended on the mob?—I am not aware of it.

16844. Some days before the election?—I know nothing of it, but I am certain that the country people who came into the town didn't live here at their own expense.

16845. No one can doubt it?—There isn't the slight-

FIFTEENTH DAY.

October 22.

Mr. Stanislaus Lynch.

est doubt of it. But there was an organized mob on the other side, with arms. I never saw such an indiscriminate use of arms. I myself took possession of Mr. Hans Morrison, whom I saw presenting a revolver at the crowd, on the steps of the Court-house. I brought him to the Mayor, to take charge of him.

16846. Did you see any more arms but what Mr. Morrison had?—I did. I saw arms with young Mr. Lawder. I also heard that on the day of the nomination a parcel of ammunition was handed over to the county Inspector, that was taken from some person in the town—I now forget who it was. I think it was Mr. Williams. There was a lot of men outside the Court-house with arms. I saw the revolver in Mr. Hans Morrison's hand, presenting it to the crowd.

16847. Did you see any of the lower class with arms?—I didn't.

16848. You stated that there was an organized mob on Major Knox's side, would not you apply the same expression to those on Captain Flanagan's side?—Certainly. There was a certain amount of, I wouldn't say organization, but there was a mob. There are always mobs on both sides. There was a paid and strange mob, and there was another——

16849. The Chief Commissioner.—What was the other?—I don't know.

16850. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Did you hear by conversation or otherwise, of Catholic clergymen interesting themselves in the election, to the extent of encouraging their flock to come into town?—I know they interested themselves in the election, but I can't say that they encouraged their flocks to come in—I dare say they did. I have no reasom to contradict the statement that they did.

16851. Can you give us any information to assist us in the matter—did you hear the names of any clergymen sending mobs into the town?—I didn't.

16852. Or bringing them in?—I didn't. I am certain there were people from Captain Flanagan's neighbourhood, who took a very great interest in his return; but I am also certain that they weren't brought in by his parish priest. It has been stated that there was a mob in town from Geevagh, but I know that Father Dominick Noonan, who was one of Captain Flanagan's staunchest friends, did not in any way encourage his parishioners to come in.

16853. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Can you give us any information as to the organization of the opposition mob?—I cannot, except what I heard.

16854. Did you hear anything as to the armed organization of the mob?—The only thing I heard was that before the nomination—on the day of the nomination, there were people, strangers, came into the town armed. On the morning of the nomination I heard there was a row outside the court-house. As I understood it one mob was armed. I didn't see the arms. Mr. Peter O'Connor and some others separated them, and there was an end to it.

16855. Did you yourself attach credit to the report of persons coming in armed from Colonel Cooper's estate?—Not from Colonel Cooper's estate; but I am aware that you can bring in mobs from the country at call. I believe that there were persons armed on the opposite side at the time of the election. I was, however, only a looker-on, and wasn't in any way concerned in it.

(The witness withdrew.)

Mr. William Edward Harkan.

Mr. William Edward Harkan sworn and examined.

16856. The Chief Commissioner.—Were you at the last election for the borough?—I was.

16857. In what capacity?—I was an inspector of a booth in this court-house.

16858. Did any money pass through your hands?—None whatever.

16859. Do you then know nothing of the money that was paid by Mr. Molony for the support and maintenance of the mobs?—I don't. I only received intimation from Mr. John M'Dermott that I was to be one of the agents. I was engaged for the county Sligo election. I had no dealing or communication with any of the voters. I only acted as a solicitor in a booth, and I wasn't consulted, except in general conversation as to how things would go.

16860. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—In fact, you know nothing of the election, except professionally?—Nothing more than as a solicitor in a booth, seeing that the men were regularly polled.

16861. You didn't hear of any money being expended by Captain Flanagan for bribery or treating?—None whatever. I have every reason to suppose that there was no money for bribery passed from Captain Flanagan.

(The witness withdrew.)

Mr. James Tighe.

Mr. James Tighe sworn and examined.

16862. The Chief Commissioner.—I believe you were Mayor of Sligo at the last election?—Yes.

16863. Were you consulted about making arrangements about the peace of the town during the election?—I was.

16864. What steps were taken by you and the other authorities for that purpose?—The day before the polling I asked the three stipendiary magistrates, Mr. M'Mahon, the County Inspector; Colonel Gordon, who was in command of the military; Mr. Robinson, advising counsel to Major Knox; Mr. Waters who was here on behalf of Captain Flanagan, with my asssessor, Mr. Harkan, to meet me at my house, and in their presence we arranged where the forces were to be disposed of on that night and the following day. That arrangement met with the concurrence of all the parties present.

16865. Can you give us any information as to how large the force of soldiers and constabulary was, as reported to you?—To the best of my recollection we had that day a force of 280 of the constabulary—from 270 to 280; I think we had about eighty military men—I don't say I am giving you accurately the numbers.

16866. Had you any cavalry?—Yes, we had both military and constabulary cavalry.

16867. A matter has been mentioned to us—that in either escorting the voters or protecting persons that were followed by the crowd, the soldiers and constabulary did not form across the street so as to prevent the mob from going forward. Was anything discussed by you as to whether that was necessary or not?—We did discuss that, and my assessor stated, in which statement I agreed, that it would be illegal and unconstitutional to place them across the street, and thus stop the passage.

16868. Did your brother magistrates ask that to be done?—I think it was proposed by some one, and it was stated by Mr. Robinson, that Mr. Lawder, the conducting agent of Major Knox, wished it to be done, but Mr. Harkan, to the best of my recollection, objected to it for the reason I have stated, and I agreed with Mr. Harkan.

16869. Did Mr. Robinson concur in the propriety of placing the men across the street?—He did.

16870. Why did you consider it illegal to stop the mob going up the street?—No, but I considered it illegal to stop up the approaches to the court-house; but to prevent them at any other time there was no such question discussed.

16871. Suppose the escort was going to the court-house with voters, and that the mob followed, if five or six men were left behind they would surely stop the mob and keep them from following?—I have no recollection of any case of the kind being discussed. I know that on the day of the polling I considered that my duties were more in and out the court-house than in any other part of the town; and I didn't go to any other part of the town unless I was sent for. Mr. Whelan did send for me on two or three occasions to disperse some parties; I went, and I prevailed on the parties to disperse; in fact, they never refused to disperse when I requested them to do so.

16872. On the night after the polling at what time did the rioting begin that led to the destruction of property in the town?—It is necessary I should explain that on the evening of the day of the polling—I think it was about twenty-five minutes past four at the time—I was informed that an attempt would be made either to destroy or take the poll books from us. I think it right to tell you that Mr. Morrison told me about that hour that there was such a report abroad. I thereupon ordered Mr. Lynch (one of the Sub-Inspectors) and fifty additional constables into the court-house, and I requested some of the magistrates, either Mr. Coulson or Mr. Whelan, to be sure to have a strong escort waiting on me when I'd have the books made up. It was half past five o'clock when I had all finished, and the escort was in waiting, and I went home. I believe it took so many men from the other parts of the town that they declined a good deal to give the people the protection they were asking for, unless where there were attacks made on houses.

16873. How long were you going from the Court-house to your residence?—Not more than five minutes, I suppose.

16874. Were the constabulary then at the disposal of the stipendiary magistrates?—Yes; I was up at four o'clock that morning, and when I got home I was tired; I thought I had my day's work over me then. I heard nothing of the wrecking of houses until half-past six o'clock, or near seven. I then went out, got the military and paraded the town. The night was dark, and we couldn't arrest anyone.

16875. Were you applied to at all that night by anyone for a special guard to protect them?—Yes, I was. In one place I remember the wife of Devanny asked for protection, and I gave it to her.

16876. Was Devanny's house wrecked at the time?—It was; the windows and shutters were broken in.

16877. Did not you know that the rioting would be principally directed against those persons either who had voted for Major Knox, or who abstained altogether from voting?—I knew that.

16878. Did not you know then that they would require special protection?—Whenever a special guard was asked by any parties it was sent to them. I gave it whenever I was asked for it, except on one occasion when Mr. Davidson asked me to go to Jail-street. I referred him to one of the resident magistrates.

16879. How long did you remain out that night?—Colonel Gordon complained to me at about nine o'clock that his men were under arms the whole day, and had no refreshments. I saw no necessity for having them out, and they returned to barracks. I remained out myself up to half-past eleven o'clock, and the town was then quiet and peaceable.

16880. When did the wrecking begin?—It was over about seven o'clock, when it began I can't say. It was very shortly after seven o'clock when I took the military about the town, and there was no wrecking then—any houses that were injured were injured at this time, there was no wrecking after that.

16881. You did not know what was going on until it was all over?—I didn't; some of my family did know it but they didn't like to tell me, knowing that, if I did know it, I would go out.

16882. They were afraid, I suppose, to have you incur danger?—No; their reason for not telling me was, they knew I was unable to go about, I was so tired and fatigued.

16883. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Were you aware of the constabulary that had been quartered here, being withdrawn from Sligo during the election?—I was. I recollect Mr. Coulson coming to me; and both of us agreed that it was very bad policy to withdraw them. We then immediately went out to Mr. M'Mahon's residence. We there signed a requisition, asking to have them sent back. We asked Mr. M'Mahon to forward the requisition, he did so, and they were sent back, I think the same day.

16884. How long were the local constabulary withdrawn from Sligo?—We had them back the day following.

16885. They were away about twenty-four hours altogether?—Some of them were; some of them were sent back as far as Easky, and it was two days before they came back to Sligo.

16886. What day of the week was it, or what day of the month was it when they were withdrawn?—It was a few days before the poll.

16887. Was there much rioting going on during their absence?—There wasn't much rioting up to the evening of the poll.

16888. Was there great rioting during the absence of the constabulary?—No. I don't recollect any particular rioting, but I believe there was some.

16889. Why did you and Mr. Coulson consider it bad policy to withdraw the constabulary from the town?—Because I was under the belief that they might be much more efficient than strangers, and he considered it very ill-advised on the part of the authorities to remove them.

16890. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—How long before the election was it that the rioting began?—I think it was about a week before the election. The first I heard of it was the breaking of Mr. Clancy's windows. Captain Flanagan was canvassing at the time, and during his canvass some parties in the crowd that accompanied him, threw a stick and broke a pane of glass in the window. One of the constabulary came to me and told me that they had no magistrate with them. I accordingly went with them, accompanied by Mr. Coulson, soon after. I recollect that at that time the crowd was peaceful. Subsequently Mr. Lawder came up, and communicated to Mr. Coulson a sworn information to the effect, that if the crowd with Captain Flanagan were not removed, dangerous consequences might follow. He did this publicly on the bridge, opposite the Imperial Hotel, and it caused a good deal of discussion and ill-will. That was the first I recollect of the rioting.

16891. The Chief Commissioner.—Can you give us any information as to which mob it was that was armed before the election?—Different parties came to me, and said, that they heard a number of orangemen came into Sligo armed. Not having any reliable information on which to act, I took no steps in the matter. If any one gave me a sworn information to the effect, I would have them searched, but in the absence of that, I didn't do so.

16892. Then there was such a report?—There was such a report.

16893. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—When did the mobs begin to come into the town, they must have begun to come in more than a week before the election?—If you call crowds of people mobs, they came in when Captain Flanagan himself came in.

16894. How many would you say accompanied Captain Flanagan when he came into town?—I could hardly take on myself to say—perhaps some thousands.

16895. Principally country people?—Yes, a good many of the Sligo people went out to meet them. Captain Flanagan was a person well liked, and a good many of the people residing round about his place came in with him.

16896. Could you fix the time when he first came in?—I couldn't exactly.

16897. Was it three weeks, or a month, or six weeks?—It was three or four weeks, I suppose, or perhaps more.

16898. That was the first time Captain Flanagan began to canvass?—Yes, he came in publicly that day for the purpose of canvassing.

16899. Did this large crowd or mob go with him through the town from day to day on his canvass?—No; there was no such crowd afterwards with him.

16900. Was there a crowd at all with him?—There was.

16901. Would you call it a mob?—I wouldn't.

16902. Did they go cheering those who promised to vote for him?—When he got a promise, those outside gave a cheer; and when he didn't, they gave a groan.

16903. Can you form an idea of the average number of the crowd that used accompany Captain Flanagan on his canvass?—At the time I allude to, when Mr. Lawder wanted us to disperse them, there weren't more than fifty or sixty persons there altogether, I suppose.

16904. Was that the average number?—The numbers were very often larger, and they were sometimes smaller.

16905. Is it your opinion that nothing which you could call rioting took place until a week before the election?—I wouldn't say there was any rioting up to the evening of the day of the poll. I saw statements in the papers on the subject, but I know that they were grossly exaggerated.

16906. In his evidence, Major Knox stated that, a week before the poll he saw a foreign mob come into the town, and he said, they were more like savages from the mountains than anything else; he also stated, that the place where he was stopping was attacked by this mob, and that he and his servant had to come down stairs with pistols to disperse them—do you think that that is a fair description of what took place?—I know nothing of what took place at Major Knox's place.

16907. Never mind that—I am speaking of the description of the savage mob he gives, that came into the town?—You could scarcely expect that Major Knox and I would look on the mob in the same light, for I felt myself in no danger at all—Major Knox did, and very justly.

16908. In your opinion, then, Major Knox was in danger during that period?—I know that on the nomination day Major Knox had to stay in the court-house after the proceedings were over until an escort was got to convey him to the hotel; and I know it was very difficult—I had to strain all my influence—to get him a hearing on that day.

16909. Previous to the day of nomination, did you consider that there was rioting to a certain extent going on?—Certainly not. I would not say there was any great rioting up to the evening of the day of the polling.

16910. Did you consider there was rioting sufficient to intimidate voters who might go to vote for Major Knox, but who were reasonably expected to vote for Captain Flanagan?—I think not. I know some of Major Knox's friends told me that they walked the streets of Sligo, free from molestation.

16911. Were they Roman Catholics or Protestants?—Protestants.

16912. I am pointing my question rather to those who were suspected to vote for Major Knox, but who not unreasonably might be expected to vote for Captain Flanagan?—I wouldn't say it would be safe for them to walk the streets from the day of nomination to the polling—I do not think they would be safe in doing so. I know that some of them asked me for an escort on the day of polling, and I had no escort to give them, but I went with them myself to the tally-rooms of Major Knox.

16913. You recollect the previous election?—I do.

16914. Is violence a customary thing at elections in Sligo; was there much mob violence at the election between Mr. Macdonogh and Sergeant Armstrong?—There wasn't.

16915. You consider that that was an ordinary election?—I do.

16916. Do you consider it was a quieter election than the last?—I do. I consider that the minds of the people were not so much excited at that as they were at the last election; and I attribute that in a great measure to the discussion of the Church question at the time.

16917. I suppose there was no mob violence at all at the election in which Mr. Macdonogh was returned?—There were crowds, but no violence.

16918. Do you recollect the election when Mr. Wynne was returned; we have some evidence that there was violence at that election; do you recollect anything about the state of the town at that election?—I can't charge my memory with it.

16919. Do you remember the case of Pat O'Brien at that election?—I recollect seeing his house broken into, while it was guarded by military dragoons, but I can't recollect at what election that was.

16920. It is proved that it was at the election of 1859. Assuming that it was, do you recollect if there were any acts of violence committed at that time?—I think there were, but I can't charge my recollection with them.

16921. Would you describe what took place at that time when the military were guarding Pat O'Brien's house?—I recollect that the dragoons were going round in a circle opposite it, and the crowd began to talk of throwing stones. When they talked very openly about it they threw the stones; the stones went through the windows, and the soldiers apparently enjoyed it as great fun. The windows were broken—that's all that I saw.

16922. Do you recollect anyone being stabbed at that election?—The last election.

16923. No, at the election between Mr. Wynne and Mr. Somers in 1859?—No, I don't recollect.

16924. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Was the representation you made to the authorities as to the withdrawal of the men that were stationed attended to promptly?—At once. It was about twelve or one o'clock when Mr. Coulson and I walked out as far as Mr. M'Mahon's place. He wrote out a telegram there for us; we came in as far as the telegraph office with the message that was sent off, and we had some of the men back on the following morning

16925. One of the magistrates it was that called our attention to the withdrawal of the Sligo police: do you attribute any of the violence that took place to their withdrawal?—I couldn't take it on myself to say that there was any violence during that particular time or not; but I know that Mr. Coulson and I felt that their withdrawal was a great and grievous matter to the people of the town, and to the men themselves.

16926. The matter, however, was rectified?—Yes, and with the greatest promptitude—we had some of the men back early in the morning.

16927. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Did the rioting continue after the election?—Not that I recollect. I can't recollect any rioting after the election.

16928. Do you recollect the case of Peter Harrison?—Yes.

16929. That was the day after the election?—I recollect that case well.

16930. Mr. Lawder, the agent for Major Knox, swore that from the violence and rioting that prevailed he would not consider it safe to return here to conduct the petition before Judge Keogh—that is, if it were to be tried here?—I know that Mr. Lawder made himself very objectionable to the mob. I heard one of them say, "If we had taken your money for shouting for Knox, you wouldn't speak of us as you do."

16931. When did you hear that said?—That was on the day he tendered the sworn information to Mr. Coulson on the bridge. I heard it said in the presence of a score or two of persons.

16932. Mr. Lawder stated he did not believe that witness who gave evidence before Judge Keogh at Carrick, that if the inquiry were held here it could be held with safety?—I believe it could be held here with perfect safety.

16933. Do you go so far as to say that there was no act of violence, except the case of Peter Harrison's, committed after the election?—I don't. What I say is, I can't recollect any act of violence after the election. I made it a point to attend every day at Petty Sessions, and if these acts did occur they couldn't escape my notice.

16934. The Chief Commissioner.—Would the mobs act at all, if they were not paid at least a day's wages?—As a rule, I believe, there would not be so much mobbing, if they weren't paid. I know that other mobs, similar mobs, were paid for months before the election, and they gave me a great deal of trouble. Several complaints were made to me of them, but I couldn't get the parties who complained—such was their fear of them—to prosecute.

16935. What mobs were these?—Major Knox's mobs—some of them admitted to me that they got money.

16936. Was it Brennan that had them?—Yes. He paid some money to them. I told some of Major Knox's friends that they were doing a very foolish thing—that these mobs would turn against him.

16937. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—And I believe the event proved you were right?—Quite right.

16938. The Chief Commissioner.—Do you mean to say that these mobs gave you annoyance in preserving the peace of the town?—Yes; in no other way; they gave me no personal annoyance.

16939. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Do you know anything about expectations on the part of a large class of voters, that money would possibly be given to them after elections—I mean these last three elections?—I don't.

(The witness withdrew.)

Sub-Inspector Neynoe sworn and examined.

Sub-Inspector Neynoe.

16940. The Chief Commissioner.—Were you on duty at the last election here?—I was.

16941. How long have you been in the force?—Nearly seventeen years.

16942. Have you been on duty at previous elections?—I have.

16943. How many men of your force altogether had you in town for the election?—Men were taken away, and were never brought back. We had altogether in town one county inspector, eight sub-inspectors, and 324 men.

16944. How many mounted men had you?—We had nineteen mounted men altogether.

16945. Can you describe how many of the military forces there were?—I have not the least idea. I think there were two troops of cavalry, and two or three companies of infantry. I had no opportunity of knowing what the numbers were.

16946. When first did you notice that the country people were in town?—The day Captain Flanagan came into town he was escorted by a number of people—there was a kind of procession—they were peaceable, there was no rioting.

16947. I direct your attention to a few days before the polling, when first did you notice the country people coming into town, and remaining?—Some days before the polling.

16948. Did you see any of the rioting and wrecking of houses on the night of the polling?—I didn't. I was on duty in the courthouse that day. I didn't see the wrecking at the time, but I visited the houses afterwards.

16949. Did the mayor remain any time in the courthouse after the close of the poll at five o'clock?—I think he left it immediately after, but I am not quite sure.

16950. Did not you see any of the wrecking of the houses at all?—I didn't, because the wrecking took place between four and five, and I didn't leave the courthouse until after five. I had no opportunity of seeing it.

16951. Did you hear the matter discussed between yourself and your brother officers, about stopping the people going up the street to the courthouse, and drawing your men across it?—I don't recollect speaking on the subject to them, but I recollect saying to some person that it would be most advisable to do it, that it was done at another election, and that the people were in consequence able to go to vote.

16952. Were you at previous elections in Sligo?—I was at two or three previous elections.

16953. And were the men drawn across the street on these occasions?—I have a recollection of its being done at one election.

16954. You think it then quite possible?—I know nothing so possible.

16955. In your opinion is that a proper measure to adopt under the circumstances?—I think the rioting wouldn't have taken place if it had been done.

16956. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Are you aware of any armed country people coming into the town, on Major Knox's side?—I am not.

16957. Did you see firearms either presented or used in the crowd?—I did not.

16958. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Were you on duty outside the courthouse on the morning of the election?—I was, with Mr. Whelan.

16959. Were you aware of the rioting that took place early on that morning when twenty or thirty persons were taken into Miss Allingham's yard for protection?—I don't recollect it.

16960. You have a large experience of elections; you say you were at previous elections here; do you consider that the last election was more violent than those that preceded it?—Not a doubt of it.

16961. What is your opinion of the violence of the last election, as to whether it was great and unprecedented?—I never saw an election half as bad; it was unprecedented in my experience of elections.

16962. Is it your opinion that the violence was produced by two mobs equal in force and numbers, or by only one mob—that was the procession into the town?—I only saw one mob in the town.

16963. Was the violence of that mob continuous during the day?—During the day of polling, is it?

16964. Yes?—It was most violent; it couldn't be much worse.

16965. Would you describe the violence?—I was in the court-house the entire day, and at one time I was standing with Mr. Whelan at the door of it. We posted some men in the court-house and had to send for more. We were waiting for them to come forward, when we heard what seemed to be a shot, and tremendous roaring and rioting. We couldn't see at the time what was going on. The shouting of the mob was terrific. We went down towards the gate and saw them. Sticks were flying about in every direction. There was a dense mob of three or four hundred people. There was a detachment of men opposite the court-house at the time, and Mr. Whelan said to me, "Go down with these men." I said Mr. Reeves was in command. He said, "No matter, go down immediately." I then gave the order to the men, and we doubled down the street and cleared it. When we went down the street I saw Mr. Jones and Mr. Campbell cut with stones. We also were pelted with stones at the bottom of the street.

16966. The Chief Commissioner.—I believe the greatest excitement was around Captain Flanagan's tally-rooms?—Yes.

16967. Had you fixed bayonets when you went down the street?—No, we had not.

FIFTEENTH DAY.

October 22.

Sub-Inspector Neynoe.

16968. Was there any injury done to the arms and accoutrements of the men under your charge?—No; we were pelted with stones, but were not much hurt.

16969. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Previous to the election was there much rioting?—The first thing that I recollect was the breaking of Clancy's window, then there was some disturbance one night before the election; but I wasn't then on duty.

16970. Was that disturbance about a week before the election, or was it further back?—I can't exactly say. It was some few days before the election; it was at night it occurred.

16971. Would you describe the state of the town from the commencement of the rioting up to the day of polling?—I wouldn't say there was much rioting after the breaking of Clancy's window until the day of polling. I telegraphed for men, and Mr. Lynch with some men came; but there wasn't much disturbance until the poll.

16972. You think there wasn't much rioting on the nomination day, or between the nomination day and the poll?—I don't recollect that there was; the polling day is so fixed in my memory.

16973. You said you noticed some country people in town before the day of polling. Were they in large numbers?—There were a good many of them there.

16974. Did you consider that they were an organized mob?—I considered the mob on the day of polling was organized.

16975. I am speaking of before the day of polling?—They seemed to be going about the town.

16976. Did you observe them going about the town as a mob?—I don't exactly recollect.

(The witness withdrew.)

Sub-Inspector Henry Butler Lynch.

Sub-Inspector Henry Butler Lynch, sworn and examined.

16977. The Chief Commissioner.—Were you on duty here at the last election?—I was.

16978. How long have you been in the force?—Ten years.

16979. Have you had experience attending previous elections in Ireland?—I was at two previous elections.

16980. Where were you doing duty on the day of polling?—I was in the Court-house. I was brought in there by the Mayor.

16981. Did you see any of the rioting in the evening?—Yes.

16982. In what part of the town did you see it?—In Pound-street.

16983. Describe what occurred?—I had been on duty in the court-house with the Mayor, he was rather timid respecting the report about the poll books, especially on account of what he heard had occurred to the poll books in Dublin on a similar occasion. He therefore kept a strong force of military and police about him. I escorted him home with the poll books. I was then directed to go to Pound-street. When I got to the corner of the street, they threw stones at us out of the houses.

16984. How many men had you with you then?—Twenty-five, Mr. Hill, the resident magistrate was also with me, and when he saw what was going on he said he would go back for the dragoons. I charged the crowds, and we got six or eight men cut with stones. When I was coming back we met the dragoons.

16985. Had the wrecking of the houses been then all over?—It was; it must have been done at the close of the poll.

16986. During what time did it go on, was it done, do you think, in half an hour?—Hardly. I think it must have been going on from four o'clock—from the time it was known that the election was going against Captain Flanagan.

16987. Five or six of your men were injured?—Yes, they were cut on the head and different parts of the body.

16988. From your experience of previous elections, was the mob violence, in your opinion, very great on the last occasion?—To judge from the consequences of what has been done, the violence was very extreme.

16989. Has your attention been directed as to the formation of the constabulary or military across the street leading to the court-house to prevent the crowd following the voters?—It has.

16990. Was your attention directed to that matter during the day of polling—did you speak to your brother officers about it?—I think I heard it said by some one that it would be a very expedient thing to do.

16991. What is your opinion?—I think it would.

16992. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—You were in the court-house on duty that day?—Yes, principally.

(The witness withdrew.)

Sub-Inspector James Walter Raleigh.

Sub-Inspector James Walter Raleigh sworn and examined.

16993. The Chief Commissioner.—Were you on duty here at the last election?—I was.

16994. How long have you been in the force?—Little over four years.

16995. Were you ever on duty at any previous election?—Never.

16996. Where were you on the day of polling?—I was exactly opposite the court-house gate, minding Major Knox's tally-rooms.

16997. How many men had you with you?—Twenty-five.

16998. What was the conduct of the mob, as far as you saw?—It was principally around Captain Flanagan's tally-rooms, and the Victoria hotel. I could see them where I was.

16999. Did you see any violence during the day—any stone-throwing?—I didn't, until night.

17000. Did you, at the close of the poll?—No.

17001. When did you see it?—After I escorted Major Knox from his tally-rooms to the Victoria hotel, I was sent on duty to what we called the No. 2 district—Knox-street, Stephen-street, and the Victoria-bridge. At Ratcliffe-street we saw that Gethins' house was after being wrecked. There was a mob outside it cheering, and when we showed ourselves, they ran away. I left a section of men to attend to the house, and then went to Knox-street round the other way.

17002. Was that all that you saw?—No. In Pound-street—I went up there, for I was called on by one of the men, who told me that there was wrecking going on there.

17003. What hour was that, do you recollect?—I can't fix the hour. When I went up Pound-street, I saw a mob throwing stones at houses. I met one woman, and she made a lamentable story of the whole thing.

17004. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—How early in the morning were you stationed outside Major Knox's tally-rooms?—At seven o'clock.

17005. Did you leave it during the day?—For the whole day I never left it, except perhaps for a short time.

17006. While you were stationed there, did you see any of Major Knox's supporters armed?—I did not.

17007. Were you aware of any men coming from the country—supporters of Major Knox—with arms?—I was not.

17008. Did you see any mob at either side armed?—With firearms?

17009. Yes?—I did not.

17010. You saw nothing but sticks and stones?—I saw sticks with Captain Flanagan's mob. I escorted a great many of Major Knox's supporters from the tally-rooms to the court-house, there was never any violence offered to them, but some of them were afraid to go across without an escort.

17011. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Do you remember the occasion when Mr. Neynoe cleared the street?—I do not.

17012. Do you recollect the occasion when Captain King met his death?—I wasn't on duty then; when I came to report myself for duty, Mr. M'Mahon, the county inspector, sent me to the hotel. I went down there, was relieved, and came back to the barracks. Before I went again to the tally-rooms, and while I was at the barracks, I heard that Captain King was shot.

(The witness withdrew).

Sub-Inspector James Walter Raleigh.

Sub-Inspector Charles Carr sworn and examined.

Sub-Inspector Charles Carr.

17013. The Chief Commissioner.—Were you on duty here at the last election?—I was.

17014. How long have you been in the force?—Over eleven years.

17015. Have you had experience attending previous elections?—Yes.

17016. Where were you on the day of polling?—On that day I wasn't on duty until the evening.

17017. Did you see any of the rioting that day or evening?—I did not. I recollect seeing a large crowd and some stone throwing at a place in the town.

17018. Where is that?—Stokes's corner.

17019. At whom were they throwing stones?—At the police at the time.

17020. Were you part of the force they were pelting?—I was ordered to the men who were stationed there, and I drew up my men. The stone throwing ceased afterwards. I saw, while there, that one of my men was struck in the ankle with a stone.

17021. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Did you see any of the crowd with arms?—I did not.

17022. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Do you recollect the country people being in town some days before the election?—I do not. I would not know any of the country people.

17023. Did I understand you to say that you had no opportunity of observing whether there was rioting or not on the day of polling?—I hadn't.

17024. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Did the rioting appear to be more than usual?—The night I alluded to, I think the people were inclined to be riotous.

17025. Was it worse than you have seen in other places on similar occasions?—I don't think it was.

(The witness withdrew.)

Sub-Inspector William Edward O'Shea sworn and examined.

Sub-Inspector Wm. Edward O'Shea.

17026. The Chief Commissioner.—Were you on duty here while the trial of the election petition was going on at Carrick; when Thomas Brennan was brought to town by Captain Wynne?—I was.

17027. Had you your men drawn up at the railway station, in accordance with the instructions you received?—I had.

17028. How many men had you so drawn up?—Twenty men.

17029. Tell now what occurred on Brennan's arrival in town?—I went to receive him on his arrival from Carrick, and, with Mr. Wynne, I escorted him to his house, where he went for the purpose of searching for papers. We then went to the hotel, when some stones were thrown that struck Mr. Wynne. I ran up and asked Mr. Wynne if he was hurt, as I saw blood coming from his collar. We then went into the hotel, and Brennan was conveyed to a room, where he remained until next morning.

17030. Was there a large crowd on the platform on the arrival of the train?—There was. It was usual during the trial for an officer and a party of men to attend the arrival of the train, and a crowd used assemble there. There was a crowd on this occasion as usual.

17031. Did the crowd accompany the escort of Brennan into town?—It did.

17032. Where did the stone throwing begin?—It began opposite this court-house.

17033. How many stones were thrown?—About six.

(The witness withdrew.)

Mr. James Doherty sworn and examined.

Mr. James Doherty.

17034. The Chief Commissioner.—You have been many years living in Sligo, I believe?—Yes.

17035. Can you give us any information respecting what you saw, as to the rioting at the last election—and first of all, how long before the polling did you see any country people in the town?—For about two months before the election they were constantly coming in, but not in large numbers until about a fortnight or three weeks before the election.

17036. What was their conduct?—As a rule, it was rather orderly.

17037. Did you hear of, or see the wrecking of houses going on on the evening of the polling day?—I heard of it. I didn't witness it myself. I was aware that a good many houses were destroyed, and a good deal of them wrecked—rather the smaller houses, generally speaking. I know myself that that violence was intended to have a prospective effect—to show the country people that the people felt indignant at certain members of the Liberal party not having acted consistently.

17038. Do you think that when the country people wrecked, it was with the object of producing a moral effect on the election?—It was done by both country and town people. If we were not on the eve of the county election, you wouldn't have the same amount of property demolished—and that opinion has been indorsed by a good many more.

17039. You know a good number of the electors?—I think I do.

17040. In your opinion is there a certain class of electors that expect to be paid money after every election?—I know that a good number of people on both sides of the house would expect money.

17041. Is that from their own side?—Yes, but I can also safely say that of the good many of these people, who would expect money on either side, no sum of money would induce many to go to the contrary side.

17042. They expect to be "strengthened" on their own side?—Yes, but I don't think they look on it as bribery. I think they believe the candidate gives it in the shape of charity, for, as a rule, the better class of people act on principle. I think there is a disposition on both sides to act consistently.

17043. Did you know Mr. John Ball who was a candidate for the borough?—I did.

17044. Do you recollect his leaving Sligo, and not going on with his candidature?—I do. He left Sligo very precipitately.

17045. Do you know what was the cause of his

FIFTEENTH DAY.
October 22.
Mr. James Doherty.

rather sudden departure?—It was caused by exorbitant demands made on him by five or six voters who said they wouldn't vote unless they got large sums.

17046. Who were the men that made the demand, and what were the sums?—I don't know the men. My father seconded his nomination, and he was a good deal in his confidence. Mr. Ball left Sligo by the half-past three o'clock train on a Sunday, and he said that a few friends were to meet him at two. They met him, and he then stated that, in consequence of the exorbitant demand made on him, and the contest likely to be a sharp one, he wouldn't accede to the terms proposed, and he would rather retire altogether.

17047. What was the amount demanded of him did he say?—He didn't exactly state it, but it was very exorbitant.

17048. From the information you have what was it—was it over £1,000?—It was somewhere, I believe, between £700 and £1,000; but that is only a supposition.

17049. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—In what year was it Mr. Ball retired?—It was '58 or '59, I think, but I am not sure. Mr. Ball came to Sligo on three occasions—in '48, when he at first retired from the contest; he came to stand for the county on another occasion, and in '58 or '59 he came to stand for the borough again.

17050. Was that the time that Mr. Somers, and Mr. Wynne were candidates?—Yes, precisely. The Liberal party adopted Somers as a kind of last resource. Mr. Somers promised Mr. Ball his support; and they took him up at the eleventh hour.

17051. You know there were two elections at which Mr. Somers and Mr. Wynne went to the poll—Mr. Somers at the first was unseated, and in 1859 Mr. Wynne was successful by a large majority. Can you now fix at which of these two elections it was that Mr. Ball was a candidate?

17052. The Chief Commissioner.—It was 1853 election when the poll-books were tampered with?—That was the occasion, I think, that Somers was declared elected.

17053. Was that the election in which Mr. Ball left town?—I think so, but I am not quite sure.

17054. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Do you think you could fix the date, by looking at your accounts?—I know that Mr. Ball was here in '48 or '49; he came afterwards to stand for the county, and on the occasion I refer to, he was a candidate for the borough again.

17055. Have you any memorandum that would enable you to fix the date?—I may be able to do so during the day.

17056. Do you recollect who was his conducting agent on the last occasion on which he stood for the borough?—Mr. Valentine Dillon.

17057. You told us the impression on your mind was that there were a good many people on both sides, that expected to get money after every election, though they would not vote against their own side; is that impression derived from conversation with these persons?—It isn't personally, as I never had anything to do with the money transactions connected with the elections. The Liberal candidate nearly always stopped with us; and I was carefully advised by his friends not to have anything to do with money matters. I heard it by rumour that persons on both sides expected money, and I believe that that opinion is well founded.

17058. Have you heard it from conversing with the poorer class of voters, or from your general knowledge of elections?—I often heard it, and I believe it, with regard to the intimidation at the election time, I must say I can't agree with some of the witnesses who stated that on that occasion there was a great deal of violence. I was appointed a member of the vigilance committee, for the purpose of looking after the voters, and seeing that they wouldn't be carried away; and I have been out often up to three o'clock in the morning, and I assure you I never saw any violence, or heard any language that could be objected to. I was out the night before the election, and it was a remarkably quiet night.

17059. The Chief Commissioner.—You say you were a member of the vigilance committee?—Yes.

17060. The members were known by the name of Vigilance Committee?—Yes, they were.

17061. Had you anything to do with the payment of the watchers?—No; no money passed through my hands for the payment of the men employed to watch. I know nothing of the money that was paid in that or any other way.

17062. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Are you aware of mobs having got payment from Captain Flanagan himself?—I heard it stated here.

17063. Were you aware of the mobs having got refreshment?—I never heard it.

17064. Are you able to give us any information as to the organization or employment by the vigilance committee of mobs?—I think there was certainly a very strong expression of public opinion on the subject of the election, but I don't think there was any organization. The country people certainly took a very active interest in the election, but there was no organization. They acted under impulse, but I don't believe there was any desire to commit a breach of the law.

17065. Could you give us any approximate statement of the number of watchers that were employed?—There were a number of persons told off for the different parts of the town. Mr. O'Connor and Mr. M'Niffe were with me for part of a night. I was out for two nights. I was out on the night before the election, and it was a remarkably quiet night. I saw the people act, in my opinion, with great forbearance; and I saw movements made by the constabulary which, I thought, were calculated to provoke a breach of the peace.

17066. Could you give me any approximate statement as to how many watchers were employed—I mean the whole body of the mobs—to look after the voters?—The class of men who formed the vigilance committee didn't belong to the class of mobs; they were the respectable supporters of the Liberal candidate.

17067. I want to know the numbers of the mobs—how many were employed as watchers?

17068. The Chief Commissioner.—There was a sum of £180 paid to these men?—There was a number of men stationed in every street.

17069. Can you give the numbers?—I cannot.

(The witness withdrew.)

Head-Constable Michael Hannan.

Head-Constable Michael Hannan sworn and examined.

17070. The Chief Commissioner.—Were you the Head-Constable in Sligo at the last election?—I was.

17071. How long have you been Head-Constable?—Since '61, but not in Sligo.

17072. Have you experience of former elections?—Yes.

17073. Were you on duty on the polling day?—I was away in the court-house.

17074. What was the conduct of the mob, as far as you saw, that day?—They were violent enough. It was in the early part of the day that Captain King was shot accidentally.

17075. Did you see any of the wrecking in the evening?—I didn't. I was at Mrs. Brennan's house.

17076. Was there much injury done to it?—There wasn't a great deal of injury done to it. I visited several of the houses. I saw Larry Burke's house.

17077. Did you see nothing until after the violence occurred?—I heard of windows being broken.

17078. You were not present at any place where injury was done?—I wasn't.

17079. Was the violence unusual, in your opinion?—It was on the night of the poll.

17080. Was it greater than any you ever saw at any previous election?—It was.

17081. At what elections have you been?—I was at several in Galway.

17082. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Was there violence before the day of polling?—Not a great deal, except on Captain Flanagan's canvass. I was on duty that day, there was a large mob accompanied him, some windows were broken, and there was stone-throwing.

17083. Were there mobs generally some time before the election?—There were.

17084. But not much violence?—Not a great deal, only on one day there was a serious assault committed, the stabbing of a man named Leonard.

(The witness withdrew).

Head-Constable Michael Hannan.

Michael Kilmartin sworn and examined.

Michael Kilmartin.

17085. The Chief Commissioner.—Who did you vote for at the last election?—For Captain Flanagan.

17086. Did you vote for Sergeant Armstrong?—I did, sir.

17087. Did you get any money after that election?—I did, sir.

17088. How much?—£15.

17089. Was it from Mr. Poe you got the money?—Yes, sir.

17090. Did you know before that you were to get it, or who told you you were to go to Mr. Poe?—One Bryan Chrystal.

17091. Did you ever get any money before?—I did, sir.

17092. From whom?—From Mr. Ball.

17093. How much did you get from Mr. Ball?—I think £10 of an allowance of rent I got from the landlord.

17094. Who is your landlord?—Dr. Gibson.

17095. Under what circumstances were you allowed the £10 in your rent?—Bad times came in three or four years afterwards, and he allowed me £10, but not for promising my vote.

17096. Why did he allow the £10?—I could not tell. It was a long time after the election. Two or three years after the election.

17097. You know it was for the election?—I do not know. I could not say that.

17098. But why did you mention the £10 the landlord forgave you?—I got the £10 somewhere or other.

17099. Do you know perfectly well it was because you voted for Mr. Ball—do you remember who were the candidates on that occasion?—I do not.

17100. Had Mr. Ball canvassed you?—He had.

17101. And you promised to vote for him?—Yes, and the landlord wrote to me to vote for him.

17102. Did you ever get any other money?—Well, I did, sir.

17103. What other money?—Well, I voted for Colonel Townley, but I never got money.

17104. Did you ever vote for Mr. Sadleir?—I did, sir.

17105. How much did you get?—I did not get £15 all out.

17106. Who gave you that?—One Mr. Brennan.

17107. What is his Christian name?—Pat Brennan.

17108. When did he give it to you?—Oh, it was a long time after the election.

17109. Where did he give it to you?—Well, I was going by the house one morning when he gave it to me.

17110. Was anybody else paid at that time?—No, sir. I did not see anybody else paid but myself.

17111. Might there have been any other paid?—There might be for all I know—not that I know. That is all I mind.

17112. Who is your landlord now?—One Mrs. Burns.

17113. Would you take any money now if you got it for voting on your own side?—Of course if I got money I would not refuse it, but not for the vote.

17114. But you would take it, although not at the other side?—Yes, sir, I always voted for the Liberal side.

17115. Did you ever vote for Mr. Somers?—I did, sir.

17116. Did you ever get any money on Mr. Somers' side? Did Tom Ward ever give you any money?—Tom Ward never gave me money, but Brian M'Keown gave me some money.

17117. How much?—I think £5.

17118. At what election was that?—Well, I could not tell, sir. I voted, I think, all times for Mr. Somers—three or four times. He was a poor man, and I was told a collection was made for him.

17119. And you took £5 from him?—I took £5 from M'Keown.

17120. Where was it the money was given to you?—Well, after the election was over, he called me and gave me £5. He told me he thought it was as well to take it, because I was a poor man. We did not expect any money from Mr. Somers, because we were told he had no money.

17121. How long was that after the election?—I could not tell—I think it was not very long.

17122. Was he returned that time?—No, sir, I do not think he was. Mr. Wynne put him out that time.

17123. Mr. Wynne was returned that time?—That is my opinion.

17124. Then do you remember the year that was?—No, sir, I do not mind the year.

17125. Was that the election before Mr. Macdonogh was returned, when Mr. Wynne put him out?—I could not tell.

17126. Now, how did you know you were to get the £5?—Well, he was a neighbour, and he called me and told me he had got some money, and that there was a collection, and that for the loss of time for Mr. Somers I should get something.

17127. Is that neighbour of yours still here?—Yes, sir, he will be here.

17128. Where does he live?—He lives convenient to me—Brian M'Keown.

17129. Is he a rent-warner or bailiff, or an agent?—I do not know. He is not, sir.

17130. Is he a farmer?—He is.

17131. How did you ever hear that Tom Ward was giving any money for Mr. Somers?—I never heard of him giving a penny.

17132. We know he gave money to some people?—I heard it, but I did not see that he gave money to anyone.

17133. Well just try did you ever get another fiver besides that?—I voted twice for Colonel Townley but I never got one shilling of his money.

17134. You were very badly treated?—I was.

17135. Did you expect to get money from Colonel Townley?—I did not, because I was drinking whiskey the whole time, and I did not get any money.

17136. Where were you drinking the whiskey?—Backwards and forwards through town.

17137. Was the town flooded with whiskey?—No. I used to earn money selling drink.

17138. You did not pay for the whiskey at the election?—I did pay for it. I often paid more than I drank.

17139. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Did you say you got £10 and the rent. Did you get any money from Mr. Ball?—There were £10 got.

17140. Did you get any money in hand?—No, sir, I do not think I did. It was allowed in the rent.

17141. Is Pat Brennan alive still?—He is.

17142. Is he in Sligo?—He is.

17143. The Chief Commissioner.—What is he by occupation?—He is a merchant, sir.

(The witness then withdrew.)

FIFTEENTH DAY.

October 22.

Francis Tracy.

Francis Tracy, sworn and examined.

17144. The Chief Commissioner.—Who did you vote for at the last election?—For Captain Flanagan.

17145. Who did you vote for the election before that?—For Sergeant Armstrong.

17146. Did you get any money for voting for the Sergeant?—Yes, sir. I received some money.

17147. Was it £15?—£15.

17148. Did Mr. Foley give it to you?—Yes.

17149. Now, had Mr. Foley canvassed you before the election?—Well we were speaking before the election.

17150. Talking about how you would vote?—There was nothing about how I would vote but merely to go with the cause as I always went—every man in the court knows my views.

17151. Did you ever get any money before that?—I did, sir.

17152. Who gave it to you?—Bryan M'Keown after the election handed me £5.

17153. After the election?—Yes. I never expected it nor never asked it from any man in Sligo. I defy any man in Sligo, Liberal or Conservative to say I did.

17154. Was that after you voted for Mr. Somers?—Yes, sir.

17155. Was that the election at which Mr. Wynne put him out?—I cannot exactly say for I do not hold it in remembrance. I voted for him a few times. We always thought him poor.

17156. Did you ever get any other money?—I did from Mr. Gethins. I got £12 after Mr. Sadleir's election.

17157. How long was it after the election?—I cannot exactly say that, but I know it was after.

17158. Do you remember there was a petition against Mr. Sadleir, and Mr. Sadleir beat them on the petition?—Yes, I do, sir.

17159. Was it before or after the petition?—I cannot exactly say that.

17160. Were you in London to be examined as a witness?—No, sir, I was never a witness on any side, for I had no trouble with them.

17161. Did you ever get any other money?—I did not ever get any other money. These twenty years I am voting for them, but I never got any other money.

17162. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Before the last election was Michael Foley asking you about your vote?—No, only that we should be in the cause together. He is a man I know very well—a respectable honest man, and I have great trust and confidence in him.

17163. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Did you think any money might be going?—No, nothing of that kind. I never asked money of any man.

17164. But money was going before?—Before what.

17165. You got money at Sergeant Armstrong's election?—I did.

17166. You got money after Mr. Somers's election?—Yes, sir.

17167. You got money after Mr. Sadleir's election?—I did.

17168. Did you think there might be money going after Captain Flanagan's election if he got in?—I do not know. I did not hear any man saying there would be.

(The witness then withdrew.)

Edward Kelly.

Edward Kelly sworn and examined.

17169. The Chief Commissioner.—Do you know Mr. Woods?—I do.

17170. Did he ever make any offer to you about the election—the last election?—He did.

17171. What was the offer?—He brought me into the stable and asked me what I intended to do at this coming election. I said I did not know, that I was not canvassed by anyone since I got on the revision, and at that time some person in the street met me and told me there was £15 going for not going on the revision.

17172. Do you know his name?—Tondragh.

17173. Did you understand how much Mr. Woods offered you?—When he brought me into the stable he laid his hand on the partition between the horses, and said would twenty feet of mahogany repair this partition. I am generally in the habit of knowing the quantity. The number of feet would not enable me to give an answer, and then I said, "Is it superficial or cubic feet you want?"

17174. How much did you finally understand he offered you in pounds?—He offered me forty feet.

17175. Did you understand that it was about your vote?—I believed that the stable partition wanted no mahogany.

17176. You understood from him he was making an offer about your vote?—I understood that.

17177. Are you a Roman Catholic?—I am an Irish Catholic.

17178. Were you known to be on the Liberal side?—Well, I dare say I was.

17179. Now, was young Mr. Woods present at that conversation?—He was not present in the stable, but one day talking about the forty—the word forty was used in another part of the stable without reference to timber—we went into the shop and the junior Mr. Woods then joined us—that is, Joseph, and we had some conversation about it, and it appeared then the proposal was intended for the election.

17180. Tell me, did you agree to vote with him?—Well, I am just going to that in a few words.

17181. You must answer me, sir. Did you agree?—We agreed in a few minutes afterwards.

17182. At the time you agreed did you intend to vote for Major Knox?—It never entered my mind that I would vote for him. I was influenced in another way altogether.

17183. And you would not have voted for him?—I would not on any account.

17184. After these conversations did you tell them to anyone before you voted?—I told them to my brother.

17185. Had he a vote?—He had not.

17186. Would you not take any money from the other side and vote?—No, I think not on that occasion.

17187. But would you take money for your vote?—I would not.

17188. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—What did young Mr. Woods say to you when he came in?—He told me that the stuff would be put into a small box, and I was surprised at that expression that fifty cubic feet of mohogany would be put into a small box, and sent with me to Dublin—that I was to go to Dublin with it.

17189. Was anything else said?—He said I could not doubt his father's word, that he always paid me in any engagement that existed between us; so I stated that I was not prepared to spend a night in the city, and Mr. Woods said anything I wanted he would find me in. Mr. Phibbs came in at the conversation when it was said forty, and said he was only authorized to give forty. He turned into the office and Mr. Woods said, "Wait now, I will soon know if I can give any more." In a few moments he came out and said, "You have £50 to get, and you must be off to-night."

17190. Did anything else occur between you?—Some days afterwards I was passing Mr. Green's yard, and Mr. Woods called me in and reproached me for not accepting the offer. I said I did not expect offers at election times, but I said from a placard that I saw up they could not offer anything. He told me I would get twenty-eight shillings a week in Dublin.

17191. Did you never accept the offer?—I gave them to understand I would. I took myself off, and when I went out I treated them as the raven did Noah—I did not go back to them.

(The witness was directed to stand down.)

Felix Farrell sworn and examined. Felix Farrell.

17192. The Chief Commissioner.—Were you an elector at the last election?—I was, sir.

17193. Was that the first time you ever had a vote?—It was.

17194. Do you remember the time of the revision?—I do.

17195. Did anyone offer you any money not to be registered?—No, sir; no one did.

17196. Did anyone offer you any money to go away?—Yes.

17197. Who?—John Derry.

17198. Which is he?—A farmer.

17199. What did he offer you?—He asked me to take £3 a day for ten days until the election would be over.

17200. Was Derry in Carrick to be examined at the petition?—He was.

17201. Now, did anyone else offer you anything or ask you about your vote? Do you know a man named David Frizelle?—I do.

17202. Did he speak to you about your vote at Buchanan's hotel?—He did, sir.

17203. What did he say?—He began to speak to me about the election, to know if I would vote for him, and I told him I did not know, and he began to make an arrangement with me—to know if I would make thirty-five kegs for him at £1 each.

17204. Are you a cooper?—I am.

17205. Well, is that the usual price?—What is the ordinary price of a keg?—Oh, it is far less than that.

17206. Did you understand what he meant—that he was asking about your vote?—I understand it must be something about my vote.

17207. What did you say?—I borrowed £10 from him until the next morning, and I did not go near him. I kept away from him.

17208. Did anybody else offer you money?—Yes.

17209. Who?—A man named John Conaghan.

17210. What did he offer you?—He told me to go with him and I would get £20 in hand.

17211. To whom were you to go to get the £20?—Well, I do not exactly mind now.

17212. Was it to Mr. Stokes?—No, sir, it was not.

17213. Was it to any hotel?—No, sir, it was not. I do not remember that he mentioned any name, but to come with me. I do not remember anything else.

17214. Is Conaghan still here?—He is.

17215. Conaghan is in your trade?—He is.

17216. Was anyone present when you had the talk either with David Frizelle or John Conaghan?—There was one man present at the time I had the conversation with Frizelle in Mr. Buchanan's. He was a friend of my own, and had a vote for the county; and at the time he came down for me to go up that a friend wanted to see me. I thought it was this man wanted to see me. He was of the name of Connor.

17217. Was he the man who had the vote for the county?—Yes, sir.

17218. What is his name?—Pat Connor.

17219. How far does he live out of Sligo?—About four miles. He is in the asylum now.

17220. Did anybody else offer you anything?—I do not remember anyone else.

17221. What did you say to Conaghan's offer of £20 in hand?—I told him I would not go. I told him I had a weak family depending upon me for support, and it would not do for the public to be against me, and I would not go with him. He told me I was a fool.

17222. Was there anyone else making a set upon you to try and get you to vote for Major Knox?—No, I do not remember any more.

17223. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Did you vote for Captain Flanagan?—I did sir.

17224. Did you ever vote before?—I never had a vote before.

17225. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Were you examined at the Carrick petition?—I was, sir.

17226. Before the trial did you give your evidence to Mr. Molony?—I gave no evidence to him until I was subpœnaed at Carrick, and then I was sent for by a clerk of Mr. Molony's, who brought me into Mr. Molony's office, and told me to tell him what I knew about the petition, and I told him I would not give any information about it; that I did not want my name to be published in anything of the sort.

17227. And you did not tell him what you told us?—No, I did not. I told the clerk.

17228. Do you swear you told the clerk all you told us?—I did, certainly, when he told me I must give it down; that I might as well give it to him as give it in Carrick, that I "bet" to do it. And when my evidence was going to be taken in Carrick about Frizelle, I was asked could I give any information, and I said not.

(The witness then withdrew.)

Bryan M'Keown sworn and examined. Bryan M'Keown.

17229. The Chief Commissioner.—Where do you live?—In Cornageehy.

17230. On whose estate is that?—Colonel Barrett's.

17231. Were you a friend of Mr. Somers?—Yes, sir, I voted for him twice, and I do not know whether I voted the third time or not.

17232. Do you know Kilmartin and Tracy?—Yes.

17233. You gave them £5 each?—Yes.

17234. Who gave you that money?—Tom Ward.

17235. How much money did Tom Ward give you altogether?—He gave me £25 at that time.

17236. And at another time?—At another time £5 more.

17237. That is £30?—Yes. He was not aware he gave me the £30 until he refreshed his memory after he was examined.

17238. Then he forgot to tell us that when he was up here?—It is a long time ago, and I nearly forgot it myself.

17239. Who were the six men you paid?—He gave me £25 for five votes, and he named them.

17240. Name them to us?—John Jennings, Francis Tracy, Teddy Boyle, Michael Kilmartin, and I forget the other. I think it was John O'Brien, whose sister I paid.

17241. Well, Ward has told us of these men. I thought you meant another case. Do you know of any other men having been paid by Ward, but these men?—He told me to give that to those men, and added, "you can get your own £5," so I got it in a few days afterwards.

17242. Now, did you ever pay any other money?—Never, sir.

17243. Was that the election when Mr. Somers was beaten by Mr. Wynne?—Well, sir, I mostly forget, but I think he contested with Mr. Wynne twice, and I think it was the time he beat Mr. Wynne, but I could not swear.

17244. Now, did you know of any other people being paid besides these?—No, sir.

17245. Or hear about it?—I might from hearsay.

17246. Was £5 the money Mr. Somers paid each?—I do not know.

17247. How did you get the money?—It came upon me unawares. Ward came to me and said, "here's £25," but I said I did not expect it, Mr. Somers being so poor a man.

17248. Was that the day before the election?—It was, sir.

17249. Before the polling?—Yes, on the morning of the polling, I could not say.

17250. What hour did you vote that day?—About

FIFTEENTH DAY.

October 22.

Bryan M'Keown.

eleven o'clock, or it might be earlier, for I generally vote early.

17251. Did you ever get any other money?—Well, I did, sir, at other elections.

17252. Now, go on. Did Mr. Somers ever pay you besides that?—No, I never got from Mr. Somers besides that.

17253. Did Colonel Townley ever pay you?—I believe I got some money through him.

17254. How much?—I voted for him twice.

17255. How much each time?—Seven pounds ten after the first election, about twelve months after.

17256. And how much after the second?—I think I got £10 again, about twelve months after the second election.

17257. Was that after the petition?—Yes, sir.

17258. Who gave you the £10?—Attorney Gethins.

17259. And who gave you the £7 10*s.*?—Jeremiah Joyce O'Donovan.

17260. Did you vote for John Sadleir?—No, sir; I had no vote at that time. I removed from where I was to where I am now.

17261. Did you ever get any money before that?—I believe I got some money on Mr. Ball's account.

17262. Who paid you for Mr. Ball?—A merchant of this town, John Hart.

17263. How much?—Ten pounds. Hart is dead.

17264. Where did Hart pay you?—I think in his own house.

17265. Were any other voters getting money along with you?—Yes, he sent me out for a voter named Joseph Hudson.

17266. To get his £10?—Yes.

17267. Who else did he send you for?—No more.

17268. Who else amongst your neighbours got £10 at that time?—I could not tell, for I was not present when they got it.

17269. Did you not know of other people being paid as well as yourself?—No more than from hearsay.

17270. Go on with hearsay. Who was paid besides you and Hudson?—Michael Kilmartin, Ted Boyle, Francis Tracy, and John O'Brien. I cannot say more.

17271. Did you ever get any other money before that?—No, not before that, but after that.

17272. Come down to recent times?—I voted for Sergeant Armstrong, and I got £15 in the month of April, after the election.

17273. Who paid it to you?—Michael Foley.

17274. Who else got money then from Mr. Foley?—All I could know was, I saw two men coming down stairs from Pat Brennan's house, and they told me they each got it—one Leonard, and the other Gethin, of Radcliffe-street. They told me they got £20.

17275. You only got £15?—That is all, sir.

17276. Do you know why you only got £15?—No, sir.

17277. Was the only man you voted for without being paid, Mr. Somers?—Yes, sir. I got £5 at one of Mr. Somers' elections.

17278. If any money is going now on Captain Flanagan's side will you take it?—Begad I never refuse it any time I may be offered it after the election, but I never looked for it.

17279. But I suppose you would not vote against your own side?—I never did.

17280. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Are you sure it was from Foley you got the £15?—I am, sir. He and Pat Brennan were in the room, and Foley handed it to me.

17281. The Chief Commissioner.—Pat Brennan was in the room?—Yes, sir. I really think it was Foley handed me the money.

(The witness then withdrew.)

Thomas Devins.

Thomas Devins sworn and examined.

17282. The Chief Commissioner.—What is your occupation?—A farmer, sir.

17283. Where do you live?—At Roshine.

17284. Is there a James Devins?—There is.

17285. Had you a vote at the time of Sergeant Armstrong's election?—I had, sir.

17286. Did you vote for the Sergeant?—I did.

17287. Did you get any money after that?—I did.

17288. How much?—Fifteen pounds. I got £9 5*s.* 8*d.*, a half year's rent.

17289. Who is your landlord?—Colonel Tennison.

17290. Who is the agent stopped it?—Mr. Poe.

17291. Did any other of the Tennison tenants get £15 except yourself?—They did, sir.

17292. How many of them?—Three more.

17293. Who?—Bernard M'Donagh and Peter Hart. James Hart had no vote, but he got £5.

17294. Why did he get the £5?—Because if he had a vote he would give it to them.

17295. How did you know you were to get the £15?—I did not know it until after the election.

17296. Did you ever get any other money after the election?—No, sir.

17297. Or before the election?—No, sir.

17298. Any other election money? Tell us as the others have been telling us?—No, sir.

17299. Did you vote for Colonel Townley?—No, sir, that was the first vote I ever had.

17300. Now had you anything to say to mobs at the last election?—No, sir.

17301. Did Mr. Moloney give you any money?—No.

17302. Is James Devins your brother?—He is.

17303. Was he the man who had the management of the mobs?—I cannot say.

17304. Were you yourself paid anything?—I got £6 or £7 to give people a drink.

17305. Is that all you got?—That is all.

17306. Who gave it to you?—I cannot rightly mind. I think it was a boy named Gahagan handed it to me.

17307. How many men were you to give the drink to?—Any man I knew was to get it.

17308. Did you keep an account of the men you were to give it to?—I did not.

17309. Where did they spend the money?—I do not know where they spent it. I gave some of them drink and some of them a few shillings.

17310. Who else got money?—Well, I cannot rightly say, sir, who got it.

17311. But you can give a guess at it? Where was the money given to you? Was it given to you in one sum?—It was not.

17312. Was it given to you during the three or four days before the polling?—About that time, sir.

17313. Where did the boys sleep that you gave the money to? What houses were there for the country people to sleep in?—No certain houses. They slept at home.

17314. Do you mean the Garvagh boys slept at home?—I gave it to none of these.

17315. What boys did you give it to?—To my own neighbours.

17316. Tell me who you gave it to?—Frank M'Guinness, Roger Finan, John M'Keown, Thomas Hayitan; £1 5*s.* one time, and 15*s.* another time.

17317. Did you give any money at Tom Ward's?—No, sir.

17318. Did you give any money at any public-house? Did you give an order?—I did so in Mrs. Kelly's one night, £1, and I went in to stop it again, and I only allowed her to give 10*s.*

17319. Where else did you give an order?—No other place.

17320. Will you tell now how much of the money you gave these people?—Some of them 6*s.*, some of them 5*s.* 6*d.*, and some of them 4*s.* 6*d.* a day. It was not by the day though, but because they were neighbours I gave them as I got it.

17321. What were these people doing for that?—Some of them were at their work, and some of them in town, and just as I got it I thought it better to give it to them than to keep it myself.

17322. Was that all the money passed through your hands?—Yes, £6 10*s.* or £7.

17323. It might be £7 10*s.*?—No.

17324. Where was it you got the money? Where was the money paid to you?—Well, in Tom Ward's tap-room I got some of it.

17325. Who gave it to you?—A boy named Gahagan.

17326. Was Tom Ward there?—No.

17327. How many of you drank there?—I was not drinking any myself.

17328. Were you a teetotaler then?—I was.

17329. How long were you a teetotaler?—About four months before the election.

17330. You did not become a teetotaler because the election was coming on?—I did not.

17332. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Who gave you the £15 from Sergeant Armstrong?—Mr. Poe.

17333. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Did you know of any other money being given at the same time for mobs on Captain Flanagan's side?—No, sir. I heard there was money given, but this was part of it.

17334. Who did you hear got the money?—I heard my brother got some and a man named Gilgan.

17335. Was there anybody else?—No, sir.

17336. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Do you mean your brother James?—Yes, and I heard Henry Dignam got it.

17337. Anybody else?—Not that I know of.

17338. Try and think—did you not hear of some others besides?—No, sir, I did not.

17339. Now is there no other name you can remember of persons who got money for the mobs?—No, sir; I do not know of any.

17340. Did you know of the damage being done on the night of the polling to any of the houses in the town?—I saw them breaking, sir. I saw one house breaking.

17341. Were there any crowbars or implements of that description used for the purpose of breaking the houses?—No, sir; not that I saw. I was sitting on O'Hara's window, and I saw Gethins' house broken, I think, with stones. I did not see any crowbars.

17342. Was there any more damage done to Gethins' house than the smashing of the windows?—I saw some boxes of sweets thrown out into the street.

17343. Was there any injury done to the walls of the house?—Were they torn down?—No.

17344. Was there anything more than the smashing of the windows, and the damage done to the boxes?—Well, I did not go too close to it. I did not go near for fear———

17345. Did you see any other houses attacked?—I did. I was going up the street, and I saw Larry Burke's house attacked as I was passing by, and I saw a nephew of his inside, and the stones being thrown, and I passed on and I saw no more.

17346. Did you go away before you saw the mischief done?—I did, sir; I would not stand by.

17347. Did you see any other houses wrecked?—No, sir; I do not know of any other.

17348. Are you quite sure?—I am certain sure.

17349. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—You voted for Captain Flanagan?—I did, sir.

17350. Did you expect any money?—No.

17351. You did not think it might be going?—No.

(The witness then withdrew.)

Michael Kilcullen.

Michael Kilcullen sworn and examined.

17352. The Chief Commissioner.—Are you an elector?—No, sir; I am a non-elector.

17353. Did you get any money from Gray?—No.

17354. Did you get any money at the last election at all?—I did.

17355. From whom?—From Patrick Kilcullen.

17356. How much?—About seven or eight shillings.

17357. What for?—For watching voters.

17358. On whose side?—On Captain Flanagan's.

17359. How long were you employed in that?—I used to be out occasionally backwards and forwards. I was out two nights before the polling.

17360. Who is Patrick Kilcullen?—My brother.

17361. How many other men did he pay besides you?—I do not know.

17362. Is he an elector?—No.

17363. How many men used to be with you?—Well, the night I was out there were three more and myself.

17364. Who were you watching?—Down Knox-street.

17365. Were you watching any particular voter?—Yes, Derham; he might have been made away with.

17366. Was that all the money you got?—That was all.

17367. Was there any place where you got drink?—I got no drink, but what I paid for.

17368. Was there any public-house in which you got drink without paying for it?—No.

17369. Did you drink in Tom Ward's?—I did.

17370. Did you pay for what you got there?—I did. I did not go out very often as I had my work to mind.

17371. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Had you ever a vote?—No.

17372. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Did you get any money from Brennan for Major Knox?—No, sir; and would not take it either.

17373. Is your father a voter?—No, sir; he is dead.

(The witness then withdrew.)

James Tonry.

James Tonry sworn and examined.

17374. The Chief Commissioner.—Did you vote at the last election?—I did, sir.

17375. For whom?—For Major Knox.

17376. Where were you on the day of the polling?—I was in the town.

17377. In whose house?—In Mr. O'Farrell's.

17378. Why did you go there?—I went there for protection. My house was threatened, and I left it.

17379. Threatened by whom?—I do not know.

17380. Are you a Protestant or a Roman Catholic?—A Roman Catholic.

17381. Did you ever vote before?—Yes.

17382. For Sergeant Armstrong?—No, sir. For Mr. Somers.

17383. Did you get any money for your vote then?—Never.

17384. And you voted then for Mr. Somers?—Yes, sir.

17385. Were you a member of the Liberal party here?—No.

17386. Did you think Mr. Somers was a Conservative?—He was on the Conservative side that time.

17387. Now, did anyone make any offer of money at the last election?—Never.

FIFTEENTH DAY.

October 22.

James Tonry

17388. Did you pay for what you had at O'Farrell's?—I did not pay yet. I am to pay it; I am doing work for him.

17389. What trade are you?—A carpenter.

17390. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—When did you go to O'Farrell's?—Three or four days before the poll.

17391. And did you stop there until after the polling?—I did.

17392. Did you leave the house at all?—Not until I came to the poll.

17393. Did anybody tell you to go to O'Farrell's?—No.

17394. It was from your own idea?—It was.

17395. Had anybody threatened you?—No, sir; I was neither threatened before or after except the house being attacked.

17396. When was that?—The night before the poll.

17397. You have told us you went three or four nights before the poll to O'Farrell's?—Yes, but it was the night before the poll the windows were broken.

17398. What took you to O'Farrell's?—I went for my own safety.

17399. But nobody had threatened you?—No.

17400. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Are your customers or employers on the Conservative side?—Yes, sir. It is for them I am generally working these thirty years.

17401. Had any of them asked you for your vote for Major Knox?—No, sir.

17402. Were you afraid of losing your custom if you voted against him?—Well, I was not afraid.

(The witness then withdrew.)

Patrick Jordan.

Patrick Jordan sworn and examined.

17403. The Chief Commissioner.—Are you an elector?—Yes, I voted the last time.

17404. Who did you vote for?—For Captain Flanagan.

17405. Did you vote for Sergeant Armstrong?—No, sir: I had not a vote at that time.

17406. Was the last time the first time you had a vote?—It was, sir.

17407. Do you know Thomas Brennan?—I do.

17408. Did he ever give you any order?—Well, he did.

17409. For how much?—£3 or £4. He did not give me the order at once. He came twice and told me to get a certain thing done, and gave me £1 for drink.

17410. Is there another Patrick Jordan in the town?—Not that I know.

17411. Did you get any money for Sergeant Armstrong's election?—No, sir.

17412. You say you had not a vote?—I had not, sir. (The witness saw the Chief Commissioner looking at a book, and added)—You will not take that out of the book; for it is not me who got the £15. I got no money at all.

17413. Who got the £15?—I do not know.

17414. Are you aware it was said Patrick Jordan got £15 after the election?—I am the only one in the town, and I got no money at all.

17415. Is there a Martin Jordan?—There is, a father of mine.

17416. Do you know he got money?—I do not, sir. I heard he got money, but I do not know.

17417. How much?—Well, I do not recollect now.

17418. What is your business?—A grocer and publican.

17419. When did Tom Brennan give you the order for the £4?—It was before the election.

17420. How long?—It was a month or so.

17421. Whose mob was that for?—The mob he supported himself—Captain Knox's mob.

17422. How many of them got the drink?—Several of them. I do not recollect how many.

17423. Were there twenty?—I suppose there were.

17424. Was it all on one evening you gave them the drink?—It was not. It was on two, or three, or four occasions.

17425. Did he pay you the £4 in one sum?—I never got one penny of it. I took his word for it as a neighbour.

17426. You never got it?—No.

17427. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—What is your father by trade?—He is a farmer.

17428. What size farm does he hold?—I suppose ten or twelve acres.

(The witness then withdrew.)

Denis Rooney.

Denis Rooney sworn and examined.

17429. The Chief Commissioner.—Had you a vote at the last election?—Yes, sir.

17430. Who did you vote for?—For Captain Flanagan.

17431. Had you a vote at Sergeant Armstrong's election?—Yes.

17432. Did you vote for the Sergeant?—I did, sir.

17433. After that did you get any money?—I did.

17434. How much?—£10.

17435. Was that from Mr. Phillips?—Yes.

17436. Was that all you got?—That was all.

17437. What are you by occupation?—A shopkeeper.

17438. Did you ever get any money before?—Never.

17439. Had you a vote at the previous election?—Yes.

17440. Did you vote for Mr. Somers?—I did.

17441. Against Mr. Wynne?—I could not say exactly.

17442. Did you vote for Colonel Townley?—No.

17443. Or John Sadlier?—I did.

17444. Were you offered money after that election?—Never.

17445. If any money happens to be going now will you take it?—Money is very tempting.

17446. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Was the £10 given you in cash by Mr. Phillips?—It was.

(The witness withdrew.)

Valentine Dillon.

Valentine Dillon sworn and examined.

[This gentleman was engaged professionally in an adjoining court, and the Commissioners hearing that he was there requested his attendance.]

17447. The Chief Commissioner.—Were you conducting agent in 1859 or 1857 for Mr. Ball?—In 1857 or 1859, I cannot remember now which, in either of the two years I came down with Mr. Ball to Sligo. I did not intend to come down to act as his conducting agent. If he had gone to an election it was my intention to have employed a local conducting agent.

17448. Could you not fix whether it was in 1857 or 1859?—The "Directory" will at once inform you of it.

17449. In 1857 Mr. Somers was returned, and the election was set aside on petition on the ground of books having been tampered with. That was in 1857?—Yes. Who was the other candidate?

17450. Mr. Wynne. In 1859 Mr. Wynne beat Mr.

Somers at the election by a large majority, and I want to know does that refresh your memory?—I imagine as well as I can now recollect that it must have been after the litigation out of which the poll books were set aside that I came down with Mr. Ball.

17451. So I suppose. Do you know anything in connexion with Mr. Ball then giving up the election and leaving the town?—No, I do not know of my own knowledge anything connected with it.

17452. We have it in evidence that it was in consequence of some voters on the Liberal side demanding a large sum—£700 or £1,000—for their votes?—So his brother told me at the time.

17453. Some six or seven voters?—Some few men demanded a large sum of money.

17454. From all you know of the election you supposed that to be true?—Yes, perfectly true. Personally I had no knowledge of it.

17455. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—You are certain now it must have been in 1859?—I only form that opinion from what I now recollect; but I think I was the person concerned in some prosecutions that were instituted against the then mayor of Sligo. There was litigation carried on to a large extent against him, and I was concerned in that ligitation, and I think it was out of that ligitation the circumstance arose that induced Mr. Ball and myself to come together—at least I think so. If I had any idea of being examined I could have brought assistance.

Valentine Dillon.

17456. The Chief Commissioner.—Your name has been only mentioned to-day.

17457. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Were you more than once with Mr. Ball?—Only on the one occasion.

17458. You know nothing about this demand for this sum of money, except what you have just told us, that you heard it from Mr. Ball's brother?—No.

17459. And did you hear the sum mentioned?—No. The brother was down at the time managing. He was the person who would do anything in connexion with money affairs.

17460. Had Mr. Ball addressed the electors?—I think he had.

17461. Was it previous to or after the nomination he left town?—I do not think he went to a nomination on that occasion. I do not think he waited for the nomination day.

17462. Do you recollect how soon before the nomination day he left?—I think it was only a day or two. That is my recollection now.

(The witness then withdrew).

John Henry sworn and examined.

John Henry.

17463. The Chief Commissioner.—Had you a vote at the last election?—I had.

17464. Who did you vote for?—For Captain Flanagan.

17465. Had you ever a vote before?—Never.

17466. How much were you rated at?—£8.

17467. Now were you at Mrs. Hall's?—I was.

17468. Who told you to go in there?—I was generally employed in this place—in Mrs. Hall's—with the grand jury.

17469. Are you a Catholic or a Protestant?—A Catholic, sir.

17470. Were you in Mrs. Hall's the day before the election?—The day before the election I was in the house.

17471. Did you stay there the night before the polling?—No, sir. I never slept in Mrs. Hall's.

17472. Did anybody offer you anything for voting for Major Knox?—When I went, Mr. Cherry and some strange gentleman were in, and the gentleman came down stairs, and I was in the front-room parlour. Mrs. Cherry and Mrs. Hall were in it. Mr. Cherry wanted me to stop in Mrs. Hall's, and not to go out of the premises. I was inclined to go out, and I said I would not stop out of my own house.

17473. Did Mr. Cherry make you any offer?—He said he would hand me a recompense the same as the other men.

17474. Was any money mentioned?—He never mentioned any money to me. Mrs. Hall said if I would stop inside and render her assistance in the court, she would pay me.

17475. Did anybody else offer you any money?—Mr. Petrie did; £30 in my own house.

17476. Did he offer it to you more than once?—He offered it to me twice—in his own office.

17477. What was the £30 for?—To quit the place, and not to vote.

17478. Did you agree to take it?—No.

17479. Would you take it?—No.

17480. Did you refuse it?—No, sir. I kept my mind to myself all through.

17481. Did Leonard get £5?—I heard he did, but I did not see it.

17482. Who did he get that from?—From Major Knox.

17483. Who did you hear he got the £5 from?—From Major Knox.

17484. Do you mean from Major Knox himself?—Yes; he got £5 the night before the election to bring me, when he heard I was housed in Mrs. Hall's.

17485. What was the occasion of Mr. Petrie coming to you?—I will tell you what he has told me. He told me moreover what interest he had in Major Knox.

17486. When did he come to you?—He came frequently for three months before the election.

17487. When did he make you the offer of £30?—About three weeks before the election; and then when I saw the election coming to a close, for fear I would be processed for the barrel of herrings, I went down to ask for some law, and brought 8*s.* Mr. Petrie brought me in, and sitting down alongside of me said, "Have you your mind made up?" and I said "No." "I hear," said I, "that the Major is going to get me back my pension;" and he said, "That is the thing he can do for you." He said, "I will stand you the £30, but I wish to keep everything dark, and not to show the public what interest I take in the matter." With that there was a man named Doherty coming in, and he said, "You can go away." Doherty did not hear what the man was saying to me. He said he was three years successively with Colonel White over the salmon fishery, and he said he would give me £30, because he would like to return Major Knox.

17488. Who did you get the money from?—From Bryan Chrystal.

(The witness then withdrew.)

Patrick M'Clean sworn and examined.

Patrick M'Clean.

17489. The Chief Commissioner.—Did you vote at the last election?—Yes, sir.

17490. Who did you vote for?—For Captain Flanagan.

17491. Did you vote at the election before that?—Yes.

17492. For Sergeant Armstrong?—Yes.

17493. Did you get any money after that?—Yes.

17494. How much?—Twenty pounds.

17495. Did you know that was for your vote?—No, sir, I did not.

17496. Did you know you got it because you had voted?—No, sir, I did not know. I voted for Sergeant Armstrong, and I did not expect one penny.

FIFTEENTH DAY.

October 22.

Patrick M'Clean.

17497. Do you think you would have got one shilling if you had not voted?—I do not think I would.

17498. Did you ever get any money before?—No, sir. I never had a vote before.

17499. Did you vote at the last election for Captain Flanagan, honestly?—I did, sir.

17500. What is your business?—A butter and egg merchant.

17501. Do you deal with the country people?—Yes

17502. Did you see many country people in town?—Yes.

17503. Did you know of any money going for their support?—No, sir; I did not. I was occupied with my own business.

(The witness then withdrew.)

James Devins

James Devins sworn and examined.

17504. The Chief Commissioner.—Are you an elector?—No, sir.

17505. Your brother who has been examined is an elector?—Yes.

17506. Is your father an elector?—My father is dead.

17507. Did Mr. Molony give you any money at the last election?—He did.

17508. How much?—About £105 odd.

17509. What was that money for?—Well, he did not tell me what it was for.

17510. That is a little strong. Do you mean to say you did not know what it was for?—I partly understood it was for paying non-electors.

17511. You may as well tell all about it. Mr. Molony has told his story with perfect truth. Did you keep any account of that money?—No, sir.

17512. Did you keep any of it for yourself?—I did.

17513. How much?—I kept £4.

17514. To whom did you give the rest of the money?—I divided none of it. I gave it up to a man named John Gahagan who divided it. It was given I understand for the boys of the town to watch voters, and I did not know the parties rightly entitled to get it, as I lived out of the town, and I understood he knew better than I did. I gave it to him and I had nothing to do with it but the £4 I kept for myself.

17515. You know Tom Ward?—I do.

17516. Was any of the money spent there?—Well, indeed there might be.

17517. Do not use the word might to me. Were the boys drinking there?—Well, I did not see them drinking, or I did not know what money they were drinking. It was drunk in every place where they thought proper.

17518. Do you remember the Sunday before the election?—I do, sir.

17519. The election was on the Thursday?—Yes, sir.

17520. You remember the Sunday?—Yes.

17521. Did you get the whole of that money between the Sunday and the day of the polling?—No, sir.

17522. How much before the Sunday?—I am not sure, sir.

17523. Were you a teetotaler at the last election like your brother?—I drunk none over two glasses in the day.

17524. I mean you kept yourself sober on purpose at the election?—I did, sir.

17525. How many men was the £105 given amongst?—I could not tell.

17526. Why did Gahagan know better than you?—Because he lived in the town and I lived outside of it.

17527. Why did Mr. Molony give you the money?—He thought I would deal fair with it.

17528. And account honestly for it?—I suppose so.

17529. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Were you with any of the country people before the election?—No, sir. There were country people and townspeople of course, in the town at the time.

17530. You know what I mean—were there mobs about. Do you swear you were in none of the mobs?—Indeed I was, sir, in and out of them.

17531. Were you at the head of any of the mobs that were shouting for Flanagan?—I do not think I shouted twice for Flanagan at the election, and I do not know that I did at all.

17532. Were you at the head of any of the mobs on the day Captain King was shot?—I might have been in some of them.

17533. Were you in the front of them?—I could not say what part of them I was in.

17534. Did anybody tell you what you were to do? Did you get any instructions?—Well, I did, sir, to send parties to watch certain places where there were houses of voters.

17535. And what were you to do when you were watching?—Not to let the people be brought away by any other party.

17536. Who did you get instructions to watch? Did you get instructions to watch Gethins?—No.

17537. Who did you get instructions to watch?—There was some man in James's-street I was told to have an eye to, and about Mrs. Hall's place.

17538. What were you to do if anyone came out?—To report it, sir.

17539. Were you to do nothing else?—No.

17540. Not to catch hold of them?—No, sir. We were not authorised to catch hold of anyone.

17541. What else were you to do besides watching these people?—Nothing else.

17542. To do nothing during the day time?—No, sir, but to keep the streets, and have an eye about.

17543. About what?—About the voters, and see if any of them were going about the town, or if anybody interfered with them.

17544. What were you to do if you saw them?—To prevent them if we could, and stop them.

17545. Who told you to stop them?—I cannot tell.

17546. I believe you can say if you like?—No, sir, I cannot.

17547. Who gave the instructions, now?—I cannot tell, sir.

17548. Is it that you will not tell?—I cannot tell.

17549. Try and recollect the name of the voter in James's-street?—I cannot.

17550. Were you ever authorised to watch James M'Mullen?—No, sir.

17551. Or Peter Harrison?—No.

17552. You must have been ordered to watch more than one?—There was a man named Middleton down at the quay.

17553. Were you to watch him?—Yes.

17554. Did he vote?—I do not know, sir, how he voted.

17555. Did you hear?—Well, I think he did not vote.

17556. Well, who else?—I cannot remember anybody else.

(The witness then withdrew.)

Daniel Gillan.

Daniel Gillan sworn and examined.

17557. The Chief Commissioner.—Are you an elector?—I am not, sir.

17558. Did Mr. Molony give you any money at the last election?—He did.

17559. How much?—Forty-five pounds.

17560. Whom did you give that money to?—I distributed it myself, and two or three men more, to between forty and fifty people.

17561. What is your business or occupation?—I am a butcher and dealer.

17562. Did you know these people you were giving the money to?—I did, everyone.

17563. Were they townspeople?—All townspeople, sir.

17564. Did you open any account at any public-house for these people?—Not one shilling.

17565. Did you give the whole of that money to the mobsmen themselves?—Every shilling, sir. There were four or five parties along with me used to take so much of it, and forty or fifty people used to get it every night. Some of them got 15*s.*

17566. What were these people employed for?—To watch houses. I had eight or ten on James-street every night to watch voters.

17567. Will you tell me the names of the voters?—Peter Cunningham in James-street.

17568. Did he vote?—I do not know, sir. There were parties in tampering with him.

17569. Who were the parties tampering with him?—I heard that young Mr. Gilmor was there.

17570. What is his Christian name?—John Gilmor. There was another party there that Mr. Molony told me was going about the town with Mr. Petrie, and he ordered us, in fact, to go in and not allow him to be tampered with.

17571. Who else?—There was another man named Thomas Middleton, on the Quay. We were told he was being tampered with.

17572. Did he vote?—I think not.

17573. Did you leave a party to watch him?—Yes, sir.

17574. Used they to be up all night?—Every night for four or five nights.

17575. Who else?—There was another man in Grafton-street that myself and another man were told to watch Mr. Petrie going into, and that was Edward Gethins'. That is all I can remember at the present time.

17576. He did not pay forty or fifty men to watch these three?—No, sir; there were ten or twelve left every night in Gaol-street.

17577. About what time did you pay these men?—Four or five days before the election.

17578. Did you pay any on the polling day?—Not one shilling; it was two days before the polling day.

17579. How many men altogether did you pay?—About forty or fifty each night, to the best of my recollection.

17580. Did you give any of that money to electors?—No, sir.

17581. Are you positive about that?—Certainly, sir.

17582. Were you told not?—Certainly, sir.

17583. Who told you not?—Mr. Molony told me not to give one shilling to an elector. I used to make out a slip of paper every night, and I never had an elector on the list.

17584. Who were on the list?—There were two or three Byrnes on the list—John Byrne and Pat Byrne, John O'Hara, John Finan, James Duffy (since dead), Michael Byrne, William M'Cullogh, Edward Gallinan, John Mulrooney, and John Gallagher. I cannot remember any more.

(The witness then withdrew.)

John Kearns sworn and examined.

17585. The Chief Commissioner.—Where do you live? There are two of your name?—There are, sir, three or four of my name in Sligo. I live in Temple-street, Sligo. There are at least three more of my name.

17586. Are you an elector?—I am an elector.

17587. Was any offer made to you at the last election?—No, sir, there was not.

17588. Now, who did you vote for at the last election?—I did not vote at all for either party.

17589. Did you go to any place away from your own house?—I did. I was afraid to stop in my own house.

17590. Are you a Catholic?—I am.

17591. Who did you intend to vote for?—Major Knox if called upon.

17592. Had you voted at the previous election?—I voted for Mr. Somers twice and for Mr. Macdonogh on two occasions.

17593. Was any money offered to you after Mr. Macdonogh's elections?—No, sir.

17594. Did you vote for Mr. Somers because he was a Conservative?—I could have got £200 for voting for Mr. Sadler if I had liked.

17595. Who offered you the money?—Young Harry O'Connor, who is now dead.

17596. And he offered it to influence you?—Yes, £40 or £50 notes in my own parlour. I would not sell Mr. Somers, and although he was a poor man I would not vote against him.

17597. Do you remember Colonel Townley's election?—I do.

17598. Was any offer made to you?—No, there was not.

17599. Do you know of any money going at Colonel Townley's election?—I do not.

17600. Who did you vote for then?—For Mr. Somers.

17601. At Mr. Wynne's election who did you vote for?—Mr. Somers.

17602. Did you vote for Mr. Somers all through?—All through thick and thin, and I never got one penny, but I lost my time and money.

17603. Why did you not vote at the last election after persevering to vote for Mr. Somers all through? Why did you not vote at the last election?—I thought Major Knox a fit and proper person to vote for, and I said I would vote for him.

17604. How long before the election did you make up your mind to vote for him?—I think it was about a month.

17605. What induced you to make up your mind a month before the election?—Nothing at all, but I think he was a better man than Captain Flanagan. Major Knox was a young man, and Captain Flanagan an old man, and that was the difference. I thought he was a fit and proper person to represent us in Parliament.

17606. Were you afraid you would be molested if you did not go to Allingham's hotel?—If I left the hotel I would be carried away, and made vote in spite of my teeth.

17607. Why, how could they make you vote if they brought you to the court house?—They might not, but I would sooner keep out of the way of harm.

17608. Where did you suppose you would be brought to if you did not go to Allingham's?—I do not know.

17609. Did you expect you would be brought away out of your own house?—I did.

17610. Did you get any word of that?—I did not.

17611. But you knew the habits of the people?—Yes.

17612. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Do you know a Mr. Macdonagh in this town?—I do well.

17613. Did you ever say to him you were going to vote for Captain Flanagan, but you would see Mr. Lawder first?—I never did.

17614. Or anything about it?—No.

17615. Had you any conversation with him?—I had. I told him I wanted to go and see Mr. Lawder, and tell him what I intended to do the evening before the election.

17616. Did you say nothing about Captain Flanagan?—I did not. I never promised Captain Flanagan in my life.

FIFTEENTH DAY.

October 22.

John Kearns.

17617. But you told Macdonagh you would go and see Mr. Lawder?—I did.

17618. Why did you tell Macdonagh that?—I told him what I tell you now, and that is all.

17619. Why did you tell him you were going to see Mr. Lawder?—I thought it was no harm to tell him that. No one could make anything of that on earth.

17620. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—What are you?—I am a buyer of butter, and shipper.

17621. Who are your principal customers?—I do not want to know them by name.

17622. Are they Conservatives or Liberals?—I do not understand you.

17623. Are your principal customers Conservatives or Liberals?—I buy from every party that comes across me. I am not bound to any one party. Everyone that comes across me I buy from them.

17624. The Chief Commissioner.—Who is over the markets in Carrick?—Richard Frederick Coyle.

17625. Has Mr. Lawder anything to do with them?—I think he has.

17626. And I suppose you are not badly treated in the markets?—Well, everybody in them is treated as I am treated. Any man who goes in there is treated as I am treated.

17627. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Did you see Mr. Lawder that evening?—I did, sir. He asked me would I vote, and I said I would sooner not, as I was going to the market, and I would not vote for one party or another, but if I am required, I will vote for you. I would much rather not, I said, for I attend all the country markets, and I will be destroyed if I do anything.

17628. The Chief Commissioner.—I believe they broke into your house?—They did.

17629. What compensation did you get?—Sixty-four pounds.

17630. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Are you a Protestant or a Catholic?—I am a Catholic.

17631. Were you pressed much to vote for Captain Flanagan?—I was not pressed much, for I kept myself out of the way that I could not be pressed.

17632. Did you ever hear of voters being carried off before?—Yes, there was one of my own side carried off on a door.

17633. What election was that at?—At the last election.

17634. What was his name?—Rennix. He is a dealer near where I live.

17635. What was his other name?—I do not know his other name at all.

17636. Did he poll for Captain Flanagan?—Yes, he was compelled to poll for Captain Flanagan, and dragged to it by the back of the neck.

17637. Is he living in town now?—He is. I saw him not two days ago.

17638. Did you hear of any man being dragged away and forced to vote at Sergeant Armstrong's election?—I did not know of one.

17639. Or at Mr. Somers's election?—No; nothing of the sort at all.

17640. Did you hear of anybody else besides Rennix being dragged away?—No.

(The witness then withdrew.)

Michael Mulligan.

Michael Mulligan sworn and examined.

17641. The Chief Commissioner.—What are you?—A farmer, sir.

17642. Did you get any money from Mr. Molony?—I did, sir.

17643. How much?—I do not mind—between £5 and £7. I do not know.

17644. Was that for watching voters?—It was not, sir.

17645. What was it for?—On the day Captain Flanagan came into town, there came a lot of my neighbours with me, men, women and children, and they spoke to me above in the town that they were hungry, and they got into some houses and got bread and tea, and I came down afterwards to Mr. Molony, and told him about it, and I said I would have to pay it myself unless he paid it.

17646. In whose house was this?—Some of them were in a brother's of my own, Martin Mulligan.

17647. Was he a voter?—He was.

17648. How much did you give him?—I do not know rightly.

17649. Did you give him £4?—I do not know; I gave them all I got, and they complained they did not get enough.

17650. Did you give your brother £1?—I am sure I did and more.

17651. Two pounds?—I could not say exactly what. I divided it.

17652. Amongst whom?—John Henry was one of them.

17653. Was he a voter?—He was, sir; and Henry Dignam.

17654. Is he a voter?—I do not know, sir. He did not get near enough. And Collery.

17655. Is he a voter?—He is, sir.

17656. What is his Christian name?—Pat.

17657. Was that all the money you gave?—All the money I got, I gave it to them.

17658. Did you keep none for yourself?—Not one penny.

17659. Do you know of any other money given that way?—I got more money the other day, sir.

17660. How much?—I think it was £15, sir.

17661. What day was that?—The day of the nomination.

17662. What was the £15 for?—For the same purpose.

17663. For feeding the people?—Yes.

17664. Did you give it to the same people?—In the same house, to the same people, sir.

17665. How much did your brother get that day?—I could not tell, sir. I did not expect I would be here.

17666. How much did your brother get on the day of the nomination, on your oath?—On my oath I do not mind.

17667. Did he get one shilling?—He got thirty shillings, or £2. He got beyond a pound on the second day.

17668. Did the rest of the money go into the same house?—To the same houses. I think there was a quart of whiskey got out of Dan Commons'. I remember better now, it was £1 I gave for whiskey.

17669. Do not tell me you only gave one quart of whiskey, when you were spending £15. Did you get any more money on the day of the polling?—No, sir.

17670. Did you get any more money unless the £15?—No, sir; only what I got from Mr. Molony. That is all I got.

17671. What other money was given by Mr. Molony to men like you to distribute?—I know nothing about it.

17672. Did you keep one shilling for yourself?—I do not recollect. I was money out of pocket.

17673. How much were you out of pocket?—I do not know.

17674. You got £7 and £15. How much were you out of pocket?—On my oath, I think I was a few shillings out of pocket.

17675. Did you ever make a demand upon Mr. Molony?—I wanted to get more from him.

17676. How much did you ask for?—I went to him after the election, and said I was at a loss, and that he should give me money.

17677. How much did you expect him to give you?—I did not expect anything.

Michael Mulligan.

17678. About £5?—I thought I would get a few pounds.

17679. That you were at a loss of?—I was not a loss of that much.

17680. Are you disappointed now?—I think I am, sir.

17681. Are you badly treated?—Well I do not say I am badly treated, sir.

17682. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Did you ever get money from Mr. O'Loghlen?—No, sir, never. I never spoke to him in my life.

17683. Or from anybody except Mr. Molony?—No, sir.

17684. Did you get any money at any former election?—I do not know, sir, I might get a few shillings. I think I got ten shillings one time.

(The witness then withdrew.)

James Gilligan sworn and examined.

James Gilligan.

17685. The Chief Commissioner.—Are you an elector?—No, sir.

17686. Did you get any money at the last election?—I did, sir.

17687. How much?—Before the election I got £10.

17688. From whom?—From Father Noon, sir.

17689. Where is he the parish priest of?—Of Sooey.

17690. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Do you live in Sligo?—I do, sir.

17691. The Chief Commissioner.—Now when did he give you the £10?—Before the election.

17692. What for?—He told me to distribute it amongst these people in watching voters, and give a few shillings amongst the boys.

17693. Is he the parish priest of Geevagh?—Yes, sir.

17694. Were there any Geevagh boys in town?—They got none of that, sir.

17695. Who paid the Geevagh boys?—I do not know.

17696. Did you see the Geevagh boys?—I did.

17697. How many were in town?—I could not say.

17698. Were there 100 of them?—Indeed there was.

17699. Were there not 300 of them?—I do not know the number.

17700. Now, when did the Geevagh boys come into town?—I think there were some of them in at the nomination day, and some of them at the election.

17701. Where did they stop when they were in town?—I do not know.

17702. Where were they fed?—I do not know.

17703. Who had the management of paying them?—I do not know, sir.

17704. Were you told not to give any of the £10 to Geevagh boys?—I do not know, sir.

17705. Who did you give it to?—To the Sligo boys.

17706. How did you know that Father Noon had the money to give you?—They were annoying me for some time before that and abusing me for losing their time, and they said Major Knox's staff were paid weekly and getting plenty to eat and drink, and they were getting nothing. I then made an application.

17707. To whom?—To Mr. M'Dermott first and Mr. M'Niffe. They said it was too early, and I said they did not think so themselves, for Knox had paid for six, eight, or nine months, and I said "I want nothing for myself," and I left the room, and I was sent for in a few days and got £10. I was sent for to a certain house.

17708. What house?—Mr. Edward Duffy's in John-street.

17709. What is he?—A butcher, and I think that between thirty-seven and forty-two that £10 was expended. I never left the room. I was as much annoyed the next day as ever I was, and I promised I would never take a shilling again.

17710. After paying them they annoyed you more than before?—Yes, fresh people came to me in the streets and I promised I would never take another shilling in my life and never will.

17711. Did you get any more?—I got a little more to pay for fines.

17712. For what?—For drunkenness and assault.

17713. Who gave you the money to pay fines?—Mr. O'Loghlen gave me £1 15*s.*

17714. What more did he give you?—No more.

17715. Did any more pass through your hands?—Mr. Molony gave me a trifle to pay some women.

17716. I thought you made a resolution not to pay any more—to pay women or boys?—He promised to give the women something, and he said "James, give this to the women." I promised the women I would give them something, and Mr. Molony promised me, and I did give it to them.

17717. How much did you get?—£4, and I had a few shillings, and they asked me to treat me, and I would not and left them the money.

17718. Where did you pay the women?—On the street. I paid 5*s.* to each.

17719. You understood that was to be drunk?—No, sir. I gave it to buy tea. I was drinking none myself except a few half glasses of whiskey in the day.

17720. Was that all the money you got?—That is all the money I got.

17721. Had you ever a vote for Sligo?—I had, sir.

17722. Who did you vote for?—For Mr. Somers.

17723. Did you ever get any money for voting for him?—No, sir. I lost by him.

17724. It is now proved that £5 was given at Mr. Somers's election. Do you know anything about that?—No, sir. I knew one election and there was accommodation bills given of £9.

17725. Whose election was that at?—It was at Mr. Somers and Mr. Wynne's.

17726. And who did the £9 accommodation bills?—The National Bank.

17727. How many voters were paid that way?—A great deal whilst the money lasted.

17728. About how many?—I could not say—whilst the money stood. The money was lodged in the bank, and I recollect that whilst it stood the bills were sent in. Father Dunleavy came to me, and a small man was about to be turned out, and he begged me to do a small bill, and I did, and when it came due I was not asked, and I asked the reason, and I went up and paid it out of my own pocket.

17729. Did you put the £9 bill into the bank?—I did it to give to a person who was in distress.

17730. Who were the other two persons?—Which two people?

17731. Were there two other names on the bill?—No.

17732. Whose name was on the bill?—I disremember. I indorsed it.

17733. Was it a £9 bill?—Nine pounds, four shillings, and six pence.

17734. Were there other sums of £9 4*s.* 6*d.* at that election?—There were.

17735. Were there forty?—I think there were.

17736. Who told the people to go and get these bills discounted at the National Bank?—The committee of Mr. Somers.

17737. Who was the first to tell you to go down?—Father Dunleavy.

17738. Was it he gave the word to you?—He came to me and told me he knew a man who would be turned out in a few days, and asked me if I could get a small bill done for him.

17739. Which other voters, as you understood, got the £9 bills done for them?—Any poor man who was in need of it got it done as long as the money stood in the bank.

17740. Could you name anybody else who got that

FIFTEENTH DAY.

October 22.

James Gilligan.

done?—I could not. That is thirty-five or thirty-three years ago.

17741. Was that when Mr. Somers was first here?—No, sir. He lodged some hundreds in the National Bank to meet his demands. I voted for Mr. Martin, and he put out Mr. Martin then, and the Liberals did not like how he got on.

17742. At the time you got the £9 bill done for you in the bank who was against Mr. Somers on the other side?—Mr. Martin.

17743. Now was there any other election that you got any compliments of the same kind?—No, sir; this bill was not for myself at all; but I paid it, and I wrote to Mr. Somers about it, and he sent it to me back.

17744. He sent you the money himself?—He did, sir; and any other things I paid for him he sent to me.

17745. What other things did you pay for him?—I got drink occasionally for poor fellows who were worn out; and I paid money, and I wrote to him and he sent it to me.

17746. How much did he send you this way?—God knows I do not know the number. I sent the bills forward to him what I paid out of my own pocket.

17747. Was that for treating at the elections?—For giving refreshments to poor fellows who were getting nothing else.

17748. You say you lost your business on account of Mr. Somers?—I lost a good deal of my trade.

17749. What is the reason of that?—I voted for him, and acted for him night and day. I could not get rid of him. In fact I did not dislike him for being poor, not a bit.

17750. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Do you recollect voting for him in 1859, the time Mr. Wynne beat him?—No, sir.

17751. You did not vote for him then?—Every time I was here, sir, I voted for him.

17752. Do you recollect any money going the last time he was here?—I was in company with him one Sunday evening. The Liberals were talking of Mr. Ball, and he continued to canvass, and he requested me to go out with him and canvass for Mr. Ball, and I told him that himself might go out, but I would not. I was a Sunday evening in the hotel with him, and he sent for me and told me Mr. Ball left him £100 to contest the election next day. I remonstrated with him, and said if he took my advice he would not, for, to my knowledge, he exerted himself against Mr. Sadlier. It was a bad recompense, and if you take my advice, I said, you will not; so we sent a car, and brought him from where we were.

17753. And he was beaten?—I do not think he was beaten then. Mr. Wynne put him out on petition.

17754. Was there any money going the last time Mr. Somers stood?—No, sir, I do not think there was.

17755. But the time before last?—No, sir. The man had not means enough, except what Lord Palmerston used to give him. It used to be swamped in the hotel.

(The witness then withdrew.)

John M'Tighe

John M'Tighe sworn and examined.

17756. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Did you vote at the last election?—I did.

17757. Who did you vote for?—For Captain Flanagan.

17758. Do you remember anyone asking you to vote for Major Knox?—No, sir, I cannot remember of anyone asking me to vote for Major Knox but on the Monday previous to the election my little son came down from the butter market to me and told me I was wanted at home about one o'clock in the day, and I came up and a man named Armstrong told me I was wanted at Mr. Stokes', and I told him I could not go there sooner than four or five o'clock, that I had to go back to the market as I was busy shipping butter; so I did go back to the market and I met him about half-past four o'clock; I met Armstrong, and after taking my dinner and tea we went out at six o'clock to Mr. Stokes', and I went in the front door, and the young man asked——

17759. Just come to what Stokes said?—When I went down they were in and Mrs. and Mr. Stokes came out, and I told him that Armstrong was in for me; and he said, "I want to know what you will take and go to Dublin until the election is over?" I laughed and I said £50, and he said that was too much, and he took me aside and said, "I will give you forty thanks." "What," said I, "do you mean by thanks?" and he said, "Every thank means a pound;" and he said, "I will give you your expenses, but you must go to Dublin to-night." I said, "Would not Carrick or Boyle be enough?" And he said, "No." And I said I would give him word in half an hour; and I went out and never came back.

17760. Do you know any persons of the name of Macdonagh?—I do. He asked me would my friends go, and I said they would not.

17761. Did he ask you how the Macdonaghs' would vote?—He did not.

17762. Was that the only occasion on which Stokes spoke to you?—The only occasion.

17763. Did you vote for Sergeant Armstrong?—I never had a vote but at this last election. My father had but I had not.

(The witness then withdrew.)

David Frizelle.

David Frizelle sworn and examined.

17764. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Are you a voter?—I am a county voter.

17765. But not a borough one?—No.

17766. Do you live in Sligo?—No, sir.

17767. Do you know a man called Felix Farrell?—I do, sir.

17768. Had you ever any conversation with him about the last election?—Well, not that I remember.

17769. But try and recollect it, for he has sworn you had?—I do not remember having any conversation with him as to election business. I remember one night he was in Mrs. Buchanan's and I think there was something like a jest passed.

17770. Did you ever ask him to make you thirty-five kegs at £1 a piece?—I never did. I never asked him to make any complement, but I said if he got a good price would he make them. It was a matter of jest.

17771. What did you say to him about the kegs?—I said if he got a good price would he make them.

17772. Did you mention any price?—No, sir. I only asked him if he got a good price would he make them.

17773. Why did you ask him that?—Only for a jest.

17774. Is it a joke to ask a cooper to make casks?—I only asked him.

17775. How long was this before the election?—I do not know; it might have been a few days.

17776. Do you know Stokes?—Yes, sir.

17777. Had you ever any talk with him about the election?—No, sir.

17778. Had you ever any talk with anyone about the election?—No, sir, I had nothing to say to it.

17779. And you never offered any man money?—No, sir.

17780. And was this conversation with Farrell at Buchanan's hotel?—We were drinking. It was just a jest that was passed, and nothing more. I never got money or anything else.

17781. Did you send for Farrell?—No.

17782. Did you vote at the last election?—I did.

17783. For whom?—I think Sir Robert Gore Booth and Mr. Cooper.

17784. Had you any conversation before the election with Stokes or Cherry?—No, sir, I had not.

(The witness then withdrew.)

David Frizelle.

William Lovatt sworn and examined.

William Lovatt.

17785. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Are you an elector?—Yes.

17786. Did you vote at the last election?—Yes.

17787. For whom did you vote?—For Captain Flanagan.

17788. Did you vote for Sergeant Armstrong?—Yes.

17789. Did you get any money after that election?—No.

17790. Did Mr. Conry give you any money?—Yes, sir. He gave it to the mistress and not to me. I was a State prisoner at the time.

17791. Did you ever vote at any previous election for Sergeant Armstrong?—No.

17792. Were you not a voter at any previous election?—Yes.

17793. Did you vote at Sadlier's election?—No, sir.

17794. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Do you expect any money for voting for Captain Flanagan?—No, sir.

17795. Will you take it if it comes?—I do not require it.

17796. Supposing it is offered to you will you take it?—No. I never expected money for registering my vote.

17797. Did you expect any money when you voted for Sergeant Armstrong?—No.

17798. But you took it?—I did not. I never knew nothing about it, for I was a State prisoner at the time.

17799. Then you would not have taken it?—Of course it was a God-send. I was in gaol when the mistress got it.

17800. And supposing somebody comes and offers you £20 now, for voting for Captain Flanagan would you throw it away?—I do not imagine I would.

(The witness then withdrew.)

John West sworn and examined.

John West.

17801. The Chief Commissioner.—Did you vote at the last election?—I did.

17802. Who did you vote for?—For Major Knox.

17803. Did you vote for Mr. Macdonogh?—I did.

17804. At which election?—At the very last.

17805. Now, did you get any money after that election?—Never; nor at any election.

17806. Did you ever vote before Mr. Macdonogh's time?—I did.

17807. For whom?—I voted for Mr. Wynne, and for Mr. Somers one time.

17808. Did you know any money was going for Mr. Somers?—No more than hearsay.

17809. Did you try to get any money for voting for Mr. Somers?—No; I would give him money; he was in more need of it than I was.

17810. What are you?—I am a farmer.

(The witness then withdrew.)

Thomas Sivery sworn and examined.

Thomas Sivery.

17811. The Chief Commissioner.—Were you in Stokes' employment during the election?—I was, sir.

17812. Did you bring any messages for him?—I brought one, sir.

17813. Tell all about it?—It was a letter to Buchanan's to have a car to bring in the M'Mullens.

17814. Did you know at that time the M'Mullens were to go away?—I did, sir, that night.

17815. Who told you?—Mr. Stokes.

17816. What did he say now?—He told me to give them an order at Buchanan's to have a car for the M'Mullens.

17817. You knew they were voters?—Yes.

17818. Did you bring any other message about voters?—No, sir.

17819. Did you know Stokes had the money for the voters?—No, sir.

17820. Did you know of any money going to anyone who were voters?—No, sir.

17821. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Do you remember seeing John M'Tighe at Stokes' house?—Yes, sir. He came to the shop, and was shown into the parlour by John Byrne.

17822. How long was he in the parlour?—I do not know how long he was in it. I did not see him going out. He was let out on the hall door.

(The witness then withdrew.)

Alick Shaw sworn and examined.

Alick Shaw.

17823. The Chief Commissioner.—What is your occupation?—A watchmaker, sir.

17824. Had you a vote at the last election?—No, sir.

17825. Had you anything to do with the last election at either side?—Nothing except that affair with Dominick Oates.

17826. What was that?—I happened to be in his house, and he asked me to bring him to some one who would help him to leave the town, and I did so. I went with him to Stokes.

17827. How did you know Stokes was the man to manage that?—Well, I told him he was a man interested in the Conservative party.

17828. But how did you know he would manage to get a man to leave the town? Did you not know that would not be done except for money?—I did.

17829. How much were you to understand that Oates was to get?—Well, Stokes told me a party in Liverpool or Glasgow would give him thirty thanks when he would go there.

17830. Tell who the party was?—Oh, I do not know. He did not mention any person's name.

17831. Did you ever tell Oates that?—He was listening himself to it in Stokes's house.

17832. Was that a real offer as you understood it?—Well, that is all he offered.

17833. Was it a real offer?—He asked what did he

FIFTEENTH DAY.

October 22.

Alick Shaw.

mean by it, and I said I supposed it was pounds he meant by it. That is all.

17834. But you intended to get the man away if you could?—I did not.

17835. Oh, but were not you on that side?—I went with the man at his own request.

17836. Were not you on the Conservative side?—I was not a voter.

17837. But you would have voted for Major Knox if you had a vote?—Yes, certainly.

17838. Now, did you offer anything to any other voter?—No, sir.

17839. Was any other offer made in your presence?—No, sir; never in my presence.

17840. Was there any offer made to any relative of a voter in your presence; any word given that money would be going?—No.

17841. To the wife or relative of a voter?—No.

17842. At the time of the revision there was an offer made to Fitzpatrick. Who made the offer?—Stokes desired me to tell him that he would get £20 or £25, I could not swear which, for not registering his vote. That is all the men I know.

17843. But how did Stokes happen to speak to you about the transaction?—Because the man lived in the same street with me.

17844. Did Stokes often speak to you about these matters?—No, sir, he did not, unless on these two occasions.

17845. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Was any other offer made by Stokes that you heard?—No, sir. I do not know anything more about Stokes.

17846. Do you know of any other voter having been offered money for voting for Major Knox, or abstaining from voting?—No, sir; I do not.

(The witness then withdrew.)

17847. The witness, Mr. Doherty, returned to court, and said he had succeeded in making out the date. Mr. Ball stood for Sligo in the year 1849, and also in the year 1857. It was on the latter occasion the matter occurred which he mentioned to the Commisioners.

17848. The Chief Commissioner.—That is the 1857 election?—Yes, sir.

(The witness then withdrew.)

Patrick Leonard.

Patrick Leonard sworn and examined.

17849. The Chief Commissioner.—Did you vote for Sergeant Armstrong?—I did.

17850. Did you get any money after that election?—I did.

17851. How much?—Fifteen pounds.

17852. From whom?—From Mr. Foley.

17853. Was that the first election you voted at?—It was.

17854. Did you ever get any money since?—Never.

17855. Did you vote for Captain Flanagan?—I did.

17856. Now, had you anything to do with the mobs at the last election?—No.

17857. Did any money pass through your hands?—Not one shilling.

17858. Who canvassed you before Sergeant Armstrong's election?—The Sergeant, sir.

(The witness then withdrew.)

James Kearney.

James Kearney sworn and examined.

17859. The Chief Commissioner.—Are you an elector?—I am, sir.

17860. Did you vote at the last election?—Yes, the first time and the last time.

17861. Who did you vote for?—For Captain Flanagan.

17862. What is your business?—A dealing man.

17863. Did you know anything about the mobs that were in town?—I did, sir. I knew something regarding the men that were in the interest of both parties.

17864. Well, tell what you knew?—Well, what I know of the mobs was, that there was a great anxiety of the Liberal party on behalf of Captain Flanagan, but it was nothing at all to the opposite party. There was nothing at all able to compete with the opposite party.

17865. But about the mob?—Did you know the Gevagh mob?—No, sir, I did not know anything.

17866. But did you know of any money having been paid to them?—I am certain there came men into the town, solicitors, about the Liberal cause.

17867. Was any money offered to you?—There was.

17868. Who offered you the money?—It was my landlord.

17869. Who is your landlord?—Mr. Stokes.

17870. How much did he offer you?—Well, before the revision commenced he said to me he would give me £15 not to register.

17871. After that did he offer you any money?—He did, sir.

17872. How much did he offer you?—The terms he mentioned were, that if I had three more men he would give me £50.

17873. Was it £50 for yourself?—It was.

17874. How much would the other voters get?—He would have a private arrangement with them himself.

17875. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Did you understand from him that the other men were to get £50 each?—No, sir. I understood distinctly from him that he would arrange with them to the best advantage he could, that is what he proposed to me. He said if I accepted of the £50, he would wish I would make no reference to them about the amount he would give me, but I suppose being his tenant he was anxious to remunerate me as well as he could.

17876. What did you say to that?—I declined to accept it.

17877. Did he renew the offer again?—He did not, sir. I did not come in his way afterwards.

17878. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—You were to get three other voters; who were they?—There was no name mentioned, but any other three voters that I might have had an influence upon, that would come with me.

17879. You mean men to vote for Major Knox?—Yes, sir, any electors of my own class. There were several others who tendered me money. A gentleman in the fair of Ballisodare named Captain Rogers, spoke to me after my business was done. I had bought a beast that belonged to him, and another man came, and he declined to give me the beast, and said it was not a substantial sale; but the other man came to terms with me, and I gave him 5*s.* before having any difference with him. There was a respectable man in the house, a young gentleman from Bloomfield, who lent me £2 or £3 to make up the price of the beast; I paid the gentleman then. I was then coming down to Mr. Maguire to pay him for another beast, and this gentleman requested me to come back, that he wished to see me, and he asked me to go to England and sell some cattle for him. I said I was not in England, and did not know anything about the sale of cattle, and wanted to be instructed in these matters myself. He said I would do very well. But I said I had these two beasts on hands. "I will not do anything I said, but if you will come and help me to do right, I think I will try and go and sell your cattle. So he came down and bought a quarter of beef.

17880. Did he offer you any money about the election?—He asked me if I had my mind made up, and would I sell the cattle for him.

17881. Did he offer you any money to go away?—He did not tender me any money, but he said that anything I might ask or spend he would give it to me.

17882. Did you agree to go away?—When I found his disposition he said I misunderstood him. He said, "Did you not understand me?" "I did not," I said. "Oh, well," he said, "it is about the election I meant." "Oh, then," I said, "in any case for any amount I would not go away."

17883. Did anybody else come to you?—A gentleman came to me, Mr. West, a farmer, who lives in that locality of the town.

17884. What did he say to you?—He asked me as I was a poor man would I be anxious to further my advantage by taking a small sum of money for voting upon his side. I said, "No, sir," and he did not say anything more to me.

17885. Did anybody else offer it to you?—No, but I am well aware it could be got within a few yards of my dwelling.

17886. Who do you allude to?—Well, in fact I could not count them. I do not want any credit, for these statements. I do not want any money for I would not take it, for I knew quite well what it was to take a bribe.

(The witness then withdrew.)

Richard Hickson sworn and examined.

17887. The Chief Commissioner.—Are you an elector?—Yes.

17888. Who did you vote for at the last election?—For Major Knox.

17889. Do you know Mr. Heron in the employment of Colonel Cooper?—Yes, sir.

17890. Did he pay you any money after the election?—He did.

17891. How much?—Nine pounds eleven shillings.

17892. What did he pay it for?—For the support and accommodation of some few country men that were sent in to me.

17893. What day were they sent in to you?—I think it was the evening before the nomination.

17894. When was that £9 11*s.* first paid—was it after the petition at Carrick?—Well, I could not say.

17895. Was it before or after Christmas?—Well, I think it was after Christmas.

17896. Now, besides that £9 11*s.* did you get another sum. Did you get a sum of £50?—I got £50 from Major Knox for the tally room.

17897. How long was the tally room occupied?—During the polling. I may say that I got from Major Knox what I was offered from the other side.

17898. Were you offered £50 by the other side?—I was for the use of the house.

17899. Have you ever been at an election before?—Oh yes, I am an elector I suppose something about fifteen years.

17900. Is your house usually occupied at the election?—Yes, I think so.

17901. From its convenience?—Yes, sir. It is quite opposite the court-house.

17902. I presume you voted for Mr. Macdonogh?—Well, I did at the first election, but at his former election I did not, because I had not a vote at the time. There was a mistake made by the Conservatives not having my name on the registry.

17903. Did you vote for Mr. Wynne?—I did, sir, I voted for him twice.

17904. You have been supporting the Conservative party?—Yes, sir.

17905. How did you arrive at the calculation of the £9 10*s.*?—Mr. Heron told me he had a few men to send in from the country districts to aid Major Knox at the election in order to get him a hearing at the nomination. He asked me if I would give them accommodation, my house being so convenient to the court-house. So I told him I would.

17906. Had you any difficulty about getting the money paid afterwards?—Well, I had, sir, I spoke to Mr. Moloney to write to Mr. Heron about the matter.

17907. Was the money then paid?—It was.

17908. Was it Mr. Heron paid you the money?—It was.

17909. How many men had you in the house?—Well, at the present time I could not tell.

17910. Were there fifteen or sixteen?—Fifteen or sixteen or a little more.

17911. Were any of these men armed?—Not to my knowledge.

17912. Were these men from Colonel Cooper's estate?—I should think so, sir; from the Coolally district.

17913. Was that all the money you got about the election?—That is all; I never got one penny at an election.

17914. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—If any of these countrymen had fire-arms would you have seen them?—They might have had fire-arms concealed there, but I did not see any fire-arms.

17915. Have you any reason to think they had fire-arms?—No, sir; I had no reason in the world.

17916. What is your belief on the subject?—I really believed at the time I thought they had no fire-arms. I thought they were merely sent for the purpose of aiding Major Knox, and getting him a hearing at the Court-house.

17917. The Chief Commissioner.—Do you know of any other money being paid in the same way to any people like yourself, to keep men who came into town?—No.

17918. At what other house were the men kept besides yours?—Well, really, I heard that Mr. Heron brought down more than were accommodated in my house, but I do not know indeed where they were placed.

17919. Did you hear where they were placed?—Well, now, I cannot be accurate. I should like to tell you the truth, but I do not know at the present time.

17920. I am sure you do not know, but tell me where you heard?—Well, I really could not tell you. I heard it at the time.

17921. How many houses did you hear the men were at?—Only one or two more than mine.

17922. Could you not guess where they were?—Well, I could not at the present time.

(The witness then withdrew.)

Charles Clancey sworn and examined.

17923. The Chief Commissioner.—Did you vote at the last election?—No, sir.

17924. Where were you on the day of the polling?—I was either in Dublin or Dalkey. I was in Dublin.

17925. What was the address you were at in Dublin?—My proper address was in Dalkey—Mrs. Glenn's.

17926. Had you ever been there before?—Yes.

17927. What was your address in Dublin?—My address was only temporary—the Angel hotel, on Inns-quay.

17928. What made you leave Sligo?—Well, I did not like to vote.

17929. Why did you not like to vote?—Why, feeling that people were so fearfully up at the time, I thought it better not to do so.

17930. Were you intimidated, I mean by violence?—No.

17931. Was any injury done to yourself or property?—None, except my father's windows were broken.

17932. What is your occupation?—A clerk. I did intend voting for Major Knox, but from the excited state of the people, I certainly thought it better not to do so.

17933. Did you go away entirely of your own accord?—Yes, it was with my own free will. I left at my own expense, and no person dare say they paid anything towards my leaving. I made up my mind not to do so, and I did not intend voting at all.

17934. Was there great violence?—No, sir, but there were threats held out.

17935. And were you afraid?—I cannot say I was afraid, but from the way the people talked of what would happen to those on the Liberal side, who would vote for Major Knox.

17936. Were you on the Liberal side before?—I never had a vote before.

17937. How long did you remain away?—I think it was about a week.

17938. Do you say you went away entirely at your own expense?—Yes, sir; no person in the borough dare say I went away at any other person's cost. It was an act of my own free-will, and I went at my own expense, and I think if I voted at all, it would have been for Major Knox. The vote was his, for it was out of his house I had it.

17939. Were you put in possession of his house?—Yes.

17940. What was the rent?—Nine pounds. I paid no rent, but it was demanded.

17941. When were you put in?—About two or three years ago.

17942. Have you never paid any rent?—No.

17943. Do you intend ever to pay any rent for that house?—Certainly not.

17944. Why?—I had no business with the place in the first instance.

17945. Did you occupy the house?—Yes, I slept in it for about a week.

17946. In order to qualify?—Yes.

17947. Then you did not intend to pay one farthing for the house?—Certainly not. I did not want the house, and did not care a fig for it.

17948. Were you in possession at the time of the registry?—Yes, I was.

17949. Were you examined as a witness?—Yes.

17950. Did you say you were a bonâ fide occupier of the house?—I held under a written agreement, and of course I am liable for the rent if he chooses to sue for it.

17951. You then said you were the bonâ fide occupier?—Of course. The house was really handed over to me.

17952. But you say when you went into that house you never intended to pay one shilling rent for it?—No, I did not.

17953. Were any other voters in the same way?—Not that I am aware of.

17954. Did you sign the agreement that was prepared?—Yes.

17955. Did you tell the Major or the solicitor who made the agreement that you never intended to pay one shilling rent?—No.

17956. They knew it I suppose?—I do not know. I had my private views afterwards that I would not pay it.

17957. Was the rent ever asked from you?—Yes, it was.

17958. Who asked it?—Mr. Farrell the poor rate collector.

17959. Did that surprise you?—Yes, it did.

17960. Did you tell him you would not pay one shilling as you have sworn?—I think I told him I would not pay any rent for it.

17961. What is his name?—John Farrell. He demanded the rent from me for Mr. Abbott.

17962. When?—About a few months ago.

17963. Did he appear to know the arrears of rent?—Well, I don't know.

17964. Did he estimate until the last gale?—I really don't know, but I remember he demanded the rent.

17965. Had you ever known that Mr. Abbott was your landlord before that?—No. He told me there was a transfer of the property from Knox to Abbott, and that he came after the rent of the house.

17966. Well, at all events you will resist that claim if you are advised to it?—Yes.

17967. Would you not think it hard now to have to pay the arrears?—Certainly.

17968. Do you know, or can you give any information about any other person being in the same position?—I do not know of any other person. Doherty the watchman watched me leaving Sligo. It appears by the Independent he stated he saw me leave Sligo in company with a Roman Catholic priest, and that I went to Longford, but I wish to say that is perfectly untrue, and that I was in the presbytery, and had left by the orders of the bishop, and that I had promised to vote for Captain Flanagan or not at all. I wish to say that is untrue. The bishop never spoke to me or I to him in the matter, and I have no recollection of seeing them at the railway station at all, until the next morning when I met them at Westland-row chapel.

17969. Was it on Saturday you went away?—No, it was early in the week.

17970. Is there anything else you wish to say about your name being mentioned in the evidence?—No.

17971. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Where do you live?—In Castle-street.

17972. Not in this house?—No.

17973. And you never occupied it except that week?—No.

17974. Is the house shut up?—I think there are parties living in it.

17975. Are they living by your consent?—No.

17976. Have you anything to do with it?—Nothing.

17977. Have you a vote out of the house in which you are at present living?—No, I think I am not on the registry in it.

(The witness withdrew.).

The Court then adjourned till the following morning.

SIXTEENTH DAY.

SATURDAY, OCTOBER, 23, 1869.

The Commissioners sat at ten o'clock.

Mr. Arthur Lloyd, sworn and examined.

Mr. Arthur Lloyd.

17978. The Chief Commissioner.—Do you hold an official position in the Court of Bankruptcy?—I do.

17979. Do you remember two men named O'Connor, who were passing through the Court?—Yes; they were bankrupts.

17980. Had they been arranging traders originally, or were they bankrupts from the first?—I can't tell from memory.

17981. Do you remember whether the petition was filed by themselves, or was it a creditor's petition?—I can't say from memory.

17982. It has been stated by one of these men that you gave two sums of £10 each in the Irish Times office to the two of them?—That is quite true.

17983. Will you now tell me how you came to know these men, and how you came to be engaged in that transaction?—I said one day in the office to the younger of the two—I said it casually—what about the coming election of Sligo: the thought occurred to me at the moment. I said, "I suppose there will be hot work at it?" He said, "bad work." I said, "I suppose you are going to vote for Major Knox?" He said "He was not, that it wouldn't suit him to vote for anyone; that he wouldn't vote at all." He then said, "If I could do anything with Major Knox for him, it would be a great service to him." I asked him what he meant—he said "anything to do." I said "I would be glad to mention it to Major Knox, and would call to see him in the evening, and meet him at the Irish Times office." Subsequently I went to the Irish Times office, and found O'Connor there; I brought him up to Major Knox's office. When we went into the room, I introduced O'Connor. Major Knox thereupon said, "Well, O'Connor, are you going to be one of my supporters?" O'Connor's answer was, in a mumbling voice, that he was hard up. "With that I have nothing to do," said Major Knox. Major Knox, I think got a little bothered by what O'Connor said, and, perhaps, thought he wanted money. He then stood up, and said, "for goodness sake take him out of the room." O'Connor and I left the room then.

17984. Did you then leave Major Knox?—We left his room. One room leads into another, and O'Connor and I went out of his, and into the next room. I then said to O'Connor, "Do you wish to be a canvassing agent?" He said "Not, that that would not suit him."

17985. Who suggested that to you?—It was what I thought he wanted by his wanting something to do. He said perhaps he could do more than bigger men. First, he said he wouldn't vote at all.

17986. Did you know O'Connor to be a Catholic?—I didn't know him to be either the one way or the other—the thought never entered my head.

17987. Did O'Connor mention how much he would take?—Nothing of the kind. He had a mumbling sort of way of talking.

17988. Did not you understand that he wanted money for either voting, or for abstaining from voting?—What I understood him to mean was, to be employed, and to be paid for it.

17989. How did you come to fix on the £10 for each?—I went back to Major Knox, and asked him, "Do you see any objection to have these men employed as canvassing agents?" He said, "Clearly not, I have counsel's opinion on the same subject;" he added, "but they should get £10, can they be trusted?" I said, "They had got a very high character, and were very respectable men."

17990 Did Major Knox agree to give them £10?—He said they ought to get £10. Mr. Lawder was then sent for to the club in Sackville-street, as I didn't want to have anything to do with the matter further. Mr. Lawder wasn't at the club, so I gave them the money.

17991. Who gave you the £20 to give them?—I had it myself.

17992. I suppose you were repaid it afterwards?—I was, by Major Knox. He said, "I will give you this, and I will settle with Mr. Lawder." I had asked him previously if it was all right, and he said, "Clearly, I have counsel's opinion on it."

17993. When the money was paid to the two men, were they present?—They were. I called in a young barrister named Morrison who was in an adjoining room, and in his presence I gave them the money. It was he drafted the receipt.

17994. Where is that receipt?—It is with the returning officer.

17995. You have not it?—I have not.

17996. When they were paid the £10 each, did you understand whether they were to vote or not?—Clearly not, they said nothing would induce them to vote, that it wouldn't suit them to vote.

17997. Would you then have paid the £10, if they were to vote for Captain Flanagan?—I really knew nothing about it. I thought they got the £10 for their services.

17998. Were they to be at liberty to vote for Captain Flanagan?—I don't know.

17999. What did you understand?—That they were to canvass for Major Knox.

18000. Would you have given them a penny if they were free to vote for Captain Flanagan?—I didn't know whether it would influence their vote or not.

18001. Is it that you did not know whether £10 given to two bankrupts on the eve of an election would or would not influence their vote?—It never entered my head. I was merely the party to give that money to them to render service to Major Knox.

18002. Did not you make an appointment to give it to them at the Irish Times office?—I made an appointment that I would meet them there.

18003. O'Connor stated to us that it was for the purpose of arranging for the money matter?—It was to get employment for them.

18004. We are told that such a thing as a paid canvasser in Sligo is ridiculous and unheard of?—I had nothing to do with the election at all.

18005. Did Mr. Perry speak to you on the subject?—I was talking to him the other day about it, and he said he never promised a farthing.

18006. How did you make out, in the business of the office, the O'Connors?—I happened to know that they were Sligo men—the whole thing was gossip, casual conversation.

18007. How long after the election were you repaid the £10?—I was repaid the next day after I gave it.

18008. By Major Knox himself?—Yes. He said, "I will give you this now, and I will settle with Mr. Lawder."

18009. Did you know any other Sligo voters about the same time as you knew the O'Connors?—I saw them in the office.

18010. Whom did you see there?—I saw the Mayor there.

18011. Was this the only transaction you were engaged in at the last election?—It was.

18012. Do you recollect the words of the receipt each of the O'Connors gave for the £10?—I think I do; it was to this effect:—"Received from Mr. Lawder," because he was sent for while the receipt was being drafted, by Mr. Morrison, "the sum of £10, to act as canvassing agent for the Sligo election." I was informed that it was quite right and straight, otherwise I shouldn't have anything to do with it.

18013. Was it Mr. Morrison advised you that it was legal to pay this money?—Yes, and Major Knox told me he heard it from some other counsel before that.

18014. Did you know that these voters having taken that money could not vote at the election—that is, that their votes would be gone?—I didn't at that time.

18015. You know it now?—I do. I heard them say they wouldn't vote for anyone; I thought then that they were neutral.

18016. Did you know of young O'Connor coming up to Dublin, and absenting himself from the election?—I did not. I heard afterwards that he was at the election.

18017. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Did you know anything of the O'Connors before they were bankrupts?—I didn't, except that I happened to know that they were from Sligo.

18018. There was nothing special as regards them to make you interested in them?—No—the matter struck me most casually; the whole thing arose from my asking, "what about the coming election of Sligo."

18019. You are acquainted personally with Major Knox?—Yes, I am connected with him by marriage.

18020. You say you regarded the O'Connors as neutral?—Yes, when they said it wouldn't suit them to vote.

18021. Was not the object of going to the Irish Times office, to make it more sure that they would be neutral?—It wasn't. I thought it should benefit both parties—they wanted employment, and Major Knox would have the advantage of having them as canvassers.

18022. The Chief Commissioner.—Did you ever hear what they were to get?—Never.

18023. Did they make any application to you after the election?—Yes, I got a letter from one of them.

18024. Have you that letter?—I have not.

18025. What is become of it?—I threw it in the fire.

18026. Do you recollect what was in it?—Accurately I can't tell what was in it. It was to the effect, that they either wanted employment or money.

18027. How much was mentioned in it?—Nothing.

18028. Did you answer that letter?—I did not.

18029. Did you show it to Major Knox?—I did not.

18030. Or to anyone acting for him?—I did not.

18031. Did O'Connor make a demand on you more than once?—No, that's the only letter I ever had from him.

18032. Did he ever speak to you on the subject?—No.

18033. Was this what was in it—that employment and £80 was to be given to them?—Yes.

18034. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Your object, you say, was to benefit both parties—with regard to Major Knox, was what he was to gain the exclusive benefit he would derive from their services as canvassers?—Clearly; I heard that the O'Connors stood well with their own party.

18035. The Chief Commissioner.—What do you mean by "their own party"?—Their intimates.

18036. Did you then think from the name—O'Connor—that they were Catholics?—Never.

18037. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—What was the meaning of your asking Major Knox—was it all right?—Because I should be clear in everything I had to do with in the matter.

18038. What doubt could you have, or entertain?—Because any money given to voters, a certain amount of doubt was attached to it.

18039. It arose, I suppose, from the fact whether the money would influence them in voting or in abstaining from voting?—They told me they wouldn't vote at all.

18040. But they may change their minds?—They were respectable men.

18041. Do not you think that the employing of them as canvassers would make it less likely to make them change their minds?—They told me that they wouldn't vote for anyone.

18042. Did you place as much confidence in them when they said that, as if they had sworn it?—I did. They were respectable men, I heard.

18043. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Who told you they were respectable men?—I don't know.

18044. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Had you a conversation with anyone before the O'Connors?—I don't remember.

18045. If you were told that they were respectable, you must have heard it from someone?—I don't think I asked the question of anyone—who said it, I can't tell you.

18046. Does not your recollection help you to state with whom you had the conversation about the O'Connors?—It doesn't; I heard it said, but by whom I can't tell you.

18047. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Does your business in the Bankruptcy Office bring you into personal communication with the bankrupts?—It does; but the fact of their being bankrupts had nothing to do with the question I asked them.

18048. Was it in the ordinary course of duty in the office that you were brought into connexion with them?—It was.

18049. Did O'Connor, the father, meet you with the son in the Irish Times office?—Yes; they went up towards Major Knox's room. The younger O'Connor came in with me, and the father remained outside.

18050. Was the younger O'Connor alone with Major Knox at any time?—No; we left the room at the same time.

18051. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Had you or Major Knox any conversation with the O'Connors as to what voters they could influence?—Not that I heard of. One of them said he would work, canvass, and perhaps do more than bigger men.

18052. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—When did this conversation take place?—It occurred—I don't exactly recollect—the receipts would prove it.

18053. Was it a fortnight or a week before the election?—It was more than that, I should think.

18054. Was there any arrangement that the O'Connors were to go down to Sligo?—I think so; they couldn't canvass otherwise. Major Knox understood that they were to go back to Sligo.

18055. But was there any arrangement come to about their going down immediately?—Nothing was said about it. I think it depended on their own convenience.

18056. O'Connor, who was examined here, swore that he saw you and Major Knox in the Irish Times office, that you came to terms, that £20 was first offered, then £30, and that it was finally decided that they were to get £80—is there any truth in that statement?—No; except the £20—the two ten pounds.

18057. Did you all leave the office together, or did you remain after them?—They left, and I think I remained for a few moments after them.

18058. The Chief Commissioner.—Was any list referred to in your presence?—None whatever.

18059. Did not it enter into your head whether the O'Connors were Catholics or not?—It didn't.

18060. Would not you know they were, if the matter occurred to you?—From their name?

18061. Yes; and their coming from Sligo?—Not necessarily. I have known Protestants of the name of O'Connor.

18062. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—In considering that it was an advantage to Major Knox to have the O'Connors' influence as canvassers, you must have had the impression that their connexion was on the Catholic side, as it would not be so great an advantage to have them as canvassers among his own friends?—I heard of some of the Protestants voting against him.

18063. But who were Liberals?—[No answer.]

18064. The Chief Commissioner.—You do not mean to say that paid canvassers voted against him?—I looked on the O'Connors as neutral.

18065. Do you give it as your opinion that the £10 did not influence the O'Connors any way?—Certainly not.

18066. And you believe it?—Most distinctly; they said it would not suit them to make enemies at either side.

18067. Was that the reason they got the £10?—They got it to act as canvassers.

18068. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—You say that they got the £10 irrespective of being voters?—They got it as canvassers.

18069. The Chief Commissioner.—Do you mean to say that they would get a shilling if they were not voters?—Yes. I heard they were respectable men.

18070. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Had you any previous conversation with Major Knox about them?—None whatever.

18071. When you and they came to Major Knox's room what was the first conversation that passed?—I said to Major Knox, "Here's Mr. O'Connor, a Sligo elector, come to be introduced to you." I then told him what he wanted.

18072. Was it then stated that he was a voter?—Yes. For Major Knox said he hoped O'Connor would be one of his supporters.

18073. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—If they were not Sligo electors would you take so much trouble with them?—I would, for they were poor.

18074. The Chief Commissioner.—In charity?—A good deal of it was charity. I undertook it a good deal in charity.

18075. When you spoke to Mr. Perry what did he say?—I asked him did he hear what O'Connor swore, and he said it was untrue.

18076. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—When Major Knox asked O'Connor if he would vote for him, or expressed a hope to have his support, did O'Connor say he did not intend to vote at all?—No; I don't think he did.

18077. The Chief Commissioner.—Did he convey that he was going to hang back?—He did in this way—he said something in a mumbling voice of being hard up. Major Knox then said, "I have nothing to do with that."

18078. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Major Knox then retired?—Yes. He said, "For goodness sake take him out of the room." He then stood up, and we went out to another room.

18079. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Major Knox at that time was under the impression that O'Connor was a voter who might vote?—He may have been under that impression.

18080. It was not stated previously to Major Knox that he was a person who would not vote?—It was not.

18081. When was that first stated to Major Knox?—It was I stated it to him. I told him that they wouldn't vote for anyone.

18082. Would you tell us exactly what took place after you and O'Connor left Major Knox's room?—I said, "O'Connor, if you want employment as canvassing agent, I will ask Major Knox for it for you." He said, "I'd like something to do." I then told Major Knox of what occurred, and he said he had no objection to employ him.

18083. You then told Major Knox that they wouldn't vote for anyone?—I did.

18084. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Were not you aware previous to that that if a voter was employed as a canvasser, he could not vote?—I was not.

[Receipts produced.]

18085. Are these the two documents that were signed by the O'Connors?—They are.

18086. The receipt was as follows:—"Received from William Lawder, esq., conducting agent for Major Knox, the sum of £10, being the return as canvasser for the coming election for the borough of Sligo—Michael O'Connor."

[A similar receipt was signed "Patrick O'Connor."]

18087. The Chief Commissioner.—That is the only retainer they got—that is the only communication that passed between you?—I never promised, or gave any more.

18088. Who drew up that receipt?—It was drafted by a barrister.

18089. Ten guineas for a barrister is a fair retainer?—I was authorized to do it.

18090. Was the word "retainer" mentioned on that occasion?—Not by me.

18091. Of course if their services were very great it was understood that there would be more to pay them?—It wasn't understood by me. They might look to Major Knox for it afterwards if they thought proper.

(The witness withdrew.)

Rev. James Casey, sworn and examined.

Rev. James Casey.

18092. The Chief Commissioner.—Were you here at the last election?—I was in town, though I couldn't say I was one of the staff, as I was engaged in collecting for the Cathedral from September to Christmas.

18093. Were you in town on the day of the election?—I was. I live in the presbytery.

18094. Do you know anything about the country people coming into town?—I saw a good deal of them in town.

18095. Do you know where they were paid or fed?—I don't think they were hired.

18096. We now know that there was money given for their support, and that they were paid?—I can't say I know it of my own knowledge—no money came through my hands. I thought there was money given for refreshments. I heard they were looking for refreshments—that's generally the case.

18097. Who were giving the money?—I got no money. It was understood, I believe, that some friends of Captain Flanagan gave money—that was since mentioned here; and also that they had it distributed among them. I know nothing more about it.

18098. Who were the people you heard gave the money?—I heard some friends of Captain Flanagan gave it.

18099. Who were they?—I heard Mr. O'Loghlen gave it, but I can't say that what I heard was the truth. We heard a great many rumours, we could hardly attach credence to anything we heard at the time.

18100. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Did anyone tell you that Mr. O'Loghlen was giving money to the country people?—I have no distinct recollection. I suspect that, if it was given, it came from the friends of Captain Flanagan. I didn't myself see any money given.

18101. Were you in the parish church on the Sunday before or after the election?—I was not the Sunday after. I don't believe I was there on the Sunday before the election. I had no duty to do there. The staff was complete without me. I was only attending to the quest, to the collection for the cathedral. I gave some assistance in town while in town. I wasn't in the church the Sunday after the election.

18102. Do you recollect anything about the words the bishop was stated to have said about "the rotten branches"?—I heard persons speak of them.

18103. Did you hear the bishop himself use the words—it was before the election he used them?—I might have heard some of his words. I may have dropped into the sacristy and heard; there is no very distinct impression on my mind about them. I know they were spoken to me by others.

SIXTEENTH DAY.

October 23.

18104. They were, I believe, the subject of conversation in the town?—Yes, they were; all the discourses of the bishop at that time were the subject of conversation in the town.

18105. Would you tell us, as far as you recollect, what impression these particular expressions about "rotten branches" produced on the people?—The impression was that it was a strong exhortation to them to do their duty at the coming election. There was some figurative allusion made by these words to the ancient Church, I believe.

18106. Did the people understand by it that those who voted for Major Knox were to be considered rotten branches. I am not now speaking of your own impression?—There was before the election, I understand, a rumour that some would not vote as they were expected, and they thought the bishop's words strong language exhorting them to do their duty.

18107. Did they understand by that strong language that those persons who voted for Major Knox were to be considered rotten branches?—I don't think they did.

18108. What did they understand by it?—I don't know that the words made any allusion to them in respect to the election. I don't know how it was applied to them at all as they had not voted at the time.

18109. So that no one applied it to himself?—I dare say it was meant figuratively to apply to them.

18110. Did they understand that the term was applied by the bishop to those who voted for Major Knox—he was talking about the future?—I don't believe that any intelligent Catholic thought they would be cut off in any way at all; there wouldn't be sufficient ground for it. How the bishop applied the figure of speech I don't know.

18111. Were you in the parish church on Christmas day?—Not in the morning; I was assisting at the collection.

18112. Was anyone ordered to leave any part of the church while you were there?—No. I heard of the circumstance.

18113. Was it the subject of conversation?—It was among the collectors and some other persons.

18114. Can you recollect what the conversation was?—It was to the effect that some person in the congregation was asked to come down stairs and kneel in the porch, and that he went away; and that another came back and their money was handed to them. There was some conversation of that kind with the collectors.

18115. Had you at any time anything to do with removing from the church anyone who voted for Major Knox?—I hadn't. It never was done in my presence.

18116. You had no external parish?—I have now.

18117. Had you at the time of the election?—I hadn't. My whole duty was to make the collection for the cathedral.

18118. Do you know of any directions from the altar or otherwise given by priests to their flocks to come into Sligo on the day of the election?—I don't. Whether they expressed a wish or not that they should come in, I don't know.

18119. You never heard them do so?—No. They might have done it without my knowledge.

(The witness withdrew.)

James Balfour

James Balfour sworn and examined.

18120. The Chief Commissioner.—Where do you reside?—In Sligo.

18121. Did you vote at the last election for the borough?—I did.

18122. For whom did you vote?—For Major Knox.

18123. Did you canvass anyone at the last election?—I asked Ned Crummy to vote for Major Knox.

18124. Tell us what occurred when you asked him to vote for Major Knox?—You will allow me to explain?

18125. I will?—Mr. Hans Morrison was a very intimate friend of mine, and I asked him a question—if there was any harm or breach of the law to ask a person to leave the town, for me to pay his expenses, and to remunerate him for his loss of time when he came back. He said it wasn't, provided I didn't speak of the election or of voting; I was to exclude that entirely.

18126. You were to omit the part of Hamlet?—I did.

18127. What occurred then?—I met Edward Crummy, I asked him if he'd like to go to Dublin. He said he didn't care, if his expenses were paid; but he couldn't go away at the time; but, he said, at the end of a job he was then doing he would tell me if he'd go. After two days he told me distinctly that he was determined not to leave town, but to vote for Captain Flanagan. I said it was the most manly thing to stay at home.

18128. Is that the whole transaction?—It is.

18129. How much did you understand he was to get to go away?—£20 or £30 I would pay him if he went away.

18130. Would you give him that sum?—Certainly I would.

18131. Whom did you expect would repay you?—After the election I think I would be entitled to ask Major Knox or his friends for the money. If he had not done so I would give the money out of my own pocket.

18132. Do you know Captain Ethelred Knox?—No, not intimately; I do by sight.

18133. Had you any intimation that he had money?—No. We supped together once at the Masonic Lodge—that was the only time I met him.

18134. Did you know anything of Stokes's proceedings?—I heard many reports—town-talk.

18135. Can you give any information respecting the country people who came into the town armed with revolvers?—I can't. With regard to the violence on the day of the election and the day of the nomination, I certainly observed myself men from the country, whom I didn't know, come in for mischief. On the day of the nomination I went down the street, and I observed at the market cross six or seven stout fellows with sticks, and the same number opposite my own house, and that extended as far as High-street.

18136. How many were there?—From six to eight—I took particular notice of them.

18137. How many were there altogether?—There were five parties of six or eight men each—the town was full of strangers.

18138. Did you speak to any other voter as you spoke to Crummy?—No. I got frightened. It looked so absurd. I was very glad when Crummy told me he would stop at home. It struck me at the time that it was nonsense to keep out of the way.

18139. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—You live in Sligo?—I do.

18140. How long are you living here?—I am in it over thirty years.

18141. How often have you voted at elections for the borough?—I voted only six times.

18142. Did you vote for Mr. Macdonogh?—I did once.

18143. Was that at the 1865 election?—I forget. I think it was at his first election I voted for him. I afterwards voted for Sergeant Armstrong, 18144. Did you ever vote for Mr. Wynne?—I did.

18145. Did you ever vote for Mr. Somers?—Never.

18146. Which was the first election at which you voted?—The first time I voted was at Mr. Townley's election. After that I abstained from voting until Mr. Wynne's election. I gave Mr. Wynne my support twice.

18147. Do you recollect accurately the two elections at which Mr. Wynne was a candidate?—I don't.

18148. The first was in 1857, the second in 1859; in 1859 he was returned by a large majority?—That was his first election.

18149. No, it was his second. Do you recollect hearing anything about money going at his last election in 1859?—Not a word. I never mix myself up in politics. I give my vote, but I never give a penny to them to support a candidate. I don't care for his politics—what I look to is, his suitability to benefit the town in the way of establishing works and manufactures for the employment of the poor people. Townley said he would do that, and I voted for him, though he was a rank Radical.

(The witness withdrew.)

Edward Crummy again appeared on the witness table. Edward Crummy.

18150. The Chief Commissioner.—You can give us no further information about the election?—Not at all. I thought I was very badly used by the mob. They broke a vast quantity of glass in my windows. I voted according to my conscience, and they broke my windows.

(The witness withdrew.)

William Heron sworn and examined. William Heron.

18151. The Chief Commissioner.—What are you?—I am a farmer, and surveyor in the employment of Colonel Cooper.

18152. Did you pay a man namd Hickson a sum of money after the last election?—I did.

18153. How much did you pay him?—Nine pounds odd.

18154. What did you pay it for?—Because Mr. Molony wrote to me demanding payment.

18155. What for?—For the support of men during the election.

18156. When?—It was the night before the election.

18157. Were these men armed?—They weren't to my knowledge. I gave express directions not to bring a stick with them.

18158. How long after the election did you pay the £9 odd?—I can't say. I suppose it was somewhere about a month or more.

18159. You are sure you paid it?—I know I did.

18160. Did anyone give you that money?—No.

18161. Then you are out of it yourself?—I am.

18162. Did you ever apply to Major Knox for it?—Never.

18163. Why did not you?—Because I can't claim it from him.

18164. Did you apply to anyone else?—I went to Carrick to see Mr. Lawder about it, but he wasn't at home.

18165. Do you expect to be paid it?—I am afraid I have a very bad chance of it.

18166. Who told you to bring in the men?—Mr. Lawder was the conducting agent for both the county and borough elections, and this brought me into relation with him. I had to make a list of the county voters, and it was contemplated to bring into the town country friends, lest they should be carried away by the opposite party. Mr. Lawder asked me to organise a number of men to watch these people, and to keep order in the town. I did so.

18167. You did it for the county and borough elections?—No, not for the borough at all.

18168. When did these young men come to town, for the purpose of, as you say, watching the voters and keeping order?—The evening before the nomination day.

18169. The county nomination day?—No, the borough nomination day.

18170. How many of them came in altogether?—I should suppose close on sixty.

18171. At what houses did they put up?—At Hickson's, Ryan's, and Buchanan's on the Mall.

18172. These men were used at the borough election, too—they were friends of Major Knox's?—They were supposed to be so, but they ran away in the morning, and I didn't see them since.

18173. Have you a list of them?—I had. I was searching for it. I came away quickly from home, and I couldn't get it. I can tell you the names, if you wish for them.

18174. How much were you to pay for them?—Eight shillings a day, while they were employed at the county election.

18175. What were they supposed to do for that?—They were supposed to conduct in the voters from the disturbed parts of the town—several of them continued in employment for the county election.

18176. Eight shillings a day and their food was what they were to get?—Yes. I ceased to have anything to do with it, when I found they ran away. I felt I was disgraced. I thought it was a shabby thing to do. I didn't understand what I was about when I undertook this business. I must say also, I reported to Mr. Lawder when I came into town the next morning, that I had these men there, and he wasn't well satisfied with me apparently.

18177. At what hour of the night did you bring them in?—It was evening—it was then the short days of November or October.

18178. Did you actually pay these men?—Some were paid all; some got five or six shillings.

18179. How much went through your hands?—Twenty pounds.

18180. Have you been repaid it?—Never.

18181. Was it £20, including the £9 10*s.*?—No.

18182. Then it was £30 altogether?—About that.

18183. Were you present at the fight on the morning of the election?—There was a scrimmage, two men were cut, and they all then ran away.

18184. What was the object of getting these men into the Court-house?—It was to get a hearing for Major Knox. Mr. Lawder afterwards said I was a d——d fool, that I didn't know what to do. Some attorney from Carrick told me it was better to let the men fill the Court-house in order to give courage to Major Knox's friends. I told the men to do so, but when two of them were beaten they all ran away, and weren't since seen.

18185. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Would you apply to Major Knox for any money that was expended by you?—Never. I never applied for it.

18186. Would you have applied but for the Carrick trial and this Commission?—I think that I was led into it innocently, and that I should not be at the loss of the money. I don't know whether I could substantiate my claim. I acted only in what I thought would please the parties, and in a way by which, as I thought, I was making a friend of Major Knox.

18187. Would not you have applied to Major Knox for your money, but for the Carrick trial and this Commission?—No, but to Mr. Lawder.

18188. As representing Major Knox?—Just so. I never would have brought these men into town, but that he asked me to have them in for the county election. When I told an attorney, who was stopping at the hotel, that Mr. Lawder spoke to me about getting in the voters and the other men, he said if I could bring them into the Court-house—if there were a few in—to help the show of hands, and get Major Knox a hearing, it would be a good thing.

18189. Did you see any of Major Knox's friends armed with arms?—Not one. I went away the evening of the day of the nomination. I wasn't in town during the election.

18190. When did the men go away?—The morning of the nomination.

(The witness withdrew).

Andrew O'Beirne.

Andrew O'Beirne sworn and examined.

18191. The Chief Commissioner.—Did you vote at the last election?—I did.

18192. For whom?—For Major Knox.

18193. Whom did you vote for at the election before it?—For Sergeant Armstrong.

18194. Did you get any money after that election?—I did.

18195. From whom?—From Mr. Poe.

18196. How much did you get?—Fifteen pounds.

18197. Did you ever get any money before that?—I didn't.

18198. Whom did you vote for before Sergeant Armstrong's election?—I hadn't been in the town before that.

18199. Then Sergeant Armstrong's election was the first you ever voted at?—It was.

18200. Had you belonged to the Liberal party here?—I am a Catholic.

18201. Were you in Mrs. Hall's house during the last election?—I was.

18202. Who brought you there?—Myself.

18203. How long before the election had you determined to vote for Major Knox?—I promised him eighteen months before the election.

18204. Was there any account paid for you?—No.

18205. By anyone?—By no one.

18206. Did Michael Hunt speak to you about the election?—I had nothing to do with him.

18207. What business are you in?—The drapery business.

18208. Are you a customer of Brown, M'Conkey and Co., Dublin?—I am a customer of Crowe, Wilson and Co., Lower Bridge-street, Dublin.

18209. Do you know a traveller named Perkins?—No.

18210. That travels for Brown, M'Conkey and Co.?—I don't.

18211. Was any account paid for you in Crowe, Wilson and Co.'s house?—No.

18212. Did you get no promise at the last election? Of money?

18213. Yes?—No. I never asked for it.

18214. Did no one speak to you about money matters in connexion with your vote?—Not a sinner. I never had much conversation with anyone about it, except Major Knox, and I promised him eighteen months before.

18215. Would you take money after this election, as you did after Sergeant Armstrong's?—I dare say I would.

18216. How much—what is the lowest sum you would take?—I don't know what I could get.

18217. Do you expect any money?—Not now.

18218. Did you expect any?—No.

18219. What do you mean by "not now"?—I mean to say that, in consequence of all the trouble of affairs that is passing about, I expect that no money will be given to anyone.

18220. In consequence of the petition and this commission—suppose that there was no petition, would you have expected money?—I can't say whether I would or not. I never was promised any.

18221. Suppose that Major Knox was member for Sligo, and that there had been no petition, would you, according to the usual course of things, expect any money?—I would expect my share as well as another.

18222. Did you then—though there was no promise—expect that there would be money given?—I didn't know whether there would or not.

18223. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Did anyone canvass you to vote for Captain Flanagan?—The first time he came to Sligo, there were two gentlemen came with him to me; one was Captain Wynne, I don't know the others name. At this time there was no sign of Parliament being dissolved, and I said to Captain Flanagan that it was too early to canvass anyone.

18224. Did Captain Flanagan ever ask you to vote for him?—He did.

18225. Did anybody else ask you to vote for Captain Flanagan?—Yes.

18226. Who did?—Father Morris.

18227. When?—About a month or six weeks before the election.

18228. What did he say to you?—He asked me if I would vote for Captain Flanagan. I said not, that I had promised to Major Knox, and that I couldn't go back of my word.

18229. What did he say to that?—He said I ought vote for Captain Flanagan, he being a Liberal. I said I couldn't help it, that I had promised to the other, and that I wouldn't go back of my word.

18230. Did he go out then?—He did.

18231. Did he tell you it would be a sin to vote for Major Knox?—Never.

18232. Did anyone threaten you with the consequences, if you would vote for Major Knox?—Never.

18233. Why did you go to Mrs. Hall's?—Because I thought I would be safer there on the day of the election in coming to the poll, than I would be in my own house.

18234. What made you think that?—I knew it by the appearance of things that were carried on in the town.

18235. What kind of appearance was it?—There was a great deal of people in the town, up and down shouting, and between one thing and another the town wasn't in the peaceable state it used to be.

18236. Was there any damage done to your house?—There was.

18237. What damage?—About a month before the election took place, there was a brother's son of mine came one night, and brought a friend of the house; and while there he broke the windows.

18238. Was that all the damage that was done to you?—That was all.

18239. And that was done by your brother's son?—Yes; I never said anything about it.

(The witness withdrew.)

Thomas Leonard.

Thomas Leonard sworn and examined.

18240. The Chief Commissioner.—Do you know Tom Brennan?—I do.

18241. Did he ever give you any money?—He did.

18242. Tell how much he gave you altogether?—The first was a half sovereign of a Saturday night in July; the next was £3 in Taylor's garden; the next was a sovereign in a lane near Mr. Wynne's place.

18243. Did Major Knox ever give you money?—Several times.

18244. How much did he give you?—Two pounds one time on the Mall; £1 at the cemetery for going for a car for him; £2 at Mr. Leech's; £7—£5 for John Henry, and £2 for myself.

18245. Were you drinking all this time you were getting the money?—An odd drop.

18246. What did you do with the money you got—did you divide it?—No; I kept every shilling of it; it was all for myself.

Thomas Leonard.

18247. How much did you get altogether?—Twelve pounds, and one pound thirteen shillings from Brennan.

18248. Do you know Mr. Hignell?—Yes.

18249. Did he ever give you any money?—Not to my recollection.

18250. Did anybody else give you any money in connexion with the election?—I got seven shillings from Mr. Gillmor, I think.

18251. Did you ever see Mr. Hignell buying some beer?—I did. I was in Mr. Hunt's bar taking some drink, and Mr. O'Farrell and Mr. Hignell came in and ordered a barrel of beer to be sent to Mr. O'Farrell's. Mr. Hignell put his hand into his pocket, but I can't say whether he paid for it or not.

18252. Did you ever bring John Henry to Major Knox?—Never.

18253. Where was John Henry on the day of the polling?—I don't know. I was in Mrs. Hall's when his wife and my wife took unwell.

18254. For whom did he vote?—He voted for Captain Flanagan, I think.

18255. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Do you swear you got £5 from Major Knox to give to John Henry?—I do.

18256. Did you give it to him?—I didn't.

18257. Why not?—Because I was a poorer man than he was. I thought it was no harm to keep it.

18258. Did you tell him that you got it for him?—I told him a little while afterwards.

(The witness withdrew.)

Daniel M'Goldrick sworn and examined.

Daniel M'Goldrick.

18259. The Chief Commissioner.—Had you a vote at the last election?—I had.

18260. Whom did you vote for?—For Captain Flanagan.

18261. Was there any offer made about your vote on the other side?—When I was going to register my vote, I was called off by Mr. Stokes; he offered me £15.

18262. What did you say?—I said I would go home and consult the woman at home about it.

18263. Did you consult her?—I spoke to her about the £15, and she said it was very good. She advised me to take it. I said I would do no such thing. I went up and registered my vote, and I had no more to say to them.

18264. Did you vote for Sergeant Armstrong?—I had no vote then.

18265. Then you never voted before the last election?—Never.

18266. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Whom do you say you voted for at the last election?—Captain Flanagan.

18267. Did you think you would make more money by your vote being registered than by its not being registered?—I didn't.

18268. Did you ever expect you would get any money for voting for Captain Flanagan?—I didn't.

18269. Do you swear that?—I didn't.

18270. Would you take money, if it was going?—I wouldn't like to refuse it.

18271. Did you ever hear that money was going before the election?—Never.

18272. Or that men got money after Sergeant Armstrong's election?—No.

18273. But you wouldn't refuse it if it was going on Captain Flanagan's side?—I wouldn't like to refuse it.

(The witness withdrew.)

John Conington sworn and examined.

John Conington.

18274. The Chief Commissioner.—What are you by trade?—A cooper.

18275. Had you a vote at the last election?—I never had a vote.

18276. Were you present when a conversation was deposed to here yesterday?—I wasn't here. I didn't like to be in this place at all.

18277. Did you hear any offer made to Felix Farrell—first, do you know him?—I do.

18278. Do you know David Frizelle?—I do.

18279. Did you hear any offer made to Farrell?—Never.

18280. Did you hear anything said to him about a pound of cake?—I didn't. I never was in his company about this election, except being a working man.

18281. Do you know nothing of money being going at the last election?—Nothing but hearing the noise of the people.

18282. Did you tell anybody that, if he went with you, you would give him £20?—Never.

18283. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Do you remember being in Buchanan's hotel?—Never, except in the Coopers' society rooms.

18284. Were you ever in Farrell's company in Frizelle's?—Never.

18285. Did you never hear about the £20 before Never, until I heard of it now.

(The witness withdrew.)

Andrew Green sworn and examined.

Andrew Green.

18286. The Chief Commissioner.—Did you accept a bill for Mr. Cherry?—I did.

18287. What day was it you accepted it?—I can't tell.

18288. Just about the time of the election, was it, do you recollect?—I dare say I did.

18289. For how much?—I don't recollect. I have accepted bills before and since a dozen times.

18290. Had that bill mentioned here anything to do or say to the election?—Nothing.

18291. You are sure as to that point?—I swear it positively.

18292. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—You are a friend of Mr. Stokes?—I know him very well.

18293. Had he canvassed you at the last election to vote for Major Knox?—Never, or at any election.

18294. Did you vote at the last election?—I did.

18295. For whom?—For Major Knox.

18296. Are you aware of money being promised to any of the voters?—I am not.

18297. Or that they got any money?—I am not.

18298. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—With regard to this bill, was it a bill which Mr. Cherry drew on you and which you accepted?—I don't recollect.

18299. You may have accepted it?—I may, I may have drawn on him, or he may have drawn on me. I know nothing particularly about it.

SIXTEENTH DAY.
October 23.

John Henry again appeared on the witness table.

John Henry.

18300. The Chief Commissioner.—Go on now with any statement you wish to make?—Michael Mulligan a few days before the election coming to me, asked me if I could accommodate some country people, I said yes. He brought in thirty men whom I gave bread and tea. He paid me £15 afterwards. That was all the money I ever received from him. I didn't look after it. I had nothing to do whatever with money on either side. The £15 I got I didn't know whether it was election money or not.

18301. Is that all you wish to say?—Yes, that's all.

18302. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Had Mr. Petrie any conversation with you?—Yes. I got no money from him, I told you yesterday about that.

(The witness withdrew.)

Patrick Marren.

Patrick Marren sworn and examined.

18303. The Chief Commissioner. — Are you a publican?—Yes.

18304. Are you an elector?—I am.

18305. Did you vote for Captain Flanagan at the last election?—I did.

18306. Were any of the country people in town treated at your house?—Certainly not, though it was alleged here that they were.

18307. Did you get any money at the last election?—I got no money but £5 from Brennan for cars.

18308. That is Brennan who was acting for Major Knox?—Yes. I got it about five minutes before the election, for cars.

18309. Did you get no money for meat or drink supplied to the mob?—I didn't.

18310. Did you see the country people come to your place?—No, they didn't come near me. I am an old man, and I don't interfere in elections.

18311. For whom did you vote at the election before the last?—For Sergeant Armstrong.

18312. Did you hear of any money going after that election?—I did. I heard from £15 to £20 was given.

18313. Did you get any of it?—I understand it was got in my place, but I wasn't there.

18314. How much was got in your place?—I understand that £20 was paid in my place to my wife.

18315. Did you ever get money before that?—I often got money at elections.

18316. What money before that did you get?—I got no money from Mr. Townley.

18317. How much did you get after Townley's election?—£10.

18318. From whom did you get it?—From Mr. O'Connor.

18319. Did you vote for Sadleir?—I did.

18320. Did you get money after that election?—I didn't.

18321. Were you paid for treating the mob?—I think there was some treating at the time.

18322. How much were you paid?—I can't tell.

18323. Fifty pounds?—No, nor £5—I think it was something about £4 10*s.*

18324. Do you recollect Somers's election when Wynne beat him?—I do.

18325. For whom did you vote at that election?—For Somers.

18326. Did you ever get any money from Somers?—He hadn't it to give.

18327. Mr. Commissioner Bruce. — Or from any friend of his?—Certainly not.

18328. Was there any treating after Somers's election?—No, they treated themselves, they drank their own money—there was no alternative.

18329. You stated that £20 was given to your wife after Sergeant Armstrong's election?—She told me so herself.

18330. Who gave it to her?—I can't say.

18331. Did she tell you of it soon after she got the £20?—I wasn't at home at the time. I was in gaol.

18332. You knew it was for your vote?—I didn't know what it was for, but it's likely it's the case.

18333. You suspected it was because you voted for Sergeant Armstrong?—I heard a rumour of it.

(The witness withdrew.)

Michael Mulligan.

Michael Mulligan sworn and examined.

18334. The Chief Commissioner. — Are you an elector?—Yes.

18335. Did you vote at the last election?—I did.

18336. Who did you vote for?—For Captain Flanagan.

18337. Did you vote for Sergeant Armstrong?—No, sir.

18338. Was any money offered to you at the last election?—Well, I will explain the whole thing to you. There was one night I was coming from the house, and as I was passing by Castle-street, I met with a neighbour boy of my own that was reared in the same townland from where I am, from down in Grange.

18339. Did you go to Mr. Cherry's?—It was outside the door the boy was talking to me. I think he was sweeping the place when he remarked me, and he spoke to me and we chatted awhile, and Mr. Cherry happened to come by at the same time, and he was very kind to me.

18340. What did he say to you about the election?—He asked me how I was. He asked me had I a vote, and I said I had. Then he said will you come in and rest awhile.

18341. Did he make you any offer?—He asked me if I would leave the way and not vote, and he would be thankful to me and serve me.

18342. Did he say what you were to get? Did he mention any figure?—Well, then I told him I would make up my mind and we parted, and I went home and said I would come the night afterwards.

18343. Did you come the night afterwards?—I did not, sir.

18344. Did he ever say you were to get thirty thanks?—Well, then the night after I did not come.

18345. Did he ever say you were to get thirty thanks?—Yes, sir, there were words about that.

18346. What did he say to you about the thirty thanks?—He said I would get thirty thanks if I would leave the way.

18347. Where were you to go to?—I think to Longford.

18348. Who was to take charge of you in Longford?—He did not tell me.

18349. How long was that before the election?—Oh, a few days.

(The witness then withdrew.)

Henry Dignam.

Henry Dignam sworn and examined.

18350. The Chief Commissioner.—Had you a vote at the last election?—No.

18351. Did any money pass through your hands about the election?—Yes.

18352. How much?—Thirty pounds.

18353. Who gave it to you?—Mr. Molony sent it to me.

18354. What did you do with it?—I gave it to the party I understood it was for.

18355. Who was that?—It was the mob of Sligo—at least part of the mob.

18356. Did you distribute the whole of that amongst them?—I did.

18357. Have you any relative a voter?—No, sir.

18358. How long did the distribution occupy?—It was something about four or five days before the election that I got the first £10.

18359. Did any other money pass through your hands about the election?—No, sir.

18360. Did you get any other election money?—I got no more. There was a bill paid to me of £2 about four or five months previous to the election.

18361. By whom?—By Thomas Brennan.

18362. We know he was spending money in anticipation of the election. What was the bill for?—For goods.

18363. It was for drink?—Well, it was not for drink; it was for groceries.

18364. Were the groceries supplied to the mob?—It was supplied to some men for part of the mob.

18365. Was that all the bill you were paid about the election?—That was all. There was £2 10*s.* paid for refreshments. I am not sure whether it was after the election or not, by a man named Mulligan.

18366. On whose side was that paid?—On Captain Flanagan's.

18367. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Was it Michael Mulligan?—Yes, sir. He is a countryman.

18368. The Chief Commissioner.—Do you know of any other similar expenditure?—No, nothing more. Brennan sent a few orders to me at my house at least for some goods to give to these parties about five or six months previous to the election—which orders I have.

18369. Have you them now?—I have.

18370. Are they here?—Yes. (Produced.)

18371. Now this (one of the orders) is dated 10th September, 1868. Were any of these men named in it electors?—No.

18372. They were to get 10*s.* worth of shop goods each?—Yes.

18373. What were these?—Groceries and flour.

18374. How much altogether did Brennan order? Nothing but this.

18375. Mr. Commissioner Bruce. — Have these orders been paid?—None of these paid only £2.

18376. The Chief Commissioner.—And how much is due?—There is about £12 due.

18377. Have you ever applied for payment of that?—No.

18378. Why?—Because I could not get Brennan to apply to him for payment.

18379. But did not you expect to be paid on Major Knox's side?—I expected to be paid by Brennan. If I ever catch him in the town I will sue for it.

18380. Is he a mark for £12?—I think he is; he is a voter here.

18381. You never applied to anyone else for that £12?—Never, for he is the only party I have to look to.

18382. Mr. Commissioner Bruce. — Did Brennan ever tell you he was acting for Major Knox?—No. He often told me he felt an interest in his return, and I knew him to be acting for him, so far as paying money and nothing more. He told me he was acting for Major Knox.

18383. Did you believe he was acting for Major Knox when he was giving these orders?—I did.

18384. Are these parties mentioned in these orders persons who were to have acted in Major Knox's mob?—Well, I do not know if they have acted as mobsmen for Major Knox. I could not say that. I knew Brennan to give these parties who were mentioned here some money previous to the election; at least they told me so.

18385. Mr. Commissioner Byrne. — In the acting on these orders did you expect to be paid by Major Knox or Brennan?—By Brennan.

18386. Did you not believe Brennan was an agent for Major Knox?—I did not believe he was an agent. I did not know how he was connected with Major Knox. I knew he was acting for Major Knox at the time, but I did not know whether he was an agent or not.

18387. Did you not know these orders were given for Major Knox's benefit as regards the election?—I did.

18388. That they were orders given to advance his interest at the election?—Yes, I did.

18389. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Have you a vote?—No, sir.

18390. You say you gave £30—do you know the persons to whom you gave it?—They were Sligo men.

18391. There were a great many country people in the town?—There were during the election.

18392. Do you know who paid them?—I do not know.

18393. You have not an idea at all?—No; I had nothing at all to do with it.

18394. Did you at any time give goods to these country men?—Yes; they got some refreshments in my mother's house.

18395. Did they all pay for them?—They did not.

18396. How many men do you think got refreshments in your mother's house?—I know I gave drink to sixty or seventy or eighty men one morning, when Captain Flanagan came in.

18397. Was that the day Captain Flanagan came into town first—the day of the procession?—There came a lot of countrymen on the day of the procession, and I gave them a glass of whiskey each, and never was paid for it.

18398. Well, I suppose when you gave the men the whiskey you intended to look to Captain Flanagan?—I thought I might have been paid for it, but still I would have given it even though I was not paid myself.

18399. You would not have given whiskey to sixty or seventy men without money?—There were perhaps some twenty or thirty of them customers of my mother's, and I would have given them whiskey. The others were along with them. Certainly I thought I would be paid for it. I showed the amount to Mr. Moloney, and he said to me he would see it all right, and I never asked him since for it.

18400. Was it before the election?—Before the election.

18401. Did you on any other days give any of these men whiskey that they did not pay for?—No, I did not. Some of them got refreshments, and there was £2 10*s.* paid by Mr. Moloney for the refreshments they got.

18402. On the day of the polling did you give any?—I gave no drink that day.

18403. Did none if them come into the house?—They might have been in the house.

18404. Now were there any people in the town in the same business as yourself and mother, who entertained people the same way?—I knew Martin Mulligan to keep some of them, and I knew him to have been paid by his brother at the time he paid me £2 10*s.* for refreshments. He paid his brother something about the same amount.

18405. Had you ever any talk with Mulligan about this giving drink to the people?—No it was not drink; it was eatables. He does not keep a public-house.

18406. Had you any talk with anybody else who gave, or did you see anybody else giving refreshments, or tea to country voters when they came in about the election?—There was another house, but I do not recollect it now. I think there was a man named Reynolds gave refreshments. I cannot swear whether he did give refreshments or not. I saw the people in his house.

18407. Are there any other parties?—I do not know of any other parties at present.

(The witness then withdrew.)

SIXTEENTH DAY.

October 23.

John Atkinson.

John Atkinson sworn and examined.

18408. Chief Commissioner.—Are you an elector?—Yes.

18409. Did you vote for Major Knox at the last election?—I did, sir.

18410. Did you vote for Mr. Macdonogh before that?—No, sir, I never voted before. I voted for Sergeant Armstrong.

18411. Did you get any money after that?—I got £30, about nine or ten months after that.

18412. Who gave it to you?—Mr. Petrie.

18413. Had he canvassed you?—Well, he had.

18414. What is your occupation?—A shoemaker, and I hold a little land.

18415. Did you vote for Sergeant Armstrong because he was a Liberal?—I thought it was nearly equal which I voted for.

18416. Do you mean, you did not care whether you voted for the Conservative or the Liberal?—Not one farthing. I considered one as good as the other.

18417. Who canvassed you at this last election?—Both of the candidates.

18418. When did you promise you would vote for Major Knox?—I did not promise him at all.

18419. You did not promise at all?—No.

18420. But did anybody know you were going to vote?—I think not, but myself. My mind was not prepared at the time.

18421. When did your mind become convinced?—A short time before the polling.

18422. What hour of the day did you vote?—About eleven o'clock, as well as I recollect.

18423. Did you go from your own house to vote?—No, sir, I went from Mr. Woods' house in Castle-street.

18424. Had Mr. Woods canvassed you?—Well, the chief of the Conservative party in Sligo asked me, and this was my answer, that I did not know how I would act, for I had a landlord, and I wished to please him.

18425. Who is your landlord?—Mr. Peter O'Connor.

18426. How long were you at Mr. Woods' house?—Well, I was there the night before the polling.

18427. Who brought you there?—Well, I went there for protection. If I had not been beset in the town before that, I would not have minded. The town was in such a state, that I would rather be there than in my own place.

18428. Were there any voters there?—There was.

18429. Who?—John Robinson.

18430. Did he go with you?—Yes, both went together.

18431. Had you asked Mr. Woods would he give you shelter before that?—I knew he would, sir.

18432. When you went there, had you made up your mind to vote for Major Knox?—Yes, before that.

18433. When did you make up your mind as to what you would do?—Well, I was knocked down in Knox-street by some mobmen. A person followed me into the house and said, if I would not vote for Flanagan he would have the skin off me.

18434. How long was that before the election?—I think it was a fortnight. That was the very cause that made me.

18435. Do you know Mr. Moses Monds?—I do.

18436. Did he ever pay any money for you?—Not one farthing; and I expect you will ask him up to explain himself on that matter. At that time I had no vote, and I had never a dealing with him in any shape or form on electioneering business, and I never spoke about it. I think I will be able to set you right in that. There was a young man named Hart who kept a shoemaker's shop in Market-street, and I think that is the person. He came back to vote for Mr. Macdonogh. I never was in England in my life.

18437. Was a sum of money paid for him?—I never heard it was before, until I saw it in the paper, and I knew this Hart came back. Mr. Monds can be called up and questioned, and if he says I am the man, I am satisfied.

18438. Do you mean to say, you will believe him?—No, I will not believe him.

18439. Had Mr. Woods canvassed you?—He often asked me.

18440. Did he ever intimate money would be going?—No, not a farthing.

18441. When you went there for shelter did you expect money would be given?—No, sir.

18442. But you got a large sum of money before?—I did.

18443. Would you take money now if it was going?—No, not under the present circumstances. I would not. When I saw into the nature of it I would have nothing to do with it though I was often offered it.

18444. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Did you vote for Mr. Macdonogh when he was returned?—I never voted for Mr. Macdonogh. I had no vote at the time Mr. Monds alluded to when he said I came over from Manchester.

18445. Are you aware of any other person named Atkinson who had a vote at the time of Mr. Macdonogh's election?—I am not aware, sir. There are very few of my name in the town.

18446. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Who was it threatened you?—He was a townsman here.

18447. What is his name?—Hennessy.

18448. And they were country people who knocked you down?—I heard they were.

18449. Were they a mob?—I cannot say.

18450. Were there five or six of them together?—When I turned Knox's street some person pointed me out and said there was Knox's man. I had not opened my mind to say who I would vote for and who I would not.

18451. How long before the election was it that you were knocked down?—About a week or ten days. I cannot say.

18452. I suppose you did not go out after that?—Unless my business brought me out I did not.

18453. Did anybody ever assault you after that?—Yes, there was a mob followed me the night I came from Mr. Woods' and struck Mr. Woods at his own door and I got in before him.

18454. Was there any assault upon your house?—There was, sir; it was broken.

18455. Was it wrecked?—No, nothing more than the windows broken.

(The witness then withdrew.)

Charles Grubb was called upon his subpœna, but did not appear. Thomas Brennan was also called upon his subpœna, but did not appear.

Patrick O'Connor.

Patrick O'Connor voluntarily entered the witness-box and said—

"Mr. Lloyd was here a while ago."

18456. The Chief Commissioner.—Do you wish to say anything in reference to what he said?—There was some of it true and some of it not true.

18457. What do you wish to say to the Court in reference to what Mr. Lloyd said?—They brought me down here to say I would be confronted with Mr. Lloyd.

18458. Yes; do you wish to make any further statement about your own evidence or your own version of what occurred?—Yes, the version I gave you yesterday was true.

18459. You say you got a telegram to go up to Dublin just before the election?—Yes, sir.

18460. Who did the telegram purport to be from?—From my own solicitor, sir.

18461. That is Mr. Perry?—Yes.

18462. Did you go up to Dublin?—No, I did not.

18463. Why did you not go up to Dublin?—I did not like to go. The telegram was that I was wanted up to Dublin two days before the election, and it came from the Court of Bankruptcy and Mr. Lloyd told me when he had been arranging with me that he would send a telegram down for me and give me an obvious reason for going away.

18464. Was the telegram that you and your father should go up?—Yes.

18465. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Did Major Knox ask you about any voters that you could canvass for him at the time that you were at the Irish Times office with Mr. Lloyd?—He did not, sir. I would not canvass amongst the Tory side. He did not tell me I would be asked to canvass. What I understood was that I was to get the money as canvasser in a formal manner without——(witness hesitated).

Sixteenth Day. October 23. Patrick O'Connor.

18466. You understood you were to get the money as canvasser in a formal manner without what?—I did not mean to canvass for Major Knox, but what I understood was that I was to get the money in a formal manner as a bribe to keep on his side. It was given to me in that way.

18467. But you really were getting the money for staying away from voting?—Yes, sir.

(The witness then withdrew.)

Harloe Phibbs returned to the witness-box and said— Harloe Phibbs.

"My name was mentioned in reference to some conversation with Kelly in Woods's shop."

18468. The Chief Commissioner.—Just state yourself what you wish to say about it?—I heard the man swear something similar in Carrick and I contradicted it there. He said he had been speaking to Woods and that I entered the shop and went from the shop into the office, and that Woods followed me, and that I then came out to him and said that the matter was all right and that he was to get £50. I did not speak to Woods on that occasion. It is quite true I was in the shop, but I went there for a different purpose. His son is a commissioner for taking affidavits and I went in to see if an affidavit had been made, and I did not speak to Woods on that occasion, or on any occasion, about Kelly.

18469. Did you ever say anything about your being authorized to give £40?—Such a thing never occurred with any man.

(The witness then withdrew.)

The Court adjourned until Monday, the 20th December, 1869.

SEVENTEENTH DAY.

Seventeenth Day. December 20.

December 20, 1869.

J. A. BYRNE, Esq., and WILLIAM R. BRUCE, Esq., resumed the inquiry at eleven o'clock this morning.

Captain Ethelred Knox, and Thomas Brennan were called on their subpœnaes, and did not answer.

John Harkan sworn and examined. John Harkan.

18470. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Were you down at Sligo at the election of 1860?—I was.

18471. You know Mr. Randle Peyton?—I do.

18472. He was conducting agent for Colonel Tennison?—He was.

18473. Were you acting for Colonel Tennison?—I was acting for him. I was instructed by Mr. Peyton.

18474. You were Colonel Tennison's counsel?—I was.

18475. And do you remember having an interview with Mr. Peyton in reference to the Colonel's chances?—I read that in the papers the first time I heard of it, and I would be glad if you would let me know what Mr. Peyton said to you.

18476. The substance of Mr. Peyton's evidence is that you called upon him, and told him that Colonel Tennison would have very little chance of success at the election, unless there was some £600 or £700 distributed amongst voters?—I am very sory to contradict Mr. Peyton, but I must say that not a word of that was uttered. I had no mode of calculating, or ascertaining it.

18477. Did you in any way so speak to Mr. Peyton in reference to the necessity of money being distributed amongst the supporters of Colonel Tennison?—I never did, and I did not hear of Colonel Tennison's resignation until the day after.

18478. Have you any knowledge at all of the circumstance which led to the withdrawal of Colonel Tennison?—Not at all. I did not know it until the day after he resigned, and I was taken by surprise, and was very much annoyed at it. I was totally ignorant of it.

18479. Had you any conversation with any of the leading supporters of Colonel Tennison in reference to the necessity of his distributing money?—I am certain I had not, because I had no mode of ascertaining what amount would be required, if it was required, and I studiously avoided, and kept away from it.

18480. Were you present at the election of 1859 when the candidates were Messrs. Wynne, Somers, and Treston?—I am sure I was.

18481. Are you aware of money having been spent on that occasion at that election amongst the voters?—Never aware of a penny being spent in Sligo to this moment, nor did I know directly or indirectly of any man having got one penny of money, nor did I know it until it was reported by the public papers during the Commission.

18482. When you say you are not aware of money being spent amongst the voters, were you present on the occasion of Messrs. Byrne and Tracy, Sergeant Armstrong's friends' coming down?—I came down from Dublin with Mr. Tracy, as counsel for Sergeant Armstrong.

18483. That was at the election I am referring to—the occasion of your coming down some months afterwards?—I am aware of that, and I did come down, as counsel for Sergeant Armstrong, but I am not aware of any money being spent on that occasion, nor could I point out who got money, if any was given.

SEVENTEENTH DAY.

December 20.

John Harkan.

18484. Were you present at the interview at the hotel, at which Messrs. Byrne and Tracy met some of the leading supporters of Sergeant Armstrong?—I was in the hotel; I had a room for myself, but I am not aware of any friends having been there. I know every man in Sligo, and must have known who were there, but I could not point out who it was.

18485. You came down, and were in the hotel?—Yes.

18486. I ask you whether you were present at the interview between Messrs. Byrne and Tracy, and some of the leading supporters in Sligo of Sergeant Armstrong?—I was not aware, but some of them may have come in without my observation. I saw a great many people at the hotel, but I never knew of any of them getting money until it was reported by the press.

18487. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Did you know what you were coming down for?—As the legal adviser and friend of Sergeant Armstrong.

18488. Legal adviser in what matter?—In defraying the expenses which he thought he was liable to pay, such as hotel expenses and whatever it was.

18489. But did he consult you with regard to the payment of any expenses?—He did not. He never asked me a question about it.

18490. And you, I suppose, did not make any inquiries?—I did not make any inquiries, and I never heard of paying money to voters, but paying expenses belonging to the election.

18491. That is what he told you?—That is what Mr. Tracy told me.

18492. It is an admitted fact that he came down with Mr. Byrne to distribute £1,480?—I never heard of that until I saw it in the press, nor did I know Sergeant Armstrong spent any money until I saw it in the press.

18493. When did Colonel Tennison resign in 1860?—Well, I cannot recollect, but I am quite certain, and I am positive that I did not know of his resignation until the day afterwards, and as far as I recollect, the first intimation I had was a public letter written by some gentleman.

18494. You say you are well acquainted with Sligo?—I am.

18495. Do you mean to say you never heard reports of extensive bribery?—Indeed I do not. I did hear reports of extensive bribery.

18496. Did you ever hear of any bribery in 1859, the time that Messrs. Somers, Wynne, and Treston were candidates?—Well, I do not think any of the parties except Treston had any money to give in bribery.

18497. Well, had Treston?—I might safely say the same of him.

18498. Was it reported that any money was going?—No.

18499. When Mr. Somers was unseated owing to the poll books being tampered with in 1857, had you heard there was any bribery on Mr. Somers' part?—Certainly not. Mr. Somers, I think, had not one penny to bribe with.

18500. But I am speaking of reports. You say you have heard there were reports about bribery. Did the reports extend to this particular election?—As far as my recollection goes I think not.

18501. When you speak of reports you are referring to Sadlier and Townley's election?—Yes, and the two subsequent elections—the election at which Mr. Macdonogh was candidate and Sergeant Armstrong. In fact I never knew of anyone having received a penny in the town as a voter.

18502. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—You having been down in 1859, had you opportunities of forming an opinion whether that was a pure election or not?—Well, I never had opportunities of forming an opinion. I avoided and kept myself from any knowledge of that question.

18503. I am not speaking, of course, in reference to actual knowledge on your part, but I wish to ask you as a gentleman thoroughly acquainted with Sligo, your opinion as to whether the election of 1859 was or was not a pure one?—Well, Mr. Somers was a candidate, and I must give you the same answer as I did before. I do not think one penny was spent by any of the three.

18504. So, in your opinion it was a pure election?—I am sure it was a pure election as far as the expenditure of money is concerned.

(The witness withdrew.)

Rev. Owen Feeny.

The Rev. Owen Feeny, P.P., sworn and examined.

18505. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—You are a Roman Catholic clergyman?—Yes.

18506. Are you a Roman Catholic clergyman of the town or neighbourhood?—I was of the town some nineteen years since. I commenced in the town in the year 1832, and continued till the the year 1850.

18507. But you are not now?—I have been parish priest of Riverstown since that period.

18508. How far is that from Sligo?—About ten miles I think—ten Irish miles.

18509. Is that in the neighbourhood of Gevagh?—It is the adjoining parish, but some four or five miles from it.

18510. You recollect the contest between Major Knox and Captain Flanagan?—I did. I was very much here at the time.

18511. Did you take an interest in the contest?—I did, a great interest.

18512. Do you recollect any persons of your flock coming in on the day of nomination or the day of polling?—On the day of nomination, I think there were some from the remote parts of the parish. There were none from my immediate neighbourhood—from Riverstown—but no place more distant; but the north of the parish supplied a few.

18513. Was that the part of the parish which adjoins Gevagh?—Well, it was situated between the parish of Sligo and Gevagh.

18514. It was in the neighbourhood?—It was some seven miles from the town. The parties had more access than any of my people to the town, because they are very much in the turf trade.

18515. Were they near the Gevagh people?—Bordering upon it.

18516. Do you know whether there was any inducement offered to these persons to come in? I suppose they came in as supporters of Captain Flanagan, taking an interest on his side?—Well, I would not say that any of them came in upon that view. Some of them came in upon their business and waited for the issue; and some of them hearing that there was a determination on the part of the opponents — the opponents of the people—to come in a body, in all probability were attracted to the town with an intention of keeping them in check.

18517. In fact to counteract the opposite mob?—I think so.

18518. Do you know of any money being given to any of these persons for anything?—Well, I heard rumours about it, but I know nothing except what I disbursed myself. I gave £1 of my own to some of my people that I found late in the evening without any resources. That is all I know of money transactions connected with anything either at the election or nomination.

18519. From whom did you hear the rumours of money being distributed?—I really could not particularize. I have no doubt that parties might come up to myself, and say that they ought to get something; but I do not know whether they got it or not; but I know applications were made to me, and of course I did not respond to them, except in this one solitary case I speak of.

18520. Were the applications numerous?—I think, not very. I had a great deal to do at the time. I was in a very active canvass in every part of the town. You see from the dates I have given you I am very well known in the town, and I was thought to have a great deal of knowledge and influence, and I accompanied Captain Flanagan and assisted at the time of the revision, which was a very interesting scene, and I was at the nomination.

Rev. Owen Feeny.

18521. Could you give us an idea of the number of your parishioners that came in?—Well, at the county election I could not; because I invited my people to go and protect my electors at the county election. I gave no such invitation on any other occasion. I do not know that I directed their attention to the fact—that I was aware of the fact—that a party was hired to come in and maintain Major Knox at the nomination. I saw the parties myself, and was looking on at the conflict.

18522. Did you ever, on any Sunday after mass, say anything about the election?—After mass?

18523. Well, at any time?—I very rarely permit a Sunday to pass without an observation before or after mass.

18524. With regard to this election?—Well, I do not know as to the borough election. I told them, of course, I took an equal interest in the borough as in the county election; and I might have told them that the day of nomination would be so and so, and it would be right for anyone to go into town to show they had an interest in the question at issue.

18525. I suppose any observations of that kind were addressed to the people from the altar, at some period of the service?—Yes.

18526. Was anything said that you recollect, that persons coming into town would be cared for, or would get money to pay for their lodgings?—No, nothing of the kind, nor was I aware of their expectations, until the parties were about leaving in the evening. They made an application to myself, and I responded to it at my own expense.

18527. Did they leave every evening and go back to their houses, and come back the next morning?—I am not aware that they were here on any occasion but one.

18528. Was that the polling day?—The day of nomination.

18529. Do not you think some of them were here on the polling day?—Indeed they might, but I do not know of it. I know I could not have come in contact with them on the polling day, because I was sick after the fatigue of the day.

18530. Was any application made to you by any friend of Captain Flanagan's, to induce your parishioners to come in?—Not that I am aware of. It was not necessary, in fact I was as deeply interested myself as any of Captain Flanagan's friends.

18531. When you say it was not necessary, do you mean they knew you would do it?—I am sure they knew I would.

18532. So that now thinking over it, I suppose you have very little doubt you did recommend the people to come in?—It is very probable I did, but I knew it was not responded to by my own congregation. I have three chapels in the district confided to my care, but it was of course in my own chapel I might have addressed them, and I knew perfectly well that none of the people from that locality came in.

18533. Who were the gentlemen who had charge of the other chapels in that particular parish?—One, the Rev. Mr. Fetherstone, and the other, the Rev. Mr. Judge.

18534. Do you know whether they addressed similar observations to any of their flock?—I am not aware that they did. They got no instructions from me, and it is very likely they did not.

18535. Did any of your flock afterwards tell you whether they had got money or not?—No, never.

18536. Or did you hear it?—I never heard anything, and know nothing about money matters, except what I gave out myself.

18537. It is a very natural thing to have taken place, and you might have heard of it?—Oh, sure they would not come and tell me that they got a shilling to get their dinner. It is such an indifferent thing that they would not speak of it.

18538. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—You said you are aware of a party having been hired for Major Knox?—I was, from rumours, and I recognised them afterwards in the street. There was a great many of them my own parishioners, Protestants, of course. I had no opportunity of knowing them personally.

18539. But you had no other ground for saying that they were hired except rumour?—Well, I was not surprised at reading some of the evidence given in this court on the subject.

18540. But so far as your own knowledge goes, you had no ground for supposing they were hired except rumour?—It was generally understood in Riverstown, that these particular men were retained, and that they were to go down at 8*s.* a head to Sligo, and I had no doubt whatever about it.

18541. You mentioned that you heard rumours in reference to the Liberal mobs; that the country people came in to help Captain Flanagan; you heard rumours of their getting paid?—I did.

18542. Now, from whom did you hear they got paid?—The other Commissioner put that question to me, and I could not say. I declined answering that question. It was a matter that was talked of in the town; and some of the parties came up to me in the town and said, it was too bad not to get something for the men, and I presume, unless they were getting it they would not make an application to me.

18543. In reference to these rumours, did you hear any person's names as having been persons who gave money to Captain Flanagan's supporters?—I could not say that I knew anything about individuals until the investigation was commenced. Of course I am aware now.

18544. What I am now asking you is this, you are saying you heard rumours, I want to know whether the names of any persons were mentioned in these rumours?—Not to my knowledge.

(The witness withdrew.)

Michael O'Loghlen sworn and examined.

Michael O'Loghlen.

18545. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—You were Captain Flanagan's counsel at the election?—No, I was his brother-in-law and I acted for him; Mr. Waters acted as his counsel.

18546. Did you receive a sum of money for disbursement for election purposes?—Yes.

18547. Would you kindly give us the particulars of the disbursements?—I can only state from recollection now. Mr. Lynch gave me moneys, and I have no doubt that the statement he has given is an accurate one, and that the amount I received was something under £500. That is what he said.

18548. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—He said £538, of which £50 was paid to the Mayor?—I think he is right; altogether it was £488.

18549. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—How was that money disbursed?—One hundred and thirty pounds of it was not spent at all.

18550. And the residue?—Two hundred and twenty I handed to Mr. Molony. I may be mistaken as to £1 or so, but I am speaking from recollection. £220 I handed to Mr. Molony for the purposes of the election, and £10 I gave Father Dominick Noon.

18551. That is £360?—I paid over £50 to the Imperial Hotel.

SEVENTEENTH DAY.

December 20.

Michael O'Loghlen.

18552. Fifty pounds to the hotel?—Yes, £50 to the Imperial Hotel.

18553. Any other sum?—The balance, I think, would be about £78, something of that sort; that I spent myself during the months of October, November, and December, for travelling expenses and fees for the revision. There were cases argued in Dublin and I paid for the briefs and fees to counsel and telegrams and postage.

18554. The disbursements of the three months?—Yes.

18555. Does that cover all?—Every shilling.

18556. With respect to the £10 which you gave to Father Noon for what purpose was it?—The same purpose for which I gave the £220 to Mr. Molony, which he has already told you about.

18557. Just mention for what purpose?—In my recollection it was this. Captain Flanagan came from Dromdoe into town here. It was a terribly wet day and numbers of people left town to meet him on the road near Coloony. He came into town accompanied by a large mob of supporters. My recollection is that I gave the £10 to Father Noon for the purpose of giving refreshment to the people who had accompanied him in. In fact there were car drivers and people who wanted to get some refreshments.

18558. For what purpose was the £50 given to the Imperial Hotel?—It was the hotel bill.

18559. Now, were you aware of orders being given to country people to come into town?—I have heard of it, but I know nothing whatever about it.

18560. From what direction are you aware that these country people principally came?—I have heard they came from Gevagh, from Father Feeny's parish, but I knew nothing whatever about it at the time.

18561. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Did you ever hear of any sums being paid to voters for voting for Captain Flanagan?—Certainly not. I may tell you this that no money could have been paid without my knowledge, and I swear most distinctly that not a shilling was paid for bribery on Captain Flanagan's part, directly or indirectly.

18562. Were there any applications made afterwards?—There were.

18563. Would you just state what they were?—I think the applications that were made were only two, as well as I recollect. There may have been three, but I do not recollect more than two. There were no applications made for the payment of money, but there was an application made to me to lend a couple of pounds. There was nothing, in point of fact, in the way of bribery.

18564. A couple of pounds?—I was asked for a couple of pounds—to lend a couple of pounds. I think it right to mention this, and I am glad to have an opportunity of doing so. There were 229 voters polled for Captain Flanagan, and, so far as I know and believe—for it could not have been without my knowledge—not one shilling was paid or promised in the way of bribery.

18565. Do you know Sligo, or rather, did you know it before this election?—I did not know it before the election, but I know it intimately now.

18566. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Were you ever in Sligo before the last election?—I was.

18567. How often?—Well, I really could not say; several times.

18568. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—On election business?—No, my brother-in-law, the late Captain Flanagan lived at Dromdoe, and I used to be on a visit to him, and I sometimes came to Sligo.

18569. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Had you any knowledge of the constituency before the election?—None, but I made myself thoroughly acquainted with it then.

18570. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—When you came down were you aware of reports that money was necessary?—I had heard it.

18571. Had you heard anything with regard to the manner in which bribery was generally conducted?—I had.

18572. What had you heard?—I had heard about Sergeant Armstrong's election and that large sums had been paid after that election; but I came here perfectly determined, with Captain Flanagan's directions, that one shilling should not be spent in bribery in Sligo.

18573. But from what you had heard had you come to the conclusion that bribery here was principally carried out by payment of money after the election?—I have heard it since, but I had not heard it previous—not that I recollect. But I wish to say, as I see what that applies to, that there was no consideration, no question whatever, that there was any money to be paid afterwards.

18574. I am not saying that there was on Captain Flanagan's side?—I can assure you, all I can say is, that I do not believe he would have lent himself to it, and I would not.

18575. You had heard of Sergeant Armstrong's payments?—Yes, I had.

18576. Had you heard of the large sum that was paid afterwards?—I believe I had heard to a penny what he had paid.

18577. And all the circumstances?—And all the circumstances.

18578. Who had you heard it from? From Mr. White, the barrister?—No, I had not heard it from him. I heard it afterwards.

18579. Who did you hear it from in the first instance?—My impression is that I heard it from Mr. Dan Tracey.

18580. And had you heard anything of the payments made by Mr. Macdonogh?—I knew nothing whatever about it.

18581. Do you know anything at all whether there was what we would call an organized mob on Captain Flanagan's side at the last election—I am not speaking of watchers, but whether there was anything in the nature of a mob for the purpose of intimidation?—Well, not for the purpose of intimidation, but I have no doubt whatever, for I saw the mob myself.

18582. But had the mob the appearance of being organized—acting under a leader—I know very well that these things are managed without the heads of the party knowing much about it?—I cannot exactly say leaders, but I knew there were men who had influence with the mob. There was a mob on Major Knox's side, as I heard at the time, a paid one, and I saw them marching through the streets myself.

18583. Did you hear any particulars of that payment?—At the time I heard they were paid.

18584. Who had paid them?—I was told at the time.

18585. Do you recollect?—I do not recollect the name; but he was a steward of Colonel Cooper's.

18586. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Before the Gevagh men came in, before the country people came in on Captain Flanagan's side, did you ever see mobs on Major Knox's side?—I know nothing whatever about what you assume, that men came in from the country.

18587. I do not assume, because we have it already in evidence?—I know nothing whatever about it. I do not know the difference between the town's people and the country people.

18588. The question I put to you is whether you saw apparently mobs for Major Knox before the country people came in for Captain Flanagan's interest?—Well, I cannot say mobs. I saw a number of people one day marching down here in front of the courthouse in threes and fours, and I was informed they were paid on Major Knox's behalf.

18589. Could you tell me on what day that was? I am speaking now in reference to the nomination. Was it before the nomination?—It was before.

18590. How many days?—I could not charge my memory as to the days, but it was before.

(The witness withdrew.)

Rev. Dominick Noon sworn and examined.

Rev. Dominick Noon.

18591. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—You have a charge in the neighbourhood of Sligo?—I have, about sixteen miles from Sligo—sixteen English miles, or sixteen and a half.

18592. Is that called the Gevagh part of the country?—Gevagh is my residence. It is the name that the parish is generally known by. The ecclesiastical name is Kilmactrenna.

18593. Were you in Sligo during the election?—I was.

18594. And I presume you took an interest in it?—A very great interest.

18595. Upon any occasion previously did you recommend any of your flock to come into Sligo for the borough election?—The Sunday before the nomination day—I was telling them the day of the nomination—there was a rumour going through the country that the Orangemen of Sligo were armed, and that Captain Flanagan or his party would not get a hearing. Captain Flanagan and I were very good friends, and I was once his parish priest, and though I left the parish he resided in I continued in the neighbourhood. The friendship continued, and he used to come and dine with me, and I dined with him, and he was as popular in my parish as in his own. Hearing this report, I said I would be glad to see the people there on the day of nomination. I said that from the altar, and I hoped no man would go there who would bring disgrace on the parish, but I hoped they would go there to show that Captain Flanagan was the popular candidate. I said, "The Conservative press of Sligo is endeavouring to make it appear that Major Knox is the popular candidate, but I hope to counteract that report;" and I said I would be glad to see the people come in, and I dare say about 100 people came in.

18596. Do you think that no more than 100 came in?—No; and I will tell you why. After the nomination was over I was afraid anything would occur, seeing the excitement of the people, and I advised them to go home, and I said I would be very glad to see them home, and I gathered them all here in front of the court-house, and I brought them above the barrack, and I said, "I would be glad if you would go home, and the sooner you go home the better I would be pleased;" and I went with them as far as the new cemetery until I saw them out of the town, and eighty-four was the number. I heard that ten or twelve remained in town.

18597. Did these people return on the day of the polling?—They did not. I did not ask them to come.

18598. To your knowledge they did not?—To my knowledge they did not. There were about twelve which I got myself the week before the election. I think it was I made the suggestion to Mr. O'Loghlen and Mr. Molony that watchers should be put in the town, and I selected twelve steady men myself in order to watch in the different streets. I left four of them in Pound-street, and four in Market-street. I desired four others to go in the direction of Knox-street, and if they saw any attempt to take away the electors they were to report to me at the hotel, and two of them were directed to come to my bedroom and report to me if electors were being taken away.

18599. Mr. O'Loghlen has stated that he gave you £10 for distribution?—He did; I called upon him for £10.

18600. What day was that?—That was about eight days before the election, and I pressed him to give £10 to Gilligan. I gave it to him for the purpose of giving it to the Sligo men. I desired him to select a few steady fellows, and I cautioned him not to take any man who was fond of drink. "I ask you to keep a watch upon the people in your neighbourhood, and there is £10 you will take charge of it, and I hope you will dispose of it properly, and select a few men to help you to watch the suspicious characters in your neighbourhood. This is for the purpose of giving refreshment," and I told Mr. O'Loghlen it could not be confided to a safer person.

18601. Did you know of any other money being given to your flock?—I do not know of a farthing being given to them. I told Mr. O'Loghlen the persons to whom it was intended to go, and he handed me £10.

18602. Were you here on the day of the polling?—I was here for a fortnight or three weeks, and did not leave except on Saturday.

18603. It has been told us in evidence that there was a very large number of country people in town on the day of the polling?—I did not tell you that.

18604. But we have been told it?—I saw very large numbers myself on the day of the polling.

18605. These were not parishioners of yours?—There was not a soul in it that I could recognise except these twelve men. I met two or three men who came in to make markets, and to the best of my knowledge there were not more on the day of the polling, but there were about 100 of them on the day of nomination, and I think before I appealed to them in the chapel, some of them cried out, "Would we require to go down." I said, "I would be glad to see you down, to show that Captain Flanagan is the popular candidate.

18606. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—When you suggested the employment of watchers had you reason to believe that some of the Liberal voters were being bribed to vote against their conscience, or to abstain from voting?—Of course I had no evidence of anything of the kind, but some of the people said Major Knox's friends would bribe. Some of the people said, in the crowd, it is too bad we should lose the election. This was in the lobby of the Imperial Hotel.

18607. Was it these rumours that led you to suggest the employment of watchers?—The rumours that induced me to send out the watchers was—I did not make the suggestion to send out the watchers until I heard that two or three of the party were conveyed off by Major Knox's friends.

18608. When you say that two or three of the party were being carried away, do you mean two or three of the Liberal party?—Yes, of course.

(The witness then withdrew.)

Daniel Tracy sworn and examined.

Daniel Tracy.

18609. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Were you Sergeant Armstrong's conducting agent at the election of 1865?—I was.

18610. How much money was disbursed to your knowledge at the time?—About £500.

18611. Was any of that money given to voters?—Not one penny.

18612. What was the amount of election expenses do you remember that passed the auditor?—I do not remember at this moment.

18613. Now, how was that £500 spent? I wish to get a general outline of the heads of that expenditure of £500?—I came here several times, and in my inquiries I saw that Mr. Gethins, the attorney here, would be a very clever and useful man, and I said to Mr. Gethins I would give him the fee I would have, that I would make him the agent so far as that.

18614. And what was the amount?—There is his receipt for that and for his house as committee-rooms. About £150. All the receipts were lodged with the returning officer.

18615. And you have his receipt for that sum?—The Mayor of the time has it.

18616. That leaves about £350?—I gave him £140

SEVENTEENTH DAY.

December 20.

Daniel Tracy.

to distribute amongst the people here who were favourable to Sergeant Armstrong—not voters—and for watching.

18617. One hundred and forty pounds?—Yes, altogether.

18618. Well, now, was that for the purpose of having persons to cheer Sergeant Armstrong?—Yes.

18619. Mobs in fact?—Well, yes.

18620. How do you account for the rest?—I gave Mr. Macdonagh, an attorney here, £30. May I refer to a little memorandum I made coming down. I gave you £140 for Mr. Gethins.

18621. The figures we have are £150 for Mr. Gethins, £140 for the supporters of Sergeant Armstrong, and £30 to Mr. Macdonagh. Are these figures right?—They are. I received £475 altogether from Sergeant Armstrong, and not one farthing more from the beginning to this moment.

18622. Well, you have already accounted for £320?—I gave Mr. M'Niffe £21 altogether. It is due to him to say that was not for the election. It was about the registry time. He is forthcoming. I gave him £21. I gave Mr. James M'Niffe £10. I paid in car hire to a man named Marin and a person of the name, I think, of M'Goldrick, say about £20. I paid for committee-rooms between £40 and £50. I could ascertain, if you like to know, nearer than that. Now will you tell me what that makes?

18623. That accounts for £421?—Well, then, I came here I suppose half a dozen of times, and what I want to say upon my oath is I spent more than £475, but I could not say how much. I did not retain one shilling of it.

18624. Is that altogether what you disbursed at that election?—There were tally clerks at the election, and some expenses of that kind.

18625. Were these expenses outside the expenses which passed the auditor?—Oh, no. I am sure that Mr. Gethin's receipt went into the auditor; I think it did.

18626. But you spent no more money than that for Sergeant Armstrong at the election?—Unquestionably not.

18627. Were you aware of any other money being spent for him at the time of the election?—None whatever.

18628. Were you aware of Mr. Byrne, Sergeant Armstrong's brother-in-law, having disbursed a couple of hundred pounds at the time of the election or shortly afterwards?—I do not know. I do not recollect now. If I knew what it was for ——

18629. You went down along with Mr. Byrne to Sligo some months after the election?—Yes.

18630. Now, when was that?—I forget the particular date. Oh, it was long after the election.

18631. It was in April, 1866?—April or May, 1866. It was long after the election.

18632. Well, having come down to Sligo, did you meet some of the leading supporters of Sergeant Armstrong in the hotel?—We did.

18633. Was any statement made to you by these supporters as to the necessity of distributing money amongst those who voted for the Sergeant?—We met half a dozen of the friends, and they mentioned that certain sums of money would be wanting and were expected.

18634. If you would try and search your memory, and tell us what was said as to the necessity of distributing money amongst Sergeant Armstrong's supporters—what reason they gave for requiring money. Did they say the Sergeant would not keep his seat unless they kept his friends in good humour?—Well, I do not remember that.

18635. Try and remember what passed—what was said?—The fact of it was, I had the most entire reliance upon the gentlemen who met us upon that occasion, and there never was anyone more taken by surprise than when I found the amount of it.

18636. Did any of these gentlemen mention to you that they had made promises, or given the voters to understand, that they should get some money after the election?—I do not remember that.

18637. Now, try and remember. Did any of them give you to understand that they were placed in an awkward position, and having stood by the Sergeant, and made promises for him, these promises should be fulfilled?—The opinion that I had of these gentlemen was that they would not make any demands that should not be complied with. They were all men I knew had exerted themselves greatly for him.

18638. That is, ought not to be complied with according to the usage of election in this borough?—I do not know anything about the usage in this borough.

18639. Was the impression, then, that this demand being made, you considered it was a fair and proper one according to the usage of things in this borough?—I did not consider it was a fair and a proper one—I could not say that for myself.

18640. No, I do not mean that; but you said you thought those gentlemen would not make any demands upon you that were not according to the usage of the place?—I am sure that no one of them wanted to make anything for himself. Then and now I think that of them.

18641. But did they convey to you anything that, having regard to the state of things and the usage of the place, this money ought to be forthcoming on the Sergeant's part?—I avoided that, and repudiated it. I avoided getting into that with them. It was not like meeting men of another class. They were all respectable men, and I did not like getting into that.

18642. You had a conversation with them in reference to the money, and the necessity of getting money?—We must have had when we met at the hotel.

18643. Well, now, it was a very remarkable conversation, and very important as regards the Sergeant's pecuniary interests. Have you no recollection of the purport of the conversation—why it was stated the money was necessary to be forthcoming?—I do not recollect.

18644. Were expectations referred to?—I do not understand you.

18645. I mean did any of these gentlemen refer to the fact that there were expectations widely existing, so to speak, in the borough on the part of the supporters of Sergeant Armstrong that money should be given?—Surely they would not have asked for the money if it was not expected by them.

18646. Well, you know it is not my duty to reason with you. What I want to get out of you is your recollection, if you have any recollection, of what was said at that interview by those gentlemen or by any of them?—I have not. I remember expressing my great surprise and disappointment. I was exceedingly disappointed at it.

18647. When you expressed your surprise and disappointment, what answer did you get from those gentlemen?—I have no doubt now, though I do not remember the words, that I saw there would be dissatisfaction if it was not complied with.

18648. Dissatisfaction in the town?—Yes, because they represented the town.

18649. That there would be dissatisfaction?—Yes.

18650. And was the impression left upon your mind that the Sergeant's chances at a new election would be impaired if the money was not forthcoming?—I have no doubt I had that impression. Not the least. I received a letter that was referred to, from the Sergeant. I have that letter.

18651. Just hand it up to us. Is this the letter you received before going down?—Yes. [Letter handed in.]

18652. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—It was in consequence of a communication from Sergeant Armstrong that you came down here?—Of course it was.

18653. And you knew that it was to pay money—that money was wanted for the voters—the time you went down with this £1,480?—If it had been left to me I would not have come at all, but I never met a man in my life so unwilling to have an application made to him for money as Sergeant Armstrong; I mean so anxious to discharge anything he owed.

18654. But you came down knowing that some sum was required for the borough?—I thought some small sum was required.

18655. And when did you find out there was a large sum required?—Not until I came here.

18656. It was at that meeting?—Yes.

18657. You summoned that meeting of Sergeant Armstrong's supporters?—I forget whether it was Mr. Byrne or I. One or other of us.

18658. The persons who attended that meeting did not at the first tell you, I suppose, the amount? Had they a consultation amongst themselves in your absence?—I cannot say that. We met together.

18659. Was the question discussed of what the amount was?—It must have been.

18660. Surely you must recollect something about that—it is a very remarkable thing?—Certainly we made up what it came to—about £1,400 or £1,500—as well as I remember.

18661. Did they come with lists of people to whom the money was to be paid out and dry?—I do not remember that. I do not think they did come with lists.

18662. Were the lists then made up in the room?—There were lists. There were lists made up, and I think in the room, and what each man would require to get or want to get.

18663. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—May I ask you had you any communication with the Sergeant as to whether he wished this letter to be produced to us or not?—I have not had directly or indirectly any communication with the Sergeant in reference to that, and it is only right to him to say that directly or indirectly up to this moment, from the time he started for the borough, he never departed from the terms of that letter, and never gave me authority to spend sixpence for him improperly, and at the same time I never met a man more willing to pay everything he ought.

18664. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Unless you wish this letter to be put in evidence, we do not. It completely bears out what Sergeant Armstrong has told us?—Very well. I wish to state that I did not receive your subpœna until this Commission was near adjourning. I do not wish my absence to be considered any want of respect to the Commissioners. I received your letter with other letters.

18665. Do you know anything about previous elections here?—I do not except from newspaper knowledge.

18666. Mr. Byrne told us he expended shortly after the election £280 for election expenses, and I think he said that was by your sanction—that he communicated with you on the subject?—He was in the habit of communicating with me. Sometimes he received letters which I told him to destroy or throw in the fire, and I received numbers myself of foolish letters.

18667. After the election?—After the election.

18668. What was the purport of these letters?—Oh from people wanting money. Not from voters at all.

18669. But did you receive any letters from voters wanting money?—No.

(The witness then withdrew.)

Patrick Marren re-examined.

18670. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—You live in Pound-street?—I do.

18671. Are you a publican?—I was when I was there.

18672. Were you a publican at the time of the last election?—I was, sir.

18673. Were there many people in the town that day?—There were a good many people.

18674. Much drinking going on?—There was none going at my place. I did not get orders for any. It was represented here that that was the case, but it is not so. There were two or three people.

18675. Who were the two or three people with whom it was the case?—Some people before you. I believe M'Garin was one.

18676. I am not speaking of that—do you know of any people who got orders for drinking outside of what you heard here?—Certainly not, sir. I only got £5 for car hire and I told that here to you.

18677. Then you got no orders for drinking at the last election?—I did not.

18678. And heard of none going?—I heard they were going.

18679. Who did you hear that from?—I do not know.

18680. On which side did you hear it was going?—Well, I cannot say, sir.

18681. I am sure you heard that?—I did not. If I did I would tell it here.

18682. Did you ever get orders for drink before?—I did, sir.

18683. From whom—in Sadleir's time?—No, but in Townley's time I did.

18684. I suppose you got some in Mr. Sadleir's time too?—I think I did.

18685. Did you get any in Mr. Somers' time?—I certainly did not.

18686. Did he spend no money in drink?—He hadn't it to spend, sir.

18687. How long have you been an elector?—Something about twenty years.

18688. Did you vote for Sergeant Armstrong?—I did.

18689. Did you get any money for voting for him?—Yes, sir. There was £20 got. I did not see the money.

18690. Were you examined before us?—I was.

18691. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—How much did you get from Sergeant Armstrong?—Twenty pounds. It was not me got it but my wife.

18692. What part of the town is your place of business in?—Up at the far end of the town.

18693. Do you remember Mr. Ball coming down to stand as a candidate?—I do.

18694. Had you any communication with Mr. Ball about his standing as a candidate?—No.

18695. Did he ever speak to you about whether you would support him or not?—No.

18696. Were you aware of any message being sent to Mr. Ball that he should spend a great deal of money in the borough or he would have no chance?—I cannot say that, sir, for things might be passing that I could not account for.

18697. But did you yourself bring any message of that sort to Mr. Ball?—I did not.

18698. Do you know of any other person who did?—I do not, sir. I never spoke a word in my life to him.

18699. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Did you ever get any money from Mr. Sadleir?—Well, I think I did. In about six months afterwards Mr. O'Connor gave me £10 and I think it was for that.

18700. And did you get any money from Mr. Townley?—No, sir. There was money got for drink.

18701. But not for voting?—No, sir.

18702. Did you hear of any money from Mr. Townley for voting?—I did not. Likely they expected it, but I did not hear they got it.

18703. Did you see any money going in Mr. Wynne's time?—I did not.

18704. Did you get money from Mr. Sadleir more than once?—No, I did not.

18705. Did you hear of any others getting money from Mr. Sadleir?—No.

18706. When was the money paid?—Oh, a long time after the election I got it.

18707. And that was the usual way?—Well, I believe so.

SEVENTEENTH DAY.
December 20.

Patrick Marren.

18708. And when you heard that orders were going at this election were you not rather disgusted you did not get some?—I do not know, sir, because there were people going about the street, and I did not go out at all.

18709. You kept yourself quiet?—I did.

18710. Were there many people drinking in your shop that day?—No.

18711. Why was that—there were so many in the town?—They knew there would be no orders and that was the reason.

18712. They might have spent their own money?—I do not think they did. There was something passing in the street like a mob, and I did not interfere to get anybody's custom.

18713. How much money did you get for drink that day?—I never took one shilling in my life for drink.

18714. How much drink did you sell that day?—I do not think I sold 2*s.* 6*d.* worth of drink that day. There were reasons for it.

(The witness withdrew.)

John Mullany

John Mullany sworn and examined.

18715. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Are you a voter?—I am.

18716. Did you vote for Sergeant Armstrong?—I did.

18717. Did you receive £15 after the election?—Well, I did.

18718. Did you receive it from Poe?—I received £7 in cash and an allowance in the house rent to the amount of £15.

18719. And that was in consideration of your voting for the Sergeant?—Well, I believe it was.

18720. How long have you been a voter in Sligo? Well, I was at one time undervalued but in all cases I have been twenty years.

18721. About twenty years you have been a voter for Sligo?—Yes.

18722. Did you ever receive money on any former occasion?—I did.

18723. When?—At the time of Mr. Townley's election.

18724. How much did you receive on that occasion?—Ten pounds.

18725. How long after the election was it you got the £10?—It was a couple of months after.

18726. A couple of months, more or less, you cannot well say?—Yes, it was eight or nine months before I received anything from Sergeant Armstrong. I did not expect it.

18727. But a couple of months after the election you got money from Mr. Townley?—Yes.

18728. Did you get any money on a former occasion for having voted?—I did not.

18729. Did you vote at the last election?—My vote was broken.

18730. You did not vote?—No.

18731. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Did you get any money from Mr. Sadleir?—No.

(The witness withdrew.)

William Petrie.

William Petrie re-examined.

18732. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Do you know a man called John M'Goldrick?—Yes, of Pound-street.

18733. Do you know any voter called John M'Goldrick?—I do, in Pound-street.

18734. Did you ever make him an offer of £40?—Never. It was quite the reverse, and if you will allow me to explain. He came down to our herring yard, and asked to buy herrings. He asked me if there was anything to be got at this election, and I said I did not know whether there was anything going or not. He said he expected something, and I said, "it is likely you will get something if you look sharp." And he talked generally about the election. There were several more people coming in, and he went away, and said he would come back again. Well, I told the man in the yard when he went out, "if he comes back again keep as close beside me as possible, as I think he is wanting to get me into some bother about the election." That was to the man who was attending the yard, and who is there still. He came back again to the herring yard, and talked generally about the election the same way, and last of all, the third time he came into the office. That was three or four days before the election, and he said to me if I would give him £3 and a barrel of herrings, he would go away to Liverpool, as he wanted to buy tallow. I said if it was at any other time I would do it, but I would not give it as the election was coming on; "and you will get nothing from me," said I, and at the same time there was a counsel who was with Major Knox, who came into the office.

18735. Was that Mr. Morrison?—I think it was. I said to him, "Now, M'Goldrick, one farthing you will not get from me for the election, one way or another, and here is Mr. Morrison here in witness that you need not trouble me any more about it." He made three calls upon me, two in the yard and one in the office.

18736. Do you know a man named John Henry?—Yes, that is in Pound-street, too. I spoke to him about July. There were races on the lake. Major Knox came down and had some races. He used to buy some herrings from us, and he came and spoke to me in July, and said he thought he was to go with Major Knox. At that time we thought the Sergeant was coming back again. I said to him, "You scoundrel, is that the way you are going to use Sergeant Armstrong now, after all he has done for you?"

18737. Was Henry one of the men who got money from Sergeant Armstrong before?—Well, no. He was not a voter at that time, but we signed a petition for him to get his pension back. He had a pension which was taken from him. We signed a petition and sent it up to Sergeant Armstrong, and the Sergeant did his endeavours to try and get the pension back.

18738. Did he get it back?—I could not tell, but he said to me, "The Major is an old soldier, and I think he will be better for me than the Sergeant will." I never saw him from that time again until, I think, a week or ten days before the election, when he came to settle some bills or accounts he was due. We talked about the election generally, and he told me at that time he was to vote for Major Knox. That was all the times I ever spoke to him for twelve months before it.

18739. Do you think he was trying to get a promise of money from you?—I think the last time he was. I think the last time it was for me to give some sort of pledge.

18740. But you did not?—I did not. I kept clear of it altogether.

18741. Was any sum of money mentioned?—Never.

18742. Well, that is all at present?—Well, I find in my last statement here, that at the Sergeant's election I gave £20—and I must have got it from Harper Campbell—to one James O'Hara. He was brought from Liverpool, but who brought him I cannot tell; but he was hanging about for months, and he had nothing to take him away, and I remember I gave him a heifer, and I asked him what he got, and he said he got that, and a £10 note to bring him to Liverpool.

18743. Who was this?—One James O'Hara. This was at Sergeant Armstrong's election.

18744. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—And did you get £20 from Harper Campbell in respect of that?—I must have got it, because I got no money from any other person. That is £20 additional I must have got from Harper Campbell.

18745. So that the cow and the £10 make the £20?—He told me he got a heifer in Liverpool. I gave him £10 by cheque in Liverpool in April.

18746. You gave him a cow?—A heifer he got in Liverpool. I think I gave him a cheque for £10 in April.

18747. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Is O'Hara near this?—He is in town.

18748. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Did you give the heifer to O'Hara?—Well, I think it was given to him in Liverpool.

18749. From whom did he get it?—I sent it to a salesman to sell, and it was deducted from my sale.

18750. It was a heifer of yours?—It was a heifer of mine, value £10, and £10 in cash which I gave him in Liverpool.

(The witness withdrew.)

John M'Goldrick, re-examined.

18751. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—When you were sworn before, you said that Mr. Petrie offered you £20, or some money, if you would vote for Major Knox?—No, but if I would go away. He came into my house. I do not recollect the date exactly, but it was some time a week or so previous to the election, and I used to be doing a little business with him. He was in the line of getting some herring, and I used to get an odd barrel from him, and he came in and said he went into different houses for fear of being remarked—that he did not make my house the first for fear of remarks being passed, and he came in, and after he came in we were talking a little while, he put down I do not know what, with his finger, or a bit of chalk, a mark on the counter. He was standing outside the counter. I remarked what he was doing, and I saw it was a 4 and an 0. I said, "that is forty." "It is," said he. "£40," said I. "Yes," said he, "I will have that for you in case you do not vote, if you go away at this election—not to vote." He did not say anything then, but said he, "you can call down to-morrow, and we will have the thing arranged." So then I went down next day, and, I believe, the day afterwards, and he was wanting to refer me to parties in the town to go to that would hold the money as a stake, and give it.

18752. Stay—what parties did he refer to?—He referred to Mr. Balfour and to Mr. Gethin in Ratcliffe-street. I said I would not have anything to do with any party except himself. Then he was considering about getting an I. O. U.

18753. What did he say?—Did he say he was considering about getting an I. O. U.?—No; he said if he would get an I. O. U. would I consent to it; and I said I would not consent to an I. O. U.

18754. And did you go to him on that occasion for the purpose of getting the £40?—He told me to call down, and I had a bill to settle with him along with that for herrings. He told me to go down.

18755. Do you remember his saying to you on one of these occasions, when you went down, "I will not give you one farthing"?—He said he would not give it to me unless I consented to the I. O. U., and I would not. I did not think he intended until after the election to give me any money at all.

18756. Well now, do you swear positively that when he came into your house he took up the chalk and chalked that?—I do not know whether it was chalk, but he made the mark of forty, and I then put down forty myself, and said, is it £40?

18757. How did he make the mark. What did he make it with?—I am not sure it was with chalk.

18758. What appearance did it present on the counter—white or black?—I am not sure.

18759. You are not sure?—I am not sure whether it was chalk or some sort of scrape—but he put it there. To the best of my belief it was chalk.

18760. Have you no recollection whether it was white or black?—No, but I put it down myself £40.

18761. Was anybody in the shop at the time?—Nobody but ourselves two.

18762. You and him?—Me and him.

18763. William Petrie returned to the witness table and said—It was on Ballysodare fair day, and that same fair was last week again, and perhaps you will know what time it was from the elections from that? There are two or three customers buy herring from us in Pound-street, and I stopped there, and I was not a minute in his shop. There was a man who was at the fair with me, and who was on the car at the time, and I stopped at his shop door. I had got a new cargo of herrings in, and I asked him did he require any herrings. As to a bit of chalk I never had it in my hands in my life, or in my pocket.

18764. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—What brought it to your recollection?—I recollect coming from Ballysodare fair, and I had to call at one or two houses, Reynolds' and others. It was the day before that I got a new cargo in, and there was one man, Clarke, who was at the fair with me, and he will tell you I was not an instant in the shop.

18765. Did you draw any figure?—Never in my life. I had nothing to draw figures with.

18766. Were you talking about the price of herrings?—All we talked about was, I had got a man to come down and sell them.

18767. Did you mention at what figure you were selling?—No; never mentioned figures at all. He came down in a few days afterwards, and commenced in the yard to talk about elections. Philip Giblin is the yard-man's name, and I told him if Mr. Goldrick came down again, to keep close to me.

18768. Did you give that direction before he came down the first day?—No, it was after the first day. He is not a clerk, but packs up herrings. After the first time I said to him, "When John M'Goldrick comes back again, keep close beside me and hear what passes." Well, John did come back again, and I do not think there was much said about elections that I remember, because this man did keep close, and a few days before the election he came down to me in the office, and offered to go to Liveepool to buy tallow. This counsellor came in at the time, and I said one farthing I would not give. I am sorry he is not forthcoming, but you have Phil. Giblin and the man who was on the car.

18769. You gave money at the last election?—Not one penny—not one farthing.

18770. At Sergeant Armstrong's election you did?—Yes, nearly ten months after his election I gave money then.

18771. Mr. Commissioner Byrne (to the witness M'Goldrick.)—Why did you ask for the money?—I did not, but he said he would have my expenses paid if I would go to Liverpool; and he said there were other parties out of the way, making mention of Shields, and he said he expected I would want a great deal more. But on my oath he put down the figures of forty on my counter.

18772. Petrie.—I never heard a word about Shields being away until he returned.

18773. M'Goldrick.—He put that figure of forty on my counter.

18774. Petrie.—You have that man in my yard who will tell you and the man who was on the car with me.

(Both witnesses then retired.)

SEVENTEENTH DAY.
December 20.

John Henry re-examined.

John Henry.

18775. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—You said when you were examined here before that Mr. Petrie offered you £30?—So he did.

18776. Where?—At my own door. He promised if I would go out of town and not vote, he would give me £30 of his own money.

18777. Where did he do that?—Opposite my own door.

18778. What day was that?—I cannot say, but it was a month or three weeks to the best of my opinion before the election, and what brought me to the office was, I deal in his herrings, and I had a barrel I had not paid for, and I thought if I paid for half a barrel of herrings he could not strip his teeth and take me short. I went down with 8*s.* 4*d.* of the 16*s.* 8*d.*, which, if his books are produced, they will certify. He pulled them from one side of the fire, and the clerk went out, and the first thing he made mention of was, had I made up my mind, and if I could get more men to quit the town along with me. The answer was, "I do not know any man's mind but my own, and I will not let any man know my mind until I come to pass my vote," for if I let any man know my mind I might as well put it in Bell's Life. There was a man named Doherty came in to see the clerk. He told him the clerk was not in. He told me what interest he had in Major Knox, and that he had given Sergeant Armstrong all his influence before, but he never gained a damned penny by him. He spoke of a salmon fishery he had, and a lawsuit with Colonel White in Dublin.

18779. Did he offer you £30 again?—On my solemn oath he offered me £30 again.

18780. What was your answer?—I said my mind was not made up, but what I had in my mind I would show him.

18781. Did you ever see him again?—No, sir.

18782. Nor he never sent for you?—No, sir. He spoke of a brother-in-law of mine, Leonard, and he asked me was he all right. He offered me £30, on my solemn oath, in my own door, and in his own office. John M'Goldrick came down to me, and said he to me, "He has commenced to canvass very soon," and I passed it off in a laugh, and did not want any man to know what he was saying about it.

(The witness withdrew.)

18783. William Petrie.—If I may explain. I never spoke to him, but in July. It was sometime during the races I think in June or July, and he said that Major Knox had some races on the lake. At that time I was a supporter of Sergeant Armstrong, because we fully expected him back again, and I never saw him again, or spoke to him until that day—until he came to the place to pay some accounts for herrings.

18784. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—And did he come with the money short?—No; that was three months afterwards.

18785. After the conversation?—It was three months afterwards before he came down, and at that time I never spoke to him or saw him, but he came to the office to pay some account some ten or twelve days before the election. But I never offered him money up to that time and to the very last. I had never a lawsuit with Colonel White connected with the Sligo fishery.

(The witness withdrew.)

James O'Hara.

James O'Hara sworn and examined.

18786. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Were you an elector?—I was, sir, some time ago.

18787. Did you vote for Sergeant Armstrong?—Yes.

18788. Did you get any money for voting for him?—I did.

18789. How much?—£20 from Mr. Petrie.

18790. How long after the election?—I do not know. Mr. Petrie brought me £10 to England. It was a long time after the election.

18791. Did you ever vote before that?—I did.

18792. Who for?—For Mr. Sadleir, Mr. Somers, and a good many.

18793. Did you ever get any money before?—Well, I did.

18794. Who from?—From Mr. Sadleir.

18795. Was that in 1856?—I do not mind.

18796. How much did you get from him?—£40.

18797. Did you get that after the election?—No, the time of the election.

18798. Was it on the day of polling?—On the very day of polling.

18799. Had you a vote?—I had.

18800. Had you voted at the time you got the £40?—I had, sir.

18801. Had Mr. Sadleir promised you any money to vote?—No, I do not know. I could not rightly say.

18802. I meant had anybody promised you any money?—Well, I got £40 from Mr. Andrew Walker, at least some of my daughters got it.

18803. Had he canvassed you to vote?—I could not say. I was determined to vote for Sadleir. Some of my children or family got it. It was in the house when I came back from voting. That is how it was.

18804. Did anybody promise you this money for voting for Sergeant Armstrong?—Well, when I came from England ——

18805. Oh, no, but I mean before the election?—Mr. Gethin said I would get £30.

18806. When did he say that?—Before the election. The day after, or two, when I came to Sligo from England to vote, I met Gethin, and I think he said I would get £30.

18807. Mr. Gethin is dead I think?—He is dead; and I got £20 from Mr. Petrie. I got £10 in cash in England.

18808. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Were you brought over from England expressly to vote?—I was. There was a messenger sent for me.

(The witness withdrew.)

Thomas M'Gettrick.

Thomas M'Gettrick sworn and examined.

18809. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Are you a voter for Sligo?—Yes.

18810. Were you canvassed before the last election for Major Knox by anyone?—Yes.

18811. Do you remember Mr. Samuel Knox calling upon you about your vote?—Yes.

18812. What did he say to you in reference to your vote?—He said he would try to get me £50.

18813. That he would try to get you £50?—Yes, I think so in that way.

18814. Tell us the whole of that conversation—what occurred on that occasion as well as you remember?—Well, I think it was very short. Only just a few words.

Thomas M'Gettrick.

18815. Will you give us a statement of what occurred when he came in?—That if I would support the Major, or go with the Major, he would try and get me that £50.

18816. Who would try to get it for you—was it Samuel Knox?—Yes.

18817. Well now tell us what Samuel Knox said on that occasion, what was it?—That I would get £50. I cannot say whether it was to vote, or to abstain from voting. I cannot well recollect whether it was to vote, or to abstain from voting.

18818. Did he say he would get you that £50 or try to get it?—It appeared to me I would get £50—that I would get £50.

18819. From Major Knox?—I do not know from whom. He did not say from Major Knox as far as I know.

18820. But did you know he was in favour of Major Knox?—It was in favour of Major Knox.

(The witness withdrew.)

Samuel Knox sworn and examined.

Samuel Knox.

18821. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Do you remember going into O'Hara's place of business, canvassing for Major Knox?—It is M'Gettrick. I did not. He is a workman in a shop that I am foreman of, and one day he came down to me for work, with Sam Longhead, and we both commenced talking about the election. The conversation went on between them, and he said if he would get £40 he would leave the way. I was listening to him, and I said, "where would you get it?" He said, "would not you get it for me?" and I said, "where in the name of heaven would I get it?" Longhead was present, as far as I recollect. He is another workman in the shop.

18822. Are you in the employment of one of the Messrs. Lyons?—Yes.

18823. Did you tell him you would try to get money?—No, I did not interfere with any of them.

18824. Did you vote yourself?—Yes, I voted for Major Knox.

18825. Did you canvass for him?—No.

18826. Did you make any exertions to get a vote for him from anyone?—No.

18827. Did you do nothing at the election except record your vote for Major Knox?—Nothing. Certainly there was a great deal of humbug going on in the shop, but that is the only circumstance that proves in any way what he says.

18828. You say there was a good deal of humbug going on in the shop?—Yes, amongst the tailors themselves.

18829. Did they know that Mr. Lyons took a very active interest in it?—I do not believe he did. I think he kept clear of it altogether. Longhead may remember the circumstance, but it is so trifling I did not pay the slightest attention to it until he came up here the last time.

18830. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—What did he tell you?—He told me he had been up here and swore I had offered him £40. It was £40 he said then, but now he says £50. He said you asked him if there was any person present, and he said to you there was not, but he said to me, "when you go up you can tell them that Sam Longhead was present."

18831. What did you say to that?—I made no answer.

18832. Were you surprised to hear the statement?—I most decidedly was.

18833. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—(to M'Gettrick)—Was anyone present when this was said?—When I was examined here the last time I said to the Commissioner I hardly thought there was, but on turning the the thing over in my mind afterwards, Sam Longhead was present. He came out on one occasion, and Knox said, "I am going to try and get £50 for Tom, and I will keep it or send it to any man he likes to leave it with." "Very well," said Longhead, "he may do as he likes, and it would serve him." I did not ask from Knox £40 or £50. I did not ask any money from any man.

18834. Knox.—You said if you would get £40 you would go away.

18835. M'Gettrick.—I did not say to any person that I would go away, nor I would not go away.

(The witness withdrew.)

William Pollixfen sworn and examined.

William Pollixfen.

18836. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Are you an elector of Sligo?—I am, sir.

18837. Do you recollect the election of 1860 between Mr. Macdonogh and Colonel Tennyson?—Yes.

18838. Do you know a man called John Brady?—I do.

18839. Do you recollect paying him any money after the election of 1860?—I gave him a ton of Indian meal, I think.

18840. What was that for?—Well, he was badly off, and he came and asked me to advance him some meal until he was able to pay it.

18841. Do you know who he voted for?—At that time he did not vote at all, I believe. I think there was no contest.

18842. Did you canvass him when it was expected that there would be a contest?—I might have asked him to vote. He came to me and we had a conversation about voting, and I asked him to vote for Mr. Macdonogh.

18843. You were a supporter of Mr. Macdonogh yourself?—I was.

18844. Did you intimate to him he would get any money if he voted for Mr. Macdonogh?—I do not remember.

18845. But would you say you did not?—Yes, I think so.

18846. Did you or did you not?—I do not remember promising him any money. I gave him the meal.

18847. Did you give him the meal because he had abstained from voting for Colonel Tennison?—I do not remember that Tennison was up at the time.

18848. But he was up?—I might have given him the meal for not doing so.

18849. Did you?—I suppose so. I will say I did so; but I billed him for the meal and sent to get the price of it afterwards, but he was not able to pay it.

18850. Did you give him any money at all?—Not that I remember.

18851. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Who paid for the meal?—It was never paid for yet. I sent to get the money for him, and I could not get it. I sent the clerk for it.

18852. Did you get any money in consideration of the meal from Mr. Lawrence?—No.

18853. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Did you ever tell Brady he was to get £20 for not voting?—I believe I never said it.

18854. Do you contradict him—he swears you did?—I do. I did not.

18855. Why, in the first instance, do you say you do not recollect? Are you positive now?—Well, I am that positive that I would remember if I said I would give him £20.

18856. Did you ever hear at that time of money going to Mr. Macdonogh's supporters?—I heard there was money going.

18857. Did you ever hear of that £850 that Mr.

SEVENTEENTH DAY.

December 20.

William Pollixfen.

Lyons got—I mean before this inquiry?—I heard Mr. Lyons got money, but I did not know the amount until this investigation; at the time I did not.

18858. Did you hear at the time that that money, whatever it was, was to be distributed amongst Mr. Macdonogh's supporters?—I would not positively say that that was stated or not.

18859. Have you a doubt you knew that at the time?—Yes, I think it was given to him to distribute.

18860. Did you apply to get any of that money to distribute?—Never.

18861. Did anyone speak to you about the distribution of it?—No.

18862. Did you, too, hear that Mr. Woods had some money to distribute?—I might have heard it.

18863. Or Mr. John Burke?—No, I did not. I heard since that that Mr. Burke had money.

18864. Did you ever say to this man, John Brady, that there was no chance left to you to get the money that was to be paid to him?—I do not remember saying so. It is very likely I might.

18865. So if he swore it it was true?—That I had money?

18866. No, but that you had got no money to meet his claim?—I do not know he had any claim, except that I gave him the Indian meal, and there was nothing more about it. I sent to get the price of that and he could not pay it.

18867. But you considered the Indian meal was, to a certain extent, liquidating some claim?—Well, it might be considered a sort of bonus.

18868. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—For having voted?—No, there was no vote.

18869. Did you get him to leave the town before the election?—No, I do not know whether he left the town or not.

18870. Did you make any exertion to get him out of the town?—No, I did not.

18871. But you gave him the Indian meal as a bonus for his having voted?—Well, I lent him the meal, in fact but I did not give it as a gift.

18872. And it was given partly as a bonus for his having abstained from voting?—That might be so.

18873. But have you any doubt, upon your oath?—No, I have not. Brady was an insolvent a short time before that.

18874. Was he an insolvent before you gave him the ton of meal?—He was.

(The witness withdrew.)

Jeremiah Perry.

Jeremiah Perry sworn and examined.

18875. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—You were solicitor for a Sligo voter named O'Connor in a bankruptcy matter about the time of the last election?—Yes, sir.

18876. Do you remember talking to him in Sackville-street on any occasion during the pending of that bankruptcy?—I do.

18877. Had you any conversation with him in reference to the Sligo election in Sackville-street?—No, sir, I was going home to my dinner and he was walking before me. It was on a Saturday evening, and I bade him good evening; that is all. I had no conversation about the election whatever.

18878. O'Connor in his examination before us mentioned to us that you spoke of some parties who were ready to give him £50 or £60 if he would stay away from the Sligo election?—That was untrue.

18879. Was money in reference to the election mentioned—was there any mention of money as regards the Sligo election made between him and you in any conversation?—Certainly not.

18880. Was there any clerk of yours who had occasion to receive directions from him as regards his bankruptcy?—Yes.

18881. Give us his name?—Michael Rourke. He is in my employment for the past sixteen years.

18882. And Michael Rourke had occasion to confer with him from time to time?—Yes, constantly.

18883. Were you aware of there being any dealings with O'Connor, either by Mr. Lloyd or by anyone else, in reference to employing him as a canvasser, or inducing him to stay away from the Sligo election?—Except what I heard from my clerk since the commission opened.

18884. And what did you hear?—That Mr. Lloyd asked him to introduce him to O'Connor, and that he did so. That was since the opening of this commission.

18885. And did your clerk, O'Rorke, say anything else as having passed between him and O'Connor?—I asked him particularly what did take place. He will be ready to come here in case you should consider it necessary. He said, "Mr. Lloyd asked me to introduce O'Connor to him. I did so, and I asked O'Connor the next morning what he was wanted for. He said he was brought to Major Knox's house in Fitzwilliam-square, and was to be employed as a canvasser."

18886. O'Rorke told you that during the pendency of the bankruptcy case?—No, since this commission. I had no conversation with him before that or with O'Connor in reference to the election proceedings at all. I may mention I never spoke a word to Major Knox in my life until after O'Connor had given his evidence here. Major Knox called at my office to know what explanation I could give of O'Connor's evidence. The whole thing came on me by surprise. I had not seen it at the time in the newspapers.

18887. Was this utterly untrue, that you had ever any conversation with O'Connor about the Sligo election?—Positively.

18888. Did O'Rorke tell you nothing else?—I told you the full substance of what he said, and that within the last day or two.

18889. And what took place between Major Knox and you?—Major Knox said he had got a telegram detailing the evidence given by O'Connor, and he asked me what was the meaning of it. I said I did not know—the man must have been drunk. As far as I am concerned I never spoke to him about the election at all.

18890. Did Major Knox appear surprised at the telegram he had received?—He did. While Major Knox was sitting in my office I sat down to write to Mr. Commissioner Heron, whom I have been known to professionally for the last twenty years, contradicting it, and offering to come down here if necessary.

(The witness withdrew.)

Patrick Barry.

Patrick Barry re-examined.

18891. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Were you examined before?—I was.

18892. You voted for Captain Flanagan at the last election, you told us?—I did.

18893. Did you ever get an offer of money for voting for him?—On my solemn oath I never was promised and never received Captain Flanagan's money.

18894. Did anybody hint you might get money?—Never, on my oath.

18895. Who canvassed you?—The Church question, sir.

18896. Who asked you to vote for Captain Flanagan?—No one, sir. I went voluntarily myself.

18897. Did Captain Flanagan himself canvass you?—He came twice, but I did not see him. I was at business.

18898. And did you expect any money for voting for him?—Upon my oath I never did.

(The witness withdrew.)

Thomas O'Donovan sworn and examined. Thomas O'Donovan.

18899. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Do you know a voter named Burke?—I do.

18900. Had you any conversation with him before the last election in reference to his vote?—I had not. We often conversed upon the election, but nothing further. There was some allusion made by Stokes here that I offered money to Burke, and I give it my flat contradiction. I had not and never had.

18901. What Stokes said was this, that Burke told him that Mr. Thomas O'Donovan (you) were getting money, and offered him money. Was there any reference at all to money in your conversation with Burke?—No reference at all.

18902. You swear that?—I swear it positively—so much so, that before the Commission would be over I intended to tender my evidence, if I had not been summoned, to contradict it.

(The witness withdrew.)

William Fraser sworn and examined. William Fraser.

18903. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—You are, I believe, a traveller for Younger and Co.?—I am.

18904. And you reside in Dublin?—I do.

18905. Were you in Sligo at the last election?—I was not. I was here before it—I suppose a few days before, but not here at all at the election.

18906. But you were here a few days before?—I was.

18907. Do you know Felix Derham?—I do.

18908. Had you a conversation with him?—I was speaking to him as to how he would vote. I heard that he swore that I offered him money. I never offered any man money.

18909. Tell us what took place?—I said, "Who are you going to vote for?" and he said for Major Knox; he thought it best, but he did not wish to do it. I never spoke about money.

18910. He said he would vote for Major Knox, but he did not wish to do it?—He would rather vote for Major Knox, who was the better man, but he told me he would not vote for him, but he would like to vote for him. He told me he would not vote for Major Knox.

18911. Was anybody with you when the conversation took place?—I do not know. Two men, Grubb and Hignell, either one or the other, I am not certain.

18912. Were you a friend of Major Knox?—Well, I knew Major Knox in Dublin, and I was down here before the election, and Major Knox and I had a conversation, and I said, "Anything I can do for you in Sligo I will, for I always had a respect for you." That is all I said.

18913. In fact you canvassed for him?—That is the only thing I did. I got no authority to give money or to offer money, and had not anything to do with it.

18914. Did you hear of any money going at that time?—I heard money was to be got, but I did not know of it.

18915. At what time of the evening was it?—I think it was in the middle of the day. It is now twelve months' ago, and I am not sure. It was from twelve to two o'clock, something about that hour. I do not know which of the two men might be with me at the time, but one or the other was.

18916. But I suppose they were canvassing for Major Knox?—Yes.

18917. Is Hignell a friend of yours?—No; I never saw them in my life, or knew anything of them until I saw them before the election.

18918. How was it he went with you to Derhams?—I do not know whether I met him. I had business with Derham, and many others in town, but I cannot bring it to my recollection whether he came in with me, or whether as I was passing he called in.

18919. But you must have known him before?—Yes, certainly, at the hotel.

18920. Do you think he knew you were going to Derhams?—He might. He might have seen me go in. I know Mr. Derham for twenty years, and a most respectable man he is, as far as I know him.

18921. Do you know Captain Ethelred Knox?—I do not know him personally, but I think I know his appearance, but I never spoke to him. I spoke to Major Knox very often, both in Dublin and here.

18922. But never to Captain Knox?—No; I do not think I would know his appearance.

18923. And when you went into Derham's did you go in with the intention of canvassing?—I do not know. There might be some intention of canvassing. I do not know whether I met him at the door, or he saw me inside and went in.

18924. Is your recollection that nothing was said about money on that occasion?—Not to my knowledge, but I heard it said that everybody expected money.

18925. You heard them say it?—No, I heard it through the town.

18926. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—You promised the Major to do what you could for him when you went down to Sligo?—I did.

18927. When you went into Derham's place of business you say Derham was speaking about his vote?—It was before I saw this man at all I was speaking to him. He said he thought Major Knox a good man, but he would not vote for him, and dare not vote for him.

18928. Was it not you that originated the conversation?—I do not know, for every place you went into at the time they were talking about it.

18929. Did you not go to him?—I have no hesitation in saying I might have done so.

18930. Did not you go there to look for his vote?—I do not know that I looked in particular for his vote.

18931. Did you promise Major Knox?—Yes, and I spoke to several parties.

18932. Did not you go there to look for his vote as well as to do business?—I asked him how he would vote. He told me he would not vote for Major Knox.

18933. Did you hear talk about money on that occasion?—No; I did not know of any money or hear of any person speak, but they said through the town they expected money.

18934. And was there no joking about money?—Derham might have said they expected money, but as far as I was concerned I had no money to offer anybody, and never did. That I swear on my oath.

18935. And you consider Derham a respectable man?—I do, sir. By all means, and would not say a word against him.

18936. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Do you know of any money being given by any person?—On my oath I do not know any as I did not get any, and I never handled a penny or promised money, because I had no power.

18937. Did you ever hear of anybody else having promised money?—I did not indeed, but I heard every person saying that they were to get money; but who the parties were I do not know.

18938. You did not ask?—No, for I did not want to have anything to do with bribing.

18939. But these people who were expecting to get money—were they people on both sides?—I dare say they were.

18940. Do you recollect the names of any?—No; but it was a general thing through the town on Major Knox and Captain Flanagan's side, on both sides I heard there was money going. I was a long time in this neighbourhood. I was stationed in the Constabulary, and at every election I was at I heard there was money going, but I knew nothing about it. I did my duty fairly and honestly between party and party, and it was not my business to interfere.

18941. Were you here during the election of 1860?—No, I left the force in 1857, but I was here from 1848 to 1857. I was at Townley's election, and Sadleir's election, and Somers' election, but I was not here at Wynne's. I heard people say that Somers had not money to give, but there were situations given. That is all I know about him.

The witness was desired to remain on the table.

elix Derham.

Felix Derham was re-called.

18942. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—You have been already sworn?—Yes.

18943. Do you remember this occasion of Mr. Fraser coming into your place of business?—I do.

18944. Tell us what was said as well as you remember?—Mr. Fraser and some other man came in whom I do not know, and he asked me to vote for Major Knox, and I said I was afraid my house would be broken, and I did not like to do so, and he said he would send me to Dublin or Liverpool, or any place I liked, and that he would please me afterwards.

18945. Fraser.—It was not me, sure?—

18946. Derham.—No.

18947. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—(to Derham)—Was it the other man?—Yes, he was in the shop.

18948. It was the other man?—It was the other man, sir.

18949. Do you know that man's appearance?—I do not know at all.

18950. Who was it was with you—Mr. Fraser?—I am not sure, but my impression is that it was Grubb in place of Hignell. That is my impression, but I am not sure. If I knew it was Grubb I would say it.

18951. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—(to Fraser)—Well, now, Derham having told us that that passed, are you able to contradict him?—It might be said to him and I might not hear it at the time.

(The witness then withdrew.)

Rev. Andrew Quinn.

The Rev. Andrew Quinn sworn and examined.

18952. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—You are a Catholic clergyman?—Yes.

18953. What parish are you in charge of?—The Parish of Ballinafad. I was Captain Flanagan's parish priest.

18954. Are you the parish priest of where Captain Flanagan resided?—Yes.

18955. Are you aware of any of the country people from that side of the country coming into Sligo at the last election?—Not one of them; not to my knowledge.

18956. Were you aware of any of the people from the Gevagh side of the country coming into Sligo at the last election?—I do not know the people sufficiently well to be able to identify them, and I was not in the town at all during the week of the election.

18957. Are you aware yourself, or have you heard of money having been given to the country people who flocked into Sligo for Captain Flanagan?—As far as I am concerned myself, I do not think that Captain Flanagan contributed anything to the country people. I do not think that Captain Flanagan expended any money in that way.

18958. Was any money given to them from any other source?—Not that I am aware of.

18959. Did you hear of any money having been given to them?—I heard after the election was over that some parties got some entertainment.

18960. Just tell us what you heard in reference to the entertainment?—I could not exactly say what it was.

18961. Well, so far as it lies in your memory?—I do not know any accurate account of it. I heard that some of the people got some eating and drinking; the parties who were sent to watch, but I have not heard of any other treating.

18962. Did you hear how numerous these watchers were—how many of them were employed?—I did not hear indeed. I was not in town on the Saturday previous to the election at all. I had some engagements and could not be here.

18963. You were not in Sligo during any part of the election?—No, I was not in Sligo since the Saturday previous to the election, which occurred, I think, on Thursday or Friday.

18964. You were not a witness of any of the violence that occurred in the town?—I happened to be with Captain Flanagan here before the election, and I did not see any violence.

18965. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Was anything said on the Sunday before the election about the country people coming in?—Not in my parish, and there is no other clergyman there but myself.

18966. And you did not say anything about it?—I said nothing about it.

(The witness withdrew.)

James M'Kim

James M'Kim re-examined.

18967. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—You are the town clerk of Sligo?—Yes.

18968. Have you prepared any list which will show us the relative numbers of voters within the municipal area, and within the parliamentary area?—I have prepared a list, at least, I have marked it on the list, those inside and those outside.

18969. That is inside and outside the municipal area?—Yes—[the witness handed in a list of electors for the years 1868–70, marked in a manner which he explained to the Commissioners].

18970. All the persons who are not marked, live inside the municipal boundary?—Yes.

18971. Were you able to make out a list of the elections?—No; I have not sufficient knowledge to do that, but I asked one or two persons, and they referred me to "Thom's Almanac."

(The witness withdrew.)

Daniel Buckley.

Daniel Buckley sworn and examined.

18972. Were you in Major Knox's employment during the time of the last election?—I was.

18973. In the Irish Times office?—Yes, in the Irish Times.

18974. Did you see Cherry of this town with Major Knox at the Irish Times office?—I did.

18975. On how many occasions?—I remember two occasions. One, the first was about the time of the revision, I think immediately after the revision, and the other was the week before the election.

18976. Now, on that occasion, was it by day or night he came to the Irish Times office?—The first time he came by day, and gave his name to the attendant, young Garlick. I heard the name the second time when he came at night, and remained in the back office where there was no gas lighting at the time. It would seem he had been expected by some persons in the office, for James M'Goldrick, who was in the office, when he heard the person was there went back. Garlick was going to see who was there, and he was prevented. M'Goldrick knocked at Major Knox's private door, and made some communication, and as soon as the persons who were with Major Knox went away M'Goldrick went out, and brought in this gentleman, who was in the back place. My attention was directed to the matter by his keeping his hat on, and his cape muffled about him, evidently intended to conceal himself, and my curiosity having been awakened, quite contrary to my habit, I asked M'Goldrick who he was, and he said Mr. Cherry.

18977. Did Cherry give his name on that occasion?—No.

18978. He did it on the first?—He did it on the first.

18979. Have you seen Brennan on any occasion in the Irish Times office?—I have frequently.

18980. Did you see him bringing four or five men into Major Knox's private office?—I did, sometime before the election.

18981. Were they Dublin men or country men?—They had the appearance of being country men; common men, working men I should say. He brought them in altogether, about four or five into Major Knox's private office.

18982. That was in Dublin?—Yes.

18983. Now, on the polling day at Sligo, or the day before the polling day, did you see any men coming to the Irish Times office?—I did. I saw three men, or perhaps four—I think three. One of them was a young man, and the others were older. They came in at half-past eleven, or perhaps a quarter to twelve—one of them, the youngest, was speaking to M'Goldrick, and M'Goldrick seemed surprised at seeing them; and asked them how was it they came. M'Goldrick said Sloane had gone to the Broadstone Terminus to meet them and missed them, and they said that they came by Enniskillen, and they remained there and went away with Sloane.

18984. Was Major Knox in the Irish Times office then?—No; he was in Sligo.

18985. M'Goldrick was a Sligo man?—He was.

18986. Was he voter?—No; he was the son, or brother of a voter. He was employed in the Irish Times office.

18987. Did you hear Major Knox say anything to M'Goldrick in reference to the service of his family at the election?—No; but M'Goldrick told me Major Knox made some communication to him. Immediately when Mr. Disraeli I think resigned, Major Knox called M'Goldrick to his private office. I saw M'Goldrick go in and afterwards go out, and M'Goldrick told me in the course of the day that Major Knox told him that although the Conservative Government had gone out he would be still able to get him a nomination for the Civil Service, either through Mr. Blake or some other member, and that he would stick to his family as they had stuck to him.

18988. Now is there anything else you are aware of that would throw any light on this inquiry, with reference to the last Sligo contest?—I do not know any thing else except what I told at the petition.

18989. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Are you now in the Irish Times office?—No; I was there only three months.

18990. Did you accompany Major Knox down to Sligo before the election?—No; I had nothing to do with the election.

18991. You know Captain Knox?—Yes.

18992. Do you know anything of any money being paid to any voters before the election?—I do not.

18993. By any person on behalf of Major Knox?—No.

18994. Do you know anything about money being paid after the election in the Irish Times office to Sligo voters residing in Dublin?—I do not; but I heard that money was paid to Brennan.

18995. Who did you hear that from?—I heard it in the office. I think M'Goldrick told me.

18996. Did M'Goldrick tell you that Brennan was getting money?—No; he said he was in Major Knox's employment, and that he was, I think, a mobsman. That is the only thing with reference to money that I heard of.

(The witness withdrew.)

Randle Peyton further examined.

18997. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Mr. Harkan was examined to-day?—So I understand.

18998. Did you hear what evidence he gave?—I have just been inquiring the purport, but I could not ascertain, except that he contradicted me.

18999. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—He said he did not bring you any message that money would be required for voters, otherwise Colonel Tennison need not stand, and that there was no reference to money with him?—That being so, I will ask you to summon Mr. Charles O'Donel, one of the divisional magistrates of Dublin, to whose bedside he summoned me, and related the circumstances that I related.

19000. Just relate all the conversation that occurred on that occasion?—The substance of it was, when I was at the hotel near the bridge, I was in my room at a late hour, when Mr. Harkan came in to me and said that he had just been at a meeting of the friends of Colonel Tennison, and he mentioned the names of some Roman Catholic clergymen of this town, and the result was, that some five or six and twenty of the voters refused to vote for Colonel Tennison unless a sum of money amounting to £600 or £700 was secured, and not promised merely. Whereupon I told him I had no authority in the matter, and that I should go to Mr. Tennison, Colonel Tennison's agent, and Mr. Charles O'Donel, who was down here controlling all matters preparatory to the election, and advise on matters. We did so, and found Mr. O'Donel at Doherty's, in the top room of the house, in bed, and told him what had occurred.

19001. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—The only question that we wish to ask you is—is it possible that you could have been mistaken?—Utterly impossible. Mr. Harkan has seen me frequently in Dublin since my evidence, and never spoken to me on the subject, and I believe there are people in Sligo, whose names I will try to ascertain, who are capable of detailing the circumstances.

19002. Could you name any of these persons?—Alderman M'Gowan or Alderman M'Gill—I do not know which.

19003. Were present at that meeting?—I think one of them was; and I think there was a clergyman named Boyle, if I do not much mistake.

19004. Is he living in town?—I do not know.

[The process-server mentioned that he is dead.]

19005. Witness.—Then I ask you to interrogate Mr. M'Niffe. It is a matter in which two professional gentlemen are concerned, and I have been contradicted perhaps for the first time in my life.

19006. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Memory is fallible?—It may be upon negatives, but not upon affirmatives, as a rule. The circumstance fixed itself upon my mind, and it is utterly impossible there could have been a mistake upon my mind, because the resignation of Colonel Tennison took place the following morning, and I left town on the understanding that there would be no contest; and I heard afterwards that the resignation had been withdrawn.

19007. But you have no doubt that Colonel Tennison retired because money was demanded?—I did not see Colonel Tennison, but I saw his conducting counsel that night, who assured me that the resignation would take place the following morning, and that I might go back to Dublin.

19008. In consequence of the demand for money?—In consequence of the demand for money for twenty-five or twenty-six voters.

19009. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Could you give us the names of any other persons?—The only person with whom I had any conversation on the pecuniary affairs was Mr. John Harkan.

19010. But he probably mentioned names then. Do you recollect them?—He mentioned the names of one or two clergymen, which I could not speak with confidence upon; but he also mentioned that each of the persons who were leaders had a certain number of men that were to be the agents in distributing some money to a certain number of persons.

19011. And you do not know the names of these gentlemen?—No, sir.

19012. Or the names of the gentlemen with whom the money was to be deposited as a security?—No, I cannot answer that question in direct terms; but Mr. Harkan stated to me that unless the money was deposited with some person connected with the voters, in whom they had confidence, they would not come and give their votes. I think he said if I had the money and showed it to him, or had it under my own control, that it might be arranged.

(The witness was requested to remain on the table.)

Patrick M'Niffe.

Patrick M'Niffe further examined.

19013. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Can you give me any information on the subject. I think there is a misconception between Mr. Harkan and Mr. Peyton?—My recollection of the matter is, that that £700 to which Mr. Peyton made allusion, was the £600 or £700 that was to have been given to Mr. Somers with the view of retiring. I think that is my impression at present.

19014. Mr. Peyton.—I brought down £500 sovereigns in my pocket to be given to Mr. Somers, and brought them back. It was quite a different transaction.

19015. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—There was a conversation and consideration in reference to a sum of £700.

19016. Mr. M'Niffe.—I will not say it went to that extent. It was £500 or £600 which was to be given to Mr. Somers for retiring, against which we all protested. But there was this sum of £500 or £600 or £700 in consideration at the time, referred to by Mr. Peyton. I met Mr. Peyton on the Curlews, and came down to Sligo about the matter.

19017. Mr. Peyton.—If there was any complication of one sum with the other, I never heard it suggested until this moment.

19018. Mr. Commissioner Byrne (to Mr. Peyton).—In reference to that sum of £500, had you any conversation with Mr. Harkan?—No, with this exception, that I understood that that money was to be applied for the removal of Mr. Somers from the field; and I must say this much for Colonel Tennison, as there was an allusion made to his attempting to corrupt voters, that positively and emphatically, and in the most decisive terms he repudiated anything like approaching to corruption or to intimidating a man ever.

19019. Well, were you aware that this sum, whatever the amount of it was, and whatever it was, and whatever it was connected with, induced Colonel Tennison to retire from the contest?—I think he was apprehensive, and he was made to feel that if that sum of money were given to Mr. Somers, it would operate seriously against him, as soon as Mr. Somers left.

19020. So, whatever the sum, it induced him to retire?—I believe in my heart it operated upon him. May I suggest to ask Mr. M'Niffe the question, was there such a meeting?

19021. Mr. M'Niffe.—On Saturday evening you and I met on the Curlews.

19022. Mr. Peyton.—That is a different matter altogether.

19023. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—The evening of the nomination?

19024. Mr. Peyton.—Yes.

19025. Mr. Commissioner Bruce (to Mr. M'Niffe).—Was that the case?

19026. Mr. M'Niff.—I know nothing of the sort.

19027. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Mr. Harkan's evidence to us, Mr. Peyton, was, that there was no reference at any discussion at all to money between him and you?—Well, I respectfully require Mr. O'Donel to be examined in reference to it.

19028. As the matter has arisen, it appears to be an apparent conflict of evidence on a rather immaterial matter. Mr. Harkan's evidence is quite to be accounted for by a want of recollection; and it has not occurred to us that it is a matter deserving further inquiry. What is plain from your evidence and from Mr. M'Niffe's evidence is, that the mention of a large sum of money was the operative cause to induce Mr. Tennison to retire from the contest?—Yes, quite right.

19029. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—But in addition to that, you say, I understand that there was a sum of £500 or £600 or £700 demanded by voters?—I never was more confident of anything that occurred in my life, than that Mr. Harkan told me that night in the hotel, that above £600 was demanded by twenty-six voters and then we went to Mr. O'Donel, and he declared in Mr. Harkan's presence that this induced Colonel Tennison to withdraw.

(The witness then withdrew, and Mr. Harkan was sent for).

Harper Campbell.

Harper Campbell came on the witness table.

19030. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Is there anything you wish to say?—I wish to explain something with regard to my evidence. I had a letter from Miss Poe, the daughter of Mr. Poe. There was a sum unaccounted for of the money that passed through my hands, about £400, and I could not explain to you how it went, but I said I thought Mr. Poe and others had got it. If I said Mr. Poe had got the entire £400 I was wrong, and certainly did not wish to convey that he had got the entire £400. I have learned since that £205 was the amount which he distributed.

19031. And he got that from you?—It came through my hands. I was merely the agent in paying it to him. I knew nothing of what was done with it until I got that list. Mr. Poe is one of the most respectable inhabitants of the town.

19032. And besides that £205, can you give any explanation as to the difference, £190?—Well, I had a conversation with some of the other gentlemen, and Mr. Petrie explained about £20 I think, which he had forgotten. I think that many others in the same way, who had forgotten altogether about the moneys they got. I know Mr. Petrie himself did not know of the money he got, until he came to my office and made inquiries.

19033. On searching your memory, there is no specific sum you can fix on except this £20?—I think there was a person named M'Kenna in Knox-street whose name you have not got, and whose wife got money. Michael M'Kenna, of Knox-street.

19034. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Do you mean he got money to distribute?—No, not to distribute, but I think he got money from some of the gentlemen who got it from me.

19035. Is he alive?—I do not know. He has left the town for many years. He was out of town then. I understand it was his wife got the money. All the family have gone out of town, but I am positive that all the money that came to my hands was paid away to the gentlemen. I know nothing of what was done with it. The list was made up at the hotel for Mr. Byrne, and he lodged the amount of these lists in Dublin.

19036. Did you learn about the £205 which Mr. Poe got from any memorandum in his handwriting or from what you heard?—It was from his daughter.

19037. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Did she state she found any memorandum showing how the sums were distributed?—Yes. [List of parties paid by Mr. Poe handed in.]

19038. Is that in Mr. Poe's handwriting?—I cannot say, but I have no doubt it is quite correct. I am positive Mr. Poe was a person who kept his accounts correct.

(The witness withdrew.)

Patrick M'Niffe further examined.

Patrick M'Niffe.

19039. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Can you tell whether or not this document that has been handed in is in Mr. Poe's handwriting?—[Document handed witness.] That is in Mr. Poe's handwriting.

19040. Did you know on this occasion that Mr. Peyton referred to, that money had been expected?—For many years there was always some one expecting money.

19041. At that particular election were you aware of the expression of opinion by a number of voters that money had been expected?—I had no particular knowledge of it. I did not know it personally.

19042. Had you any doubt of the fact that money was expected by a number of the voters?—It is generally so.

(The witness withdrew.)

John M'Gowan sworn and examined.

John M'Gowan

19043. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Do you recollect the election of 1860, when Colonel Tennison was a candidate?—Yes, sir.

19044. Were you a supporter of Colonel Tennison?—Yes, I promised to vote for him.

19045. And did you take any active part in the election?—No.

19046. Were you present at any meeting of Colonel Tennison's supporters held on the night of the nomination?—I do not recollect.

19047. Well, about that time?—I recollect being invited by a supporter of Colonel Tennison to go to his house, that is the house of Mr. Tighe, the ex-mayor. I went there and there were a few friends and supporters of Colonel Tennison there, but I forget indeed who they were. Some of them are dead.

19048. Were there any Roman Catholic clergymen there?—I do not recollect. I think there were not.

19049. Could you give us the names of any who were at that meeting?—I forget now.

19050. Was Mr. Harkan there?—He may have been, but I do not recollect that he was.

19051. Was any statement made there with regard to it being necessary to pay money?—There was something said about raising a sum of money, or at least about a few friends advancing a sum of money without the knowledge of Colonel Tennison.

19052. Was there any sum mentioned?—I think there was, £1,000.

19053. Was that money to be expended among the voters?—I do not know how it was to be expended. That question did not arise exactly.

19054. Was it to be expended in payment of Mr. Somers for retiring?—I think he was to have got a portion of it, I do not know how much.

19055. But he was not to have got the whole?—Not the entire.

19056. Was anything said at that meeting about a number of voters requiring to be strengthened, or requiring money?—It may have been said, but I forget, I dare say it was.

19057. About twenty-five voters?—I do not recollect the number indeed—I do not recollect the number at all—merely that such a meeting took place.

19058. And you believe that to have been on the night of the nomination?—I do not recollect. I think it was before it.

19059. But about that time?—About that time. It may have been a day or two before it.

19060. Colonel Tennison, I believe, was not present?—No.

19061. Did anyone leave that meeting to carry any communication to Colonel Tennison or Mr. Peyton?—Some one may have done so, but I do not recollect who it was.

19062. Could you give us the names of any persons who were present there?—I forget who were there besides Mr. Tighe, myself, and the late Mr. M'Carthy.

19063. What Mr. Tighe is that?—Mr. James Tighe.

19064. Is he living in town at present?—He is.

19065. Do you recollect whether Mr. M'Gill was there?—He may have been there. It is possible he was, but I do not recollect.

19066. Do you recollect what was determined as to the raising of that sum of money?—It was mentioned that a certain number would raise a certain amount without the knowledge of Colonel Tennison—without his being made aware of it.

19067. Was that done?—It was not.

19068. Before the meeting on Saturday was the idea given up?—That matter fell through altogether. There was no action taken on it. In fact, I suppose the people refused to subscribe. I know one person.

19069. Were you present at the meeting until it broke up?—I was. I proposed to advance one-fourth of the amount.

19070. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—One thousand pounds was the sum named?—One thousand pounds was the sum named.

19071. And only a part of this was to go to Mr. Somers?—I do not know how much. I believe he was to have got a part of it; but the amount I do not recollect. I have a vague recollection hearing £400 or £500 mentioned as the sum he required, to retire.

19072. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Mr. Peyton was not at the meeting?—He was not. I am sure he was not there.

19073. Do you recollect who convened that meeting?—I was asked by the owner of the house, Mr. Tighe. He may be able to recollect the names of the

SEVENTEENTH DAY.

December 20.

John M'Gowan.

persons who were there better than I am; but I do not charge my memory with it.

19074. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Was that the only occasion you heard of a sum of money to be given to Mr. Somers?—I heard it frequently from persons from time to time, but I heard so many things that it is impossible to fix upon any sum, or from whom I may have heard it.

19075. That is the only meeting you are aware of that it was spoken of?—I think it was at another meeting where mention was made of his requiring a sum of money to retire in favour of Colonel Tennyson; but I do not recollect the amount that was named.

19076. Well, at that last meeting you are speaking of, was the sum to Mr. Somers treated as part of a larger sum that it would be necessary to raise for election purposes?—I think it was to form a portion of that sum.

19077. You never heard of a sum for Mr. Somers except as a portion of the sum for election expenses?—No.

19078. Was there any other meeting where money was spoken of as to be distributed amongst the electors? I do not recollect. There was a club formed, a Liberal club, and I think there was a couple of the meetings of that club held, and I think Mr. O'Donel, who is now divisional magistrate in Dublin, was at one of the meetings; but I do not recollect whether there was any money named. I have no recollection of it.

(The witness withdrew.)

Daniel M'Gill.

Daniel M'Gill sworn and examined.

19079. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Were you present at the Liberal meeting of 1860, shortly before the election?—I declare I quite forget.

19080. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—The meeting of Colonel Tennison's supporters?—I have been a strenuous supporter of Colonel Tennison, and I canvassed the town with him, but about the meeting I have no earthly recollection.

19081. Do you recollect the circumstance of Mr. Tennison giving up the contest?—I do.

19082. Tell us all about it?—He was advised by Mr. O'Donel to leave the town, and he went away.

19083. What was stated to be the advice?—I do not know.

19084. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Was there any talk then at the time of the necessity of raising a sum of money for election expenses?—I am not aware. I cannot bring to memory anything about it.

19085. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Do you recollect anything about £600 or £700 being demanded by twenty-five voters?—No, I do not. I may inform you I canvassed almost the entire town with Colonel Tennison and I heard no demand made upon him.

19086. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Was the result of that canvass favourable to Colonel Tennison?—It was as far as I can conceive. There were some people I believe who expected money, but in the general canvass they never mentioned money to him or I.

19087. And from that canvass did you expect, if the voters stood to their promises, Colonel Tennison would have been returned?—I did.

(The witness withdrew.)

James Tighe.

James Tighe re-examined.

19088. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—You were examined before?—I was, sir.

19089. You were a supporter of Colonel Tennison's, I believe, in 1860?—I was.

19090. Do you recollect any meeting that took place at your house about the time of the election?—I have a very indistinct recollection of it, but I do recollect there were some friends there of an evening.

19091. Do you recollect the circumstance of Colonel Tennison withdrawing from the contest?—In fact, I did not know of Colonel Tennison having withdrawn until——. I did not know anything of it previously to the withdrawal having taken place. It was only after the withdrawal I heard it.

19092. But all his friends looked upon his chance of success as good?—I recollect Colonel Tennison's friends considering he had no chance, unless Mr. Somer's left the field, but that if Mr. Somers left the field, or retired, they considered Colonel Tennison had a very good chance.

19093. Do you recollect anything about the demand for money having been made upon Colonel Tennison or his agent by certain voters?—No, sir.

19094. Did you ever hear of such a thing?—I heard, and it was talked of that night, that Mr. Somers made a demand for leaving Sligo, and retiring as a candidate, and it was stated that night, as well as my recollection goes at this distant period, that Mr. M'Carthy, who is since dead, and who was a particular friend of Mr. Somers, and anxious to do him any service he could, and I think it was he, on the part of Mr. Somers, who was very anxious to get some money given Mr. Somers for retiring.

19095. But did you hear anything about any voters requiring money?—I cannot charge my memory now. I did not. I have no recollection of it.

19096. A sum of £600?—I do not recollect any such demand.

19097. You convened that meeting on that evening I suppose—it was held at your house?—Yes, there were some of Colonel Tennison's supporters met at my house that evening.

19098. What was the object of the meeting?—I cannot now exactly define what the object of it was—that is the precise object—I presume it was to devise means and exchange ideas so as to secure Colonel Tennison's return.

19099. Do you recollect anything about a proposal to raise a sum of £1,000?—I do not.

19100. Do you recollect seeing Mr. Harkan present at that meeting?—I cannot say that he was. From my recollection I cannot say.

19101. Do you recollect any of the other gentlemen who were present—Mr. M'Gill and Mr. M'Gowan were present we know?—No, sir. I could not name them from memory. I recollect Mr. M'Gowan being there, but I do not recollect Mr. M'Gill being there, though I have no doubt in the world he was.

19102. Can you not recollect any of the other names?—I cannot. If I got time to reflect and think over it, it is possible I might, but I am sure there could not have been more than five or six at the meeting, but after Colonel Tennison retired, it made no impression upon me. It has no impression on my mind at this distant period.

19103. Had you any conversation with Mr. Harkan as to what took place on that evening?—None, sir, that I recollect. In fact, I have no recollection of Mr. Harkan being connected with it, and I would feel rather surprised if he were there.

(The witness withdrew.)

John Harkan further examined.

19104. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—We will ask Mr. Peyton to repeat the account which he gives of the transactions with regard to what took place in 1860 at Colonel Tennison's candidature.

[Mr. Peyton repeated his statement.]

19105. Mr. Harkan.—I have no recollection of it. I cannot recollect any such thing.

19106. Mr. Peyton.—You contradict it.

19107. Mr. Harkan.—I positively state no such thing occurred, but I recollect this. The whole matter arose out of a request that some of my friends, acting for Colonel Tennison, should call upon Mr. Somers for the purpose of asking him to resign, and I told Mr. Somers that he having but one vote—I believe he had no more—should resign, and not put Colonel Tennison to the expense of a contest. That was the information I gave Mr. Peyton, and that is the transaction alleged.

19108. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—But Mr. Macdonogh was in the field?—I knew nothing about him.

19109. But Mr. Somers resigning would not spare Colonel Tennison a contest?—That might be, but you see the deduction to be drawn from that was that if Mr. Somers resigned, he would afford a greater opportunity to Colonel Tennison.

19110. Only to the extent of one vote?—To the extent of the number of votes he had. I mention the representation I made to Mr. Somers.

19111. Were you present at any meeting of voters on the eve of the nomination day?—I am not at all positive of that, nor do I recollect it. I was acting for Colonel Tennison, and it is possible I may have been associated with voters, but upon my oath, the fact stated by Mr. Peyton never occurred. Having called upon Mr. Somers, I requested him to resign, as there were two Liberals contesting the borough against a Conservative, and Mr. Somers said that he would not resign. I remonstrated with him, and that was the communication I made to Mr. Peyton. I am sure Mr. Peyton would not state anything he did not believe, but that is the fact as I recollect it.

19112. Mr. Peyton.—I think it right I should add, in consequence of the last observation, that I have been aware of every single thing that occurred with Mr. Somers, through a totally different channel. My means of knowledge were through Mr. Kincaid, who was Lord Palmerston's agent down here. Through him we had communication with Mr. Somers, and not through Mr. Harkan at all.

19113. Mr. Harkan.—It is for the court to say who is telling the correct version.

19114. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—We do not regard it as a conflict of testimony, for the evidence is of matters that occurred ten years ago.

19115. Mr. Harkan.—I positively state that the subject of my communication, to the best of my recollection, was the result of my interview—my failing to get Mr. Somers to resign. That was the only occurrence that took place between Mr. Peyton and I at the election.

19116. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Did you go to Doherty's at all?—No, not at all. My recollection is this. I cannot speak positively whether I saw Mr. O'Donel, but to the best of my recollection I stopped in my own private lodging. I never stopped in the house with a candidate, or brought a message to it.

19117. Mr. Peyton.—I did not say so.

19118. Mr. Commissioner Byrne (to Mr. Harkan).—But what I want to know is whether your memory would enable you to say whether you went to Doherty's to see him?—I could not say. I am certain I saw him that day or the day following.

19119. But you might have gone?—I might. If I was requested I would go there at once, but I cannot speak of it, nor do I recollect it. As far as I recollect I did not speak to Colonel Tennison during the whole of that time but once, I think. I spoke to him once; and I am sure from what I am stating that Mr. Peyton must be under a mistake with regard to the two transactions—the transaction of Mr. Somers, and the transaction with regard to the voters. I was unable, and would be unable in regard to any election I attended in Sligo to say what amount would be required to bribe any voter, because I have no powers of calculating, nor do I know of a man having taken a penny.

19120. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—It is not questioned whether a demand was made. Mr. Peyton stated that you agreed the election should not go on because a demand was made?—On my oath no demand was made to me.

19121. We are trying to test the accuracy of your and Mr. Peyton's recollections, and Mr. Peyton is quite clear you were the medium of communication whereby the report came round, and he believed a well founded report that £600 or £700 was necessary for twenty-five men, and that in consequence of that, Mr. Tennison resigned?—If I understand rightly, Mr. Peyton has sworn this, that I was that person who brought him the account of that demand, and that that was in a hotel in this town, and that I accompanied Mr. Peyton to Doherty's to meet Mr. O'Donel. On my oath I have not a particle of recollection of that fact.

(The witness withdrew.)

Moses Monds.

Moses Monds re-examined.

19122. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—There is a man named Atkinson whose name you gave in in a list you handed us. You said, I think, you had paid £30 for him for voting for Mr. Macdonogh in 1860, or had paid some account or something of that kind, and he in his evidence stated he thought you were under a mistake, and that it was not him but some other person?—I do not think I mentioned his name positively at the time. I saw Atkinson since, and he tells me it was a man named Hart.

19123. Yes, certainly?—Well, I think he is correct. I really could not say.

19124. Is the man Hart here now?—I never saw him since to my knowledge.

19125. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Is he living here at present?—I do not know.

19126. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Do you know what his Christian name is?—I do not know.

19127. You say you think Atkinson is correct?—I do, because I know he would not say it if it was not correct. I assume it was Hart when he says so. I knew there was a shoemaker to whom Taylor gave leather, and I thought it was Atkinson, but I am now satisfied it was Hart.

19128. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Did you know of a barony-cess collector or poor-rate collector during Mr. Macdonogh's election who was short in his accounts?—I did not.

19129. Had you any conversation with Mr. Macdonagh as to the necessity of giving money to a poor-rate collector or barony-cess collector?—Not in reference to any election.

19130. Now, that the transaction has occurred to your mind, tell us what it really was?—Well, there was a personal friend of mine who required the assistance of a little money, and I wanted Mr. Macdonagh to lend it to him, and he declined, and I lent it to him myself.

19131. Did it amount to a couple of hundred pounds?—It was above £100.

19132. Was he a voter?—He was.

19133. Mr. Macdonogh declined?—He did.

19134. Was that before his election or after it?—Long before it.

(The witness withdrew.

(The Commissioners then adjourned.)

EIGHTEENTH DAY.

December 21.

EIGHTEENTH DAY.

TUESDAY, DECEMBER 21, 1869.

The Commissioners sat at half-past nine o'clock.

Charles Grubb.

Charles Grubb sworn and examined.

19135. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Do you hold a position in the Irish Times office?—No, sir.

19136. Were you at the last election?—I was.

19137. Were you here as the friend of Major Knox?—I was not exactly as his friend, but I came here with a particular friend of his, a Mr. Morrison, who is a barrister.

19138. You came to assist in the election?—No, I had nothing whatever to do with the election. I was down as a private friend.

19139. When you were here as a private friend with Mr. Morrison, you gave the Major a helping hand?—In going about the town as a stranger, I held a good deal of conversatian on the election, but I did not know anyone in the town except three or four respectable merchants, that I had business with from time to time.

19140. Did you take up money from any person in the town?—Not one shilling.

19141. Were you present when any other person took up money from any persons who were holding it for election purposes?—No, I did not see one shilling in any shape or form, that I have any recollection of.

19142. Are you aware of money passing in any way in reference to the election?—Well, only what I heard in the general course of conversation. I heard things, but I cannot say I recollect them, for I did not take any act, hand, or part in the election. Mr. Morrison I knew from his infancy, and I heard he was coming to make speeches, and as I watched all his movements through life, I wished to hear him speak. He was a good orator, and I had been connected with his father.

19143. Am I to understand, it was principally for the purpose of gratifying your taste for oratory?—I did not come down in any shape engaged by Major Knox.

19144. Were you present upon any occasion when money was taken up by any parties?—No, I did not see one shilling taken up.

19145. How long were you in Sligo altogether, at the election time?—I should think about ten days or a fortnight, as well as I recollect. A few days before the election I came down.

19146. Had you any conversation during the election with Mr. Stokes?—I had, sir, previous to the election—Mr. Stokes and another party I met walking about town. You can easily understand, that walking about town I might meet different people.

19147. Had you an conversation with Cherry?—Yes, I had. I knew him, and had business with him.

19148. Or with Mr. Lyons? Either of the Mr. Lyons?—I had of course, but the nature of the conversation I could not exactly recall to my mind now, but I recollect them perfectly well, and knew Mr. Lyons as one of the most respectable traders in Sligo for many years. I knew him more by character.

19149. Were you aware of any of the voters having been brought up to Dublin and kept in Dublin?—I heard they were.

19150. You heard that at the election time?—Yes.

19151. From whom did you hear it?—Well, in the general course of conversation. I could not say exactly.

19152. Did you hear it from Mr. Morrison?—No, I do not think he interfered with that.

19153. Had you any conversation during the election time with Major Knox himself?—Yes.

19154. In the course of that conversation, did the Major mention to you the fact, of some of the Sligo voters having been brought up to Dublin?—No, I do not think the Major did.

19155. Now, just search your memory. You are here to give us the fullest information?—I will give you the fullest information in my power, and will keep back nothing.

19156. Search your memory. Do you recollect any conversation you had with the Major, having left Sligo and come up to Dublin?—I could not tell the exact date or exact occasion, but I heard it. I do not think it was exactly to myself, for we never had any private conversation together but when we would meet in the hotel or through the town. I think I was in his lodgings, and there was a talk or rumour of such being the case, but who the men were I do not know.

19157. Any of them electors at all?—The only electors I knew were four, five, or six respectable traders in the town.

19158. There was talking in his lodgings you say?—I did not say exactly it was there. It may have been there for I was in his lodgings.

19159. Do you say there was talk in his presence and hearing with regard to the voters having been brought away from Sligo to go up to Dublin?—Well, I cannot exactly recall any particular conversation that took place so very far back as that.

19160. But would you give the substance of any of those conversations as far as it lies in your memory?—I think it was just a passing conversation saying that some of them were going away. I had never anything to do with an election in my life more than going to Dublin and voting.

19161. In that conversation you refer to was there any reference to the money that was required to bring away these voters?—No, I recollect one or two parties speaking to me about money for parties who were very poor, and asking me as I was a friend of Major Knox's to mention the matter to him.

19162. Before you proceed would you try and remember the names of these persons who were so speaking, and the voters in reference to whom they were speaking?—I think Mr. Stokes spoke to me about two or three necessitous persons, that it would be well if they got a little money.

19163. Do you remember the names of these persons?—No, I could not call to mind their names.

19164. Did you communicate that conversation to Major Knox?—I told Mr. Stokes that that was a thing so far as I knew Major Knox would have nothing to do with. I heard Major Knox say, but to whom I do not know, that he would not give one shilling in any shape or form in connexion with bribery or corruption. I think there was a Sunday after church in which something came up about Mr. Stokes in money matters. I think that might have been the occasion. I think he said if one shilling would purchase the election he would not give it.

19165. Did you ever hear him speak of giving charity either to Sligo people or to voters?—I did not hear him say that, but I heard that there was money given for charity, but that was previous to that time. Major Knox was down here several times before then. I was merely here a few days before the election.

19166. When you speak of money having been given in charity does that include money given in charity to voters?—No, I should say not.

19167. What was the occasion of hearing of money being given in charity?—I think it was the Sunday when there was some unpleasant conversation going on about voters and money, and the word money came up, and I distinctly recollect Major Knox speaking angrily—that if one shilling were required for corruption he would not give it. I think on more than one occasion I heard Major Knox say he would not give it as it would destroy everything in connexion with the election.

19168. Now, I need hardly remind you, and I do not do it in any invidious sense, that you are bound to give us every information in your power?—I came up determined to do that, and every question you ask I will answer, but I must say I was really surprised at my being summoned at all. Not taking any part in the election, and knowing no one here, I was surprised at being brought down at all.

19169. Is there any information you could give us in reference to corrupt practices or money matters in the course of the last election?—There is nothing I could tell you of my own knowledge. It is only from conversations I have had, and anything I have read in the papers have been short reports of the proceedings here. I read some information which I knew myself to be incorrect.

19170. Is there any information you could give us—founded upon any communication with Major Knox himself—beside what you have told us, as regards money given to voters in any shape, either as charity or in any other shape?—Well, I really do not think there is. It is just in reading the newspapers I saw or knew anything of that; but whilst I was down here I did not see one shilling going, and I do recollect distinctly hearing Major Knox speaking about money matters and saying he would have nothing to do with them.

19171. Were you a witness of any of the scenes of violence we have heard of in the town during the election?—I was. I was myself going out at night frequently and I saw rows and terrible-looking chaps about town. In fact, one night walking with Mr. Petrie in Castle-street, we had to run into Mr. Stokes' shop, and we could not leave the shop for a length of time. There were chaps about, yelling and shouting, and Mr. Petrie said he would not take a present of the town and go on. On the morning of the election I witnessed that scene in which Captain King lost his life. He fell almost into my arms, and I helped to carry him into the room off the hotel hall. I was looking at that, and during the day I saw voters brought up from different parts of the town, and the way they had to be guarded.

19172. Had you been present at the other elections in Ireland?—Never at an election before, except at the Dublin elections—walking up and giving my vote, and walking out.

19173. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—What is your occupation?—A corn merchant.

19174. Have you a business connexion with the town?—Not with this town, but I had for upwards of about twenty-five years in the wholesale drapery and Manchester goods.

19175. But you had a connexion in that business?—Yes.

19176. And knew a number of merchants?—I knew the principal merchants—Lyons, Williams, and Cherry.

19177. Had you any interview with Major Knox before coming down here?—I had known Major Knox.

19178. Did you see him shortly before you came down to the election?—It must have been sometime—it might have been a month or two before I came down.

19179. Was he aware of your coming down?—I do not think he was.

19180. Do you know a man called Derham?—No.

19181, Living in Sligo?—No.

19182. Do you know a gentleman called Fraser, a traveller for Younger and Co.?—I do. I think I saw him a while ago.

19183. Did you ever accompany him about Sligo canvassing?—He was down here the other time I was here, previous to the election. He was here on his business, on a journey selling goods. I do not know what trade he is in. I never saw him before then.

19184. Did you ever accompany him in any walks about town?—I certainly walked with him about the town, and I recollect going into one house with him, but what house it was I do not know. I think it was a watchmaker's shop, or delft, but I recollect distinctly seeing watches in the shop. That was the only house I was in with him, and that was one evening going past the bridge, and he asked me to go in, and he said, "I want to speak to this man."

19185. You went in?—I did, sir.

19186. Did you hear what took place?—It certainly was something about the election—about the man voting, but I do not know the man, and never saw him in my life, nor would I know him now if I saw him.

19187. Try and say what occurred?—I think he asked me was he going to vote for Major Knox, and I think the man said he was.

19188. Did anything further take place?—I do not think there did. I do not think we were more than two or three minutes in the shop. I think he was speaking to the shop-keeper's wife.

19189. Did you join in the conversation at all?—Not at all. I never saw the man in my life.

19190. But you might speak to him?—No, I did not speak to him at all.

19191. Did the man say anything about wanting to vote for Major Knox, and not daring to do it?—Not a word to my recollection.

19192. Were you only in one house with Mr. Fraser?—That was all that I recollect.

19193. Do you know a man called Kavanagh, living in Dublin, in Dominick-street?—I do not.

19194. Had Mr. Stokes many conversations with you about these poor men who were to get money?—I had a good many conversations with Mr. Stokes whilst I was in town.

19195. Had you known Mr. Stokes previously?—No, sir. I never saw him before.

19196. Who introduced you to him?—I could not say. I was walking about, and after a few days I got acquainted with some of the merchants, and we used occasionally to have a walk together.

19197. Have you been in Sligo since the election?—I have, sir, on one occasion.

19198. What occasion was that?—I accompanied Captain Knox down here.

19199. Did he ask you to accompany him?—He did.

19200. How soon was that after the election?—I think that was about March or April.

19201. That is to say, about four or five months after the election?—Yes. I know it was after the petition.

19202. Have you been long an acquaintance of Captain Ethelred Knox?—No, in fact only since the election. He was down here at the election.

19203. You made his acquaintance at the election?—Yes. I saw him before in Dublin.

19204. You did not make an acquaintance with him in Dublin?—No, sir. I do not think I was introduced to him before I came down to Sligo.

19205. You made his acquaintance as a friend of Mr. Morrison's, and of Major Knox's?—Yes, I met him at Major Knox's.

19206. When did you first see him after the election in Dublin?—I think it was some weeks.

19207. Did he call upon you or you upon him?—I met him in the streets, and perhaps going into the office for a paper.

19208. Did the acquaintance ripen into intimacy?—We were intimate here.

19209. But I am speaking of Dublin?—No, I only met him on one occasion in Dublin when we had any conversation.

19210. How soon was that after the election?—A few weeks after the election.

19211. And the time you were at the Irish Times office was it to see Major Knox?—No, sir, I just went in, but he come forward and shook hands with me.

19212. What did you go to the office for?—I think I was going upstairs to the Major.

19213. How soon after that was it that Captain Knox asked you to accompany him to Sligo?—He did not ask me to accompany him down to Sligo until the day before we came.

19214. Who asked you to accompany him to Sligo?—Himself.

19215. When?—The day before we came down he called at my house at Pembroke-road. He told me he was coming down to Sligo to settle some accounts there, and would be much obliged to me if I had a day or two to spare to go down. I said, I did not think I could, and he said he did not like to go down alone, and would be much obliged to me if I could go.

19216. Did he tell you why he did not like to go down alone?—No.

19217. Then you did go down?—I subsequently consented to go down.

19218. Did he tell you the nature of the accounts?—He did not.

19219. You did come down?—I did.

19220. What took place when you came down?—He called in at two or three houses. The first I went into was Mr. Stokes, and we went into Mr. Lyons, and I think that was all. We met Mr. Petrie, a large stout-looking gentleman.

19221. A gentleman with a Scotch accent?—Yes.

19222. Who else?—I think that was all. Mr. Woods too—I did not see Mr. Woods, but young Mr. Woods.

19223. Were you present at the interview between Captain Knox and Mr. Stokes?—I heard some of the conversation, but I did not join in it all. I did not join in it or hear it; but to be candid with you, I reflect that at the petition to which I was summoned, but not examined, I said, "Of course you do not want me to interfere in these accounts in any shape or form," and he said, "Certainly not."

19224. I presume you understand he wanted you to be present at some of these settlements of accounts?—No, but to accompany him down.

19225. You understood from that, he wanted to have some witness of what passed?—I do not think it was as a witness.

19226. What did he want you down for?—Just as a friend.

19227. But you say you were not much acquainted? Did not you understand he was going down to settle some accounts, and wanted a friend to be present?—He told me he was going down to settle some accounts and asked me to come; but as a witness he did not ask me, or to listen to any conversation that would be.

19228. Did he not take you into all the houses he went into?—I did not go into all—I went into some of them.

19229. How long were you in Sligo?—A couple of days.

19230. You walked out with him when he went out?—I think there was only one day we walked out together. We went out part of another.

19231. Did he go and take walks and leave you in the house?—I was staying at the hotel.

19232. But was he staying at the hotel?—No, he was staying at the Mall with his brother.

19233. Tell us what took place between Captain Knox and Mr. Stokes?—They were talking about money matters, and as far as I recollect he asked him was there anything he had to settle up.

19234. What did Stokes say?—I think he said that there were some men who ought to get some compensation. He thought they were entitled to it, and he mentioned some persons who went away and were badly off.

19235. Did he mention any names?—I do not recollect. If he did, I would not know the names.

19236. Did Stokes say anything about money in his hands?—No.

19237. Who did you go to next after Stokes?—We went to Cherry's.

19238. What was the conversation between Captain Knox and Cherry?—No, we did not go to Cherry's, we went to Woods and Lyons, and we met Mr. Petrie in the street.

19239. What took place between Captain Knox and Lyons?—That I could not tell you, for I left them talking at a desk together. It was a large room we were in, and I was sitting at the fire, and had nothing whatever to do between Mr. Lyons and Captain Knox.

19240. Did Captain Knox say anything to you in the hearing of Mr. Lyons?—About the conversation that took place?

19241. About anything. I want to know what was said to you?—I could not remember what was said to me. Recollect what took place was as far back as March last.

19242. Do you recollect?—No. I should tell you with the greatest pleasure if I did.

19243. What took place between Mr. Woods and Captain Knox?—Mr. Woods was not there.

19244. Mr. Woods, jun., was?—He was.

19245. What took place?—I did not hear all the conversation that took place.

19246. Was not the conversation about money matters?—No, sir. It was his father he wanted to see, and his father was at a fair or market.

19247. Did he give young Woods any message?—Yes; he told him he wanted to see his father.

19248. What occurred between Mr. Petrie and Captain Knox?—We met Mr. Petrie on the bridge, and he asked us what brought us down to Sligo, and I think Captain Knox told him he wished to regulate little matters in the shape of accounts, and he asked him was there anything he had to do for which he ought to pay, and Mr. Petrie said he had nothing to do with the election, and did not give a penny to anyone.

19249. Did you understand Captain Knox to question Mr. Petrie if he (Knox) had anything to give him, or whether Petrie had anything to give Knox?—Knox wanted to know if there was anything he had to pay him for expenses, or anything of that kind.

19250. What did you understand that to mean?—Any expenses in connexion with the electiou.

19251. Did you understand him to mean if he had any money to repay him that had been given to voters?—No; I understood it was any expenses connected with the election, but Mr. Petrie said he had nothing to do with it, and did not give one shilling to anyone.

19252. Did you and Captain Knox return to Dublin together?—We did.

19253. Had you any conversation in the train with regard to the object of his visit?—No, sir. We scarcely spoke all the way up, for the carriage was full of people—three or four ladies, and three or four gentlemen.

19254. At any time during the stay in Sligo had you any conversation with him with regard to the object of his visit?—No. We parted immediately after we went round these places, and he went to his own house and I went to the hotel.

19255. Did you not dine with him after going down in the train with him?—No.

19256. Are you not surprised at Captain Knox asking you a mere acquaintance to come down?—I did at first think it strange, and then I said I would come down with pleasure.

19257. Did you believe that Captain Knox wanted you to go down to assist in any illegitimate purpose?—Most undoubtedly not. I would not take in hand such a thing.

19258. What did you understand by the man asking you to go down to Sligo, as he wanted to settle some accounts. Did you not think it an extraordinary thing?—I did not think it extraordinary at all. I will give you the fullest information in my power. I saw him here on several occasions, and I saw him since the election.

19259. When did you see Captain Ethelred Knox last?—I have not seen him for months.

19260. Months might be a short time?—A short time after that I saw him, and sometime in the summer.

19261. Did you ever hear that Captain Knox had expended money at the last election?—Only what I read.

19262. You never had any communication with him on the subject?—Never. I never had a line from him in my life.

19263. Did you ever accompany this friend of Major Knox's canvassing about the town?—I did not accompany him, and did not canvass with any person.

Charles Grubb.

19264. Did you ever go into any house in the town with any other person, when that other person asked the voter to vote for Major Knox, or go away?—No, I did not. I did not go in anywhere, and I recollect distinctly hearing some conversation about that.

19265. Where did you hear that?—I recollect it now, my memory was recalled on reading in the papers the evidence of Mr. Stokes.

19266. What do you recollect?—I saw by the papers that he mentioned a Mr. Hignell, some person in the employment of Major Knox, went into his house on some occasion when the persons were going away, and he swore three or four or five times that Hignell was present on some occasion. That is the only thing I have any recollection of.

(The witness was requested to remain on the table.)

Philip Derham.

Philip Derham was recalled.

19267. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Is this the gentleman (Mr. Grubb) who accompanied Mr. Fraser into your establishment?—I do not know.

19268. Mr. Grubb.—I never saw him in my life.

(The witnesses then withdrew.)

Mr. Stokes.

Mr. Stokes recalled.

19269. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—When Captain Ethelred Knox called upon you some days after the petition trial, was Mr. Grubb with you the whole time of the conversation in your house—the time he came in for the purpose of taking up the money from you?—On that occasion he was.

19270. What occurred?—Just merely a few words between Captain E. Knox and myself. The other merely accompanied and walked into the shop, and Captain E. Knox came on, and what was said was between himself and myself alone, and it was only a few words.

19271. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—He asked for the money?—He did.

19272. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Was it in the hearing of Mr. Grubb?—I could not say it was in his hearing. He spoke very low.

(The witness withdrew.)

19273. John Hart said.—I find that Father Morris said I was one of the parties who expected the £1000, and in justice to myself I must put myself right in that matter. I wish to say I was one of the first in the morning who voted, and that I was not that person at all.

19274. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—You are perfectly right in contradicting that statement.

19275. Mr. Commissioner Byrne—That was the last election?—The last election.

19276. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Do you know anything about the thousand pounds?—No.

(The witness withdrew.)

Owen Gunning.

Owen Gunning sworn and examined.

19277. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Are you an elector?—Yes.

19278. Did you vote at Sergeant Armstrong's election?—Yes.

19279. Did you vote for the Sergeant?—No.

19280. Who did you vote for?—Mr. Macdonogh.

19281. Was that in 1860 or 1865?—1865.

19282. Did you get any money after that election?—I got some in winter after that.

19283. How much did you get?—I think £15.

19284. Who did you get it from?—Mr. Charles Sedley.

(The witness withdrew.)

Matthew Allen.

Matthew Allen sworn and examined.

19285. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Are you a voter for the borough of Sligo?—Yes.

19286. Did you vote at the last election of 1865?—I did.

19287. For whom?—Mr. Macdonogh.

19288. After that election did you get any money?—No.

19289. Did you get any money after any previous election in consideration of voting?—No, I never got money. I may say it was not for myself I got the money before, but for two parties who did not vote at all—Devanny and Lynch. They live above the town, at a place called Ballyfree.

19290. Did you keep that £20 yourself?—No, sir. I paid it to these two parties.

19291. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Did you vote for Major Knox?—I did.

19292. Was any money passing after that?—Nothing that I am aware of. I do not know anything about it. I merely voted for him.

19293. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Did you get receipts from Devanny and Lynch?—I did not, but I gave Mr. Sedley a receipt for the £20 he gave me for these two parties.

(The witness withdrew.)

Daniel Tracy.

Daniel Tracy further examined.

19294. Mr. Commissioner Bruce.—Do you recollect the number of persons amongst whom that £1,480 was to be distributed?—I do not.

19295. Did you get any list from anyone?—I have no recollection of it now. I heard since there was a list.

19296. But do you think you have got such a list amongst your private papers?—No.

19297. Have you any memoranda in reference to that transaction?—I have not.

19298. You do not recollect whether you destroyed any?—I do not, but I am sure I have not any, for I searched as soon as I got the summons.

(The witness withdrew.)

EIGHTEENTH DAY.

December 21.

John O'Brien

John O'Brien sworn and examined.

19299. Mr. Commissioner Byrne.—Did you vote for Sergeant Armstrong at the election of 1865?—I did.

19300. After that election, some months, did you receive any money from Mr. Poe?—I did, £15.

19301. That was on account of you having voted for Sergeant Armstrong?—Oh, yes.

19302. But you got the £15 on account of your voting for the Sergeant?—I did.

(The witness withdrew.)

(The inquiry then concluded.)
